Avtar Singh Bhasin (b.1935) B.A. (Hons) and M.A in History. He had a short stint of service with the National Archives of India and the Joint Intelligence Organisation of the Ministry of Defence before joining the Ministry of External Affairs in 1963, where he served for three decades retiring in June 1993 as Director (Historical Division). He was posted in the Indian Missions in Kathmandu, Bonn, Vienna and Lagos. He travelled extensively within and outside the country in the discharge of his duties in the Ministry. He particularly served for several years in the NORTHERN DIVISION of the ministry. He was a member of several official and ministerial delegations for holding bilateral discussions with the countries covered by the Division. In 1974-75 he handled the sensitive issue of merger of Sikkim in India as a new State. Besides this he worked in the Coordination, External Publicity and the Administrative Divisions of the Ministry.

He took to academic studies after retirement in 1993. He was Senior Fellow at the Indian Council of Historical Research from 1994 to 1996, an Honorary Fellow at the Institute of Contemporary Studies of the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library from 1996 to 2000. He attended several seminars and contributed papers at these dialogues. He has also published several articles on South Asian affairs in newspapers and journals.

His main focus has been documenting India's foreign relations, a task that had not been attempted in the past more than sixty years and he felt it was badly needed, since non-availability of the Indian side of the documents presented a lop sided picture of Indian position in the study of India's foreign relations. His first work was a two-volume study of India-Nepal-China Relations: 1947-92, later expanded and updated to Five Volumes covering the period up to 2005. His second contribution was the documentary study of India-Bangladesh Relations, also first published in two volumes covering the period 1971 to 1994, and then updating and expanding into Five Volumes covering the period up to 2002 (published in 2003). The success of these two studies encouraged him to undertake a third one, study on Sri Lanka, also in Five Volumes which was published under the title “India-Sri Lanka Relations and Sri Lanka’s Ethnic Conflict—1947-2000.”

In the golden jubilee year of the Indian independence, 1997, he wrote 75 pieces for the Asian Age which were published consecutively from June 1 to August 14, 1997 every day as a throwback to the tumultuous days of 1947, to refresh the memories of the older generation and inform the younger generation of the sacrifices, trials and tribulations and travails through which the people had to pass, before independence. Subsequently, these articles were published in the book-form under the title “Some Called it Partition, Some Freedom”.

Returning to the subject of Sri Lanka, he published an analytical narrative of events leading to the ethnic conflict in that country and India’s role. It was published by two independent publishers in India and Sri Lanka in 2005 under the title: “India in Sri Lanka: Between Lion and the Tigers”. In 2012 he published a Ten Volume Documentary Study on INDIA - PAKISTAN RELATIONS covering the period 1947 to 2007.

In December 2012, he published a study of India- ASEAN relations for the India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit held in New Delhi, to mark the 20th anniversary of the India-ASEAN Sectoral Dialogue Partnership and 10th anniversary of the Summit partnership. It was sponsored by the Ministry of External Affairs and was distributed among the delegations to the Summit and to foreign and Indian media, congregated for the Conference.

He separately edits and publishes for the Ministry of External Affairs an annual series under the title “INDIA’S FOREIGN RELATIONS” which showcases comprehensively the documents bearing on India’s foreign relations. Starting with 2002, so far twelve volumes, covering the period up to 2013 have been published in cooperation with the External Publicity/ Public Diplomacy Division of the Ministry of External Affairs.

PREFACE

This is the 12th volume in the series INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS, published annually in cooperation with the Public Diplomacy/External Publicity Division of the Ministry of External Affairs. It is the storehouse of documents bearing on India's foreign relations during the course of a given year.

The volumes for the years 2002, 2003 and 2004 were produced in the print format only. From 2005 until 2011, the printed book in addition had a CD. In course of time it was found that the printed version was a handicap in its expeditious despatch to the Indian missions located all over the world. Apart from the time, the cost of printing and air freighting had become prohibitive. The e-book format has helped in eliminating the paper and printing costs altogether. The electronic format is easily the most expeditious to despatch, with little cost on freight, besides being a greener option. Taking all the factors into consideration, since 2012 it is now being produced in the electronic format only. This is also easier for scholars to consult and is in keeping with the latest trends in book production.

Instant communications have injected new dimensions to the very nature of foreign relations. It is not that only the world has become globalised, its problems too have become globalised needing cooperation on a wider scale to find solutions to them. There is a paradigm shift in formulation of foreign policy and its bandwidth. Foreign relations and specific issues of policy are now subjected to greater debate and discussion both at the executive and academic levels. The academia and Think Tanks play an equally important role in policy formulations. The information explosion with the extensive use of information technology and consequent dissemination of foreign policy related information through the electronic media and the proliferation of newspapers and other sources of information have made the aam adami aware of what goes on in the world and how his life is impacted by events in the global village. He wants to be informed how the foreign policy initiatives of the government would make his life better. He wants to be heard too. The government today cannot take decisions behind closed doors and expect the people to back them too. This is an onerous task that the diplomatic community and the democratic and responsive governments have to contend with.

India with a population of over 1.2 billion and an emerging economy has been recognised as one of the few countries whose views are heard in the councils of the world. The subjects which until some years ago were not part of the foreign policy discourse, like, nuclear and thermal energy, climate change, terrorism, financial and monetary matters, trade and investment, science and technology, water resources etc., are in the recent years routinely discussed both at the bilateral level and at the inter and intra regional gatherings and multilateral conferences. India today is a member of a large number of such organisations, like, G-20, BRICS, IBSA, EU, ASEM, IOR, ASEAN and EAS, CICA, SAARC, NAM, and many more. No international gathering today is complete without the Indian presence. In finding solutions to international problems, India's input is valued. Hence the study of Indian policies and the manner of their implementation become relevant to both the diplomatic community and the think tanks within India and abroad. The availability of its documents in a comprehensive and easily accessible format, as in the present series has become, critical in this respect.

The arrangement of documents in the electronic book follows the same pattern set earlier in the printed volumes. The documents have been arranged thematically and region-wise and arranged chronologically. Those documents which do not fall in any particular category or deal with multiple subjects or more than two countries have been placed in the General list. It may be added in parenthesis that documents presented here are not exclusively those of the Ministry of External Affairs but of all the ministries and departments of the Government of India which contribute in the conduct of its foreign relations.

In selecting the documents that have gone into the making of this compendium or in adding footnotes or for the introduction, I have been guided by the experience gained during the three-decade of my service with the Ministry of External Affairs in various capacities. The experience gained in the production of the earlier volumes in this series too has been of great help. If, however, still some deficiencies or shortcomings are noted in the book, I hold myself entirely responsible.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2013 INTRODUCTION

India in 2013 remained engaged with the international community at several levels to promote its political, security and economic interests. Security has, in fact, become the dominant concern not only for India but for the whole world. It is one issue that no single country can tackle by itself whatever means of defence and extent of resources it may possess. It is an intra-regional and intra-continental concern. With means of communication and travel becoming faster and availability of internet and mobile telephony, security has become multi-dimensional. It is not only physical security that is important, but cyber security assumes much greater importance in the technological driven world of today. It is a single point enterprise where technology and communications converge and need cutting edge knowledge, training and leadership to meet its challenge. The breakdown of the established post-world war order and the conflicting interests of the permanent members of the UNSC, the apex body, responsible for world peace under the UN Charter, has become victim of contradictory pulls of its members. It finds itself unable to effectively address the problems of peace and security. The inability of small and medium states to manage their own security makes them vulnerable to intervention by the powerful, and at another level, it is a challenge of securing national sovereignty for the vulnerable states. The UNSC's refusal to reform itself to reflect the changed world order of the 21st century is in itself a matter of great concern to the nations at large. In this scenario, India has managed to ensure for itself some modicum of security from the non-state actors, both by strengthening its physical security and through interaction with the states of the region and beyond. It is in this milieu, the Indian interaction with the international community both at the regional and bilateral levels has to be studied. India understands the need to strengthen its economic and social institutions as well as those of the developing countries to provide for security. In interacting with them it lays special emphasis on institutional security.

I SOUTH ASIA

South Asia, which is geographically a cohesive region, is also the least integrated region of the world. The litmus test of integration is whether the region is a viable area for interaction at political, economic and social levels like the ASEAN or the EU. Despite that the SAARC has been in existence since the eighties of the last century. It has yet to gather enough mass to make it viable for trade and investments to expand to enable free flow of intra-regional trade and investments to take place. There is an urgent need to adopt forward looking steps at policy level collectively and separately so that the connective tissues of a South Asian economic community begin to be created. This would help the region to put aside its differences, which had been its bane, within a construct aimed at collaboration on issues of general interest or towards achievement of a common vision of general interest. ASEAN suggests itself as a good example of the search for stability through architecture of regional cooperation. The South Asian region unfortunately suffers from lack of stability in many ways. There is social instability, economic backwardness, trade bumps, investment impediments, and many other negative factors, which make it difficult for the region to achieve the aspired results ASEAN has succeeded in achieving.

Bilaterally, India ploughed on to craft goodwill and understanding within the countries of South Asia, a region with which India's destinies are entwined. In Nepal it is the lack of consensus among the political parties that has delayed inordinately the constitution making and deprived its people a stable political system. This indeed has slowed down the economic growth and retarded meaningful economic and political interaction with other neighbours.

The security scenario both in Pakistan and Afghanistan is a worrying factor, particularly in the projected withdrawal of the US defence forces from Afghanistan in 2014. Pakistan's internal security problem spilling into Afghanistan creates political instability for the entire South Asian region. Bangladesh successfully met its challenge to stability posed by the opposition which boycotted the elections to Parliament. But government's steadfastness paid dividends and it was possible to conduct elections peacefully and give stability to the political institutions. The Sheikh Hasina government also successfully met the challenge of the Islamist fundamentalists who were treacherous to the cause of Bangladesh liberation in 1971 and had all these years successfully evaded justice.

India underlined its friendship with Bangladesh when President Pranab Mukherjee chose to make Bangladesh the first country for his foreign visits in September 2013. Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh too visited Dhaka shortly after taking over the charge. A major step towards economic cooperation and integration was taken when Prime Minister of India inaugurated the India-Bangladesh Grid Interconnection to feed 500 MW of power into Bangladesh system, and laid the foundation of 1320 MW thermal power project to be executed in Bangladesh as a joint venture.

Bhutan has succeeded in its transition from a monarchical polity to a stable popular democracy under the leadership of the His Majesty the King. Its successful completion of its elections to the National Assembly in July, 2013 harbingered the maturity of its nascent political institutions. Bhutanese Prime Minister's visit in September and Foreign Secretary's visit to Thimpu earlier in February were highlights of a cordial and friendly year of relationship between India and Bhutan.

The visit of Maldivian Minister of Defence and Security in April provided an opportunity for sharing common security concerns. Defence Minister Antony conveyed to him that "India stands committed to enhance the ongoing defence and security partnership with Maldives." Ongoing exchanges between the Armed Forces of both sides in areas of training, exercises and strengthening of infrastructure and capabilities were reviewed by both the Ministers. It was decided to further enhance these exchanges. Both sides agreed that there was a need to continue to work together to tackle security concerns, in the interests of peace and stability in the region. India was happy to lend a helping hand by way of advice in the successful conduct of Presidential election in the island country.

India welcomed the elections in the Northern Province of Sri Lanka, held for the first time after the end of the prolonged ethnic war. The elections resulted in the victory of the Tamil National Alliance. The External Affairs Minister paid a bilateral visit to the island country in October and inaugurated the Housing Project being promoted in the North with Indian assistance for the internally displaced persons. He went to Colombo again in November to represent the Prime Minister at the CHOGM. The question of fishermen continued to agitate the people on both sides of the Palk Strait. However the two governments successfully negotiated the release and return of fishermen whenever they were arrested for being on the wrong side of the International maritime border. Unfortunately it has become a perennial problem between the two countries, but it involves the livelihood issues on both the sides.

The general elections in Pakistan which for the first time in the history of Pakistan led to a change in the government through a vote of the people, saw Nawaz Sharif leader of the Muslim League (Nawaz) to the high office of prime minister for the record third time. He promised to work with New Delhi for better relations. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in his message of felicitations conveyed India's desire to work with the new government of Pakistan in charting a new course for the relationship between the two countries and invited Mr. Sharif to visit India at a mutually convenient time.

In July Nawaz Sharif sent his Special Envoy Shahryar Khan to New Delhi where he had meetings with the Prime Minister, NSA Shivshankar Menon and Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh and Satinder Lambah, Prime Minister's Special Envoy. Lambah had himself visited Pakistan in May. Media described the visit as only a 'reinforced signal' consonant with the imperative of better relations.

In August the relations between the two countries had a setback due to a number of incidents along the LOC, in which there were casualties on the Indian side. On top of it the Pakistan National Assembly and the Punjab (Pak) Assembly passed resolutions blaming and condemning the Indian army for the LOC violations. The Indian Parliament took a strong exception at the resolutions and rejecting them, adopted a resolution against the Pakistani violations thereby causing casualties on the Indian side. The Resolution said: "Our restraint should not be taken for granted nor should the capacity of our armed forces to ensure the territorial integrity of our nation."

The meeting between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan in New York in September on the margins of the UNGA, helped to restore some semblance of normalcy in the relations. The two Prime Ministers tasked the Directors General Military Operations (DGMOs) of both the sides "to suggest effective means to restore the ceasefire and a way forward". Various other aspects of the relationship too came up for discussion at this meeting. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh mentioned terrorism and the need for effective action on bringing the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to book. The ASEM Ministerial meeting in Delhi in November, which was attended by Pakistan Foreign Affairs and National Security Adviser Sartaj Aziz provided another opportunity to review the relations between the two countries. December of 2013 offered yet another opportunity for review of relations when the brother of Pakistan Prime Minister and Chief Minister of the Punjab Province Shahbaz Sharif came to New Delhi and held meetings with the Indian leaders including the Prime Minister.

II EAST ASIA

Relations with China remained on even keel despite some problems. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh met the new Chinese President Xi Jinping on the sidelines of the BRICS Summit on March 28, 2013 in Durban, within days of his taking over the high office. Significantly in May 2013 the Li Keqiang, the new Premier of China made his first over-sea visit to India indicating China's goodwill toward New Delhi. The positive signs, were somewhat impacted by the unfortunate incident which for a while created some misunderstanding between the two countries. The Chinese frontier guards' violation of the boundary in Ladakh led to a faceoff with an Indian army detachment. It however ended amicably by the intervention of higher political leadership, indicating Beijing's anxiety not to upset the equilibrium in bilateral relations.

Despite persistent media reports of Chinese violations of the Line of Actual Control (LAC) now and then, the Ministry of External Affairs remained steadfast in its stand that in the absence of delineation of the boundary on the ground there were differences in the perception of the LAC of both the countries which often created the impression of intrusion. That these situations were amicably and peacefully settled by the use of the existing mechanisms between the two countries for the resolution of such situations was significant. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh made his visit to Beijing in October. The External Affairs Minister and the Chinese Foreign Minister met in July in Brunei on the sidelines of the ASEAN Summit. These meetings at the highest level kept the dialogue between the two countries going thereby creating a fund of goodwill. On the question of growing trade deficit between the two countries, the Chinese were quite accommodative, and signed a MOU to take care of this, when Premier Li came to New Delhi in May. It is hoped it would address the widening trade deficit between the two countries.

The visit of Defence Minister to Beijing in July and the Third Defence Dialogue earlier in the year in January were positive signs of developing closer relations between the Defence establishments of the two countries. To enhance defence cooperation, a draft of a Border Defence Cooperation Agreement has been received from the Chinese side, which when signed would formalize the mechanisms and procedures to enhance mutual trust and confidence between the border troops and facilitate the maintenance of peace and tranquillity along the India-China border.

An India - China Media Forum was set up during the year to enable the journalists of the two countries to interact with each other independently and create fund of goodwill and understanding between the two media organisations. The first meeting of this forum took place in New Delhi in September 2013.

The week-long and rare visit to India by the Japanese Royal couple underlined the deepening ties between the two countries. Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, who took office in December 2012, made clear his intention to boost economic ties and investments in India. He also expanded the strategic relationship. The 7th India-Japan Energy Dialogue took place on September 12, 2013 in New Delhi. In May the annual summit saw the two prime ministers meeting in Tokyo. Their talks strengthened the mechanism of political and strategic consultations and held out a promise of progressively strengthening defence relations, including joint naval exercises and collaboration in defence technology. Cooperation in high technology, space, energy, security and rare earth minerals would provide rich contents to the strategic partnership. The two currency swaps offered by Japan in September and December 2013, to the extent of US $ 50 billion, would boost financial cooperation.

The growing closer relations between the two countries were seen to be causing unnecessary concern to Beijing, notwithstanding the growing relations between India and China. Accusing Japan of attempting to forge alliances with India and other neighbours to "encircle China" the Communist Party-run Global Times on May 31, 2013 warned in an article written by a Chinese scholar from an official think-tank-- the Centre for Strategic and International Affairs, Shanghai-- that India could get "close to Japan at its own peril". The article with aggressive overtones outlined China's concerns over the close developing relations between India and Japan. After the visit of the Japanese Royal couple China said "We hope that development of bilateral relations by the relevant countries will be conducive to regional peace, stability and development." China's comments are to be seen in the context of growing tension between Japan and China on the Senkaku/ Diaoyu islands in East China Sea, where Beijing had declared an Air Defence Identification Zone (ADIZ). However, the Japanese Officials accompanying Emperor Akihito said the visit "should not be interpreted as an attempt by Japan to counter the big neighbour China".

During the course of the year India made particular efforts to enhance Security and defence cooperation with the countries of Southeast Asia. Defence Minister visited Myanmar in January 2013 and met his Myanmar counterpart Lt. Gen. Wai Lwin when matters of defence cooperation were discussed with reference to enhanced exchanges. In September Security Dialogue with Korean Republic was initiated and the Korean Air Chief was welcomed in New Delhi in November. In June India and Singapore signed a Defence Cooperation Agreement.

III WEST & CENTRAL ASIA

For over two decades of the independence of Central Asian countries, India remained focused on this region to evolve ways and means of reinforcing the centuries old bonds. India's "Connect Central Asia" policy marked a more pro-active approach to engaging with Central Asia. It is in fact an attempt to re-connect in newer ways with the region.

In West Asia, India forged good working relationship with Saudi Arabia, the largest and the richest country in the region. It provides employment to a large number of Indian workers. Recently when that country decided to implement its Nitaqat policy, there was some misunderstanding but it did not take too long for India to appreciate its rationale for the Kingdom. It was the just implementation of its domestic law which the country was perhaps holding in abeyance for some time that enabled a large number of foreign workers to get into the Kingdom and take up jobs. Now that it was under pressure from within its own labour force, the implementation of Nitaqat created a difficult situation for foreign workers. India appreciated the need for Saudi Arabia to enforce this policy and facilitated the repatriation of its citizens back to India. On May 27 the External Affairs Minister during his visit to Riyadh told the Arab News Agency in an interview that India considers Saudi Arabia a centre of stability in the region, adding that the security and stability of the Gulf region and that of the Indian subcontinent are interlinked and that bilateral security cooperation between India and Saudi Arabia can contribute to regional stability."

The visit of the Secretary General of the Arab League to New Delhi in December 2013 was an important event which enabled the External Affairs Minister to interact with him as representative of the Arab people. The Indo-Arab Investment summits, has become an important forum for attracting Arab investments to India. Three such summits have so far been held.

India believes that there is a shared and deep historical and civilisational ties between India and the Arab world and these have evolved collectively in our South-South cooperation. External Affairs Minister told a Press conference in New Delhi on December 17 that "both sides have a great deal to learn from each other, and build firm partnerships that would have a positive effect for our common and extended neighbourhood."

Minister Khurshid spoke of shared interests of the India and the Arab countries. He said that "the Arab countries that lie in our immediate extended neighbourhood and we are closely linked in many many ways both with history, commerce and of course community ties". He conveyed India's "steadfast support to the Palestinian cause and expressed our support for the role played by the League in partnering the Middle East Peace Process towards establishment of State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital."

The de-escalation of tension between the United States and Syria on the threatened US action on the question of use of chemical weapons in Syria was welcomed by New Delhi. On September 16, the Ministry of External Affairs described it "an important step in the process". India also welcomed the 'recent steps taken by Syria to accede to the Chemical Weapon Convention" which was in alignment "with India's consistent stance of supporting the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons world wide". India believes that this development would "invigorate the peace efforts towards a political solution to the Syrian conflict".

Even otherwise India remained engaged with the West Asian countries. Prime Minister of Kuwait Sheikh Jaber Al-Mubarak Al-Hamed Al-Sabah visited in India in October, External Affairs Minister visited Egypt and Bahrain in December, and the Minister of State visited Libya in April.

IV AFRICA

In the recent past, Africa has witnessed momentous changes in terms of peace and stability, democracy, economic growth and improvement in social indicators. It is very encouraging to note that out of 38 countries which met one of Millennium Development Goals on eradication of extreme poverty and hunger, included several African countries--Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cameroon, Djibouti, Ghana, Malawi, Niger, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe and Togo. It is significant that during the 2011-2015 period seven of the 10 fastest-growing economies will be in Africa. Economically, thus the African continent is marching ahead with several of its countries posting a high growth rate and emerging as a pole in the world economy.

At the UN, during India's recent membership of the UN Security Council in 2011-12, gave New Delhi an opportunity to project African point of view as this body dealt with a number of issues of African concern. The issues relating to Libya, Mali, Somalia, Sudan, South Sudan, Democratic Republic of Congo are some the issues that can be recalled. Even otherwise India took up issues of direct interest to Africa in various fora - issues of economic growth and sustainable development, food and energy security and climate change, public health, and so on - such cross-cutting issues were constantly part of India's vision in G-20, BRICS, IBSA and such forums. New Delhi continues to believe that the African societies, like other societies cannot be re-ordered from outside through military intervention and must decide their own future.

India was privileged to be invited to the Golden Jubilee celebrations of the African Union in May, 2013. Vice President of India while attending the celebrations reiterated New Delhi's commitment to work with Africa to leverage India's strength. The vibrant India-Africa cooperation extended beyond trade and investment to technology transfer, knowledge sharing and skills development. The two India-Africa Forum Summits have taken this cooperation to new heights. The next edition of this Summit, which was slated for 2014, now stands postponed to 2015.

The ITEC programme providing for cooperation in skill development and its up-gradation has in it a positive manifestation of the South-South Cooperation.

Over 22,000 new scholarships for African Students in various academic courses and training programmes including special agriculture scholarships and C.V. Raman fellowships are being utilised by African students and scholars. India has offered more than 700 CV Raman Scientific Fellowships till 2014. India is also working towards establishment of Virtual University to cater to the educational needs of the African students.

The Pan African e-Network Project, set up by India giving connectivity to the countries of Africa among themselves and with India is a unique project to use Indian expertise in information technology to bring benefits of healthcare and higher education to all the countries of the continent. In trade India is the third largest export destination for Africa. There is a bilateral trade target of 100 bn US Dollars with Africa by 2015 going up from over 67 bn US Dollars at present. The footprints of Indian private and public sector enterprises are clearly visible in many African countries. The CII-EXIM Bank, India-Africa Project Partnership Conclaves are now regular feature. The last one had over 500 projects with investment of 70 bn US Dollars under discussion. The future areas of cooperation in the energy sector are renewable energy, wind and solar power projects. Since 2002-03 to boost industrial development of African countries, India approved 123 Lines of Credit, aggregating 5.9 billion US Dollars. In May 2011, Prime Minister of India had announced a Line of Credits of 5 billion US Dollars over the next three years to Africa.

The opportunities for India-Africa cooperation in diverse sectors are immense and vast. The unique youth outreach programme - "INDIAAFRICA-A shared Future" invites creative exchanges between young Africans and Indians through a multidisciplinary contest series and a Young Visionaries Fellowship Program. Under this concept, campus outreach programmes have been organised in institutions across 17 African countries.

It is fervently hoped that Africa and India cooperation would be mutually beneficial and its success augurs well both for Africa and India in the coming years.

V THE UNITED STATES

India's strategic partnership with the US was strengthened during the year as a result of developing partnership with the US on several issues. The relations were best described by the Prime Minister during his visit to New York and Washington in September when he said that the "United States is one of our most important strategic partner and during President Obama's regime, we have taken several steps to widen and deepen this partnership in diverse fields". He went on to describe the US "as one of the most important partner providing investment and technology support for India's development." In September 2013 the Prime Minister had his third summit meeting with President Obama. Prime Minister was effusive after his meeting with President Obama and said he always believed "that India and America are indispensable partners". During the recent years India-US cooperation expanded the frontiers of trade and investment in technology. The bilateral trade now stands at US$ 100 billion. American investments in India are US$ 80 billion and they are growing despite the slowdown in the global economy. There are contacts in various sectors--high technology trade, terrorism, trade and commerce, education, health, climate change and environment, science and technology, Defence etc. India is looking anxiously how the situation in Afghanistan would work out once the US troops withdraw from Afghanistan. The Pakistani factor remains uncertain since Pakistan continues to be the epicentre of terrorism, despite expectations that Nawaz Sharif would like it to tone down. The role of ISI and Jihadis remain critical.

VI EUROPE

Europe had two high level visits from New Delhi. The President Pranab Mukherjee visited Belgium and Turkey in October. The Prime Minister made a bilateral visit to Germany in April and in October to Moscow for the annual summit. In Berlin Prime Minister attended the concluding functions of the "Days of India in Germany" a cultural festival which lasted for two years having been inaugurated by Chancellor Angela Merkel in May 2011. The defining feature of India-Germany relationship is economic partnership and source of investment in both manufacturing and infrastructure. The investment in infrastructure sector in the next five years was estimated to be about a trillion dollars and Germany's role becomes critical and Prime Minister was keen on German investments with its high level of technology. One of the most important outcomes of the visit was the formation of the India-Germany High Technology Group, which held its first meeting in September, where Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh led the Indian side. The meeting exchanged views on strengthening trade in high technology and on issues related to export control and non-proliferation and preparations for the expanded second round in 2014.

The relations with Russia remained robust and there was interaction at all the levels as in the past including the annual Summit meeting this time in Moscow. In April the two countries signed a Regulation defining the functions and procedure of the Joint Commission, which had been established by an agreement signed in December 2010 for cooperation in the field of Emergency Management which would take care of Civil Defence, Emergencies and Elimination of Consequences of Natural Disaster etc.

The Summit in October testified to the depth, diversity and dynamism of India-Russia cooperation. It also marked the high degree of convergence of global developments and the collaboration of the two countries in international forums. The prime minister described the discussions with President Putin as "characterised by the warmth, goodwill and trust that permeates all aspects of our partnership." Both leaders expressed their "satisfaction with the progress in ... bilateral cooperation including in defence, energy, high technology trade, investments, space, science, education, culture and tourism" It was noted with satisfaction that the bilateral trade had grown by 25% to reach $11 billion. Noting the importance of Kudakulam Nuclear Power Project in Tamilnadu, satisfaction was expressed that it would be completed early (It has since been completed and is now critical). There is now a proposal to launch negotiations on a free trade agreement with the Customs Union of Russia, Kazakhstan and Belarus. Dr. Singh was hopeful that Russia would continue to be a strong and key partner in defence cooperation as this has moved to the stage of joint design development and production of key defence equipment. These were the key areas of bilateral partnership which had the pride of place in their discussions, beside the subjects of security, terrorism, regional and international peace etc.

New Delhi remained connected with other European countries too. Annual Foreign Office consultations were held with United Kingdom and Belarus. External Affairs Minister visited Hungary and Norway. Hungarian Prime Minister visited New Delhi. Introduction of Cash Bonds by the UK for Visa created some unpleasant feeling but it was resolved soon as Britain withdrew the proposal. Avoidance of Double Taxation agreements were signed with Macedonia and Malta.

VII REGIONAL & MULTILATERAL COOPERATION

The world is today afflicted by diverse problems of trade and commerce, financial slowdown, terrorism and security, environment and climate change, and the like which cannot be solved by any one country individually. These problems need collective solutions and efforts on regional or intra-regional basis. Action at that level needs consultations and discussions at multilateral level. Hence the need for multilateral forums where such discussions could take place. To fulfil this need several groupings at various levels have been formed. Some of these groupings are the European Union, ASEAN, East Asia Summit, BIMSTEC, ASEM, SAARC, CICA, SCO, SICA, CELAC, SADC, ECOWAS, G.20, Conference of Parties (CoP), WTO, SCO, Pacific Islands Forum, and GCC. These groupings meet periodically to discuss their common problems and find solutions which could be applied universally or selectively across the board. Considering India's size and resources and reach, it is now member of most of these groupings. The frequency of their meetings in distant parts of the world, of course puts some strains on the human resources in meeting attendance obligations. Given the nature of the problems involved, these obligations have to be met. Important as these meetings are, they are no substitute for bilateral diplomacy, which has its own obligations and are to be met. Both the multilateral as well as bilateral diplomacy calls for personal interaction and therefore pressure on time of the people occupying high offices.

The annual ASEAN - India Summit was held in Bandar Sri Begawan (Brunei) in October and their foreign ministers' meeting in November. ASEAN-India mechanisms today include the ASEAN-India Summit and seven Meetings at the level of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Trade, Agriculture, Tourism, Telecommunications, Environment and New and Renewable Energy. There is the possibility of more dialogue mechanisms to open up in future. ASEAN-India trade today is at USD 76 billion and there is a target of USD 100 billion by 2015 and USD 200 billion by 2022.

The Foreign Ministers of the Indian Ocean Rim Countries met in Perth in November to exchange views on their common problems and on cooperation in keeping the area free from piracy.

ASEM Foreign Ministers met in India in November for their 11th meeting which was inaugurated by the Vice President. The conference attended by 34 foreign ministers from Asia and Europe and representatives of the EU had its theme: "ASEM: Bridge to Partnership for Growth and Development" provided opportunity for the ministers to exchange views on a number of economic and financial issues and sustainable development as also non-traditional security challenges".

The leaders of the G-20 countries met in St. Petersburg in September to discuss the financial issues facing the international community. The Prime Minister described the meeting of G-20 "on the international plane an essay in persuasion" and termed it 'a very successful' one. The Leaders' Declaration and the St. Petersburg Action Plan are in line with the position India had advocated at the meeting, the prime minister Dr. Singh said.

The BRICS comprising Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa has emerged a new yet important inter-continental grouping to tackle the social and economic problems of their member countries. The Leaders of the BRICS attending the G-20 Summit in St. Petersburg held a special meeting among themselves to consider the "continued slow pace of the recovery, high unemployment in some of the countries and on-going challenges and vulnerabilities in the global economy." The foreign ministers of the BRICS too met in New York in the same month on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly session. The BRICS' leaders took a momentous decision to launch a BRICS Bank at their next meeting. The meeting confirmed that agreement reached earlier on the 100 billion dollar currency arrangement.

The Foreign Ministers of the IBSA, which represents three of the five BRICS countries met at the same time and at the same venue. They agreed to formally launch the IBSA at its 10th anniversary and exchanged their views on the contemporary global and regional issues of mutual interest as well as to review progress made by IBSA cooperation since its formalisation through the Brasilia Declaration in 2003. The ministers noted with satisfaction the consolidation of the IBSA Dialogue Forum. It was underscored that that IBSA has succeeded in laying strong foundation for multi-dimensional and multi-sectoral cooperation in a wide range of areas.

In November the Foreign Ministers of RIC (Russia, India, China) the forerunner of the BRICS met in New Delhi and reiterated the importance attached to the Russia-India-China Trilateral format as a platform to foster closer dialogue and practical cooperation in identified areas among the three countries. They expressed their resolve to strengthen the trilateral dialogue for consultation and coordination on regional and global issues of mutual interest in the spirit of openness, solidarity, mutual understanding and trust.

The External Affairs Minister represented India at the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) held in Bishkek in September. India is an Observer at this Organisation.

In the first decade of the 21st century, Indian economy saw phenomenal growth touching almost double digit. Along with India other countries of Asia too enjoyed similar robust growth. It came to be known as the Asian Century. It is believed that after centuries of stagnation and deprivation, Asia was once again regaining its primacy in the global economy. While there has been some slowdown in the economies of the world, particularly of the developed countries since the meltdown of 2008, the Asian economies too had set back in its wake and the GDP growth slipped but less than that of the developed economies. The Asian economies kept their momentum as compared to the western world, thus keeping the Asian flag flying. In 2013 the IMF expected the advanced developed economies to grow at only 1.2% while developing Asia grew faster at 7.1%. The Asian region played a crucial role in driving and stabilizing the global recovery process. In that process, India made its own contribution.

The Government of India remained wedded to the concept that while high economic growth was essential, it cannot be an end in itself. The benefits of rapid growth must necessarily lead to betterment in the lives of the common people. Equitable distribution of the fruits of development requires the pursuit of development through empowerment of people. This is the key to inclusive growth, was the government mantra. Creation of new productive job opportunities for the growing labour force is the most powerful means of empowering the people. For this purpose, skill development becomes the most potent instrument. India being a firm believer in the benefits of regional integration and its concomitant benefits for the all round development of the country. To achieve those objectives though the instrumentality of foreign policy India remained committed to promoting deep engagement with the countries of East and Southeast Asia and beyond. In the recent past, Government of India has in an orientation of its foreign policy given economic development primacy of position, making it an enabling instrument for symbiotic relations with the partner countries.

The 2013 was the penultimate year before the general elections which became due in 2014. The government while on the guards went ahead with its commitments and engaged the partner countries. The annual summit level meetings with Chinese, Russian and Japanese leaders were gone through. The prime minister did not fight shy of keeping his appointment with the US President for summit level talks to engage the United States to India's development. The result has been visible towards the end when the economy showed signs of revival. But the lost time was too much to make up at the end.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-I

GENERAL

001. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.
New Delhi, January 8, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Belated Happy New Year to all of you and thank you very much for coming over for this first briefing in this year. I have a couple of announcements to make and then will take your questions if you have any.

The first announcement I have to make is about the visit of the External Affairs Minister to France. External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid will be traveling to Paris on 10th and 11th of this month. He will have bilateral discussions with his counterpart Mr. Laurent Fabius, and will also call on the President of France, Mr. Francois Hollande.

As you are aware, the last visit of a Foreign Minister from France was in 2011 when Mr. Alain Juppe had met his then counterpart Mr. S.M. Krishna. Subsequently in July 2012, on the sidelines of the Tokyo Conference on Afghanistan, Mr. Krishna had met his then counterpart Mr Laurent Fabius. This is of course Mr. Salman Khurshid's first meeting and his first visit to Paris as External Affairs Minister.

In addition, I have another announcement and this pertains to the visit of the Deputy Prime Minister of Vietnam. Mr. Vu Van Ninh who will be arriving in New Delhi shortly. We have separately sent you an advisory for his meetings in New Delhi. Tomorrow the External Affairs Minister will be meeting him. We will also have a media interaction subsequent to that meeting.

Finally, the third announcement that I have is about the meeting of the BRICS High Representatives for National Security. This is on the 10th of this month. We will send you a separate media advisory. It is expected that the High Representatives from Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa will meet at the Jawaharlal Nehru Bhavan. Subsequent to that meeting we will also have a media interaction by Mr. Shivshankar Menon, the Indian National Security Advisor.

Thank you very much. I have no further announcements to make. In case you have any questions, I will answer them.

Q: Would you please elaborate more about the visit of Mr. Khurshid to France? What will he discuss with his counterpart?

Official Spokesperson: If I may say, there has been a long gap between the visit of an Indian External Affairs Minister to France the last time and now. It is almost a decade. So, there is a lot to catch up in terms of a visit to Paris. As you know, France is a member of the Security Council and is involved in a variety of international matters. It is expected that Mr. Khurshid will use the benefit of the visit to discuss with him global issues.

In addition, India and France have a very robust bilateral relationship. For example, our trade in 2011-12 was approximately US$ 8.9 billion. For your information, about 800 or so French companies have their representative offices or other forms of representation in India. More than a 100 Indian companies have their representative offices or subsidiary offices in France.

France by my understanding is the ninth largest investor in India over a period of a decade or so, say from 2000 to 2012. On the other hand, India is fast emerging as a major investor in France. It is the thirteenth largest investor in France over the last five or seven year period. So, there are a lot of issues to discuss. In addition, as you are aware, we have a very elaborate relationship on nuclear matters. Finally, there are defence cooperation agreements which are in the pipeline. All these issues will be on the table for discussion when the two leaders meet.

Q: What is the status of Jaitapur Nuclear Power Plant?

Official Spokesperson: The Ministry of External Affairs is not the right Ministry to answer questions about the status of the establishment of a nuclear power plant. Therefore, I think it would not be fair on my part to respond to what is the status. But my understanding in terms of the bilateral relationship is that the negotiations on that are continuing between France and India; and we hope to have an update on that when we go to Paris. Question: Has France allayed any fears that India might have on nuclear power after Fukushima?

Official Spokesperson: We have a very very sound atomic energy establishment. So, the concerns, if any, relate to articulating to the public the safety of our nuclear power plants rather than within our nuclear establishment itself. India and France along with other countries are involved in nuclear safety through the IAEA. There is a safety convention where all countries interested in nuclear power do meet. And there have been extensive discussions on Fukushima and its aftermath. So, the issues are not that our scientists have concerns, but how to convey and allay concerns of the general public, which are there and which are genuine, through perhaps a public outreach programme by our nuclear establishment.

Q: What are the precise reasons for our deepening our engagement with Vietnam?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and take you back in time. After 1954, after Dien Bien Phu, Pandit Nehru was amongst the first leaders to visit Vietnam. Similarly, Ho Chi Minh visited India way back in 1958. Therefore, our relationship is something which goes back several decades. As far as the current phase is concerned, the Vice Premier of Vietnam is coming in connection with the India-Vietnamese Year of Friendship which is at its closure. He is coming for the closure event. For those of you who followed this previously, the Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. E. Ahamed had visited Vietnam last year in January for the start of these festivities. During this time there have been extensive activities by our Mission in Vietnam and this is the closure of that event.

In terms of our trade with Vietnam, my understanding is that in 2011 it was approximately US$ 4 billion with the balance of trade in favour of India. We expect that in 2012 also it would be in the same vicinity or a little higher. Our major exports to Vietnam are in terms of pharmaceuticals, also machinery and auto parts. From Vietnam interestingly mobile telephones and accessories are emerging as a major area, and there are others for example, coffee, bit of coal, etc. We also have a very robust technical assistance programme with Vietnam where approximately 150 Vietnamese students avail of ITEC scholarships. There has been an increase from about 75 which was there previously.

We have regular exchange of visits. The last President of India had visited Vietnam in 2008. Subsequently, their President has also visited here in 2011. So, high-level visits and interactions are integral and intrinsic to our relationship with Vietnam. It is neither new nor has it deepened suddenly. It is an established relationship, and we actually are celebrating forty years of our bilateral relations.

Q: Could you just give the current status of Indo-French nuclear deal? Why no nuclear business has accrued from France? Is it a fact that the French also, like the Americans and Russians, are rather intimidated by the Indian nuclear liability laws? And if I may ask another question, what is the agenda of the BRICS NSAs' meeting?

Official Spokesperson: I think I will only answer the first question because we need to be very understanding of each other; we have several others in this room to ask questions. So, let us go on No.1 issue.

I think some of the terms you used are certainly way beyond what I would ever use. Anybody who has worked with nuclear issues should be aware that from the time you begin discussion on a nuclear power project to the time it reaches its culmination, it is normal to be at least six years or more. This is normal in nuclear because it is a very sophisticated technology; it has a lot of issues that you need to tie up. It is not only in terms of legal infrastructure but also technical issues, regulatory issues, etc. Having myself worked in a nuclear establishment for some time, I am aware that there is no country in the world where nuclear power plants are established immediately after announcements are made. And this is normal.

As regards the nuclear liability issues, these are issues which have been raised from time to time by several of our partners and I think we are very transparent in saying that our Parliament has passed a law; we can work within the four corners of that law and try and work out solutions within that pattern. It is now for our partners to understand this. We are certain that they understand where we are coming from. It is within those broad parameters that we can work out solutions. Let me assure you that we are working them out.

Q:...(Inaudible)... when it comes to Kudankulam 3 and 4, India has expressed its willingness, rather conveyed its willingness to the Russians to in fact double up the prices. Now the nuclear reactors will be almost double the price. Have we come up with a similar kind of a proposal for the French?

Official Spokesperson: When techno-commercial negotiations are under way, I think it is not quite appropriate that we start speculating on how much the price will go up. That the price will go up is a known factor because if you have new requirements, it is likely to happen that each requirement entails a cost. But that said, I think what you talked about, double up is I think not what the facts would warrant in that case or in any other case. But sure these are ongoing negotiations. So, let us not sit here and decide how much it will go up. I think it is in the public domain that these techno-commercial negotiations will lead to perhaps an increase in price.

Q: Is it possible to talk a bit about supply of ENR technology from France? In fact there was some sort of verbal assurance from the previous French President Mr. Sarkozy. Now that he is no longer there, has this been impacted in any way?

Official Spokesperson: I do not know. We have not had senior level discussions on this at this stage. Maybe when we come back from Paris! And let me tell you ENR is a sophisticated issue which has implications of a variety of things. It is not that we are going in for that now. Again if any of you followed these, these will take more than a decade should this come about. So, let us not discuss this in a very casual manner at this stage. These are issues which are fairly complicated and complex and will take time to work out.

Q: Iran has made a demand for life saving drugs. Please tell us something about this.

Official Spokesperson: Mujhe koi jaankaari nahin hai iske baare mein.

Q: On Vietnam I wanted to ask (1) about defence cooperation and (2) about deals on oil exploration. Are we going to get new blocks, or have we found any gas or oil, or what has happened? And are we going to stick on? How much longer?

Official Spokesperson: Let me lay the facts on the table and then you can take it from there. We already have gas which is coming out from Vietnamese wells and it started almost a decade ago. I think your reference is to the blocks where there was this debate in last summer when the oil lease for those blocks - 128 and 127 if I am not mistaken - were to expire in last June. At that stage, our technical assessment was that it was not a commercially viable proposition at that stage given that you need to get equipment which is pretty costly to hire etc; and at that stage it was difficult and it was not a viable process to go ahead with. The Vietnamese Government and the Vietnamese oil organization had then provided us the two more years option to consider this and decide on it in June 2014. So, we are at this stage in the process of the ONGC evaluating whether it would be techno-commercially viable.

Q: Chinese had some reservations about our getting involved in oil exploration in what they consider to be part of their territory. Did we have any bilateral or trilateral discussions involving China and Vietnam on this matter?

Official Spokesperson: No, we have not had any discussions on this matter.

Q: There is a case of some Yemen Embassy diplomats involved in molestation in Delhi. I understand some of them were questioned and perhaps two are released. Has the Government of India taken it up with them? Could we demand recall of at least those diplomats who were involved in it?

Official Spokesperson: My understanding is that none of them are serving diplomats in the sense that they are not diplomats, but they hold diplomatic passports because they are related to diplomats. They are of three countries. I do not want to name a single country. None of them are now in custody. We have asked our police authorities to provide us details of what are the infringements caused by these people. Once we receive them, we will take it up with the concerned Missions. At this stage I cannot answer further than that. But the facts are as I have indicated to you.

Q: The Vedic Culture Centre in Moscow is to be demolished on the 15th of January. What we have learnt is that no alternative arrangement has been made as yet. Your comments on this!

Official Spokesperson: This is an issue which has been simmering for some time. The ISKCON's Vedic Culture Centre has been served a notice I understand by local authorities for some infringement of local regulations. Our Embassy has been following this up with the local authorities in Moscow. It is our endeavour to try and work out an amicable solution. I do not know the exact dates on this, but let me assure you this has been followed fairly regularly by our Embassy there. I do not have today an update on the dates and what the situation is right now. I will try and find out and pass it on to you. But my understanding is that our Ambassador has been carefully and regularly in touch with ISKCON authorities as well as the Moscow city authorities on this matter.

Q: Influential Iranian official Mr. Jalili was here last week. Do you have any update on the way forward on our economic relations in the wake of sanctions especially oil payments? Were all those issues on the table? Were they discussed?

Official Spokesperson: We are likely to have a Joint Commission between India and Iran in the first quarter of this year and all these issues are to be discussed fairly candidly and in a fairly detailed manner in that format. Mr. Jalili came for discussions with his counterpart Mr. Menon. This is a separate issue where they have bilateral discussions between their National Security Council and ours. As regards specifics of our economic relations etc., these are on the table when the Joint Commission meets.

Q: Yesterday, Deputy High Commissioner of India was called to Foreign Office in Islamabad over the incident of LOC in Kashmir. What have been the actions taken by Indian side on this?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and put the facts before you. The fact is that in the early hours of January 6, Pakistani troops in the sector commenced unprovoked firing on Indian troops. The roof of a civilian house in Churunda village was damaged in the Pakistani mortar fire. Indian troops, therefore, undertook controlled retaliation in response. Therefore, we deny that Indian troops had crossed the Line of Control in the Rampur Sector or had violated the ceasefire.

Let me also say that India is committed to the sanctity of the Line of Control in Jammu and Kashmir, which is one of the most important confidence building measures between our two countries. The ceasefire along the Line of Control has largely held since 2003 and is an important element in the confidence building process between India and Pakistan. I would also like to inform you that the DGMOs of the two countries have been in touch over this incident. And we call upon the Pakistani authorities to ensure that the sanctity of the Line of Control is upheld at all times and to ensure that such incidents of unprovoked firing across the LOC do not recur.

Thank you very much.

002. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of External Affairs Minister to Paris and other issues .
New Delhi, January 8, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Belated Happy New Year to all of you and thank you very much for coming over for this first briefing in this year. I have a couple of announcements to make and then will take your questions if you have any.

The first announcement I have to make is about the visit of the External Affairs Minister to France. External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid will be traveling to Paris on 10th and 11th of this month. He will have bilateral discussions with his counterpart Mr. Laurent Fabius, and will also call on the President of France, Mr. Francois Hollande.

As you are aware, the last visit of a Foreign Minister from France was in 2011 when Mr. Alain Juppe had met his then counterpart Mr. S.M. Krishna. Subsequently in July 2012, on the sidelines of the Tokyo Conference on Afghanistan, Mr. Krishna had met his then counterpart Mr Laurent Fabius. This is of course Mr. Salman Khurshid's first meeting and his first visit to Paris as External Affairs Minister.

In addition, I have another announcement and this pertains to the visit of the Deputy Prime Minister of Vietnam. Mr. Vu Van Ninh who will be arriving in New Delhi shortly. We have separately sent you an advisory for his meetings in New Delhi. Tomorrow the External Affairs Minister will be meeting him. We will also have a media interaction subsequent to that meeting.

Finally, the third announcement that I have is about the meeting of the BRICS High Representatives for National Security. This is on the 10th of this month. We will send you a separate media advisory. It is expected that the High Representatives from Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa will meet at the Jawaharlal Nehru Bhavan. Subsequent to that meeting we will also have a media interaction by Mr. Shivshankar Menon, the Indian National Security Advisor.

Thank you very much. I have no further announcements to make. In case you have any questions, I will answer them.

Q: Would you please elaborate more about the visit of Mr. Khurshid to France? What will he discuss with his counterpart?

Official Spokesperson: If I may say, there has been a long gap between the visit of an Indian External Affairs Minister to France the last time and now. It is almost a decade. So, there is a lot to catch up in terms of a visit to Paris. As you know, France is a member of the Security Council and is involved in a variety of international matters. It is expected that Mr. Khurshid will use the benefit of the visit to discuss with him global issues.

In addition, India and France have a very robust bilateral relationship. For example, our trade in 2011-12 was approximately US$ 8.9 billion. For your information, about 800 or so French companies have their representative offices or other forms of representation in India. More than a 100 Indian companies have their representative offices or subsidiary offices in France.

France by my understanding is the ninth largest investor in India over a period of a decade or so, say from 2000 to 2012. On the other hand, India is fast emerging as a major investor in France. It is the thirteenth largest investor in France over the last five or seven year period. So, there are a lot of issues to discuss. In addition, as you are aware, we have a very elaborate relationship on nuclear matters. Finally, there are defence cooperation agreements which are in the pipeline. All these issues will be on the table for discussion when the two leaders meet.

Q: What is the status of Jaitapur Nuclear Power Plant?

Official Spokesperson: The Ministry of External Affairs is not the right Ministry to answer questions about the status of the establishment of a nuclear power plant. Therefore, I think it would not be fair on my part to respond to what is the status. But my understanding in terms of the bilateral relationship is that the negotiations on that are continuing between France and India; and we hope to have an update on that when we go to Paris.

So, the concerns, if any, relate to articulating to the public the safety of our nuclear power plants rather than within our nuclear establishment itself. 003. Keynote address by Minister of State for External Affairs
Smt. Preneet Kaur at Pravasi Bharatiya Divas.

Kochi, January 9, 2013.

Dr. M.K. Muneer, Hon'ble Minister for Panchayats & Social Welfare, Government of Kerala,

Shri Anto Antony, Hon'ble Member of Parliament,

Shri Mahen Utchanah, Chairman, Global Organization of People of Indian Origin (GOPIO) International East,

Distinguished Guests,

It is indeed a matter of great pleasure for me to participate in today's discussion on safe environment for overseas Indians. As Minister of State for External Affairs, I have always interacted with the Indian diaspora in all my visits abroad. I have found this to be an extremely important exercise because it gives me the opportunity to understand the issues concerning the Indian diaspora, which is, without any doubt, contributing immensely in the growth of their host countries all over the world. Today, the Indian diaspora, which is the second largest in the world, has a diversified global presence and is working tirelessly for the betterment of the economy of many countries which they call their home today. I am told that the diaspora is now estimated at over 20 million spread across 110 countries of the world. However, the high concentration is seen in some regions which include the Middle East, United States of America, Malaysia, South Africa and Europe.

With their enormous skill, grit and hard work, the members of Indian diaspora have very succeeded in their chosen profession. Government of India also recognises the importance of Indian diaspora as it has brought economic, political and strategic benefits to India as well. We can say that the Indian diaspora really constitutes a diverse global community representing different regions, languages, cultures and faiths. They are indeed a bridge between India and the host country.

Depending on the geo-economic opportunities available, the profile of the diaspora communities varies from region to region. On one hand, there are skilled and semi-skilled workforce like the contract workers in the Gulf region, and on the other hand, USA and Europe sustains a high presence of educated professionals of Indian origin including increasing number of technocrats. Members of the Indian diaspora have continuously played an important role in mobilising support for issues of vital concern to Indians in their host countries.

While the Indian diaspora contributes to our economy and spread our culture abroad, we should always remain conscious of their needs and concerns. There are several problems and challenges which have been brought to the notice of Government of India. I want to assure this august gathering that we had responded to them in the most effective manner. There are several problems faced by our community, for example, non-payment or under-payment of salary, false promises made by unscrupulous recruiting agents in India, low salary and substandard living conditions, refusal of their medical treatment by their employer, arbitrary changes in the terms of employment, problems of housemaids, etc.

The Government of India from time to time has taken several initiatives to create a safe environment for Indian community abroad. Some of the initiatives taken by the Government include establishment of a dedicated Community Welfare Wing, compulsory attestation of Service Agreements of all household workers, Open House sessions, free legal counselling assistance, provision of shelter to Indian women workers in distress, Labour Welfare Fund for needy workers, setting up of 24x7 helpline, Labour Welfare Fund to financially assist poor Indian workers, a new e-governance project for 'e-migrate' linking the passport system, immigration system and emigration clearance; Pension and Life Insurance Scheme for Indian workers abroad.

Here I would like to mention that it is not rare to come across Indians facing atrocity abroad. The Indian diaspora in the Middle East and Gulf region are mainly from the working class and the major issue faced by them pertains to contractual disputes with the recruiters. This is apparently because of lack of trade unions to protect the right of the immigrants. There are several cases in which these unskilled workers are subjected to difficult situation by employer in the form of holding back of passports, non-payment of salaries, etc Therefore, for the protection and welfare of the Indian workers abroad, the Government of India has signed MoUs on manpower with UAE, Kuwait, Qatar, Oman, Bahrain, Jordan and Malaysia. The Government has also created the Indian Community Welfare Fund which enables the Heads of the Missions to provide on site relief measure for the distressed Indian workers.

Another step in this direction by Government of India is pursuing a proactive policy to transform the emigration system and empower the emigrants through systemic interventions at the highest level. The Government has notified the Emigration (Amendment) Rules, 2009 revising the eligibility criteria of Recruiting Agents enhancing the recruiting capacity and increasing the security amount and service charges.

In addition, the Government has undertaken steps to deepen the engagement with the non-resident Indians and the persons of Indian origin. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs is implementing the 'e-migrate' project that will provide end-to-end computerised solutions for all processes emigration system. This system will link all the given stakeholders on a common platform which will be used by the workers, offices of Protector of Emigrants, recruitment agencies, immigration officials, employers and Indian Missions abroad. Another initiative of the Government of India is the Pension and Life Insurance Scheme for Indian workers. I believe that this is being implemented on a pilot basis and soon it will be taken up in all the ECR (Emigration Clearance Required) countries and all over India. I am sure this scheme would be extremely beneficial to the workers.

An Overseas Workers Resource Centre (OWRC), with a 24X7 helpline supported by eight regional languages assists emigrants/emigrants intending to go abroad for employment to 17 notified ECR countries.

It is imperative to highlight that 'bilateral cooperation initiative' taken by the Government of India, with an objective to diversify the overseas destination base for the Indian workers (under which the government would be signing labour mobility partnership agreements with countries where employment opportunities are likely to emerge). Government of India has signed bilateral Social Security Agreements (SSA) with Belgium, France, Germany, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Denmark, South Korea, Hungary, The Czech Republic, Norway, Finland, Canada, Japan, and Sweden. These agreements are being pursued with the developed countries to protect the social security interests of Indian professionals residing there.

It goes without saying that the various diaspora organisations play a critical role in maintaining a harmonious relation between several diverse groups in their home away from home. These organisations have filled the vacuum which would otherwise be difficult to fill. I am certain that the role played by such organisations will increase in the years to come as the diaspora population will increase and they would be involved in several new initiatives hitherto unknown to them.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the synergies created due to the efficient implementation of various schemes have definitely created an environment which is in the best interest of our diaspora. All our Missions play a very active role in interacting and resolving issues pertaining to the diaspora. I am certain that today's deliberations would go a long way in providing useful inputs in making the working environment safer for the diaspora. I am looking forward to hear the view points of the distinguished panelists and thank you very much for giving me this opportunity to share some thoughts on this very important issue.

004. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming today.

With all our Ministers traveling, I have no specific major news announcement to make to you, nor do I have an announcement to make in terms of anything that we would be undertaking during the next couple of days. Beyond that we have a hectic diplomatic schedule that is being worked out. I will make those announcements once all the arrangements are made. So I would like to inform you that I have no specific announcement to make, but I am open to responding to any questions that you may like to ask.

Q: I just wanted to know what the Government's reaction is to what Hillary Clinton said in her Global Town Hall the other day, first on David Headley where she said she believes he has got the best possible sentence and that he will continue to cooperate in future as well, basically in a sense ruling out extradition because that was the question put to her. Is India going to pursue his extradition? If so, how, given that he did have a plea bargain with the United States?

Official Spokesperson: We have always held that bringing to justice the perpetrators of 26/11 is a work in progress which we intend to take to its logical conclusion. Let me take some time and try and explain our position on this.

Our objective has been that the processes initiated with the filing of the charge-sheet against nine individuals by the NIA Special Court regarding the conspiracy surrounding the Mumbai terror attack is taken forward; and that is our goal. Two of these charge-sheets are against David Coleman Headley and Tahawwur Rana. The US has been helpful thus far within the limits of their own laws. They have enabled us access to Headley. Our officials have been able to spend seven days questioning him. However, we have not been able to question Rana earlier given his rights as an accused under US law. But now that he is a sentenced prisoner, we will once again seek US Government's support for access to him and also for further access, as may be deemed necessary, to Headley.

We intend to continue to work with the US to seek access to others who may be of interest, and we will use all existing bilateral mechanisms for this. We also wish to continue to work with the US to help us in securing access to all others who are charge-sheeted and to produce them before the NIA court. We will work on all available legal channels and avenues to ensure that the court case of the NIA proceeds and that the charge-sheeted individuals are produced before the court.

If I may try and summarise what I have said so far, we have received good cooperation from the United States in the 26/11 cases; we intend to work closely with the United States in taking these legal processes forward; our demand for the extradition of Rana and Headley continues to stand.

Q: I am from the North East. China earlier constructed dams on the Brahmaputra in Tibet. Very shortly they are going to construct three more dams in Tibet. During the rainy season the river waters will actually enter huge areas of North East including Arunachal Pradesh and Assam and adjoining areas and our neighbouring country Bangladesh also will be totally drowned, severe damage will be caused, lakhs of people will be rendered homeless, and property will be damaged. What steps is your Government going to take? Are you going to take the issue up with the Government of China?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much, Sir, that is a fairly long question and I think along with that it is a statement too. Let me try and respond to some of the issues that you have raised.

The Government of India carefully monitors all development on the Brahmaputra River. As a lower riparian state with considerable established use rights to the waters of the river, India has conveyed its views and concerns to the Chinese authorities including at the highest levels of the Government of the People's Republic of China. India once again urges China to ensure that the interests of downstream states are not harmed by any activities in upstream areas. I hope that is an adequate response.

Q: Did the Chinese respond to our concerns? Do they indicate they are doing something about it or is it just a routine complaint that we have filed?

Official Spokesperson: I do not want to get into disclosing diplomatic dialogue. I think I will put out the statement that I have just made. If you read it, it covers all aspects including a response to that question. I would suggest please read it carefully.

Q: There are three dams we are talking about. We know that at least in one case last year on the dam at Jiache, after construction activity was detected India had raised it, as you rightly said. Have we raised the issue of the other two dams as well? Official Spokesperson: I am not going to get into the specifics at this stage. This question that he had asked was a specific question, and I have responded with a specific answer. I would suggest that please carefully read that answer, you will have elements of your question answered in that.

Q: Today I read on Twitter that India pledged some money for Mali. Would you please elaborate more about India's ... (Inaudible)... the situation in Mali?

Official Spokesperson: India's position on international terrorism has been clear and consistent. We unequivocally condemn terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. Wherever and by whosoever committed, regardless of their motivation, we consider it criminal and unjustifiable. We also believe that the fight against the scourge of terrorism must be unrelenting. We as members of the Security Council last year, along with other members as well as the AU and the ECOWAS had made a shared attempt to arrive at a comprehensive strategy to deal with the crisis in Mali. The outcome of that was Resolution 2085. The United States Security Council had expressed its support and understanding of the ongoing military operation in the context of Security Council Resolution 2085.

As far as this issue was concerned, there was a meeting in Addis Ababa on 29th. This was attended by our Ambassador in Addis Ababa who is also accredited to the African Union. And we have decided that we would pledge one million dollars to the African Union Donors Conference in support of African-led International Support Mission to Mali (AFISMA). In addition to that, we have a longstanding engagement with Mali in the fields of capacity building, human resources development, and creation of social and physical infrastructure.

An end to this crisis would enable us to resume this partnership for the benefit of the people of Mali. And it is our intention that this amount of assistance of a development nature would go as much as 100 million dollars, once the situation stabilizes.

Q: Is it in the form of urging China or is it in the form of a complaint to China? In case China does not listen to what India is saying, pay heed, is there any international recourse that India could resort to?

Official Spokesperson: I think on that issue let us take it step-by-step, let us not jump the gun. Again as I said, the statement that I have made will be available very shortly on the web site. Please read it carefully. What it means is self evident.

Q: I am working for a Spanish news agency. I would like to know if Mr. Khurshid has an idea to travel to Latin America.

Official Spokesperson: Welcome to our briefings first of all. It is nice to have you here and see your interest in Indian foreign policy. Our regular practice is, once we tie up all arrangements only then we make announcements. I have started this meeting by saying that we have no announcement to make. Therefore, at this stage we have no finalized plans on any visits this week or the next.

Q: Pakistan has made counter charges against India of beheading their soldiers and also of using irregulars to behead civilians in Pakistan. And they have raised this issue with the UNMOGIP. What is your response and also what is India's position with regard to UNMOGIP?

Official Spokesperson: I have not heard through any diplomatic channel any such complaint that you have mentioned. Therefore, I am oblivious to what you are mentioning because this has not ever been raised through a diplomatic channel. Therefore, there is no requirement for me to answer. If you are referring to news reports, I think the Ministry of Defence had responded to those news reports and I do not need to respond to them because the Government of India speaks in one voice on this.

As regards your question on UNMOGIP, I think I have repeated that many times and I do not think we need to respond to this again because our Ambassador most recently at the UN had articulated our position. I will send you a copy of that statement which is fairly all-encompassing and provides our considered view on that. There is no change on this. This is not a position that we have articulated now. It has been a position that we have held for the last forty years.

Q: I need a clarification. The gentleman who has been on the Wanted List in India has been brought back from Indonesia after apparently getting his visa and passport renewed. Can you just explain as to why such a thing did happen? Or was there a mix up?

Official Spokesperson: If you mean his passport renewal, that is the only thing that I as the Ministry of External Affairs can respond to. I think Srinjoy Chowdhury and the Times Now Group have been following this for some time. But let me try and explain to you the situation which I have responded to previously on this.

We work on the basis of information available to the Ministry of External Affairs. When this question was put to me I think in May or June, we had then responded that as far as we were aware, there were no restrictions provided to us by any agency of the Government of India not to renew passport of the individual – the individual in this context was the person you mentioned. Consequently, as an Indian citizen, he was entitled to all services that all other Indian citizens are entitled to. Subsequently in September 2012 we did receive information about his activities and the need to revoke his passport. That was done expeditiously. And subsequent to that his stay in Indonesia became difficult because he does not have a valid passport. Consequently, at a certain stage he was arrested or detained by the immigration authorities in Indonesia who immediately contacted our Mission there, which in turn promptly contacted those agencies who had since September 2012 been in touch with us about the alleged misdeeds of this individual.

We have very good cooperation from the Indonesian Government and that led to his deportation in double quick time as far as we are concerned. So as we see it, this was a success of the efforts of the Mission in Indonesia which acted proactively and quickly and promptly in responding to a request that was received by them last year. Anything that was done before that was in consonance with the norms that you would expect us to follow in dealing with Indian citizens.

Q: When is the PM going to Japan? There were reports that he is likely to visit in Feb. But that is being pushed back I think. So, when is he likely to visit Japan?

Official Spokesperson: I do not want to answer to speculative reports. I have no information of a visit that you are mentioning of at this stage.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... Does India see it as betrayal because so far the Pakistan civilian government has used the excuse that it was not completely in the know of what the Army was contemplating with regard to Kargil?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and frame my response. That there is a debate going on in Pakistan on this issue is not new. This is a debate internal to Pakistan. It is a debate which has been there for quite some time. There are people, like the gentleman you mentioned just now, with a point of view: there are others with another point of view. As far as we in The Government of India are concerned, while we closely follow this debate, we do not participate in this. Therefore, I do not want to break that tradition of trying to participate in a debate in another country which is internal to it. But the outcome of whatever was the basis of this decision making is that India did get impacted by this and Kargil happened is something that both sides now seem to agree. And this basically justifies what we have always been saying about it.

Q: I just want to ask you about the recently concluded African Union Summit. Did India send any officials or Ministers there? Was there a discussion on the Ezulwini Consensus about nominating African representatives for the permanent seats on the Security Council? Are you in a position to throw some light on that please?

Official Spokesperson: I am in a position to throw light on our efforts and role there, not on what the leaders there decided because it is proper for them to make that open. As far as we are concerned, yes, we did send a senior official. Secretary (West) Mr. Sudhir Vyas had gone there as Special Envoy. He did have meetings with a cross section of the leadership there. And the issue of UN Security Council reform and our position and our intention to make progress on that was communicated to all concerned.

Q: Again on Anil Bastawade, it is not just about the passport having been reissued but also that Enforcement Directorate claims that certain Embassies and Consulates in Abu Dhabi and Dubai did not cooperate with them when it comes to Anil Bastawade. Is MEA looking into the matter? Is there an enquiry set up as to who are the officers involved?

Official Spokesperson: Let me make it very clear at the outset, noncooperation is not a tradition of the Ministry of External Affairs. We always try to cooperate with every agency of the Government of India because we are the external arm of the Government of India. An Embassy represents India in its entirety outside. That said, nobody has told us what you are saying has figured in some media reports. Nevertheless, we always take our job seriously and we have started to find out information on the facts of the case. Our Embassy in Abu Dhabi has been contacted, and they will in due course send a report on this matter. While this is still in the realm of media reports, we thought it best to take it up and request our Ambassador because the agencies concerned have not been in touch on this matter. That is what I meant when I said that its in the realm of reporting because if there was such an incident, it is normal for people to get in touch and indicate that if this incident happened some years ago, as is being indicated in that report, then it is perhaps proper that we should have been informed about this before. But nonetheless we have already initiated efforts in this regard and we will get to the bottom of this shortly.

Q: You said that we are getting good cooperation from the US with reference to terrorism. But in December we did have the Department of Justice saying that cases against two senior ex-ISI officials cannot be pursued with reference to their role in 26/11. Now I am again questioning whether we are really getting good cooperation from the US because you do have Secretary of State John Kerry confirm this. You do have a drawdown coming in Afghanistan. In this context, do you actually see good cooperation with the US on terrorism?

Official Spokesperson: I get your point. I think maybe I will need to put out what I said in print. I said 'good cooperation within the parameters of their laws'. What we have seen is that within their legal context they have been assisting us to the maximum extent possible. That it does not meet our legal needs is also quite clear, but that does not mean to say that we will not pursue our legal goals. So while it is good cooperation, we need to see it in the context of their legal regime, our requirements are different and we will continue to press on that.

Now as regards the ISI, we have put out a fairly detailed statement on that which is available for the record. I do not need to reiterate that. That elaborate statement indicates our view on that position. As regards any other development that you are saying, I do not know how they are directly linked to terrorism in terms of changes of personnel etc. So I will not even dare to delve into that area.

Q: Looking forward to the forthcoming BRICS Summit, could you give us a sense of what is the progress on the Development Bank? Are we also in the running to host the Bank?

Official Spokesperson: I think you have taken five steps before even the BRICS Finance Ministers have decided on this. But that said, this is a major element which is now currently under discussion between the Finance Ministries of the BRICS countries. We expect an outcome which will be announced at the next BRICS Summit in Durban in March. I think based on that maybe your next questions can be asked at that stage because at this stage we are not even ready with an outcome. So once that outcome is available you may like to ask that and many other questions on BRICS and the proposal for the Development Bank.

Q: The Minister of External Affairs was in Brussels recently for this Ministerial meeting. Can you tell us what the result of this meeting was?

Official Spokesperson: Yes. Minister Salman Khurshid was both in Germany and in Brussels. He was in Germany on a bilateral visit. This is the first visit by External Affairs Minister of India in a bilateral context since 2002. Germany is our largest trading partner in Europe. Also we have a strategic partnership with Germany since 2000. As you are aware, this year there will be a summit-level meeting between our Prime Minister and the Chancellor of Germany. This is scheduled later during the year. Once we finalise those dates, we will let you know. But during the discussions in Germany he met the Foreign Minister of Germany Mr. Westerwelle. They had discussions on bilateral issues including on possible arrangements in terms of high-tech exports from Germany to India.

Also, as you are aware, we have a new National Manufacturing Policy. With Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor we are looking for investments from various countries including Germany in that area. In addition, they also discussed issues in the region which meant Germany has an active interest in Afghanistan; Germany is also part of the P5+1 talks. So there were issues on all these matters that were discussed. Then the External Affairs Minister visited Brussels, as you said. In Brussels he has had a meeting yesterday with Baroness Ashton. For those of you who would like to know further details than my short summary, we have put out a YouTube version of a fifteen-minute press conference between the two leaders. That gives you a broad idea of our discussions. But largely these were related to the FTA. The goal is to try and formalize it as early as possible.

The Prime Minister of India will also be visiting Brussels for an annual summit. Last time the summit was held in Delhi; so this time it is in Europe.

And discussions related to those matters. Also the EU is our largest partner in cumulative terms. There were discussions on those matters and on the EU acquiring a larger role politically on various issues. And we had opportunity to share information and ideas on those matters where the EU High Representative has a role to play. He will later today meet his Belgian counterpart.

Q: Sir, North Korea plans to conduct a nuclear test in the near future. Could we have the Indian reaction to that?

Official Spokesperson: When they conduct it we will have a reaction. We have previously had reactions saying that we are committed to UN Security Council resolutions and we hope that North Korea will abide by them. If there is any other change in that and there is a situation of the type that you are mentioning, we will respond to it in accordance with what we have responded previously.

Q: India and EU are discussing Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement since many years. When will it be finalized?

Official Spokesperson: I wish I could tell you that sort of a thing. I do not know whether any individual can tell you that but the idea is that there is a commitment to try and resolve this as quickly as possible, and to have an agreement because both of us see that it would be a win-win situation for both of us. But that said, as they say, the devil lies in the detail, and those details are being worked out. We hope that it can be finalized at an early date. How early is early, I will leave that choice for you to make.

Thank you very much.

005. Media Interaction of Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, January 31, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming today.

With all our Ministers traveling, I have no specific major news announcement to make to you, nor do I have an announcement to make in terms of anything that we would be undertaking during the next couple of days. Beyond that we have a hectic diplomatic schedule that is being worked out. I will make those announcements once all the arrangements are made. So I would like to inform you that I have no specific announcement to make, but I am open to responding to any questions that you may like to ask.

Q: I just wanted to know what the Government's reaction is to what Hillary Clinton said in her Global Town Hall the other day, first on David Headley where she said she believes he has got the best possible sentence and that he will continue to cooperate in future as well, basically in a sense ruling out extradition because that was the question put to her. Is India going to pursue his extradition? If so, how, given that he did have a plea bargain with the United States?

Official Spokesperson: We have always held that bringing to justice the perpetrators of 26/11 is a work in progress which we intend to take to its logical conclusion. Let me take some time and try and explain our position on this.

If I may try and summarise what I have said so far, we have received good cooperation from the United States in the 26/11 cases; we intend to work closely with the United States in taking these legal processes forward; our demand for the extradition of Rana and Headley continues to stand.

Also we have a strategic partnership with Germany since 2000. As you are aware, this year there will be a summit-level meeting between our Prime Minister and the Chancellor of Germany. This is scheduled later during the year. Once we finalise those dates, we will let you know. But during the discussions in Germany he met the Foreign Minister of Germany Mr. Westerwelle. They had discussions on bilateral issues including on possible arrangements in terms of high-tech exports from Germany to India.

Also, as you are aware, we have a new National Manufacturing Policy. With Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor we are looking for investments from various countries including Germany in that area. In addition, they also discussed issues in the region which meant Germany has an active interest in Afghanistan; Germany is also part of the P5+1 talks. So there were issues on all these matters that were discussed. Then the External Affairs Minister visited Brussels, as you said. In Brussels he has had a meeting yesterday with Baroness Ashton. For those of you who would like to know further details than my short summary, we have put out a YouTube version of a fifteen-minute press conference between the two leaders. That gives you a broad idea of our discussions. But largely these were related to the FTA. The goal is to try and formalize it as early as possible.

The Prime Minister of India will also be visiting Brussels for an annual summit. Last time the summit was held in Delhi; so this time it is in Europe. And discussions related to those matters. Also the EU is our largest partner in cumulative terms. There were discussions on those matters and on the EU acquiring a larger role politically on various issues. And we had opportunity to share information and ideas on those matters where the EU High Representative has a role to play. He will later today meet his Belgian counterpart.

Q: Sir, North Korea plans to conduct a nuclear test in the near future. Could we have the Indian reaction to that?

Official Spokesperson: When they conduct it we will have a reaction. We have previously had reactions saying that we are committed to UN Security Council resolutions and we hope that North Korea will abide by them. If there is any other change in that and there is a situation of the type that you are mentioning, we will respond to it in accordance with what we have responded previously.

Q: India and EU are discussing Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement since many years. When will it be finalized?

Official Spokesperson: I wish I could tell you that sort of a thing. I do not know whether any individual can tell you that but the idea is that there is a commitment to try and resolve this as quickly as possible, and to have an agreement because both of us see that it would be a win-win situation for both of us. But that said, as they say, the devil lies in the detail, and those details are being worked out. We hope that it can be finalized at an early date. How early is early, I will leave that choice for you to make.

Thank you very much.

006. Foreign Secretary's meeting with Apex Chambers of Commerce in New Delhi.

New Delhi, February 1, 2013.

1. Foreign Secretary, Shri Ranjan Mathai and Secretary (Economic Relations), Shri Pinak R. Chakravarty had a meeting with representatives of apex business chambers namely ASSOCHAM, FICCI, CII and PHD Chamber of Commerce.
2. Foreign Secretary spoke on Ministry of External Affairs Economic and Commercial Diplomacy, which has been an intrinsic part of India's overall diplomatic effort and sought views and recommendations of the business groups. Ministry of External Affairs continued outreach programmes through new divisions such as Energy Security, Investment and Technology Promotion, Public Diplomacy and the Development Partnership Administration were also highlighted. He further said that the 77 Passport Seva Kendras which have been established in last three years as a public-private partnership was also part of Ministry's adaption to changing circumstances and public requirements.
3. The representatives of business chambers, among other things suggested that Ministry of External Affairs should focus more on specific regions such as Africa and specific sectors such as energy, promotion of Indian services industries abroad, support by Embassies to Indian SMEs, coordination with economic and infrastructure Ministries, etc. They also suggested that the Ministry should endeavour to secure a more liberal visa regime both for incoming business visitors to India and for Indian business visitors abroad.

4. Foreign Secretary and Secretary (ER) assured representatives of the apex chambers that the Ministry will look into the suggestions made by the participants. Secretary (ER) will chair regular meetings with the business chambers on sectoral issues.

007. Interview of External Affairs Minister with the Business Standard.

New Delhi, 25 January 2013.

(Business Standard/by Nayanima Basu)

India has formally rejected any offer for talks with Pakistan. How do you plan to solve the crisis and ensure that there is no more cease-fire violation?

We have not said no to anything. We just think that there is a proper time and place for everything. There are still signals on bilateral and also third party intervention. We have to be very clear. It is bilateral full stop. There is no scope and never has been for third party intervention under any circumstances. I think that must settle down. Two, it is important that any contacts that takes place which will go beyond the established procedures such as the contacts between the DGMOs (Director General Military Operations) and the contacts between the flag commanders on both sides, beyond those we should have the right atmospherics and right situation for further contacts. So nobody is saying no but I think it is important that this should be done carefully, sensibly and in an appropriate manner.

When you talk of right atmospherics, somewhere does the Indian government is apprehending that they might raise the Kashmir issue?

We do not have any apprehension. We want indications, signals of sensitivity to something that we have felt is an extremely serious and a hurtful event. We want something that indicates sensitivity to our concerns. This is important. Of course, when you talk there are no conditional discussions. Our revived comprehensive dialogue does not have any conditionality but you have sensible way of prioritizing how you will proceed with a dialogue. And that's what we were doing. So that's the major thing. Now the minor thing is something that can hurt the dialogue also needs to be settled by a dialogue but a dialogue to settle a larger dialogue issue should happen in an atmosphere that makes it possible, viable and feasible. I think that's basically what we are emphasizing.

Pakistan once again missed the deadline for granting MFN (most favoured nation) trade status to us. Do you think trade normalization with Pakistan is ever possible? How do you view the cancellation of the meeting between the commerce ministers of both countries? Did you speak to Pakistan government regarding this?

I think trade normalization will take place. It is important. It is not just trade that were discussed, there are many far-reaching and important matters that we have been talking about in the past. For instance the Tapi pipeline is one such thing. I think it is not very productive to be speculative on trade being derailed. But we work within a framework of atmospherics. Those are important. The substance and perception both have to go hand in hand. Of the course the deadline for MFN has been missed but it is a work in progress. I do not think it is end of the world that a particular deadline is missed. And I think it is not end of the world for an opportunity to further consult on that or discuss that has been lost because of reasons given of preoccupations at home. I can understand there would be preoccupations at home considering a rapidly changing political situation in Pakistan. The commerce minister (Anand Sharma) is fully briefed and he is keeping track of it. We (commerce minister Anand Sharma and I) do confer from time to time and we are sure whatever nudging and whatever pushing needs to be done will be done.

What is India doing to avert another debacle like GMR in Maldives? How do you now plan to encourage Indian industry to increase their footprint globally?

I do not treat it as a debacle or a setback. It is a disappointment because we like to see our flag flourish in terms of commercial initiative that are companies take particularly in friendly countries where we have had strong traditional links. And if we are unsuccessful in a commercial venture for one reason or another, obviously that is disappointing. There were obviously issues of legal nature as perceived by the government in Maldives and GMR has accepted the consequences of the legal issues that emerged and now it is only a matter of ensuring that the cancellation is followed up by other legal remedies that come with cancellation or termination of the contract. I think it is another event that we take in our stride and we move forward. Our effort was that this should not be given a political colour and this should not be used by people not friendly to India as a reason and occasion for driving a wedge between friends. I think that seems to be pretty much on track.

How do you plan to address the challenges posed by China while we also see them as one of our strategic partners? Trade deficit with China is increasing year-on-year. On the other hand, some Chinese firms are threatening to pull out investments, there were problems with Huawei. So how is the government viewing the state of Chinese investments in India?

We do believe we have a constructive partnership with China. We are also conscious that China offers in the marketplace a very stiff competition because they have expertise and they have advantages in terms of costs sometimes. But we also have our own advantages and I think there can be two competing models, one of India and one of China and that gives greater opportunity to all the spaces in which we both offer our services. I think we should not be necessarily self-conscious of any disadvantage. We should factor in disadvantages and also emphasize the advantages that we have. In terms of trade balance, yes, this is something we continue to address in different ways, including in our negotiations with China. So this remains a priority and we will continue to address it. But this requires a collaborative effort between government and industry and I hope that if the industry redoubles its efforts to ensure that not only we have an acceptable trade balance but also that we have good flow of investments on both sides.

What are some of the major challenges to India's foreign policy today? Are you planning to bring about any major changes in India's foreign policy with such difficult neighbours?

I think we have a policy that is rooted in a broad consensus in the country. It also has a historical pedigree which I think is very significant. But in the broad contours of that consensus and policy we need to fine-tune tactically because this is a time of consolidating relationships with economic interaction and I think for that we have to be vigilant and willing to change our tactical approach because in many cases it is the market forces that will ultimately decide how things move. But we have also I think advantage in terms of soft diplomacy, our cultural diplomacy is important. We have a steady expansion programme of our cultural centres sponsored by the ICCR. We are continuing our engagement of people to people contacts and I think a combination of sustained cultural diplomacy, described often as soft diplomacy with sensible and competent economic planning of relationships will give us an effective presence in the world.

With the re-election of President Barack Obama in US, India's concerns over hike in professional visa fees and outsourcing will persist. How do you plan to tackle this issue in the year ahead?

In the months ahead we will have an opportunity to take up these issues. We have an ongoing dialogue with the US. We are waiting for their Cabinet to be in place. I think over the next month or so we will have other idea of schedules. Our agenda is clearly there. We will take it up with all the energy at our command as soon as people are in place to begin the dialogue.

What benefits will our integration with ASEAN yield in the long run?

I personally think that for the whole country it is of immense value. But particularly for the northeastern part of our country which has always been a special target for our development schemes because there are very special kinds of problems in the northeast and also a very special potential. And I think, in order to, engage with the northeast in an effective manner I think connectivity with ASEAN and trade with ASEAN will be enormously important. It is the economic integration of that entire region which will play a major role. It will have not only direct benefits to the northeast but also give us a much higher profile and presence in countries like Myanmar where because of years of isolation, we have not been able to contribute and receive as much as our potential clearly indicates that there is for us to do.

What will be India's stance should there be a rise in tension in the South China Sea with growing Chinese ambitions there?

There are two issues there. One is the issue of freedom of navigation and other is the issue of sovereignty between neighbouring states. Now as far as sovereignty issue is concerned, we have repeatedly said that must be settled through bilateral negotiations between the countries concerned and we are not involved in that. As far as freedom of navigation is concerned, we have repeatedly said, bilaterally and multilaterally, that this is a matter on which India takes a clear position that law of the sea and freedom of navigation on open seas is something we stand by, we support and we are committed to. And this is being recognised by ASEAN in the stated code of conduct. I do not think we should really be speculating on the possibility of tensions rising to a level that it requires any further than what we have said and done and I believe they are all matured parties and they do realize beyond their stated positions there are certain overall compulsions of comity of nations that will keep us within levels that allow for a reasonable amount of dialogue to resolve these issues.

What will be India's strategy towards Afghanistan post 2014 when US troops pull out completely from there?

Our position is very clear. Our position is that Afghanistan must make up its mind how it wants to proceed. India is willing to help in every way possible within the wishes of the people of Afghanistan and the elected government of Afghanistan. We are in touch with stakeholders in that region, neighbours of Afghanistan, including in central Asia. And also when we have the opportunity to discuss this with US for instance, that what we like is to be able to be a part of the solution and not be in any way be seen or be dragged into becoming a part of the problem. As far as we are concerned, we are very good friends, we have extremely good and meaningful relationship. We have extended to them such help as they have expected and desired in the field of development in important institution capacity building providing them with such training and assistance they require for their Afghan National Army to take over the responsibilities beyond 2014 and of course on which they already have taken responsibility in many districts. And we will continue to respond to the wishes of the people of Afghanistan and the elected government.

008. Address by Finance Minister P. Chidambaram on 'India's National Security – Challenges and Priorities' while delivering the K. Subramanyam Memorial Lecture.

New Delhi, February 6, 2013.

I am grateful to you for inviting me to deliver the K Subrahmanyam Memorial Lecture. When I first joined the Government in 1985, he was already a Secretary-level officer belonging to the hallowed Indian Administrative Service. My first interaction with him as Minister of State for Personnel left me with the impression that he was thoroughly disenchanted with the bureaucracy and the daily chores of a bureaucrat. As I watched him from a distance, I saw him move seamlessly from being a civil servant to a national security expert. Without doubt, as long as he lived, he was the most authoritative voice on matters relating to national security. He lectured and wrote extensively on national security issues and soon acquired a large following of aspiring scholars and admirers. It is to K Subrahmanyam that we owe the growing number of scholars and analysts on matters concerning national security.

2. Until recently, we had taken a very compartmentalised view of national security. Each threat to national security was neatly fitted into one compartment. The first, of course, was a war with Pakistan. That was fitted into a compartment and was meant to be deterred, or defended, through the might of our armed forces. A war with China was, and remains, unthinkable and therefore that threat was fitted into another compartment and reserved to be dealt with through a mixture of engagement, diplomacy, trade, and positioning adequate forces along the borders. Beyond Pakistan and China, we did not perceive any external threat to our security. Other threats such as communal conflicts, terrorism, naxalism or maoist violence, drug peddling and Fake Indian Currency Notes (FICN) were bundled together under the label “threats to internal security” and were left to the Ministry of Home Affairs. Some threats were not acknowledged at all as threats to national security and these included energy security, food security and pandemics. K Subrahmanyam was one of the earliest to argue that we should take a more holistic view of the threats to national security.

3. Recently, eminent voices have echoed the views of K Subrahmanyam. The Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, in his address to the Combined Commanders Conference on October 20, 2005 identified - as threats to national security - terrorism, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, low intensity conflicts, and threats to the security of sea-lanes. The National Security Adviser, Shri Shivshankar Menon, delivering the Raja Ramanna Lecture on January 21, 2013 said “We now need to consider our energy security, food security, technology security, and social cohesion and institutions, to name just a few, when we think of national security.” In another place in the same lecture, he argued that there was little distinction between internal security and external security and identified the internal security challenges as having ‘some roots outside India and (is) linked to what happens outside the country.’
4. A close examination of the threats to national security will reveal that each one of them is connected to one or more other threats. For example, the threat of terrorism is connected to the threat of proliferation of arms including weapons of mass destruction. The threat to the security of our sea-lanes is connected to the threat to energy security. Low intensity conflicts have a direct bearing on social cohesion. Technology security will be the key to building new institutions. Natural disasters, especially those caused by climate change, can wreck food security. Pandemics and diseases, if uncontrolled, can diminish our capacity to defend the borders against our adversaries or to defeat the militants within the country. National security is, therefore, caught in a complex spider's web and unless we recognise that each strand of this web is connected to other strands, we would not be able to do justice to our fundamental obligation to protect and defend the security of the nation.

5. Defending and promoting national security stands on three important pillars: firstly, human resources; secondly, science and technology; and thirdly, money. I have placed money last, not because it is the least important, but because it is the most important pillar of national security. Without money, we cannot nurture and build our human resources. We need schools, colleges, universities, libraries, laboratories, skill development institutions and, above all, highly qualified teachers. It was in the sixth decade of independence that we were able to pass a law on the Right to Education. Only now we have been able to achieve near-universal enrolment of children in school, but there are still problems in retention and, according to 2010-11 statistics, only 73 percent of children who enrol in class I complete five years of schooling and only 59.4 percent complete eight years of schooling. Despite having 32,987 colleges and 621 universities, the Gross Enrolment Ratio is only 18.8 percent. The shortage of teachers at the elementary school level is estimated at 800,000. According to the Ministry of Human Resource Development we need 20,000 more colleges and 1500 more universities if we aim to provide post-school education to all the children who complete school. Even today we turn out only about 800,000 engineers from our engineering colleges and 44,000 MBBS doctors from our medical colleges every year. Only 72,202 scholars were enrolled in Ph.D programmes in 2012 and only 9,704 applications were filed for patents in calendar 2012 by Indians. The Central Government spends only 0.67 percent of GDP on education (2010-11), and that includes all heads of expenditure that could be broadly brought under the subject 'education'. It is estimated that all the State Governments put together spend another 2.36 percent of GDP on education (2010-11). The percentages may appear modest, but the absolute amounts are quite large. Nevertheless, the average child enrolled in class V has only attained the competence of a child in class II. At the other end, none of our universities figure in the top 200 universities of the world.

6. Infant mortality rate is still at 44 per 1000 live births, maternal mortality rate is at 212 per 100,000 live births and, on both counts, we will not achieve the millennium development goal. Life expectancy has increased from 59.4 years in 1991 to 66.1 years in 2011, but during the same period the child sex ratio has declined from 945 girls to 914 girls per 1000 boys. The expenditure of the Central Government on 'health care' is 0.31 percent of GDP and State Governments spend another 0.60 percent of GDP. Thus, on education and health, the total Government expenditure is below 4 percent of GDP. Other emerging economies spend much more. For example, Brazil (9.1 percent), South Africa (9.6 percent) and China (5.9 percent) spend much more. If we can create the fiscal space that will allow us to spend an additional one percent every year amounting to an additional four percent over the remaining four years of the 12th Plan, it would make a huge impact on human resource development in the country.
7. Let me turn to science and technology. Every country that has moved up to the level of middle income country or a developed country has intensively promoted and heavily relied upon science and technology. It begins with the Gross Enrolment Ratio. Countries that have made the big leap in the last 30 years have an impressive GER. In Malaysia it is 40 percent; in Brazil it is 26 percent and in China it is 26 percent. China has about 1200 colleges devoted to engineering which produce about 700,000¹ engineering graduates every year.
8. None of the threats to national security can be effectively countered unless we embrace science and technology and impart instruction in science and technology beginning at the school level. There are four physical domains in our world – land, sea, air and space. We have a land border of a length of about 15,000 kms with Pakistan, Nepal, Bhutan, China, Bangladesh and Myanmar, and even a small length of 106 kms with Afghanistan. We patrol these borders using a variety of measures – from sophisticated radars to camel-mounted border guards. On the Indian-Bhutan border, there are only two land custom stations at Jaigaon and Hatisar. However, a large volume of goods do not move through these stations and do not bear the endorsement of the Customs authorities. There are densely populated villages on either side of the India-Nepal and the India-Bhutan borders. Because only border guarding forces are in place, and hardly any technology is employed, it is widely acknowledged that the borders are porous. As I speak to you, there are 191 battalions of the BSF, ITBP, SSB and Assam Rifles on our borders, but little technology.

9. We also have a long coastline extending to 7516 kms. It is only after the Mumbai terror attack that we took steps to strengthen coastal security. We created a Coastal Command, authorised and funded a number of Coastal Police Stations, funded the purchase of boats for coastal policing, and installed some radars. However, given the thousands of boats – small and big – that are in the waters off the west coast, the threats to security still remain quite high. On the waters off the east coast, there is virtually no force other than the Navy. We have many defence and defence research installations on the east coast, the DRDO and the Department of Space use the east coast extensively, and there is a large programme for exploration of oil and gas in the Bay of Bengal. Except for the presence of naval and coast guard vessels, and some technology that they have brought in, we have not used technology in a big way to bolster our security along the coast line.
10. In the air, we rely on the Air Force. This is perhaps the most technology-driven arm of the Defence Forces. In space, we have a few satellites, mainly dedicated to communications, weather forecasting and other peaceful purposes. Some satellites are capable of surveillance, but we abide by the international regime that there should be no militarisation of space.
11. Apart from land, sea, air and space, there is another domain which is cyber space. Much of our critical infrastructure lies in cyber space. Cyber crimes such as hacking, financial fraud, data theft, espionage etc. would, in certain circumstances, amount to terrorist acts. Further, the threat of disruption of financial, rail, air, power, critical information services through cyber attacks could also be construed as terrorist attacks. I need hardly emphasise that the latest advances in technology would be required to build our capacity to meet the threats in cyber space and, only recently, we made a modest beginning to build capacity to counter threats in cyber space.

12. It is a matter of regret that we are not ploughing in more funds and more human resources into R&D, especially R&D that is related to national security. Two days ago, Shri V K Saraswat, Director, DRDO, lamented that "one HAL, one ADE or one ADA would not suffice. Industry has to accelerate and increase investments in a big way if you want India to become an aerospace and aeronautical manufacturing centre." The situation will not change unless we allow more players, who will bring more resources, into security related manufacturing and services sectors. Our indigenous advance light helicopter (ALH), light combat helicopter (LCH), light utility helicopter (LUH), intermediate jet trainer (IJT) and basic trainer aircraft are still at the stage of design and development. Arjun, the main battle tank, after many years of development, was inducted into the Army in 2004, and the next model is still some years away. The largest conventional-powered naval vessel built in Garden Reach Shipyard is the Aditya weighing 17,000 DWT and a cruising speed of 20 knots. An aircraft carrier is under construction at the Cochin Shipyard. Capital expenditure in 2012-13 on indigenous defence production, including expenditure on R&D and in the DGOF and DGQA, was Rs.5,060 crore. If we wish to scale up both on technology and on numbers, we need far more resources than what we can afford today.
13. The last of the three pillars is money. It is also the pillar that will support the first two pillars. Money comes out of growth. The revenues of Government are tax revenue and non-tax revenue. Non-tax revenue constitutes a small proportion of total revenue and is more uncertain. Tax revenue consists, mainly, of five taxes: excise, customs, service tax, income tax and corporation tax. Excise revenue is a function of growth in the manufacturing sector; customs revenue is a function of higher imports; service taxes are a function of more activity and more transactions in the services sector; income tax and corporation tax are a function of more incomes for individuals, families and corporations. Increase in tax revenue is, in a very large measure, the outcome of higher growth. When the economy is on a roll, tax revenues are buoyant and when the economy slows down, the first casualty is revenue from taxes.

14. In our own times, we have seen the difference between the period when the Indian economy was on a high growth path and the period when there has been a noticeable slow down. In the former phase (2004-2008), we were able to provide for virtually everything that we desired, but also for exceptional items of expenditure such as the agricultural loan waiver scheme. During that period, we were also able to reduce the fiscal deficit from 4.5 percent in 2003-04 to 2.5 percent in 2007-08. When there is a slow down, the consequence is the exact opposite. The first hit is on tax revenue. As the anticipated growth in tax revenue declines, but expenditure cannot be compressed in the short term, the gap between revenue and expenditure rises rapidly. The short term response is to borrow more, leading to a ballooning of the fiscal deficit. The medium term response will be to contain expenditure, but that has its own consequences. A cut back on public expenditure will further slow down the economy. It will also curtail the number of jobs that are created. A cut back on social welfare will hurt the poor: less money for education or health care will deny, to many more people, access to basic education or basic health facilities. And, finally, a cut back on expenditure on defence or on the police forces will severely compromise our defence and security preparedness and diminish our capacity to meet the challenges to national security.
15. It is therefore a self-evident truth that growth is the key for greater public welfare and greater security. Yet, we adopt a disdainful attitude to growth. Some think that the value of growth is overstated and that we would be better off if we pursued not the goal of growth but other goals such as cultural nationalism or debt-driven egalitarianism.

16. There can be no better example of two countries on different growth paths, one a good two percentage points higher than the other, than of China and India. China has been able to grow at an average rate of 9 percent and above since 1981. India, on the other hand, achieved a growth rate of 9 percent or higher in only four years: 2005-06, 2006-07, 2007-08 and, finally, in 2010-11. Even while swearing by “socialism with Chinese characteristics”, China recognised the advantages of a higher growth rate. In his speech to the 18th Party Congress of the Communist Party of China, the outgoing President of China and General Secretary of the Party said: “The gross domestic product reached 47.2 trillion yuan in 2011 The infrastructure has been extensively upgraded. Urbanisation has been steadily advanced, and development between urban and rural areas and between regions has become better balanced. Notable progress has been made in making China an innovative country, and major breakthroughs have been made in manned space flights, the lunar exploration programmes, and in the development of a manned deep sea submersible, super computers and high speed railways.” In 2010, China spent 1.84 percent of its GDP on R&D and that was a humungous sum of USD 134 billion. India, on the other hand, spent 0.9 percent of GDP and that amounted to only USD 13 billion. President Hu Jintao also counted the improvement in living standards and its benefits and said: “Urban and rural employment has continued to increase; individual income has increased rapidly; household assets have grown steadily; people’s need for daily necessities such as clothing, food, housing and transportation is better met.”
17. It is sustained high growth that has enabled China to lift all but a small proportion of its people out of poverty. The estimate of poverty in China is 13.1 percent; in India it is 29.8 percent, even if one adopts a helpful standard of calorie intake. Forty two percent of children under age 5 in India are malnourished compared to 3.4 percent in China. Life expectancy at birth in India is 66.1 years, while in China it is 73.3 years.

18. High growth in China inevitably translated into higher expenditure on security and, as a logical corollary, a high degree of security. In the same speech, President Hu Jintao said “Military preparedness has been enhanced. The armed forces have greatly enhanced their capability of carrying out their historic mission in this new stage in the new century, and they have accomplished a host of urgent, difficult, dangerous and arduous tasks.” The results of higher expenditure show up in the hardware. According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), China has nearly 62 ICBMs. China is reportedly developing the JL-2 SLBM for its new strategic submarines, four of which are already sailing while two more are under construction. India has purchased one from Russia that is used for training purposes. There are reports that China has commissioned its first indigenously renovated aircraft carrier, unveiled its fifth generation stealth aircraft (the J-20 and the J-31) and tested an anti-satellite weapon once and a missile interceptor twice. There is also a report that China has developed a strategic heavy lift transport aircraft. China has a space lab in orbit and it also plans to launch 100 satellites during its on-going five year plan from 2011-15. Twenty space craft will be launched this year including its third Lunar probe and a manned space craft that will dock with China’s space lab. There are indications that, by 2020, China may have more than 200 space craft in orbit accounting for about one-fifth of the world’s total. These examples are sufficient to emphasise the point that sustained high growth is the key to become, if a country aims to become, a “comprehensive national power”.
19. I have spoken about national security defined broadly to include external security and internal security. I have not spoken about another dimension of national security which is social cohesion and harmony. In fact, the case for high growth will be much stronger if one took into account the dimension of inclusive development that contributes to social cohesion and harmony.

20. I conclude by asserting that there is no substitute for sustained growth over a long period of time if India should attain the status of, at least, a middle income country. It is only sustained growth that gives us a chance to tune the growth model in favour of inclusive development. Without growth there will be neither development nor inclusiveness.
21. What is constraining our growth is the lack of fiscal space. In 2012-13 BE, the fiscal deficit was 5.1 percent of GDP and, of this, the revenue deficit accounted for 3.4 percent of GDP, leaving no more than 1.7 percent of GDP (plus some other modest capital receipts) for capital expenditure. This capital expenditure is spread across a number of areas from rural roads to nuclear power plants and from primary health centres to central universities. It is obvious that we have to invest more as capital, but that would require creating more fiscal space for capital expenditure. The only way we can create that fiscal space is to bring the revenue deficit to zero and limit the fiscal deficit to 3 percent of GDP, so that the whole of that amount – which, I may remind you, is borrowed – is available for capital expenditure. And it is only when we reach a stage in our growth story when there will be a revenue surplus that we can afford to invest more in the form of capital. That day is still some distance away, but not unattainable, if we adopt the path of prudence and sound fiscal management.
22. As a nation, we seem to oscillate between embracing growth as the highest goal and deriding growth as no panacea for the ills that afflict the country. If we do not have sustained high growth over a long period of time, we will be, forever, an undernourished, undereducated, underprovided and underperforming nation. We will also fall behind in scientific and technological advancements and the gap between India and the developed world, and the gap between India and other emerging countries including China, will continue to grow. We will also be constrained in our ability to defend national security against both external and internal threats.
23. Today, we have a choice. We have a choice between becoming the third largest economy of the world and a middle income country or becoming one of the largest economies of the world that muddles along with the bulk of its people trapped in a life of low income, poor quality, high morbidity and great inequality. Needless to say, the two models of India will have very different consequences for national security. The first model will make India a secure nation, capable of defending itself, and a force of peace in the neighbourhood and elsewhere. The second model will leave the country exposed to every kind of threat to which will be added internal conflicts, and India will be viewed as a strife-torn country that is a threat to the peace and progress of the world and, in particular, Asia. A nation that was the cradle of civilisation five thousand years ago must choose wisely and, once the choice is made, it must have the resolve and the power to stay the course. Recent history has many examples of nations that have, with single-minded determination, devoted themselves to the pursuit of prosperity and security. The early winners were Japan and Korea. More recently, Brazil, Mexico and Indonesia have demonstrated their potential to join the ranks of such countries. China, if it achieves its goals, will be the country to emulate. Whither India? Will India embrace the twin goals of prosperity and security and outshine all of them? I leave you with that question and urge each one of you to find the answer.

24. I thank you for the honour of delivering this lecture and for your courtesy.

009 Foreign Secretary's interview to The Week.
February 11, 2013.

(Interviewer: Mr. Ajish P. Joy)

What are the major achievements of the ministry of external affairs under your watch?

We have had good results in managing our relationship with a majority of our neighbouring countries. We had very active, productive relations with Russia, China, the United States and Japan. We are actively pursuing strong relations with the European Union. Our engagement with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations has been one of the big success stories. The signing of the free trade agreement with the ASEAN can be considered a milestone. We have continued very active engagement with Africa and Latin America. All these, I would say, are signs of a very active, encouraged foreign policy.

We organised the BRICS [Brazil, Russia, India, China, South Africa] summit last year in Delhi, which is a new forum of emerging economies of the world. In all these, I would say, we have achieved the balancing of different elements in our foreign policy.

We have created greater engagement with the academic community through our public diplomacy division. We have also started the passport seva kendra project. In two years, we have set up 77 passport seva kendras. When you consider that in 60 years before that we had only 38 passport offices in the whole country, I think it is a significant achievement.

Where do you think the MEA has fallen short?

I think we have not been able to resolve fully some of the dilemmas and difficulties in our own neighbourhood. As you are aware, we had some problems with some of our neighbours. We continue to face a shortage of resources, both in terms of human resources and financial resources, to be able to sustain projects we want to take forward.

I think our performance in the UN Security Council should be in the first list [of achievements]. We have done very well there. But there is a balancing to it. During this period, the progress towards the permanent membership has been very slow.

India's response to the Arab Spring has been inconsistent, considering the fact that millions of Indians live and work in the Arab world.

The situation in the Gulf and what happened in Libya and what is happening in Syria are different. In Libya, the Prime Minister has articulated our principled position, that societies cannot be reordered or changed from outside, with military force. If the international community has to be involved—it has to be in today's interconnected world—it should be as a facilitator for peaceful change. The instrument for that should be the United Nations, not a group of countries or a coalition of the willing.

In Libya, the fact that we have voted in a certain way was noted, by a new leadership which has emerged, and we have rebuilt our relationship with that country. In Syria, look at the pattern of the voting and the way in which we have voted. We have voted differently on different occasions. Critics like you may say that there has been inconsistency or incoherence. But whenever the United Nations was given a role, we have voted in favour. I think, by and large, in the Arab world, most certainly in Egypt, there is great appreciation for the position we have taken. They know [that] India and they themselves would not want a situation in which countries believe [that] interfering in the internal affairs of others is the norm. I think the overall sense in the Arab world is that India has remained engaged. It could have done more, but it should continue to remain engaged.

Two retired senior Pakistani military officers have disclosed that the Kargil operation was directed by Gen. Pervez Musharraf and that he even crossed the LoC into India for some time before the hostilities started. What is the reason behind India's muted response to the revelations?

I think we all know the facts about what happened. If the Pakistanis suddenly decided that they wanted to argue among themselves about it, so be it 010 Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, February 12, 2013.

Q: With regard to the nuclear test by the DPRK today, please give me the reaction of the Indian Government. USA and Russia say they were informed yesterday by DPRK that they would conduct the nuclear test today. Was India informed before of it?

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Let me answer the second question first which is pretty easy to answer. No, we had not received any advance information about this nuclear test. We got this information from reports that have indicated that the DPRK has conducted a nuclear test earlier today.

For us it is a matter of deep concern that the DPRK has acted in violation of its international commitments in this regard. We call upon the DPRK to refrain from such actions which adversely affect peace and stability in the region.

Q: I would like to ask you a question about the recent news concerning the arrest in Italy of the President of the Defence Group Finmeccanica on the idea that there were some bribes on the selling of helicopters to India. Have you any comment on that or are you aware of the situation?

Official Spokesperson: We have heard this information from news reports. As far as we are concerned, we had through our Embassy in Italy requested the Italian Government to provide us information that they may have in connection with allegations which have been made on the matter. We have not received any response from them so far on that, the argument being that this is in Italy a judicial process. Because the prosecutors are perhaps working under judicial supervision, therefore, the executive is not able to share that information with us. That is where we stand on that.

Q: Syed sahab, When Yasin Malik went to Pakistan he participated in a political rally where Hafiz Saeed was also present. Has the Government taken up this matter with the Government of Pakistan? While granting visa it was a precondition that he would not take part in any political activity.

Official Spokesperson: I will try to answer your question in Hindi. I am from South India and my knowledge of Hindi is rudimentary. I will try. I have repeated our point of view many times, We regard Hafiz Saeed as the master mind of Mumbai attack. We have raised this issue with Pakistan many times. We have said bring him to justice. This is matter of visa and its conditions. It would better if you ask the visa authorities. External Affairs Ministry do not grant visa for going abroad. Of course if you ask the conditions for grant of passport which is the responsibility of MEA, we grant the passport after getting no objection from various authorities/agencies. The passport was issued by the Passport officer in Srinagar. This is now a matter between Yasin Malik and those agencies. If those agencies tell us to take action, we will do the needful as per law.

I will try and repeat that in English before we move ahead. I think his question was that were there any requirements to issue a visa. My answer to that was, we did not issue a visa. Perhaps the question more correctly is that were there any conditions specified for granting a passport. Now I would like to explain the process of granting a passport in such cases. The process entails obtaining No Objection Certificate from a variety of agencies before the Ministry of External Affairs through its Passport Officer in Srinagar grants this passport.

I would like to confirm to you that this is a limited validity passport. It was based on No Objection Certificates received from a variety of agencies. If those agencies have given that No Objection Certificate based on certain understandings that have been worked out, it is for those agencies to bring it to our attention that that No Objection Certificate was based on that premise, and that premise now does not hold, and therefore necessary action should be taken; and we will certainly consider it at that stage. So, I hope I have clarified to you the issues related to passport and to the extent that the Ministry of External Affairs is involved in this.

Q: Has there been any request from MHA to impound his passport or to revoke his passport?

Official Spokesperson: It is not our practice to indicate to you internal discussions or inter-Ministerial discussions. We have not done that in previous cases nor do we intend to do it today. That said, I can certainly tell you, should we receive such request, we will consider very carefully and act promptly on that.

Q: Sir, Yasin Malik is hobnobbing with what you call the evil mastermind of 26/11. What is Ministry of External Affairs' position on revoking his passport because some political parties have called for it?

Official Spokesperson: I have explained in great detail how passports are given. Let me also add a little bit more in terms of revocation of a passport. Revocation of a passport is a quasi-judicial process. For that it requires that we follow a process whereby a violation is indicated. So as I mentioned to you, if there are conditions on which the passport No Objection was given, if these conditions are violated and it is brought to our notice, after giving due careful consideration we will act on that promptly. So please understand. I think on that I have gone as far as I have information. If there are any other issues that you would like to ask, I am ready to answer.

Q: On this Italy issue, is there any kind of preliminary enquiry we had from our side? Is there any feedback that we had on this deal at all, if there was something fishy about it? And do we know whether this arrest is actually linked to the deal with India?

Official Spokesperson: My understanding was that this is a purchase that was made by the Ministry of Defense. Therefore, what we received was a request from the Ministry of Defense to obtain information from the Government of Italy through our Mission in Rome. That is as far as we are aware and our role is in this instance. Now as regards whether there has been any preliminary enquiry or an enquiry or discussion on this, I would suggest that it is best that you contact those who are directly involved in this, and that is the Ministry of Defense.

As regards your second question, we have no information linking any of these two which has been provided to us in a certain manner by the Government of Italy. What we have is what you have indicated. And I have responded to that saying that as far as the Government of Italy is concerned, we do not have any information shared with us on this issue. And I have given you their rationale for why they have said that they cannot share this information.

Q: How is India looking at Pakistan now that Yasin Malik is sharing the stage with Hafiz Saeed, a man against whom India has been seeking action for such a long time?

Official Spokesperson: I thought Yasin Malik is a citizen of India, we will deal with him as is deemed fit of a citizen of India. On the issue of looking at Pakistan, we have already said that Hafeez Saeed has continued to pour vitriol on India. He is, as far as we are concerned, a fit case to bring to justice as promptly as possible. We have repeatedly made that case to Pakistan, and we will continue to do that so at every opportunity.

Q: There is a report of a rape of an Indian teacher in Maldives. Can we have any details about whether the culprits have been nabbed, whether she is being given proper treatment? And has the Maldives Government got back to you?

Official Spokesperson: Yesterday we were informed about an Indian citizen aged 24 years who was subjected to a brutal rape in one of the atolls. Promptly our Mission got in touch with the Minister there. And that is the Minister of Gender I think who is overlooking this. Apparently the lady in question works in a private computer school in Maldives. She was also badly injured. She has been given blood transfusion, and her condition now is stable. The High Commission has this morning sent two officials including a lady officer to the atoll to try and provide whatever support we can on account of this sad happening there. We have taken it up quite strongly with the Government of Maldives, and we hope that justice will be done in this case promptly, and this has been assured to us by the concerned Maldivian Authorities.

Q: Sir, this is on Italian Marines. I have read yesterday and today in the Indian press that an agreement has been reached between Italy and India about the possibility that the two Italian Marines when condemned by the Indian justice can serve their sentence in Italy. Is it effectively in action, this agreement?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and give you a context. We have similar arrangements; we call them as Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons. We have agreements by my understanding with twelve countries. With the Government of Italy, we have signed an agreement of this nature. This agreement has also been Gazetted. If any of you are interested it is available in the Gazette of India dated 17th December. I mean to say that this agreement was signed and it was Gazetted. And for the agreement to enter into force there is a requirement. That requirement says that the two sides should exchange through diplomatic channels communications which indicate that they have completed their processes for implementing of this agreement. After this last communication is received from the two sides to each other, after a period of one month, on the first day of the second month this agreement will be in effect. Now we have not come to that as yet. Where we are is that we have signed this agreement; both sides are in the process of completing their procedures; and will finally exchange diplomatic communications, after which the requisite period has to be completed. Automatically after that the agreement will be in force. Now whether this agreement is applicable to A case or B case, this is only when the cases are tried and decisions come out of it that can we decide about it. At this stage it is too premature to say, does an agreement which has not yet entered into force apply to somebody who has not yet been sentenced. I hope you understand where we are on this.

Thank you very much

011 External Affairs Minister's speech at Global India Foundation Conference on "Iran's Eurasian Dynamic: Mapping Regional and Extra-Regional Interests".
New Delhi, February 13, 2013.

Vice Admiral P J Jacob

Shri K Santhanam,

Dr Sreeradha Datta,

Shri Anil K Agarwal,

Prof Omprakash Mishra,

Ladies and Gentlemen

I am happy to be in your midst today to inaugurate the conference on “Iran’s Eurasian Dynamic: Mapping Regional and Extra-Regional Interests” which is extremely topical and important.

Iran is a friend of India, and we have strong civilisational links which has positive impact in our contemporary relations.

To think about the theme of today’s conference, it is common knowledge that Iran is a strong and influential player in the Gulf region. But its links, influences and interests in the Eurasian region will be an interesting concept to ponder and study. Iran’s historical, cultural and linguistic influence over Eurasia is also well established. Old trade routes linking Eurasia and Persia stand testimony to Iran’s intrinsic links to the Eurasian region throughout history.

With the advantage Iran has in terms of geographical proximity and a well developed network of road, rail and waterway connectivity with several countries in Eurasia, Iran can act as a gateway to Eurasia. It can host trade, transit and energy corridors linking Eurasia with rest of the world.

The Persian Gulf, particularly Iran, is under focus in recent years, on account of its pre-eminent position in the region. Iran’s nuclear programme has been under constant, close scrutiny and the international community has been talking to Iran to negotiate a peaceful course of action. One important question crops up in our minds. Should India be cautious and remain aloof in this process or should it engage actively in the dialogue that Iran has with the world in achieving a peaceful resolution of the issue.

India stands at the forefront of countries that appear to be in a position to give Iran the kind of advice, comfort and handholding that would be called for in these very critical and crucial discussions and dialogue which Iran needs to have, and it realizes that it needs to, with the rest of the world. We have had to take positions that obviously not necessarily align themselves with the aspirations or at least perceived aspirations of Iran in recent times.

The good news is that Iran has understood this. We have remained friends with Iran, and good friends with Iran, in a substantive way despite the fact that we could not stand by them in critical moments when it came to voting in the United Nations. I know that they would be disappointed; anyone is disappointed if you cannot get someone to stand by you in moments which are critical. But the important thing is that we were able to continue talking with Iran, that Iran understood why we were doing what we were doing, and that it was clear to the world that we were not taking sides against Iran but that we were taking a principled position.

Having taken that principled position, we would want our engagement to continue growing and our support in those critical matters and dimensions in which it was important for Iran to fight the sanctions, and we would be there to be counted as a friend of Iran. I think this is a very interesting and a very important dimension of India standing today in the world.

I might underscore that we have a strategic partnership with the United States of America. We value our relationship with the United States of America, and we believe both in terms of pragmatism, as indeed in terms of principles, that our relationship with the United States of America as it has evolved over the last decade and a half is a very valuable and important relationship both in terms of energy security as indeed in terms of our engagement with the world. And to see this come out of the continued commitment in the NAM movement is obviously a very interesting thought. So we remain good friends with the United States of America; we are extremely good friends with Iran. Therefore, it places us in a very significant position to be able to bridge the gaps and to provide the linkages that are necessary for a meaningful dialogue.

I think this is also true in the greater region, in a region that is in a sense impacted by what is happening in this region and that is the region of West Asia, Palestine and Israel. Our past commitment to Palestine was a commitment that came devoid of any relationship with Israel. Our present-day commitment to Palestine comes with a very meaningful relationship with Israel. The important thing of course is that again both Israel and Palestine are willing and able to understand that we have a relationship which is a balanced relationship between the two.

In a sense, if I might be allowed to say so, the true fruition of non-alignment as far as India is concerned is getting reflected in our ability to engage on sides that would otherwise feel a great deal of trust deficit and would have some reluctance in open dialogue. So, fortunately, the world has accepted that there is no alternative to dialogue although perhaps a little bit in the countries affected by Arab Spring, the significance and importance of dialogue may have been diluted considerably much to our despair. We do still continue to feel that dialogue is the answer and that dialogue should not be given up very easily.

So we do have a very important potential position vis-à-vis dialogue in this region. We have outstanding relationship with Russia. We have excellent relationships in the Central Asian region. I think these are not purely based on economic interests but go far beyond economic interests. There are some civilisational, instinctive rapport and engagement that provide the base for the edifice of economic interests, which of course are converging.

But given that the economic interests are converging, given that we have a high priority for energy security and sourcing energy for rapid growth of the Indian economy, the pipelines, the critical, crucial pipelines in Central Asia bringing in gas to India and to our region are very important. Though a lot of work has been done on this, I think we still have hiccups that prevent us from going forward as fast and as quickly as possible.

Coming back to the point that I raised for you which is, should India continue to be as careful, cautious and as aloof as it is despite the enormous potential that it has for improving the content of dialogue and the possibility of substantive dialogue, or should India begin to get into a greater mode of encouraging and therefore engaging itself more extensively, it is a big question. But in answering this question I think it is very important for us to understand what our own people want.

Sadly, and I say this particularly to all of you distinguished people here associated with the Global India Foundation, sadly, the engagement of India's domestic population and thinking processes with our standing in the world today is nowhere near it was after independence when the outcome of our independence movement and the very perception of our independence movement were seen as engagement on behalf of the disadvantaged and the subjugated people of the world, of Africa, Asia and elsewhere. Therefore, India's leadership reached out with a kind of a seamless approach to the idea of freedom for mankind.

Today, sadly and unfortunately because of domestic preoccupations, because of the manner in which our economy and our sociology and our sociological framework has changed, the same engagement of the ordinary Indian citizen with the world has suffered. And when that suffers, obviously the leadership would worry about - are we putting in too much time looking at the world, and should we be spending more time looking at ourselves?

I actually had a newspaper saying recently that India's Foreign Minister is wasting time travelling in the world, India's Foreign Minister would be much better arguing on television programmes in the evening some inane argument about what we should do about engaging the world in a hostile manner, and declaring war on five countries at the same time, rather than travelling the world telling people that we want to be friends and we want to work together for a peaceful world for our children to come. This is not a facetious remark on something that apparently is critical of India's Foreign Minister, but this is the truth about the illiteracy of people on international relations. Therefore, what you are doing is extremely, extremely important. I hope that not only will this engage minds that are familiar and have enormous amount of knowledge in this field but hopefully you will engage, particularly for you Prof. Mishra coming from Kolkata, looking at the remarkable opportunity today that we have of dominating the world intellectually.

I think the significance of what we are able to do with Chahbahar Port actually underscores what I have just said to you. We have shared this with the United States of America, our interest in Chahbahar Port. We have shared this with our interlocutors in Afghanistan. In the normal course, the reaction would be - hands off as far as building infrastructure in Iran is concerned. But that is not the reaction that we get. We get a reaction that they understand. And they understand not simply because they want to be kind and considerate to India but they understand because in 2014 when they leave Afghanistan, somebody has to fill the void, not of troops, because Afghans must look after their own security, Afghans must secure their own people, Afghans must take their own strategic decisions, but in terms of the infrastructure and trade and financial backup that they would need for stability in their society.

We would need corridors and we would need passage. And where would that passage come from if improvement in Afghanistan takes place faster or need for improvement in Afghanistan takes faster than what we may necessarily get in Pakistan. We will need corridors and passage to Afghanistan if we have to, in a meaningful way, be there after 2014 to rebuild Afghanistan and help Afghanistan rebuild itself. Now this is a good thing. This is understood. There are no black and whites as far as India's approach to the world is concerned. I think the shades of grey that have been accepted about India's engagement and India's personality are something that we should really be encouraging.

I believe there is still a lot of work to be done on TAPI and a lot of work to be done on the International North-South Transport Corridor. I think much of that again is a question of should we just let it happen in normal course or is it something that we should try from the front proactively looking at financial closures and getting Indian banks involved, getting Indian industry involved to the extent that Indian industry takes interest in many of these things. In the normal course they do. But should Government of India actually play a proactive role in the manner in which the Chinese Government plays for Chinese businessmen when they go out into the world? These are very important questions. These are questions which the Government alone cannot take a call on. But these are questions on which we as a people, the nation must take a view, that this is something that is not only legitimate but this is something that is an obligation of people and Government to promote interests of India through participation of private sector, which is why I am very glad that I am sitting next to Mr. Anil Agarwal hopefully speaking the same language.

Within this general conception comes in the whole idea about to what extent and how much time and effort we put in an organization like Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, more bilateral visits, etc., these are all very important questions. We are very happy with Prime Minister's visit to Tehran in August last year for the NAM Summit. I think the sort of outreach and the kind of reception that he received and the welcome that he had received from the Iranian Government was remarkable.

We are looking forward to the Joint Commission not in a few months, in a few weeks hopefully, to take these issues that you have talked about, forward. I think there is a major issue about how we enhance trade, given the rupee arrangement is not entirely satisfactory because the demand from Iran of goods and items to be supplied still remains low. We did have a working arrangement through a Turkish bank but that presumably also has to go.

But again, let me underscore, and this is an important distinction, we accepted and we were participants and we were part of the sanctions imposed by the United Nations. But we did not accept the sanctions imposed unilaterally by the United States. And this has not caused a major concern between us and the United States because the United States accepts that despite being strategic partners, we can disagree. The important thing I think that India has been able to register with the world is the ability to agree to disagree. I think this is a very critical dimension of India's foreign policy that the world has recognized and I think something on which we can build further.

As I said, we will have the next JCM in the near future and I am sure that many of the conclusions that you have drawn here, we will be able to take those conclusions in a meaningful way and use them in preparation for our JCM which will take place, as I said, in the next few weeks, and benefit from them generally also in our understanding of the larger region, and I hope in getting some inputs from people like you about how proactive India should be in the world.

People hope that we will be more active; people nudge us to be more active. Our aloofness has been in a sense useful to us to give us the profile that we have today that we are trusted, that people are comfortable, that people trust us. Greater engagement is, therefore, advisable or not advisable. Greater engagement will bring its own risks and the greater engagement will bring its own awards. Both of these dimensions I think need to be kept in mind as you look at the specifics of the position that we need to take.

With these few words, I thank you very much for inviting me here today. I believe that we need to have much greater interface, interaction between the Ministry of External Affairs and organizations like yours. I think we must have many more organizations from other parts of the country as well. I am very glad that you are a Kolkata-based organization because we tend to be a little bit incestuous in being confined to Delhi-based organizations. So I am very encouraged that in Kolkata and Mumbai and also in Bangalore, there are a lot of very outstanding people establishing themselves across the country.

I hope that we will see, if I borrow the phrase, “a thousand flowers bloom” in the country how organizations like yours are making our job in a way easier and in a way more difficult.

Thank you very much

012. Keynote Address by Minister of State Sh. E. Ahamed at the valedictory function for the 56th Professional Course for Foreign Diplomats (PCFD), at the Foreign Service Institute.

New Delhi, February 14, 2013.

Excellencies,

Distinguished Guests,

& Participating Diplomats,

I am very happy to be present today at the Foreign Service Institute to deliver this valedictory address to the young diplomats from 20 countries who have successfully completed the month-long 56th Professional Course for Foreign Diplomats (PCFD), being conducted by the Institute since January 16th, 2013.

From the Course Programme and Dean(FSI)'s welcome address, I understand that the participating diplomats had an opportunity to learn not only about India but also issues of regional and international importance such as “Diplomacy in Emerging New World Order”, “Fundamental Principles of International Law”, Globalization, Climate Change, UN & Reforms, India's Foreign Policy Priorities and Global Security Concerns. I believe these topics will not only continue to be relevant in times to come but will also form the mainstream of global discourse.

India is a country full of diversity and plurality. It has a rich kaleidoscope of religions, languages, and traditions. No two regions are the same. I am quite sure that visits and study tours in and around Delhi, to Agra and to Hyderabad have given participating diplomats a glimpse of the size of our country, and the common bond of unity in diversity that it exemplifies.

The core principles of India's foreign policy, whose foundation was laid during our freedom struggle, have stood the test of time. A belief in friendly relations with all countries of the world, the resolution of conflict by peaceful means, the sovereign equality of all states, independence of thought and action as manifested in the principles of Non-alignment, and equity in the conduct of international relations have been the hallmark of the conduct of India's foreign policy. India has been moving ahead to build mutually beneficial relationships with friendly countries on the basis of these time-based principles.

The primary objective of Professional Course for Foreign Diplomats (PCFD), when it was launched in 1992, was to help bridge the distance between India and the participating countries, to initiate mutual cooperation and understanding, and forge an everlasting bond of attachment among the diplomats of visiting countries. Over the last two decades, these 56 training programmes have provided more than 1250 participants with an opportunity to visit India and share in our knowledge and understanding of global and regional issues interplaying the world politics, economics and culture.

Today, the job of a diplomat is more complex than what it used to be in the last century. Firstly, non-state actors and NGOs are playing a significantly enlarged and important role. Secondly, though the primary duty of a diplomat still remains safeguarding the interest of his or her country and people, a diplomat is also engaged in the well-being, safety, and survival of the world and humanity. Issues like climate change, terrorism, weapons of mass destruction, human rights etc. have become very real concerns of the entire humanity. Water, food, health, energy and migration, etc. have become very potent non-traditional security threats. The content of PCFD programmes has steadily evolved to encompass the changing role of a diplomat in a rapidly transforming world.

At a broader level, India is convinced that there is a need for fuller cooperation and solidarity among the developing countries. The world has steadily changed after the end of Cold War Period and so have the diplomatic challenges. New challenges and complex problems which call for common action have emerged. The developing countries need to come together at different multilateral fora to protect their interests. This need is felt even on issues of Environment, Trade, Terrorism & International Security of various forms. It is essential, therefore, for us to come together, and express ourselves in a common voice in order to protect and advance our interests.

I hope that by training together at the 56th PCFD and having time to discuss and interact freely and frankly, the participants would have gained deeper understanding of regional and global issues of importance. Tomorrow, when these diplomats represent their countries as Heads of Missions or be policy makers in their respective capitals, they would be in a better position to appreciate the need for enhanced cooperation and solidarity.

I congratulate the participating diplomats for successfully completing their course. I see in them fast and enduring friends of India who together with India will work for the prosperity and security of the entire world. I also extend my warm wishes through these diplomats, to the people of their respective countries.

I wish the participating diplomats a safe return to their country and family. May they have a bright and successful career ahead.

Thank you

013. Interview of the External Affairs Minister with the Economic Times.

New Delhi, February 18, 2013.

The Economic Times/by Sruthijith KK

What is the situation in Maldives?

The former president is a guest in the mission. He came and we extended courtesies and that's it. This was explained to the foreign minister. We are not taking sides with anyone. We are not engaged or involved in the internal politics. As friends of Maldives, our only expectation, and this is the expectation of the democratic world, is that elections which have been announced will hopefully be free and fair. As friends we obviously have advised anything that detracts from the perception of free fair elections is obviously not good for Maldives.

Male accuses Nasheed of evading judicial process and taking refuge in Indian mission. Doesn't sheltering him in the mission amount to interference?

The people of Maldives have India's support. Whoever the people of Maldives elect will have India's support. Maldives can't change its history. Maldives cannot deny the history of somebody who was president of Maldives. And we cannot deny Maldives' present by saying that whatever there is at present is not to our liking. It's the people of Maldives who decide and whoever they decide as their elected leadership, we will respect.

On Finmeccanica, isn't a letter rogatory essential to secure information from Italy?

There was no investigation here. Now there is an investigation, so now it can be done. See, nobody can choose, except the agencies that are authorised to take the decision, as to when the investigation will begin. Now as an enquiry has been ordered, all instruments available to investigating agencies will be put in motion. By the way, no court in a foreign land is necessarily obliged to answer a letter rogatory.

Will the Agusta scandal cast a shadow on the British PM's visit?

Why would it be brought up with him? What does he have anything to do with it? This is a preliminary investigation. CBI hasn't even come to any conclusion. Let it come to a conclusion. But it depends on when it is found necessary to raise the particular subject after considerable amount of preparation has gone into it.

What is India's biggest expectation from the British prime minister?

Both France and Britain are supportive of India's bid for a broad-based agreement on trade and investment with the European Union. This is important... Britain has recently been involved in a tripartite meeting with the Taliban and the Afghan government. They want to put in place some kind of a mechanism post 2014. We have shared our views on this so that our concerns will be kept in mind and India will remain updated on any efforts going on there. All efforts we make in development in the region will go waste if peace doesn't hold beyond 2014. To that extent it is important for us to be kept in the loop on the developments there and this would be discussed with the British.

014. Meeting of the Informal Working Group on Energy Security.
New Delhi, February 20, 2013.

The Informal Working Group on Energy Security, which is a forum comprising officials from the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA), line energy Ministries, Planning Commission and representatives of public sector enterprises, met on 20th February, 2013. This Informal Working Group meets on a regular basis. Secretary (Economic Relations), Shri Pinak Ranjan Chakravarty chaired the meeting.

The meeting discussed several new initiatives undertaken by MEA with respect to energy issues. Energy Security is a high priority item on the agenda for interaction with foreign countries and entities. MEA and its Missions and Posts abroad support international engagements of the line ministries and Indian companies. MEA has also instituted a regular dialogue with Chambers of Commerce. Foreign Secretary and Secretary (ER) met representatives of apex chambers of Commerce on February 1, 2013.

In today's meeting of the Informal Working Group on Energy Security, representatives of line ministries, Planning Commission and public sector undertakings in their interventions underlined the likely areas and regions to which India should pay greater attention for ensuring energy security for the nation. Energy opportunities in countries such as Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Myanmar, Lebanon, Egypt, Canada, Tanzania, Mozambique and USA were discussed. MEA also informed the meeting that it had requisitioned the services of PricewaterhouseCoopers Pvt. Ltd. and Indian Institute of Foreign Trade to produce research papers on specific energy security related issues.

The next meeting of the Informal Working Group on Energy Security will take place in May 2013.

15. Address of Chief of Naval Staff: "Role of Indian Navy in Maintaining Peace in Indian Ocean Region."

New Delhi, March 5, 2013.

Chief of the Naval Staff (CNS), Admiral D K Joshi, PVSM, AVSM, YSM, NM, VSM, ADC

1. Admiral PS Das, Dr Arvind Gupta, DG, IDSA, senior serving and retired officers, members from the strategic community, ladies and gentlemen. Good morning.
2. It is indeed a privilege to be addressing such a distinguished audience, on a topic of immediate significance. At the outset, let me thank the Institute of Defence Studies and Analyses for providing me this opportunity. Since inception, IDSA has performed yeoman service as one of India's premier think tanks, influencing the country's strategic thought for over four decades. It goes without saying that the Armed Forces too benefit immensely from IDSA's endeavours.
3. To discuss challenges to peace and stability, an examination of the historical and contemporary significance of the Indian Ocean would be in order.

4. The Indian Ocean has probably affected humanity more profoundly than any other ocean. Through the continuum of history, this region has been significant in geo-politics and in the evolution of mankind.
5. Some of the world's oldest civilizations germinated here and for several millennia, flourished in the region's abundant natural wealth. Major religions such as Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam etc. originated here and fanned out to rest of the world, mostly through sea routes, making the IOR a melting pot of myriad societies. Hindered by natural barriers on the continental landmass, the interaction between cultures took place over the sea, predominantly through benign expeditions and trade.
6. The region's economic potential thus attracted extra-regional players. Initial ventures, driven by pure mercantile interests, then gave way to colonisation of most of the region. The Industrial Revolution further escalated the region's significance with the colonies doubling up as sources for raw materials, cheap labour and as captive markets for imperial Europe's industrial output. The colonial period also influenced geo-strategy of the region in an unprecedented manner. The IOR, thus, became an arena for military competition, with European blue water navies vying for control of its waters. This, in a way, led to evolution of IOR as a common geo-strategic entity.
7. Although imperialism ended after World War II, extra-regional interest in the region continued to grow, due to competition for resources, most notably hydrocarbons, and for domination of vast markets. Through the Cold War, extra-regional powers competed to expand their influence in the IOR, leading to many proxy wars.
8. The end of the Cold War was a watershed in geo-politics, with a paradigm shift in how nations view peace, security and national power. Concepts such as comprehensive security have displaced a hitherto narrow military-centric approach.

9. 'Peace', in a comprehensive security framework, goes beyond the mere absence of conflict, and encompasses military, economic, societal, energy and environmental security among other factors. For instance, the National Security Index, envisages a combination of many diverse, yet inter-related factors, centred on economic prosperity, which in turn provides the wherewithal for all national endeavours.
10. The Indian Ocean Region, comprising the ocean and its littorals, is India's regional or immediate geo-strategic environment. It exists on the fringes of our boundaries and has a on the internal state of affairs. Addressing the Combined Commanders' Conference recently, the Hon'ble Prime Minister, Dr Manmohan Singh, had stated and I QUOTE,

"Our immediate geo-strategic environment comes with its own conventional, strategic and non-conventional security challenges. India's strategic calculus has long encompassed the waters from the Gulf of Aden to the Strait of Malacca." UNQUOTE.
11. The Hon'ble Prime Minister's statement has a distinct nautical flavour. In a way, it defines the Indian Navy's primary Area of Maritime Interest, where we seek to address the challenges having a bearing on national security and the nation's overall socio-economic development.
12. Sustained growth has positioned our country on the path to economic eminence. We are already the 3rd largest economy in Purchasing Power Parity terms. Our ability to fulfil the stated socio-economic aspirations squarely rests on unhindered prosperity. With substantial economic activity, including 90% trade by volume and bulk of our energy imports, happening over the sea, maritime security is central to overall development of our nation. Concurrently, India cannot hope to develop and grow peacefully with an unstable and turbulent neighbourhood. Prevalence of peace in the Indian Ocean Region is therefore a key national security imperative. We achieve this through a combination of diplomatic, economic and military means all of which have a maritime connect.

13. Security challenges ranging from pandemics to proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, from piracy to terrorism, and from climate change to money laundering confront all nation-states. This has engendered a cooperative approach to security, especially in the maritime domain, where majority of global economic interests get intertwined and to which a majority of the challenges to security are associated.
14. Riding on the benefits of globalisation, littorals of the IOR are now re-emerging to achieve their original potential. The emergence of many regional countries, as economic powerhouses, reflects this reality. Consequently, several regional economic groupings such as ASEAN, BIMSTEC, SAARC, IOR-ARC, GCC and few others have evolved over time in the IOR to harness the advantages of economic integration.
15. The region's natural bounties and maritime trade carried over its sea lanes drive the global economy. The fact that two-thirds of the world's oil shipments, one-third of its bulk cargo and half of the container traffic transit over its sea lanes, and through its choke points, a large part of which is meant for countries outside the region, underscores the Indian Ocean's importance for the world at large.
16. The IOR at the same time is also marred by historic faultlines, in some cases, due to ambiguous colonial boundary delineations and inequalities that breed instability. The centrality of the 'ocean' in the region's affairs is further underscored by the fact that problems on land invariably find a reflection at sea. I shall now touch upon some key maritime challenges that endanger peace and stability in IOR.
17. The foremost challenge obviously emerges from inter-state armed conflicts. Most of the armed conflicts in the post World War II era occurred in the IOR, underscoring the region's geo-political fragility. West Asian conflicts, South-Asian conflicts, Iran-Iraq war, the Gulf Wars, Afghanistan, the list is long.

18. While economic interests may initiate extra-regional military presence in these waters, at times, the presence itself may escalate contest and competition. Armed conflicts impinge upon regional peace in decisive ways, given the region's delicate socio-economic structure. Peace ultimately returns, but not without costs in terms of widespread destruction, human suffering, financial losses and consequential regional instability. It dents the conducive external environment necessary for a nation-state to develop and grow peacefully.
19. More than armed conflicts, currently what complicates security dynamics is the array of non-conventional threats perpetuated by non-state or even, state-sponsored actors. There are several reasons for this security conundrum.
20. Firstly, these threats are omni-present. Weak governance or the absence of governance in some littorals has allowed the state to lose its 'monopoly on the use of legitimate force'. The resultant anarchy on land manifests itself as lawlessness and non-conventional threats at sea. The flourishing piracy off Somalia and the terror attacks on USS Cole and MV Limburg are few such examples.
21. Secondly, these threats are amorphous, with an uncanny ability to evolve, thus challenging established security structures. Maritime piracy, which, until a few years ago, was mainly limited to armed robbery at sea, has now evolved into criminal acts, orchestrated by well organised global crime syndicates. Pirates today are well armed and capable of striking over 1000 miles from coast. Hijacking of ships for ransom, amounting to millions of dollars, is also a relatively new practice. Besides the economic and humanitarian dimensions of piracy, its evolving links with terrorism, and states supporting terror outfits, compounds the problem.
22. Then there is the legal aspect. Evolving threats such as piracy, highjacking of merchantmen, suicidal terror attacks, proliferation of WMD-related material et al, expose the inadequacy of current national and international laws and conventions to deter them or deal with them effectively.

23. While maritime piracy and maritime terrorism are more obvious, there are other non-conventional challenges, such as illegal arms trade, drug and human trafficking, poaching etc, which continue to engage our attention and resources on a regular basis.
24. As stated earlier, economic security is central to the comprehensive approach to security. In this globalised world, the Indian economy is integrated with, and consequently interdependent on other world economies. The prospect of disruption of trade at critical chokepoints, such as the Strait of Hormuz or Malacca, can be catastrophic for the global economy. The downstream effects of such economic upheaval are certainly disastrous for regional peace. Maintaining unimpeded flow of energy and other commodities over the sea is therefore a prime concern for all nations, including ours.
25. Growing economies need additional space to exploit resources. With the resources on land already under pressure, exploration would perforce have to expand into the maritime domain. Thus far, the Exclusive Economic Zones have mainly been exploited by coastal states for shallow water extraction of hydrocarbons and seafood. The focus is now shifting to the vast mineral resources from deeper waters. Besides the technological challenges involved in seabed mining, the need for long term protection of such resources and associated infrastructure becomes another security consideration. Blocks allocated to India and some other countries in South Indian Ocean for deep sea bed mining become factors for consideration, in this regard.
26. Human security holds special relevance in the maritime domain. More than half of humanity lives within 200 km of the coast, which accounts for only 10% of the available landmass. It is also this thin slice of land that bears the brunt of maritime natural disasters such as tsunamis, cyclones and floods. The IOR alone is the locus of nearly 70% of the world's natural disasters, the consequences of which are further aggravated by high population densities and the lack of capacity to react effectively in their aftermath.

27. There is an intricate link between the oceans and the atmosphere, as they regulate the planet's climatic conditions – something so central to sustenance of all forms of life, including human. The effects of climate change, therefore pose significant challenges to human security in our region. Geographically, the Arctic may seem a remote place for us in the IOR, but the accelerating environmental changes there would have profound implications, globally. Of those, rising sea levels, directly threaten the IOR's low-lying coastal states and island nations such as parts of Bangladesh and Maldives.
28. Having dwelled on a broad range of maritime challenges, I shall now outline the Navy's vision and endeavours in meeting them.
29. Famous maritime historian KM Pannikar, in one of his seminal works had stated and I QUOTE, "The vital feature which differentiates the Indian Ocean from the Atlantic or the Pacific is the subcontinent of India, which juts out far into the sea for a thousand miles. It is the geographical position of India that changes the character of the Indian Ocean." UNQUOTE
30. India's geo-strategic location positions us right at the confluence of major arteries of world trade. The Indian Navy is therefore viewed by some of the littorals as a suitable agency to facilitate regional maritime security in the IOR as a net security provider. India's standing as a benign power provides credence to this perception, making us a preferred partner for regional security.
31. The first means of maintaining peace is, of course, the prevention of armed conflict. Our own experience during Operation Vijay (Kargil Operations) bears testimony to the utility of strong maritime forces in dissuasion and control of escalation. You would be aware that the Indian Navy's posture in the North Arabian Sea, contributed significantly to the early achievement of India's operational goals and, more importantly, in limiting the scope of the conflict.

32. Our perspective plans are centred on building not just our force structure, but capabilities to meet the identified and emerging challenges. However, neither do we intend, nor is there a need to match numbers with any other country. Instead, we are focused on creating capabilities and leveraging our strategic geography to assert and defend our sovereign interests in the maritime domain. With modern aircraft carriers, along with potent surface, sub-surface and air platforms, we have a balanced force capable of undertaking a range of operations, from the brown to the blue waters, and also contribute to regional security.
33. Military intervention, in support of friendly nations, at their request, or under the aegis of United Nations, is also an option for conflict prevention and crisis resolution. When mercenaries attacked and took control of Male in Nov 1988, our prompt politico-military response, as part of Op Cactus, remains etched as one of India's most successful operations in support of regional stability. The Indian Navy has also made significant contributions during Operation Pawan in Sri Lanka and UN operations in Somalia.
34. Another dimension to promoting peace is through cooperative security. The Navy discharges this responsibility through a broad spectrum of cooperative and inclusive endeavours. These encompass coordinated operations, bilateral exercises, security assistance and military-to-military dialogue.
35. Preserving good order at sea and ensuring security of International Shipping Lanes in the IOR is another duty of the Navy in the interest of the global commons.
36. The MV Alondra Rainbow incident of Nov 1999, culminating in the capture of the hijacked vessel, along with pirates, was the first major anti-piracy operation undertaken by the Navy. We also undertook anti-piracy patrols in the Strait of Malacca when piracy was thriving there a decade ago.
37. In the East, we undertake bilateral coordinated patrols, or simply CORPAT, with Thailand and Indonesia, which address a range of maritime security issues. Plans exist to include Myanmar in this endeavour. India is also a party to ReCAAP or Regional Cooperation Agreement on Combating Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in Asia, a government-to-government agreement on anti-piracy cooperation and information sharing. The fact that the menace of piracy has largely been controlled in South-east Asia bears testimony to the strength of a cooperative approach.

38. In more recent times, the Indian Navy has been at the forefront of anti-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden, since Oct 2008. Our ships and aircraft have seen sustained prolonged deployments, escorting Indian, as well as, foreign flagged ships. Our robust actions, such as sinking of four pirate mother ships in 2011, have deterred piracy, close to the Indian coast. The dealings clearly signalled India's resolve to curb this menace. Since then, no successful pirate attack has been reported within 450 nm of our coast. Similarly, in the Gulf of Aden, no ship under our escort has been pirated during the last four years. Over 2400 ships have been escorted by Indian Naval Ships, 40 piracy attempts foiled by us and more than 120 pirates arrested.
39. While we deploy forces independently in the Gulf of Aden, our actions are nevertheless underlined by a cooperative approach. We coordinate our operations with other navies and regularly exchange information through participation in cooperative mechanisms such as SHADE. I must also highlight that the 13th Plenary Session of the Contact Group on Piracy off the Coast of Somalia (CGPCS) was held at the UN Headquarters in New York, in December last year, under India's chairmanship.
40. Of late, there have been many encouraging signs. Thanks to concerted international efforts, there has been a declining trend in pirate activity since 2011. It merits reiteration that piracy is a manifestation of larger problems ashore. Therefore, as long as poor governance continues in coastal states, lawlessness and piracy will prevail at sea and engage much of our efforts.
41. Maritime terrorism is another grave challenge. The events of 26/11 brought to fore the porosity of our long coastline and its resultant vulnerability to terror attacks perpetrated from the sea. Moreover, the prospect of terror attacks on off-shore infrastructure and sea-borne traffic, close to the coast, puts a premium on ensuring coastal security. Consequent to government directives, the Navy is now responsible for overall maritime security of the country, including the coast. A comprehensive coastal security framework, involving a number of organisational and materiel measures, has been created. The setting up of Joint Operation Centres, raising a dedicated force for Coastal Security (Sagar Prahari Bal), creating a network of coastal radars and AIS chains, are all meant to enhance our Maritime Domain Awareness, close to the coast.

42. On request, we also deploy assets to undertake EEZ surveillance and anti-piracy patrols for some of our neighbours. We are cooperating with several IOR nations in the installation of coastal radars and AIS chains to enhance domain awareness. In addition, our continuing assistance in terms of hydrographic surveys, technical assistance and product support are of great value to our maritime neighbours. Our foreign cooperation initiatives are aimed at their capacity building and capability enhancement. Several IOR nations are currently the focus our cooperative policies. As I speak, the Navy's sail training ship Sudarshini is on the last lap of her six-month long MEA-sponsored voyage to South East Asian nations under a joint India-ASEAN venture to celebrate the 20th anniversary of India's diplomatic relations with ASEAN.
43. For many years now, training initiatives have constituted the cornerstone of the Navy's interaction with friendly navies. Besides offering training opportunities at our professional institutes, we also depute our training teams abroad. Furthermore, bilateral operational exercises constitute important avenues for maritime diplomacy as well as capacity building. The Indian Navy regularly exercises with regional and extra-regional navies on a range of military, constabulary and benign functions, including counter-piracy, counter-terrorism, Humanitarian Assistance and Disaster Relief etc.

44. As regards human security, the Indian Navy already has rich experience in HADR. It may be recalled that in 2004, within hours of being hit by the tsunami, we had dispatched several ships and aircraft, across the Indian Ocean, to provide assistance to our neighbours, while coping with the disaster ourselves. This vividly demonstrated our operational capability and commitment to the region. The Navy continues to remain ever-prepared to respond swiftly in any similar unfortunate eventuality in the future.
45. In addition to operations and exercises, dialogue forms a key avenue for strengthening military-to-military relations. When nations cooperate militarily against common threats and challenges, it enhances mutual trust, thus reducing avenues of conflict. As on today, we engage 15 navies in institutional naval staff talks and prospects exist for adding more.
46. The Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS), an inclusive forum, comprising the Indian Ocean navies, is one such landmark initiative, which we are proud to have pioneered. Since its inception in 2008, IONS has grown from strength to strength and today it has 35 member navies from across the region. This endeavour has led to establishing and promoting consultations and cooperation amongst various participants and is also facilitating evolution of a common set of strategies to enhance regional maritime security. The Indian Navy continues to make seminal contributions to this initiative. We have taken the lead in establishing the IONS website last year; and this year, we would be conducting a workshop at Mumbai, on the topic, "Role and expectations of emerging Navies in cooperative engagement for peace and stability in IOR". This, in a way, captures the very essence of my talk today and also the Navy's strategy for maritime diplomacy and security cooperation in the region.
47. Similarly, MILAN, a biennial gathering of select regional navies at Port Blair, is another path breaking initiative of the Indian Navy. Beginning with just five members in 1995, we hosted 14 navies in 2012 for this biennial event. This indeed has been a very successful endeavour in fostering goodwill among participating navies through professional and social interaction of naval personnel.

48. During my talk, I have outlined only the major maritime challenges and some of our important endeavours. There are many more. For a planet with more than two-thirds covered by the water, the destiny of humanity is inextricably linked to the sea, more so, in a globalised world. Conversely, the surrounding human activities in the littoral also influence the maritime environment in myriad ways.
49. In conclusion, maintenance of a peaceful maritime environment is an imperative, for our nation and the region, to sustain our growth trajectories and to achieve our national aspirations. The oceans are vast, challenges too many, and resources limited, for any individual state to assure security of the global commons. This, therefore, calls for a cooperative approach. By virtue of India's geo-strategic location in the Indian Ocean and her maritime capabilities, the Indian Navy is deemed by many to be the net security provider in the IOR.
50. A cooperative and supportive approach is central to our endeavours. Mindful of the region's strategic importance for India, and the world, we are marshalling our capabilities and efforts to promote regional security, in concert with other stake holders. At the same time, being aware that cooperation co-exists with competition, we also remain watchful and committed to prevent the IOR from becoming an arena for another round of extra-regional military contestation.
51. Ladies and gentlemen, thank you for your attention. Jai hind.

016. Media Interaction of Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, March 7, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends. I am available now for any question that you may like to ask. I will subject myself to the volley of questions that you have on inevitable issues. Let us begin.

Q: Sir, has the meeting between Mr. Salman Khurshid and Pakistani Prime Minister been firmed up now; when are they meeting; who will be accompanying them; what are they going to discuss; what is going to happen; what food will be served? It is just one question.

Official Spokesperson: All this is subsumed under one question!

Q: These are various parts of the same question, Sir.

Official Spokesperson: All right. Let me try and answer all aspects of that question.

The High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi did inform us last week that the Prime Minister of Pakistan His Excellency Mr. Raja Parvez Ashraf had expressed a desire to undertake a private visit to Ajmer. Following subsequent consultations, the Ministry of External Affairs will be facilitating this one-day private visit by the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

It is expected that the Prime Minister of Pakistan will be accompanied by members of his family and will be arriving in Jaipur in the morning of 9th March. The External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, will host a lunch for him at a local hotel in Jaipur, following which the Prime Minister will depart for Ajmer. Upon completion of ziarat and prayers at Ajmer, the visiting Prime Minister is expected to return to Jaipur on the same evening and take a special flight back to Islamabad. We will provide you with a detailed media advisory indicating the photo opportunities that will be available during this visit for the visual media. The Prime Minister is not visiting New Delhi and no substantive discussions are scheduled to be held in Jaipur. I think I have answered most of your questions. I think you wanted the name of that hotel. It is not a big secret. It is Hotel Rambagh Palace in Jaipur.

Q: Any condolence message sent to the Venezuelan President?

Official Spokesperson: The Prime Minister of India has issued a condolence message, which is available. If you have not got access to it, we will certainly circulate that.

Q: As far as Mr. Ashraf's visit is concerned, last year we saw President Zardari, he was invited at the last minute. The invitation essentially has to come through the host country in a way. Can you take us through the reasons why perhaps a similar invitation was not extended to the visiting Prime Minister?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are drawing two different parallels. He has expressed a desire to visit Ajmer on a private visit along with members of his family or perhaps extended family. We have abided by that desire and indicated that he would be provided due courtesies, and all requirements that meet his needs are being met. In addition we have not received any other request for any other need.

Q: I just want to understand why the Indian Government is going out of its way to have an official interaction with the Pakistani Prime Minister given that the Prime Minister himself had said that this is not business as usual after the LoC flare out?

Official Spokesperson: I think I made it quite clear that there would not be any substantive discussions. That said, he is the Prime Minister and the Head of Government of a country with which we have diplomatic relations. It is an important country, and in accordance with normal diplomatic protocol, we are extending him due courtesies.

Q: Sir, this is regarding the Afghan Deputy NSA calling on the international community to blacklist ISI. Will India support such a move that has been made by Afghanistan since we are also at the receiving end of ISI?

Official Spokesperson: First of all, I think I am the wrong person to answer a question on intelligence. As you are aware, I have no expertise in that. I am a mere diplomat. But that said, I would draw your attention to a statement that we issued on December 19, 2012. It lays out our views on the matter of immunity and jurisdiction for all organizations. I would suggest that you have a look at that. It covers our response. It is available on our website.

Q: Is anyone going for the funeral to Venezuela?

Official Spokesperson: I will check this up and let you know before the end of the day, in the next hour. I did not follow this up.

(Subsequently we have informed all media by email that Mr Sachin Pilot, Minister of State with Independent Charge of Corporate Affairs will represent India at the funeral on 8 March 2012)

Thank you very much.

(Concluded)

017. External Affairs Minister's address at the inaugural meeting of "The Growth Net".

New Delhi, March 10, 2013.

Good afternoon to all of you Ladies and Gentlemen. It's an honor indeed to be here in the presence of my very good friend Shri Gautam Thapar, Chairperson of Aspen Institute India, and of course Mr. Claude Smadja, who has been a leading light and inspiration across the globe and as President of Smadja & Smadja, today steering this remarkable gathering. Shri Tarun Das who remains a constant pillar of strength.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentleman,

Allow me first to thank the organizers of "The Growth Net" for creating this remarkable platform to interact with the eminent economists and thinkers, and of course it is privilege to be able to share my thoughts with you all at this inaugural meeting which seeks to share knowledge and perspectives amongst emerging economies and I do understand that this is a beginning of a very, very major exercise. And the phrase that you have used is the "new constellation of growth", I think provides tremendous sense of energy there to denote what we have traditionally called "Emerging economies".

I do believe it is important that regular and meaningful exchange of ideas and experiences within this new constellation continues so that the benefit of their own growth as well as the understanding of the growth of the rest of the world can be enhanced and can be multiplied many times over. To that end, "The Growth Net" serves I believe commendable congregation of great minds such as yours and indeed it is a privilege to be sharing this moment with you.

Many of us are probably surprised to see how the world economy has changed today and one of the most important of these changes is the growing share of this new constellation of rapidly developing economies, that is I said has traditionally been known as the "Emerging Economies" and there is no doubt that in today's era of globalization, the rise of diversified global conglomerates and agile new businesses from these economies is inevitably changing the way world business is done.

There may well be despite a sense of understanding, there may well be some difficulty as far as analysis is concerned by academics and by people who are involved in actually defining the very concept of an emerging economy and I think you'd be aware that the World Bank definition of the Emerging Market, countries to have a gross national income per capita of US $ 11,905 or less of course. According to Goldman Sachs, Emerging Markets include the fastest growing economies, and these countries are the ones that are experiencing rapid industrialization, urbanization and increased global trade classifying where in BRIC, Indonesia, Mexico, Turkey and South Korea as the growth markets based upon GDP growth rates, demographics and of course the size and depth of market.

And I might add here that India in that sense will be for you both a great opportunity in terms of definition and also in terms of a challenge and I would recommend to you to think of India as a unique example of being able to factor in many of these forces that you have pursued and that you have analyzed and tried to understand as indeed offering some unusual and unique challenges. And I think those of you who have studied India and China in terms of contrast and in terms of the convergence, that some people might see, people think of us as an alternative to China, as competition to China or the other way around. But we have and our Prime Minister has said this very categorically and clearly that the world is large enough for both of us to be able to operate successfully both in terms of politics and in terms of economics. There are strengths that we have in India that would be very educative and instructive for anyone who is building new architecture for business in the world. There are strengths that China has and we recognize each other's strengths and I do believe that at certain moments we even try to replicate these strengths but they will remain for a very long time unique strengths of our two countries, so as you look at the pantheon of the countries in the constellation, it would be rewarding and it would be wholesome contribution to your understanding of what you are doing together to be able to emphasize our respective strengths and see how they work in each set of circumstances.

The growing importance of Emerging Markets is striking with respect to demographic importance, economic importance, both at the macro and micro economic level, and perhaps culturally as well and here India believes that it has a special, unique contribution to make. Both our historical cultural, bonds and linkages with the world and indeed our present attempts to provide an outreach to the world.

In terms of demographic importance, Emerging Market countries are home to half of the world's population and India is of course one of the two population giants still growing not necessarily something we appreciate. While the numbers are startling in terms of population, they are also increasingly impressive in terms of economic size and you know Emerging Markets account for almost 40% of the world GDP at purchasing power parity and are stated to be growing at more than 7% per annum on an average over the past few years.

In economic terms, businesses from these countries are listed among the world's 20 largest in terms of market value and a number of the richest individuals in the world are from these markets alone. One study has found that BRIC could be over half of the size of today's six largest industrialized economies by 2025 and in less than 40 years they could well overtake them.

Global economic situation I need hardly tell you remains a matter of concern. The Eurozone crisis although I have been reassured repeatedly that Eurozone crisis and sovereign debt crisis that have created enormous uncertainties in the global economy are gradually, steadily but surely on amend. The economic recovery is slow, of course, and that calls certainly for an important policy action on several fronts and I do imagine that this is happening across Europe. I know that it is little more difficult in United States of America but it's happening there as well and I hope that people will tell you about how we, in our own way, have tried to attempt this in our country.

The slowdown in advanced economies is affecting emerging countries through lower exports and smaller capital flows and this harsh truth. One silver lining of course is that, developing economies have greater ability to respond with fiscal and monetary stimulus if conditions worsen. We did that, and we did that with great deal of success but there are of course the side effects of successful stimulus which is what we are now trying to tackle in terms of putting a lid on fiscal deficits.

Infrastructure investment in developing countries assumes special importance in this regard, and that's for us, flagged as one most important element. It lays the foundation for rapid growth in the longer term, while providing an immediate stimulus for their economics and for the global economy by creating demand. An expansion of investment in infrastructure is possible only if they get access to long-term capital. The multilateral development banks can, thus and therefore play a major role in this context.

As I said that like other Emerging Economies, India too slowed down. We were aiming at 9%, we had reached 8 % GDP growth and then began to slip. We came down to 7, came down to 6, we then came down to 5.8% but as our Finance Minister and Prime Minister have said with tremendous confidence based not just on political loud speak but on the work that's been done that over the next two years we will inch back to 7%.

The global downturn , contraction of global demand and the impact on capital flows have obviously, played a part. Internal constraints, that's what I hope you will reflect on have affected in addition, have affected our economic performance. Sustaining a high growth for a country like India, we are now saying to our people, clearly is not an option but a social imperative and as only through sustained economic growth we will be able to lift our millions out of poverty. When we lift them up out of poverty, we get the additionally of providing a greater thrust to the economy. Not only do we put an end to the drag on the economy because of the poverty but we also get an enormous new energy in our economy when we lift people of poverty.

We can feel encouraged that the fundamentals of Indian economy remain strong and this is something that was shown by us when the Asian tigers were in trouble and this is something that I hope that we've been able to indicate also when US and European crisis emerged. We are confident of bringing back the rhythm of high growth. As I said, we are focusing heavily on infrastructure investment and also put in place a problem resolution mechanisms to overcome implementation of bottlenecks. We've began, we started this process with high powered Cabinet Committee that is headed by the Prime Minister himself to ensure that bottlenecks particularly in the area of environmental clearances to major projects can be fast-tracked and decision can be taken in one place.

Fiscal discipline is a priority for the Government and in this direction of course controlling of subsidies becomes important. A landmark effort is underway in India to facilitate delivery of a whole range of financial and other services directly through effective targeting and reduced leakages in subsidy schemes. And here we have the largest and most ambitious Unique ID number assisted direct transfers of benefits that we believe are necessary to go to our people. I think there is a conceptual change taking place. All the advice that we've got about subsidies dragging us down but subsidies that we cannot politically and in humanitarian terms completely overlook. The conceptual answer to that is now coming by ensuring that subsidies intended for the consumer but being used by the manufacturer will now actually end up in the consumer's bank and this is a major conceptual and functional difference that you will see over the next one year.

Our general budget that recently been given had some very good initiatives. I believe that this is a budget that's been described as budget to attempt to consolidate our fiscal position but it's actually consolidation of range of positions we've taken over the last 5-4 years and I think that it's a budget that actually can be seen as a budget of great deal of confidence despite difficult economic situation because this budget does not allow for any retreat of all the things that we did. It doesn't provide for runaway spending and therefore it's a budget that gives stability and it gives clarity of the direction that we've taken and our confidence in that direction. To boost manufacturing sector, we have announced investment allowance rate of 15% to manufacturing companies that invest more than rupees 100 crores in plant and machinery. In infrastructure, we've allowed certain companies to raise tax free bonds up to rupees 50,000 crores and encourage infrastructure debt fund. Some people might say this is too little, it doesn't go far enough but it's something that to be seen in the context of the situation as we saw it last year and preparation and laying the ground for what can possibly be done next year and therefore, I believe this is consolidation and a new beginning.

The global crisis has also given us a historic opportunity to reform global political and economic governance. The global financial and economic crisis of 2008-09 exposed the fragility of existing global financial and economic institutions, and the limitations of existing macroeconomic policy tools. But I think, gathering such as yours, indeed should reflect on this larger issue besides looking at the fine tuning of policy frameworks

Recent geo-political crisis in Middle-East and African countries has underscored the need to involve countries and have their say in the global economic and political governance proportionate to their economic prowess. Hence, our sustained argument for UN reforms.

To some extent, the formation of G20 is a significant geopolitical shift in global economic governance. The G20 members represent almost 90% of global GDP, 80% of global-trade and 2/3 of the world's population. G-20 also has a unique balance, where both advanced and emerging countries come together as equal partners. The global crisis has been a catalyst for this change. And whatever is left will be soaked up by the presence of this gathering of 30, I believe, it is, so from G8 to G20 and from G20 to your Growth Net of 30 and perhaps more.

Globalization has put all economies in the globe under the same boat with the end result that the implications of events in one economy can impact the entire global system. The crisis we see today is a case in point. The governance of the world economy has perforce therefore to change in terms of both format and substance.

The rising influence of Emerging Economies has shifted the balance of power in their favour. The emergence of some developing countries as key players and as real contributors to global dialogue on trade and economics is a fundamental feature of this new geo-political reality.

These emerging powers are no longer policy takers, they are policy makers or if you like contributors, influencing the pattern and scope of international trade, creating new supply and demand pulls and flexing their influence in international organizations in a meaningful way. Emerging Economies are also shouldering the growth burden gradually. After all, who thought that BRICS would add US $ 83 billion for IMF's additional firewall?

The global economy is expected to grow at a slow rate and that's not rocket science. The Eurozone may remain in recession in 2013 and the continuing US fiscal standoff will weigh on the global economy. Global economic cooperation is needed more than ever. It is reassuring to learn that the G20 is working towards bringing about strong, sustainable and balanced global growth.

G-20 is very well placed to cooperate in key areas so as to strengthen global recovery towards strong, sustainable and balanced global economic growth. Moreover, Emerging Economies have shown much more resilience and have maintained high growth path for quite some time. These factors position the Emerging Economies as the most important engine of the global economic recovery and I do believe, India stands there in a very visible position.

We have developed in India a gradually emerging as the fourth largest economy globally today in PPP terms. India appears to be writing a dynamic new future for itself, managing its transition from a developing country to a developed one.

Our exceptional growth in IT sector has changed the perception of the Indian economy to a major extent. India, with its good legal structure, corporate governance, banking system, financial sector and its skilled manpower and young force has become the new economic icon of the emerging powers. India's developmental model is managing to deliver long term economic pay-offs at much lower levels of investment.

Investors coming into India do so with three main things in mind, we know that the- high potential of our domestic market, cost competitiveness due to availability of low cost labour and inexpensive manufacturing capabilities. Investors are increasingly seeing India as a destination for the new manufacturing projects as they tend to target the industrial machinery, equipment and tools and the automotive sector. Many believe that India will be one of the top three manufacturing destinations of the world in the near future.

Innovation has therefore become crucial to India's industrial and services sector to take them to the next higher level. R & D landscape in India is expected to grow rapidly with over 700 MNCs currently basing their R&D centres in the country. India has a tremendous potential to become the "frugal innovation Centre of the world".

As companies and government enhance R & D expenditure, we will emerge as competitive technology providers. India has the largest scientific manpower in the world with over 12 million engineers and doctors and an equal number of post-graduates in science and mathematics and there is an annual addition of 2 million graduates, 7 lakh post graduates and 3 lakh engineers.

Government of India has, therefore, declared 2010-2020 as the "Decade of Innovation" realizing roadmap for innovation in the country needs to be chalked out as the innovation that produces affordable products and cheaper services without compromising on safety, efficiency and utility being need of the hour.

An alarm bell is the concerns expressed by investors and I think we will be candid and honest. These include lack of adequate infrastructure as the single biggest hindrance to doing business in the country. The World Economic Forum rated Indian infrastructure as 89th amongst 133 countries surveyed. Our government is therefore, committed to augmenting infrastructure capacity. Over the next five years, India plans to spend US $ 1 trillion on infrastructure, half of which, we hope, will come from private sector.

Governance and transparency are the other key issues which have been cited by investors as hurdles as it is felt that bureaucracy and red tape restricts an open environment for investment.

These are of course other major concerns namely revitalization of the rural economy, education, health, rural and urban infrastructure, environmental upgradation, need for better enhanced delivery of essential public services, upgrading the financial system for better global integration and a better regulatory system.

Our government has focused its priorities on addressing these issues. Despite huge challenges, India has registered significant gains based on liberal economic reforms pursued over the last two decades. Now is the time for the next phase of economic reforms and also address the fundamental structural issues in our economy. So we have gone up and then plateaued for a while and I believe that we will start our climb once again very shortly.

A few lines about India's efforts in building capacities in other developing countries would not be out of place. We share our developmental experiences with other countries traversing the same path to growth and economic upliftment, both as a moral obligation, political obligation and what we believe is enlightened self-interest.

From relatively modest beginnings, our capacity building programmes have expanded considerably in range and volume. Over the last year, nearly 9,000 civilian training slots were allotted to 161 developing countries for about 280 courses in disciplines such as finance management, IT, telecommunications, rural development and agro-processing. Special courses were offered in election management, WTO studies, parliamentary practices, public-private partnership in infrastructure development and mass communications. At the invitation of partner countries, we send experts in specified fields. To take just a few examples, we are in the process of sending a town planner to Fiji, a Police advisor to Belize and a consultant to a public Administration Institute in Namibia.

We are now moving one step further and are setting up capacity building institutions in partner countries. In our neighbourhood, we are establishing an Institute of Information Technology in Myanmar, agriculture research institutions in Myanmar and Afghanistan and Vocational Training Centres in Sri Lanka. At the India Africa Forum Summits in 2008 and 2011, India committed to establishing institutions to strengthen capacities at the pan-African, regional and bilateral levels in Information Technology, Education Planning, Civil Aviation, Agriculture Rural Development and Earth Sciences.

Two other important strands of India's development are concessional loans and development projects under grant assistance. Lines of Credit on concessional terms enable partner countries to undertake projects in accordance with their development priorities. We now have about 150 operative Lines of Credit of over US $ 9 billion. They finance a wide range of projects from drinking water schemes to irrigation, solar electrification, power generation & transmission, cement plants, technology parks and railway infrastructure.

Major projects are under implementation with Indian grant assistance in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Maldives, Myanmar, Nepal and Sri Lanka-in infrastructure, hydroelectricity, power transmission, agriculture, industry, health and other sectors.

The significant expansion of India's development cooperation programmes in recent years motivated the creation of a Development Partnership Administration in the Ministry of External Affairs to bring under one umbrella the entire range of our external developmental assistance and to manage more efficiently the formulation, appraisal, implementation and evaluation of its projects. This is not a new direction in our foreign policy; it is a sharpening of focus on one of its important dimensions and is meant to enhance the coherence of its delivery mechanisms.

We would like to fine-tune our programme to more effectively meet the developmental priorities of our partner countries. We are formulating transparent procedures to create a level playing field for our public and private sector companies to participate in projects under lines of credit and grant assistance. We intend to engage more with NGOs involved in socioeconomic programmes in India, so that we can replicate their Indian successes in other developing countries. We are also exploring innovative models of partnership with Indian business to implement larger developmental projects in our partner countries. We believe opportunities exist for this in, for example, the infrastructure and connectivity projects in Africa & ASEAN.

To conclude, I wish to leave a thought in your minds. It is clear that the Emerging Economies can take their rightful place in global order only if they achieve political stability, ensure energy and food security, adapt to clean technologies, invest in innovation, harness their demography, embrace revolutions in ICT, usher in transparency and last but not the least, share their experiences. It is beyond doubt that only if the economic growth is backed by the above factors, can it be comprehensive, strong, sustainable and inclusive. We need policy inputs to achieve the same. We look up to you to provide that and I am glad that many of these issues are on your agenda over the next few days.

My compliments for the topical initiative and wish all the participants engaging in productive discussions. I think that will briefly indicate to you that your meeting here in Delhi will be a rewarding one in the backdrop of the good things that are happening in India

Thank you Ladies and Gentlemen.

018. Weekly Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson.
New Delhi, March 18, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: Good Afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this interaction.

I just have an announcement to make and that is about the visit of President Morsi to India. He will be arriving late this evening. And we have provided you the details of his activities here in Delhi. My understanding is now that the delegation, since we last briefed, has further increased and there are now six ministers who are accompanying him. along with another official who is equivalent to minister. So we have approximately seven senior Minister level officials who are accompanying President Morsi, who will be arriving later tonight in Delhi. I do not have any other announcements to make, but if you are interested in any other issues that you may want to ask me about I am willing to answer.

Q: We are told that the Italians served a note verbale on 15th March saying that they have diplomatic immunity and the court order of 14th March cannot be executed on them. What was, if you replied to it, your reply?

Official Spokesperson: I think first of all, the terminology that you used perhaps is not the correct one to say -"served". A note-verbale is an ordinary means of communication between two governments. So yes, we did receive a note-verbale from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Italy on the 15th through our Mission in Rome and that note-verbale drew our attention to the provisions of the Vienna Convention regarding diplomatic agents. And, of course, we are conscious of the provisions of the Vienna Convention and our obligations under the Vienna Convention, but we are also bound by the directions of the honourable Supreme court on this matter and we have made it clear to them.

Q: Has the government decided, which way to go in Geneva, because verdict comes up on Thursday? Thank You.

Official Spokesperson: My understanding of the situation in Geneva is that the resolution in its final form will be available late this evening, Geneva time. And I also understand that the Foreign Secretary has asked our Ambassador or the Permanent Representative to the United Nations, Mr. Dilip Sinha to come over to Delhi tomorrow so that we can have consultations on matter. As this is an important matter for us and he will be able to brief to senior officials of the government on what are the ground level realities in Geneva and the latest position on that. So the call will only be taken subsequent to the availability of the resolution and the arrival of the Ambassador here for consultations with senior officials in the Ministry of External Affairs.

Q: How does the Ministry of External Affairs see the use of the word "genocide" in any potential resolution and also the demand for an international probe?

Official Spokesperson: I think there is a very well used idiom in English that we will cross the bridge when we come to it. There is no resolution as of now which is available to us. So what you say is only something that you are speculating about. We haven't seen the final format of that resolution and it is only going to be available, as I said, later tonight, Geneva local time. Our assessment about it will be communicated by Ambassador Dilip sinha when he comes here to New Delhi tomorrow.

Q: In view of many voices coming from European Union that (inaudible). How do you see possibility of a more diplomatic and a legal action. Is there a possibility of Joint investigation coming soon or some kind of out of Court Settlement. How realistic it can be?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are aware of the developments today at the Supreme Court. And we, as officers of the Govt. of India, are bound by the directives of the court on this matter. And we will abide by them. So at this stage, we will take it when the court discusses this next. My understanding of that, is now that it is on April 2.

Q: We asked the Ambassador designate not to go to Rome right now. So are there any further diplomatic steps that would be taken between you while Supreme Court process on here?

Official Spokesperson: I think we did mention that there's underway a study of the entire expanse of our relationship with Italy following the Prime Minister's statement in parliament that you are all aware of and that study, when it is completed, will provide us a variety of suggestions and its only then we will consider various matters based on what the study provides as recommendations and suggestions on the entire expanse of our relations. At this stage that's not yet ready.

Q: When is the Prime Minister finally going to Japan?

Official Spokesperson: As you are aware, it is always best to finalize dates before we make such announcements. At this stage, there has not even been an advance team which goes and make preparations. So I think it would be premature on my part to make any suggestions or references to such visit. Yes, the Prime Minister is keen since he could not undertake that visit in November last due to domestic developments in Japan and we hope that he will be able undertake the visit at the earliest possible opportunity which is convenient to both Japan and India.

Q: This news coming from abroad of contacts and discussions going on between India and Italy at diplomatic level. Can you say something more or you are not aware at all of the existence of this kind of discursion and secondly are you aware that our Ambassador is also accredited in Nepal and that he could go to Kathmandu tomorrow?

Official Spokesperson: I am aware of the concurrent jurisdiction of the Ambassador of Italy in India. That said, may be I'll use the same idiom now—let us cross the bridge when we come to it. Let us not be speculative and think of hypothetical situations. If you have some information that he is going tomorrow, he has not communicated that as of this moment to the Ministry of External Affairs.

Q: Sir, could you tell us if we have approached the UK for information on the Augusta-Westland investigations there, because we've signed a deal with them. Have they responded to us till now?

Official Spokesperson: I think I'm not aware of developments recently. But yes, we had approached UK previously and at that stage they had indicated in a preliminary manner that they would await the outcome of the investigations which are underway in Italy. Subsequent to that their Prime Minister was here and this was raised by our Prime Minister quite strongly. And there is on record, his response, about UK's willingness to be very transparent about these things. Since then, we've not had any further diplomatic level information exchange on that matter.

Thank very much

019. Interview of External Affairs Minister with The Tribune on Miscellaneous matters.

New Delhi, March 25, 2013.

(The Tribune/by Raj Chengappa)

On the recent vote in the UNHRC (United Nations Human Rights Council) there is criticism from experts that India had always dealt with Sri Lanka bilaterally on issues that concerned us but we are now resorting to multi-lateral means. As an example they cite the recent vote by India in favour of the US resolution and a similar one last year calling for devolution of powers to the Tamils and an inquiry into human rights violations by the Sri Lankan army. Isn't India compromising its foreign policy approach in many ways?

Interesting, that you should ask this question. I have had a lot of people within the political establishment in India saying that why we are not doing what we should be doing which is seeking amendments to the resolution or bringing your own resolution saying that there should be a credible independent international investigation. The closest we came to this was saying that the independent and credible investigation that must take place should be to the satisfaction of the international community. We even suggested to the US that this be taken on as an amendment but within the parameters and dynamics of the body of that nature. They felt that it would have disturbed the consensus that they had been able to get together over a long period and, therefore, they did not agree to our suggestion. Now why is all this a departure from India's foreign policy?

The fact that we are moving away from the bilateral approach. Does it mean that we have a diminishing clout with Lanka?

Fortunately, whatever we have said multilaterally is what we are saying to Sri Lanka directly. The 13th amendment was the bilateral agreement between India and Sri Lanka that there was a commitment given to India because Sri Lanka felt that it was necessary to give that commitment and we certainly desire that commitment. We do believe to this date and that is what can ultimately guarantee sustainable peace in Sri Lanka and there has to be sustainable peace in Sri Lanka. It is good for them and it's obviously necessary for us. But it must be within the sovereign rights of the Sri Lankan state.

Why did the DMK move out then?

Frankly, this was their call. The world sees India as having made a very determined effort to both appeal to Sri Lanka and to add to the world view as far as the human rights issue was concerned. So it can't be that we were wrong in both places or that we were wrong in not doing enough as far as the DMK was concerned. Right now it may appear that we owe explanations to the people in Tamil Nadu but frankly I think as tempers calm down, as the dust settles and clarity prevails, people will ask them why you are not admitting the extent to which the Government of India has, as you said, redefined some of its positions but tried to address the aspirations of the people of Tamil Nadu and we are not going to shy away from saying this. Fortunately, and I hope that this will remain true, our compulsions and the principles of the stand that we have taken have been understood by Sri Lanka.

Coming to the Italian marine crisis, Italy's major reason for keeping the marines back was that they believed that they should be tried either by the International Court or by their own domestic process. What was the problem with that?

The problem was that our courts said no, we can only go by what our court says about jurisdiction. Our courts, including the Supreme Court, said prima facie the jurisdiction does exist, it does not exist in the state government of Kerala, but it exists in the Central government to appoint a special court to try this matter. But they have also left open that the court that tries this matter can examine the jurisdiction issue in its entirety and then finally come to a conclusion whether the full trial is permissible or not. That's the Supreme Court judgement – we accepted it and so did Italy.

So why did the problem arise?

They have a larger stated position about international tribunals and international disputes; but within the largest stated position, they accepted the pronouncement and the judgement of our Supreme Court because they are party to it. And then subsequently, relying upon that very judgement and their being party to it and accepting the jurisdiction of the court, they then sought permission to leave, having come back once under permission that was given by the High Court. This time they sought permission from the Supreme Court and they were given permission against an affidavit that their Ambassador gave. Frankly, what is our fault in it? It's the assessment they made which is the submission to the jurisdiction that they did, we did not force anything on them and in view of that they were allowed to go to Italy for four weeks. That is the judgement of the court and we should all respect the judgement. Then they were advised presumably that they did not have to come back, we persuaded them that that was wrong.

Did we give them guarantees and that is why they came back?

We have given them a clarification in writing. They asked us whether the marines will be arrested on their arrival in India, we said no because they were supposed to arrive by the midnight of 22nd and if they arrived before the midnight of 22nd, then they were complying with the Supreme Court orders. So what could we arrest them for? And the other issue was: would they be subjected to death penalty? We said no because our understanding of the Indian law is that this is not the rarest of rare case as we understand from all Supreme Court judgements and, therefore, there is no apprehension of death penalty. It was a clarification, we are in no position to give guarantees and then as an abundant precaution we ran this by the Attorney General and then gave a written clarification. We have also written to the Attorney General to make all this available to the court when it reopens on April 2.

So you look upon this as a success of Indian diplomacy and that you were able to avert a nasty situation?

I won't call it a failure but I think yes it could have become very, very difficult because there were the competing claims — one of domestic law and one of the Vienna Convention and to be put through that very tough test of which way you should tilt is something that was avoided by timely and far-sighted decision of the Italian government. I think there is no reason why we shouldn't appreciate that and acknowledge it.

You had lunch with the Pakistani Prime Minister recently in Jaipur when he came to India. Why didn't the Indian Prime Minister invite him to Delhi for lunch?

Look at the kind of reactions to my having lunch with him — it would have been much worse if the Prime Minister had had lunch with him. He was on a private visit and not on official visit. There was a minimalist time required for him to go and pay obeisance at the Ajmer Dargah. We took a call that it would be appropriate for the Foreign Minister to go. So I went there, had lunch with him and came back.

Did you discuss relations between India and Pakistan?

We kept mostly to general topics. We talked about Sufism, we talked about music, we talked about food. But I did ask the Prime Minister if he had a vision for the relationship between India and Pakistan. We didn't go into specifics. I just asked him about a broad vision as anyone would over a meal. He then expanded on that. He talked a lot about it. Then I asked him what he was saying, which was obviously very positive in articulation, was only a position of his party or was it acceptable across the board in Pakistan politics. He said everyone shares it and that Pakistan was changing, particularly the younger generation.

Did you raise any of India's concerns with him?

No, this was a spiritual visit and I made it very clear that we didn't want to raise the issues we had. Words are not the only things that you require to convey feelings. These things are understood instinctively by people at that level. You don't have to take him through the alphabets all over again. I had made it clear that we were extending a courtesy for the spiritual visit. Therefore, my discussions hovered over spiritual issues more than politics.

So India's dialogue with Pakistan is almost dead?

I would not say it is dead or in a coma. I will say it has gone very sleepy.

When a new government in Pakistan takes charge in May, what does India expect it to do?

One, we have to go beyond the irritants as they serve little purpose. The irritant on the LoC, for instance, I don't think it served any purpose. If someone thinks it served an electoral purpose, they were probably barking up the wrong tree. Two, we still do not know whether it is lack of conviction on their part whoever is in the civilian government or lack of capacity to deliver on all those things that we want them to deliver in terms of the safety and security of our citizens. The bottomline is this that these mosquito bites must stop.

You would call the attacks mosquito bites?

Well, I think we are too powerful a country. We should not undermine our own strength and our own stature by reducing ourselves to that. I don't think it is more than very itchy mosquito bites. India is not going to be pushed and shoved by a mosquito bite. I think it is important that we get beyond the pranks and tricks of the past and make a serious effort to take forward the investment that both countries have made in the peace initiative.

Do we expect any changes in our relationship with China with a new leadership taking over?

The signals they have given us are very good. So far we have not had any eyeball-to-eyeball contact. But our Prime Minister developed a very good working relationship with the previous Chinese government. We have been given to understand that there is going to be continuity and enhancement of the relationship. We are very happy with that and we will reciprocate it. The good thing is the fundamental understanding that difficult issues will not keep us away from moving forward on areas of convergence. It is already articulated by them, by us and by the new Government in China and we reiterate that as well.

Moving to another trouble zone Afghanistan and regional security. With the US pullout in a year's time, what is likely to happen?

I do not know. This is a huge imponderable. We keep telling Afghanistan that India wants to be part of a solution and not part of the problem. We have said we are not entirely excited by the American idea that they should talk to Taliban; we know that they will have to talk to Taliban because they are their citizens and they have to talk. But distinguishing between good and bad Taliban or Taliban and Al-Qaida is not something that comes to us naturally. But if it is an Afghan-driven exercise and the redlines that the world agreed too with Afghanistan remain, then I guess it is the best thing that they can do.

In our relations with the US, there seems to be some kind of cooling recently. What needs to be done?

We have to get back and start talking again. There was no cooling but there was a pause because they were preoccupied with campaigns, with the new government, with the fiscal cliff etc. But now we will have a visit by the new Secretary of State and I will also pay a visit. Our Prime Minister will engage with their President and in the next few months, you will see things back in action. The export of natural gas was an issue we have to settle quickly. There are many issues relating to cooperation with their industry and our agencies with regard to the nuclear deal that need to be worked out. We are in touch with them and the high level intensity of exchanges will resume.

Any big bang developments expected during Barack Obama's second term as President and the UPA's second stint?

For us it is a consolidation term. For him it is a legacy term. I do not think there are legacies to be hunted here in the second term; there are legacies to be hunted in the Middle East or somewhere else. But consolidation is very important. President Obama's time and energy will be sought by India to consolidate a relationship that, we believe, has come a long way and has become very stable and I think that all the beginnings we have made must be taken further. That's what we will try to do.

With Bangladesh we still have not fully addressed the land border issue or agreed on water sharing of the Teesta?

No worries on that. We are working on the land border issue. We will introduce it in Parliament after the current recess. There are a few odds and ends that we need to explain to some MPs from Assam. I think we have got it tied up pretty well. I hope there will be a consensual passing of this historic land boundary Bill; it will be a tribute to India's lasting relationship with Bangladesh and will be one of high points of our foreign policy. As regards Teesta, it does not involve anybody except West Bengal. We will take up the Teesta issue once the land boundary issue is sorted out.

What is your world view now that you have been almost five months in the saddle?

The world is waiting for us, the world wants to engage with us, the world wants to be friendly with us, the world wants to be our partner in prosperity and the world admires India in many ways. Only one who can spoil this is India itself. So my appeal to all our political parties and sections of our society is that we have a lot of things that we disagree upon in our country and that happens in our emerging, growing and maturing democracy, but we have been lucky because throughout we have had a consensus on foreign policy and that has given us moral standing in the world far, far beyond this strength that we have both in terms of economy and military prowess.

020. Keynote address by Foreign Secretary at Conference of Southern Providers- South-South Cooperation : Issues and Emerging Challenges.

Delhi, April 15, 2013.

Dr Biswajit Dhar,

Ambassador Wu Hongbo

Distinguished guests,

1. It is a pleasure to be here with you at this important conference on development cooperation. There has been an intensive dialogue in recent years, involving governments, NGOs and academia of both developed and developing countries, on the conceptualization, delivery mechanisms and evaluation of various forms of development assistance. Much of this dialogue has concentrated on bridging the divide between North-South and South-South engagements. Surprisingly, there is not quite as much vibrancy in exchanges of perspectives between developing countries – the countries of the South – on the impact of their development cooperation strategies and institutions and on their approach to the ongoing debate on the global development agenda. I welcome this opportunity to share with you our perspective on some of these issues. We look forward to hearing from you over the next two days.
2. In the last decade or so, the range and quantum of South-South cooperation has expanded significantly. This trend has paralleled disturbing signs of what could be described as a slackening of donor enthusiasm in developed countries, in the background of difficult global economic conditions. It has also inspired spirited multilateral discussions on harmonizing the traditional frameworks of North-South cooperation with the emerging patterns of South-South developmental partnerships. These discussions have focussed on evolution of universal norms for identification, delivery and evaluation of all development assistance – North-South and South-South. They have raised important questions about values, motivations and desirable outcomes. There is, however, a pervasive sentiment among countries of the South that they do not factor in sufficiently the underlying premises of South-South cooperation, the circumstances in which it developed and its unique character.

3. I will outline India's experience to illustrate this point. From the time of our emergence as a free nation, we recognized the importance of human resource capacity building as a requirement for economic growth and independent policy making. This recognition informed the course of our cooperation with other developing countries with whom we shared the aspiration of eradicating poverty and under development. The Indian Technical and Economic Assistance programme, ITEC, was launched in 1964 with the objective of sharing our knowledge and skills with fellow developing countries. Over nearly five decades, ITEC and its sister initiatives, the Special Commonwealth Assistance for Africa Programme (SCAAP) and the Technical Cooperation Scheme of Colombo Plan, have contributed substantially to capacity building in many parts of the world. Last year, nearly 9,000 civilians from 161 countries attended training courses in diverse disciplines, conducted by 47 Indian institutions. We offer 2300 scholarships annually for degree courses in Indian universities. In addition, we run special courses at the request of countries or regions on specialized subjects such as election management, WTO studies, parliamentary practices and public-private partnerships. At the India-Africa Forum Summits in 2008 and 2011, we committed to establishing about 100 institutions in different African countries to strengthen capacities at the pan-African, regional and bilateral levels. We depute experts abroad to share expertise in areas like information technology, auditing, pharmacology, public administration and textiles research.
4. The core idea is to share the lessons we have learnt and continue to learn, with other countries traversing the same path towards development. This is the spirit in which illiterate grandmothers from various countries are trained in a remote village in Rajasthan, so that they can carry back solar electrification technologies to their remote villages in Africa, Central America, Asia or the Pacific Islands. The NGO SEWA – Self Employed Women’s Association – similarly contributes to women’s empowerment in rural Afghanistan through livelihood generating programmes. An earlier example is from our agricultural Green Revolution, when we shared with Vietnam our research on high-yielding rice varieties through exchanges of scientists and the establishment of a Rice Research Institute in southern Vietnam. Today, Vietnam is a major rice exporter and in fact competes with India in world markets.

5. In their structure and diversity, such programmes do not have many parallels in traditional North-South cooperation. Perhaps the best tribute to their efficacy is the fact that a number of donor agencies and multilateral developmental organizations are now building such socioeconomic development programmes and training in Indian institutions into their aid programmes for countries in Africa and Southeast Asia.
6. Over the years, we have considerably expanded our development cooperation portfolio through grant assistance to Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Maldives, Myanmar, Nepal and Sri Lanka for projects in infrastructure, hydroelectricity, power transmission, and other sectors identified by the host government as priority areas for their development. Another strand has been concessional Lines of Credit. Over the last decade or so, over 150 Lines of Credit totalling over US$ 9.5 billion have been allocated, financing a wide range of projects from drinking water schemes to power plants to technology parks and railway infrastructure in developing countries in Africa and elsewhere.
7. In all these strands of development assistance, our underlying philosophy remains that which underpins South-South cooperation. Our engagement is demand-driven and responds to the developmental priorities of our partner countries. We do not attach conditionalities, we do not prescribe policies and we do not challenge national sovereignty. We promote a mutually beneficial exchange of development experiences and resources.
8. It is a well-established truism that South-South cooperation is on an entirely different footing from North-South cooperation in inspiration, implementation and impact. There is an acknowledged historical context to Official Development Assistance (ODA), which distinguishes North-South Cooperation from South-South Cooperation. The focus on South-South cooperation in the prevailing international discourse on aid architecture increasingly glosses over this fact. It conveniently overlooks the reality that developing countries even the so called emerging economies continue to confront major economic challenges of their own, exacerbated by the current global economic situation, which place an inherent limitation on their capacity to contribute to international development cooperation. The assistance which developing countries offer to other developing countries should therefore continue to remain voluntary and free from externally imposed norms drawn from North-South Cooperation. Simply put, whereas North-South cooperation is a historic responsibility, South-South cooperation is a voluntary partnership. The fact that the traditional donor community often underplays this distinction does not diminish its validity.

9. In the present global realities, it is self-evident that while South-South Cooperation supplements North-South Cooperation, it is not yet in a position to replace it in any significant measure. The North-South engagement leads the aid process and should continue to do so.
10. The importance of ODA should not be allowed to be diluted. In fact, the present predicament of many developing countries – facing contracting capital flows, economic slowdown and fiscal difficulties – makes their need for enhanced ODA even more critical than before. It is therefore a matter of great satisfaction that several donors have come forward to declare their continued commitment to their 1970 UNGA pledge of achieving an ODA level of 0.7 per cent of their GNP. Japan, Germany, Australia and UK have targeted attainment of this goal by 2015.
11. These are perspectives that should continue to feed into the important on-going discussions on the post-2015 Development Agenda, which seek to identify the key international development priorities and to define a template for global cooperation in the coming decade and beyond. We should resist excessive emphasis being placed on South-South Cooperation as a crucial pillar of the Agenda. We should reinforce the argument that while South-South Cooperation and the voluntary efforts of developing countries such as India would continue to play an important role, it would be a travesty to project them as the principal new component of a redefined Global Partnership for the new Agenda. South-South Cooperation has to be accompanied by a significant enhancement of North-South aid flows, not their diminution.

12. In this context, we were disappointed with the content of the recently released Bali Communiqué of the UN Secretary General's High Level Panel on the post-2015 Development Agenda. It is quite astonishing that, even as the crucial importance of ODA for many developing countries is being reiterated at various high-level fora, this document does not contain a single mention of ODA. We need to register the note of caution that if the recommendations of the Panel are to make a meaningful contribution to evolving a new Development Agenda, they should reflect in equal measure the concerns of both the developing and the developed world. We should be careful not to dissipate the political consensus reached in the Rio+20 Outcome.
13. The Fourth High Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness at Busan in 2011 encouraged increased efforts to support effective development cooperation, and noted that South-South efforts could be accommodated within the envisaged Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation, but on a voluntary basis. Without doubt, there is scope for an exchange of learning between the North-South and South-South models. There are concepts and practices that the South can absorb from the North-South engagement. Equally, the North can draw from the outlook and methodology that the South applies to its development partnership. A sustainable Global Partnership on Development Cooperation can only be built from a harmonious synthesis of the two models.

14. There is apprehension in some quarters that efforts to establish a Global Partnership are being directed at centralizing the monitoring and evaluation of developmental assistance flows and encouraging their convergence at the recipient level. If it is pursued in a clinical manner, such an approach would dilute the richness and diversity of development experience-sharing between developing countries. We need an informed debate on this aspect.
15. I believe that more regular and sustained interactions among the countries of the South will facilitate a crystallization of their approach to all these aspects of the global development cooperation debate. A culture of consultations and more effective experience-sharing between our development cooperation institutions will enhance our ability to feed Southern perspectives more effectively into the global dialogue.
16. I am sure that this Conference will make a valuable contribution to this process. We have a broad spectrum of Southern providers and recipients of development assistance, and the welcome involvement of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs at the level of Under Secretary General Wu Hongbo, I hope this Conference will address these issues in depth and emerge with some consensus on the major preoccupations of developing countries in the emerging global development environment. I wish you all success in this endeavour.

Thank you

021. Speech of Finance Minister P. Chidambaram on “The Rise of the East: Implications for the Global Economy” Delivered at South Asia Institute and Mahendra Centre at the Harvard University.

Boston, April 17, 2013.

“It is a great pleasure to be back in the grounds of Harvard University and a great honour to be invited to speak by institutions that are part of Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, including my alma mater, the Harvard Business School. Last time too I spoke at the Harvard Business School and I feared that they may just say ‘Once is enough’. I thank the South Asian Institute and Mahendra Humanities Center at the Harvard University for the opportunity.

Oh, East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet. “Thus, in the year 1889, wrote Kipling in his famous Ballad of East and West. Little did he know that globalization was only less than a hundred years away.

The rise of once-upon-a-time poor countries has been the central economic story of our time. More than the growth, it is the pace of the growth that tells a more fascinating story. It took Britain 150 years, after the Industrial Revolution, to double its economic output per person. The United States, the emerging market of its time, took 50 years to do so in its period of fast development. When China and India began their period of high growth in recent decades, they took 12 and 16 years, respectively, to double per capita GDP. And while Britain and United States embarked on their take-off with a population of 10 million, China and India started out with a population of a billion or so each. So, in terms of force, as a McKinsey report on emerging markets suggests, the two leading emerging economies in the East are experiencing roughly 10 times the economic acceleration of the Industrial Revolution at 100 times the scale.

In 2012, at market exchange rates, emerging economies accounted for 38 percent of world GDP and 61 percent of world growth. The transformation in world trade has been of a similar magnitude. At purchasing power parity, emerging markets accounted for 80 percent of world growth, with China accounting for 35 percent and India accounting for 10 percent. If you are a businessperson looking for growth and new markets, you have to look East (and perhaps South).

Another way to see this is to look at market shares. Emerging markets have over three quarter of the world's market share in steel consumption, cell phones, and foreign exchange reserves. They account for more than one-half of the motor vehicles sold, with China overtaking the United States as the largest car market in the world. They account for more than one-half of global investment. While China's investment story has been much commented upon, India's is just starting out.

Before examining the consequences of this shift in economic power, it might be useful to note that the East is recovering from a long growth recession lasting nearly 250 years. As Angus Maddison of the University of Groningen has noted, India was the largest economy in the world in the early 1700s, before the onset of the Industrial Revolution, with China close behind. India's goods were sold around the world, though not always welcomed. After all, it was only a few miles from here that tea from the East, transported by the British East India Company, was unceremoniously dumped in Boston Harbour 240 years ago. Of course, we respect the sentiment that led you to do it, but hope you will not do it again. Fish do not drink tea and it would be a waste of good Darjeeling.

Going forward, China and India will continue to be drivers of world growth, with China growing at 8-8.5 percent and India at 6.1-6.7% between 2013 and 2014. ASEAN-4 (Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines and Thailand) is also projected to grow at more than 5.5 percent. China is reported to have already overtaken the United States in economic size (measured by real per capita GDP in purchasing power parity terms) by 2012-13.

I do not wish to numb you with numbers. But let me mention one other well-known difference between a number of emerging markets and industrial countries: it is the demographics. A lot of the growth in the East is still to come as it reaps its demographic dividend. For instance, India's share of the working age population will continue to rise. Nearly one-half the additions to the Indian labour force over the period 2011-30 will be in the age group 30-49, even while the share of this group in advanced countries will decline. This means greater production, savings and investment in India as the demographic dividend is reaped.

So what do these changes in the locus of global demand mean? Before I turn to that, let me first say that not all the patterns we had seen emerge in global savings and investment, before the global financial crisis of 2008, were sustainable. Indeed, the financial crisis could be seen as evidence that the imbalances that were building up were unsustainable.

Simply put, the industrial world, even as its population was ageing and as promised entitlements were becoming due, increased spending, and financed the spending with huge amounts of debt. Many emerging markets built up substantial trade surpluses as they gleefully catered to industrial countries' demand. And, ironically, they financed industrial countries' consumption by investing their savings in industrial countries' paper.

This served both industrial countries and emerging markets while it lasted. For industrial countries, strong consumption growth papered over looming fiscal problems. Emerging markets too benefited as net exports grew. But it could not last. Sovereign debt, bank debt, and household debt in the industrial world increased to the point that investors were reluctant to buy more paper. Hence, the industrial world is being forced into austerity.

Emerging markets too have not been immune to the resulting slowdown. Even though, unlike other emerging markets, India has been a net importer of goods and capital, it too has become more open over this period – the sum of Indian goods and services traded exceeded 55 percent of GDP in 2011-12. The slowdown in industrial countries has affected India, especially exports.

Ladies and gentlemen, the world has to adjust. Industrial countries have to save more while emerging markets have to spend more. Such an adjustment will help industrial countries pay down heavy debt loads, even while leaving global demand to be supported by the emerging markets. Of course, the nature of spending will vary across emerging markets. China probably has to consume more, while India has to invest more. But as the world moves towards one where consumption and investment shifts towards the emerging markets, especially in Asia, and ageing industrial countries will learn to save more, what are the opportunities and challenges? That is what I want to speak on in the next fifteen minutes.

I wish to talk about challenges to corporations, to the location of investment, to global financing, to social pressures, and to global governance that will come about from these momentous changes. Start first with corporations around the world. As demand from emerging markets accounts for not just the bulk of a multinational company's growth but also the majority of its sales, it will have to make changes. Products must now be designed for the emerging markets rather than designed for industrial countries. Who would have imagined that buying a burger at McDonalds could mean getting an aloo tikka - or potato - burger? Shift in demand will require big changes in the mindset of the product designers as well as changes in the location of decision making.

Some industrial country firms have managed the transition. For instance, it may interest you to note French luxury brand Hermes' foray into saris. The patterns for these saris are based on the popular Hermes scarves, which in turn, interestingly, were inspired by Indian design (Financial Times, October 7, 2011). In another interesting twist, a Spanish porcelain manufacturer now has an entire range of Buddhist and Hindu deities, including several fascinating interpretations of the popular elephant-headed Hindu god Ganesha and images of Kwan Yin, a goddess of compassion revered in Buddhism, Taoism and Confucianism.

Such changes require corporations to restructure their decision making. After all, it is easy for fashion decisions to be made in New York when the primary wearers of the fashion are promenading outside the store windows on Fifth Avenue. But what if they are 10,000 miles away? Can you make product decisions at long distance? Or do you have to shift headquarters to Shanghai or Hong Kong, as global bank HSBC has done?

Emerging market companies understand local needs better. Consider frugal engineering, an entirely new way of designing, engineering, and delivering products cheaply so that they can cater to the enormous number of people making a few dollars a day. To produce innovative frugal products, emerging market firms know they need the design capabilities and technologies possessed by industrial country companies as well as the scale from catering to global markets. Indeed, while the number of majority acquisitions increased globally by 6 percent, acquisitions of industrial country companies by emerging market firms grew at an annual rate of 26 percent. India, Malaysia, and China, account for more than half of the M&A deals, with India spearheading the acquisitions market.^{1[1]}

What I find interesting is the extent to which these companies have gone global. The UNCTAD calculates a trans-nationality index based on the average of foreign assets to total assets, foreign sales to total sales, and foreign employment to total employment. In this, Hutchison has a whopping score of 80.8 percent, TATA Steel 64.5 percent and Singapore Telecom 64.3 percent. In comparison General Electric has a score 59.7 percent, Toyota Motor Corporation 52.1 percent and Exxon Mobil 66 percent. That is, some of the new eastern multi-national companies are actually more global than established global giants. Tatas is the largest private sector employer in the U. K. today.

Let me turn to investment. The shift in activity will create enormous new investments, not just in China but elsewhere too. As one example of what is likely, the Delhi Mumbai Industrial Corridor, a project with Japanese collaboration entailing over $ 90 billion in investment, will link Delhi to Mumbai's ports, covering an overall length of 1483 km and passing through six States. This project will have nine mega industrial zones, high speed freight lines, three ports, six airports, a six-lane intersection-free expressway connecting the country's political and financial capitals, and a 4000 MW power plant.

India saves a lot – the savings rate at its lowest in recent years was about 30 percent of GDP. But India's savings fall short of its investment needs. Moreover, India needs intelligent risk capital that will ensure that investments are monitored and brought to fruition. And India needs long term patient capital that is willing to collect a return over many years.

Industrial countries, with their ageing populations, would seem to have a matching need – a need, as they increase their savings, to see them invested in attractive long term instruments producing adequate returns. There is a perfect match here provided both sides work at reducing barriers. We constantly hear of moves in industrial countries to engage in financial protectionism, to keep savings at home in order to finance overextended industrial country governments. Any move in this direction would be terribly misguided.

At the same time, emerging markets have to increase the comfort level of international investors, to improve their sense that their capital is well protected. After all, why would they invest over the long term if their capital can be expropriated by a change in laws or by the whims of the government? The best guarantor of investment protection is a stable and democratic political structure, a belief in the rule of law, and a transparent and independent legal system. India has all three. So have many other emerging markets.

The rise of the East may also be contributing to social tensions. Historically, advanced industrial economies have adapted by creating new jobs and endowing their workers with the skills to do those jobs. But the pace with which the East has grown may have reduced the time companies and workers in industrial countries have had to adapt. The high levels of persistent unemployment in industrial countries may reflect, in part, the lack of such adaptation. This is creating new problems. How will the West deal with a 55 year old auto worker who is too old to learn a new trade but too young to retire? How will advanced industrial countries find people for the jobs that are vacated by retiring workers if their fertility rates fall below the replacement rate? The answers will determine the character of such societies in the years to come. The wrong answer is to blame immigration, trade or technological progress. The right answer will be to harness these forces to provide the remedies.

Emerging markets too have their problems of adaptation. Some sections of their people are already in the post-industrial society that we see around us here in Cambridge. They live in gated communities, travel to air-conditioned offices in air-conditioned cars, invest in equal proportions at home and abroad, consume as much as their peers in industrial economies, and believe naively that they have shut out the heat and the dust and the pain and the suffering of the emerging market. But governments cannot ignore the growing disparity between these winners in the process of globalization and the masses, the majority of whom in a country like India are still dependent on agriculture or low paying casual jobs. Inclusive growth is not an option for India, it is an imperative.

In my view, a good, decent job is the best form of inclusion. So, India's efforts have been focused on trying to enable the poor to obtain better nutrition and health, education and skills, and financing, that will allow them to secure good livelihoods. In this regard, India is in the middle of a massive effort to empower the poor through a system of rights-based entitlements including the right to information, the right to education, the right to medical care, and the right to food. Inclusive growth will enable India to have a fairer, and in many ways more stable, society.

Let me turn finally to the geo-political implications of the rise of the East. As the people in the East look for houses, cars and bikes, and washing machines, it will create enormous demands for resources; it will entail higher expenditure; and it will present severe challenges to the environment. Our planet, given current mitigation technologies, will not allow all of us to enjoy the lifestyles of the rich countries – there is an overall budget constraint imposed by the environment. Of course, technologies will improve, but for now sustainable development will require all of us to adapt.

I do not want to dwell on what needs to be done. But I think environmental sustainability adds to the range of economic issues on which we need global dialogue and global co-operation. And, I am afraid, the quality of that dialogue, and the degree of co-operation, has, so far, been deficient.

In part, this is a consequence of the rapid rise of the East. Global multilateral organizations were set up to deal with a set of problems based on an agenda and a framework set by the industrial countries. The problems have changed, the players are different, and their relative importance has altered significantly, but the organizations, the agenda setting, and the lens through which solutions are devised have not changed enough.

Even as the old great powers still dominate the multilateral organizations, thus causing emerging markets to remain silent or sullen, new structures like the G-20 are yet to find traction. There is a vacuum in global economic policy discussion that can prove dangerous as the shift in economic power creates new frictions. Perhaps we need new multilateral institutions, institutions set up for the post-financial crisis era that are not compromised by the legacy and the power structures of the past. A real concern is that the old great powers do not feel the need for change because they know the emerging markets do not have common goals and can be easily divided. But denying emerging markets real power will be very shortsighted.

Let me also acknowledge that there is the potential for tension within the countries of the East, as competition for resources and markets increases. In recent months we have seen talk of conflict over islands, underwater resources, or even water itself. We need to work collectively to reduce these tensions and to ensure that trade, investment, and mutual gain trumps narrow self interest.

Finally, as the East grows in economic strength, it will need the intellectual heft to provide the solutions to the myriad problems that will arise. Speaking as an Indian, let me say our universities are growing in strength. But great institutions of learning like Harvard University can play an important role: by teaching our youth, by training our teachers, and by engaging in intellectual dialogue that will strengthen mutual understanding.

Let me end by saying that the rise of the East is not, and should not be seen as, a threat to the West. Properly managed, it can result in enormous gain for all and a true meeting of civilizations. Perhaps the third line of Kipling's poem will in fact come true: "But there is neither East nor West, Border, nor Breed, nor Birth." It is with that hope that I leave you today. And I thank you for your kindness and patience.

022. Speech of the Prime Minister at the Inaugural Session of the 46th AGM of the Asian Development Bank.

New Delhi, May 4, 2013.

"On behalf of the Government and people of India, I warmly welcome you all to the 46th Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank. I also congratulate President Nakao on his election as the President of ADB. Let me also place on record not only India's but the entire region's sincere appreciation of the role that the ADB's former President Haruhiko Kuroda played in guiding the ADB over the past eight years.

After centuries of stagnation and deprivation, Asia is once again regaining its primacy in the global economy. For almost half a century, the ADB has been a trusted partner of the Asia Pacific region in general and the developing member countries in particular in this very exciting journey. You have an even more important role to play in the times to come and I wish you all the very best.

The 21st century is rightly spoken of as the Asian century. In a proper perspective, this should be seen as a process of resurgence, of Asia regaining the position it had on the global stage some 250 years ago. The rapid modernization and expansion of Asian economies is acknowledged as one of the most dramatic developments in the economic history of the world. This process has also pulled out of poverty the largest number of people ever in the history of human kind. If the current momentum continues, Asia's share in the world economy would double by 2050 and would account for over half of the global GDP.

In 2013 the IMF expects advanced developed economies to grow at only 1.2% while developing Asia is expected to grow more than five times faster at 7.1%. The Asian region is expected to play a crucial role in driving and stabilizing the global recovery process.

The resurgence of Asia is a part of a process where economic power has been shifting to emerging economies in recent years. At Purchasing Power Parity, emerging economies accounted for 80% of the world growth in 2012, with emerging Asia accounting for a majority of it and China and India accounting for 35% and 10% of world growth respectively. This trend is only likely to continue in the years to come.

As the world moves towards one where consumption and investment shift towards emerging markets, especially in Asia, several opportunities and challenges arise. They include accommodating different models of growth, ensuring that growth is inclusive and providing Asian countries with a voice in international fora that is commensurate with the aspirations and needs of their people. The ADB is uniquely positioned to facilitate this change and work with governments to make the world order more inclusive, fair and stable.

While it is true that Asia and the Pacific region, growing at over 8% annually over two decades, is the most dynamic region of the world, there are still stark differences across and within countries in this vast region. Though there has been a significant reduction in poverty in many countries, inequalities have not fallen, and some social indicators, including the extent of malnutrition, have not improved significantly. Deficiencies also exist in the delivery of public services, health, education, infrastructure development and the protection of environment. It is time Asian economies step-up their efforts to address common challenges by investing resources in areas that help to empower all sections of our people. The ADB can play an important role in this regard.

With 1.7 billion people still continuing to live on less than $2 per day poverty alleviation must indeed remain as the most immediate goal of public policies in Asia. At the same time there should be a longer-term view and a vision of an Asia beyond poverty, a vision of shared prosperity. I hope the ADB will commit itself with renewed vigour to address the challenges posed by these two different needs of Asia.

High economic growth is essential. But it cannot be an end in itself. The benefits of rapid growth must necessarily lead to a betterment in the lives of the common people. Equitable distribution of the fruits of development requires the pursuit of development through empowerment of people. This is the key to inclusive growth. Creation of new productive job opportunities for the growing labour force is the most powerful means of empowering the people. For this purpose, skill development is the most potent instrument.

One hears a lot about the demographic dividend that developing Asia could enjoy in the coming decades. We need effective institutions and effective policies to make this happen. Adequate investments in sectors such as health, primary and higher education, skill development, as well as industrial sectors that can provide gainful employment, are very crucial. With the limitations of agriculture in absorbing additional labour, high productivity jobs need to be created in sectors outside agriculture. This would broaden the base of economic growth and add vibrancy to the labour market.

Adequate investments in the much needed infrastructure sectors require timely access to capital. As investments in infrastructure are inherently long-term, and the private sector continues to be risk averse in many cases, a concerted global effort towards infrastructure financing and investment has to be high on the global agenda. This is where Multilateral and Regional Development Banks come in. As I said at Los Cabos meeting of the committee of twenty, infrastructure investment in developing countries not only lays the foundation for rapid growth in these countries, but it also provides a good stimulus to the advanced economies, and promotes global recovery and job creation through a rebalancing of the global economy. We have expanded the resources of the IMF enormously in response to the crisis in Europe. We now need to substantially expand the resource base of Multilateral Development Banks so that they have the firepower to help developing countries reach their development potential.

I understand that the level of lending that the ADB can sustain is projected to come down. At this juncture, ADB should take the initiative to find innovative ways to channelize global savings into infrastructure projects in Asia Pacific. ADB's good rating and technical expertise can be leveraged to raise resources in domestic and international markets through appropriate instruments. Pooling investments across various countries can mitigate risk which can be further reduced through credit enhancement by the ADB. Moreover, expanding infrastructure financing and investment through the intermediation of the ADB could help lower the cost of financing long-term infrastructure projects. I hope the ADB can consider moving in this direction and propel growth in this vast region.

Regional cooperation and integration among countries in Asia and the Pacific can play a critical role in accelerating the process of economic growth, reducing poverty and economic disparities. The importance of building cross-border infrastructure, of eliminating trade and investment barriers, and of cooperation including transfer of technology, in regional public goods such as clean air and energy, energy efficiency, management of water resources, control of communicable diseases, and management of natural disasters cannot be over-emphasized. We believe that promoting regional cooperation is the key mandate of the agreement that created the ADB and a testament to the sagacity of the founding fathers of this great institution.

India is a firm believer in the benefits of regional integration and is committed to promoting it. We stand committed to deep engagement with the countries of East and Southeast Asia.

India has set itself a target of over 8% annual growth in our Twelfth Five Year Plan, which runs from 2012 to 2017. This is the rate of growth that the country achieved over the past decade. We are initiating measures to spur investment and to make India more attractive to investors both at home and abroad. We have taken steps to fast track major infrastructure projects. In recent months, we have also introduced strong measures to achieve fiscal consolidation.

Both India and the ADB have a strong commitment to a common agenda in making the growth processes more inclusive and sustainable. I sincerely believe that this is not just a social and political imperative, but also a sound economic underpinning for sustained long term growth. Therefore, we place special emphasis on livelihood security, food security, healthcare, education, skill development and on clean and renewable energy.

Decentralized governance through the institutions of Panchayati Raj in India has empowered ordinary citizens and has gone a long way in making them active participants in processes of development. Today, more than 3 million elected representatives in local governments, almost 40% of them women, are shaping the development agenda in their communities across India. Similarly, the women's self-help group movement today has in its fold more than 30 million women across the country, engaged in various livelihoods, and taking on newer and more important roles in their communities.

In recent years we have introduced legal entitlements to work, education and information from public authorities. We also plan to provide our people a legal entitlement to food at affordable cost. A legislation in this regard is before our Parliament. We are also creating the world's largest electronic identity database under the programme "Aadhaar" to serve as a basis for citizen identification and efficient delivery of public services and entitlements. The Direct Benefits Transfer programme will make it simpler for the beneficiaries to have access to benefits and will also eliminate corruption and wastage in the delivery of public services.

Asia today stands on the verge of a momentous transformation. If the potential of our economies is harnessed fully through appropriate policies and a strategic vision, Asia will certainly play a far greater role in world affairs and in promoting global well-being. Each one of the Asian countries must find ways and means of contributing to the fulfillment of this noble vision. I strongly feel that the time has come for greater cohesion among our economies for building a more empowered, stable and secure world and for the major development bank in the region to play a pivotal role in this regard. I wish you all success in your 46th Annual General Meeting."

023. Address made by the Finance Minister P. Chidambaram during the Frist Business Session of ADB Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors at IEML.

Greater NOIDA, May 4, 2013.

Mr. President, Honourable Governors and friends,

It has been a year when we last met at Manila. It is time to look what has been done and what more is required to be done to continue with the growth and development of our region.

India took robust stimulus measures to counter the slowdown induced by the global financial crisis in 2008-09. As a result, the country achieved a growth rate of 8.6 per cent and 9.3 per cent in 2009-10 and 2010-11, respectively. However, particularly with demand-supply imbalances in the food sector, the economy started to show inflationary tendencies. Growth with macroeconomic stability is the abiding goal of the government, and appropriate policy measures were initiated to restore price stability. As a result of such action, annual headline inflation as measured by the wholesale price index, which had reached an alarming 10 per cent rate in September 2011, came down to 5.96 per cent in March 2013. However, there was a growth slowdown as well, and the economy grew by only 6.2 per cent and 5.0 per cent in 2011-12 and 2012-13, respectively.

Government is determined to accelerate the pace of inclusive growth, while maintaining macroeconomic stability, to achieve its overriding goal of empowering the people and eradicating poverty. We are committed to fiscal consolidation. It will reverse the slippages that took place as a result of the stimulus packages. In 2012-13, the fiscal deficit as a proportion of GDP is likely to have been about 5.2 and we aim to bring it down to 3 per cent in 2016-17. This we will achieve by a prudent combination of revenue enhancement as well as expenditure rationalization.

We are determined to boost investment – both domestic as well as foreign. The gross fixed investment rate has declined from 32.9 per cent in 2007-08 to 30.6 per cent in 2011-12. Many projects are plagued by “last mile” bottlenecks in fuel supply, environment clearance, forest clearance, and land acquisition. We have set up a Cabinet Committee on Investment under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister to fast-track projects, particularly in key sectors such as coal, power, steel and roads. We have permitted FDI in areas such as multi-brand retail, power exchanges and aviation . As I am fond of saying, India’s story on investment is just starting out.

ADB and India

India, as a founder member, is proud of its record of association with ADB. We have a deep appreciation of ADB as our partner in development. ADB in India is today engaged in the development of transport & energy sectors, urban infrastructure, public resource management, integrated water resource management, khadi reform, and agribusiness infrastructure. It is active in promoting innovations in infrastructure finance and building frameworks for public private partnerships. It has expanded its engagement in low income states and is making meaningful interventions in capacity building. I am pleased to note that ADB is now embarking on supporting initiatives in skills development. To take our engagement with ADB further, let me offer you three broad ideas.

1. Special role for ADB in helping with the development of economic Corridor Government of India has been emphasizing the development of economic corridors, including industrial corridors and freight corridors, as a means of integrating and connecting centers of production and demand, and creating income opportunities all along their paths. A coordinated approach to economic corridors transforms not only cities and towns, but also the rural hinterland.

The Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC) is India’s most ambitious infrastructure program. In addition to the DMIC, other important economic corridors being developed are Chennai-Bengaluru and Mumbai-Bengaluru corridors.

Developing economic corridors that connect lagging states to economically dynamic states holds considerable potential for achieving high and inclusive growth. We invite ADB to carry out an in-depth exploration of how it could employ its expertise in energy, logistics, urban, and skills development around a few such economic corridors.

In order to realize their full potential, these economic corridors should also be part of broader regional economic corridors and regional integration efforts. ADB can not only partner in these efforts but also actively pursue the potential of a corridor linking India, Bangladesh, Myanmar, ASEAN and People's Republic of China.

2. Role for ADB in developing special financing vehicles to support infrastructure and utilities projects

Our estimates show that over the 12th Plan period spanning fiscal years 2012-2017, India will need around $1 trillion of investment in infrastructure, of which around 48% will have to come from the private sector. A fundamental challenge in infrastructure development lies in funding the needed investments.

We would like to see ADB support the development of innovative special financing vehicles to support the expansion of infrastructure finance. In doing so, ADB must build upon its recently approved innovative project - supporting credit enhancement of infrastructure project bonds so as to enable infrastructure developers to tap the vast resources available with insurance firms and pension funds. More specifically, ADB could explore credit enhancements for road funds and municipal bond issuances in order to expand the finance available for transportation and urban infrastructure, respectively.

3. A push on RCI—with a special role for ADB via SASEC

India is committed to the goal of regional integration and recognizes how least integrated South Asia is in terms of this metric. Given the focus of Strategy 2020 on regional cooperation, and ADB's expertise in infrastructure as well as regional cooperation, we welcome ADB's intensive engagement in promotion of regional cooperation by bringing together participating countries under South Asia Subregional Economic Cooperation (SASEC) to design initiatives in three priority areas: (i) Transport; (ii) Trade Facilitation; and (iii) Energy. However, to give a push to its regional cooperation initiatives, ADB should ensure that the funds for the regional projects are given to the participating countries as an additionality, over and above the country support programme.

With ADB actively reengaging with Myanmar, the scope for reaping enormous gains by linking South Asia to South East Asia stare at our face and ADB should mobilize itself fully for realizing the gains.

Let me conclude by expressing my confidence that the Asia and Pacific region can meet the challenges ahead and continue to grow toward greater prosperity and opportunity. I would like to place on record our appreciation of ADB for giving us the opportunity to host 46th Annual General meeting. I hope you are enjoying your stay here and take back some cherished memories.

024. Closing Address by the Chair, Board of Governors and Alternate Governor for India Dr. Arvind Mayaram, Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs during the concluding Business Session of 46th ADB Annual Meeting of Board of Governors.

New Delhi, May 5, 2013.

Distinguished Governors,

President ADB,

Ladies and gentlemen:

The 46th Annual Meeting of the Asian Development Bank now draws to a close. On behalf of the Government of India, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to fellow Governors, ADB President, Management and staff, and all the participants for their cooperation and contribution to the success of this annual meeting. I am also grateful to the Governors of Georgia and Switzerland, for their assistance as Vice Chairs. I would also like to thank the meeting secretariat for their hard work in making this annual event a success.

It has been four days of lively discussion, and I am gratified that we emerge from our deliberations with a broad-based consensus on ADB's continuing key role in the development of Asia and the Pacific. I believe the meeting provided an excellent opportunity to exchange views on pressing agenda items. We covered many development issues, including poverty reduction, and had lively discussions on the future direction of ADB.

The theme of this Annual Meeting Development through Empowerment has been very topical. It is engaging the attention of all the developing countries. This is also the secret key to inclusive growth. Looking to the future, it will be more important than ever to ensure that growth is economically, socially and environmentally sustainable and inclusive. ADB has the experience and the expertise to make a significant contribution to achieving this objective and making Asia and the Pacific a model for other regions of the world.

Finally, I would like to call on all of us – ADB's members and shareholders – to continue working together to support ADB. By doing so, we can all make a lasting contribution to development that improves the living standards of the Asia-Pacific's poorest citizens. I take this opportunity to welcome the new Chair of the Board of Governors, Mr. Yerbolat Dossayev, the Governor for Kazakhstan. I am sure he will guide ADB to fulfill its commitment to the region with renewed vigour. We look forward to another fruitful meeting next year in Astana.

I trust that your stay in National Capital Region of Delhi has been a happy experience while giving you the chance to hold fruitful discussions. Thank you all for being a part of this occasion and for your valuable contributions. I wish you a safe and pleasant journey back home.

Thank you.

025. India welcomes decision of the Arctic Council admitting it as an Observer State.

New Delhi, May 15, 2013.

In response to a media query on the India being admitted as an Observer State of the Arctic Council, the Official Spokesperson said:

"We welcome this consensus decision admitting India as an Observer State of the Arctic Council and affirm our commitment to contribute our proven scientific expertise, particularly in polar research capabilities, to the work of the Arctic Council and to support its objectives."

026. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the meeting of Officials of the Ministry of External Affairs with the Export promotion Councils and Business Chambers.

New Delhi, May 16, 2013.

Shri Pinak Ranjan Chakravarty, Secretary (Economic Relations) held a meeting with various Export Promotion Councils (EPCs) and Apex Business Chambers namely, FICCI, CII, ASSOCHAM and PHD Chamber of Commerce on 15.5.2013. The meeting, convened by the Ministry of External Affairs was attended by representatives of 26 Export Promotion Councils and the 4 business chambers. It follows an earlier meeting chaired by Shri Ranjan Mathai, Foreign Secretary in February

* Media reports said that India's bid for observer status in the Arctic Council succeeded along with that of five other countries - China, Italy, Japan, South Korea and Singapore - at a meeting in Kiruna, Sweden. At the level of real politik, India will be looking at the opportunities for hydrocarbon exploration offered in the Arctic circle by joining hands with either of the five countries gearing up for the purpose - the US, Canada, Norway, Russia and Denmark. When geography is considered Russia emerges as the most attractive partner. But for that to happen, India will have to take a firm political stand on the Lomonosov Ridge and the Mendeleev Ridge which Russia claims are an extension of its continental shelf. By supporting Moscow's position, India could get access to the rich deposits and also utilise the North Sea Route. Officially, India maintained that its approach will be solely scientific.

2013, wherein it had been decided that regular meetings would be held with the business chambers and other entities to identify focus areas for trade and investments.

The meeting tried to identify the possible thrust regions and products for undertaking export promotion activities. Export Promotion Councils gave recommendations and suggestions on the kind of activities which could be carried out by the Missions. Providing market intelligence was one area in which missions' assistance was found useful and this could be further strengthened. The possibility of investment promotion and business development in the two key sectors of pharmaceuticals and electronics was discussed. In this context, the main features and incentives under the National Manufacturing Policy and the National Electronics Policy were also outlined. The Export Promotion Councils identified certain areas and countries, which in their view, could be concentrated upon for market expansion activities. These included markets of Latin America, Eastern Europe, East Asia and South East Asia. The representatives of EPCs indicated some of the problems being faced by them in different sectors. The participants were assured that their suggestions would be looked into and conveyed to Indian Missions abroad, where necessary.

The Ministry of External Affairs intends to try and draw a roadmap for Indian Missions abroad in the identified core areas of export and investment so that all export promotion activities have a certain focus and are result oriented. It was also agreed that regular meetings on investments, exports and sectoral issues would be held by the Ministry so that these interactions are dynamic and lead to substantial outcomes.

027. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the election of Roberto Carvalho de Azevêdo for the post of Director General, WTO.

New Delhi, May 17, 2013.

India welcomes the election of Ambassador Roberto Carvalho de Azevêdo of the Federative Republic of Brazil for the post of Director General, WTO.

India supports a fair and rule-based multilateral trading system and has remained actively engaged in the discussions in WTO and in other multilateral forums including G-20, G-33, etc. to ensure that the interests of developing countries are protected. India hopes that the vast experience in the matters in the remit of WTO which Ambassador Azevêdo brings, would help break the impasse in the Doha Round as well as strengthen the WTO.

India and Brazil are committed to creating an enabling international order conducive to alleviation of hunger and poverty and social development. Both our countries are working closely in various multilateral forums including BRICS, IBSA, G20 and others on reform of global political and economic governance. In this context, election of the Brazilian candidate for the post of Director General WTO assumes salience.

India will work closely with the new Director General and with other developing countries for the forthcoming 9th WTO Ministerial Conference in December 2013 for a balanced package with adequate outcomes for the developing countries, Lest Developed Countries and the Small Vulnerable Economies.

028. Prime Minister's speech on the occasion of the release of the 'Report to the People'.

New Delhi, May 22, 2013.

"This Report to the People which we are going to release in a few moments is last before the next general elections. Next year, we will report to our people directly, seeking a renewed mandate. It is only appropriate that this year we take a longer term perspective and report to our people on what we have been able to achieve in these past nine years. Before I proceed further, I would like to place on record our deep sense of gratitude to Chairperson, UPA, Smt. Sonia Gandhiji whose inspiring leadership has made these achievements possible.

A detailed review of government programmes is contained in the Report and I urge all of you, especially the media, to read it fully. Let me focus today on four key achievements: one, the improved performance of the economy; two, making the growth process more inclusive; three, delivery of better governance and better delivery of welfare and development programmes; and, four, improved relations with a changing and challenging world.

Friends, we can legitimately claim, and with pride, that the UPA Government has taken our country forward on all these four fronts in the nine years. We have journeyed many miles, though we know we have more miles to travel.

Let me begin with growth. Faster growth is necessary to provide expanding opportunities to our young people and to generate revenues to support inclusiveness programmes. It is true that growth slowed down to 5 percent in 2012-13, but this was also a global phenomenon. GDP actually declined in the Eurozone. It grew very slowly in Japan and the U.S. It slowed down in China, and also other developing countries.

Last year our economy did slow down, but this slowdown is temporary. Taking a longer term view, we see that India was among the fastest growing economies of the world with an average growth rate of 8 percent in the last nine years, including the years of slower growth. The NDA Government delivered an average growth of only 5.7 percent during its six years in office.

Some of the slow down was due to external factors over which we have no control. It is also true that domestic problems had also arisen. These are being addressed. Many large investment projects have been held up because of various regulatory clearances. A Cabinet Committee on Investment has been set up to deal with this problem, and this is already yielding results.

The economic situation is turning around. Inflation is coming under control. The fiscal deficit is being brought under control. The current account deficit is high, but we will bring it down gradually.

We are confident that growth in 2013-14 will be better than 2012-13 and could exceed 6 percent. This will set the stage for trying to achieve the Twelfth Plan target of 8 percent growth for the five year period. This, I recognize, will be difficult, but it is not impossible. We have done it before, and if we receive a mandate next year, we will certainly achieve it once again.

Let me now turn to the crucial aspect of inclusiveness.

Many people who are willing to concede that we have done a good job on growth, question our performance on inclusiveness. This is an important issue since our stated objective has always been that growth must be inclusive and must benefit the poor, particularly those in rural areas. I believe the UPA government has a good record in this dimension as well.

Agricultural growth is critical for prosperity in rural areas where most of the poor live. We achieved 3.7 percent growth per year in agriculture during the Eleventh Plan compared with only 2.4 percent in the Tenth Plan. We are targeting 4 percent in the Twelfth Plan, and I am confident we can and we will do it. Our efforts at increasing food grain production are working as also our efforts to diversify our agriculture. This is the foundation which allows us to introduce Food Security legislation in Parliament

Faster agricultural growth, combined with government programmes such as MGNREGA, and the expanded pace of investment in rural infrastructure have improved real wages of agricultural labour. Agricultural wages grew at the rate of 6.8 percent per year in real terms after 2004, which is six times faster than the rate of growth between 1994 and 2004.

The impact of our policies on rural prosperity can be seen from the fact that rural per capita consumption grew at 3.4 percent per year in real terms after 2004. This is four times faster than the growth rate of 0.85 percent observed in the earlier period.

The percentage of the population below the poverty line has also fallen much faster after 2004 than in the earlier period. I know many people feel that the official poverty line was too low, and an expert group has been set up to revise it. But, the conclusion that the percentage below the poverty line has fallen faster will apply even if the line is raised, provided the same line is applied in the base period

Growth has also spread to the erstwhile backward states. The so called backward states grew much faster in the Eleventh Plan than in earlier Plans.

Inclusiveness is not just about income and consumption. It also involves access to essential services such as health and education and skill development which directly improve the level of living of the weaker sections and also enable them to participate more fully in the growth process.

The Report gives a detailed account of the UPA's efforts in these areas through programmes such as the Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan, the Mid Day Meal Scheme, the ICDS, The National Rural Health Mission, the Janani Suraksha Yojana, the Rashtriya Swasthya Bima Yojana, the Skill Development Mission among others.

I am happy to say that there is progress in all these areas to report. Primary school enrollment is near universal. Literacy has improved. The percentage of women accessing institutional deliveries has increased. Polio has been wiped out.

These are important achievements. Of course public debate often focuses less on what has been achieved and more on whatever is still to be done. Where access has been provided, quality is still an issue and we need to push hard to address these issues satisfactorily. To our critics I would only say that in many of these areas since the glass was almost empty when we started, it will take some time before it is really full. The important point to note is that it is being filled.

I must emphasise that success in this area depends crucially upon the states. I should also add that experience varies across states and there are many states where very good progress is being made.

Let me now turn to the third area I had mentioned – governance and delivery of programmes. This covers a very wide field. It includes the assurance of safety and security for every citizen, including especially women. It includes the assurance that public services will be delivered upto specified standards and that redress can be demanded when this does not happen. It includes freedom from delays and harassment which invariably breed graft and corruption and have to be got rid of. Finally, it includes elimination of corruption in the procurement and allocation decisions of the government.

These weaknesses in governance erode trust and faith in government and we cannot, as a people, afford such an outcome. The problems are not new, nor are they unique to India. Indeed consciousness about these problems, and the demand to remedy them, has risen all over the world. This is especially so in democracies. We are the world's largest democracy with a very free Press and an increasingly active civil society movement. These are our strengths. But they do put pressure for early and decisive action on all these fronts. This sometimes leads to impatience and hasty judgement.

Problems of governance have to be addressed by both the Centre and the States. The UPA Government has taken several steps which taken together are improving governance and accountability. The Right to Information Act has become a key instrument of empowerment of our people. They now access information that reveals deficiencies and puts pressure on the system to take corrective action. We have introduced the Lokpal Bill, which responds to a very wide demand for a more independent institution to probe allegations of corruption. We have introduced a Government Procurement Bill which will make the process of Government procurements and contracts much more transparent, thus reducing the opportunities for corruption. We have introduced a Land Acquisition and Rehabilitation Bill to replace an old and highly unfair colonial legislation with a new Bill which will be much fairer when enacted to those whose land is acquired.

Much is made of problems that arose with the way scarce resources such as spectrum and mining blocks were allocated in the past and there have been allegations of deliberate malfeasance. We have introduced more transparent systems for the future, i.e., auctions rather than relying on administrative allocations. The problems with past allocations are being dealt with, as they should be, under the Law of the land. Allegations of impropriety are being investigated and cases of wrong doing will be punished. But we can claim credit that the root cause of the problem, which was the perceived non-transparency in the manner of allocation, has been addressed and these problems will not arise in the future.

Improving the quality of governance in a vast nation like ours is a major challenge. Both the Centre and the States have to act to deal with this problem. The UPA government has done more in this area than any other government.

Finally, I come to the fourth area, our relations with the world. More than two decades ago I said in Parliament that the rise of India as an economic powerhouse of the world is an idea whose time had come. We have seen in these past nine years the full implication of that idea as India has engaged with the international community as the fastest growing democracy in the world.

Our improving economic performance and the talents of the Indian people have enabled us to build bridges with both developed and developing countries. We have deepened our relationship with the United States, Russia, and Europe. The initiative that we took with the US on civil nuclear agreement has opened a new chapter in India's technological development.

Our Government has taken the lead in India's active participation in the Asian community building process. India is today warmly welcomed to almost every important Asian and Asia-Pacific forum. India has increased its economic and security engagement with the Indian Ocean and the Indo-Pacific region. We have strengthened our economic and defence relations with countries of West Asia and the Middle East and of East and South-east Asia.

In our immediate neighbourhood we have been able to manage some very difficult challenges to our bilateral relationships. Relations with China are showing our ability to manage difficult issues while working together in areas of convergence. I can say with some satisfaction that we have placed the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation on firmer foundations. We have increased regional economic cooperation all around the Indian sub-continent.

What message does this experience of the past nine years convey to our young people who are about to enter their working life and have therefore high expectations?

The central message is that the UPA Government is working to realise your dream of an economically resurgent and socially just India. An India in which every citizen can expect to live a life of security and dignity with every opportunity to develop their own capacity to participate in and benefit from one of the great historical transformations that will take place over the next twenty years; the re-emergence of India as a major economic player in Asia and the World. This re-emergence will involve many transformations. It will involve transformations in the way government functions, shifts from agriculture to non agriculture, a rapid expansion in the manufacturing sector, a revolution in information and communications technology which will change both government and business processes, an expansion in the population in urban areas and a corresponding transformation in the way urban governments work and function.

It is, I submit to this august audience, an exciting transformation which will generate many strains and strains. Under the inspiring leadership of Shrimati Sonia Gandhi, the UPA Government is determined to bring about this transformation in a way in which all our people will benefit and participate.”

029. Press Release of the Ministry of Defence on the foundation stone laying ceremony of the Indian National Defence University.

New Delhi, May 23, 2014.

The Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh today in an impressive function laid the foundation stone for the Indian National Defence University (INDU) at Binola, Gurgaon in Haryana.

The event was attended among others by the Governor of Haryana Shri Jagannath Pahadia, Defence Minister Shri AK Antony, Minister of External Affairs Shri Salman Khurshid, Minister of Social Justice and Empowerment Ms. Selja Kumari, Minister of State for Defence Shri Jitendra Singh, Chief Minister of Haryana Shri Bhupinder Singh Hooda and the three Services Chiefs.

The proposed Indian National Defence University spread over more than two hundred acres of land which will be fully functional in 2018 will be set up as a fully autonomous institution to be constituted under an Act of Parliament. While the President of India would act as the Visitor, the Defence Minister will be its Chancellor.

It may be recalled that after the Kargil conflict, the government had set up a Review Committee, headed by eminent strategic expert K Subrahmanyam, which had recommended the establishment of a university to exclusively deal with defence and strategic matters. The aim of INDU would be to provide military leadership and other concerned civilian officials knowledge based higher education for management of the defence of India, and keeping them abreast with emerging security challenges through scholarly research & training. The INDU would develop and propagate higher education in Defence Studies, Defence Management, Defence Science and Technology and promote policy oriented research related to National Defence.

The think tanks of the University would provide inputs for policy formulation. The university would prepare officers for high level leadership, Staff & Policy responsibilities. National College of Defence Studies (NCDS), Indian Institute of Defence Technology (IIDT), Indian Institute of Defence Management (IIDM) and Defence Institute of Distance & Open Learning (DIDOL) would be the constituent colleges and institutions of the INDU.

Gurgaon, May 23, 2013.

“It is a great privilege for me to join you today on this auspicious occasion of laying the foundation stone for the Indian National Defence University. This is an idea that has been long in the making and I am very happy that today we are witnessing the first step towards its becoming a reality.

At the outset, I wish to thank my friend, the Hon’ble Chief Minister of Haryana for his generous support for this project and, in particular, for providing land. The proximity of this University to Delhi would facilitate the much needed close interaction between its faculty and students and defence policy makers and practitioners in the national capital. I would also like to thank my senior colleague Raksha Mantri ji, the senior leadership of the Armed Forces and the Ministry of Defence for the hard work they have done in realizing this project of national importance. I have no doubt that, when completed, this unique University will become a world-class institution for higher defence studies, in which we will be able to take justifiable pride.

India’s defence and security are a fundamental obligation of the Government to our people and an essential prerequisite for our national social and economic transformation. Our Government has attached the highest priority to these tasks. We seek to advance peace, stability, friendship and cooperation in our region and beyond, and we do so with the confidence that our Armed Forces can defend our country against any threat. This confidence is based on the many steps that the Government has taken to strengthen our nation’s defence capabilities.

In the last few years, we have added significantly to the land forces to protect our borders and inducted new equipment to increase the Army’s firepower. Our ability to service our frontiers with improved infrastructure and enhanced air mobility is considerably greater today than in the past. We have enhanced the full spectrum of capabilities of our Air Force and are equipping it to remain at the cutting edge of technology for the decades that lie ahead. Not only are our borders stronger, our seas are also more secure. The capabilities of our sea-borne forces to guard our coastline and offshore assets has seen enormous expansion in the last five years. We have placed special emphasis on strengthening the capabilities of our Navy, which is fully equipped to operate at great distances from our shores, protect our maritime interests, respond to natural disasters and provide humanitarian assistance to the need.

Over the last nine years, our deterrence capabilities have also matured and have been given concrete shape. At the same time, we are better equipped today to deal with non-conventional threats, especially in the cyber and space domains. We are implementing a national architecture for cyber security and have taken steps to create an office of a national cyber security coordinator.

Our government is conscious of the fact that adequate defence preparedness is critically dependent on sound defence acquisition policies. We have paid close attention to this and have continually reformed those policies to ensure that our Armed Forces have the best equipment. We have also been guided by the objective of making our defence acquisition transparent, smooth, efficient and less vulnerable to unethical practices. We will continue to seek the highest standards of probity in defence acquisition.

Another issue to which we have paid close attention is indigenisation of defence procurement. Our government is committed to taking further steps to stimulate the development of our domestic defence industry, including the Indian private sector. This is important not only to enhance our security, but also to spur industrial development and economic growth of our country. We must fully utilize the sophisticated management and technological capacities that are already present in our private sector, including in the defence field, not just for production but also for defence research and development.

India faces the entire spectrum of security challenges. This is inevitable as we live in a difficult neighbourhood, which holds the full range of conventional, strategic and non-traditional challenges. We are also situated at the strategic crossroads of Asia and astride one of the busiest sea lanes of the world. We inhabit a networked and digital world. Our dependence on imported energy is significant and is likely to grow. We are also living at a moment of history when the world is witnessing change on a scale and at a speed rarely seen before.

Nowhere is this change more pronounced than in Asia, where we are witnessing multiple security challenges on account of the intersection of fragile states, internal conflicts, proliferation of arms and terrorist groups. Explosive development of technology is also transforming defence capabilities. As our dependence on the cyber and outer space domains grows, new sets of challenges will emerge, which can also assume military dimensions. The nature of conflict and competition is changing at the same time when national boundaries are being blurred by deepening global integration. Therefore, while defending and securing our homeland, we also have to be prepared to preserve India's expanding international assets.

These multiple challenges notwithstanding, we must also be conscious of our strategic opportunities. India's security has never been stronger than it is today and our international relationships have never been more conducive to our national development efforts. Our engagement in our immediate neighbourhood has increased. We have deepened political, economic and strategic relations in the Asia-Pacific, Indian Ocean and West Asian regions. Our relations with all major powers have become stronger and more productive. We are also particularly participating in key global and regional foras, ranging from the Group of 20 to the East Asia Summit and the ASEAN groupings.

Our defence cooperation has grown and today we have unprecedented access to high technology, capital and partnerships. We have also sought to assume our responsibility for stability in the Indian Ocean Region. We are well positioned, therefore, to become a net provider of security in our immediate region and beyond.

Taken together, these challenges and opportunities should prompt a reorientation of our strategic thinking and a reappraisal of our higher defence organisation. It is imperative that our defence professionals remain abreast of the complex environment we face and the avenues that are available as a result of the enormous transition taking place in India. On this occasion, I am reminded of a late 19th century observation by General Sir William Francis Butler. In a biography of the British General, Charles George Gordon, Butler wrote: "The nation that will insist on drawing a broad line of demarcation between the fighting man and the thinking man is liable to find its fighting done by fools, and its thinking done by cowards."

That is where this great university comes in.

It is meant to ensure that our country, our government and our armed forces benefit from the best military advice that is available. It is meant to provide an avenue for our soldiers to think beyond the physical arts of war and for our thinkers and policymakers to understand the complexities of war and conflict. It is also meant to provide our defence professionals with a deep understanding of the interplay between all attributes of national power. Those who pass through the portals of this university will need to track regional and global trends, new and emerging technologies and developments in defence capabilities and strategies. They will also need to map the contours of future conflicts and understand the relationship between defence and finance, between external and internal security and between defence and diplomacy. Only then would they be able to fulfil the vision of the late Dr. K. Subrahmanyam who, in proposing the establishment of the National Defence University, had highlighted the need to educate and adequately prepare national security leaders to enable them to look at security challenges holistically and frame policies based on informed research.

Our expectations from this institution, therefore, are high. I am equally confident, that they will be met fully. I look forward to the Indian National Defence University emerging as an excellent platform to promote scholarship of a high order and train and equip future generations of leaders to meet India's defence needs and fulfil our international responsibilities. The University, I hope, will set the highest standards of professionalism, creativity and debate. I am sure that it will also foster a climate of closer interaction between defence and civilian leaders. Once again, it gives me great pride to be here on this auspicious occasion and I look forward to this campus coming up and becoming a great centre of defence studies in the quickest possible time.”

031. Prime Minister’s address at the Chief Ministers’ Conference on Internal Security’.

“I welcome all Chief Ministers and other distinguished participants from States to this very important annual conference on internal security.

We are meeting today in the aftermath of the brutal and inhuman attack by Left Wing Extremists on Congress leaders and workers and their security personnel in Chhatisgarh a few days back. Such violence has no place in our democracy. The Centre and States need to join hands to ensure that such events do not recur. I have noted from the agenda papers that there is a separate session on Left Wing Extremism in this conference and I would urge you to make good use of this opportunity to come up with some concrete measures to deal with the very grave threat of Naxalism.

I must point out here that the challenge of Naxalism has received our serious attention for quite some time now. We have adopted a two-pronged strategy to deal with the challenge: conducting proactive and sustained operations against Maoist extremists; and, addressing development and governance issues in Left Wing Extremism affected areas. A number of measures have been taken as part of this two-track strategy. These include strengthening the security apparatus, improving road connectivity in 34 most Left Wing Extremist affected districts, relaxation of norms of various development schemes in the affected areas, and the Integrated Action Plan for 82 selected tribal and backward districts.

We have achieved some successes too. In the last couple of years there has been a substantial reduction in the number of incidents and deaths caused by Left Wing Extremist groups and an increase in the number of Naxalite surrenders. But, major violent attacks by Naxalites like the recent one in Chhattisgarh are setbacks that have occurred periodically. The Centre and States need to work together to eliminate such large-scale attacks.

The Central Government on its part has already started taking steps in this regard. The Cabinet Secretary, the Home Secretary and my office have been involved in an exercise that would lead to a further strengthening of our defensive and offensive capabilities against Left Wing Extremists. I hope that the State Governments will cooperate fully with us and add to the effectiveness of these efforts.

I must also emphasize here that the two-pronged strategy that we have followed so far needs to be strengthened and pursued with rigour. Even as we intensify our efforts to strengthen the security and intelligence apparatus in areas affected by Maoist violence, we should be able to ensure that people residing in Left Wing Extremist affected areas are able to live in an environment of peace and security and derive full benefits of our development efforts.

To build a broader national consensus on the strategy to tackle the Naxalite challenge, Government has convened a meeting of all political parties on the 10th of this month.

The year 2012 saw a significant improvement in the security situation in Jammu and Kashmir. Our strategy to prevent cross-border infiltration by militants and our intelligence based counter-terrorism operations in Jammu and Kashmir have resulted in a decline in the level of terrorist violence by about one-third in 2012 as compared to 2011. In fact, terrorist violence parameters in 2012 have been the lowest since the upsurge in terrorist activities two decades ago. The record inflow of tourists and pilgrims during 2012 also points to an improved security situation in the State.

The implementation of several infrastructure projects in Jammu and Kashmir is progressing well. The Himayat and Udaan schemes which aim at providing additional gainful employment to the youth have also achieved a fair measure of success. These are all welcome developments.

The security situation in the North East continues to be complex, with insurgency, extortion and agitations being the main disruptive elements in the hands of the insurgents. However, there has been considerable progress in dialogue with several insurgent and ethnic separatist groups in the North-Eastern region. A Memorandum of Understanding has been signed with both factions of Dima Halam Daogah of Dima Hasao in Assam. Three Meitei insurgent groups have signed a Memorandum of Understanding in February 2013. Talks with the National Socialist Council of Nagaland are continuing.

The Gorkhaland Territorial Administration (GTA) has been set up as an autonomous body in August 2012 to administer the Gorkhaland region and ensure its all-round development. The Centre is committed to providing financial assistance of Rs 200 crore per annum for three years for projects aimed at developing the socio-economic infrastructure in the GTA areas.

We are committed to undertaking and bringing to a satisfactory conclusion dialogue with all groups and organizations which are willing to give up violence to seek solutions within the framework of our Constitution. We are equally firm in our determination to continue assisting the States of the North-East to enhance their law and order enforcement capabilities, so that the people of the North-East.

I also wish to take today's opportunity to draw your attention to two other issues relating to our internal security that require special attention. The first is the increase in number and intensity of incidents of communal and sectarian violence during 2012 as compared to the previous year. I am sure that all of us agree that maintenance of communal harmony in our country is critical for our continued growth and prosperity. It is absolutely imperative that we deal very firmly with communal forces of all types. Simultaneously, we also need to recognize and address the special needs of minorities and weaker sections of our society, particularly Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes.

The second issue which requires our collective action is that of crimes against women and children. We have recently enacted several laws providing stringent punishment for such crimes and more sensitive treatment of victims during investigation and trial. These include the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013; The Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Act, 2013 and the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012.

We also need to put in place institutional mechanisms to ensure the safety and security of women and children, particularly in the urban context. Such mechanisms include sensitization of police personnel, particularly at levels with which the victim comes into contact, setting up dedicated help-lines, measures for safety at the work place, and so on. I would urge all of you to explore how these outcomes can be best achieved.

Capacity building and modernization of State Police Forces are absolutely essential for meeting the emerging challenges to internal security which range from terrorism to urban policing. The Centre remains committed to supporting States in this regard. The scheme for modernization of State Police Forces has been extended for a further period of five years with a total outlay of about Rs. 12,000 crore. An amount of Rs. 433 crore has been additionally provided for Mega City Policing in the six cities of Kolkata, Mumbai, Chennai, Bengaluru, Ahmedabad and Hyderabad.

We are also committed to improving border management and coastal security. Greater focus and priority than before is being given to the work of fencing and construction of additional Border Outposts along the India-Bangladesh border, the construction and up-gradation of roads along the India-China, India-Nepal and India-Bhutan borders as well as the development of integrated check posts on the India-Pakistan and India-Nepal borders. We are also continuing implementation of the Border Area Development Programme and of Phase II of the Coastal Security Scheme.

The need for coordinated effort by Central and State agencies to deal with terrorism and other security challenges, irrespective of whether they are internal or external in origin, has been emphasized in all earlier conferences of Chief Ministers on internal security. In view of the criticality of this requirement, I would urge you once more to explore how we can achieve even better coordination between the Centre and States.

I also believe that time has now come to view the challenges of terrorism, communal violence and Left Wing Extremism in a holistic manner. I think each one of us needs to be completely objective in our approach to these issues, acting in national interest rising above narrow political and ideological divides. I would appeal to all political parties and all sections of society to work together to find effective ways and means of meeting these grave challenges.

Let me end by wishing this conference all success. I look forward to receiving your valuable suggestions on how to further strengthen the internal security of our country.

032. Speech by Foreign Secretary Ranjan Mathai at the International Students' Convocation Ceremony at Symbiosis Institute.

Pune, June 8, 2013.

Dr. S. B. Majumdar, Chancellor

Members of the Faculty,

Your Excellencies, Ambassadors and members of the diplomatic corps,

Young Ladies and Gentlemen,

1. I am honoured and grateful for this opportunity to speak at the convocation. 41 years ago – I graduated from Fergusson College and 39 years from the University in this great city. So it is good to be back.
2. Addresses at convocations or conventions have sometimes been occasions for making policy statements. Think of Marshall's address to Harvard in 1947; this launched the "Marshall Plan". Or think of Pandit Nehru's addresses at Allahabad, Calcutta and Aligarh Universities. In a famous 1948 address at the last, Panditji made that well remembered remark that "I am proud of India not only because of her ancient magnificent heritage, but also because of her remarkable capacity to add to it by keeping the doors and windows of her mind and spirit open to fresh and invigorating winds from distant countries”.

3. And that is what you do at Symbiosis – You are now one of the windows through which fresh winds blow in and through which our knowledge flows outward. This is a classic blend of Indian roots with branches leading out to friends and partners in Asia, Africa and hopefully Latin America. My heartiest felicitations to the graduating class of students of this wonderful international community! Today marks the culmination of the hard work that you have put in to acquire specialized knowledge and skills, but more importantly heralds a new beginning where this knowledge will be put to use. Use it well not only for your benefit but also for the larger good of mankind wherever you are. The world beckons you and I am confident that each one of you will contribute to make it a better place.
4. Symbiosis started around the time I left Pune to start my career which took me to 9 countries abroad on assignments and many more on travels. I am happy to hear that the internationalist perspective that Dr. Majumdar gave to this institution from its inception is indeed alive and well in all of you.
5. We live in a globalized world. It is perhaps a reflection of this that you are here in India for higher studies. Increasing numbers of students are moving out of their countries for studies. UNESCO estimates that there will be over 7 million international students globally by 2020. Just think about that number - 7 million young people on the move! – This will mean that students will form one of the largest migrant groups worldwide. You will create a new wave of globalization and help shape international discourse. I compliment Symbiosis for being at the crest of this wave.
6. In doing this Symbiosis lives up to India's tradition of providing vital centres of learning for the world. The famous Nalanda University which flourished from 5th to 12th century AD attracted great scholars from distant lands. An international initiative to recreate the university at Nalanda is now underway. We plan to develop it into a high standard, world class institution. Similarly, the South-Asian University has been established in New Delhi for students from SAARC (South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation) countries. It gives us some gratification to note that India which has been a major source of outgoing students (is 2nd after China) is now attracting increasing number of students from abroad. The Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) through the ICCR has been trying to make studying in India a friendly, positive and productive experience for foreign students. I am aware also that we have much more to do to make this a reality. We have to attend to bureaucratic rules and pay more attention to your living conditions though I might say that your living conditions here are much better than mine were!

7. As the Foreign Secretary I am usually expected to speak on foreign affairs with information and analyses on Indian foreign and security policies, whether with regard to our priority areas of the neighbourhood or in the larger world. But I would like to connect you to our foreign policy by saying that what we in the foreign policy apparatus seek to do is linked to national growth and development of India. The first imperative in that context is a stable, prosperous, democratic and peaceful neighbourhood. As we have finally got on to a high growth trajectory, we have built networks of inter-connectivity and trade and investment so that benefits of development are shared by the people of the sub-continent and beyond and they have a stake in our growth. Equally important are cultural and educational exchanges which lead to mutual understanding. We have contributed to development assistance and capacity building programmes in our neighbouring countries and in Africa, South East Asia and small island States. Today almost half of the entire budget of MEA is dedicated to international assistance. It is said that foreign policy cannot be based on altruism. Obviously, we are concerned with national security, assisting national defence, seeking allies in the fight against terrorism, building trade and investment links, maximising our gains from international commerce, assisting the search for resources, for technology, and for finance, and assuring India and its people and its culture a place in the world. This means we have to be engaged with the power centres of the world, a priority as high as our neighbours, and also keep focus on other critical areas.

8. Beyond our immediate neighbours we are reviving the civilizational contacts with South-East Asia. In the early 90s, Government launched a 'Look East Policy' to strengthen these civilizational bonds by enhancing our political, economic and cultural cooperation with the region. Our 'Look East Policy' has been successful and has helped us develop strong ties with the people and countries of the region. It has been expanded to countries in East Asia and the Asia-Pacific. Last year, to mark the 20th anniversary of our dialogue partnership with ASEAN and 10th anniversary of our interactions at the highest level, the Government organized a Commemorative Summit in New Delhi during which our relationship with ASEAN was raised to a strategic partnership. We would see further deepening of our bonds across all areas including our political dialogue, trade and commerce, scientific and cultural area, and greater interaction amongst our peoples - professionals, academia, students and businesses.
9. On the other flank of India are West Asia, Iran, Central Asia and the Arab world which have also been traditional neighbours. Today it is the Gulf region which has acquired particular salience as over 6 million expatriate Indians live there, contributing to the economy of the area and sending back valuable remittances. The region is also the source of 70% of our oil and a big chunk of our global trade. We work closely with governments of all countries of the region and share their desire for stability and prosperity. We also have regular interactions with the overseas Indian community from all parts of the world, Guyana and Suriname to South Africa to Mauritius to Singapore and on to Fiji through Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas gatherings which provides Government an opportunity to hear of their requirements and aspirations. India has historically had close ties with countries of Africa and Asia and we are also reaching out to Latin America. We have contributed substantially to capacity building in African countries, a process which was re-invigorated through the launch of Africa-India Forum Summit in 2008 in New Delhi. I am happy that the Vice President of India addressed the Commemorative Summit of the OAU in Addis Ababa last month. A 'Connect Central Asia Policy' was launched recently to further promote relations with Central Asian countries, an integral part of which is greater people-to-people exchange.

10. I hope I have been able to give you some sense of the interdependence and mobility in an increasingly shrinking and globalised world – a world which would be your arena when you step out to work. We have learnt through experience that events anywhere in the world directly affect Indians if not all of India. A lot of you might work for your country or the companies there or perhaps pursue independent professions. Either way, in the world of today, you would have to deal with factors which are external to your country. Similarly, the likelihood of your travelling and staying in different parts of the world in your professional capacity is a lot more today than it was in the past. Hence you will get involved with foreign affairs in your own countries. This cannot be the domain of a few bureaucrats. It is in every country a national imperative in which you are all participants.
11. Now in dealing with this reality - you would recognize that we have to be engaged at simplest level with the fact that people need to travel. As I said earlier, there are growing numbers of Indians including professionals, students and tourists travelling out of the country. We have expanded our passport services by establishing a large number of Passport Seva Kendras for issuance of passports to facilitate this process. There have been some teething troubles but the procedure is being streamlined, as we go along. Similarly, our effort has been to provide better facilities for international students coming to India under programmes such as ICCR scholarships, Colombo Plan schemes, etc.
12. Beyond travel arrangements, we in MEA have continued outreach through our Public Diplomacy, Press interactions, and policy planning. We believe – perhaps more than any other wing of the Government – in explaining what we do, building bridges to the academic communities, and creating more stakeholders for the great challenge of managing India's relationship with the wider world.

13. It is this function that all of you would get involved with. So let me share a general message with the students whether from India or friends from abroad.
14. We are now entering an era when for the first time in the last four centuries we are shaping not only our own political destinies but carving out economic, technological, cultural and civilisational space for ourselves in the world. Former President A.P.J. Kalam spoke of Vision 2020 targeting that year for India's achievement of middle income status and ending poverty as we know it. This required technological upgradation in all arenas of activity. The 2020 Vision came out long before the BRICS report which projects India as the third largest economy in the world in the coming decades. This has begun to be regarded as something inevitable. Many thought that the pursuit of technology and what Keynes called the magic of compound interest rates would help us achieve uninterrupted growth. Clearly this was a bit optimistic. Clearly our capacity to make progress and shift the balance of power in the world cannot be doubted any longer. If current trends can be maintained then in 10 years time we should be able to drastically reduce poverty in India and become a middle income nation. The same is true in 20 years for Africa. And then we will see the real power shift which the Chancellor spoke about. I am not sure it will be limited to a few countries. Power is shifting not only to East but to the South as a whole. But just as clearly – this process is not going to be smooth or easy. No one should assume that our progress will be welcomed by the current holders of power and influence. That is why access to finance, technology and information networks is becoming more difficult and political restrictions remain a gamble. Our ability to change the world will be still constrained by vested interests, and the entrenched global order. If we are to bring about change, we must go back to the basics i.e. self-reliance and a willingness to help our natural partners. Recall what Nehru said to the students at the University of Lucknow “you are a generation condemned to hard labour”. This message was for my father’s generation. We had it somewhat easier, but you, just when you are on the cusp of change, will find yourselves facing a new set of challenges. And to quote Nehru “This is a time when work is required, when labour is required, peace is required, cooperative effort is required, when all the concentrated energies that the nation possesses are required to be put to great task of the nation”.

15. I do believe Nehru meant hard work – when he referred to labour – and this can be in any field, IT, biotech, mass media, energy, space technology, scientific agriculture or any other sector. And the “task of the nation” will increasingly be defined not by political leaders or bureaucrats but in the minds of people like you. You have to remain united whatever the profession you are in, because the setting of the agenda for the future will come within the domain of young people empowered by sharing of ideas and information, by technology, and by the liberation of the mind. But Nehru’s message is valid in that we still have to make a supreme effort to lift our societies and our nations over the last few hurdles before we enter into a new era. And I hope the introduction to modern ideas, technology and practices – you have gained at Symbiosis will give you the ability to carry out these tasks in your own countries. I also hope your education here will give you the firm footing you need as you make your way in life.
16. At the end of the day you do need a firm foundation. Because as the US Federal Reserve Chairman, Bernanke told the students at Princeton “Life is amazingly unpredictable. Any 22 year old who thinks he or she knows where they will be in 10 years much less in 30, is simply lacking in imagination. Don’t be afraid to let the drama play out”.
17. Your experience in India and at this University is part of the drama. I trust you have found your stay here beneficial and had the opportunity to travel around and experience the diversity and cultural richness of our country. Wherever you are and whatever you might do, for us you will always be friends of India. It is quite possible that your profession will bring you back to India. If not, do take time off and visit and explore the country more. I wish you all the best for your future life.

18. Since Bernanke spoke of drama, and the President of the Students Council spoke of fledglings leaving the nest. I will finally recall the words of a song I learnt when I was passing through the portals of University in this wonderful city 40 years ago. Because 40 years is a flash in time; when you reach my age – you will look back on today – and remember the time when you were young as if it were just yesterday. And you must stay young in your thinking and ideas. And the song says “May you stay forever young!”

Thank you very much

- 033. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the travel of External Affairs Minister to Norway and some other miscellaneous questions.

New Delhi, June 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. Since we had not met for quite some time in this format I thought it would be useful to have our usual interaction. As usual, I will begin with an announcement that I have to make following which you are free to ask me questions on that first and subsequently on anything else that you would like.

(For Briefing on EAM Visit to Norway please see Document No. 530).

Q: This is with regard to reports that two Indian aircraft violated the Pakistan airspace. Can we have any details if Pakistan has complained to India about it? What was the real picture?

Official Spokesperson: I do not know what the picture is. As far as I am involved, these are only related at the diplomatic level. As of now as I speak to you, I just rechecked, we have not heard any information on what you are saying at the diplomatic level.

Q: Nepal's former Prime Minister is here. He has met Prime Minister and External Affairs Minister also. Can you throw some light on the conversation that has gone on?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have been through this before. Please do not expect me to be a fly on the wall. Having said that I can certainly say that this is part of our engagement with all stakeholders in Nepal. As you are aware, there have been other leaders of other political parties from Nepal visiting India. Our idea is to understand from them if there is anything that we in India could do to assist. As far as we are concerned, we would be ready to help Nepal at a pace and in the way the Nepalese Government would want. Therefore, it is part of our engagement with different segments of Nepalese society on this. He has had very constructive discussions, as did the previous visitors to India.

Q: Special Envoy of Italian Government de Mistura is in town. Is there any development?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, the Special Envoy of the Italian Government Mr. Staffan de Mistura reached Delhi yesterday. And in preparation for your presence here today I did ask about this. The External Affairs Minister, prior to his departure late last night, did meet Mr. de Mistura, and they had a discussion. Of course, as you are aware, this discussion was related to the desire of the Italian Government to have a speedy trial for the two marines. And the External Affairs Minister was apprised of the view of the Italian Government on this since their last meeting. And he has explained the situation based on his understanding of where the judicial process is.

Q: Saudi Arabia has informed all foreign countries that they are going to decrease 20 per cent Haj quota this year. How is India going to take up this issue with Saudi Arabia?

Official Spokesperson: As you are aware, we have a regular dialogue with Saudi Arabia on Haj matters. This is an appropriate situation that will be discussed during that dialogue. I do not know the details of what you are mentioning. But it has always been our view that there is a growth in terms of number of Indians wanting to undertake the Hajj pilgrimage, and the Saudi authorities have generally been very accommodating of our needs. Even when the last quota was fixed, we had then indicated that we would require a slightly larger number and the Saudi authorities had indicated that at the end of their consultations with everybody they will address this issue because it depends on their understanding of what would be the total number of pilgrims who would be coming. So, at this stage, we will only be able to take it up through the mechanism that I have suggested. But I will have a look whether this has an impact on Indian pilgrims that we have agreed to as of now.

Q: There were reports of some Indians being detained in Kuwait. Can we have the status of that? Have they been released or not?

Official Spokesperson: I think you have been following that case previously. Let me try and explain to you the situation in Kuwait. We have currently approximately 700,000 Indian nationals who are resident in Kuwait. These are in various categories. Since the beginning of this year the Kuwaiti Government has announced a policy whereby they would try and reduce the number of expatriates in general over a ten-year period.

As part of that approach they have initially focused on those who do not have valid visas and also those who have come on a certain type of visa, that is domestic worker's visa, and are working in other areas. In Kuwait there are broadly two types of visas – one for working as domestic help and the other for working in other organizations. Now, there is a feeling that there may be large number of expatriates, Indians included, who may be coming to Kuwait in one category and perhaps working in another category. And those are the ones who have been targeted.

My understanding is that we have taken it up with Kuwait both in New Delhi and in Kuwait that if this is their policy it is best to communicate this and provide a timeframe for everybody who is not in compliance with this to either sort their status out or to return to their home countries. Now this is for all expatriates; it is not targeted towards Indians alone. Of course Indians are amongst the largest number of expatriates in Kuwait - as I said approximately 700,000 - and so there are likely to be a number of Indians. At this stage the number is fairly small.

My understanding is that from the beginning of the year till now we have issued less than 1000 Emergency Certificates for Indians wanting to return to India. Of these, not all have returned because by the time some of them desired to return they were able to regularize their status. That is where we are. The numbers are small but this is an issue. Our Embassy has been proactively following this up.

Now the Kuwaiti Government has decided that they would pay for the air ticket for those who are to return. But they are being only paid for the air ticket up to the nearest destination, which is Mumbai. So, as part of a welfare measure, the Embassy is working with the local authorities and the excess amount - if somebody would travel from say Mumbai to Delhi or to Rajasthan – of airfare is being paid through the Embassy through the Indian Workers Welfare Fund. In addition, our labour officials are regularly going to the Deportation Centres to try and assist any Indian nationals who may have a willingness to change over their papers rather than go back. That is where we are.

These are sporadic occasions when there are some raids or something in certain areas where there are large number of expatriates including Indians who may be involved and we respond to that.

Q: This is regarding a BCIM meeting held at Kunming. There is a report in The Hindu that India was not represented at that meeting. Is there any specific reason for that? The meeting was held just after Premier Li's visit where a Joint Statement was issued.

Official Spokesperson: I must confess I have no readout on that. This is the first time I am hearing about it. I will have a look and we will provide a response since you have raised that question. Could you tell me the dates when it was held?

Q: I think it was in the last week.

Question:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I think what you are saying is what she is referring to. It is the Shangri-La Dialogue rather than a BCIM meeting that you are referring to. There are two separate issues in this perhaps.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I think all of you need to get your facts right as to whether it is a trade expo, whether it is a Shangri-La Dialogue or it is a BCIM meeting.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I will try and find out factual information on this and we will try and respond to it.

Q: On July 3, the three-month grace period is expiring in Saudi Arabia for those affected by Nitaqat. Where do the Indians expatriate stand, how many are affected, how many would be coming back, and what were the talks? Our EAM went there and other Ministers also went there. Where do we stand?

Official Spokesperson: Today is Gulf session I think! But I think you have a valid question. Let me try and put out what we have.

As you perhaps are aware, there are a total of 2.8 million Indians in Saudi Arabia. Since this issue of the possibility of expatriates who are not in compliance with their visa status being returned to India arose earlier this year, we have followed a rather proactive approach. We have tried to tackle it at various levels. One is at the political level where we had our Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs Mr. Vayalar Ravi visit along with a delegation of the Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. E. Ahamed, and Advisor to the Prime Minister Mr. T.K.A. Nair. They went there and had detailed discussions with the Labour Ministry.

The idea was that we acknowledge that it is the sovereign right of a country to have a policy that they determine appropriate for residency in their country. However, what we felt was that since there was a change from the policy which existed so far, the idea was to provide time and to treat those who are adversely impacted by that policy, with a degree of humaneness and dignity. That was the focus of our political contacts. This was reinforced when the External Affairs Minister went to Saudi Arabia. He did meet his counterpart Prince Saud al-Faisal. He also met the Crown Prince of Saudi Arabia as well as several senior Saudi officials. In each of those engagements it was emphasized that this was not something that was targeted towards Indians; they did have lots of praise for the Indian community there; there was an acknowledgement that Indians were a preferred community as far as Saudi Arabia was concerned; there was no attempt at targeting one or the other community, but to follow a policy which would ensure that those who were irregularly there would have to leave the country.

Since then, the second level at which we have been functioning is at the grassroots level where our Embassy and our Consulate are taking a very proactive view. While we have only an Embassy in Riyadh and a Consulate in Jeddah, the Ambassador did open up a special office of a temporary nature in Dammam which is in the Eastern Province which is about 400 km away from Riyadh. We have a regular Officer stationed there to assist all Indian nationals.

In addition, there are several Indian community schools which are spread out all over Saudi Arabia. These are at distances varying from 600 km to more than a 1000 km from Riyadh or Jeddah. Each of these schools have their non-teaching staff assisting Indian nationals by collecting their applications for either change of their status or for Emergency Certificates. In this process, over the last few months I understand approximately 72,000 applications have been received. These applications are, as I said, either for grant of Emergency Certificates or their willingness to find new jobs and to move on to perhaps other employers.

The Embassy has been able to identify 150 Saudi employers who are willing to take Indian employees. These are in various categories. The names of these employers have been displayed and communicated to all these Centres where we are collecting information about people wanting to go back. So, these 70,000 people who applied to either change their status or to return to India have been informed of what opportunities are available for them to find alternative employment.

We have also set up a 24x7 help desk where anytime anybody can phone and seek information not only in English and Hindi but in several Indian languages. A third way that we have been proactive is that approximately 600 volunteers have volunteered to provide assistance to the Indian community. These volunteers with Embassy officials are stationed on 24x7 basis at the Deportation Centres in Riyadh and in the Eastern Province in Dammam as well as at the airports. So, any Indian wishing to travel back to India having problems at the airport is being assisted.

At this stage we do not know the total number of people who may return because of this. The last time when we had this sort of a situation of an amnesty where people were asked to return, we had provided about 30,000 Emergency Certificates. However, it is estimated that only about 3,000 people came back. So, at this stage I cannot tell you exact numbers of people who may want to come back. But I can only give you an understanding of how many have applied, what is the past practice, and what the situation is.

We are also in touch with the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs and through them with various State Governments to try and ensure if there can be some assistance of facilitation at this end. That is because if there are people in significant numbers coming from various States, it devolves on those States to provide opportunities for settlement of those people. So, we are in touch with the various State Governments involved in this venture through the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs.

Also with the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs, Air India, and the State Governments we have shared the data bases and list of people who have applied for the Emergency Certificates so that they are aware of the dimensions of this issue and should there be requirement for additional flights or for assistance at the airports or in the places where they stay, they are all well aware.

I would like to just try and sum up by saying that we have done our best, we have worked proactively, and we hope that you have not seen this crisis burgeon into a major issue simply because the Embassy and the Ministry of External Affairs along with other Ministries is trying to do our best to ameliorate what is a difficult situation that has arisen there.

Q: There was another ceasefire violation in the Poonch District along the LoC this morning. This makes it the second in the last two weeks. Are we taking it up diplomatically?

Official Spokesperson: Between India and Pakistan there are several avenues for responding to such issues. You referred to this as the second instance. As with the first, at this stage there has not been a diplomatic requirement because this is assessed by the authorities in the field of what is the best way that they feel this can be addressed. So, a diplomatic redressal or response is one area but there are other mechanisms which exist. Perhaps other mechanisms are being used, and I would not be the right person to respond to those other mechanisms because they are handled separately. There has not been a need that has been raised by those people who are in authority there to take this up at the diplomatic level.

Q: Just a follow up to the Italian question. This is the fifth meeting in three months. Do you think it is normal? Can you elaborate a little bit more? I know that the desire for a speedy trial was reiterated. But what kind of diplomacy?

Official Spokesperson: Maria, you have lived in India long enough to understand that the judicial process has its own speed. It has its own manner of proceeding. As you are aware, ultimately the outcome will be determined in a case which is sui generis by the judicial process. We acknowledge that this is a case which has not happened previously and it is a case which was new both to India and to Italy. As two friendly countries we can only work together and try and see in asui generis case which has no precedent we try and work our systems in a manner which is acceptable to both, and that is what we are doing. The executive in India has a limited role in terms of judicial outcomes except to make the case in front of the judiciary. We are trying to do that; we are trying to do this as quickly as possible. Both India and Italy, have repeated this commitment that the idea is to ensure that this matter is expeditiously resolved because we do not want this to be a major issue between two countries which enjoy otherwise excellent relations.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: If you want to ask whether we are concerned by media disclosures suggesting that data relating to private communications of Indian citizens may have been harvested, my answer to you is, yes we are concerned and surprised about it. Between India and the US we have a Cyber Security Dialogue, and it is coordinated by the National Security Councils on both the sides. We feel that this is the appropriate forum to discuss such issues. We intend to seek information and details during consultations between interlocutors from both sides on this matter in that appropriate forum.

If you ask that if it is discovered that Indian laws relating to privacy of information have been violated what would be the view of the Indian Government, obviously we would find it unacceptable. If Indian laws relating to privacy of information of ordinary Indian citizens have been violated, surely we would find it unacceptable. I hope broadly I have tried to respond to you on where we stand.

Of course, this is an evolving situation. Every day we find new issues coming up. Rather than jump to conclusions at this stage, we will take it as it evolves and have a better understanding and a clearer paradigm of how to tackle this issue once the broader parameters of this in its entirety are available for us.

Thank you very much

Following the interaction the following additional information was obtained regarding Saudi Arabia and provided.

“We have been informed by the Saudi government about the decision to reduce 20% pilgrims from overseas. Given the fact that the processes for Haj pilgrimage have already been initiated in India, we have requested the Saudi authorities both in Delhi and in Riyadh to reconsider their decision taking into account the advanced stage of preparations. We are awaiting a response from them”

034. Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson on some Miscellaneous matters.

Q: Mr. Julian Assange in his interview made a couple of allegations against the Government of India one of which is that you did not respond to his request for asylum. The other one was he accused the Government of India of almost being ungrateful in the context of a purported request from Edward Snowden for asylum. The same report quoted the Official Spokesperson or rather an External Affairs Ministry official saying that there were no records of such a request. Would you clarify the position?

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): I am grateful to you for having asked that question. Let me reiterate what I had said then. We have not received, are not aware of any request for asylum either from Mr. Julian Assange or from Mr. Snowden. I hope that sets at rest every bit of speculation on this. We have not received any request for asylum. I think the newspaper that you quoted was talking of a letter that was written, and delivered. There is a difference between a letter and a request for asylum. I do not know the contents of that letter, but I can be certain there has not been any request for asylum on this matter. I hope this sets that at rest once and for all.

Q: Is there any response from Saudi Arabia on the Haj delegation? Connected with that, if you are reducing the 20 per cent, will it be on the private tour operators or from the Haj panel?

Official Spokesperson: The Saudi Government has indicated that they have as a norm decided, given that there is an expansion being undertaken in the holy cities they do not have the capacity to absorb so many pilgrims for the forthcoming Haj. Therefore, they decided, as per our understanding, that 50 per cent domestic pilgrims will be reduced and 20 per cent from all over the globe. This is a norm that they have set for everyone, and they have requested us to abide by that norm. We have received this response.

As you are aware, for the Haj there is a Haj Conference which deliberates all aspects of India's Haj policy. This consists of representatives of all State Haj Committees as well as the Central Haj Committee and the Government of India. This conference is to be held in the last week of this month. Based on consultations and discussions and views expressed at that conference, the Government of India will then take a view on how to go about in view of the new circumstances that have arisen there after the signing of the Haj Agreement.

Q: ... (Inaudible) ...

Official Spokesperson: I am not aware. I think there are officials who are specifically charged to handle this. I am not aware of this.

Q: The Taliban has reportedly opened their office in Doha and there are reports. I know Mr. Doraiswami was here and he did say that Afghanistan is on the table for talks. But my specific question relates to the US opening talks with Taliban and groups like the Haqqani. That is a sensitive issue for us because we blame the Haqqanis for the bomb attack on the Indian Embassy in Kabul. So, how are we looking at this?

Official Spokesperson: We have followed developments relating to the opening of an office of the Taliban in Qatar and statements made by the representatives of that office and others. These statements reflect some confusion about the name of the Qatar office, its structure, its political and legal status, and its objectives. We have also seen the reaction of the Government of Afghanistan to these developments.

Our position is clear. Government of India has always called for a broad-based Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-controlled reconciliation process, within the framework of the Afghan Constitution and the internationally accepted red lines. Such a process would necessarily recognise the centrality of the Government of Afghanistan in the process, and involve all sections of the Afghan society, as also the insurgent groups, including the Taliban, who wish to join the mainstream.

The reconciliation process should not seek to create equivalence between an internationally recognised Government of Afghanistan and insurgent groups, confer legitimacy to insurgent groups or convey the impression of two competing state authorities for Afghanistan, which could undermine the legitimate Afghan State, Afghan Government and the political, social and economic progress witnessed in Afghanistan over the past decade, to which the international community itself has contributed in great measure.

India remains committed to supporting the Government and the people of Afghanistan, in accordance with the India-Afghanistan Strategic Partnership Agreement, and a reconciliation process that has the support of the Government and the people of Afghanistan.

These are the broad parameters under which we will engage on this matter.

Thank you very much

035. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister at the Passport Seva Divas and Passport Officers 'Conference – 2013'

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

Colleagues from the Ministry,

Passport Officers,

Distinguished invitees,

Friends from the Media,

Ladies and Gentlemen

I extend a very warm welcome to all of you. I would have been here in the morning itself but for some more pressing engagements which could not be rescheduled. Nevertheless, I am sure that you would have had some fruitful discussions in the forenoon.

I am extremely pleased to be in your midst to inaugurate the Passport Officers' Conference 2013. I also feel privileged to declare 24th June as 'Passport Seva Divas' to mark the notification of Passports Act, 1967 on this day. As we all know, this Act provides a sound legal framework for rules and regulations governing issuance of passports and other travel documents and it is befitting that we observe this historic day every year as Passport Seva Divas in order to create public awareness about the value of Passport services in the country. On this occasion, I extend my heartfelt greetings to all officials engaged in Passport work at Passport Offices, Passport Seva Kendras and Indian Missions/Posts abroad.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Since the establishment of first five Regional Passport Offices in 1955 and the formation of the Central Passport Organization (CPO) in 1959, passport issuance has traversed a long journey. As I understand, in the 1950's, we were issuing on an average 30,000 Passports per year. These days, we issue more than 30,000 Passports in a single day! Meeting this ever increasing demand for a travel document has been a major challenge for the Ministry. Over the years, expanding the network of Passport Offices, their computerization, machine-readable passports in place of hand-written ones and decentralization of passport services, are but a few of the landmarks in passport issuance. More recently, the Passport Seva Project, aimed at comprehensive overhaul of passport delivery system, has been successfully implemented across the country with the operationalisation of 77 Passport Seva Kendras (PSKs) acting as extended arms of 37 Passport Offices. The setting up of PSKs is part of the Government's firm commitment to provide timely delivery of passport services to our fellow citizens. I take this opportunity to re-affirm the citizen-centric role of Passport Offices, by adopting measures which facilitate speedier and courteous service, greater convenience and comfort to the public at large.

I am happy that with joint efforts of the Ministry and the Service Provider – the Tata Consultancy Services, the PSP was rolled-out in a very short time. I would like to express my deep appreciation to all the members of the CPV Division, Central Passport Organization the TCS team for their earnest efforts in speedy implementation of this high impact e-governance Project. That the Computer Society of India adjudged PSP as the most significant e-Governance initiative of the Government undertaken during 2011-12 is an ample recognition of Ministry's successful efforts in application of ICT for good governance. We would also be working towards obtaining ISO Certification of the Project.

Of particular significance are measures taken by the Ministry in the area of strengthening Public Grievance Redressal, making the Passport Portal more user-friendly, improving physical infrastructure of Passport Offices and incorporation of Letter Screen Image in passport booklets as additional security feature. In addition to the facility of multi-lingual call centre operating in 17 major languages and round the clock and e-mail based helpdesk, the Ministry has introduced mPassport Seva – to offer to smart-phone users, anytime anywhere, a wide variety of services such as passport application status tracking, location of PSKs and general information on various steps involved in obtaining passport.

Under the Passport Seva programme, the Ministry has introduced some innovative methods for improved governance and citizen service delivery. One such measure is a requisite visit in person by an applicant to the nearest Passport Seva Kendra. To give the citizen assured service, we introduced the concept of a visit at a pre-appointed time. This is intended to address overcrowding which used to be a regular feature in old days. However, as we progressed over the last few months, obtaining online appointments in some of the regions in the country became a formidable challenge and a recurring theme of public scrutiny. We are hopeful that with the launch of the scheme of advance payment of passport fees through electronic modes and SBI challans at the time of online filing of application and scheduling of appointment, this challenge would be adequately met. I am extremely happy that this scheme is finally live across most parts of the country and will be fully completed in another 10 days or so. We have started receiving positive feedback from citizens about the utility and efficacy of this scheme.

One of the core component upon which hinges the timely delivery of passport services is the Police Verification system. The delay in Police Verification of passport applications leading to delay in passport issuance has been a major area of concern. As I gather, online interface with District Police Authorities has brought encouraging results in some States. This model must be implemented across India. The Ministry has taken up this matter with the concerned Chief Secretaries of state governments for speeding up verification process. At the level of Passport Officers, I feel there is scope for increased coordination with the local police would greatly help in reducing delay in clearances and improve citizen service delivery.

We are cognizant of the fact that the success of any e-Governance Project depends on what is called 'digital inclusion'. The Ministry is currently finalizing the modalities on co-opting Common Service Centres for taking passport services closer to rural hinterland. It is a matter of satisfaction that the Ministry has reached an understanding with the help of the Department of Information Technology to integrate over 60,000 Common Service Centres in bringing 'public services closer home', the motto of the Government's National e-Governance Plan.

The Ministry is also looking at expanding further the network of passport service access points in the areas left untouched earlier. The Government is committed to setting up a Passport service outlet in each State and Union Territory. Our focused attention would be on establishing Passport Seva Laghu Kendras in the Northeast over the coming months. We have also requested the National Institute for Smart Government to conduct a feasibility study on the 'Next Steps' in Passport Seva Project.

Rapid advances in technology and the increasing rightful demand for transparency have created a challenging environment in which service organizations need to operate and respond more efficiently to the aspirations of citizens. Capacity building, training and development of skills are key factors in attaining mission objectives. To this end, in the coming months, the Ministry would be working on establishing a Research and Training Centre. Such a centre, apart from imparting training to officials and personnel from other stakeholders, will also work on improvement in Passport booklet, keeping in pace with the international norms in the field of travel documents.

As you know, a committed and motivated workforce is pre-requisite for achieving goals of the organization. The Ministry has taken several steps to improve the service conditions of the CPO personnel by re-structuring of the cadre, fast-track promotions and notification of Productivity Linked Incentive Scheme. I trust the CPO personnel would benefit from uniform and well-defined work procedures, state-of-the-art infrastructure and system deployment, skill enhancement through training and the totality of their efforts would lead to higher level of satisfaction for citizens. I am told that as on date, in the new system, more than one crore passport related services have been delivered to citizens. With a view to recognizing your valuable efforts, the Ministry has selected the best Citizen Service Executive, Verification Officer, Granting Officer and Passport Office in the country based on their meritorious performance and output during 2012-13. I congratulate all the awardees and hope that these awards would go a long way in creating benchmarks for excellence in performance and devotion to public duty.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Celebrating anniversaries, commemorations or observance of days such as this are not ritualistic but instead provide opportunity to re-assess our performance and to engage ourselves in constructive interaction to learn transferable lessons for betterment of passport service delivery across the country. The Passport Offices being the public interface of the Ministry, it is essential to ensure that sustained efforts are made at every level to enhance citizen experience.

The deliberations during this Conference, I am confident, would lead to practical and forward looking suggestions for improving overall management and image of the CPO. Today as we celebrate this Passport Seva Divas, let us rededicate ourselves to respond with empathy and more efficiently in a transparent manner to meet increasing expectations of citizens to make passport issuance simpler, speedier and more secure and thus contribute our mite to good governance in the country. I wish you a very happy Passport Seva Divas and wish the Conference all success.

Thank you

036. Weekly Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.

New Delhi, June 28, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming. It looks like from here that your weekend has begun, so, I am grateful to you for having come on a weekend. I have two announcements to make and those relate to the External Affairs Minister's travels.

The External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, will be visiting Brunei. His visit to Brunei is linked with three meetings that he is to attend there. The first is for the 11th India-ASEAN Ministerial Meeting which will be held on the 1st of July. Following that he will participate in the 3rd East Asia Summit Ministerial Meeting of Foreign Ministers. And finally he will also participate in the 20th ASEAN Regional Forum meeting. All these meetings are to be held on the 1st and the 2nd of July.

Subsequent to his visit to Brunei, the External Affairs Minister will also visit Singapore on 3rd and 4th July. This is for a bilateral meeting and this is his first bilateral visit to Singapore. In Singapore, apart from the bilateral meeting he will also participate and chair the regional meeting of Indian Heads of Mission in the ASEAN as well as the Pacific and East Asia. Our Heads of Mission from ASEAN countries as well as from Japan, Korea, Australia, and New Zealand will be present there.

Let me try and tell you something about the India-ASEAN meeting. This is the 11th meeting. As you know, we had a very successful summit meeting last December in Delhi following which we have continued to interact with ASEAN in a rather intensive manner. Currently we have 25 mechanisms of various sorts which underpin our interaction with ASEAN. These include six at Ministerial level. The Ministerial level interactions are: foreign affairs, trade, agriculture, tourism, environment, and new and renewable energy.

Our people-to-people interaction too has been at a fairly intense pace. We expect that this year too we will have 250 ASEAN students visit India. In addition, 20 ASEAN journalists had visited earlier this year, and 20 more will be visiting later this year. Eight of your colleagues who are missing from here are right now in Kuala Lumpur, I understand, en route to Brunei so that they can attend the meeting of the ASEAN as well as visit another ASEAN country. This is part of the media exchange between India and ASEAN.

We also will continue the special course at the Foreign Service Institute for ASEAN diplomats. My understanding is that we have approximately 1100 ITEC scholarships for ASEAN countries. We are also examining the possibility of establishing additional English language centres in Cambodia, Lao and Vietnam. For those of you who are interested, in the coming month we will also have a Joint Commission meeting between India and Vietnam here in Delhi.

I just wanted to give you these details so that you understand the degree of interaction we have with the ASEAN. We have this Ministerial meeting, then we have a bilateral meeting of the Foreign Minister in Singapore, and then we will have the Vietnamese Foreign Minister shortly here in India. So, within the space of one month, there will be several ASEAN-related interactions.

For those of you who would like to know, our trade with ASEAN has been growing quite rapidly. It grew last year, I understand, by over 37 per cent and has reached 79 billion dollars. We are on track to touch the 100 billion dollar mark by 2015. That is all I have as far as ASEAN is concerned.

As regards the East Asia Summit Ministerial Meeting, they have consultative mechanisms at various levels. These include the Foreign Ministers, the Energy and Environment Ministers, the Finance Ministers, Education, Trade and Economic issues. As far as we are concerned, The Asia-Pacific is very much part of our Look East Policy. And the East Asia Summit plays a significant role as a forum for building an open, transparent, and inclusive architecture for regional cooperation. We are committed to the cause of economic integration in the Asia-Pacific and are actively taking part in the RCEP negotiations between ASEAN States and their FTA partners.

During this East Asia Summit, Brunei as the Chair has proposed two new initiatives. These relate to food security and setting up a Track-2 study group. We would also be informing the East Asia Summit Foreign Ministers Meeting participants about progress made at the Nalanda University because several of them have been forthcoming in their willingness to contribute to the Nalanda University.

That brings me to the last part of this Brunei visit and that relates to the ASEAN Regional Forum. ASEAN Regional Forum is the focus for CBMs and preventive diplomacy as well as peace building. It inculcates habits of cooperation in areas such as counterterrorism, organized crime, maritime security, disaster relief and humanitarian assistance. We have participated in specific exercises under this rubric. And the ARF has agreed work plans on maritime security, counterterrorism. This provides a forum for countries to express themselves on international security-related issues such as the DPRK, South China Sea and Afghanistan. Like in the past, the External Affairs Minister will participate and make a statement during the plenary to present our position on some of the issues on the agenda. I think that broadly covers the Brunei part of it.

As regards the Singapore part of it, Singapore is our most active partner in terms of the ASEAN economically. Our trade with Singapore is the highest among ASEAN members. Singapore's investment to India during the last decade is estimated by various sources to be about 10 per cent of the FDI flows in India.

In 2014-15 we will celebrate 50 years of India-Singapore diplomatic relations, and the External Affairs Minister will use the opportunity to see how we can chalk out various ideas that we have to implement this in a befitting manner.

He will also deliver a lecture at the Institute of South Asian Studies on – “India and South East Asia : Today and Tomorrow”. Mr. Khurshid will also be interacting with members of the Indian community as well as the business communities in Singapore.

If I have not mentioned before, apart from the Foreign Minister, Mr Khurshidis expected call on the Prime Minister of Singapore, the Emeritus Senior Minister, and the Deputy Prime Minister, Coordinating Minister for National Security.

I think I will stop there and take any questions that you may have on this.

Q: When is he leaving?

Official Spokesperson: He is leaving in the afternoon on 30th and he will be reaching there that evening.

Q: When will he be back?

Official Spokesperson: He will be back on the 4th night.

Q: What is this work plan on maritime security?

Official Spokesperson: This is a work in progress. It is an attempt to see if we can cooperate on anti-piracy measures largely, coordinate and cooperate on areas where we can have our navies work together in a coordinated manner.

Q: I was wondering whether any bilateral meetings are lined up on the sidelines of the ARF meeting, especially with China or Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: There are several meetings that are lined up and there are several more in the pipeline. At this stage I can confirm Indonesia, likely Australia, China and Bangladesh. That is what I have right away. But there are several in the pipeline and, as you know, during these conferences there could be several unscheduled meetings too.

Q: Could you elaborate on Brunei's proposals on food security and Track-2 study group?

Official Spokesperson: This is a proposal that they have indicated that they will unveil. It will finally be approved only at the summit because, as you know, the East Asia Summit is a leaders-driven body. What they have indicated to us at this stage is that these are the two proposals that they will unveil to the Foreign Ministers and they will outline the contours of these two proposals at the Foreign Ministers meeting and this will be on the agenda. Based on that, it will then be discussed and will be considered at the summit because the final outcome will be only at the summit. So, these are only sort of tentative indications which we thought we will share with you.

Q: As EAM would be meeting his Bangladesh counterpart, would extradition of Anup Chetia figure anywhere because he has withdrawn his application and the Indian Home Minister has indicated that he might be handed over in the next month?

Official Spokesperson: You know, we never tell you the outcomes in advance. There are others who do that and there are many of you who speculate about such outcomes. But our view has always been that we will only share the outcomes at the completion of those meetings. If any specific outcome or issue is raised, I certainly will be able to share with you once that is done. So, let me keep you in a little bit of suspense, unlike several of you who are blowing trial balloons in the air.

Question: Brunei is a tiny country but they have lots of oil. The Ruler of Brunei was once upon a time the richest man in the world. Do we buy oil from them, and does Brunei invest in India?

Official Spokesperson: I forgot, there will also be a bilateral meeting with the host Foreign Minister of Brunei.

Yes, we are buying oil from them. I think it is in the vicinity of something like two billion dollars, but I do not have the details about the investment. But my understanding is that we always welcome investment from anybody who has confidence to invest in India. And if the Ruler of Brunei would like to invest, we will certainly welcome that because we have previously made efforts in that regard. I do not have the factual details, so I do not want to guess on that.

Q: Recently the Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs said that there is no problem related to Nitaqat in Kuwait. What is the real situation in Kuwait?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and summarise for you the issues in Kuwait. First you have to understand that the Indian community in Kuwait totals approximately 700,000. This is actually an increase of more than 25,000 since the beginning of the year. So, let us be clear that there is a continuing increase of Indian nationals in Kuwait.

Secondly, in Kuwait there have been recent cases where they have tried and targeted people who do not have either a visa to work because they have come on another visa and are working illegally, or people who have overstayed and are working, and people who have come on for example domestic visa but are working in an institution. These are clearly irregular in the perception of the Kuwaiti authorities and, therefore, they are undertaking checks etc. And there have been cases also of deportation.

Let me try and explain to you the magnitude of this. During this year, there has been a total number of about a thousand Emergency Certificates issued. These people who have left by Emergency Certificates are 1,000 in number but there are others also. What we see is that in the first six months a total of about 3,600 Indians have through various means been deported back to India. These are inclusive of the 1,000 who took the ECs. So, 1,000 with Emergency Certificates and another 2,600 who had their passports and were deported back to India.

Now you may well think that the number is very large. Actually, it is smaller than the number last year for the same period. So, the issue of movement of Indian nationals to and from the Gulf countries, and Kuwait in particular because you have raised this issue, is a normal phenomenon. I have told you, from the beginning of the year till now there has been an inflow of Indian nationals of about 25,000 extra compared to what they were at the beginning of the year, and the numbers of who have returned or deported is approximately 3,600.

There have been some instances where people have said that they were harassed or suddenly taken by surprise etc. Our Mission has been working on this matter rather proactively. We set up a 24/7 help desk and also an email identity where anybody can write if they have such concerns. By our account, approximately 600 telephone calls have been received so far on this matter. There are also approximately 100 emails that have been received. None of them relate to any specific case of harassment. These relate to general concerns, fears, apprehensions, worries; and they are being responded to.

What we have told is that every instance of harassment, if it is communicated to the Indian Embassy, we will certainly take up actively and pursue it to its logical conclusion. But at this stage, since we set up this mechanism about fifteen or twenty days ago, despite all these numbers that I have given to you we have not had one specific case. The Embassy and Ambassador are also in touch with the local organizations there, that is the Indian organizations. These are based sometimes on regional basis or sometimes on other professional basis.

Finally, they are in touch with large employers, those employing more than 5,000 etc. They have had meetings with them to ascertain from them whether any of their employees in their personal capacities have faced problems or not. This is what we are doing proactively with the Indian community.

On the other hand we have taken this up with the Kuwaiti authorities both in New Delhi and in Kuwait. We are suggesting that should they want to implement a policy whereby they want to crackdown on people who are irregular, it is best to provide space and time for them to leave of their own volition. So, what we have requested is that some sort of option be given under which people are given a certain amount of time whereby they can leave. Alternatively they can regularize their stay in Kuwait in accordance with Kuwaiti requirements.

After all it is their country and they do have the right to enforce the law as they deem fit. Our request is only that it should be done in a manner where everybody knows that this is now the norm and they are provided time and space to adjust to this. That is where we are in terms of issues relating to the Indian community and Kuwait.

I think I may have answered your question. But if you have any other specifics, I am willing to answer that.

Q: I believe there is an understanding between India and Pakistan that allows two journalists from India to be posted in Pakistan and vice versa. What is the visa status of these two journalists who are posted in Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: Journalists represent their individual organizations. As far as India is concerned, there are no requests either received or pending from Pakistani organizations for stationing journalists in India. As far as journalists from India in Pakistan are concerned, we have seen reports of issues in this context and I think it is best for the Pakistani authorities to answer to that. We are aware of one organization which did raise this issue that they have been seeking a replacement for one of their journalists and they had sought our assistance in that matter. We have taken this up previously with the Pakistani authorities.

Q:...(Inaudible)... Could you tell us the outcome of the discussion with the Kuwaiti authorities on the suggestions we made?

Official Spokesperson: We have made these suggestions. We understand that these are being worked through their system. It is for them to accept or not to accept. We made this in good faith. We made this based on our understanding of how the situation is and our experience. We will leave it now for the Kuwaiti authorities to make the final decision on that. We have made these proposals and we hope an option or a solution is worked out which is in the best interest of all Indians and all expatriates.

By the way I perhaps did not put the caveat previously but I would like to put it now that this is not an issue related to India and Kuwait, this is an issue related to expatriates in Kuwait. Therefore, this is not a bilateral issue in that sense of the term. The term Nitaqat is specifically confined to Saudi Arabia and this has not been an issue which has come up in Kuwait, and I can reconfirm what you have heard from the Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs.

Q: NSA is there in Beijing talking to his counterpart. Can you give us an update on what are the issues which he is going to talk about and any parameters can we take at this stage that we are talking about?

Official Spokesperson: It would be highly unusual to comment while the visit is under way. But let me assure you that tomorrow when the visit is over we will try and put out in the public domain what we perceive as the outcome. It is not our practice to put in the public domain any details while a visit is on whether it is India or it is overseas. So, please bear with us. All I am saying is reiterating what we have always followed as a practice. This is not unusual. We never do it even when the visit is under way here in India until the visit is complete or the discussions are over. In this case, it is not that.

Q: US Special Representative on Pakistan and Afghanistan Ambassador Dobbins was here yesterday and he had meetings with Foreign Secretary and Indian Special Envoy. Can you give a sense of the meeting and what specific concerns India raised and how he responded to them?

Official Spokesperson: You have come back to an approach which I have always desisted from and that is 'can you tell us what happened in the discussions'. Always my view has been that I am not a fly on the wall. I have also said this before that if I was, I would not be sitting here, I would have been swatted long ago by people who ensure the security of such discussions.

That said, India and the US have a relationship whereby we are in close touch on a wide variety of issues including on Afghanistan. We have had bilateral consultations on Afghanistan, and Ambassador Dobbins visit yesterday was in that context. This is not the first we have had these consultations and these are of an ongoing nature.

Now if I can try and say the broad rubrics that they discussed, yes, he did explain to us the state of play on the reconciliation process. That was number one. And he explained what was the nitty-gritty on this issue. We indicated to him our views on how we perceive this. That is one area. The second area we discussed was, our own cooperation in this along with Afghanistan. As you know, we have a trilateral meeting and we are very keen that the next trilateral should be held.

The first trilateral was held in New York during the UN General Assembly. The last one was held here in Delhi. We are very keen that a third trilateral is held at an early date. We have requested the US to indicate to us dates so that we can take this trilateral format of discussions further because it has been very useful and we find it a good platform to use to pursue our developmental activities there in coordination with others. That is about what I can say, unless you have any specifics on it.

Q: The question is on UK visa bond issue. Has India taken up the matter with London? Any assurances if India will be kept out of the pilot scheme?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, following media reports on this matter we did take it up both at a political level - because our Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr. Anand Sharma was there in the UK – and also at the diplomatic level. In both these conversations the response we seem to be gettingis, and if I can try and summarise for you without getting into the details, is that this is a work in progress. They will discuss with us these issues.

We had indicated, if you would recollect, that should there be matters of such a nature, we would like to discuss these at the India-UK Consular Forum meeting. My understanding is that it will be held in the latter half of July. They have agreed that this matter could be a basis for discussion there. At this stage it is a work in progress. So, I think they have also made this publically known that they are still mulling it over and I think it is fair that we wait till we hear from them on what is their view.

Of course they are well aware of the concerns raised in India and these were communicated both by many of you in the media as also by our Minister as also by our Mission there. So, they are well aware of the situation. Let us wait and see how and in what format they talk to us about any plans that they may have for the future on visa-related issues. We will take it up then.

Q:...(Inaudible)...killed in Lahore or died in Lahore. Any details on the autopsy report? I suppose we are still awaiting the autopsy report of the two other prisoners who died in Pakistan.

Official Spokesperson: Let us take this prisoner. The name of this prisoner, Mr. Zakir Ali, figures in the list that Pakistan provided to us at the beginning of the year. Consequently, we sought consular access. Both at the time of the visit of the Judicial Commission which visited Pakistan, if you remember towards the end of April, and subsequently after that, on both these occasions, we were not able to get information about him from the prisoner himself because he was not in a mental state where he could articulate details about himself.

Therefore, while he figures on that list provided by Pakistan to us, we were not able to identify his nationality on two occasions when the Indian Judicial Commission met them and when our Consular officers met them later on - I think the Consular officers met him on the 8th of June. Since we did not have the details available about where he was from, where in India are his contact points, we are trying to ascertain them now because he was not able to provide these details. Should we be able to find some information on this, we will take it forward.

As regards earlier cases we did receive some partial autopsy reports previously and we have communicated these appropriately.

Thank you very much

037. External Affairs Minister's interview to the Statesman.
New Delhi, June 29, 2013.

Foreign policy does not boil down to a single issue

(In an interview with SIMRAN SODHI, External Affairs Minister Mr Salman Khurshid spoke about the various foreign policy issues facing the country and his views on how India plans to deal with them.)

In context of the recent visit of US Secretary of State Mr John Kerry, do you feel that India's concerns on Afghanistan have been addressed? With talks between the US and Taliban slated to happen soon, do you feel India's role might get squeezed out in the process, with Pakistan getting a bigger role?

Secretary Kerry was very appreciative of India's role in Afghanistan, especially in the area of development. At the Press conference he addressed, he said clearly that the attempt to talk to the Taliban was essentially a conversation they want with the willing Taliban. Also, that this would be an Afghan-led process. Now, all this sounds like music to us and is just the approach we would like to have. But, at the same time, we have cause for concern and we have conveyed to him that there are red lines that the Taliban needs to adhere to. The good thing is that Secretary Kerry said the talks with the Taliban is an experiment ~ it could work or not work. Even President Karzai wants to talk with the Taliban; this is something we have checked with him. I think there are still a lot of different ways of looking at what is happening and we would want to keep a watch. We are aware that some elements in Pakistan may want to exclude India from Afghanistan, which is, fortunately, not acceptable to others.

Do you think investing in Karzai was a good idea?

President Karzai, if nothing else, is a bridge to the future of Afghanistan. You can walk on a bridge and say it could have been better. You can walk on a bridge and say it is not wide enough or solid enough. You can say all kinds of things, but the important thing is that it is a bridge that took Afghanistan from its state of war to where it stands today. I think it's not fair not to give him credit for what he has achieved.

Is there a chance President Karzai might stay on even after the elections in Afghanistan?

The Constitution doesn't allow it. He has always said that he doesn't want to. Periodically, there is talk that he should stay on because there is no alternative. But I have personally spoken to him, and he has always said that there is a constitutional mandate that comes to an end. But the picture ahead is still far from clear.

Would you agree with the view that the Indo-US relationship has slumped in recent years and there are no new areas of co-operation between the two countries?

I think the highs that people perceived came after long periods of lows and so the highs were perceived to be higher than they were. Similarly, when you have achieved a high point, you can't just keep going higher and higher. You have to slow down and consolidate. There is a lot of follow up job that needs to be done. There are a lot of things under the radar that have moved forward. But having said that, I know that there are a lot of critical things, from both sides, that need to be addressed. If we don't address them, then a lot of things we have achieved in other fields would be undermined. Both sides have issues about trade access. There are issues about H1B visas; they have issues about the time NPCIL is taking to sign the contract; there are still talks taking place about the nuclear liability issue.

These are very, very complicated issues, given the nature of politics in their and our country. But we are on a solid ground and it will be good if we can resolve some of these issues before September, when Prime Minister Mr Manmohan Singh visits the US.

Today, India has a relationship with most major countries in the world. India also has strategic partnerships with several countries. Which would you say has been the single most challenging bilateral relationship?

By saying that this is challenging, you might give the impression that this is a problem. It's the effort that goes into servicing a relationship that can make the relationship challenging. And the size of the relationship, seen in context of the effort required, can make it challenging. I think in that sense, both in terms of content, in terms of size, expectation and visibility and the close scrutiny of the media, the relationship with the US is the most challenging. Having said that, I would say that if the challenges are great, the rewards are equally great.

Could you list the three most important bilateral relationships?

The question is not fair. I will tell you the areas that, for us, invite special attention. The P5 (referring to the five permanent members of the UN Security Council) inevitably, also because we want to be on the Security Council and they all seem to acknowledge that one day we will be on the Security Council.

The other important focus is the region that is responsible for our energy security - west Asia, central Asia and Iran. We have a huge opportunity in the South-east Asia region. Europe, which is our largest trading partner, and Africa, where we have made the best of relationships, are also crucial. Each one is important in its own way, and requires attention. I also took special steps to revive links with Latin America.

The race for India's next foreign secretary has thrown up a debate over seniority versus merit. Your take on it.

There's no debate in our mind; it's all in the papers. I don't think you should see seniority in isolation, you should also not see merit in isolation...seniority and merit go together. You don't spend 30 years in the Indian Foreign Service and by some quirk of fate get to the top. And when you are on top, you have to be somebody who served in the P5 countries, somebody who served in the neighbourhood, SAARC countries, or somebody who has been at critical moments in the driving seat of policy.

Your visit to Iraq came 23 years after the last visit by an Indian minister. What would say is the reason for this long hiatus?

Iraqis think we are afraid of the violence there. I don't see any reason why we should be afraid. There is a lot of security paraphernalia in Baghdad and I went only to Baghdad. I felt a tremendous amount of affinity when I was in Iraq, a tremendous sense of being welcome, both for me personally and for the country. I also think it's remarkable, the kind of willingness they have to work closely with us.

Would you say that we are moving towards Iraq because we are trying to reduce our oil dependence on Iran?

We are not reducing our dependence on Iran. Iran is our friend and we can't say that you are a friend in trouble and we don't want to touch you. But there is a practical difficulty ~ if there is nobody to carry the crude oil from Iran to India, no tankers are available and banks are not available, how do you get oil? But at the same time Iran knows we have taken a position in the IAEA and they know why we have taken that position.

Has it been easy balancing relations with Iran on one hand and the US on the other?

We have, haven't we? No one has complained to us. We are developing the Chabahar port and we are not hiding it from anyone. But at the same time, we do accept the United Nations Security Council sanctions. I think it is a world of contradictions and we have to live with these contradictions and harmonise them.

In the last few weeks, the Rajapakse government has taken steps towards diluting the 13th amendment. In one of the possibly strongest statements issued by India, we expressed dismay at the steps. Do you think the Rajapakse government will back down and not dilute the 13th amendment before elections are held to the Northern Provincial Council?

Elections will be held and that's a good thing. What kind of dilution takes place is something we need to study. We don't want any kind of dilution. There is a very strong feeling in our country that there should be no dilution at all. But political life is not tranquil and there can be reasons to depart from something you have done in the past. But because it's a promise made to the world and to us, it's only fair that an attempt should be made to explain to us why they are departing from that position. And if they are departing from that position, there may be many other areas in which you can compensate. And there are a lot of areas, the LLRC (Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission) for instance. So if you are diluting, though we are totally against it, you could strategically compensate it in some way.

How do you view the new government in Pakistan and its desire to pursue peace? Do you trust them?

I don't think it's a good way to start a relationship by saying 'I don't trust you'. We have to be careful in dealing with the Pakistan government, not because you have an inherent mistrust of them, but because we know they work under compulsions. Pakistan cannot change overnight. What has happened in Pakistan will not go away in one election. But nevertheless, Nawaz Sharif had very bravely said the right things during the election campaign and after taking the oath of office. We should give him a chance.

038. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs announcing the appointment of Ambassador Smt. Sujatha Singh as the next Foreign Secretary.

New Delhi, July 2, 2013.

Smt. Sujatha Singh, an Indian Foreign Service (IFS) Officer of the 1976 batch, will be the next Foreign Secretary of India, with a term of two years. She will assume charge on 1st August 2013.

Smt. Singh is presently India's Ambassador to Germany.

039. Press Release of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the steps to combat terrorism.

New Delhi, July 2, 2013.

Addressing the members of Consultative Committee attached to the Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA) here today, Union Home Minister Shri Sushilkumar Shinde informed that the Government have taken a series of steps to combat terrorism in the country. He mentioned that the legal regime and mechanism for counter terrorism like amendments of Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 in 2008 and 2012, sharing of intelligence through close and effective co-ordination amongst Central and State level agencies and creation of four regional hubs (Mumbai, Hyderabad, Chennai and Kolkatta) of National Security Guards (NSG) to cover the whole country has strengthened the efforts to combat terrorism.

Shri Shinde informed the members that the establishment of National Investigation Agency (NIA) for dealing with cases of terrorism exclusively, border security measures to guard land border through fencing along with flood lighting and border roads on the Indo-Pakistan and Indo-Bangladesh Border has also improved the security situation.

Shri Shinde further informed that the modernization of State Police Forces, steps to deal with the issue of Fake Indian Currency Notes (FICN) and NATGRID, envisaged to link further data bases for creating actionable intelligence is also under establishment as steps being taken to combat terrorism. He mentioned that the recent attack on the Army convoy by militants, the brutal attack by CPI (Maoists) in Chattisgarh's Bastar District and attacks on a train at Jamui in Bihar were attacks on our democratic values and freedom to participate in political activities. The Home Minister said that the Govt. is committed to make all out efforts to address the genuine grievances of deprived sections of society as the development can not happen in an environment of terror. He said that the acts of violence against innocents will be dealt firmly.

Further explaining the situation of internal security, the Home Minister mentioned that there is an improvement in the security situation in the country during the last year. The Minister stated that the terrorist threat and challenges to internal security can be broadly categorized coming from four categories namely J&K, North Eastern States, Left Wing Extremism (LWE) and terrorism in the Hinterland of the country. The Minister also informed the members about the employment generation scheme like “UDAAN” and “HIMAYAT” in the State of J&K. He said that the Central Govt. is continuously assisting the North Eastern States by deploying Central Armed Police Forces to assist the State Police in their counter -insurgency operations against the militant outfits and augmenting and upgrading their police force by way of sanction of Indian Reserved Battalion.

The LWE is one of our gravest challenges and the strategy to be adopted to combat violence in these areas has to be a combination of security measures coupled with development. As far as terrorism in the Hinterland is concerned, the country witnessed two major bomb blasts in 2013, first in Hyderabad and second in Bangaluru.

Earlier, Union Home Secretary Shri Anil Goswami introduced the agenda and stated that there has been continuous efforts to bring about better initiatives to tackle terrorism by comprehensive rules of engagement, inclusive of legal framework, additional recruitments, intelligence network and coordination with Civil Administration. Border management, mobility and communication system for improving the security situation and combating terrorism are other measures in this regard, he added.

The members deliberated on all aspects of combating terrorism in the country and discussed the recent incidents of security situation in the State of J&K, North Eastern States, Left Wing Extremism, co-ordination amongst security agencies, rehabilitation policy and security arrangements along the borders. The Committee also appreciated the services of the forces including para military forces in relief and rescue work during the recent Utrakhand floods.

The following members of Consultative Committee were present at the meeting. Shri Ismail Hussain, Shri Kamal Kishor, Shri Lalu Prasad, Dr.Rattan Singh Ajnala, Dr.Thokchom Meinya, Shri Yogi Aditya Nath from Lok Sabha and Shri Bhubaneswar Kalita, Shri H.K.Dua, Shri Mohd.Ali Khan, Shri Om Prakash Mathur, Prof. Ram Gopal Yadav and Shri Vinay Katiyar from Rajya Sabha.

040. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, July 3, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon everyone and thank you very much for coming here for this interaction. I hate to disappoint you all, but I will today by saying that I have nothing to say. However, if any of you have anything to ask me on anything, I will be willing to respond.

Q: Sir, has the External Affairs Minister said that India is alright with talks with Taliban, that is the US talking to Taliban, as far as the Afghan reconciliation is concerned? And are there no concerns for India because a part of the Taliban team would also include Haqqani Network?

Official Spokesperson: What I would suggest is that the statement by the External Affairs Minister is put on the website of the Ministry of External Affairs and this can be seen.

As regards our approach to the reconciliation process in Afghanistan, let me try and encapsulate it for your benefit. We do understand the need for reconciliation in Afghanistan, and we have said it repeatedly that we would welcome any efforts towards reconciliation and this reconciliation should include all Afghan parties, it should be Afghan led and Afghan controlled.

Also we have said that as far as we are concerned this reconciliation process should involve following what are known as the red lines which have been agreed to between Afghanistan and the international community. These redlines, if you would like me to reiterate, are: the process should be transparent, Afghan led, inclusive; it should include those who are ready to abjure violence; and we would be willing to accept that it includes all Afghan parties including those who are currently out of the mainstream but wish to abjure violence and join the mainstream, and this includes the Taliban.

Q: Some Indians were killed in Afghanistan in Kabul. Is there anything on that as yet?

Official Spokesperson: I do regret to inform you that yesterday morning in the course of an attack on a housing compound in Kabul which housed foreigners, three Indian nationals were killed. The three were: (1) Mr. Gilaji Sandeep who was working as a waiter, he is from Andhra Pradesh, (2) Mr. Chakraborty Kaushik, who was a laundry manager, he is from West Bengal, and (3) Mr. Gurudi Naveen Kumar, who was the front office manager also from Andhra Pradesh. These were among the more than 50 Indian nationals who were working there through a contractor. They were providing various services at the housing compound. Our Embassy is in touch with their employer to try and assist them in completing the legal formalities and the medical formalities before they repatriate the dead bodies back to their hometowns. The rest of the Indian nationals are safe but obviously shocked by the attack.

Q: I just wanted to ask you on the Snowden story. On the day that the story initially broke you gave a very strong statement saying that if there is any violation of Indian privacy laws, it would be unacceptable. But we heard the Foreign Minister yesterday say that this is not snooping, that this is scrutiny. He seemed to be taking a different stand from the initial MEA reaction. So, what is the Government of India's position on this? Has it been diluted? It seems that the Foreign Minister is justifying the American snooping.

Official Spokesperson: All those adjectives you use in terms of describing the External Affairs Minister are yours. I do not think he used any of those words in terms of justification, dilution, etc. Our view remains what we have said previously that we were concerned at these reports, also that this would be taken up.

The External Affairs Minister was only elaborating about his discussion with the US Secretary of State during their last meeting. Also we had indicated to you that these are technical issues and need to be discussed in a technical forum, and we had indicated to you that the Cyber Security Dialogue was the forum for discussion of these. That remains our position. I hope I have been able to clarify that.

Q: Just a follow up to that question. There are reports that Indian Embassy in Washington was also under NSA surveillance. Have you verified the authenticity of the reports and any response to that?

Official Spokesperson: First let me put a caveat. While this is a follow up to Nidhi's question, this is a separate issue. The issue that Nidhi was talking of was in terms of the metatext and assessment of metatext by US agencies, which is a different issue, and that was what was the response that we gave previously, and that was also the issue that the External Affairs Minister was responding to in terms of his discussions with Secretary Kerry.

Now as regards the media reports that you are mentioning about, this is a separate issue about our Embassy. Yes, we have seen and studied the media reports of our Embassy in Washington being amongst a list of diplomatic missions which were intrusively monitored by US agencies. Obviously, we are concerned at such disconcerting reports and we will certainly raise with US authorities these serious allegations.

Q: Antony is visiting China. This is important considering that he will be the first Defence Minister in seven years to visit China. What is his diplomatic brief and what are the MEA inputs?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have been through this before. (a) It is not the norm or the approach that we follow in trying to tell you what are the intra-governmental inputs that are provided. (b) I do appreciate your interest in matters relating to the defence, but there is a full-fledged Division there that can respond to the specifics that you would like to be responded to. I certainly am not responsible for the functioning of that Department.

Q: Can you tell us something about Basil Rajapaksa's upcoming visit tomorrow? What is he going to do and who is he going to meet? And are you going to be able to say something about Mr. Menon's visit to Colombo?

Official Spokesperson: You are aware that India and Sri Lanka have regular high-level consultations, and the visit of Mr. Basil Rajapaksa comes in that context. He is likely to have meetings here in Delhi. This is a work in progress, but he certainly will meet the External Affairs Minister among others.

As regards what he will discuss, you know my answer to that but you still have ventured to probe me on that matter and I will desist from falling for that bait. It is our usual practice that we respond at the outcome of the discussions rather than prejudge what they will discuss.

As regards any other visit, if they deal with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs I will respond. But you have referred to a visit other than by the Ministry of External Affairs and my answer to that remains what I told Rajiv, which is that my limited ambit of discussion is either matters relating to the Ministry of External Affairs, or the visits of the Prime Minister of India, or the Vice-President and President. These are the areas information about which two in the External Publicity Division are responsible for disseminating. So, I would beg your pardon that I will not be able to respond to those specifics that you are asking about other visits.

Q: Will Mr. Rajapaksa call on the Prime Minister?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, I can confirm the meeting with the External Affairs Minister. The rest of his programme is still evolving. Should we have such a meeting, we will certainly let you know. At this stage I can confirm to you the meeting with the External Affairs Minister.

Q: Sir, it has been reported that Russia offered assistance in disaster management in Uttarakhand rescue and relief but this was declined by India. Your comments please.

Official Spokesperson: As you know, as a general policy in case of rescue and relief operations we have followed the practice that we have adequate ability to respond to emergency requirements. And for a variety of reasons we have not also in the past too, unless there are specific circumstances, been able to accept offers of assistance for rescue and relief.

However, as you know, such events are cataclysmic in nature and they have a longer term impact. So, beyond the rescue and relief phase there are other phases. These are rehabilitation, reconstruction, and so on. If reconstruction and other measures are provided for those elements, we will examine how they fit into the broader plan in terms of rehabilitation and reconstruction in the region and take a call at that stage rather than say that this was for all times, etc. I hope I have clarified our position on that.

Q: This is regarding the Italian Marines. Today is the 90 days of the beginning of the investigation of NIA. According to some speculation there are some obstacles regarding the Italian witness. I would like to know if there are any updates, and if the 90 days are mandatory or not for the investigation?

Official Spokesperson: Maria, frankly I must confess that for once I am not able to respond to your questions because again this is a complex matter which deals with several parts of our executive as well as judiciary. Now whether certain dates are mandatory or not is for the judiciary to take a call on.

As to whether there are some shortcomings or inability of any witnesses to come, I suggest you need to contact those who are in a position to make those witnesses come, and that in this case is the Italian Government. After all those witnesses etc., may also be employees of that Government and it is easier for them to facilitate that. We can only make those requests.

Let me reiterate, it is always our desire to try and quickly resolve this case which is unique in nature. It issui generis. We do not want this to impinge on other aspects of our relationship. We stand ready to work with Italy to try and facilitate in a manner which is possible under our judicial system so that an outcome which is judicially determined is arrived at the earliest.

Q: Sir, this meeting between Sartaj Aziz and Salman Khurshid in Brunei, was it decided that India would resume the format of Composite Dialogue process with Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: I do not know where you heard this. What is available as an outcome of that dialogue is available in terms of the statements made by both the External Affairs Minister and by Mr. Sartaj Aziz there. A video is available, you could have a look.

As far as we are concerned, we are awaiting the dates for different aspects of the resumed dialogue, and that is the dialogue that we have been pursuing so far. I do not know of anything else that you are saying about because what is on the table is the continuation of the resumed dialogue because, as you perhaps are aware, the resumed dialogue started immediately in September 2012. That was the third round of the resumed dialogue. It began with the meetings of the Commerce Secretaries.

Subsequent to that there were meetings which were scheduled relating to the Tulbul Navigation Project and the Wullar Barrage. That did not take place. That was perhaps to be in early February and they could not be at that time be pursued because we had indicated that our lead negotiator in that was unable to continue because he was retiring end of the month in January. Therefore, we had requested for fresh dates. Those were the only two elements of the resumed dialogue that were agreed on. There remain other elements of the resumed dialogue where we now have to work on dates, and that is the issue that is being discussed and focused on.

Q: A few countries have issued travel advisories for Egypt. Are we concerned about our citizens in the country and have we had any discussions with the Government over the Constitutional crisis?

Official Spokesperson: A couple of things. It is not our practice to revert to advisories unless we deem the situation is so difficult that it makes it absolutely necessary for us to indicate that there is no need for Indians to travel, and in such cases we have. In this case we have not. However, our Ambassador there is in touch with the Indian community. As you are perhaps aware, there is an Indian community but not a very large one. The Mission has indicated to them the areas where these protests are taking place so that for the present they avoid those areas.

As regards the situation itself, this is a matter for the Egyptians to decide internally, and so we have not taken it up. If the question you asking us is whether this has been taken up bilaterally, the answer is no because it is not our practice and policy to intervene in matters which are essentially in the domain of internal jurisdiction of a country.

Thank you very much

041. Speech by National Security Advisor Shivshankar Menon at Fourth International Meeting of High Level Officials Responsible for Security.

Vladivostok, July 4, 2013.

Your Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen.

I wish to begin by thanking you, Mr. Patrushev, and the Russian government for your initiative in arranging this important international meeting, which has now established itself in the calendar as a meeting that we all look forward to, for your hospitality, and for the importance and topicality of the discussions. I will say a few words on cyber security.

Cyberspace is today the fifth domain of human activity, in addition to land, sea, air and outer space. During the last two decades, the Internet has grown exponentially in its reach and scope. Equally, our dependence upon cyberspace for social, economic, governance, and security functions has also grown exponentially. Unfettered access to information through a global inter-connected Internet empowers individuals and governments, and it poses new challenges to the privacy of individuals and to the capability of Governments and administrators of cyberspace tasked to prevent its misuse.

Our task is complicated by the unique characteristics of cyberspace. These include, as we are reminded every day: its borderless nature, both geographically and functionally; anonymity and the difficulty of attribution; the fact that for the present the advantage is with offense rather than defence; and, the relatively anarchic nature of this domain.

Let us consider each of these briefly.

Borderlessness

The anonymity and inter-connectivity of cyberspace are exploited by criminals, terrorists and even States to carry out identity theft and financial fraud, conduct espionage, disrupt critical infrastructures, facilitate terrorist activities, steal corporate information, and plant malicious software (malware) and Trojans which can be exploited in different ways.

Anonymity

Because of the anonymity and the difficulty in attribution, securing cyberspace against misuse by either State or non-State actors is a multi-dimensional challenge that requires concerted efforts on the part of all stakeholders. Cyber security involves securing our national Information Communication Networks and Critical Information Infrastructure, combating cyber crime and protection from cyber attacks. It involves threat monitoring, assessment, mitigation, risk management, forensics, hardening of systems and capacity building in terms of both technical as well as human resources. All these require technical advances to make it possible for us to be able to redefine anonymity so as to separate legitimate from other uses of cyberspace.

Offense and Defence

We have seen that there is an inextricable link between cyber crime, trans-national organized crime and cyber terrorism. Active actors range from ordinary individuals to cyber criminals, extremists, terrorists, social, and political groups. We have also seen that launching destructive cyber attacks costs little, but defending against such attacks is becoming increasingly expensive and complex. The increasing use of “cloud computing” models, and third party network based servers which form the “cloud”, has introduced new policy challenges such as defining jurisdictional boundaries for law enforcement, protecting privacy and civil liberties according to national laws, and liability in the event of a breach of security.

Anarchy: International and Governance Aspects

Different countries have different approaches to this issue, based on their national experience and perceived interests. We are each learning as we go. Fortunately we now see the beginnings of a common realization of the need to ensure security of cyberspace and to institutionalize safeguards for individuals and society against its misuse.

Given the inter-dependencies that are a characteristic of cyber space, the international community needs to make concerted efforts to secure cyberspace, which is a common resource. Many issues relating to cyber security have trans-national components and these challenges cannot be addressed by individual nations or in isolation. There is a self evident need for cooperation to exchange experiences and to share best practices for protection of information infrastructures.

There is a need to develop a common understanding on norms of State behaviour in cyberspace. India would prefer norms derived from existing international legal frameworks relevant to the use of ICT. As a member of United Nations Group of Experts, India has worked with Russia and with other countries on the Group's Report, which will be submitted to the UN General Assembly.

India supports democratic and representative Internet governance. International institutions that are invested with authority to manage or regulate the Internet need to be broad-based and internationalized if they are to make meaningful decisions on what is today a global commons.

India's Experience

India is one of the major IT destinations in the world. We have the third largest number of Internet users after the USA and China. India has a Gen Y population, between the ages of 15 to 29 years, of approximately 310 million adept at using the Internet and social media networks. There are over 700 million mobile phones and about 670,000 km of optical fibre laid across the country. We add over 7 million new mobile phone connections every month. Such phenomenal growth in access to information and connectivity has added to our vulnerabilities.

The Government of India has recently approved a National Cyber Security Policy and a Framework to address cyber security concerns. This Framework envisages a multi-layered approach to ensure defence in depth and a clear delineation of functional responsibilities amongst stakeholders, while stressing coordination and sharing of real-time information. It also seeks to strengthen our assurance and certification framework to address supply-chain vulnerabilities, hardening networks, and promoting Research and Development in cyber security with an emphasis on capacity-building.

In July 2012 we established a Joint Working Group with representatives of Government departments and the private sector. The Report of this Joint Working Group contains a detailed roadmap for public-private partnership on cyber security, which includes the setting up of institutional frameworks, capacity building in the area of cyber security, development of cyber security standards and assurance mechanisms and augmentation of testing and certification facilities for IT products. This Joint Working Group is a standing body and has generated considerable enthusiasm in the private sector.

Conclusion

In ensuring cyber security, we have to be careful that the free flow and access to information is not hindered or compromised. There should be no doubt about our commitment to preserving the democratic nature of cyberspace which is one of its most enduring features. India is stoutly committed to freedom of expression, which includes freedom of expression in cyberspace. At the same time, we have to be concerned with securing our cyberspace for trusted e-commerce, security of data and protection of Critical Information Infrastructure. We have to guard against malicious activities of those who may seek to undermine our economies or disrupt social harmony. The imperatives of national security have thus to be balanced with protecting the privacy of individuals.

We in India look forward to working with the international community in finding this balance and in the task of keeping cyberspace secure and safe for all our citizens and societies.

New Delhi, July 29, 2013.

When I joined the Foreign Service in 1974 conventional wisdom had it that diplomats were not meant to be seen or heard in public. In fact most of us in Government believed in the ideal of the faceless bureaucrats. The only real mass media were print and radio. Some engaged with the print media but quietly and in a detached manner. But overall, we were required to be little visible and encouraged to work in anonymity except through structured engagements. As this function demonstrates all this has now changed.

Communication has become essential to management. The requirements of communications have changed and evolved and so have we in the Ministry of External Affairs. We have adapted and adopted to these new demands of technology and means of communications.

Over the last two years, we have changed our appearance in multiple ways. Take for example, our website. Since last year it now has a new look. It attracts more than three times the visitors than the old version did. We are on a course to get a million visitors in the first year of this new website. This is in fact four times the annual numbers who visited our earlier website in the last year it functioned.

Our Common Digital Identity is falling in place. All Indian Missions are adopting similar templates. So if you look at MEA Website and that of our Missions say in Tokyo (Japan) or Cairo (Egypt) or London (UK) or Caracas (Venezuela), they now have common templates even though they are on different continents. There was some scepticism over the suitability of this scheme when plans were laid down for it in my office just under two years ago. It is still a work in progress. But fifty of our Embassies have adopted this new template and made the transition to our common new digital identity. Come 2014, we hope that websites of our Missions will be instantly recognizable as they will have a common digital identity.

The launch earlier today of the Smart Phone App is one more step of integrating our public platforms. As was explained, all our public services can now be accessed through this one simple means. Whether it be information on passport status applied anywhere in India or location of centres which attest documents in India, or pilgrims travelling to Saudi Arabia for Haj, this “One stop shop” will provide you all you need to know.

As delivery mechanism for dissemination of information has changed, we too have expanded our presence across a variety of new media platforms. As new media has narrowed the differences between traditional media and social media we too have adjusted. Today, if we take the number of people who follow MEA, our Missions abroad, our senior officials across the various social media platforms, the total will exceed more than a million. A number similar to that of visitors to our web sites.

We have also reached out across the country to different language media. Of necessity since English is the language that India conducts its diplomacy in, focus on English as a means of public communication remains. Of course, we also have a website which provides all of this information in Hindi too. In addition, due to the growing interest of a large number of language media in India in issues relating to foreign policy, we are now reaching out to our countrymen in Malayalam, Bengali, Tamil and Urdu too. I understand that press releases in Assamese and Telugu too are soon to be initiated. I would not be wrong if I acknowledge that the language media in India has been a growth area for coverage of foreign policy issues, reflecting yet another change that we have factored in.

We are also poised to take the audio route and have agreed with Prasar Bharati to tie up for a regular programme on FM Radio of India’s foreign relations.

The idea behind encapsulating all these changes to you today is indicate that we are making every effort in communicating India’s foreign policy and the sense of our timing to the public at large.

I also take this opportunity to thank all those who have been involved in enabling us to move ahead on issues related to the media during the last two years and more specifically in this venture. As the landscape has expanded we have tried to adjust and adapt. The help we have received from all of you has been crucial in this.

Thank you

043. Remarks by Foreign Secretary on the occasion of Presentation of Green Building Certification to Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan.

New Delhi, July 30, 2013.

1. At the outset, I thank Indian Green Building Council (IGBC) for their cooperation and support to the Ministry of External Affairs in its endeavour to implement Green Building measures at Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan. This collaborative effort has resulted in Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan obtaining a Gold rating for energy conservation measures. It is a matter of pride for us that Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan is the first Government of India office to receive a Gold certification.
2. The construction of Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan has been an interesting and at times challenging experience for the Ministry of External Affairs. Those who initiated action many years ago rightly desired to construct a state of the art, and energy conscious building with an excellent working environment on a plot of land in a cultural and arts area/ Central Vista. Of course being on this plot meant we were subject to height restrictions and could not build one more floor.
3. The architectural features of JNB include Red and Dholpur stone work (composite walls), strong plinth and cornices, colonnaded verandah and projected balconies, courtyard planning, structural glazing and barrier free environment for differently able and elderly persons. Despite challenges on architectural front, the Ministry took an early decision , at a time when the green building/ environment codes were being finalized by the CPWD, to incorporate green building features, both active and passive features, with a view to facilitate execution of these measures during the construction phase itself.
4. The special features in the building include energy efficiency measures, improved air quality, water efficiency and a working environment that promotes efficiency. We are thankful to the executing agency, CPWD, as well as other agencies, especially VS Kukreja and Associates, Raja Aederi Consultants Pvt. Ltd.

and Environmental Design Associates for their support during the construction of Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan and in implementing green building measures.

5. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the building has been awarded 50 points against the objective set for achieving a gold certification requiring 39 points. This has encouraged the Ministry to aspire for a Platinum rating for the JNB as a functioning building.
6. I take this opportunity to place on record the debt we all owe to my predecessors the previous Foreign Secretaries who actually initiated this project in the time of Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran who contributed immensely towards getting the green design incorporated, my predecessor after that Mr. Shivshankar Menon and finally pushed towards the construction of Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan from its initial stages, my immediate predecessor Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao. I also thank my colleagues for their utmost cooperation during my tenure and the hardships they have undergone in the recent past to make the Jawaharlal Nehru Bhawan a fully functional and efficient building. We worked a great deal on it because we were under pressure to vacate the Akbar Bhawan which is now the seat of the South Asia University. I and others in the Ministry were determined not to repeat the experience of 1985 when we were pushed out of South Block by the irresistible force of the PMO and could not find any more place from the immovable object that is MOD and we were packed off to Akbar Bhawan in the matter of weeks. I am glad that by the time we actually moved people into this building, this was a work in progress but a functional working environment. I must place on record my appreciation to all those in the Administration and Establishment in particular who pushed and helped in every step of the way. My association with this project has been an interesting and a fulfilling experience. And I thank all of you.

Thank you

044. First Media Interaction of Foreign Secretary after taking over charge of the office of Foreign Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, August 1, 2013.

Q: We could see that India is facing multi-faceted challenges right from Afghanistan to USA, from Sri Lanka to China. So what are your foreign policy priorities going to be?

Foreign Secretary: I think that immediate priorities would be in our immediate neighbourhood, that's where our immediate interests lie. And that is where our most intense interactions are. Beyond that it is important to strengthen relations with our strategic partners all over the world. I think that there is also a good deal to be done here with in the Ministry of External Affairs. To build on the work done by my predecessors in strengthening the Ministry. So my immediate priority would be to optimize the resources that we already have and to work with all the multiple stake holders in India's foreign policy.

Q: If I could ask you certain questions on Pakistan a) Pakistan has proposed dates for talks for resumption of dialogues , by when can we expect a response to that from the Indian side. b)Prime Minister Singh is expected to meet Prime Minister Miyawala Nawaz Sharif along the side-lines of United Nations General Assembly, so how would you see the relations with Pakistan playing up in terms of talks. Also there is video that has been now doing rounds of some of the killers of Capt. Saurabh Kalia whereas we heard Mr. Rehman Malik when he was on India tour saying that he could have died because of bad weather. How does India intend to take up this issue?

Foreign Secretary: First, it is always been India's policy to develop peaceful and cooperative relations with Pakistan. Naturally, this presupposes an environment free of violence and of terror. On the dialogue with Pakistan, this was resumed in 2011. Two rounds have been held since then and we will be picking up the threads. There is a new government in Pakistan now. We will be picking up the threads from where we left off with the old government. On the incident relating to the TV footage of Capt. Saurabh Kalia, you must be aware that we strongly condemn any treatment of our soldiers that is not in line with the Geneva Conventions. This is precisely why the issue has been repeatedly taken up starting with Mr. Jaswant Singh with his then counterpart Mr. Sartaj Aziz. It was also raised in Geneva and we have continuously been taking up this issue with the Pakistani Government. If there are some new facts that have come to light, we will assess it and then we will decide how to proceed further in taking this up.

Q: This is about Bhutan. There are many observers who felt that India's decision to suspend the fuel subsidy to Bhutan was a major factor in swinging the elections. How do we address their perception and now that the subsidy has been restored and new government is in place, is there a High-level visit which is on the cards?

Foreign Secretary: As you know, India and Bhutan share a unique relationship which has always been characterized by mutual trust and confidence. We are working closely with the new government of Bhutan to continue to consolidate our privileged partnership and I can confirm to you that as of today the unfortunate technical lapse that has led to this kind of comment and debate is now a thing of the past. We attach priority to our relationship with Bhutan and I am glad to inform you that my first bilateral visit will be to Bhutan. You are also aware that our Prime Minister has invited the Bhutanese Prime Minister to visit India and I will be visiting Thimpu and when I am there I will consult with our Bhutanese friends on how we can work towards an early visit of Prime Minister Tobgay to India.

045. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs regarding protection of Interest and Welfare of Overseas Indian Workers.

New Delhi, August 22, 2013.

The Government of India has taken several initiatives to protect the interest and welfare of overseas Indian workers. India has signed Labour agreements with Jordan and Qatar and bilateral Memoranda of understanding (MoU) with the major worker receiving Countries for ensuring protection and welfare of Indian emigrants. MoUs were signed with United Arab of Emigrates, Kuwait, Oman, Malaysia and Bahrain.

The Government has also taken measures for protecting the safety and welfare of women workers of the Emigration Check Required (ECR) category to emigrate to 17 notified countries such as restriction of 30years for women emigrating on ECR passports to ECR countries, minimum referral wage for emigrants being fixed by Mission , security deposit of 2500 dollars to be paid by foreign employer, compulsory pre-attestation of employment documents by the Indian Mission concerned for all women emigrants, pre-paid mobile phone facility for housemaids to be provided by foreign employer and operating shelters for distressed emigrants by Indian Missions .

Moreover A 24x7 toll-free helpline that is Overseas Workers Resource Centre (OWRC) has been set up in Delhi to enable emigrants and prospective emigrants to seek information and file complaints against recruiting agents and foreign employers. Migration Resource Centers (MRCs) have been set up at Cochin, Hyderabad and Panchkula in (Haryana). A Nation-wide Awareness-cum-Publicity Campaign through Media has been taken up to educate potential emigrants including benefits or hazards of legal and illegal migration . Indian Community Welfare Fund(ICWF) has been established in all the Indian Missions for on-site welfare of emigrants. Around 28,000 emigrants have benefitted from the Scheme during the last three years and Rs.37 crores has been utilized for the purpose. For redressal of grievances at Dubai at the Indian Workers Resource Centre (IWRC) there is a 24x7 toll free multilingual helpline. Apart form this Computerized emigration clearance system exist in all Protector of Emigration offices.

This information was given by Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs Shri Vayalar Ravi in Parliament in a written reply today.

046. Address of Prime Minister at the conferment of the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development on Liberian President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf.

New Delhi, September 12, 2013.

“It is a great privilege to have amidst us Her Excellency President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf of Liberia on the occasion of the conferment on her of the prestigious Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development for the year 2012.

Every recipient of this award has left an indelible imprint on history and made a difference to the lives of people, societies and nations. This year, we honour a person who not only meets those criteria, but also embodies the character, the convictions and the courage of the personality after whom this prestigious award is named. She also holds dear the very same causes that were particularly important and dear to Shrimati Indira Gandhi.

Shrimati Indira Gandhi laboured tirelessly in the causes of peace and a just international order. When asked whether India leaned left or right, her answer was that India stood upright. She campaigned resolutely for a life of dignity, equality, justice and opportunity for the weakest and most vulnerable sections of society. Her rallying cry against poverty and her staunch defence of India’s security and territorial integrity remain indelibly inscribed on our memories. Sustainability and inclusiveness were at the heart of Shrimati Indira Gandhi’s vision of social and economic development. This is reflected in her pioneering emphasis on the protection of the human environment.

For Indira ji, India’s own independence and development were indivisibly linked to freedom and progress throughout the developing world, especially in Africa. Her association with the African continent is reflected in the abiding friendships she built with its leaders and its people. She crafted a modern vision of a relationship that was founded on an old bond between India and Africa. This bond was forged by trade and culture, nurtured by our common struggle against colonialism and our shared aspirations for development and sustained by the rich legacy of our leaders like Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru, Shrimati Indira Gandhi and Shri Rajiv Gandhi. All of them believed that Africa's success was important not just for the wonderful people of this rich continent, but also for the world as a whole.

Today, India's relations with Africa are defined by emotions, values and interests. An ocean separates us but a shared destiny unites us. Ours is a natural partnership between people with common concerns and values. It is imperative for our progress and development and for shaping a world that accommodates our aspirations. We feel for Africa's challenges, and we rejoice in the successes we see there.

Therefore, Madam President, your acceptance of the award and your presence here today add a very special lustre to this occasion. The remarkable story of your life, Madam President, is a reminder of the timeless truth that an enterprising human spirit driven by a great moral cause can overcome any adversity and challenge.

Yours, Madam President, is a fascinating journey. Between the professional heights that you scaled in public, private and multilateral institutions and your long periods of political exile, you maintained your spirit of selfless devotion to the cause of your people and your country. This moving and inspiring journey is one that only those with strength, intellect and character of the highest order can undertake.

Madam President, you have made history as the first elected female head of state in Africa. More importantly, you have set your country on the path of peace, stability, democracy and development after two decades of suppression, violence and conflict. You have reached out to your neighbours in recognition of the reality that Liberia's future is linked to peace and stability in its region. Your struggles through two decades of strife reflect the challenges of a continent in transition. Your success shows the hope and promise of your country, your region and your continent. You have therefore richly deserved the accolades and awards that have been bestowed upon you.

Madam President, it is often easy to end a conflict, but hard to win enduring peace. It is sometimes easier to end violence and injustice, but more difficult to heal and to reconcile. Getting political freedom does not always lead to sustained democracy. You and your nation have shown great wisdom in addressing these challenges and we wish you continued success on that global path.

Madam President, today, as India celebrates your life, your vision and your efforts, we also promise to be a reliable and enduring partner and friend in Liberia's peaceful development. We are grateful to you and your people for hosting a small community of Indians and a growing number of Indian investors in Liberia. Our two nations are committed to forge a partnership that will demonstrate that neither asymmetry of size nor the challenge of distance matters, when nations with shared values and mutual respect work together for mutual benefit and the larger good of humanity.

I congratulate an ardent democrat and a champion of peace, who has both transformed Liberia and is a symbol of a resurgent Africa, on receiving the Indira Gandhi Prize. Madam President, you serve as an inspiration not just for women but for all those who seek a better life for their fellow human beings. I wish you continuing success as you work with your people to chart a new course for your great country."

047. Speech of National Security Advisor Shivshanakr Menon at the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis on 'Kautilya's Arthashastr'.

New Delhi, October 8, 2013.

Dr. Arvind Gupta, Director IDSA,

Ladies and Gentlemen.

Thank you for asking me to speak at this seminar on Developing Indigenous Concepts and Vocabulary: Kautilya's Arthashastra. This is indeed a welcome initiative that the IDSA is carrying forward. I was impressed by the range of scholarship reflected in the papers that are being presented here and look forward to reading them. We have come a long way in the year since your first seminar. My congratulations to Arvind Gupta and all those who have contributed to this exercise.

Your seminar is a welcome initiative because, in my opinion, the study of Kautilya is one of the significant ways in which we can become more self-conscious about the strategic culture that we have, and in which we can contribute to its evolution. Too much of our earlier scholarship on the Arthashastra attempted to apply the Arthashastra mechanically or formulaically to present policy dilemmas or issues, such as how to deal with Pakistan or our nuclear policy. This may yield some useful insights in a tactical sense. In fact, it is my belief that the results of a Kautilyan analysis would not be very different from our present nuclear policy or policy towards Pakistan. But the larger point is that a mechanical application of “Kautilyan” formulae to our present condition does not contribute to building our capability to think strategically. Your seminar, on the other hand, will do so.

What then should we be studying of the Arthashastra?

Exactly what you are proposing to do — the concepts and, even more significantly, the ways of thinking that the Arthashastra reveals. This is useful because in many ways the world which we face today, (of multiple states, of several major powers, of an uneven but lumpy distribution of power among those major states even while the system has one predominant military power), is similar to the world that Kautilya operated in when he built the Mauryan Empire to greatness. There are no exact parallels in history, but there are certainly ways of thinking conditioned by context and similar circumstance. While our technologies and experiences may be very different from those Kautilya knew, human nature, politics and state behaviour do not appear to have changed quite as much or so drastically as to be unrecognizable. In other words, since Kautilya's time theories have multiplied and changed drastically, politics has not.

That may explain why the Arthashastra is so integral to our strategic culture, and to the ways in which the ordinary Indian thinks of these issues. The Arthashastra is certainly not the only work that has shaped our strategic culture, for there are other works from the past, like the Shantiparva of the Mahabharata, that also play a formative role in popular thinking. Besides, the modern Western overlay of the nineteenth and twentieth century on our academic thinking is now very strong. But there is no gainsaying the fundamental importance of the Arthashastra in our thinking. Kautilyan ideas of mandalas, of the basic functions of the state, of the necessity and justification for the use of force, and of raison d'état, are part of the popular vocabulary and thinking on politics and international relations in India. Much of this is unselfconscious and instinctive today. Your work here is therefore important in bringing us to the next stage of self-aware thinking on these issues.

The last few years have already seen considerable progress in this direction. Since the time when the IDSA's first Director K. Subrahmaniam ploughed a lonely furrow, there has been a significant increase in the number of Indian scholars, think-tanks and institutions teaching, researching and commenting on strategic issues. The problem now is not one of quantity but of quality, of coherence, and of analytical rigour in that effort. Most important is the issue of relevance to Indian conditions and needs, which can not result from the wholesale borrowing of concepts and ways of thinking from abroad. I welcome the IDSA continuing to lead this effort, as it has from the beginning, and am most impressed by all that you have done under Arvind Gupta's leadership to achieve these goals.

With these few words, let me wish you success and fulfillment in your work on Kautilya, encourage the IDSA to continue this good work, and wish your seminar great success.

Thank you

048. Speech by P. Chidambaram, Finance Minister, at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace on Recapturing India's Growth Momentum.

October 11, 2013.

Dr. Perkovich, Vice President for Studies at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Ladies and Gentlemen!

Thank you for the invitation to speak at one of the oldest and well-regarded global think tanks. I understand Carnegie is in the midst of establishing a Carnegie South Asia Centre based in New Delhi, and I welcome that initiative. Carnegie currently has two captains of Indian industry on its Board of Directors, Shri Sunil Mittal and Shri Ratan Tata. I am glad to see these growing Carnegie-India links. One of Carnegie's core priorities today is building a research program on India's political economy. To this end, I gather you have recently launched your "India Decides 2014" initiative. I wish you all the best in this exercise, but may I tell you in advance that your study will discover that India will vote my government back to power. I thought I may caution you lest you should waste too much time and effort to figure this out.

Let me now turn to the topic of India's economic growth. India's growth story attracted the attention of the world when our economy grew at an average of 8.5 per cent per annum during the period, 2004-05 to 2010-11. This was achieved despite the strong negative spill-over effects of the global financial crisis in 2008 and subsequently. Growth slowed down in the crisis year, 2008-09, but India took the world by surprise by rebounding quickly from the slower growth of 6.7 per cent in that year to record rates of growth of 8.6 per cent in 2009-10 and 9.3 per cent in 2010-11. However, there was a further downturn in the global economy in 2011 on account of the sovereign debt crisis in Europe and the subsequent slump in the World economy. We also witnessed the emergence of domestic constraints on investment and consumption. As a consequence, India's growth rate declined again to 6.2 per cent in 2011-12 and further to 5.0 per cent in 2012-13. The increasing trade deficit and fall in net invisible earnings led to a widening of the current account deficit to USD 88 billion or 4.8 per cent of GDP in 2012-13. With a sharp slowdown in manufacturing growth and a moderation in the expansion of services, the growth in the first quarter of 2013-14 further declined to 4.4 per cent. India's experience in this period is not unique. Virtually all the major emerging economies around the world have seen a sharp decline in growth — the so-called Great Descent.

However, we are now seeing that some of the worst-affected countries of the Euro zone are showing signs of recovery, with significant improvements in their current account and fiscal deficits. The expectations of improvement in the economic and financial conditions of the US, coupled with the decision of the Fed to postpone the tapering of the quantitative easing, have shaped expectations of a gradual global revival. But I am aware that there may be possible 'bumps' on the road ahead. In line with this emerging global outlook, the Indian economy has also showed early indications of recovery with a pick-up in exports in July, August and September – our second quarter; reversal of the negative growth in manufacturing; and a reasonable rise in freight traffic, indicative of economic activity picking up. With very good rainfall in the current year and a sharp increase in the sown area, we expect robust growth in farm output. We have also taken numerous reform measures over the past one year. We expect these measures to show their impact from the second half of the current fiscal and believe that the Indian economy will grow at over 5.0 per cent and perhaps closer to 5.5 per cent in 2013-14. I know that the World Economic Outlook report does not share my optimism, but I may tell you that we do not share their pessimism. Set against the current global economic background, even a growth rate of 5.0 per cent looks good, but is much lower than the ambitious standards that we set for ourselves in 2004. I would be the first person to say that we need to do better and recapture the growth momentum of the last decade.

Macro economists maintain a very clear distinction between trend and fluctuations. The fluctuations are the function of open economy macroeconomics, of fiscal policy and of monetary policy. To understand trend growth, however, we have to look deeper. Trend growth is largely determined by the underlying microeconomic fundamentals. In the next ten minutes I wish to speak to you about the microeconomic fundamentals which have given us one doubling of our GDP every decade. In my reckoning, there are at least six main stories:

- (i) Demographics. As is well known, India has young demographics. Alongside, we are doing well on improving the quality of the workforce. Household survey data (the CMIE Consumer Pyramids database) shows that for children of age 12, literacy is now 95%. We have a great surge in college enrolment: a full one-fifth of 21-year-olds now have a college degree. Every year, millions of young people are added to the labour force and their education is qualitatively superior to that of the elderly cohort leaving the labour force. We have also launched an ambitious national mission on Skilling in order to qualify young men and women with only a school education for jobs in the manufacturing and service sectors.
- (ii) The second growth fundamental is international economic integration. On the current account and on the financial account, India is now engaging with the world on an unprecedented scale. Gross flows on the current account are now 63.3 per cent of GDP and gross flows on the financial account are now 55.3 per cent of GDP. These add up to gross flows across the border of 118.6 per cent of GDP. This makes India one of the more open economies of the world. Engagement with the world drives a flow of ideas into the economy, which is a growth fundamental.
- (iii) The third growth fundamental is an increasingly “capable” financial system. On average, we invest 35 per cent of GDP every year. Finance is what determines the allocative efficiency of how this investment is done. What industries and what firms get is controlled by the financial system. We are taking measured steps on strengthening the financial system and taking the best that the global financial system has to offer. Every year, our financial system is getting better and stronger and, through this, we expect to translate our good investment to GDP ratio into a higher GDP growth rate. I shall speak a bit more on this in a moment.

- (iv) The fourth growth fundamental is sophisticated firms. As all of you are aware, Indian firms are increasingly becoming capable and competitive. We used to think – and fear — that if India opened up, our so-called large firms (I shall not take names) were third world dinosaurs that would collapse in the face of global competition. Instead, we have a clutch of firms in steel, oil and gas, mining, power, information technology, and hospitality that have become multinationals and are buying out companies in the advanced economies.
- (v) The fifth growth fundamental is sophistication of the workforce. A young girl of age 21, who started her labour market career in 1991, now has 21 years of experience in a competitive and globalised market economy. She has dealt with modern technology, foreign companies, and a truly competitive domestic environment. The forty-somethings of India today are qualitatively superior to the older cohorts who grew up in a closed economy and did not face modern technology or foreign companies or competition.
- (vi) The sixth growth fundamental - and I know this will be contested by many - is democracy. While it is fashionable to criticise the workings of Indian democracy, when we look deeper, I think it is working reasonably well. Liberal democracy is the ultimate foundation of rule of law and legal certainty, without which nobody can trust a country or invest in it. At its best, democracy is a great conversation, where diverse views and aspirations get heard, and the issues that genuinely concern the majority of the people become the priorities of policy makers. On a bigger scale of history, when we start from 1947, I think India has fared well on the project of constructing a liberal and open democracy.

To summarize, the Indian trend growth of the last 21 years was caused by several microeconomic fundamentals, and I have listed six of them. Nothing has changed on these. In fact our resolve to strengthen these fundamentals has become stronger. I believe India continues to have great prospects based on these fundamentals.

From the viewpoint of public policy, our job is to clear our minds of old cobwebs as well as of day to day problems and stay focused on laying the long-term foundations of a capable State that is able to deliver.

While India has greatly deregulated, there is much more to be done. However, looming large is the issue of State "capacity". We need a State that has in place institutions to resolve market failures. We need a State that will deliver public goods quietly, efficiently and economically. This is the prime challenge in India today. In a liberal democracy, we need to build the full framework of laws that will clearly articulate specific objectives, empower the arms of government that will enforce these laws, and put in place mechanisms that will ensure performance and accountability.

If you believe what our newspapers and television channels report you may conclude that no Indian politician or civil servant is doing any work. Actually, the pace of work has been quite hectic. Let me illustrate this with examples of what have been done to improve the Indian financial system, only in 2013. So far, we have had four historic events. A commission of eminent people has drafted a new Indian Financial Code: a path breaking piece of law that has been drafted to replace 50 existing laws governing finance with a single, integrated, coherent, modern financial law. This is a law which dwarfs the scope of the Dodd-Frank Act. We have enacted a brand new Companies Act to replace a law that was 57 years old. We have shifted the subject of commodity futures to the Ministry of Finance, something which has not been possible in the US even after the 2008 crisis. We have enacted a law establishing the Defined Contribution Pension system under a statutory regulator. The New Pension System is already one of the world's big individual account DC pension systems with over 6 million participants.

Each of these four was a huge project involving enormous planning and preparation. The genesis of the Indian Financial Code goes back to 2004, when we started deep thinking about the possibilities of Mumbai as an international financial centre. The Companies Bill was pending before Parliament for many years. The work on shifting commodity futures to the Ministry of Finance began in 2003. The NPS was originally designed in 1999. All these projects have been largely bipartisan. We have dug in through these years, chipped away at the objections, cultivated the technical capacity, and built consensus, through which we are now able to reap the fruits of the long years of labour.

To conclude, I would urge everyone not to lose sight of the microeconomic foundations of Indian growth, which are delivering one doubling of GDP every decade. That is not an insignificant achievement. It will find its place in history in due course. The defining challenge in India however is in augmenting State capacity. How do we construct a competent and ethical State, that will minimally interfere with the rights of citizens in property and contracting, that will focus on preventing or resolving market failures, and that will successfully produce and deliver public goods? A wave of new thinking in public administration is now underway in India. We need to build completely new organization charts within government, leading to sharply focused agencies that can be held accountable for delivery on specific objectives. Those are the first few lines of an absorbing new story that I hope will begin in the near future. And that is the story that I am sure will captivate the world in the next ten to twenty years, as India takes its place as the third or fourth largest economy in the world.

049. Vice President Addresses on “Effective Political Structure- A Critical Ingredient to Operationalize National Security Strategy”.

New Delhi, October 14, 2013.

Effective Political Structure-A Critical Ingredient to operationalize National Security Strategy”

“The subject given to me for today’s talk strides across disciplines, touches upon the efficacy of political structures, drifts into the nebulous arena of national security, and delves into the bewildering complications of putting into operation a strategy to attain the objectives of both.

Such an endeavour, at the best of times, would be challenging. An attempt to do it in a single lecture may be foolhardy. The wish of the College, nevertheless, has to be complied with.

I begin with a truism. A principal objective of social order is to seek security and to develop the capacity to face challenges to it through a systemic attempt to synergize its various dimensions. National security today means comprehensive security, traditional and non-traditional, covering the core ingredients and values that a society considers essential for its existence and wellbeing and which it is prepared to defend by all the means available to it. The political structure of society is part of these core values and has a vital interest in defending it. This establishes a convergence of interests.

The efficacy of individual political structures is to be judged in terms of the objectives they assign to themselves. In the case of a modern democratic state, its four essential ingredients are legitimacy, consensus, consent, and compliance. The citizen body bestows legitimacy by concurrence on the objectives and gives its consent to comply with the directives pursuant to these objectives. It also expects appropriate results; failure or shortfalls is factored into the democratic accountability process.

Power in a state, as this audience knows well, emanates from a complex web of interdependencies between political, economic and social institutions and activities which divide power centres and which create multiple pressures to comply. State power is a central aspect of these structures but it is not the only key variable.

The nature of threats that a modern state faces or is likely to face in the foreseeable future fall into seven categories:

- ❑ Threats emanating from the nature of the international order: These include international arrangements that threaten security, political or economic interests and resultant constraints on policy options.

Ideological threats: These may relate to external or domestic attempts to posit an alternate view to the basic structure of the state and its core values and principles.

- ❑ Territorial disputes with neighbours, resulting in threats of invasion and/or subversion.

- ❑ Constraints on access to resources essential for survival and development of a society. Related to this would be the imperative of regional water management and energy-related external requirements.
- ❑ Threats emanating from new technologies: It has been argued that 'the potential exists for a cyber attack to inflict relatively prompt, catastrophic levels of destruction on states with advanced infrastructures'.
- ❑ Internal threats to social cohesion and harmony: These range from acute religious and political dissent, ethnic, regional and caste-based grievances, separatist agendas, ideological movements motivated by economic deprivation or injustice, traffic in drugs and narcotics, and terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.
- ❑ Natural calamities, environmental and health threats inclusive of, but not confined to, climate change, pandemics and related matters.

A comprehensive and effective national security strategy is expected to cater to each and all of these and to have for it the requisite human and material resources and organizational structure. For purposes of today's discussion, our focus is on the latter and specifically on its political and policy aspects.

At this point in the discussion, questions become specific. Is the political and policy-making framework specific and identifiable? Does it have political legitimacy? Is it accountable? Is its functioning regular or sporadic? What are the parameters for its interaction with the professional and expert segments of the national security establishment? What is its efficacy in terms of the tasks it has set for itself?

It is tempting, in such a framework, to compare the structures and results of (a) countries with similar systems and (b) those with different systems. The difficulty with such comparisons lies in developing comparable models in terms of the nature and size of challenges. No two societies are identical, nor are their problems similar. In the final analysis, therefore, the analyst is compelled to treat each model as sui generis; lessons from such comparisons, therefore, are at best of a generalised nature.

This necessarily brings us to the case of India and to seek answers to the six questions in relation to India. The answers, to my understanding, would be as follows:

- ❑ The locus of policy-making is in the government of the day, elected and installed by the constitutional process.
- ❑ The government is accountable to Parliament on a regular basis and to the electorate periodically.
- ❑ Policy-making and implementation is the responsibility of the Government. This is done through the Cabinet, the Cabinet Committee on Security (CCS) and the National Security Council. Given the diversity of threats to national security, responses would be specific to situations but without losing sight of the fact that the perspective has to be holistic rather than compartmentalised since one set of threats often impact on others.

II

The above depicts the formal arrangement. How reflective is it of reality? Here, two areas need to be explored. Firstly, how effective is the accountability mechanism? Secondly, how comprehensive is the policy-making process, vertically and horizontally, to ensure that the interaction between different strategic objectives are given due weight and made to retain a balance?

The accountability mechanism is posited in Parliament and in its Standing Committee on Defence (DSC). The instruments available to Members are Questions and debates or discussions under various rules of procedure. Data for the period 2003-04 to 2013 shows that the Ministry of Defence answered 2857 questions in Rajya Sabha and 3599 in Lok Sabha. In addition, a few discussions were also held. Of course, more can be done if the functioning of Parliament could be taken beyond the present sub-optimal level, energised, and if the gap between commitment and practice could be lessened.

The responsibility of the Standing Committee on Defence (consisting of 21 Lok Sabha and 10 Rajya Sabha Members) is to (a) consider Demands for Grant (b) examine and report on proposed Bills referred to it (c) consider and report on the Annual Report of the Ministry of Defence and (d) consider and report on national basic long term policy documents referred to it by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses of Parliament. The Committee can avail of expert opinion or opinion of the public as inputs in its reports. Ministers are not members of the Standing Committees and, by convention, are not required to appear before it. In the present (15th) Lok Sabha, the DSC has so far made twenty reports on different aspects of the responsibilities entrusted to the Ministry of Defence.

So a mechanism for accountability is very much in place. It can be argued, with some justification, that this aspect of Parliament's work should be made better known to the public. Another corrective could be a provision for attendance by Ministers since this would lend greater political credence to the work of the Committee.

The question of the comprehensiveness of the policy-making process and of the synergy between the military and civil inputs into it continues to be the subject of much discussion. The Kargil Review Committee Report of December 1999 recommended that 'the entire gamut of national security management and apex decision-making and the structure and interface between the Ministry of Defence and the Armed Forces Headquarters can be comprehensively studied and reorganised.' A recommendation to this effect was also made by the Standing Committee on Defence. More recently, the Naresh Chandra Task Force on National Security has examined the matter further. Since its report is not yet in the public domain, the best I can do is to refer you to the National Security Advisor's observations made here a few months back.

I am personally not knowledgeable enough to comment on the desirability or otherwise of creating new institutions on the pattern of what exist elsewhere. Part of the problem, I suspect, may be attributable to the ethos of work culture, a propensity to be exclusive, and a reluctance to share information for the common good. Secrecy is often a device to hide inadequacy.

Addressing the Combined Commanders Conference last October, the Prime Minister spoke about the need for 'constructive debate' on integrated decision-making structures and weaponry and on the sources of new threats.

In view of the seamlessness of civil and military inputs that go into the formulation and operationalisation of national security strategy, strict compartmentalization of civil and military dimensions of national security is erroneous. Instead, the need of the moment is a more integrated approach with dynamic oversight of the elected political leadership. There is no reason why different disciplines cannot be interactive and cooperative in pursuit of a common objective.

It has been argued in many quarters that apart from periodic net assessments, we in India do not have a formal document in the shape of a National Security Strategy document to project officially a comprehensive approach to security. The intention, I presume, is to go beyond Chapter 1 of the Annual Report of the Ministry of Defence. Much of the discussion on this pertains only to traditional or military security and unavoidably touching upon developing challenges and evolving capacities and strategies. This has limited utility since comprehensive planning scenarios and predictions do not cover all eventualities and history is replete with the fate of doctrines that did not survive the first contact with the enemy.

III

Since this talk is about the need for an effective political structure to operationalise national security strategy, allow me to touch upon the non-traditional segment of national security. This puts comprehensive or human security at the centre of the debate. The picture here is fuzzier because while governments and societies have traditionally attended to its individual aspects, fewer attempts have been made to develop a conceptual framework. And yet, as Professor Kanti Bajpai puts it, 'the key argument is that ultimately state security is for individual security. In the end, the state is the provider of security for the citizenry; it is a means to security, and its security cannot be the end of security'. The dimensions of this perception are still evolving though segments relating to economic security, public health and pandemics, drug trafficking, human rights, environmental disasters and other matters affecting the public directly

Political structures have to be effective in dealing with both internal and external threats to national security. Territorial integrity can be protected by creating strong, well equipped and modern armed forces, para-military and civil police institutions, which can protect the country against external aggression, armed rebellion and internal disturbances.

Either as a result of the political processes or distorted socio-economic developments, many of the internal threats and challenges that societies experience emanate from real or perceived exclusion from the mainstream of a section of its citizen body. This is true of India also.

Rampant poverty, rising inequality, unemployment, illiteracy, discrimination based on religion, caste, creed, language, race or ethnicity etc. are some of the reasons which lead to extremism and violence. We have examples of this in different parts of the country and not all of them can be attributed to external inputs. These problems do not have a purely military solution and also cannot be treated merely as a law and order issue. They require robust political intervention aimed at seeking solutions within the constitutional framework.

Keeping our neighbourhood peaceful and stable is also essential for pursuit of our developmental goals. Government seeks this through peaceful resolution of disputes, enhanced trade and economic relations, and greater people to people contacts. These are essential ingredients of a comprehensive strategy to safeguard and promote national interest. Diplomacy has a critical role in building international partnerships for confronting trans-national threats and in promoting interests.

For each of these, effective domestic political structures are essential in order to enable a country participate in the international fora on equal footing, with credible domestic mandate, so that national interests can be safeguarded in bilateral and multilateral negotiations.

Let me end by stating that sustainable national security for a country is an outcome of the good health and strength of its society and economy, its defence preparedness and competence of its diplomatic institutions. The attainment of these goals in a coordinated manner depends critically on an effective and responsive political structure.

I thank you for inviting me today.

Jai Hind.

050. Speech of the Vice President at the Oxford Centre for Islamic Studies on “Identity and Citizenship: An Indian Perspective”.

Oxford, November 1, 2013.

Identity and Citizenship: An Indian Perspective

It is a privilege to be invited to address this august audience. Conscious of the gap between the immensity of the honour and the inadequacies of the speaker, I am humbled by the realisation that six decades earlier Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, a very distinguished predecessor of mine as Vice President of India, was for long the Spalding Professor of Eastern Religion and Ethics at this University.

A few years back, when I was in the vicinity of Oxford in a group dabbling in the unfathomable mysteries of the Iraq quagmire, Dr. Nizami provided a welcome distraction by inviting me to see the site, and the plans, for the new building of the Centre. He also mentioned the debate on the proposed architectural design, and of the view in some quarters that it would change the inherited landscape of a hallowed community.

The change, as I understood it, implied an assertion of identity. It is now conceded, I am told, that the new structure did no aesthetic or spiritual damage to the skyline of Oxford. Perhaps, the injection of diversity has enriched it.

Speculating on the ‘ifs’ of history, Edward Gibbon had visualised a course of events that might have resulted in the teaching of the interpretations of the Qur’an at Oxford. He could not foresee a happier, intellectually more rewarding, happening that the concluding decades of the twentieth century would bring forth. Among its manifestations is the establishment of this Centre.

This is a tribute to Oxford's capacity to accommodate the unusual.

Encouraged by this accommodative approach, I wish today to share some thoughts on the twin concepts of identity and citizenship and the manner of their impact on the building blocks of modern states.

Needless to say, it is an Indian perspective and draws in good measure on the Indian experience. It may be of relevance to some of the objectives of this Centre, since India counts amongst its citizens the third largest Muslim population in the world and the largest Muslim minority anywhere.

It is a truism that the human being is a social creature and societies consist of individuals who come together for a set of common purposes for whose achievement they agree to abide by a set of rules and, to that extent and for those purposes, give their tacit or explicit consent to the abridgment of individual free will or action. They, in other words, do not get subsumed totally in a larger whole and retain their individual identity. This identity, as pointed out by William James and sustained by more recent social-psychological research, is a compound of the material, social and spiritual self. Further more, and when acting together in smaller groups, they develop group identities and these too are retained. Thus in every society we have identities at three or four levels, namely individual, group, regional and national. We can also, in this age of globalisation, add an international dimension to it. The challenge in all societies, therefore, is to accommodate these layered identities in a framework that is harmonious and optimally conducive to social purpose.

Much has been written about identity, its theoretical framework and practical manifestations. An eminent sociologist has defined it as 'the process of construction of meaning on the basis of a cultural attribute, or a related set of cultural attributes, that is given priority over other sources of meaning. For a given individual, or a collective of actors, there may be a plurality of identities.' The question is to determine how this identification is expressed in everyday life of individuals who are members of such specific groups?

Conceptually and legally, citizenship of a modern state provides this framework and encapsulates the totality of rights and duties emanating from the membership of the citizen body, inclusive of the right of representation and the right to hold office under the state. By the same logic, a certain tension is built into the relationship, even if the society happens to be relatively homogenous, in itself a rarity in modern times. Rabindranath Tagore described his family background as a 'confluence of three cultures, Hindu, Mohammedan and British'. Away from India but in our own neighbourhood, Abdolkarim Soroush depicted the Iranian Muslim as 'the carrier of three cultures at once' having national, religious and Western origins.

Thus instead of a narrow concept of a singular identity implied by the classical concept of citizenship, the need is to recognise and accommodate the existence of a plurality of social identities. The contours of this were explored earlier by Thomas Marshall, and more recently by Will Kymlicka, Manuel Castells, Charles Taylor, Gurpreet Mahajan and others. Put simply, it has been argued that identity encapsulates the notion of authenticity, the demand for recognition, the idea of difference and the principle of equal dignity.

What then has been the Indian approach to, and experience of, the concepts of identity and of citizenship in a modern state? What is the accommodative framework for identities in modern India?

A distinctive feature of Indian society is its heterogeneity. The historian Ramachandra Guha depicts our recent history as 'a series of conflict maps' involving caste, language, religion and class and opines that conflicts relating to these 'operate both singly and in tandem'. Each of these also brings forth an identity of varying intensity; together, they constitute what the opening line of the Preamble of our Constitution depicts as We, the People of India.

In other words, the superstructure of a democratic polity and a secular state structure put in place after independence on August 15, 1947 is anchored in the existential reality of a plural society. It is reflective of India's cultural past. Our culture is synthetic in character and, as a historian of another generation put it, 'embraces in its orbit beliefs, customs, rites, institutions, arts, religions and philosophies belonging to different strata of societies in varying stages of development. It eternally seeks to find a unity for the heterogeneous elements which make up its totality'. It is a veritable human laboratory where the cross breeding of ideas, beliefs and cultural traditions has been in progress for a few thousand years. The national movement recognised this cultural plurality and sought to base a national identity on it. The size and diversity of the Indian landscape makes it essential. A population of 1.27 billion comprising of over 4,635 communities 78 percent of whom are not only linguistic and cultural but social categories. Religious minorities constitute 19.4 percent of the population; of these, Muslims account for 13.4 percent amounting in absolute terms to around 160 million. The human diversities are both hierarchical and spatial. 'The de jure WE, the sovereign people is in reality a fragmented 'we', divided by yawning gaps that remain to be bridged.' Around 22 per cent of our people live below the official poverty line and the health and education indicators for the population as a whole, despite recent correctives, leave much to be desired.

The contestation over citizenship surfaced early and was evident in the debates of the Constituent Assembly. The notion of citizenship was historically alien to Indian experience since throughout our long history (barring a few exceptions in the earliest period) the operative framework was that of ruler and subject. There was, of course, no dearth of prescriptions about the duties of rulers towards their subjects and about the dispensation of justice but none of these went beyond Kautilya's pious dictum that 'a king who observes his duty of protecting his people justly and according to the law will go to heaven, whereas one who does not protect them or inflict unjust punishment will not'. The constitution-makers therefore had to address three dimensions of the question relating to status, rights, and identity, to determine who is to be a citizen, what rights are to be bestowed on the citizen, and the manner in which the multiplicity of claimed identities is to be accommodated. This involved addressing three aspects of the question: legal, political and psychological. The outcome was the notion of national-civic rather than national-ethnic, emphasizing that the individual was the basic unit of citizenship whose inclusion in polity was on terms of equality with every other citizen. At the same time and taking societal realities into account, the concept of group-differentiated citizenship was grafted to assure the minorities and other identity-based groups that 'the application of difference-blind principles of equality will not be allowed to operate in a way that is unmindful of their special needs, and that these needs arising out of cultural difference or minority status will receive due attention in policy, and that the polity will be truly inclusive in its embrace'.

The crafting of the Constitution was diligent and its contents reflective of the high ideals that motivated its authors. The Preamble moved Sir Ernest Barker to reproduce it at the beginning of his last book because, as he put it, it seemed 'to state in a brief and pithy form the argument of much of the book and it may accordingly serve as a keynote'. The Constitution's chapter on Fundamental Rights addresses inter alia the protection of identities, and accommodation of diversities. These identities could be regional, religious, linguistic, tribal, caste-based, and gender-based. The right to equality and equal protection of the laws and prohibition of discrimination on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, or place of birth is guaranteed. Affirmative action is mandated by law in favour of those historically discriminated against on grounds of caste or tribal origin as well as all those who are identified as socially and educationally backward. Also guaranteed is freedom of conscience and the right to freely profess, practice and propagate religion. Yet another section safeguards the right to have and conserve language, script or culture and the right of religious or linguistic minorities to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice. The purpose of these, taken together, is to bestow recognition, acknowledge the difference and thereby confer dignity that is an essential concomitant of equality.

An inherent problem nevertheless was evident to the constitution-makers, or at least to some of them. This was expressed candidly, almost prophetically, by Ambedkar in words that need to be cited in full:

"On the 26th of January 1950, we are going to enter into a life of contradictions. In politics we will have equality and in social and economic life we will have inequality. In politics we will be recognizing the principle of one man one vote and one vote one value. In our social and economic life, we shall, by reason of our social and economic structure, continue to deny the principle of one man one value. How long shall we continue to live this life of contradictions? How long shall we continue to deny equality in our social and economic life? If we continue to deny it for long, we will do so only by putting our political democracy in peril. We must remove this contradiction at the earliest possible moment or else those who suffer from inequality will blow up the structure of political democracy which this Assembly has so laboriously built up."

Thus the objective of securing civic, political, economic, social and cultural rights as essential ingredients of citizenship was clearly delineated and the challenge squarely posed to the beneficiaries of the new dispensation. The dire prognosis of the last sentence, however, has not come to pass! The very complexity of the landscape impedes linear and drastic happenings. One serious student of Indian polity has noted that 'the Indian model of development is characterised by the politicisation of a fragmented social structure, through a wide dispersal and permeation of political forms, values and ideologies'. As a result and in a segmented society and unequal economy, the quest for substantive equality and justice remains work in progress. Nevertheless, the slowing down of the egalitarian social revolution that was envisaged by the Constitution-makers and the implicit social contract inherent in it, does give rise to wider concerns about its implications.

Two questions arise out of this and need to be explored. Firstly, what has been the impact of this on the perception of identity? Secondly, how has the challenge been addressed?

Identity assertion in any society has three sets of impulses: civic equality, liberty and opportunity. Identity groups are a byproduct of the right of freedom of association. They can be cultural, voluntary, ascriptive and religious. They are neither good nor bad in themselves but do present challenges to democratic justice. This is true of India also. The functioning of democratic institutions and the deepening of the democratic process along with the efforts to implement constitutional mandates for affirmative action induced higher levels of political mobilisation. These manifested themselves, most visibly, in demand groups each with its own identity. A multiplication of identities seeking social status and economic wellbeing through the route of politics thus emerged as a logical consequence.

It has been argued that 'casteism in politics is no more and no less than politicisation of caste which, in turn, leads to a transformation of the caste system'. The same holds for religious and tribal minorities. In an evolving quasi-federal state structure, yet another imperative emanates from the requirements of regional or state identity. 'The new politics of caste has also reinforced old, upper caste solidarities. Brahmin, Kshatriya, Bramharishi Sabhas have re-emerged and the logic of electoral politics has forced the forces of social justice to strike strategic alliances with them'. These, together, have induced political actors to develop narrower foci on their electoral management methodologies; these have been reinforced by the shortcomings of the first-past-the-post electoral system and the ability of a high percentage of candidates to win on a plurality rather than the majority of votes cast in an election.

A society so diverse inevitably faced the challenge of integration. It was two fold, physical and emotional. The former, involving the merger of 554 large and miniscule princely states with those parts of the former British India that became the Indian Republic, was attended to with commendable speed and was almost completed by the end of 1949. Emotional integration, on the other hand, was a more complex process. As early as 1902, Tagore had cautioned that unity cannot be brought about by enacting a law and in 1949 Sardar Patel, the architect of integration of states, had laid emphasis on the process taking 'healthy roots' and bringing forth 'a wider outlook and a broader vision.' The challenges posed by it were aptly summed up by a political scientist:

'In the semantics of functional politics the term national integration means, and ought to mean, cohesion and not fusion, unity and not uniformity, reconciliation and not merger, accommodation and not annihilation, synthesis and not dissolution, solidarity and not regimentation of the several discrete segments of the people constituting the larger political community

'Obviously, then, Integration is not a process of conversion of diversities into a uniformity but a congruence of diversities leading to a unity in which both the varieties and similarities are maintained.'

Thus the Indian approach steers clear of notions of assimilation and adaptation, philosophically and in practice. Instead, the management of diversity to ensure (in Nehru's words) the integration of minds and hearts is accepted as an ongoing national priority. Some have described it as the 'salad-bowl' approach, with each ingredient identifiable and yet together bringing forth an appetising product.

The question of minority rights as a marker of identity, and their accommodation within the ambit of citizenship rights, remains a live one. It is not so much on the principle of minority rights (which is unambiguously recognised in the Constitution) as to the extent of their realisation in actual practice. A government-commissioned report on Diversity Index some years back concluded that 'unequal economic opportunities lead to unequal outcomes which in turn lead to unequal access to political power. This creates a vicious circle since unequal power structure determines the nature and functioning of the institutions and their policies'. This and other official reports delineate areas that need to be visited more purposefully.

How far can this to be taken? A Constitutional Amendment in 1977, adding a section on Fundamental Duties of citizens as part of the Directive Principles of State Policy, carries a clause stipulating promotion of harmony and spirit of brotherhood "transcending religious, linguistic and regional or sectional diversities." It is at this point that the rights of identity and the duties of citizenship intersect. The identification of this point, with any degree of precision, is another matter. The litmus test, eventually, must be the maintenance of social cohesiveness through a sense of citizenship premised on equality of status and opportunity so essential for the maintenance of democracy. The need for sustaining and reinvigoration of this sentiment is thus essential.

The Constitution of India was promulgated in 1950. The past six decades have witnessed immense changes in social and political perceptions in societies the world over. Theories and practices of 'assimilation', 'one-national mould' and the 'melting pot' have been discredited and generally abandoned; instead, evolving perceptions and practical compulsions led individual societies to accept diversity and cultural pluralism. In many places, on the other hand, a process of reversal induced by xenophobia, Islamophobia and migrant-related anxieties, is also under way. The concept of multiculturalism, pioneered to address accommodation of diversity within the framework of democracy, is being openly or tacitly challenged. An ardent advocate of multiculturalism concedes that 'not all attempts to adopt new models of multicultural citizenship have taken root or succeeded in achieving their intended effects' because 'multiculturalism works best if relations between the state and minorities are seen as an issue of social policy, not as an issue of state security'.

There is an Indian segment to the debate on multiculturalism. It has been argued that 'while a multicultural polity was designed, the principles of multiculturalism were not systematically enunciated.' It is asserted that multiculturalism goes beyond tolerance and probes areas of cultural discrimination that may exist even after legal equality has been established; it therefore 'needs to explore ways by which the sense of alienation and disadvantage that comes with being a minority is visibly diminished, but in a way that does not replace the power of the homogenising state with that of the community. It should therefore aspire towards a form of citizenship that is marked neither by a universalism generated by complete homogenisation, nor by particularism of self-identical and closed communities'.

These debates and practices vindicate in good measure the vision and foresight displayed by the founding fathers of the Republic of India. The vindication is greater when considered in the context of the size and diversity of India and the stresses and strains it has withstood in this period. And yet, we cannot rest on our laurels since impulses tilting towards 'assimilationist' and homogenising approaches do exist, suggestive of imagined otherness and seeking uniformity at the expense of diversity. Indian pluralism, as a careful observer puts it, 'continues to be hard won'. Hence the persisting need of reinforcing and improving present practices and the principles underlying them. Such an endeavour would continue to be fruitful as long as 'the glue of solidarity' around the civic ideal remains sufficiently cohesive, reinforced by the existential reality of market unity and the imperative of national security. There is no reason to be sceptical about the stability of the tripod.

Thank you

051. Highlights of Prime Minister's address at the Annual Conclave of Indian Ambassadors/High Commissioners abroad.

New Delhi, November 4, 2013.

“India in the Changing World: Priorities and Principles”

This is a time of immense flux in the world and you work in an environment of expanding responsibilities, rising expectations and relentless public scrutiny. That you do this with modest resources and often in difficult and dangerous circumstances is to your great credit.

Over these past nine years, our Government has sought to engineer a fundamental reset in our foreign policy based on our national priorities and what we believe is India's role and destiny in world affairs.

The great leaders of our freedom struggle instinctively saw the intrinsic link between our foreign policy and the economic aspirations of our people. A free India had to be also a prosperous India. This has been the central vision of our foreign policy and must continue to remain so. Therefore, the foreign policy we pursue must reflect our national priorities and concerns and be in concert with our capabilities.

I believe five principles have come to define our foreign policy.

First, recognition that India's relations with the world – both major powers and our Asian neighbours – are increasingly shaped by our developmental priorities. The single most important objective of Indian foreign policy has to be to create a global environment conducive to the well-being of our great country.

Second, that greater integration with the world economy will benefit India and enable our people to realize their creative potential.

Third, we seek stable, long term and mutually beneficial relations with all major powers. We are prepared to work with the international community to create a global economic and security environment beneficial to all nations.

Fourth, we recognize that the Indian sub-continent's shared destiny requires greater regional cooperation and connectivity. Towards this end, we must strengthen regional institutional capability and capacity and invest in connectivity.

Fifth, our foreign policy is not defined merely by our interests, but also by the values which are very dear to our people. India's experiment of pursuing economic development within the framework of a plural, secular and liberal democracy has inspired people around the world and should continue to do so.

As you go about discharging your day-to-day responsibilities, please ask yourselves how these five principles are guiding your work.

I do appreciate that, in recent years, MEA has adapted well to its changing environment and emerging responsibilities. I also recognize that your efforts must be supported by adequate and timely availability of resources. I would urge you, however, to prioritize the use of our limited financial and human resources in the most efficient and effective manner.

The work you do is central to the progress of our country.

I hope your deliberations will help the government deal more competently with the world. I wish them all success.

Thank you

052. Vice President Inaugurates Fourth Biennial Conference of Asian Society of International Law.

New Delhi, November 14, 2013.

"I am happy to be here today for the Fourth Biennial Conference of Asian Society of International Law (ASIL) being hosted by the Indian Society of International Law (ISIL). I extend my warm welcome to the distinguished participants.

By a happy coincidence today we are celebrating the birthday of India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, who had inaugurated the ISIL over 50 years ago. This platform has excelled as a proponent of the developing countries' perspectives on international legal issues.

The objective of the 4th Biennial Conference of the ASIL is to provide a vibrant platform for meaningful interaction and exchange among scholars and practitioners in the field of international law in order to promote better understanding of international legal issues and to comprehend the emerging trends.

The theme of this Conference: “Asia and International Law in the Twenty-first Century: New Horizons” is appropriate and timely. The topics chosen are relevant and reflective of changing times and perceptions.

India’s commitment to international law is enshrined in Article 51(c) of our Constitution which enjoins the State to endeavour to foster respect for international law and treaty obligations.

This audience is aware that Public International Law has evolved rapidly since the beginning of the 20th century. Three stages are discernable. Initially, it was essentially European in the first half of the century since nations in the rest of the world did not have independent status. In that period, and in the period between the two World Wars, the focus was primarily on protection of civilians, humane treatment of soldiers, rights of minorities in Europe and related matters.

In the second half of the 20th century, international law addressed itself to matters pertaining to human rights, genocide, crimes against humanity and racial discrimination. More specifically, it was compelled to address questions of the right of self determination of people against colonialism; legitimacy of liberation movements and assertion of the right of permanent sovereignty over natural resources by the newly independent countries. This included extension of their jurisdiction over fisheries and other natural resources in the adjacent seas up to 200 nautical miles, declaration of common heritage of mankind of the seabed or subsoil and declaration of outer space as a common province of mankind.

International law was thus essentially concerned with political and economic relations between the States and also between States, the United Nations and other international organisations.

Since the 1990s and in the first decade of 21st century, international law has witnessed a significant evolution in both substantive and institutional terms. It has now developed into an extensive web of rules and institutions, which also concern and address the role and responsibilities of non-state actors, including individuals.

Today, international law touches the lives of millions by addressing trade and business, trans-national crimes, human trafficking, climate change, terrorism, cyber crime, corruption, torture, intellectual property rights, child rights, women's rights, rights of the disabled, piracy and a host of other issues.

Globalisation has added another dimension to traditional international law. For this reason, India and other Asian countries are committed to ensuring that relations between sovereign States are governed by international law and not by use of force; hence their active participation in shaping it to safeguard their essential national interests.

Public international law questions that confront us today include the following:

- ❑ The prohibition on the use of force and settlement of disputes by peaceful means. This is specifically mandated in the Charter of the United Nations and yet continues to be violated or abridged from time to time.
- ❑ The observance of human rights by states is specifically prescribed but continues to be side-stepped for considerations of statecraft and power politics.
- ❑ The protection of individuals during wars and armed conflicts. International humanitarian law defines the rules of war and especially those concerning the protection of civilians, especially women and children, the wounded and prisoners of war.
- ❑ The fight against terrorism and other serious crimes: Efforts to deal with such threats can only be effective if they are based on internationally recognised legal principles.
- ❑ Piracy: The piracy and armed robbery at sea which are endangering maritime security and navigation could be tackled effectively if States cooperate within the framework of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea of 1982 and the series of resolutions adopted by the UN Security Council.

- ❑ Environment and sustainable development: The more universal the rules on protecting climate and preserving natural resources are, the more effective they will be. For equity and justice, the ongoing negotiations on climate change should be based on the broad principle of “common but differentiated responsibility”, as enshrined in the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, 1992.
- ❑ Corruption, which has become a major governance challenge globally today, can be tackled by the States by cooperating with each other in the framework of the UN Convention against Corruption of 2002.
- ❑ Cyber Crime and Cyber Security: The growth of ICT, has contributed immensely to development and human welfare. However, it has also created risks in cyber space thereby adversely affecting national and international security.
- ❑ Investment: International understandings are essential for ensuring balance between the protection of investment and developmental needs of societies.

In the context of WTO and the stalled Doha Round, I hope this Conference will explore some of the more common legal cultural disconnects and commonalities that exist across Asia. The issues range from implementation of intellectual property commitments pursuant to the TRIPS, as it conflicts with non-individualised and more communal notions of property, to such issues as the legal cultures associated with rural and agricultural communities conflicting with commitments on subsidies and tariffs.

This Conference is expected to come up with specific recommendations for handling such legal cultural disconnects, so as to advance both the goals of international trade and the survival of local, unique and cherished legal cultural approaches that would otherwise be at risk from a blind implementation of international trade commitments.

The rationale for the observance of international norms is evident. Just as men cannot live together in a society without laws and customs to regulate their actions, similarly States cannot relate to each other without usages and conventions to regulate their conduct. International Law should not be considered as impinging on state sovereignty by creating new structures or norms for regulating relations across borders. These can be useful tools for interaction and conduct of relations between civilised societies.

International Law creates principles and practices for governing relations between nation states with principles of sovereignty and equality as the basis for the interaction.

International Law as we know derives not from actions of any executive or legislative branch or any central authority, but from customary law and agreements signed by sovereign States. It also differs in respect of enforcement, which depends not on the power and authority of a central government, but on reciprocity, collective action and international norms.

The conflict between international law and national sovereignty is today the subject to vigorous debates and there is a growing trend towards judging a State's domestic actions in the light of international law and standards. It is the general belief that the nation-state is the primary unit of international affairs, and only States may choose to voluntarily enter into commitments.

Certain scholars and political leaders feel that these modern developments endanger nation states by taking power away from the governments and ceding it to international bodies such as the U.N. and the World Bank. They argue that international law has evolved to a point where it exists separately from the mere consent of states and erodes their sovereignty.

This occurs especially when states violate or deviate from the accepted standards of conduct adhered to by all law abiding nations.

What then is the prospect for international society? One answer was provided many years back by the late Headley Bull. A sustainable world order would be possible, he said, if elements constituting the international society maintain and extend the consensus about common interests and values that together constitute a cosmopolitan culture.

Such a consensus, it is evident, cannot be imposed and would be possible only with the participation and consent, amongst others, of Asian countries. I hope this Conference would come out with some practical and workable ideas in this regard.

I wish the conference success in its deliberations.”

Opportunities and Challenges for Diaspora Investments in India:

Shri P Chidambaram,

Finance Minister, Government of India

It is said that ‘you can take an Indian out of India, but you cannot take India out of an Indian’. Indians, anywhere in the world and irrespective of their citizenship, retain a lot of their ‘Indianness’. It is certainly true of overseas Indian workers and it is also true of first generation migrants. I find that it is also true of the children of first generation migrants. One would have to wait some more years to see whether this unique characteristic of Indians is preserved by the children of children of first generation migrants.

Nowhere is this more true than in Singapore. There is a ‘little India’ in Singapore. The sights, the sounds, and the flavour of that sweet spot in this international city are almost totally Indian – even while the residents are genuinely proud of being citizens or long-term residents of Singapore. Singapore represents a plural society at its best. Is it any wonder therefore that the diaspora in Singapore is perhaps among the most diverse and most progressive diaspora of the great cities of the world? I am therefore truly happy to be part of the second South Asian Diaspora

Convention and to address you on 'Opportunities and Challenges for Diaspora Investments in India.' I compliment the Institute of South Asian Studies of the National University of Singapore for bringing together the region's policy makers, business persons, authors, journalists and leaders of civil society on the platform of SADC 2013

The Indian diaspora is heterogeneous. There are descendants of those who migrated in the 17th century and again in the 19th century to South Africa and further to the west. There are Indian families who travelled to other South Asian and South East Asian countries for work or trade since the beginning of the 20th century and have happily settled down there for several decades. There are first generation migrants and their children and grandchildren who live in developed countries such as the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. In the last forty years, a very large number of unskilled and skilled workers have found job opportunities in the Middle East and live and work for long years in those countries. Recent years have witnessed another wave of migration to countries such as Australia, New Zealand and Hong Kong, China.

Each of these segments has a distinct view of India and the India Opportunity. These views are, understandably, moulded by the country and the environment in which they live and by their own perceptions of what is good policy and what is good governance. However, it is important to remember that India is a country of 1.3 billion people. Three hundred million at the top can be described as the aspirational class, but there is an equal number that looks towards the Government for help and support – and subsidies – to climb out of poverty. It is not a mean achievement that India has, in a period of ten years between 2002 and 2012, reduced the incidence of poverty by over 15 percent. I would urge you to keep that context in mind while you draw your conclusions and make your choices.

Let me begin by speaking to you on the India Opportunity.

India's potential growth rate is 8 percent and above. In the best year, the savings rate was 36.8 percent and the investment rate was 38.1 percent. In the worst years, the savings and investment rates were 30.8 percent and 32.8 percent respectively. Between 2005 and 2008, India achieved its potential – in fact exceeded it – and recorded growth rates of over 9 percent. During the 20-year period from 1991 to 2011, the average growth rate was 7 percent.

The key to sustain a high growth rate is investment. Other factors are also important. The fiscal deficit must be contained below the widely-accepted norm of 3 percent of GDP. The Current Account Deficit must be capable of being financed safely. Inflation, even allowing for the space required by a developing economy, must be moderate. The exchange rate must be resilient even while it is insulated against speculative attacks and excessive volatility. Any Government must be fully alive to these fundamental requirements of a stable and progressive economy. Given these fundamentals, it is investment that will determine the growth rate of an economy.

I believe that there is no country in the world that requires so much investment as India does in virtually every sector of the economy. On infrastructure alone, the 12th Plan document covering the period 2012-2017 envisages an investment of USD 1 trillion, of which one-half is expected to come from the private sector. A few examples will illustrate the magnitude of the need and the challenge. In the power sector, the 12th Plan document projects an addition of 88,577 mega watts of capacity during the period of five years. In railways, we intend to add 10,000 kilometres of rail track while doubling 5,344 kilometres of rail track. In steel, we plan to enhance capacity from the current level of 84.4 MnT to 142.3 MnT. In the port sector, total capacity of our ports will increase from 702.8 MnT in 2012 to 884.6 MnT by 2017. We are now engaged in building 34 non-metro airports.

I may also give you the example of Delhi Mumbai Industrial Corridor. It will entail an investment of USD 90 billion. Together with the dedicated western freight corridor being built by the Railways, it will link Delhi to Mumbai's ports. It will cover a length of 1483 kilometres and pass through six States. There will be nine mega industrial zones of about 200-250 sq. kms each, high speed freight lines, and a six-lane intersection-free expressway connecting India's political capital to its commercial capital. Along the corridor, there will be three ports, six airports, a 4000 MW power plant, and a plug-and-play environment to promote manufacturing industries. Other corridors that are in the planning stage are the Chennai Bengaluru Industrial Corridor and the Bengaluru Mumbai Economic Corridor.

India can offer to the investor a variety of investment opportunities. There are Government securities and corporate bonds. There are mutual funds and Infrastructure Development Funds. We can offer equity in our public sector enterprises that are under the disinvestment programme. There is a clutch of projects in the oil and gas sector that will welcome strategic investors. Shortly, we will offer a public sector Exchange Traded Fund that will allow you to buy units backed by underlying equity shares. Private promoters have offered a number of specific projects in sectors such as roads, power, urban infrastructure, ports and water transportation, and in Special Economic Zones.

Just as India and other developing countries need investment, let us also remember that the capital surplus countries need to invest. They cannot invest in their domestic economies alone. Given the increase in their savings and their ageing populations, they need to find investments that will give them higher returns over a long term. They need to find avenues of investment for their growing pension funds and sovereign wealth funds. The Indian equity market has given a compounded annual growth rate of 15.8 percent over the 10-year period 2003-2013. Government securities have given a return of 7.92 percent, 8.52 percent and 8.36 percent in the last three years. I believe that there are few markets in the world which give comparable returns.

Mindful of the fundamental factors that I mentioned earlier in my speech, we have taken a number of measures to stabilize the economy and give greater confidence to the investors. Last year, after I returned to the Ministry of Finance, I announced a new fiscal consolidation path under which the fiscal deficit would be contained at 5.3 percent in 2012-13 and reduced every year until it reached 3 percent in 2016-17. At the end of March, 2013, we did better than the target and the fiscal deficit was contained at 4.9 percent. For the current year, I have drawn a red line at the original target of 4.8 percent and I have made it clear that the red line will not be breached under any circumstances. The Current Account Deficit for 2012-13 was at a challenging level of USD 88 billion. In the current year we have taken a number of measures – some of them like compressing gold imports have already yielded results – and I am confident that the CAD will be contained at a level well below USD 60 billion and that it will be fully and safely financed.

Inflation has been more intractable. Both the Wholesale Price Index (WPI) and the Consumer Price Index (CPI) are driven by food inflation. The weights of food items in the two indices are 24.3 percent and 46.2 percent, respectively. It may surprise you that there is reasonable stability in the prices of major commodities such as wheat and rice. Sugar prices have actually fallen by about Rs.6 per kilogram. However, prices of fruit, vegetables, meat, milk and eggs are elevated and are driving the inflation rate. Several steps, including increase in the policy rate, have been taken and we hope that the WPI-based inflation rate will moderate to a level below 5 percent.

The exchange rate witnessed a period of considerable volatility during May to August this year. The reasons are well known. Many currencies were affected. The Reserve Bank of India took a number of steps – some that were clearly emergency steps – and once volatility was contained, some of those steps were reversed. We believe that the exchange rate of the rupee today is a better reflection of its true value and we are confident that both volatility and speculation have been largely contained. The excellent market response to the rupee bond floated by IFC two days ago indicates market confidence in the Indian rupee, although I would hesitate to draw conclusions at this stage.

All these, in my view, augur well for attracting more investments.

Apart from the macro economic fundamentals that I referred to, I would ask the diaspora to look at some micro economic fundamentals of the Indian economy. The first is our young demographic. A little more than one-half of the people of India are below the age of 25 years. Literacy among children below the age of 12 years is 95 percent. There is a surge in enrolment in colleges and a full one-fifth of all 21-year olds have a college degree. We have launched an ambitious skill development programme that aims to skill 500 million youth by 2022.

The second is the integration of the Indian economy with the world economy. Gross flows on the current account are 63 percent of the GDP and on the financial account 55 percent of the GDP adding up to gross flows across the border of 118 percent of the GDP.

The third is the increasingly 'capable' financial system. We have drafted a new Indian Financial Code that will replace the fifty existing laws concerning finance. We have a brand new Companies Act and a statute-mandated Defined Contribution Pension system.

The fourth is the international clout – based on capacity and competitiveness – acquired by a clutch of Indian firms in steel, oil and gas, mining, power, information technology and hospitality.

The fifth is the famed consumption-led growth story. India's household final consumption is an impressive 57 percent of the GDP making it one of the few vibrant markets, in a sluggish world economy, for goods and services.

The sixth is the maturity of our democracy and our adherence to a model governed by the rule of law. India has entered into 72 Bilateral Investment Protection Agreements. India is also a partner country in four Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreements and is in the process of negotiating an RCEP with the ASEAN countries.

I believe that, taken together, the macro economic fundamentals and the micro economic fundamentals make India an attractive and safe investment destination.

The Indian diaspora is estimated at over 20 million. While it is only 2 percent of India's population, their total wealth is estimated at USD 1 trillion which is nearly 50 percent of India's GDP. Of the USD 1 trillion, one-half is estimated to be financial assets. The income of the Indian diaspora is estimated at USD 400 billion a year.

We take the diaspora seriously. There is an exclusive Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs. In 2007, the Ministry set up the Overseas Indian Facilitation Centre (OIFC) in partnership with CII, a leading industry association, as a non-profit body to guide and facilitate investments of Indians residing abroad. OIFC offers well-researched fact-files on different sectors of the Indian economy. The Government has also set up a Global Advisory Council that consists of the diaspora's scholars, scientists, business persons, and political and community leaders.

'Invest India' is our official agency dedicated to investment promotion and facilitation. It is a joint venture between FICCI, a leading chamber of commerce, and the Government. It is the first reference point for the global investment community and provides sector-specific and State-specific information to a foreign investor, assist in expediting regulatory approvals, and offers hand-holding services.

At present, we recognize a Non-resident Indian (NRI), a Person of Indian Origin (PIO) and an Overseas Citizen of India (OCI). An NRI has near-equal treatment with resident Indians and can invest in Government securities, Treasury Bills, domestic mutual funds etc. An NRI can also invest in the construction sector including townships and housing. A PIO may not be an Indian citizen but has parity with NRIs in the matter of investments except acquisition of agricultural property. A PIO does not require a visa to visit India. An OCI is of Indian origin but is a citizen of another country. He is entitled to a multiple entry, multi-purpose life-long visa and has parity with PIOs in the matter of investments.

Eleven million Indians live and work in Asia and the Middle East. Of these, 5.9 million are in the countries of the Middle East, there are 2.0 million in Malaysia and 500,000 in Singapore. The bulk of them are unskilled or semi-skilled workers. Nevertheless, they have high savings and they remit a large amount of money to their families in India. You are aware that, since 2003, India has been the largest recipient of overseas remittances. Remittances rose from a modest USD 2 billion in 1991 to USD 70 billion in 2013. Indian banks offer attractive products to non-resident Indians. Among them is the famous FCNR(B) scheme. Two months ago, the Reserve Bank opened a special window to attract more funds into FCNR(B) and I am happy to report that, as I speak to you today, the scheme, which will close on November 30, 2013, has received USD 16 billion. The FCNR(B) allows the account holder to retain his deposits in foreign currency and earn interest at a rate up to LIBOR plus 400 bps.

In recent times, we have turned our attention to the successful Indian-origin entrepreneurs and high networth individuals. Many of them are at the top of the pyramid. In the Silicon Valley alone, four out of 10 start-ups are promoted by NRIs and PIOs and seven percent of the valley's hi-tech firms are led by Indian CEOs. Some of the well-known names are Vinod Dham, Vinod Khosla, Bharat Desai, Gururaj Deshpande and KB Chandrasekhar. The Forbes list of the United States' Top 400 rich contains the names of three persons of Indian origin. It did not also surprise me to read that the Forbes list of Singapore's Top 40 rich contains the names of four non-resident Indians. There are over 40,000 Indian origin doctors in the US and over 15,000 Indian origin doctors in the UK. The number of engineers, chartered accountants and lawyers of Indian origin in the developed countries runs into several thousands. They represent the best of India that was chiselled and honed in the universities and institutions of those countries. India, the country of their origin or the country of their forefathers, is truly proud of them. A number of them are present in this distinguished gathering and I admire and salute your love and affection for India and the Indian people.

Ladies and gentlemen, planet Earth is home to seven billion people. No home can hold the very rich and the very poor together without addressing the question of inequality and poverty. The world is undergoing a rebalancing of economic power. Rebalancing of political power will, inevitably, follow in due course. The Asian countries are likely to become the pivot of the rebalanced world. The Asian diaspora, including the Indian diaspora, must therefore help the countries of their origin. Nothing can be more satisfying and rewarding than Indians living abroad connecting with Indians living in India. In a world committed to ending extreme poverty and sharing prosperity, that connection is best forged through investments.

Let me conclude by welcoming the Indian diaspora to seize the India opportunity, invest in India, and be part of the unfolding India story that will make India the third largest economy, even in nominal terms, by the year 2030.

I thank the Institute of South Asian Studies, and particularly Ambassador Gopinath Pillai and Professor Tan, for the opportunity to address this distinguished gathering. I thank you for your patience and courtesy.

054. Excerpts of address by the Prime Minister at the Combined Commanders' Conference.

New Delhi, November 22, 2013.

It is a great pleasure to have the opportunity to speak once again to this gathering of the senior-most leadership of our Armed Forces. Our men and women in uniform function in an exceedingly complex and difficult security environment, but they have always faced the challenge with exemplary professionalism, valour and commitment. As their leaders, you have played a critical role in building the confidence and pride that our forces inspire in our nation. I therefore thank each and every one of you for your services.

Let me at the outset pay solemn tribute to those who have in the past year laid down their lives in the service of our country. We remember with particular pain and sadness our sailors who perished in the submarine accident in Mumbai and our soldiers who died defending our borders and combating terrorism. We also recall our pilots and airmen, who sacrificed themselves to rescue precious lives in Uttarakhand. We owe a profound debt of gratitude to them. Equally, we remember many others whose stories did not become public but who were claimed by the daily risks of soldiering in inhospitable and hostile environments. They too served our country and served it well.

Friends, I do not intend my address today to be a rendition of our achievements in the arena of defence in this past year. You are already aware of those and know the subject much better. Instead, I wish to focus on the environment around us and what I think we need to do to ensure that our armed forces are fully enabled to handle it. Let me outline a few general points that come to mind before dealing with the unique security challenges that confront us in our neighbourhood.

Firstly, if you survey the global strategic environment over the past decade, it would not escape your notice that, just as the economic pendulum is shifting inexorably from west to east, so is the strategic focus, as exemplified by the increasing contestation in the seas to our east and the related "pivot" or "rebalancing" by the US in this area. This, to my mind, is a development fraught with uncertainty. We don't yet know whether these economic and strategic transitions will be peaceful, but that is the challenge this audience must grapple with institutionally.

Secondly, and evidently, globalization is a phenomenon that we have to deal with in every domain. But this in itself is not a new or a post- Cold War phenomenon. We only need recall Pliny and the Roman Empire and the bemoaning of the fact that the coffers of imperial Rome were being emptied to import silk and spice from the east. What is new today is the pace and texture of globalization driven by technology, including the ubiquitous Internet.

While globalization has induced growing and complex inter-dependencies among states and multinationals on the economic and trade front, it has also nurtured intense competition and rivalries in the security domain. Managing this contradictory tenor, which has been highlighted by the global surveillance operation mounted by the US National Security Agency, is also a policy imperative for us. Naturally, our objective must be to acquire tangible national capacity, or what the lexicon now refers to as comprehensive national power. This is the amalgam of economic, technological and industrial prowess, buttressed by the appropriate military sinews.

Thirdly, the first six decades after independence have seen the country facing many challenges to its territorial integrity and sovereignty. And the nation and its military have risen to the occasion every time. Fittingly, the people acknowledge the Indian military for its patriotism and professionalism. But what is the way ahead for the Indian military? We are committed to the path of peace but the military must be able to protect Indian interests if they are threatened or challenged. Thus, creating a military that is driven by abiding interests, as opposed to the transient threat, is the driving principle.

Coming to the situation in our neighbourhood, there is no doubt that we will continue to confront formidable challenges. Further afield, the continuing turmoil in West Asia could not only imperil our energy security and the livelihood and safety of seven million Indians, but also become a crucible for radicalism, terrorism, arms proliferation and sectarian conflict that could touch our shores too. The Asia Pacific region, with which our relations are intensifying in every domain, is equally critical, not least because it is becoming the arena for shaping the behavior of major powers.

Our higher defence organization should pay close attention to these specific developments. In addition, our strategic horizons should also include the need to protect our global seaborne trade in goods, energy and minerals, the well-being of Indian expatriate communities worldwide and the growing global footprint of Indian capital. As our capabilities grow, we will increasingly be called upon to help in natural disasters or zones of conflict and instability.

How to deal with these multiple questions is the task before you. Allow me to share with you some of my thoughts on what we need to do internally and make a few brief points.

I urge the Defence Ministry and the armed forces, as also the DRDO, to build on this experience and urgently review the different Task Force reports that our government has initiated with a view to achieving a higher index of indigenous capability in military inventory production. For too long, we have debated the merits of private versus public sector. It would be more useful to think in terms of aggregate national capacity that harnesses the full power of our public sector, private enterprises, research laboratories and universities to create an innovative and efficient indigenous base for production, research and development. We must also take advantage of a favourable international environment to build a domestic defence industrial base.

We require urgent and tangible progress in establishing the right structures for higher defence management and the appropriate civil-military balance in decision making that our complex security environment demands. Again, I encourage you to give this the highest professional consideration, harmonize existing differences among the individual services and evolve a blue-print for the future. I can assure you of the most careful consideration of your recommendations by the political leadership.

The two issues that I have just raised are also relevant to a looming and a serious challenge before us. We need to match our investment in military equipment and forces to our national resources. During most of the past decade, we have had the benefit of average annual growth rates of 8%.

But the last two years have seen slow growth and we continue to face an uncertain international economic climate marked by volatile exchange rate fluctuations and the possibility of fragmenting trade regimes. I have no doubt that we will overcome our current economic slowdown, but we will have to exercise prudence in our defence acquisition plans and cut our coat according to our cloth. While we must take into account the capabilities of our adversaries, we have to plan our long term acquisition on the assumption of limited resource availability. This is an exercise that has to be done with a high degree of priority and urgency.

People are at the heart of our armed forces and it is the distinctive value system of the military that provides cohesion to its human resource. The globalization I referred to earlier and the rising levels of individual aspirations have had a significant impact on our people. The military is no exception. As the senior leadership, you are responsible for the lives and welfare of your men and women in uniform. As commanders, you also have to introspect over fidelity to inviolable principles and set an example. Where the institution has frayed, remedial policy initiatives are imperative and I urge you to heed the old adage that the management of human resources is of the highest importance to any military. The Indian military has an illustrious pedigree and there can be nobody who knows better than you how best to burnish it.

There have been concerns that have been raised in recent times about the nature of civil-military relations in our country. Let me assert, clearly and unequivocally, that the political leadership of India has the highest faith in its military and its institutional rectitude within the democratic framework. The apolitical nature of our military and its proven professionalism are the envy of the world and have also nurtured the Indian democratic experience. Our democracy and institutions have proven their ability to deal with any issues or doubts that may arise.

Friends, I know you will agree with me that the real strength of our country will come from an overriding sense of national purpose. We need to return our economy to the high growth path. We need to develop our industrial and manufacturing base. We need to unleash the power of innovation in India, so that we can find new solutions to our pressing challenges. We also need to make our economic development socially and economically more inclusive, regionally balanced and environmentally sustainable. Above all, we need to strengthen the values that define us - democracy, rule of law, individual liberties, social and religious harmony and commitment to global peace.

I know that our armed forces live by this creed and serve as an example to the rest of the world. They embody formidable strength, but wield it with maturity and responsibility. They are prepared for the toughest missions, but are committed to the cause of peace. They brave storms, extreme cold and searing heat to guard our nation, so that India can pursue its dreams. In the weeks and months ahead, our security challenges will remain complex but our resolve too must remain steadfast. I am confident that our armed forces will discharge their collective responsibility towards flag and country with the zeal and passion that has become their byword. I wish you all success in all your endeavours.
Thank you. Jai Hind.

New Delhi, November 28, 2013.

CNBC-TV18 (Ms Shereen Bhan): Hello! Welcome to The Appointment – The Election Exchange. I am Shereen Bhan and we are in conversation with the Minister of External Affairs Salman Khurshid.

Mr. Khurshid, I appreciate your joining us on CNBC-TV18. Let me start by asking you about what is being seen as this historic Iran pact. How much of a benefit is it going to be for India? There is all kinds of speculation on whether India actually played a role in brokering this peace agreement. Is that too much credit to us?

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): I guess people do take India seriously. We do not have to always step in and say we will play the honest broker and we will get everyone together. But the fact that India is around ...

CNBC-TV18: We were not a broker at all in this?

External Affairs Minister: We were not brokers, but the fact that we were around, the fact we kept our channels of communication with everyone, the fact that I visited Iran when they were under severe sanctions, the fact that we were in a constant conversation between ourselves in Europe with Cathy Ashton, with Secretary Kerry during his visit here and of course during my visit with the Prime Minister to the US, and of course we kept an open line with Iran. We had a lot of visits here; and when I went there I met President Rouhani in Bishkek on the sidelines of the SCO meeting. So, we were saying the sensible thing, and the sensible thing I believe was taken seriously. We were told periodically that Iran trusts you, continue talking to them. And just as they said, we do not think that we do not have communications with others but ...

CNBC-TV18: But were you the back channel?

External Affairs Minister: No, not back channels. Whatever we did was upfront. We would say that talk to Iran properly. They have a civilisational perception of themselves. You have to talk to them with that class. You have to talk to them with a sense of sincerity, and you will get a response from Iran. This is my reading. I gave this a year ago to Baroness Cathy Ashton. And I must say that she was extremely sensitive and she picked up the cues as it were rather well. And I think whatever else everyone will be seeing as having done but I think her sensible way of steering things towards a consensus has been quite remarkable.

CNBC-TV18: Now what is this really going to mean now in terms of India? And let me start talking specifics. What is it going to mean in terms of Iranian oil imports? The Oil Minister and you, you have been talking about increasing or hiking Iranian oil imports, which are down 40 per cent by the way year on year. How soon can we see a difference?

External Affairs Minister: You know why. It is because people were not willing to provide insurance for oil tankers because of their understanding of the sanctions. People were not willing to provide reinsurance for refineries in India.

CNBC-TV18: How soon can we see those channels being activated now that we have this pact in place?

External Affairs Minister: I think that the signals that we have had, these are only early signals that we have had, understandings that they have reached, what our Ambassador has conveyed to us. I think the details are being made available. I would imagine that this should open up many many avenues which could ultimately lead to a much more convenient passage of oil from Iran to us. Iran has been very keen to stand by India in its needs for sourcing energy. And we have always said to them that except for multilateral sanctions to which we will not be... (Inaudible)... Security Council, we are not accepting any other sanctions. But you may not accept sanctions, you may not endorse sanctions, but they do affect the banking system, they do affect the insurance channels and so on.

CNBC-TV18: I agree with you. But you must have had conversations with your counterpart in the Oil Ministry because you know Mr. Moily has said that we could see a savings in excess of US$ 8 billion if we were to import 11 million tonnes of Iranian crude. What can we really expect in this fiscal and then the next?

External Affairs Minister: I do not have a calculation on this. I think that calculation will have to be done by Mr. Moily's Ministry. But I am in touch with him, closely I am in touch with him. We will look at all possibilities that there are to ease the sense of confinement that we felt because there were restrictions. We had banking channels available up to a point and then they dried up as well. So, there was a severe problem of even if you wanted to, to be able to do it. But we continued. We continued in a very wholesome relationship with Iran.

I think the good thing is that Iran understood that we had taken a principled position about the NPT. We are not signatories. They are signatories. And we felt that those who are signatories must continue to comply with the NPT. That is all we said. We continued to say that they have a right for peaceful use of nuclear energy. And I think that has now come about quite apparently. So, at the end of the day I think it works out well. But this is only the first phase. There are other phases to come. But I think that Iran has shown the will, Iran has shown the commitment. I think that this is a very wholesome movement forward.

CNBC-TV18:What about this business of dealing with Iran in Rupees as far as crude imports are concerned? Where do things currently stand on that? And not just Iran but between you and the Commerce Minister we are given to understand that you are actively engaging other countries to be able to trade in Rupees as well.

External Affairs Minister: There I follow the leader the Commerce Minister because the Commerce Minister...(Inaudible)... with these issues. But we have given him support on this. You know that the oil trade we have had with Iran is 60:40 but we have not been giving everything in hard currency to them. And of course the money that we have been paying has been kept in banks here which can only be used to a certain extent because of the sanctions. Now that will open up and I think it will be much more convenient for them to be able to both to repatriate that money as well as invest it here in various forms in trade. But there are limits to how much you can use up for bilateral trade but also for investments downstream, upstream as far as the petrochemicals sector is concerned.

CNBC-TV18:Sir, the Iranian Delegation was here in the capital over the weekend. They said that they anticipate bilateral trade between the two countries going up from the US$ 15 billion currently to about US$ 20 billion. Is that a fair expectation?

External Affairs Minister: I think so. I think it is a fair expectation. What we are looking at is a major engagement with Iran. Over the years we have talked to them about the pipeline. They talked about the pipeline.

CNBC-TV18:Is it likely to be a reality now?

External Affairs Minister: I think it should. I think we should put our ambitions up a bit. Of course it is not going to be entirely a government-to-government thing because we need private sector investment. And I hope the private sector will get a strong signal from us that this is something that is on. Iran raised the issue again, they are very keen, and I very categorically said that we are on, we are interested, and we are committed to this. And the only way that they can export gas by pipeline to Pakistan is that it provides economies of scale by being pumped all the way to India. I think there is a double advantage – interdependence between Pakistan and India on something that is very important economically to both of us, and certainly to them because they would not be able to afford it otherwise, and of course a major link with Iran. Then once we have this pipeline going through, the TAPI pipeline going through, India is going to be a different place altogether.

CNBC-TV18: It is still far from reality. But let me ask you when do you believe that active engagement with Iran will start on the basis of Iranian oil imports because that is what the markets are excited about, that is what they want clarity on?

External Affairs Minister: It will be now. We are not going to wait. It will be now as we get to know the exact plan of action that they have worked out between 3+3 and Iran. As soon as we know the details, we will begin to work on them. Whichever windows open up, we will be there, we will be knocking on those windows eventually. So, there is not going to 'let us sit back and think about it for a while'. We are engaged. We have the infrastructure with them. We have the connectivity both in terms of politics as well as of interdependence. And as soon as the windows open, as I believe they are opening, we will be there.

CNBC-TV18: Let me now ask you about a possible backlash from countries like Israel and Saudi Arabia. Israel has come out very categorically and said that this is a historic mistake. Saudi Arabia has been a bit more sort of cautious in its opposition to this pact. Does India anticipate backlash because in a sense your foreign policy stance on Iran stands vindicated today? And if we are going to be upping our engagement with Iran, what is this actually going to mean?

External Affairs Minister: We have never made a secret of our relationship with Iran when we deal with Saudi Arabia. We have been very clear in our relationships in the world that our relationships are not predicated on our relationship with someone else. We have an outstanding relationship with the Saudis. I visited them before I went to Iran. I had a very very good round of meetings with the Saudis. And you can be sure that there is nothing that we have kept from anyone. Everybody knows we are transparent, we are above board, and that we have multiple relationships. There are disagreements or divergence of views on certain issues with one country but that does not mean that we do not have a convergence with that same country on another issue. Take Turkey, take Egypt, take Israel, take Saudi Arabia, take Iran, take Iraq – all these countries may have difference of opinion or divergence on particular aspects. But as far as we are concerned, on merit we have a very good relationship with all of them and that is how we would like to see it happen.

CNBC-TV18: Let me go away from Iran and talk to you about another controversial issue and that is this issue of bilaterals and specifically the bilateral that has been signed between India and the UAE which in a sense is linked to the Jet-Etihad deal. You were part of that Group of Ministers whose opinion was sought on whether or not this bilateral should have been changed. It is now a matter which is being challenged in court by Subramanian Swamy. What was your contention for changing the bilateral, because you voted in favour of the change because you believed that sovereign wealth funds from the UAE and we would see more investment coming in? What was the argument that you presented to change the bilateral?

External Affairs Minister: I cannot understand! I think it is less a case of our having to justify why we took the position we did than a case of other people having to justify why they are against this position. Investment in India – we do not want? Greater collaboration with UAE – we do not want?

CNBC-TV18: But the argument on the other side is that India loses its position as a hub, that Air India will suffer on account of this bilateral agreement, and that this is a bilateral agreement that is being in favour of a particular transaction.

External Affairs Minister: We are very clear. We live in a modern world of commerce. In the modern world of commerce who says that Air India should confine itself to carrying labour to the Middle East. We think that Air India can be the finest airline in the world; and I think Air India needs to be ambitious. These seats are available to Air India and to UAE airlines. They are available to both. And Air India should come forward and take these seats and use them. Now, you cannot be a dog in the manger saying, 'I cannot use these seats, therefore you must not give them to anyone else'. I do not think this will work anywhere in the world anymore.

CNBC-TV18: But why was this done as far as UAE was concerned? There was a position that the Government had taken that we are going to hold back as far as the negotiating of bilaterals is concerned. Requests had come in from Singapore etc., but the decision was not to look at or review bilaterals. Why then the decision to review the UAE bilateral?

External Affairs Minister: We are looking at bilaterals for others as well. And this is not just UAE, we are looking at Qatar as well. They want to renegotiate seats as well, and I think we should.

CNBC-TV18: But when will we see you review the bilateral with Qatar?

External Affairs Minister: That is for the Civil Aviation Ministry. The core mandate must come from the Civil Aviation Ministry. It is possible that sometimes they may think that they are not at present ready to take on another opportunity or challenge. We of course take it in the larger context of our relationship with the rest of the world. And each of these issues if they are very important to someone on the other side and they are not detrimental to us, detrimental to us in terms of the totality of investment that we can get into India, then why should we be niggardly and say no?

CNBC-TV18: But how much of the UAE bilateral is also in a sense linked to the telecom debacle? The UAE-Etiscalat lost significant amount of money in the 2G scam. How much of it was really in a sense to appease investor sentiment?

External Affairs Minister: It is not a question of appeasing investor sentiment. It is a simple question I ask. Do we need investment or we do not need investment? My understanding is that we need investment. And if we need investment, we must go and get it on the terms on which it is available so long as those terms are not detrimental or in principle unacceptable to us. Now if you go to the marketplace, you do not want to say I am going to fight with everybody in this market. You will be charming and you would be nice because you have to sell yourself. And you then go and negotiate a good price. But at the end of the day nobody else can tell you that you have not negotiated a good price. You are a free person. You have to go and decide what price you want to buy something at, what you need more and what you need less, and you take that decision as a sovereign country.

CNBC-TV18: Sir, how charming are you being when it comes to reviewing the BIPAs because that is another bone of contention? Where do things currently stand? There has been absolute silence on the BIPA.

External Affairs Minister: We have moved ahead on BIPA with the UAE where we did not have a BIPA. We have moved ahead on BIPA with UAE. I hope it will be signed shortly. And wherever we are negotiating a BIPA now, a standalone BIPA, we do indicate that this would have to be brought in line with whatever is the standard template that people have for BIPA for across the globe. I am told by the Finance Ministry that they are now within a whisker of getting the final template. Possibly in the month of December they will be ready with a template that will then be available for renegotiating BIPA with wherever we already have. But again, my understanding is that even as we negotiate BIPA we have got to understand that this is the high point for us to seek investment. There is an investment actually coming as a downpour into India today. We are lucky that investment lines have held, and that is wonderful. But in order to attract more investment, we need to be an attractive destination.

CNBC-TV18: Since you are talking about positioning India as an attractive destination, we are talking about investment protection agreements, let me talk to you about Vodafone. That in a sense was the start of the debacle as far as the India Story was concerned because it brought to light issues of tax uncertainty, of changing the rules of the game so to speak. Reconciliation talks have been continuing. There has been so much back and forth on this matter. Where do things currently stand? Are we going to see a resolution on the Vodafone issue in the tenure of the Government?

External Affairs Minister: There will be. There will be. It is not just the tenure of the Government but within the time that we have for legislation, because whatever solution is found and the negotiated settlement will then have to be reflected in legislation and it will have to come back to Parliament. My instinct and my understanding is that we have now possibly reached that stage where Finance Minister can now bring it to Parliament. The important thing to remember is that Vodafone was not the only issue. Many of us had different opinions on Vodafone. There were people who saw it from the point of view of the very opinion that you may find in the UK and in Europe where people have complained about companies coming in. ...(Inaudible)...

So, in that sense we were not completely way off the mark. But looking at what was important in terms of messages that we were sending to investors in the world ...

CNBC-TV18: I think because this was retrospective and because there was a Supreme Court judgement in favour of the company.

External Affairs Minister: So, there were problems and I think therefore we decided let us set those problems straight.

CNBC-TV18: Explain to me. You said that your instinct is that the Finance Minister is close to moving legislation on Vodafone matter and taking this to Parliament. As early as the Winter Session? And what do you mean by moving legislation? Will you move to amend the retrospective law?

External Affairs Minister: That he will have to take a call on. I do not want to foreclose anything that structurally what he thinks is the way to put a closure on this. But I do want to go back once again to what were the negative signals. The negative signals were not only about Vodafone, rightly or wrongly, but they were also about the way we through our courts handled a lot of other investments.

I believe, and I want to say this very clearly to you, that when we went back to the Supreme Court for an advisory opinion, there were nine questions that the Supreme Court was given. The Supreme Court said, we will answer five questions. They actually answered four. I think at some point of time the Supreme Court has to look at the fifth question and give us an answer. The fifth question was, when you decide something on the basis of domestic law, should you or should you not keep in mind the impact it has on the obligations that the sovereign government of the state has vis-a-vis other governments?

Obviously there are any number of cases that the Supreme Court has decided when it said that you must interpret the law in a manner consistent with and harmonious with your commitments to the rest of the world. And I think that fifth question that I thought as Minister of Law that we were desperately in need of an answer for from the Supreme Court, unfortunately we could not get. Now not having got an answer, we are handicapped. But at least I think I can expect and imagine what that answer would be if the Supreme Court finally was to handle it.

CNBC-TV18: But legislation to be moved as early as the Winter Session of Parliament?

External Affairs Minister: We probably have a last session because there will be one final session for vote on account, etc. But the last real legislative session will be Winter Session. So, I would imagine that if something is possible and needs to be done, it will be done during that Session. But this is a Finance Minister's call. I cannot, as I said, foreclose any decision that he takes.

CNBC-TV18: Since you were talking about your experience as a Law Minister, let me ask you a question which perhaps you looked at as well because it has been going back and forth for so long - the issue of the residual stake sale in Hindustan Zinc. This is a matter which was dealt with in 2002, that is when the original disinvestment took place. Today the Law Ministry and the Mines Ministry's opinion is that the Metals Corporation Act needs to be amended. The Finance Ministry believes if the original disinvestment was upheld by the Supreme Court in 2012, what is the issue with the residual stake sale? Where do you stand as a lawyer and the former Law Minister?

External Affairs Minister: Unfortunately I am not in the loop on this at all. All I would say is whatever we do, there is no morality involved in this. There is only good, sensible business sense that is involved, of course within the four corners of the Constitution, which is what the Supreme Court said. When they took up the auction issue, they said auction is not the only way of allocating resources, you have got to do it in any way which is reasonable but within the four corners of the Constitution. So, I would say the same thing. Within the four corners of the Constitution whatever makes good business sense, that is what we should do. But I am not in the loop. Therefore, I cannot give you a direct answer.

CNBC-TV18: Fair enough! We are running out of time. Let me ask you a specific question on what is happening with the sugar crisis in Uttar Pradesh. There seems to be a state of complete disarray! The State Government refuses to act. The Centre says we will look into the matter. The Congress has not really come out in support of either the farmers or the sugar mill owners in Uttar Pradesh. The BSP is quiet. The BJP has not said anything. Is there more to this than meets the eye?

External Affairs Minister: This is what makes running the Indian economy very difficult and very tough. There is a very very important element of political aspiration. It may not be enlightened, it may be just a matter of one's stomach, a matter of one's livelihood. But the farmers who are into sugarcane in UP, not from this year alone but for decades, have been asking for higher prices. And what the State Government and the Centre have been doing is that they are gradually pushing the prices that the farmers get up higher and higher. Of course it is done through a proper process and so on. But the industry says, we cannot afford to pay. This is like the equivalent of a Constitutional crisis. This is an economic crisis and we need to find an economic answer.

CNBC-TV18: Given the fact that this is in Uttar Pradesh, political opportunity perhaps as well, will the Centre intervene by way of a package like the one that was announced in 2006-07?

External Affairs Minister: That is the only answer. When you give a package when somebody wants a package, it becomes incumbent on the State Government to come and tell the Centre, look this is an impossible situation, this is an economic crisis, please help us, let us work together to find a solution. We cannot be sending postcards and we cannot be sending money or... (Inaudible)... to a State that does not even tell us, can you please work with us to find a solution. I am sure the answer lies in the State and the Central Governments putting their heads together and finding a solution. This is an important economic issue that must be solved and must be solved as quickly as possible.

CNBC-TV18: My final question to you. Elections are round the corner. Polls seems to suggest that the BJP has a clear advantage in States like Chhattisgarh, Rajasthan perhaps is close, Delhi I do not know is it going to Aam Aadmi Party or the BJP, but polls certainly seem to suggest that it is not going to be the Congress. My final question to you, does it look like you are in a losing battle?

External Affairs Minister: I do not know. Wherever I have been it does not look that bad.

CNBC-TV18: You think it does not look that bad but it is looking bad.

External Affairs Minister: No. It is not a runaway election for us. It is not a landslide election for us because we have incumbency issues. We have had some issues of central incumbency. We fought it hard. I think from what I have seen of Mrs Gandhi's rallies and Rahulji's rallies, I see that people are coming out. I am not prepared to throw the towel in. I think that we have a good fight and we will talk about this on the day the results come. We are still in the campaign. Tomorrow morning I am going to be in Rajasthan again. So, we are still in the campaign. Why should we accept what everyone is saying? I am not going to run into this problem of Oh, these things are not reliable; or your sample size is too small. Whatever the opinion polls will say and whatever exit polls will say ...

CNBC-TV18: You are not sounding confident Salman Khurshid.

External Affairs Minister: I am sounding confident. I am not foolish like other people who say, you will see phenomenal results. They have said it before and they have lost. So, they can say it again and they will lose. What we are saying is, we know what our job is. Our job is cut out. We are doing it. We are going step by step. We are doing what is the right thing to do - in a sober way, confident way, go and fight the elections and then take the results in your stride.

CNBC-TV18: Salman Khurshid, always a pleasure speaking with you. Thank you very much for joining us on The Appointment – The Election Exchange.

External Affairs Minister:

Thank you

056. Speech by President Pranab Mukherjee to the members of the Arunachal Legislative Assembly.

Itanagar, November 29, 2013.

Nested in the foothills of the Himalayas, the State of Arunachal Pradesh has always occupied a unique space in the Indian imagination. The natural beauty of the state along with it being home to a diversity of cultures, religions and peoples has rendered it a special character within the Indian Union.

Arunachal is the largest state area-wise in the north-east region with ever green forests covering 82% of the State. The state is inhabited by 26 major tribes and 110 sub-tribes, who speak different dialects. At the same time the state has the lowest density in the country of 17 persons per sq. km.

Arunachal Pradesh abounds in places of historical and cultural importance. It finds mention in the Puranas and the Mahabharata. It is believed that here Sage Parashuram washed away his sins, Sage Vyasa meditated, King Bhishmaka founded his kingdom and Lord Krishna married his consort Rukmini. Arunachal is also home to the 400 year old Tawang Monastery and the birth place of the sixth Dalai Lama, Tsangyang Gyatso. Arunachal Pradesh is a nature's treasure trove and home to more than 500 varieties of orchids, 500 indigenous species of medicinal plants, 115 species of Rhodendrons and 60 species of indigenous Bamboo. The richness of flora and fauna that occur in this state presents a panorama of biological diversity.

I am pleased to know, this Assembly has over the years taken many legislature initiatives in the fields of Land Reforms, Education, Social Welfare, Health, Protection of Forest and Environment, Panchayat Raj, Municipal Corporation etc. The emphasis laid by successive Governments on faster and inclusive development under the guidance of this Legislature over the last 38 years has resulted in significant improvement in the quality of life.

The State which started from almost zero literacy rate at the time of independence is soon going to touch the national average. The Prime Minister's Package announced on January 31, 2008 is under speedy implementation. It is a matter of joy that within couple of months the people of this State will get their first ever train in the State capital. I congratulate and compliment all of you on the many achievements of Arunachal Pradesh in recent times.

Arunachal Pradesh has always recorded a relatively high percentage of voter turn-out in every election. This shows the interest and political consciousness of the people of the State. This is very encouraging and further promotes the growth of representative democracy.

Traditions of consultative decision-making have been prevalent in our country since the ancient times. It is said that during the Vedic age, Assemblies of people conducted the business of administration by deliberating on policies, formulating legislation and dispensing justice. The popular assembly was a regular institution in the early years of the Buddhistic age. They used to consider petitions of people and also act as the Supreme Court of appeal. Archaeological inscriptions of the Tenth and Eleventh centuries of the current era indicate that the institution of the Sabha or assembly in our country had achieved a high degree of efficiency.

In a similar manner, the people of this land have also ruled themselves through customary and traditional laws of respective tribes. Institutions like Buliang, Kebang, Mouchuk etc. were democratic institutions which derived their authority from the expression of the will and power of the people. These systems are still prevalent and function side by side with the modern system of representative democracy. I was delighted to learn that leaders of the traditional councils like Kebang, Buliang etc. recite at the beginning of their meeting – (quote) “Villagers and brethren, let us strengthen our custom and our council, let us improve our relations, let us make the laws straight and equal for all, let our laws be uniform, let our customs be the same for all, let us be guided by the reason and see that justice is done and the compromise reached that is acceptable to both parties. Let us decide while the dispute is fresh, lest the small disputes grow big and continue for the long time. We have come together for a council meeting and let us speak in one voice and decide our verdict. So let us decide and mete out justice.” (Unquote). Modern day legislators would do well to heed this sage advice of the tribal elders.

India today is recognized as a role model of a successful modern Constitutional parliamentary democracy. The fact that we are operating in a highly pluralistic and diverse society beset with myriad challenges is also well known. When we opted for parliamentary democracy as the governing model for free India, the world viewed us with scepticism, and even suspicion. But, we have proved the prophets of doom wrong and maintained our unity, established a highly successful democracy and registered rapid economic growth.

The Parliament and Legislatures are the cornerstone on which rests the edifice of our democratic polity. One of the basic objectives of a representative democracy is to see that governance is carried out keeping in mind the interests of the people and their needs and aspirations. In a parliamentary democracy, the legislature represents the sovereign will of the people.

Friends, being a representative of the people is a matter of privilege and a great honour. This privilege however carries with it great responsibility. Elected representatives have many roles to play and there are competing demands – from one's Party, from the Assembly and from the constituency. The job of a legislator is a 24/7 responsibility. They have to be sensitive and responsive to the problems of the people and give voice to their grievances by raising them on the floor of the Legislature. They must act as the link between the people and the Government.

The Legislative Assembly is a master of the Executive in the sense that the Chief Minister along with his Council of Ministers is accountable collectively and severally to the Legislative Assembly. The Executive can be unseated at any time by passing a resolution of 'No Confidence' in the State Legislative Assembly by a simple majority. Moreover, most of the instruments of governance are executed through appropriate laws passed by Legislatures. The Executive's dependence on Legislature is total and it is essential that legislatures are responsible and responsive to this huge task entrusted on it by the Constitution.

Elected representatives have exclusive control over money and finance. No expenditure can be incurred by the Executive without approval of Legislature, no tax can be levied except by a law passed by the Legislature and no money can be withdrawn from the Consolidated Fund of the State without the approval of the Legislature. With the heightened complexity of administration and legislation, Legislators must ensure adequate discussion and scrutiny before passing of legislation.

Our founding fathers dreamt of an India in which the three pillars of the State, namely, the legislature, the executive and the judiciary work in conjunction, exercising checks and balances on one another in a manner that ensures that its citizens can grow in an environment of freedom, justice and equality. This separation of power avoids absolute concentration of power in any one organ of State. In addition, the Constitution of India also provides for separation between the two levels of government – Centre and State with the legislative powers of each clearly defined in the Constitution. The last few decades have shown that the founding fathers had chosen wisely and well, and that our people, have proved detractors to be wrong, and have made a wonderful success of our democracy, which is the largest in the world.

Arunachal Pradesh is an integral and important part of the North East region of India and a core stakeholder in India's Look East foreign policy. India has long standing civilizational bonds with its neighbours in South and South East Asia as well as East Asia. The north east of India provides a natural bridge between us and South East Asia. The essential philosophy of our Look East Policy, is that India must find its destiny by linking itself more and more with its Asian partners and the rest of the world. We seek to make our neighbours partners in our development. We believe that India's future and our own best economic interests are served by closer integration with Asia.

There is little time to be lost. Considering the huge pool of natural resources and the quality of its human resources, the North East of India has the potential of being an important investment destination and a centre for trade and business. We must harness the opportunities that are emerging from the rise of Asia and India's growing economic integration of India with the region. No longer should this State be considered remote. The Centre and State Government should together rapidly build the infrastructure linkages and connectivity with the rest of India that is required and this Legislature and the people of Arunachal should extend every assistance possible to this venture.

The State has a total hydropower potential of about 58,000 MW. I am happy to know that projects of almost 46,000 MW hydro-power potential have been allotted for development to central public sector undertakings and various independent power producers of which majority of allotment is for development of projects in joint sector with the state government. It is a challenge for the people and the State Government of Arunachal Pradesh as well as the Central Government to ensure that these Hydropower Projects are commissioned in time and the economy of Arunachal Pradesh gets a quantum jump to become one of the richest states in the country. Since Arunachal Pradesh has common borders with three countries, the development of border areas is also vital and must receive our utmost attention.

The biggest asset of India as an emerging global economic power is our talented, forward looking and resourceful youth population. The people of the Arunachal Pradesh are fast in learning, adaptable to change, open in their outlook and technology friendly. We need to collectively ensure that our youth are equipped with the best of skills and knowledge. They must be provided every opportunity possible to develop their innate talents and contribute to not just this state and country but entire humanity.

I am happy to note that the political leadership of the State is fully seized of the challenges and opportunities and is working sincerely to usher in a new era of peace and prosperity to its people. There is nothing which can stand in the way of Arunachal Pradesh provided there is will and determination on the part of its people and leaders.

I wish all of you gathered here and the people of the state all success in your efforts to attain speedy and sustainable economic development of the state. I call upon the Arunachal Pradesh Legislative Assembly to continue to maintain the highest standards of democratic practice and dedicate itself totally to the welfare of the people.

May Arunachal Pradesh emerge as a land of grace and beauty, a shining jewel amongst the diverse states that make our wonderful country.

Thank you

Jai Hind!

057. Inaugural Address by the Prime Minister at the 8th Asia Gas Partnership Summit.

New Delhi, December 3, 2013.

“I am very happy to be associated with the Asia Gas Partnership Summit once again, and to address the distinguished delegates who have come here both from within our country, and outside. It is my great pleasure to extend to you, welcome to India, where several exciting developments are taking place all along the gas value chain.

This is a unique platform in the area of energy. The conference had a humble beginning 10 years ago, but now sees participation from several leading oil and gas companies of the world. I congratulate the Gas Authority of India Ltd. (GAIL) and the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) for their initiative in organizing this event and making it a huge success every year.

Natural gas, as we all know, is the fuel of choice today. It is an efficient fuel for power generation. As a cleaner alternative for vehicles, it reduces air-pollution and leads to an improved quality of life.

Over the years, natural gas has become increasingly important as a source of energy in our country, with the rate of growth in natural gas consumption being the highest among all commercial energy sources. There are a variety of reasons for this including environmental concerns, the need for fuel diversification, energy prices and market deregulation.

Our primary public undertaking in this field, GAIL, has also grown over the years and has become a diversified conglomerate. Today, GAIL is one of our best Public Sector Enterprises and has been categorized as a Maharatna. I am very happy to see GAIL expanding its operations to far-off markets in order to contribute to our energy security.

The natural gas sector has undergone a sea change in recent years in the global context as well. Rapid growth in the production of Shale gas in the United States has opened possibilities of similar success in other parts of the world. The technological and economic possibilities that the Shale gas revolution has opened up are likely to further change the global energy landscape in the years to come. There will be new producers, new consumers and new trading arrangements that will come into place.

We too are hopeful that we will be fortunate in discovering Shale gas reserves in our country as well.

The Shale gas revolution has been made possible primarily by two factors – technology and market-based pricing. This is a combination that is essential to provide rapidly growing economies like ours with energy solutions commensurate with our needs.

Asia has been the driver of the global LNG demand. It accounts now for around 70% of all LNG traded globally. It is projected that Asia will continue to occupy the same share in global LNG demand which is likely to grow to 2 to 3 times the current levels by the year 2020.

India needs to increase its energy supply by 3 to 4 times within next two decades. It currently ranks as the world's seventh largest energy producer, accounting for just about 2.5% of the world's total annual energy production, while it is the 4th largest energy consumer. With oil and gas constituting around 41% of India's primary energy consumption, India is expected to be the 3rd largest energy consumer by the year 2020.

To bridge this gap between supply and demand, we are encouraging domestic and global companies to explore our onshore and offshore regions. I take this opportunity to assure investors of our Government's commitment to providing a stable and enabling policy environment for exploration of new sources of energy.

India is also progressively pursuing other options to achieve energy security. One of these is the acquisition of energy assets in other countries. I congratulate GAIL, ONGC Videsh Ltd., and other companies for their efforts in this direction. These will not only help us in securing new supplies of energy but also in acquisition of the latest technological know-how.

The theme of this summit – “Asian Gas Market: Challenges & Opportunities in the changing Paradigm” is of great importance given the huge demand for natural gas in Asia, and the rapid developments which have recently taken place in the oil and gas sector. I am sure the summit will help in finding creative solutions leading to stronger partnerships between buyers in Asia and international sellers. Despite having a huge demand for natural gas, countries like India are not able to secure adequate volumes owing to differences in price expectations between buyers and sellers. I hope this and other similar issues will be addressed during this two day event.

There are exciting opportunities in India for partnerships for joint investments in areas like gas pipeline development, LNG terminals, Petrochemicals, gas trading hubs and city gas distribution. I also hope that the participants in this conference will return with better insights about these opportunities in India as well as in other emerging markets of Asia.

With these words, I wish the 8th Asia Gas Partnership Summit all success. I also wish our guests from abroad a very pleasant stay in our country.

058. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Secretary General of the Arab League and other miscellaneous matters.

New Delhi, December 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends. Today is a busy news day although it is the end of the week, and there are lots of issues that I suppose you may be interested in. So, apologise for coming a bit late.

For Briefing on the visit of the Secretary General of the Arab League please see Document No.....

Q: Sir, this is regarding the incident in New York about Devyani. Her family members say that the domestic help has blackmailed her. Meanwhile the other issue is, can a diplomat be arrested other than it is a murder or whatever? Is not there something called diplomatic immunity? And if there is, how did this happen and are we taking it up with the Americans? What are the facts of the case as you have it?

Official Spokesperson: Shrinjoy, let me start by saying that Dr. Devyani Khobragade is a diplomat who is in the US in pursuance of her duties and hence is entitled to the courtesy due to a diplomat in the country of her work. She is also a young mother of two small children. We are shocked and appalled at the manner in which she has been humiliated by the US authorities. We have taken this up forcefully with the US Government through our Embassy in Washington. We are also reiterating in no uncertain terms to the US Embassy here that this kind of treatment to one of our diplomats is absolutely unacceptable. The Ministry of External Affairs is working to resolve the matter at the earliest.

As regards the facts of the case, our Embassy in Washington has put out a press release and these are available, as we perceive them. If there are issues of a legal nature, these will be resolved separately. And you would appreciate that at this stage I would not be in a position to go into the legal issues if there are any. But as far as we are concerned, this sort of behaviour towards an Indian diplomat is completely unacceptable.

Q: Sir, this is second such incident related to maids and Indian diplomats in the US. Considering the allegation which has been made by the US that facts had been misinterpreted and they are calling it fraud to obtain a visa for the maid by showing a fraudulent contract with her, promising to pay her ten dollars an hour, considering that this is second such incident involving maids in the US, would there be some kind of an advisory by the MEA to its diplomats?

Official Spokesperson: Vikas, I understand your need to probe this case further. But as I mentioned to you earlier, given that these have some legal issues involved we will use the appropriate forum to respond to that. We are open to responding in other mechanisms to any of this because there is nothing that accounts for humiliating publically a young woman with two small children, a person who has been sent as a diplomat to represent her country.

We will take issues of legal nature separately but there is no justification or acceptability of what has happened this morning to a young Indian diplomat who was there to drop her children in school. This is simply not acceptable to us.

Q: Could you just give us a little more in terms of what you are asking the US to do? In a sense the US Attorney's office seems to be very clear about the charges that they have put against her, and has made a point of saying on its website in its statement that in fact this has nothing to do with her duties when it comes to diplomatic duties. So, she is being treated as an ordinary citizen who has in fact committed what they think is a visa fraud and a criminal charge. In fact in addition to what Vishal was saying is that it is not the second but the third such case in three years, is there a specific problem here because all of them seem to emanate from the Consular General of New York?

Official Spokesperson: Suhasini, I understand your desire to understand this thing in a broader perspective and we certainly will provide you that information. However, nothing that we say today should impinge on what is a substantive issue which we will contest substantially. But that does not absolve the US authorities of having humiliated and traumatised an Indian diplomat who is in the US performing her duties. We will take those other issues up in the fora that they desire and try and resolve it. For the present, please be patient with us because anything that we say may have an impact on what is a delicate matter which we are trying to resolve. So, I ask and seek your indulgence for some space and time as we work to resolve this issue.

Q: Sir, do Indian diplomats get an allowance for this maid thing abroad? And would you be considering an increase in allowance considering that there is this need to be thrifty as well as to keep a 24-hour person to look after?

Official Spokesperson: Sandip, it is a well-known fact that anybody who works with the Government of India gets paid. So, I think it is quite disturbing that you ask whether an allowance is paid. Obviously anybody who works will be paid for it. As I said, again I do not want to get into the details for the simple reason we will have a briefing for all of you on this matter when things are a bit clearer. We are right now in the process of resolving this issue. Anything that we say should not impinge on the facts of the case or on the substance of the matter. So, I would request you to bear with us in terms of seeking information on the substance. We put out what our perception is; they put out what their perception is. There are fora to work this out and we will work that out. But working this out does not in any way justify what has happened this morning. We certainly feel that this is unacceptable, and we will take this up extremely seriously.

Q: Just taking on from what Sandip has asked, when a diplomat takes someone to help or him, who pays that person, who pays the maid? It must be their personal thing.

Official Spokesperson: Let me repeat. It is a very complex issue because whoever travels on behalf of Government of India has a passport issued by the Government of India as an official. We have a case, we will make that case. I do not want to make that here in front of everybody because if there is a legal case, we will provide for that legal case. Who pays for it, how much the Government of India pays for it varies from place to place. We will try and explain to you the entire panorama of that situation.

But nothing that we say should in anyway adversely impact on a case where we are confident that we will be able to justify. So, please hold on. The facts of the case, there is a forum for explaining that and we will explain that. I understand your interest and concern in this, but it should not override our ability to make that case in the proper fora. Please understand that.

Q: Akbar, we have over 30 structured dialogues between India and the United States. Do not you have a mechanism to address these issues? Given that an Indian diplomat is humiliated publicly, and given your strong reaction, do not we have a way to resolve these issues more amicably? And where do things go wrong?

Official Spokesperson: I take your point. These are first of all isolated incidents. Therefore, these need to be resolved as they happen. There is no system that everything can be covered in any number of dialogues. So, while we do have a Consular Dialogue with the US on matters of a consular nature, these are matters relating to diplomatic and consular privileges, rights covered under the conventions which are agreed to multilaterally. So, we will take this up and discuss bilaterally. Different people can have different interpretations but that does not mean that you can humiliate a young diplomat who is also the mother of two small children publicly when she goes to drop her children to school.

Q: Are Indian diplomats not aware of US labour laws that they keep getting into trouble where hiring housekeepers and maids is concerned? I am told this is the third incident of its kind. Why does it happen again and again?

Official Spokesperson: I think if you have read the statement put out by our Embassy in Washington, it clearly states that a court in Delhi had given an order. So, please do not think that there was a lack of awareness. There was already a judicial recourse taken by that young Indian woman diplomat. There is a court judgment from that case which has been given. So, let us not jump to conclusions about lack of knowledge. There is enough knowledge. There is a legal process. And in this case she did follow that process.

But please try and understand that at this stage we do not want to get into further details and try and explain to you the entire expanse because this case will be made, it will be made forcefully, it will be made clearly and we will try and resolve this issue.

Q: This is regarding President Karzai's meeting with the Prime Minister. What is India's stand on Afghanistan's Bilateral Security Agreement with America? What is India's advice to President Karzai?

Official Spokesperson: President Karzai is currently on his thirteenth visit to India. This is the fifth in the last three years. It shows the intensity of our relationship. It shows also the degree of belief in each other, that our destinies are intertwined. President Karzai right now, a little later today, will be completing his official working part of the visit, that is, he is to meet the President of India. And ordinarily we do not comment on a visit while it is ongoing. However, I will try and respond to you in the sense of giving you an idea of what our approach to this matter is.

If you would like to know whether the BSA was discussed, the answer to that is yes. It was discussed because India and Afghanistan feel our destinies are intertwined. Both India and Afghanistan see the BSA as important for the stability and security of Afghanistan. As you are aware, our approach to Afghanistan has always been one of not being prescriptive, not being intrusive, and not being judgmental. Therefore, while we will have a little bit more to say to you at the end of the visit, you would appreciate that this is the paradigm through which we approach this matter.

We are confident that President Karzai is a sagacious and wise leader, and he will do what is best for the people of Afghanistan. As a close and steadfast friend of Afghanistan and in accordance with the Indian approach to Afghanistan, we will support it.

But you will have to wait for further details. I assure you that we are working on a more detailed explanation of all the issues that are discussed during the visit.

Q: Sir, Pakistan has raised the Kashmir issue in OIC. What is India's reaction on that?

Official Spokesperson: You are right and we note with regret that the OIC has once again made factually incorrect and misleading references to matters internal to India including the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir which is an integral part of India. We reject all such references and resolutions. The OIC has no locus standi on matters concerning the internal affairs of India or the recent incidents on the LOC.

Q: Sir, my question is on Bangladesh. The situation is so volatile there that it is very difficult to put all the questions in a single format. Still I am trying my best.

When the Foreign Secretary met the US Secretary of State, I saw a PTI report stating that the situation inside Bangladesh was also discussed. Yesterday Quader Molla was hanged. After that a lot of violence has taken place today. What would be India's line of thinking on this issue? How do you approach this issue?

Official Spokesperson: I think you have asked three questions and I will try and answer all three of them so that you do not ever feel that we are evasive on this.

Yes, when the Foreign Secretary did go, and even previously, we have had discussions on regional issues in South Asia, as we have done before, with the US. And the issue of the situation as you indicated in Bangladesh did come up. We have acknowledged this previously also that there have been conversations between India and US as we are engaged in a strategic partnership which covers a variety of regional, international and bilateral issues, we do cover issues in the region including in this case the issue related to Bangladesh. That is the first point that I would like to make.

The second point is that we proceed with our relations with Bangladesh on the principles of mutual respect, mutual benefit, non-interference and respect for each other's sovereignty. Our relations with Bangladesh are broad based and inclusive. India has always respected and will always respect the wishes of the people of Bangladesh. It is for the people of Bangladesh to decide their future. We have deep respect for their wisdom and achievements. And we are confident that as a democracy the people of Bangladesh will resolve their differences through dialogue and peaceful means in an atmosphere free of violence.

That brings me to your last question. The execution of the death sentence of Abdul Quader Molla the Assistant Secretary-General of Jamaat-e-Islami, is an outcome of the internal judicial processes and laws of Bangladesh. I hope I have covered all the three areas even though they were encapsulated into one question.

Q: Sir, back to Afghanistan. Last time when President Karzai was here in India he had openly demanded arms and other logistical help. Has this issue come up this time too and whether India has any stand on that?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are so eager you would like to jump the gun. I suggested to you that at the end of the day when all the discussions are over we will provide you a more detailed statement on all areas that we have discussed.

Q: I am not asking you whether you have discussed this particular issue but I would like to know, given the emphasis that has been there on the issue of Afghanistan as well as other points – though you spoke of issues of our interest in peace and stability in Afghanistan and also respect for non-interference and the principle of sovereignty – what is the view that the MEA takes on the Afghan President's own Spokesman having spoken of Washington trying to incite people in the present regime against President Karzai with whom we are holding talks? When I say incitement I mean the US Secretary of State or the Secretary of Defence, all of them saying that it is not necessary for the President to sign the BSA.

Official Spokesperson: I think what I had on the BSA I have told you. I would suggest that from those you can draw inferences of what our position is. If you read it carefully, the answer to your question is already there. That said, if you would like to wait, wait for some more time, a couple of hours perhaps, and you will have a more detailed version. I have shared what I can at this stage and I think that question already stands answered, if you read carefully what I have said.

Q: What is the status of the Indo-Myanmar border issue in Manipur?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are new to covering issues which I handle. My view has always been that what happens on the border is handled by the sentinels of the border. I deal only with the political implications of those. If there are issues happening on the border, I suggest that you direct your questions to those who have responsibility of that border. In this case it would be the Ministry of Home Affairs which deals with that.

Q: I will be happy if you just clear the statement of the US NSA on the snooping and surveillance. Is the Indian Government satisfied with the statement?

Official Spokesperson: I have not seen that statement if it is just a new one. So, I am not aware of that. But I will have a look at that statement and I am willing to respond to you and to send it across to everybody if there is a new statement.

Q: What is the update on the Japanese Prime Minister coming to India?

Official Spokesperson: You have been for long covering our conferences. I just announced a visit coming on the 16th of December. And I have no idea of any visit during this year from the country you mentioned because we had a very very successful visit of the Emperor and the Empress recently. If you are talking of visits in the next year, I think there is still a long way to go.

Q: Our Foreign Secretary was in the US. What are two or three broad outcomes that float from there? Also, we are all a little intrigued given the much trumpeted closeness between India and the United States, how do incidents like what you said as regards the Indian diplomats happen? I mean it is just contrary to the spirit of India-US relations.

Official Spokesperson: I think I have answered that question. If you see the answer, it is already there. This is an isolated incident, we are trying to work through this. However, on the other broader things, the focus of that visit was to see how we proceed in 2014 following from the outcomes of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's meeting with President Obama earlier this year. So, the idea was to try and see where are the major issues that we need to focus on next year, how do we go about it.

We intend to have an Energy Dialogue early next year. That will be held in Delhi between Deputy-Chairman, Planning Commission and Energy Secretary on the US side. You would have noticed that Foreign Secretary did meet Deputy Secretary Ponemen regarding this issue. There are other dialogues which are being lined up. You also have noticed that Foreign Secretary had her first dialogue on strategic security with the Acting Under Secretary of State for Non-proliferation Matters. So, this is an intensification of our engagement. It is looking forward and trying to see how we can proceed further in the next year on intensifying the relationship.

Q: My question is also related to FS's visit to the US. Did she raise the issue of snooping again with the US authorities and what was their response?

Official Spokesperson: We have raised this in different fora. I have not seen the entire readout to indicate whether this specific issue was raised. But our view is pretty clear on this. We have raised it several times. I can recollect at least three times that it has been raised in the last three months. And our views remain what they are.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I said I do not know whether this was raised specifically at this meeting because it also needs to be the appropriate interlocutors on the other side. I have not seen the entire details of all her meetings. But this does not mean that this is not an issue of concern to us. This is an issue of concern, we have raised it three times. Whether it figures in one meeting or the other, this remains a matter that we intend to pursue.

Q: Bangladesh opposition leader Begum Khaleda Zia accused India of not respecting the maximum peoples' opinion of Bangladesh. What is your comment?

Official Spokesperson: I think I answered that in a way when Gautam asked that question, and I can repeat it if you would like to know. We proceed in our relations with Bangladesh on the basis of principles of mutual respect, mutual benefit, non-interference, and respect for each other's sovereignty. It is for the people of Bangladesh to decide upon their future. We have deep respect for their wisdom and achievements. And we are confident that as a democracy the people of Bangladesh will resolve their differences through dialogue and peaceful means in an atmosphere free of violence. I have said that before and I just repeat it. It is basically an answer to Gautam's question where there was a veiled allusion to what you have come out more forthrightly.

Thank you very much.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-II

MULTILATERAL COOPERATION

ASIA COOPERATION DIALOGUE059. Statement by Minister of State E. Ahamed at 12th Foreign Ministers Meeting in Manama, Bahrain.*Manama (Bahrain), November 25, 2013.

His Excellency Shaikh Khalid Bin Ahmed Bin Mohamed Al Khalifa, Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Kingdom of Bahrain,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to be here once again today. The Kingdom of Bahrain has extended all facilities to around 3,00,000 Indians who have made Bahrain temporary home. We share excellent relations in political, economic and cultural spheres and leaderships of the two countries have invested considerable energy and interest in developing these relations. The recent Bahrain-India Exhibition and Conference held on October 22-24, 2013 strengthened our relations further.

I take this opportunity to express our sincere appreciation to Republic of Tajikistan for successfully hosting 11th ACD Ministerial meeting in Dushanbe on 29 March 2013 and also to Royal Kingdom of Thailand for initiating and coordinating ACD forum since inception.

We welcome Republic of Turkey as the 33rd member of ACD. We have deep historical, civilisational and cultural connections with Turkey. With the joining of Turkey, we believe the ACD will further the realisation of Asian continent into Asian community and add dynamism to ACD process.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, I am happy to note that Kingdom of Bahrain has selected the theme 'Promoting Intra-Asian Tourism' for the 12th Ministerial meeting. We extend our support to the novel concept of the Asian Tourism City.

I wish to mention that India is keen to join this initiative and would wish to offer to host the Tourism Business Forum. We need to harness our strengths and potential in tourism for the benefit of Asian community.

ACD has completed 10 years of cooperation with a historic Summit in Kuwait in 2012 and expanded its membership from 18 to 33. This shows ACD has provided a significant platform for dialogue and cooperation in Asia and has contributed to enhancing friendship, promoting peace and development. In the present global economic crisis, there is a need to strengthen cooperation in a few project areas identified by ACD members so as to enhance efficiency and effectiveness and visibility of ACD, to make 21st century truly as Asian Century.

Asia has a rich civilisational heritage and distinctive cultures. I am happy to inform that as a co-prime mover in cultural cooperation, India hosted the 2nd Senior official meeting on April 19-20, 2012, which was successful with the participation and cooperation of member countries. This has been further taken forward by Islamic Republic of Iran by hosting the 1st Cultural Ministers meeting on May 7-8, 2013. We need to take forward the cooperation by implementing the activities agreed so that bonds of friendship will be further strengthened. India has taken the initiative to compile an anthology of poetry of eminent writers of the region which will enhance our understanding and cultural exchanges.

Bio-technology has become a powerful enabling technology. I am happy to inform you India has established a Regional Centre for Bio-technology at Faridabad near New Delhi under auspices of UNESCO. We have offered 4-5 fellowships for ACD members to benefit from this Institute and we want you to join in this process.

India as a prime mover in transport linkages area, has circulated a concept paper on Transport linkages such that we can have seamless connectivity and economic corridors that bring us close. We can link up with other regional organizations who are also working for better connectivity. It is important for our experts to meet and develop a common agenda to bring our people and our economies closer together. We want to develop economic corridors across Asia providing hope, opportunity and efficiency to our mutual benefit. We also appreciate Royal Thai Government for organising an initial Working Group meeting on enhance ACD Regional Connectivity on 17 July, 2013 in Bangkok and we offer to host the next working group meeting on Regional Connectivity in India in 2014.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, Energy Security is fundamental for ensuring development of our people. The current steep rise and volatility in fuel prices threaten to derail many members economies. The stability of energy prices and fair energy pricing are important specifically to developing countries

The ACD Energy Action Plan circulated by Republic of Indonesia is a timely initiative. The areas of cooperation and implementation modality proposed are in line with Government of India's approach of actively pursuing cooperation including among Asian countries for sharing knowledge, experience and market access. In this regard our experience in dissemination of renewable energy could be of much use to other Asian countries. We support the Action Plan and we should ensure the participation of member countries in the Action Plan.

Water is scarce and precious resource especially in the emerging challenge of Climate Change. Declining per capita availability and low water use efficiency are some of issues which could be addressed by ACD through water cooperation by sharing ideas & experiences, facilitating transfer of technology, and capacity building. There is a great potential for regional cooperation on water resources development and management among ACD countries. Our Ministry of Water resources could offer two week short term training courses and share its experience on regulatory laws, approaches and policies on ground water.

I would propose that we also collaborate closely on the issue of Food Security. Growing populations and changing patterns are imposing new demands and as responsible Governments, we have to work towards adequate food stocks for meeting exigencies and other needs.

Our sincere condolences to the people of Philippines for the loss of life and destruction caused by Typhoon Haiyan. It is a grim reminder to all of us to cooperate in mitigation and reduction of Disasters. ACD member countries are also highly prone to Hydro-meteorological and Geo hazards particularly earthquake and tsunami. The establishment of ACD Coordination Network among early Warning Centres would be a welcome move. In this regard, we support the initiative of the Republic of Tajikistan on establishment of network of Early Warning Centres.

As we move towards establishment of Provisional Secretariat, we should not lose sight of the significance of informality and voluntary contribution of members resources. There should be considered discussion among all parties on the role and structure of such mechanism and we should ensure there is progress on the ground in cooperative projects.

India has been an original member of ACD and has seen the growth in dialogue and exchanges over time. I believe ACD has a bright future through joint efforts. India is ready to play a positive role in enriching action on the ACD agenda and help in furthering the objectives and projects of the ACD to promote our common pursuit of stability, peace, growth and prosperity.

Before I conclude, I would like to place on record my appreciation to Kingdom of Bahrain for the warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation and the excellent arrangements made for the success of 12th Ministerial meeting.

Thank you

ASEAN & EAS

060. Keynote address of External Affairs Minister at the Inaugural Session of Delhi Dialogue – V.

New Delhi, February 19, 2013.

Your Excellency Secretary General of ASEAN, Mr Le Luong Minh, Your Excellency Deputy Foreign Minister of Malaysia Senator Kohilan Pillai, Your Excellency Deputy Foreign Minister of Myanmar U Zin Yaw, Your Excellency Deputy Foreign Minister of Vietnam Mr. Pham Quang Vinh, Representatives of Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Indonesia, Lao PDR, Philippines, Thailand and Singapore

Distinguished Panelists & Guests,

Excellencies, Ladies & Gentlemen,

I am delighted to welcome you all to the inauguration of Delhi Dialogue V.

Delhi Dialogue-V has emerged as a successful Track 1.5 venue for discussions between government representatives, Track II experts and business representatives on political, economic and security issues of interest to both India and ASEAN.

Today, Delhi Dialogue V assumes far greater significance since it is the first event after the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in December last year, where we enhanced the level of our relationship to a strategic partnership. The Vision Statement adopted at the Summit presents vast opportunities for stronger cooperation between ASEAN and India.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

The theme for this year's Delhi Dialogue, "India-ASEAN: Vision for Partnership and Prosperity" sums up our common aspiration in furthering our Strategic Partnership for collective peace, progress and prosperity. India's relations with the ASEAN member countries have seen a constant flow of ideas, culture, knowledge and practices. It has been a two-way civilizational connect and a history of trade, commerce, and educational exchanges. In modern times, we are not only able to rediscover it but also advance it to diverse areas for mutual benefit of peoples of India and ASEAN region.

In the recent times, as the global dynamics witness unprecedented changes and trends today, Asia is assuming new responsibilities commensurate with its capacities.

Political, economic and security structures are evolving globally, and, in a more pronounced manner, in East Asia. ASEAN and India are and will remain natural partners in defining their perspectives and addressing their common requirements of economic growth and prosperity.

India and ASEAN member countries share a vision of a peaceful, prosperous and resurgent Asia, which contributes to global peace and security. We share a dynamic economic space, which houses a quarter of humanity, and has a combined GDP of USD 3.8 trillion. We have put in place the Free Trade Agreement on trade in Goods in 2009 and have now concluded negotiations on the FTA on Services and Investment, which will help create greater synergy between our people, our industry and capacities.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

ASEAN-India trade has been growing at over 22% during the last few years, and as much as 37% in 2011-12, which helped cross the target mark of USD 70 billion last year, ahead of time. We are now striving for the target of USD 100 billion by 2015 for ASEAN-India trade. As we look to the future, we must empower our youth across the spectrum of higher education, practical skills and vocational training, oriented to trade and technological advancement.

We have simultaneously resolved to meet non-traditional challenges and safeguard our collective politico-security environment, important for smooth flow of raw materials, merchandise and energy supplies. ASEAN-India engagement is proceeding well in the East Asia Summit, ASEAN Regional Forum, ADMM+ and the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum, which are important initiatives for evolving an open and inclusive regional architecture. We continue to support ASEAN's central role in this regional architecture.

International terrorism, transnational organized crime, money laundering, drug-trafficking, information and cyber security issues are today demanding greater collaboration of effort by the international community. With repercussions for global and regional security, these issues require new, innovative solutions that can remain ahead of the growing complexity in these issues.

Brainstorming and finding synergy of interest and effort in these areas is all the more important when we consider the global economic situation. The economic crisis of 2008-09 continues to persist. Our hitherto resilient economies are getting compounded by the Eurozone crisis. Our rates of growth have depressed but are still healthy and respectable. ASEAN member countries and India continue to be growth centres in Asia, widely expected to lead the global economy out of the ongoing economic crisis.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Connectivity with ASEAN - geographical, institutional, or people-to-people, is a strategic priority for India. Relevant mechanisms established under the ASEAN-India framework to further connectivity, including some at Ministerial level, have been held during the Commemorative year.

India-Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway project is progressing well. Route alignments for extending this Highway to Cambodia, Lao PDR and Vietnam need to be pursued further. The Mekong-India Economic Corridor, which will connect the industrial and freight corridors in India with the production networks in the Mekong region through the Chennai-Dawei sea link and the land connectivity to our Northeast, will have a beneficial effect on all our economies. These connectivity projects are capital intensive and we need to think of innovative means of financing them. Public Private Partnership is one such method, but there are several other as well, which I am sure would be discussed at tomorrow's session on connectivity.

In this digital age, we also need think of virtual networks as a way forward for connecting the region. We have welcomed the ASEAN Information and Communications Technology (ICT) Master Plan 2015 and also the efforts to strengthen ASEAN-India Connectivity in ICT. As a beginning, we are exploring capacity building programmes and sharing best practices in technological development and policy regulations related to e-connectivity.

We support the Initiative for ASEAN Integration (IAI) so as to contribute to the ASEAN vision of an ASEAN Community by 2015. As integration within ASEAN proceeds, it is also important that integration between ASEAN and India progress apace. We have already seen some traction on this as the 6th East Asia Summit called for a "Connectivity Master Plan Plus" which would expand Connectivity beyond ASEAN.

We can bring about progress and shared prosperity only when the people of ASEAN and India are able to co-author Asia's economic growth and resurgence. I would like to hear recommendations tomorrow for making geographic borders open to trade and investment and the movement of professionals and experts. We will be continuing our capacity building emphasis in the ASEAN India strategic partnership.

Development of effective energy systems, ensuring energy access utilizing all forms of energy to all the sections of population, promotion of energy efficiency technologies and use of renewable energy should see urgent prioritization on our cooperative calendar. The meetings held for the first time by my colleagues last year with their ASEAN counterparts in environment and renewable energy took cognizance of this. To my mind, the current predicament on these issues call for a sharing of expertise and knowledge, capacities and technology, a conviction that India has subscribed to for the last 65 years.

I am confident your deliberations will come up with recommendations on transforming the vision of our Leaders into reality, thus furthering the ASEAN-India strategic partnership to the next high level.

I would also like to compliment the Organizers of Delhi Dialogue V, the Indian Council of World Affairs (ICWA), the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), the SAEA Research Group of Singapore, Institute for Defence Studies and Analyses (IDSA), as well as the Economic Research Institute (ERIA) in Jakarta.

I wish you success in your deliberations, and look forward to receive your recommendations.

Thank you

061. 15th ASEAN-India Senior Officials Meeting.

New Delhi, February 21, 2013.

1. The 15th ASEAN-India Senior Officials' Meeting (AISOM) was held in New Delhi on February 21, 2013. The meeting was Co-Chaired by Shri Sanjay Singh, Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs and H.E. Dato Erywan Pehin Yusof, SOM Leader, Brunei Darussalam. Senior Officials from all the 10 ASEAN Member States and Deputy Secretary General of ASEAN participated in the Meeting.
2. The Meeting was the first official engagement between ASEAN and India following the elevation of the relationship to a Strategic Partnership at the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in December 2012 in New Delhi. The meeting discussed ways to implement the vision of the ASEAN Leaders and Prime Minister of India, as envisaged in the ASEAN-India Vision Statement of December 20, 2012.
3. The Deputy Secretary General of ASEAN briefed the AISOM on the progress and status of developments within ASEAN on the three pillars of political security, economic and socio-cultural cooperation, including narrowing the development gap between the ASEAN Member States. He also mentioned the progress on operationalization of the AHA Centre and on the significant aspect of connectivity under the Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity. The Brunei Co- Chair and SOM Leader explained the theme for the Chairmanship of ASEAN by Brunei Darussalam in 2013, “Our People, Our Future Together”, stressing the role of the ASEAN people in realizing the objective of the ASEAN Community by 2015. There was appreciation for India’s continued efforts to support the objectives of ASEAN Community, the Initiative for ASEAN Integration, the Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity and the centrality of ASEAN to the political security and economic architecture in East Asia. India’s efforts in setting up Entrepreneurship Development Centres (EDCs) and Centres for English Language Training (CELTs) in the region were appreciated.

4. The AISOM discussed the important and constructive contribution by India in the region and emphasized intensification of cooperation to meet challenges relating to international terrorism, piracy and drugs trafficking. India’s contribution to the ARF, ADMM+ and Expanded Maritime Forum, which has been steadily expanding, was appreciated.
5. The SOM Leaders took stock of the sectoral cooperation between ASEAN and India, including in agriculture, science and technology, commerce and trade, environment, renewable energy, tourism and connectivity. The SOM Leaders noted the successful meeting of the ASEAN-India Heads of Agriculture Universities and Research Institutions on February 19-20, 2013 in New Delhi and the useful discussion at Delhi Dialogue V on the same dates. The latter has consolidated as a premier track 1.5 forum bringing together ASEAN and Indian Government representatives, Industry, academia and track II experts. There was a sense of satisfaction at the pace and intensity of cooperation and implementation of the ASEAN-India Plan of Action 2010-15.
6. In the context of the conclusion of negotiations on the ASEAN-India Trade in Services and Investment Agreement, AISOM supported the common resolve to prepare the FTA on Services and Investment for signature by the time of the meeting between ASEAN and Indian Economic Ministers in August this year. It was felt that with its signature, the resultant ASEAN-India Free Trade Area, one of the largest with a population of 1.8 billion and a combined GDP of USD 3.8 trillion, would give a significant fillip to economic cooperation and integration in the region. Towards this, the meeting noted that ASEAN and India could together contribute to the realization of the RCEP (Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership).

7. The meeting was appreciative of the various initiatives during the Commemorative Year to improve people-to-people interactions between ASEAN and India, including the highly successful ASEAN-India Car Rally and the expedition of INS Sudarshini to ASEAN countries. It was resolved to continue the trend of intensification in people-to-people activities.
8. The Brunei SOM Leader briefed ASEAN Member States and India on the preparation for the 46th AMM/PMC/3rd EAS FMM/ 20th ARF on June 24-27, 2013 and the 11th ASEAN-India Summit and the 8th EAS Summit on October 9- 10, 2013 in Brunei Darussalam.

062. Valedictory Address by Secretary (East) at the Asian Relations Conference IV: 'Geopolitics of the Indo-Pacific Region: Asian Perspectives'.

New Delhi, March 22, 2013.

Amb. Rajiv Bhatia, DG, ICWA, Amb. Bhagirath, Secy. Gen., IOR-ARC

Prof Swaran Singh President AAS

Amb. Ravi, Amb. Saurabh Kumar

Senior Colleagues

Distinguished Panelists and Speakers

Members of the Think-Tank community and the Media

Ladies and Gentlemen.

At the very outset let me commend the effort by ICWA and the Association of Asian Scholars for organizing this very topical Asian Relations Conference (ARC) IV, on the 'Geopolitics of the Indo-Pacific Region: Asian Perspectives'. I would also like to thank ICWA for inviting me to deliver an address at the Valedictory Session on this very important subject to this distinguished audience. Since the last couple of years, the term 'Indo-Pacific' is being used increasingly during discussions amongst policy makers, strategic thinkers and think tanks. This Seminar has attempted to define it spatially, obtain perspectives from the Indian Ocean, South East Asia, US, Russia & EU. It has discussed India's engagement with the region and the prospects for its economic integration.

I am glad that ICWA has launched this debate seeking to contribute to the Asian perspective on it, given the significant geo-political and strategic importance this concept has regionally for Asia and, I daresay, even globally. It is not a construct that can be left ambivalent nor should it be understood in monochromatic terms. I do hope that as a result of these discussions over the last two days, we have greater clarity, since this concept is increasingly being used to describe the dynamics within the region and has relevance to regional security, stability and development in Asia.

This debate on the Asian perspective of the Indo-Pacific comes at a time of significant progress in India's 'Look East' Policy, an important basis for an Indian definition. On the other hand, another anchor for an Asian perspective of the Indo-Pacific region would be the changing geopolitics and its effects on the region and on its stakeholders and their strategic priorities. There is an increasing desire within Asia towards tackling common challenges and creating a politico-security architecture to promote growth and prosperity, peace and stability. Indian strategic thinkers had traditionally focused on the area which extended from the Straits of Hormuz to the Straits of Malacca. They would describe Indo-Pacific as a logical corollary to India's 'Look East' Policy, and an extension of the region of interest to also include within its ambit the Western Pacific.

Over the centuries, the Indian Ocean Region has seen myriad nations that have navigated its waters with freedom, promoting trade and fostering cross-cultural influences. Today, through organizations like the IOR-ARC, the region seeks to open new channels of communication and cooperation towards the development of the economies along its littoral rim. The six priority areas of IOR-ARC – maritime safety and security; trade and investment facilitation; fisheries management; disaster risk reduction; academic and S&T cooperation; and tourism promotion and cultural exchanges – reflect this approach of a collective community seeking to deal with contemporary challenges, build collective capacity and assume greater salience to the strategic perspective in the region.

The same strength of purpose can be seen in some measure in the ASEAN+1 relationships, especially the ASEAN India strategic partnership, which has as its focus a common economic space of 1.8 billion people and a combined GDP of over USD 3.2 trillion. The ASEAN India Plans of Action provides direction to the project related aspects of our cooperation across the political, security, economic and socio-cultural pillars. It underlines our common perspective of economic growth, shared prosperity, peace and stability, the increasing focus on capacity building and connectivity across geographic corridors, over land, sea and air, between institutions, people-to-people and now through the digital space. All this is meant to optimize a unique partnership aimed at the constructive definition of our collective space. With the Eurozone crisis and the slowdown of economic activity in the United States, amongst the fastest growing component of our trade and economic engagement is today with ASEAN and East Asia. With the likely fruition of the ASEAN-India Free Trade Area and the launch of negotiations for a Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership, the relative importance of the region for us is only going to increase. This is the natural culmination of 20 years of a constructive dialogue partnership between India and the ASEAN. We continue to believe in the central role of ASEAN in the evolving regional architecture. We have identified connectivity within the ASEAN India region as one of our strategic priorities, especially road connectivity with ASEAN along the India-Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway, which would be a part of the proposed Asian Highway No.1, ultimately to connect Tokyo to Istanbul.

The East Asia Summit, and its evolving architecture in the political, security and economic realm, has brought in certain competing definitions, overlapping interests and reinterpretations. The state of the global economy, the ongoing and, perhaps, deepening crisis in the Eurozone, and the imperative of collective action to deal with this economic contagion as well as nontraditional security threats such as terrorism, piracy, energy and food security, sustainable development and environmental challenges have come in for increased focus, much as they have in the Indian Ocean littoral. India has been part of the EAS dynamics to invigorate the economic recovery, secure the global commons in the region, strengthen cooperation to meet common challenges and anchor an open, inclusive and transparent architecture of regional cooperation in the region. We have endorsed the utility of the EAS as a Leaders' led forum for contributing to enhancing mutual understanding and promoting peace, stability and security in the region. We have supported principles of international law and recourse to peaceful resolution of differences. Connectivity in the greater East Asian Region has also come in for greater attention since the 6th East Asia Summit. In this context, we believe that the development of East-West Connectivity corridors is essential and this objective should be internally driven.

Our perspective of the region is, therefore, more than just an economic and security one. It is about focusing the aspirations and the destinies of the people of this region on a common path.

The wider Indo-Pacific region is home to nearly 3 billion people and a combined Gross Domestic Product of nearly $20 trillion. It has three of the four largest economies in the world i.e. China, India and Japan, and the most significant of the world's seaborne trade, including that most relevant for food and energy security. With globalization and the consequent compression of geographic spaces, 'Indo-Pacific' has come to reflect contemporary realities.

As our Defence Minister noted at the 2012 Shangri-La Dialogue in Singapore, we are actively engaged in the process of constructive dialogue on security issues with a number of countries, especially with the ASEAN community, and support ongoing initiatives in building an inclusive security architecture, which would foster a spirit of consensus on all issues that have common resonance. We have active security cooperation with countries of the region. We are contributing to the discussions at the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting Plus (ADMM+) and the expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum.

Indian Navy and the Navies of the region are already coordinating, especially in anti-piracy and disaster management exercises. Multi-national maritime exercises have been held focused on common concerns in the changing and prevalent security scenario in the region, including gun running, anti-narcotics, and humanitarian issues, apart from maritime security and ways to forge specific cooperative initiatives. The Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS) is another initiative in this direction.

As the global power fulcrum sees further shift towards Asia, it is important to understand the dynamics within the Indian Ocean and the Pacific. We need to work towards a security construct that leverages the civilizational linkages to expand cooperation and build partnership across the Indo-Pacific.

To conclude my address, I would like to quote our Prime Minister who said "We see our partnership with ASEAN not merely as a reaffirmation of ties with neighbouring countries or as an instrument of economic development, but also as an integral part of our vision of a stable, secure and prosperous Asia and its surrounding Indian Ocean and Pacific regions. Our future is inter-linked and a stable, secure and prosperous Indo-Pacific region is crucial for our own progress and prosperity”.

I am grateful that you gave me the opportunity to share my thoughts with you on this very important topic and I do hope that I have been able to share with you elements which should inform its delineation.

I thank you

063. Speech of External Affairs Minister at the launch of ASEAN-India Centre.

New Delhi, June 21, 2013.

Ambassador Shyam Saran,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate the ASEAN India Centre today, six months after the Prime Minister & ASEAN Leaders directed its establishment in their Vision Statement at the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit of December 20, 2012. I am happy to see the ASEAN Heads of Missions and their officials, Indian representatives from the ASEAN India Eminent Persons Group, prominent members of the strategic community in India, representatives from the media, and officials from the different Ministries involved in furthering the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership, join us at this launch.

The ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership has strong foundations of shared civilizational bonds, a recent history of common effort towards economic growth and prosperity and a common future that has to be secured not just within the new security and economic architecture of the Asia Pacific but also the Indo-Pacific.

Over the last few years, our region has seen a multiplicity of stakeholders and a fraternity of purpose for tackling common challenges. We need to build an architecture that contributes to the geo-strategic importance of the region to global processes and, most importantly, secures economic growth and prosperity for the people in our countries. This is the strength of the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership as an anchor of stability from the western confines of the Indian Ocean to the shores of the Pacific, from the Straits of Hormuz to the Straits of Malacca.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The centrality of the ASEAN and the ASEAN way of progress at a pace comfortable to all has contributed to the unanimity of strategic objectives amongst us and also motivated us to look at greater synergy in our multifaceted relationship. The partnership with ASEAN countries, in fact, constitutes the core of India's Look East Policy, given that the combined population of India and ASEAN is approximately 1.8 billion, around one-fourth of the global population and the combined GDP of the region is approximately US $ 3 trillion.

Today there are very clear achievements in ASEAN-India relations across the three pillars of political and security cooperation, economic integration and socio-cultural exchanges. Last year we saw an intensive engagement across Governments and meetings or programmes between experts, think tanks, private sectors, academia, diplomats, farmers, students, media and, in fact, across professions and ages at the people-to-people levels. We intensified the dialogue in agriculture, trade, tourism, new & renewable energy and environment. In the run up to the Commemorative Summit, our people-to-people and institutional connectivity has strengthened and acquired an annual periodicity.

These, together with the ASEAN-India Car Rally 2012 and the sail training ship INS Sudarshini expedition to 9 ASEAN countries and their related business and cultural 'marker' events, proved catalytic to the forging of a consistent partnership which extended into the online space also.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Capacity building, development, economic growth and peace and stability have been the characteristics of the ASEAN-India partnership. The numerous projects under finalisation as per the Plan of Action for 2010-2015 are set to bring a qualitative enhancement in our partnership. From agriculture to space cooperation, from English language and entrepreneurship development training to capacity building in renewable energy and environment protection, from encouraging SMEs to strengthening our trade and investment linkages, we have now a comprehensive engagement between ASEAN and India. As the deadline for ASEAN Community by 2015 approaches, India has renewed its commitment to support ASEAN's community building efforts, including the Initiative for ASEAN Integration Work Plan II, Narrowing Development Gaps and the Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity.

And yet, there is still tremendous untapped potential in the ASEAN-India partnership. There are also areas such as the new non-traditional threats to our socio-economic and political systems that need effective redressal. We are looking for ways to combat the fast evolving threat from terrorism and to counter drug trafficking, both of which incrementally threaten the future of our younger generations. We need to add form and substance on the ground to our existing geographic and civilizational connectivity, and to extend it simultaneously towards an integrated and sustainable economic prosperity.

We need to ensure that as the ASEAN countries integrate amongst themselves, their integration with India runs apace. We need to take cognizance of the pace of progress in the subsets of the Mekong Ganga Cooperation process and BIMSTEC as also the intra-ASEAN groupings so as to increase integrative capacities in the region. In short, we need to continue the dynamism in our potential for partnership into the future.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to see that Chairman RIS and former Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran has taken on the task of defining the role for the ASEAN India Centre against this backdrop. In the Vision Statement we resolved to establish an ASEAN-India Centre using existing capacities. The Research and Information Systems for Developing Countries (RIS) is already nodal to several ASEAN-India activities at track 1.5 and track 2 levels and has also been closely associated with strengthening ASEAN-India cooperation in the field of connectivity. RIS Chairman Shyam Saran was the Co-Chair of the ASEAN-India Eminent Persons Group, which had given recommendations towards the Vision Statement, including, inter alia, the establishment of an ASEAN India Centre.

So, I daresay, that I have high expectation of the ASEAN India Centre as a key resource to assist us in further defining the contours of the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership. In terms of its future tasks, I hope it will assist the Governments of ASEAN and India to make a selection, for instance, from the abundance of theoretical constructs and several studies in the last two years about the connectivity corridors and economic processes in our region. The AIC should help us to simultaneously begin the process of putting in place policies and facilitators to drive economic content on these geographic corridors so that by the time the network of roads, maritime and air links are strengthened, the dimension of their economic viability has also been addressed.

By helping the Governments find practical ways and means to increase connectivity and strategic content in the ASEAN-India Partnership, the Centre will bridge the knowledge gap that currently limits the opportunities for ASEAN-India cooperation. I would, in particular, like to see Detailed Project Report parameters being built up for the agenda on geographical connectivity on the basis of work at the ASEAN India Centre.

The ongoing negotiations on the RCEP and the conclusion of the FTA between ASEAN and India on Services and Investment would provide new opportunities and challenges which need careful examination, without waiting for the completion of these processes.

I would like to see some well anchored ideas on furthering India's contribution to the ASEAN processes of the ADMM+, the ARF and the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum. As the global power dynamics see further shift towards Asia, it is important to understand the dynamics within the Indian Ocean and the Pacific and work towards a security construct that leverages the civilizational linkages to expand cooperation and build partnership across the Indo-Pacific.

The setting up of the ASEAN-India Centre is, therefore, recognition of the fact that the ASEAN-India Partnership is not only of long standing but also of great current and future strategic relevance, oriented as it is to economic growth, development, capacity building and peace and security.

With this, I formally launch the ASEAN-India Centre and wish the Centre all success.

Thank You

064. Inauguration of the ASEAN-India Centre by External Affairs Minister.

New Delhi, June 21, 2013.

1. The ASEAN-India Centre (AIC) was inaugurated by the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid on Friday, June 21, 2013 at Magnolia Hall, India Habitat Centre. The Centre has been established in fulfilment of the direction given by ASEAN Leaders and Prime Minister of India in the ASEAN-India Vision Statement, adopted at the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit on December 20, 2012. It is being set up under the guidance of Chairman, RIS & former Foreign Secretary Shri Shyam Saran.
2. The establishment of the ASEAN India Centre was also one of the recommendations of the ASEAN-India Eminent Persons Group to further strengthen the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership. The 15th ASEAN-India Senior Officials Meeting in New Delhi on February 21, 2013 had discussed the modalities of establishing the ASEAN-India Centre using existing capacities.
3. ASEAN Heads of Missions in New Delhi, members of the strategic community, think tanks, media representatives, members of the ASEAN Missions in New Delhi and senior Government of India officials participated in the inauguration.
4. The AIC would work to strengthen India's cooperation with ASEAN in its realization of the ASEAN Community by 2015, comprising the three pillars: ASEAN Political Security Community; the ASEAN Economic Community; and the ASEAN Socio-Cultural Community. The AIC would serve as a resource centre for ASEAN Member States and India to fill the knowledge gaps that currently limit the opportunities for cooperation. The AIC would also undertake regular networking activities with relevant organizations and think tanks in India and ASEAN Member States, with the aim of providing up-to-date information, data resources and sustained interaction to promote the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership. The AIC would assist in the implementation of the ASEAN-India connectivity agenda, apart from promoting ASEAN-

India cooperation in the interlinked areas of water, energy, food security etc.

5. The AIC would maintain a website in support of its efforts to further the ASEAN India strategic partnership.

065. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the signing of the Headquarter Agreement between the Ministry of External Affairs and the Nalanda Univeristy.

New Delhi, June 28, 2013.

The Union Cabinet today gave its approval to the proposal of signing of a headquarters agreement between the Ministry of External Affairs and Nalanda University. This agreement would confer on the University and members of its academic staff privileges and immunities considered necessary to provide an overall framework for the efficient functioning and operation of the University, and allow it to obtain talent from across the globe. The Agreement will come into force immediately upon signing and notification.

The signing of the headquarters agreement will facilitate hiring of the best academicians from across the world, well before the commencement of the first academic session. Recruitment of the University's faculty cannot take place without fixing their terms and conditions, for which the conclusion of the headquarters agreement is essential.

The University will serve as an international centre of excellence in higher learning. It would integrate modern, scientific and technological knowledge and skills with basic human values and promote universal friendship, peace and prosperity through the spiritual awakening of the individual and society.

The detailed Project Report prepared by EdCIL in July, 2012 has estimated funding requirements of approximately Rs. 3,532.62 crore between 2010-11 and 2021-22. The Government of India will meet the University's expenditure to the extent required. Signing of the headquarters agreement does not involve any additional expenditure.

The following are the salient features of the agreement:-

- i) The host country shall take necessary steps to protect the University premises against any intrusion or damage and facilitate the work of the University.
- ii) The University, its assets, its income and other property shall be exempt from all direct taxes, customs duties and prohibitions and restrictions on imports and exports for articles imported/exported for its official use.
- iii) The Vice-Chancellor and academic staff of the University, who are not from the host country shall be granted exemption from taxation in respect of their salaries, honoraria, allowances and other emoluments; the right to get the appropriate visa; the freedom to maintain moveable and immoveable property while in the employment of the University in the host country, and the right to import free of customs duties, taxes and other levies.
- iv) The Vice-Chancellor and academic staff of the host country that is India shall be granted exemption from taxation in respect of salaries, honoraria, allowances and other emoluments in connection with the services provided to the University.

Background

At the 4th East Asia Summit (EAS) held in Thailand in October, 2009, member States issued a Joint Press Statement which supported the establishment of Nalanda University as a non-State, non-profit, secular and self-governing international institution with a continental focus, that would bring together the brightest and most dedicated students from all countries of Asia.

066. Opening Remarks by the External Affairs Minister at the ASEAN-India Foreign Ministers' meeting.

Bandar Seri Begawan, July 1, 2013.

Your Royal Highness Prince Mohamed Bolkiah, Foreign Minister of Brunei Darussalam,

Your Excellency Mr. Hor Namhong, Deputy Prime Minister & Foreign Minister of Cambodia,

Your Excellency Dr. Marty Natalegawa, Foreign Minister of Indonesia,

Your Excellency Mr. Pham Binh Minh, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam

Your Excellency Mr. Alounkeo Kittikhoun, Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs of Lao PDR

Your Excellency Mr. Le Luong Minh, Secretary General of ASEAN

Distinguished Leaders of Delegations from Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam,

Ladies & Gentlemen,

It is with a great sense of pleasure that I join you all today for the 11th ASEAN-India Ministerial Meeting, especially since this is the first time we are meeting after our partnership has been elevated to a strategic level. It's always a pleasure to be among friends, but it is particularly good to meet at a time when the trajectory of our partnership is on a climb! I would like to begin by conveying my gratitude to the Foreign Minister of Brunei Darussalam for the warm welcome and hospitality extended to me and to my delegation and also thank him for the excellent arrangements for our meeting.

Excellencies,

As we enter the third decade of our partnership, we share our sense of achievement over the last two decades in all the three pillars of our cooperation. I would like to place on record our sincere appreciation to every one of you for having put the building blocks of our strategic partnership in place. I would especially like to thank Brunei Darussalam, the current Country Coordinator, and Cambodia, the Country Coordinator before Brunei Darussalam, for their constructive and positive roles to further this strategic partnership.

The fact that ASEAN and India are natural partners is our collective strength. We often say that our partnership with ASEAN is the foundation of our Look East Policy. It is a natural and mutually enhancing partnership where both historical basis and future ambitions make the vectors of our interests congruent in an unparalleled manner. We all share the vision of a stable, secure and prosperous Asia Pacific region. The decision of the ASEAN Leaders and Prime Minister to upgrade the relationship into a strategic partnership was a natural progression to the ground covered since India became a Sectoral Partner of the ASEAN in 1992, Dialogue Partner in 1996 and Summit Level Partner in 2002.

The road-map in the Vision Statement of our Leaders for the future of the ASEAN-India strategic partnership has sound foundations. The rapid pace and momentum in the meetings and events in the run up to our celebrations at the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit saw an overwhelming involvement of the people in our countries. A calendar led by Governments became fully participative of the people, industry and media. Mid-way through the implementation of the ASEAN-India Plan of Action for 2010-15, we already have seen progress in most of the areas and we are on track for the execution of this Plan ahead of time, if we can fast track some of our project proposals in the pipeline.

I would also like to acknowledge the presence amongst us of 8 Indian journalists, who are visiting Brunei Darussalam under the ASEAN India Media Exchange Programme. They have already been to Malaysia. I would like to express my thanks to Malaysia and Brunei Darussalam for hosting them.

I look forward to an exchange of views with you on future ASEAN-India strategic cooperation and I would welcome your valuable suggestions on achieving our common objectives.

Thank you

067. Remarks by the External Affairs Minister at the 11th ASEAN-India Foreign Ministers' Meeting in Brunei Darussalam.

Bandar Seri Begawan, July 1, 2013.

Excellencies,

1. I thank you for your suggestions and views on further enhancing our strategic partnership. I am particularly comforted by the consensus around this room to improving connectivity, promoting cooperation among our institutions and deepening linkages between our people. This has been the unique defining feature of our partnership.
2. I am happy to inform you that we will now be assisted by the ASEAN-India Centre, which has been established pursuant to the direction of our Leaders in their Vision Statement six months ago. This Centre will serve as a resource to assist us, in particular, in implementing connectivity projects across the three dimensions: geographic; institutional; and people-to-people. We look forward to ASEAN suggestions on the specific mandate for the Centre. We will soon be getting from RIS, which is hosting the ASEAN-India Centre, suggestions towards the composition of the Board. I understand that the Chairman of the ASEAN New Delhi Committee has already been invited to be on the Board and there is expectation that ASEAN nationals would eventually join the Indian resource personnel at the Centre. We will review the functioning of the Centre after two years.
3. The Vision Statement and the elevation of the partnership to a strategic level last December came in the wake of significant progress during the last two years in our Plan of Action for 2010-2015 under all the three pillars. The ASEAN Secretariat has worked very interactively with us in its implementation. I would like to thank the Secretary General for the support from his team and inform that we have provided the latest update to ASEC of the numerous activities that have been put under the Plan of Action. We have also begun discussions this month through the ASEAN SOMTC+India consultations in Da Nang, Viet Nam on June 21, to further our collaboration under the ASEAN Political Security Community Blueprint 2015. I am also happy to share with you that we are looking forward to ASEAN participation in an International Symposium on Public Service Excellence towards the end of this year. With these additional activities, our mid-term review of the Plan of Action for 2010-2015 indicates that we could meet the Plan objectives ahead of time, if we are able to fast track some of the project proposals already in the pipeline.

4. We now have more than 25 mechanisms for functional cooperation between ASEAN and India. In the last one year, we initiated Ministerial level meetings in environment and new & renewable energy, began a dialogue on cooperation in the vital SME sector and had the first meeting between the Heads of Space Agencies. The Ministerial level meetings in the sectors of tourism, trade and agriculture have continued with good progress. We also brought in new mechanisms at the levels of officials. I would suggest, Excellencies, that we urge our Ministerial colleagues to keep up, like us, the annual periodicity of their sectoral meetings.
5. Our economic and commercial engagement has seen very impressive trade growth, 10 times in the 10 years, since we launched our Summit level partnership in 2002. But it is very important that we do not rest on our laurels. The FTA on Trade in Goods signed in 2009 helped us to meet our trade target of USD 70 billion ahead of time when the trade turnover in 2012 reached USD 80 billion. But the more recent trend of a relative decline in ASEAN-India trade during 2012-13, though minor, should serve as a wake up call. Excellencies, I would suggest a sense of urgency to concluding the legal scrubbing of the ASEAN-India Trade in Services and Investment Agreements and an early signature of these agreements before our Leaders meet again in another three months. This is also essential for achieving our trade target of USD 100 billion by 2015 as directed in the Vision Statement by our Leaders.

6. Excellencies, we are happy to note the progress amongst the ASEAN countries in integrative processes towards the ASEAN Community by 2015. I would like to emphasize that as ASEAN countries integrate amongst themselves, the process of integration with India should also move apace, whether on facilitating our people-to-people linkages, our institutional and trade complementarity or our geographical connectivity. We would like to engage with you as to how India can contribute further to the processes towards the ASEAN Community by 2015.
7. I would like to mention one of the most progressive developments under the chairmanship of Brunei Darussalam, that we have initiated the annual ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee (ACCC)-India Meeting, to facilitate coordination and policy decisions on connectivity issues. This meeting discussed, inter alia, the idea of a possible maritime transport route linking India, Myanmar, Thailand, Cambodia and Viet Nam and has suggested the setting up of a Joint Working Group on Maritime Connectivity to explore linkages to complement the ASEAN Roll-On/Roll-Off (RO-RO) Shipping Network. The Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) has done commendable work in suggesting the utility of a Mekong India Economic Corridor and we need to, as Governments, look at providing incentives, including setting up of SEZs to attract our private sectors to vest in these connectivity corridors. We look forward to receiving from Lao PDR the coordinated route alignments so that examination of the extension of the Trilateral Highway to Cambodia, Lao PDR and Viet Nam can begin. Our commitments to the Trilateral Highway linking India-Myanmar-Thailand are proceeding as planned. We are looking forward to engage with the ASEAN in the upcoming seminars on connectivity in Thailand in July and November as also in Brunei Darussalam in August. I also concur with the ACCC-India recommendation to address issues relating to enhancement of tourism cooperation between ASEAN and India. I find the Indian tourists see the value for money in tourist destinations in ASEAN and I would like to see a similar perception increase tourist inflows into India from the ASEAN countries! We are internally discussing the feasibility of providing a link from ASEAN to the Buddhist sites in India to facilitate tourist arrivals from ASEAN.

8. In our support for the ASEAN Community by 2015, the Initiative for ASEAN Integration (IAI), the Narrowing of the Development Gap and the Master Plan on ASEAN Plus Connectivity (MPAC), we are continuing with the process of building capacity through the Entrepreneurship Development Centres (EDCs) and Centers for English Language and Training (CELTs) in CLMV countries, apart from offering more than 1100 scholarships to ASEAN countries under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme. We had recently, in May 2013, sent a delegation to Cambodia, Lao PDR and Vietnam to take further the process of setting up additional CELTs, EDCs and VTCs and I look forward to your suggestions on how to utilize these resources better.
9. Excellencies, as I mentioned before, our calendar of activities, led by Governments, has become fully participative of our people. This strengthening of people-to-people linkages is in keeping with our historical experience and of relevance to the future of our strategic partnership. Our exchange programmes for ASEAN students, farmers, diplomats, media and scientists now have annual periodicity but I have been told that more Indians than ASEAN eminent persons have travelled under the Eminent Persons Lecture Series. I would urge that we remedy this imbalance in the EPLS. I hope my colleagues from Brunei, Vietnam and Singapore, who have been invited under the EPLS programme this year, will consider my suggestion to lend their support to it. I look forward to seeing them in India.
10. I have also sought your convenience, Excellencies, for dates in March 2014 for Delhi Dialogue-VI. I value your support in strengthening this premier track 1.5 interaction as also the ASEAN-India Network of Think Tanks, which would be held in Lao PDR later this year.
11. In terms of priorities ahead, in the run up to our 11th Summit on October 10, 2013, we look forward to working with you on the:

- ❑ Setting up of four IT Centres in CLMV and an IT Resource Centre in India by Centre for Development of Advanced Computing;
 - ❑ Establishment of Tracking and Data Reception Station & Data Processing Facility for ASEAN in Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam;
 - ❑ Upgradation of the Biak II Telemetry Tracking & Command Station in Indonesia
 - ❑ Training of ASEAN Personnel in Space Science and Technology,
 - ❑ Take further the process of finalization on the project for cooperation on Bio-diversity between the ASEAN Centre for Bio-diversity (ACB) and National Bio-diversity Authority of India (NBA).
12. Excellencies, India remains convinced of the continuing relevance of the ASEAN-India strategic partnership as an anchor for peace, stability and prosperity in the region as also globally. There is a mutually beneficial synergy in our partnership. We continue to see the relevance also of ASEAN centrality to our regional fora such as the East Asia Summit, the ASEAN Regional Forum, the ASEAN Defence Ministers' Meeting Plus and the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum. I look forward to continuing our dialogue on this at the ARF and EAS meetings.

Thank you

068. Media Briefing by External Affairs Minister In Brunei Darussalam.

Bandar Seri Begawan, July 1, 2013.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Good evening and welcome. I think you have been given some brief press note of the substance of what we have been able to do today. This will just give you in a capsule form what we have been able to do.

I think we had a very good engagement at the ASEAN-India Dialogue. Very positive assessments have been made of the midway that we have reached on the Action Plan 2010-2015. I think the steps that we have taken have been noticed and welcomed including the setting up of the ASEAN-India Centre. And I have of course requested the involvement of members from other countries as well in the Centre.

There was tremendous emphasis on connectivity which is a high priority as far as we are concerned. A range of issues were discussed, flagged, noted, proposed, but I think connectivity - whether by sea or by air or by road and digital connectivity - has been probably the most important dimension with everybody almost automatically and nationally focused on. We are very happy with that thought because for us, as I said to you earlier in the day, connectivity is a high priority.

Connectivity for us is not just connectivity between India and ASEAN but that part of India that we are committed to in terms of giving it opportunity, opening, connecting it with the areas of opportunity in the world, which is our North-East, and this converges very beautifully together. So this was largely what we focused on.

Then we followed up with a whole lot of bilaterals. Of course there were so many bilaterals everyone was doing and space was so constricted that we could not complete all the bilaterals we would have liked to do today. So, they will spill over to tomorrow. But we have done some very very useful bilaterals today I think, and we have given ourselves an enormous amount of follow-up work that we have to do. So, in that sense this ASEAN get-together has given us a tremendous opportunity for much of the bilateral work that takes much longer because you wait for an opportunity of Foreign Office Consultation or a visit from either side.

We had excellent meetings with Mongolia. We had an outstanding meeting with Bangladesh, with Turkey. We had an outstanding meeting with Canada particularly, great willingness and being prepared to cooperate with us in counterterrorism and in countering any element that is against the Indian interest, willing to share information, willing to cooperate.

Turkish Foreign Minister said that if there is a political will, India and Turkey have a special relationship on which you can build up to the stars because they have been working very hard on several countries including Russia, China and Brazil. But he actually flagged India as a very special area of interest because of our historic connections. I have conveyed to him that I will be traveling to Turkey very shortly. By the 20th of this month I will be in Turkey for three days. He was good enough to invite me other than the official meetings to visit the Konya which is the area from where he comes and where there are some very important historical sights that he would like me to visit.

I also had a good meeting with DPR of Korea. Of course they have been our traditional friends. I made it clear that in the changed world circumstances we have to evolve and take up positions that are consistent with global points of view unless there is of course a matter of very special principle.

They said they wanted us to understand from their point of view why they are taking certain postures and positions. They conveyed that to us; we have taken note of it. But we were also very candid in explaining to them that sometimes we depart even from positions that our friends take because we take principled positions and, therefore, it should not be taken as a departure from friendship. But there is a clear departure from some positions they may take for their own reasons. We cannot take the same position. And where we do not, we would like them to hear us out and for us to hear them out and for us to be able to explain to them that this is not something on which we see even from their point of view an outcome that would be beneficial for their people. And for the rest, on humanitarian issues, on other issues which we can be of support, both in terms of food assistance or any such assistance, we are always willing and forthcoming.

We also had a very good meeting, an outstanding meeting with the Foreign Minister of Timor-Leste who wants to engage much more closely, who cherishes the contribution that two Indians made, of course as part of the Commonwealth presence, at the time of the birth of Timor-Leste - one was Mr. Kamlesh Sharma the Secretary General and Atul Khare previously from our Foreign Service who served under Mr. Kamlesh Sharma.

With Bangladesh we had a detailed discussion. The Foreign Minister explained to me what is happening in Bangladesh, also indicated that for the first time in many years the Opposition is attending parliament. That is a good sign that the Opposition is attending Parliament. In the streets of course there is still a lot of divided opinion but that is the case in any democracy. We thank them for the cooperation they have given us in security matters, particularly as far as the border is concerned. We have reiterated our commitment to work jointly with them to ensure that there are no border incidents which periodically disturb the relationship balance.

We have also said that we must look at a vision plan, at sharing the electricity and power because we are just going to provide grid connectivity and give them 250 MW from the state sector, and they are looking for another 250 MW from the private sector. But this is a one off thing. We hope that there can be a vision plan in which we can encourage and succeed in getting Bangladesh also to invest in projects for production of electricity and power.

With Mongolia there has been a huge range of issues. Mongolian Foreign Minister had been to India. I have met him there. He has called on Mr. Anand Sharma. He has met with other Ministers. He is very very keen that India and Mongolia work closely together in many fields. He has welcomed us in the field of mining. I have suggested to him that we should work together on capacity building, adding institutions to strengthen democracy in their country. They have just had a successful election in which the President has been re-elected. I congratulated them on the election of the President. And we hope that in the next few months we will be able to come up with a very detailed action plan for much greater engagement between Mongolia and ourselves.

We had a very good meeting with Cambodia. They thanked us for our symbolic contribution of 40,000 bottles of indelible ink. So, the indelible ink that has become a standard of India's free and fair of elections will now travel to one more country and that is Cambodia. On 28th of July they will have their elections and their voters will be marked by Indian ink, and he has expressed his gratitude.

We have agreed that, just as we did with Angkor Vat, there are other very important shrines that we should work on. He wanted us to have complete air connectivity as far as the Buddhist sites are concerned. We agree with that. Of course we need to work with the Civil Aviation Ministry to see how we can have two-way traffic of people visiting Buddhist shrines and Buddhist places of historical interest.

We have highlighted to them as well as to Mongolia the importance of Nalanda University and how institutions in other countries should look in to Nalanda University because this is one of the major edifices that will mark India's soft diplomacy and engagement with Asia based on our historic and spiritual links but providing it with a new vigour and a new energy in our times in the 21st century.

I will meet the Chinese Foreign Minister tomorrow. In recent times we have met several times but it would be useful to engage in just an update on how things have moved. The NSA has just been back from China. He had a good useful meeting with the new Special Representative on the Chinese side, concentrating on peace and tranquility on the border and also looking at strengthening the existing mechanisms for peace and tranquility as well as looking forward to a resolution of the border issue. So, it is work in progress, obviously another step incrementally.

We engage repeatedly in order to see that we are able to eliminate any hiccups that come at any time due to any reason and also to continue to consolidate on the progress that has been made. This was the sixteenth round of dialogue between the Special Representatives. So, we will get the Chinese perspective on it. We know from our side, but we will get a Chinese perspective on that as well.

Q: Is there any update on the BDCA which we are trying to negotiate with the Chinese?

External Affairs Minister: We are not trying to negotiate, they have suggested. They have given us a draft and they have suggested it. It is the next step to whatever is already in place, agreements and protocols that are in place. This is the next step that they have suggested but it is being examined. These documents take a little bit of time because you have to look at every aspect. And since we are doing this step by step we do not want to do anything in haste because you do not want regrets caused by haste. They had given us a draft, we are looking at it. Obviously the NSA would have touched upon it, perhaps given some update on where we have reached. But this is still work in progress.

Q: Sir, in your meeting with DPRK, did you raise Proliferation concerns in our neighbourhood, particularly since there are reports about...(Inaudible)...between DPRK and Pakistan?

External Affairs Minister: In my statement in the morning I have mentioned that. We did not have enough time to go into details. The important thing is that they were trying to explain to us the reason why they take up a position on nuclear weapons. They say that we are doing it to protect ourselves. And we said to them that protection also comes if you are not isolated; it is important not to be isolated in the world and to remain engaged with the world, then you can have many more people helping you; but if you get isolated, then many people who want to help you may also not be able to help you. So, this is the advice that we could give as friends and we did that.

This was no occasion really because we would have had to go into much more detail. But what I have suggested is that we are hoping that their Vice Minister will travel to India for Foreign Office consultations and we will keep this as an agenda for more detailed discussion. Then all these issues can be taken up. The very fact that they want to engage with us and that they want to communicate and reach out to us, gives us a good opportunity to say to them that if we have to be in an honest relationship, then it is important that just as we are listening to their concern and trying to factor that into our understanding, they must also factor in our concern. And we do have a concern about proliferation.

He did say very clearly, I am just going by the words that he used, that we are doing whatever we are doing to protect ourselves, we have no intention to indulge in any proliferation. So, at least he has given us some opening that we can in a subsequent meeting bring up and discuss our discomfort at their contribution by way of proliferation with Pakistan.

Q: Is there any likelihood of any high-level visit from India to North Korea?

External Affairs Minister: I am not sure. They would like us to come. There is already a series of events that have to take place to celebrate and those are going on this year – the 40th anniversary of diplomatic relations with them. There is also the 60th anniversary of their victory, what they call Victory of Father Land. There we are examining the possibility of a Parliamentary Delegation of three parliamentarians going to Korea. I do not think there is any other proposal on the horizon.

Q: Was the Anup Chetia extradition issue raised with Bangladesh Foreign Minister?

External Affairs Minister: No, we did not. On this occasion I did not raise it. We looked at the broad issues. But we are in constant touch with them. Bangladesh is right there in the neighbourhood. So, these are issues that are periodically raised and I am sure that the High Commissioner is following it up.

Q: Any possibility of a visit by Bangladesh PM?

External Affairs Minister: I mentioned that our Prime Minister is hopeful that their Prime Minister will visit, and to convey that desire to her. Obviously, it is difficult time for them because this is the election year. We are also moving towards election year. But I hope that she will be able to visit. I have indicated that even if it is for a short visit she can come, it will give an impetus to a lot of the things that are in the pipeline, on which Bangladesh Foreign Minister expressed a general satisfaction and pleasure at things going smoothly.

Q: India has been wanting Bangladesh to invest in power. They have not reached any decision on the Tipaimukh I think.

External Affairs Minister: They wanted some more information on Tipaimukh which we are giving them through our High Commission. But we want them to look at other projects, the futuristic projects that will come because that is the best way of being fully informed about what we are doing and having a stake. Otherwise, there is always this danger that people will create a horrific story about how India is going to take away everything and so on. But if we are partners and we are working together, then all the information and the ground reality will be known to their side and then ultimately they need power so might as well have a stake in the production of power.

Q: But it means that they are not still convinced about the Tipaimukh, right?

External Affairs Minister: These are big investments and big investments you have to be careful, you have to do due diligence, you need to seek information. And we have nothing to hold back, we are giving them information which is going through our normal channels.

Q: So, on Tipaimukh they are seeking information before their investment decision.

External Affairs Minister: They had sought. I informed her that we are giving that information. It must be in the process of being conveyed.

Q: Any chance of meeting Mr. Sartaj Aziz who is also going to be here?

External Affairs Minister: He is not here today, he would probably come tonight. If the occasion arises and he shows an interest, or there is occasion where we feel perhaps this will be a good time to meet, we will meet. You know, he is highly respected in our country. He has a lot of people who have known him in the past. I have not had the good fortune to meet him, but I am sure that there is no reason why, if the opportunity arises, we will not be able to spend some time together.

Thank you

069. Intervention by the External Affairs Minister on “Exchange of views on regional and international issues” at 20th ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) meeting.

Bandar Seri Begawan (Brunei Darussalam), July 2, 2013.

Your Royal Highness and dear colleagues,

Allow me to express my deep gratitude to you, Mr. Chairman for the excellent arrangements made for this meeting and the cordial and hospitable reception that has been extended to us.

We are heartened by the signs of deepening economic interdependence and cooperation within the Asia Pacific region. With globalisation, intertwining of economies has become a reality. This interdependence contributes significantly towards our shared goals of peace, security and prosperity. At the same time, as we have heard this morning, there are some real anxieties about grave political and security issues that need to be addressed. The ARF provides a forum for dialogue on such issues and India has faith that this dialogue can be constructive and fruitful, provided it is carried out with commitment and vision by all concerned parties.

The universal scourge of terrorism unleashed by terror groups with global reach requires a comprehensive global approach to which all of us have to be committed in an unqualified manner. The global regime against terrorism needs to be hinged on a holistic framework for which the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the UN requires early conclusion. Within the ARF community, we must practically enhance our cooperation by pooling our information and resources, not only to prevent terrorist attacks but also to apprehend and bring terrorists to justice and to demonstrate in a categorical way our commitment to combat terror.

It is terrorism that poses the main threat to peace and stability in Afghanistan, securing which is in the interest of all ARF countries and the international community and we have heard this repeated several times today. There is a need for joint and concerted efforts to dismantle terrorist sanctuaries and safe havens, particularly beyond Afghan borders. We must assist Afghanistan in its efforts to become a stable, democratic and pluralistic state. The international community must stay committed to Afghanistan in the form of development and security assistance during this critical period of transition and transformation.

We support the efforts made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan to establish a peaceful dialogue with all armed opposition groups. It is important to underscore that this process must be a broad-based Afghan-led Afghan-owned reconciliation one, within the framework of the Afghan Constitution and internationally accepted red lines, to which we have all subscribed. This dialogue must involve all sections of the Afghan society and armed opposition groups, including the Taliban, willing to give up their arms and subscribe to the Constitution. The reconciliation process must not undermine the legitimacy of the Afghan State and Government and the political, social and economic progress witnessed in Afghanistan over the past decade, through contributions made by many in the international community. I may emphasise here that India's Afghanistan policy does not have an exit policy. India has played an important role in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Afghanistan and intends to remain committed to Afghanistan's future.

Another area of deep concern to us is that of clandestine proliferation of WMD technologies, which poses a grave threat to international security. With a view to address the risk of nuclear weapons, materials and technology falling into the hands of terrorists, India has been piloting a UN resolution in this regard for the past several years. In this context, the situation in the Korean peninsula and the DPRK and the possible clandestine proliferation deserves careful scrutiny. India has expressed deep concern about the nuclear test conducted by DPRK on February 12, 2013 in violation of its international commitments. We hope that the voice of reason will prevail. We call upon DPRK to refrain from such actions which adversely impact on peace and stability in the region. We support the objective of de-nuclearization of the Korean peninsula, a vision that the DPRK has endorsed, and the resumption of talks among relevant parties.

The imperatives of globalisation and our economic inter-dependence require a stable maritime system, given the demands of trade and commerce and energy flows. Safety and security of sea lanes of communication is, therefore, of paramount importance. Non-state threats to maritime security stemming from piracy and smuggling that we have seen in recent years should be addressed through dialogue, transparency and close cooperation. There is also need to reaffirm the importance of unimpeded right of passage and other maritime rights in accordance with accepted principles of international law. These principles obviously should be respected by all. Maintenance of peace and security in the region is of vital interest and sovereignty issues must be resolved peacefully by all countries concerned, in accordance with international law. We oppose the use or threat of use of force. We hope that all parties to disputes in the South China Sea region will abide by the 2002 Declaration on Conduct in the South China Sea and work together to ensure peaceful resolution of disputes, in accordance with international law, including 1982 UNCLOS. We urge all parties concerned to take forward these discussions towards adoption of a Code of Conduct in the South China Sea on the basis of consensus.

The Asian security architecture now has a multiplicity of forums, albeit with converging agenda. We believe that the ASEAN should continue to be in the lead in each of these forums. We also believe that the activities under these forums should be coordinated so as to minimise duplication and encourage greater synergy. India remains fully committed to these processes and will participate in and contribute to the ARF as well as the ADMM+, Expanded Maritime Forum and others.

I would also like to touch on the situation in Syria and the Middle East. India is concerned at the deteriorating security situation in Syria and calls upon all parties to stop violence and engage in inclusive national dialogue in order to resolve the conflict through peaceful political means, taking into account the legitimate aspirations of all Syrians. This must be done in accordance with internationally approved political and legal principles including the UNSC resolutions 2042 and 2043 and the Joint Communique of the Geneva Action Group.

We also support the revival of the Middle East Peace Process which should result in the realisation of the legitimate right of the Palestinian people to an independent State, living side by side and in peace and security with Israel. May I also take this opportunity to convey my good wishes to our good friend and neighbour Myanmar as it prepares to take on the Chairmanship of ASEAN and thus the ARF in 2014?

Thank you

070. Chairman's Statement of the 3rd East Asia Summit Foreign Ministers' Meeting.

Bandar Seri Begawan (Brunei Darussalam), July 3, 2013.

1. The 3rd East Asia Summit (EAS) Foreign Ministers' Meeting was held on 2 July 2013 in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei Darussalam. The Meeting was chaired by His Royal Highness Prince Mohamed Bolkiah, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade of Brunei Darussalam.
2. The Ministers acknowledged the development and growing importance of the EAS in the regional architecture. Recognising the EAS as a Leaders-led forum for dialogue and cooperation on broad strategic, political and economic issues of common concerns with the aim of promoting peace, stability and economic prosperity in East Asia, the Ministers emphasised the need to further consolidate and strengthen the EAS and to ensure the effective follow-up and implementation of Leaders' discussions and decisions.
3. The Ministers noted Indonesia's call for ASEAN to formulate aspirational goals beyond 2015, such as doubling ASEAN's combined GDP and having the percentage of people living in poverty in the ASEAN region by 2030.
4. The Ministers discussed the follow-up to the 7th EAS and welcomed the progress of the implementation of the EAS cooperation, especially in the six (6) priority areas, namely environment and energy, education, finance, global health issues and pandemic diseases, natural disaster mitigation and ASEAN Connectivity.
5. The Ministers looked forward to the effective and timely implementation of the Phnom Penh Declaration on the EAS Development Initiative, which was adopted at the 7th EAS in Phnom Penh, Cambodia, in 2012. In this regard, the Ministers welcomed China's proposal to formulate a Plan of Action (POA) to implement the Phnom Penh Declaration on the EAS Development Initiative and agreed for the officials to stock-take EAS initiatives under the Phnom Penh Declaration and develop a plan of action.

6. The Ministers commended Russia on its proposal for a framework of principles on strengthening security cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region. In this regard, the Ministers tasked the Senior Officials to convene a series of dialogues and workshops on this matter, taking into account the existing security cooperation. The Ministers also took note of Indonesia's idea for an Indo-Pacific framework envisaged based on the principles contained in the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in Southeast Asia (TAC) and in line with the 2011 Declaration of the East Asia Summit on the Principles for Mutually Beneficial Relations (Bali Principles).
7. The Ministers reiterated the importance of ASEAN's central role in the evolving regional architecture and agreed that the EAS would continue to support the realisation of the ASEAN Community and pave the way towards broader and deeper regional integration.
8. The Ministers recalled the 2010 Ha Noi Declaration on the Commemoration of the 5th Anniversary of the EAS, and the 2012 Chairman's Statement of the 7th EAS that welcomed Brunei Darussalam's proposal to conduct a stock-take review and reflection aimed at further consolidating and strengthening the EAS on the basis of its established principles, objectives and modalities and to provide recommendations to the 8th EAS.
9. The Ministers noted the progress of the U.S. – Asia-Pacific Comprehensive Energy Partnership (USACEP) by Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia and the United States of America. The Ministers also welcomed the establishment of the Renewable and Alternative Power Generation Work Stream co-chaired by Brunei Darussalam and the United States of America at the 18th EAS Energy Cooperation Task Force Meeting. The Ministers also noted that the Work Stream shall be brought to the 7th EAS Energy Ministers' Meeting (EAS EMM) for endorsement in September 2013 in Bali, Indonesia, and to be announced by Leaders at the 8th EAS. The Ministers acknowledged the commencement of new research studies by the Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) with support from Japan, and the successful convening of the Workshop on the ASEAN Energy Outlook on 7 May 2013 in Bangkok, Thailand, collaborated with the International Energy Agency (IEA), aiming at its launch in the 7th EAS EMM. The Ministers noted the successful convening of the 1st East Asia Summit New Energy Forum held on 15-16 April 2013 in Kunming, China.

10. The Ministers welcomed the successful convening of the 4th High-Level Seminar on Environmentally Sustainable Cities (HLS-ESC) held on 21-22 March 2013 in Ha Noi, Viet Nam, co-organised by Australia, Indonesia, Japan and Viet Nam. The Ministers also noted the proposal by Australia on an EAS climate change adaptation workshop and the Philippines in 2013-2014.
11. The Ministers welcomed the outcome of the Second East Asia Low Carbon Growth Partnership Dialogue held on 18 May 2013 in Tokyo, Japan and co-chaired by Cambodia and Japan.
12. The Ministers acknowledged the continued work under the EAS Education Action Plan (2011-2015) and the benefit of supporting education cooperation projects that would help to improve the quality and mobility of qualifications across the region. The Ministers welcomed the 2nd EAS Education Ministers' Meeting to be held in Lao PDR in 2014.
13. The Ministers welcomed Brunei Darussalam's offer of scholarships for an 18-month Master of Public Policy and Management (MPPM) programme, which would commence on 27 December 2013 at Universiti Brunei Darussalam.
14. The Ministers appreciated Japan's youth exchange project, entitled "Kizuna (bond) Project", which involved approximately 11,000 youths between Japan and the regions of Asia, Oceania and North America. The Ministers welcomed the launching of the Japan East-Asia Network of Exchange for Students and Youths (JENESYS) 2.0 Project in January 2013, which would exchange a total of 30,000 young people between Japan and Asian/Oceanic region to promote mutual understanding and friendly relations. The Ministers also welcomed the launching of the "KAKEHASHI Project", which would exchange a total of 4,600 people between North America and Japan for the same purpose.

15. The Ministers welcomed the progress on the revival of Nalanda University and noted that the tenders for construction would be invited shortly. The Ministers noted India's proposal for the signing of an Inter-Governmental Agreement to facilitate the setting up of the Nalanda University as a non-state, non-profit and self-governing international institution of excellence.
16. The Ministers welcomed India's suggestion that EAS members begin thinking about a multilateral agreement among interested EAS member countries for bringing in equivalence of qualifications.
17. The Ministers looked forward to the implementation of the Declaration of the 7th EAS on Regional Responses to Malaria Control and Addressing Resistance to Anti-malarial Medicines and encouraged all non-ASEAN EAS participating countries to support ASEAN's efforts to cope with the spread of this disease, either in form of financial or technical assistance. In this regard, the Ministers welcomed the convening of the inaugural Asia-Pacific Leaders' Malaria Alliance (APLMA) to be co-chaired by the Prime Ministers of Australia and Viet Nam at the sidelines of the 8th EAS. The Ministers further noted that Australia and India would co-chair the Access to Quality Medicines Task Force under the APLMA. The Ministers also affirmed the importance of promoting universal health coverage in order to address diverse health needs.
18. The Ministers reaffirmed the importance of enhancing cooperation in disaster management through regional mechanisms. In this regard, the Ministers welcomed the various cooperation and linkage between the ASEAN Committee on Disaster Management (ACDM) and other disaster management authorities in non-ASEAN countries, which contributes to the strengthening of capacity for disaster management in this region. The Ministers welcomed the support of the EAS participating countries to the establishment of the ASEAN Coordinating Centre for Humanitarian Assistance on Disaster Management (AHA Centre).

19. The Ministers also welcomed the convening of the first open session of the ACDM on EAS Cooperation on Disaster Management held on 10 January 2013 in Chiang Mai, Thailand. The Ministers also noted the ACDM's decisions to have such a session on a regular basis to discuss the linkage between the EAS paper on "A Practical Approach to Enhance Regional Cooperation on Disaster Rapid Response" and the ASEAN Agreement on Disaster Management and Emergency Response (AADMER) Work Programme (2010-2015) and looked forward to the next session to discuss this further.
20. The Ministers affirmed their support for the 3rd UN World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction to be held in Japan in 2015.
21. The Ministers also welcomed the outcomes of the ASEAN Regional Forum Disaster Relief Exercise (ARF DiREx) held on 7-11 May 2013 in Cha-Am, Thailand, and the ASEAN Defence Ministers' Meeting Plus Humanitarian Assistance and Disaster Relief and Military Medicine Exercise (ADMM-Plus HADR & MM Ex) held on 17-20 June 2013 in Brunei Darussalam. The Ministers looked forward to the convening of the
22. ASEAN Regional Disaster Emergency Response Exercise (ARDEX) to be held in October 2013 in Viet Nam and welcomed Indonesia and Australia's EAS workshop on rapid response to be held in Darwin in September 2013 as well as the Mentawai Mega thrust Disaster Relief Exercise in Indonesia in March 2014.
23. As a follow-up to the outcome of the "EAS-India Workshop 2012: Building Regional Framework for Earthquake Risk Management" held in New Delhi on 8-9 November 2012, the Ministers welcomed India's proposals to establish a network of 24x7 Points of Contacts among the National Disaster Response Agencies of the EAS Participating Countries and a Virtual Knowledge Centre (VKC) to share knowledge and best practices related to natural disaster risk assessment, mitigation and response.

24. The Ministers acknowledged the importance of cooperation in finance and expressed their support to further develop this priority area of EAS cooperation.
25. The Ministers reaffirmed the need to further promote cooperation to support the implementation of the Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity (MPAC) and to enhance connectivity within East Asia, taking into account the Declaration of the 6th EAS on ASEAN Connectivity adopted by the Leaders in 2011 in Bali, Indonesia. The Ministers welcomed the engagement to be undertaken between the ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee (ACCC) and non-ASEAN EAS participating countries, to work out the issue of financing connectivity projects towards realising the MPAC, and noted that this would include discussion of Australia's paper on establishing an EAS Connectivity Forum.
26. The Ministers recognised the importance of mobilising financial and technical resources and the promotion of public-private partnership (PPP). In this connection, the Ministers welcomed the theme of the 4th ASEAN Connectivity Symposium entitled "Partnering Private Sector for ASEAN Connectivity" to be held in August 2013 in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei Darussalam, with the contribution of the ERIA. The Ministers also welcomed an EAS Regulatory Roundtable to be co-chaired by Thailand and New Zealand, which is aimed at supporting ASEAN's own objectives with regard to regulatory reform and at sharing best practice in this area. The roundtable will be held back-to-back with Thailand's initiative to host the Workshop on "Enhancing Connectivity through Multi-layered Regional Frameworks: The Roles of Dialogue Partners" in July 2013 in Bangkok, Thailand.
27. The Ministers also welcomed the Statement of ERIA's 6th Governing Board Meeting issued on 4 May 2013 and its work plan to undertake research and policy recommendations to enhance community-building efforts.

28. The Ministers recognized the necessity of strengthening economic relations among EAS members and underscored the importance of negotiations on the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP) which would affirm ASEAN centrality in the emerging regional economic architecture and the interests of ASEAN's FTA partners, and would provide a platform for future trade and investment integration in Asia and the rest of the world. The Ministers recognized that the RCEP complements the interests of EAS in supporting and contributing to economic integration, equitable economic development and strengthening economic cooperation among participating countries, through working towards a comprehensive, high quality and mutually beneficial agreement.
29. The Ministers recalled the 2012 Phnom Penh Declaration on the EAS Development Initiative encouraging EAS countries to cooperate in promoting food security and nutrition. In this regard, the Ministers welcomed food security as an area of focus in the EAS in 2013 and the progress of the work by Senior Officials on an EAS Declaration on Food Security to be adopted by the Leaders at the 8th EAS.
30. The Ministers also adopted the Terms of Reference for an EAS Track II Study Group on Enhancing Food Security through Sustainable Fisheries Management and Marine Environment Conservation and looked forward to the appointment of representatives to the Study Group by September 2013.
31. The Ministers underscored the importance of peace, stability, and maritime security in the region and reiterated the Leaders' call for regional efforts to enhance cooperation in promoting maritime cooperation. In this regard, the Ministers looked forward to the convening of the 2nd Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum (EAMF), back-to-back with the 4th ASEAN Maritime Forum (AMF) to be held in the second half of 2013 in Malaysia.
32. The Ministers shared the view on the need to further enhance cooperation on non-traditional security issues, including terrorism, narcotics, and other transnational crimes. The Ministers also strongly supported strengthening of global regime for disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, calling for further elaboration of strict verification mechanism for non-proliferation and disarmament obligation.

33. The Ministers underscored the importance of accelerating the efforts towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in East Asia by 2015. The Ministers will strive to establish an effective and coherent post-2015 development framework centred on sustainable development and guided by human rights and dignity, equality and equity.
34. The Ministers welcomed the convening of the 5th Ministerial Meeting of Gender Quality of East Asia on 15 May 2013 in Beijing, China.
35. The Ministers underscored the importance of maintaining peace and stability in the South China Sea and noted the ASEAN Statement on the Six-Point Principles on the South China Sea. The Ministers stressed the importance of peaceful settlement of disputes through friendly consultations and negotiations by sovereign states directly concerned in accordance with universally recognized principles of international law, including the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS). The Ministers welcomed the collective commitments of ASEAN Member States and China to fully and effectively implement the Declaration on the Conduct of Parties in the South China Sea (DOC), including the Guidelines for the Implementation of the DOC and to work towards the adoption of a code of conduct in the South China Sea (COC) on the basis of consensus. In this regard, the Ministers appreciated the continued ASEAN-China consultations and dialogue for mutual trust, confidence and cooperation, and the convening of the 8th Meeting of ASEAN-China Joint Working Group on the Implementation of the DOC on 29 May 2013 in Bangkok, Thailand. The Ministers were encouraged with the convening of the 6th ASEAN-China Senior Officials' Meeting on the Implementation of the DOC and the 9th Meeting of the Joint Working Group on the implementation of the DOC to be hosted by China in September 2013 during which all parties will have official consultations on the code of conduct. The Ministers noted that steps will be taken to establish an Eminent Persons and Experts Group (EPEG) and/or other mechanisms to provide support to such consultations.

36. The Ministers stressed the need to maintain peace, security and stability in the Korean Peninsula, and encouraged peaceful dialogue including the resumption of the Six Party Talks. The Ministers reiterated the importance of fully complying with the obligations in all relevant United Nations Security Council (UNSC) Resolutions, and commitments under the 19 September 2005 Joint Statement of the Six-Party Talks. The Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to fully implementing the relevant UNSC Resolutions and their full support for all efforts to bring about the denuclearisation of the Korean Peninsula in a peaceful manner. In this regard, the Ministers welcomed the Trust-building Process on the Korean Peninsula and the Peace and Cooperation Initiative proposed by the President of the Republic of Korea. The Ministers also emphasised the importance of addressing issues of humanitarian concerns of the international community.
37. The Ministers also discussed the preparations for the upcoming 8th EAS to be held on 10 October 2013 in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei Darussalam.
38. The Ministers looked forward to the 4th EAS Foreign Ministers' Meeting in Nay Pyi Taw, Myanmar in 2014.

071. Press Release of the Ministry of Defence on the Second ASEAN Defence Ministers' Plus Meeting.

Bandar Seri Begawan, August 29, 2013.

The second ADMM Plus meeting was held in Brunei. The Minister of State for Defence Shri Jitendra Singh led the Indian delegation at the meeting. The Ministers issued a joint Declaration at the end of the meeting in which it has been decided that the ADMM Plus countries will establish practical measures that reduce vulnerability to miscalculation and avoid misunderstanding and undesirable incidents at sea.

Among other decisions taken at the meeting of the ADMM Plus, was the establishment of an additional (sixth) Expert Working Group on Humanitarian Mine Action which will be co-chaired by India with Vietnam.

Following is the text of speech rendered by the Minister of State for Defence Shri Jitendra Singh at the second ADMM Plus meeting held in Brunei.

"I am honoured to be present at the second meeting of the ADMM Plus. At the outset I would like to express my sincere gratitude to our hosts and in particular to you, Mr Chairman, for the warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation. I would also like to take this opportunity to convey the good wishes of my senior colleague and the Defence Minister Mr A K Antony who was unable to participate in this important event due to Parliament related work.

India views our partnership with the ASEAN as a critical element of our vision of a stable, secure and prosperous Asia and its surrounding Indian Ocean and Pacific regions. We acknowledge that our own security and prosperity are vitally linked to the Asia Pacific region. Therefore, three years ago, we welcomed the establishment of the ADMM Plus and viewed our participation in this forum as a natural and logical corollary to our multifaceted political, economic and security engagement with the ASEAN member states. We see this Ministerial meeting as an important opportunity to review progress and to further strengthen cooperation on the basis of the agreed declaration that will be adopted today.

We commend the ASEAN for its role as the principal architect and driver of the economic and security cooperation structures which are emerging in the region. By building mechanisms which are based on the principles of inclusivity, dialogue and consensus, the ASEAN has created opportunities for all of us in this region to contribute towards peace and prosperity. ASEAN centrality and leadership have been rightly recognised as the essential elements for the success of these forums and India fully supports ASEAN's central role in these efforts.

The strategic environment in the region remains in a state of flux. This region represents a significant portion of the world's population, its economic strength and also the largest militaries. We cannot, therefore, miss the opportunity that this forum presents, to facilitate an environment of peace and stability, which would be conducive to the aspirations of every nation in this region.

The ADMM Plus was built with the objective of developing synergy and cooperative frameworks to enable us to address the complex security challenges which we face. We hope that the model of accommodation and consensus and of following a gradual, step by step approach will positively influence the conduct of all States in the region. We have, therefore, welcomed the proposal to convene this forum every two years.

Terrorism represents a major threat to the peace, stability and security of the entire region. India has been urging that the global regime against terrorism needs to be strengthened through the early adoption of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the UN. To deal with terror groups which operate across borders and have acquired global reach, we must combine efforts to ensure that terrorist sanctuaries, safe havens and the networks for financing to terrorist groups are dismantled.

Since the main threat to peace and stability in Afghanistan emanates from terrorism, it is imperative that terrorist sanctuaries and safe havens, particularly those beyond Afghan borders, are dismantled. The international community must redouble efforts to assist Afghanistan become a stable, democratic and pluralistic state. India supports the efforts of the Afghan Government to establish a peaceful dialogue with all armed opposition groups. The reconciliation process must be Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-controlled, within the framework of the Afghan constitution and internationally accepted redlines. The recent attack against our Consulate in Jalalabad will not deter us in our efforts to assist Afghanistan in the reconstruction and development efforts.

The deteriorating situation in Syria is a matter of continuing concern to the international community. India has supported calls for stopping of violence and commencement of an inclusive national dialogue to resolve the conflict through peaceful political means. The dialogue should also take into account the legitimate aspirations of all Syrians, in accordance with internationally approved political and legal principles including the relevant UNSC resolutions. If recent reports regarding use of chemical weapons outside Damascus are confirmed by the UN investigation team, it would be a matter of grave concern. The international legal norm against the use of chemical weapons must not be breached. India has consistently supported the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapon worldwide and for strict measures to prevent their access to non-state actors and terrorist groups.

India has expressed deep concern about the nuclear test conducted by DPRK in February 2013. We support the objective of denuclearization of the Korean peninsula and the resumption of talks among the relevant parties.

Issues of maritime security in this region are being addressed at a number of levels and through various dialogue frameworks. The safety and security of the sea lanes of communication is of paramount importance. We note that cooperation and coordination among States has improved their ability to address non-state threats to maritime security. There is need to reaffirm the importance of unimpeded right of passage and other maritime rights in accordance with the accepted principles of international law. These principles should be respected by all. Maintenance of peace and security in the region is of vital interest and sovereignty issues must be resolved peacefully by all countries concerned, in accordance with international law. We oppose the use or the threat of use of force. We hope that all parties to disputes in the South China Sea region will abide by the 2002 Declaration on Conduct in the South China Sea and work together to ensure peaceful resolution of disputes, in accordance with international law, including the UNCLOS. We urge all parties concerned to take forward these discussions towards adoption of a Code of Conduct in the South China Sea on the basis of consensus.

We commend the useful work that has been done by the 5 Expert Working Groups in their mandated areas and we look forward to the strengthening of cooperation that has been established between our defence establishments. India is committed to strengthening the ADMM– Plus forum. Our participation in the recent HADR exercise at Brunei Darussalam and our already stated desire to partner with Vietnam in a new area of cooperation, namely Humanitarian Mine Action, are a reflection of our commitment to contribute to the success of this Forum.

We agree that there is need to steer the activities of ADMM - Plus in a manner that adds value to its efforts and to synergise the activities of this forum with other forums like ARF and EAS. The leaders of ADSOM - Plus should work out efficient modalities to ensure greater synergy and efficiency.

To end, I wish to reaffirm India's commitment to work with our partners in this forum to create an open, balanced and rule-based security architecture that is capable of addressing current and future challenges to peace and stability in this region.

I thank you, Mr Chairman and Excellencies, for this opportunity to share my views. I also take this opportunity to convey our felicitations and good wishes to our friend and neighbour Myanmar, as it prepares to take on the Chairmanship of ASEAN in 2014.”

072. Address by the External Affairs Minister at the inaugural session of 2nd ASEAN-India Network of Think Tanks (AINTT) Conference.

Vientiane (Laos), September 10, 2013.

Deputy Prime Minister & Minister of Foreign Affairs of Lao PDR Dr.

Thongloun Sisoulith

Deputy Secretary General of ASEAN for Corporate & Community

Affairs Dr. A.K.P. Mochtan

Director General, RIS Dr. Biswajit Dhar

Distinguished Panelists and Speakers from ASEAN countries

Members of Think Tank Community in the region

Ladies and gentlemen

I am delighted to inaugurate the 2nd Round Table of the ASEAN-India Network of Think Tanks in this beautiful and serene city of Vientiane. I would, in particular, like to extend my support to RIS for their decision to rotate the AINTT Round Table between India and ASEAN Member States. The choice of Vientiane to host the 2nd Round Table will allow Indian and ASEAN members of the strategic community to strengthen their linkages with the Institute of Foreign Affairs of Lao PDR, the partner to this Round Table.

The AINTT was an initiative announced by Prime Minister of India during the 7th ASEAN-India Summit in Thailand in 2009, to provide an essential bridge between the think tank communities in ASEAN countries and India. It was felt that the strategic community in the region could contribute usefully towards policy decisions by the Governments of ASEAN countries and India to further strengthen the ASEAN-India Dialogue Partnership. As you are aware, the process of adding substance and 'meat on the bones' of the relationship acquired particular momentum during the Commemorative Year celebrations in 2012, marking 20 years of the ASEAN-India partnership. Prime Minister of India and the ASEAN Leaders upgraded this Dialogue Partnership to a Strategic Partnership at the special Commemorative Summit on December 20, 2012.

I hope that you will keep this context in mind when you brainstorm over the next two days. I dare say that there is a huge volume of academic studies on the potential in the ASEAN-India relationship. What the Governments would welcome would be practical suggestions which can be implemented in tangible terms, keeping in mind ground realities. In a sense, we are hoping that you all would become an extended team to the Governments in this endeavour. The process of your brainstorming from one Round Table to another would also need to take on the character of a process in continuum.

Ladies and gentlemen

The substantive parameters for the future of the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership are contained in the Vision Statement which was adopted at the December Summit. This sets the direction for strengthening all pillars: political and security, economic as also the socio-cultural linkages between India and ASEAN. I was very happy to launch the ASEAN-India Centre in New Delhi on June 21, 2013. This Centre, which will be functioning under the guidance of Chairman RIS, has been set up to act as a resource to assist the Governments of India and ASEAN in strengthening the strategic partnership across the three pillars. I would suggest that there is a requirement of synergy between the ASEAN-India Centre in New Delhi and the deliberations of AINTT.

If one were to analyze the over 60 meetings/ events/ programmes organized between ASEAN and India last year and also study India's participation in official Ministerial meetings with the ASEAN, and the approach to ASEAN centric fora such as ADMM+, ARF, Expanded Maritime Forum Plus and, of course, the discussions during the ASEAN-India Summits and the East Asia Summit, there is a predominant emphasis on practical issues of cooperation.

The fact that there is great synergy of objective between ASEAN and India, both amongst Governments and at the level of the strategic and business communities, has contributed to this emphasis on tangibles in ASEAN-India cooperation. India has suggested activities under almost all paras of the Plan of Action for 2010-15. There has been an intensification of training programmes and capacity building in sectoral cooperation.

Ladies and gentlemen

Regular annual meetings between Ministers of Agriculture, Commerce, External Affairs and Tourism are the norm. Ministerial meetings have been initiated in Environment and New & Renewable Energy. The numbers of ITEC scholarships offered by India to ASEAN countries have seen substantial increase and our people-to-people programmes have also expanded. Both AINTT and Delhi Dialogue are acquiring significant following and I would, in fact, urge that we begin looking at creating a supportive line between these two dialogues reaching out to the strategic communities interested in our region.

One of the most significant developments has been the integration of the economic space between ASEAN countries and India. An annual growth rate of 22% over the last 11 years allowed us to cross the target of USD 70 billion by 2012. Trade volumes in 2012 reached USD 80 billion, making India the 6th largest trading partner of ASEAN and the 7th largest source of investment in the region. ASEAN contributes 10% of India's global trade. These figures point to the potential and the opportunities that need to be realized if we are to meet our ambition of reaching USD 100 billion by 2015 in trade volumes and USD 200 billion by 2020. The implementation of the FTA on Trade in Goods has contributed to this growth.

We expect that early implementation of the FTA on Services and Investments will be key to achieving these objectives. The combined GDP of USD 3.8 trillion that ASEAN and India bring together defines one of the most important economic spaces to impact the lives of 1.8 billion people. Our Ministry of Commerce & Industry is presently in discussion with ASEAN counterparts on the setting up of the ASEAN-India Trade & Investment Centre, specific to the realization of this economic space. I am happy to see that you would be debating some of these imperatives in Session I.

In the aftermath of intensive studies by the Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) and RIS, India set up an Inter-Ministerial Group on Transport Connectivity with ASEAN, to participate in the Land Transport Working Group and Maritime Transport Working Group Meetings of the ASEAN. On June 10 this year, India became the third country, after China and Japan, to begin annual ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee-India Consultations to comprehensively further the agenda of connectivity. We are, therefore, convinced of the strategic importance of connectivity with the ASEAN countries.

Ladies and gentlemen

Strengthening geographic connectivity through land, sea and air will require finding innovative means to finance the infrastructure requirements. This is a dimension for study in the AINTT as to how can the involvement of ADB, ASEAN Infrastructure Fund and World Bank be optimized to meet this strategic objective of the ASEAN-India partnership. We also look forward to suggestions on how the soft infrastructure required to support the movement of goods and services on these physical corridors of connectivity can be put in place even as we examine the construction of these corridors. This exercise must be simultaneous and not linear. Your suggestions on the required engagement on soft infrastructure, including issues such as a common motor vehicles act, customs and tariff regulations, immigration requirements etc would be most topical. I hope that some of these issues will be discussed in Session II of the AINTT. There is also need to strengthen institutional connectivity and bring in a concerted focus on human resource development in order to leverage our people-to-people ties. There are reflexive levels of comfort amongst our people, given the strong foundations of civilizational ties, which have enriched our countries in terms of a two way traffic of ideas, innovations and culture. Your Session III should aim to identify some out-of-the-box measures to strengthen socio-cultural and development cooperation between ASEAN countries and India. One useful dimension would be to see how we can make it easier for our businessmen, professionals and members of the strategic community to travel between our countries so that they can be participant to the new political, economic and socio-cultural dimensions emerging in the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership.

Ladies and gentlemen

India has been very supportive of the objective of an ASEAN Community by 2015 and the initiative for ASEAN integration. We look forward to applauding your sense of achievement in 2015. Looking to the future, I would like to emphasize that as the ASEAN countries integrate better amongst themselves, it is necessary that their integration with India also progresses apace.

I would be curious to see if the AINTT itself can bring in the strategic community in a more participant manner to these various dimensions that I have mentioned today. I would like to make a suggestion that if the think tanks in the room today can consider taking on two young researchers each from within the ASEAN-India region for short periods of internship, it would help us to widen the constituency for a stronger ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership to the youth in our countries in a more meaningful manner.

Ladies and gentlemen

This is a partnership not only with longstanding relevance but also one with increasing relevance, especially at this time when the political, security and economic architecture in our region is undergoing evolution and when it is urgent that we insulate our growth-oriented economies from the persistent downturn in the global economy. The ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership is today, more than ever, vital for progress and prosperity and peace and stability regionally as also globally.

I wish you an interesting two days of useful discussions and I look forward to your conclusions and recommendations.

Thank you

073. Media Briefing by Secretary(East) on the Prime Minister's visits to Brunei and Indonesia.

New Delhi, October 7, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. The focus of this afternoon's briefing is Prime Minister's visit to Brunei and Indonesia.

We have here with us Secretary (East) Mr. Ashok Kantha who will brief you about those forthcoming visits of the Prime Minister. On his right is Mr. Sanjay Bhattacharyya, Joint Secretary (South), who handles these countries bilaterally.

In accordance with our usual practice I will request Secretary (East) to make his opening remarks, following which the floor will be open for any questions that you would like to ask on issues that he makes his opening remarks on. Subsequent to that, if you have any other questions related to Secretary (East), he will respond. And finally if there are any other questions which are not related to today's briefing and if you would like us to respond, we will respond to them.

May I also mention to you the ground rule - one question per person. So, please choose your questions carefully. With those introductory remarks, I will request Secretary (East) to make his opening remarks.

Secretary (East) (Shri Ashok Kantha): Thank you, Akbar.

As Akbar just mentioned, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh will be travelling to Brunei to participate in the 11th ASEAN-India Summit and 8th East Asia Summit on 10th October 2013. He will also be paying an official visit to Indonesia from 10th to 12th October at the invitation of President of Yudhoyono.

The 11th ASEAN-India Summit will be the first Summit after the elevation of the relationship to a strategic partnership. It would mark the maturing of this partnership as it enters its third decade. In recent years we have seen considerable substance and depth being added to this partnership. Its elevation to a strategic level at the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in December last year was in fact a natural progression. Both ASEAN and India attach importance to the contribution of this strategic partnership to progress and prosperity, and peace and stability in the region. The 11th ASEAN-India Summit is also being held against the backdrop of ASEAN integration towards an ASEAN Community by 2015.

As you are aware, the ASEAN-India partnership is a cornerstone of our foreign policy and the foundation of India's Look East Policy. It has seen substantive progression since India became a Sectoral Partner of the ASEAN in 1992, Dialogue Partner in 1996 and Summit Level partner in 2002. There has been significant intensification across the three pillars of cooperation, viz., politico-military, economic and socio-cultural. We have currently 26 inter-governmental mechanisms between India and ASEAN and the number is growing.

Prime Minister's interaction with the ASEAN Leaders at the Summit will take forward the different aspects of the strategic partnership. ASEAN countries and India have concluded the legal scrubbing of the FTA on services and investment. And we expect the signature of this document to be completed sometime later this after all concerned countries have completed the internal approval formalities. RCEP negotiations have also begun, with the first round held in Brisbane in September this year.

As you are aware, the future direction of this strategic partnership is set by the Vision Statement adopted by the leaders at the Commemorative Summit last December. The ASEAN-India Centre has been inaugurated in New Delhi on 21st June 2013 by our Minister of External Affairs, that was within six months of the Vision Statement being adopted. The Centre will be functioning as a resource in support of the governmental efforts underway to strengthen the strategic partnership. We are also in the process of setting up a separate ASEAN-India Trade and Investment Centre.

ASEAN-India connectivity in all its dimensions - geographic, institutional and people-to-people - is a matter of high priority. Prime Minister will be discussing the progress in these areas with his ASEAN counterparts. We have begun the annual ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee -India meeting in June this year. We expect progress on this important issue of engagement with ASEAN at the next summit.

The ASEAN-India Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity, signed at the 3rd ASEAN-India Summit in 2004 in Vientiane, Lao PDR, sets out the roadmap for long-term ASEAN-India engagement; and this is being implemented through the Plan of Action for 2010-15, adopted after successful implementation of the previous Plan of Action for 2004-2010. We are continuing our support to ASEAN Community building efforts, including the Initiative for ASEAN Integration, Narrowing the Developmental Gaps, Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity, and a Drug-Free ASEAN by 2015.

Under the political-security pillar of cooperation, India and ASEAN have begun discussions on trans-national crime and drug trafficking. ASEAN and India continue to strengthen their maritime cooperation.

The intensification in people-to-people linkages in 2012 has continued in 2013 through programmes for ASEAN students, farmers, diplomats, media and strategic communities. We are circulating details in this regard.

Under sectoral cooperation with ASEAN we have organized a number of events and activities during the past one year. Here also we are circulating details shortly.

Apart from participating in the ASEAN-India Summit, as I mentioned earlier, Prime Minister will also be attending the 8th East Asia Summit. This summit, as you know, is the leaders-led forum for dialogue on broad strategic, geopolitical and economic issues of common interest, with the aim of promoting peace, security, stability and economic prosperity.

India has participated in all the seven Summits held so far, and we support ASEAN centrality in the entire process.

At the forthcoming summit, one area which will receive special attention relates to our initiative on Nalanda University. You would recall that EAS members have supported the revival of Nalanda University as a non-profit, secular and self-governing international institution. We have now proposed an MoU on the establishment of Nalanda University. And at Brunei we would begin the process of signing of the MoU with those countries which have completed their internal approvals.

India is working with EAS member countries to augment collective capacity for disaster relief and rescue. We are also collaborating with Australia to combat drug-resistant malaria. We would also be exploring other cooperative initiatives in the sector of healthcare including by taking new initiatives at the forthcoming summit.

The 6th East Asia Summit had adopted an EAS Declaration on Connectivity. We believe that there is scope for greater cooperation among EAS members in this important area.

Security issues, especially non-traditional security concerns like piracy, smuggling, international terrorism, transnational crimes, drug-trafficking and so on are finding greater salience in EAS discussions, and I have no doubt that this trend will continue at the 8th EAS Summit as well.

The leaders are expected to adopt the Declaration of the 8th East Asia Summit on Food Security. We have supported this initiative taken by Brunei, Darussalam. We look forward to working with the EAS participating countries and to take part in regional initiatives to further implement India's own commitments in ensuring food and nutritional security.

In Brunei, on the sidelines of ASEAN-India Summit and East Asia Summit, Prime Minister will have bilateral interactions with EAS leaders. PM will hold bilateral meeting for instance with the newly-elected Australian Prime Minister Tony Abbott. As you are aware, India and Australia share a strategic partnership characterised by multifaceted contacts and exchanges in politico-security, economic, scientific, education, skills dimensions, and in people-to-people contacts.

From Brunei, Prime Minister will be travelling to Jakarta on an official visit to Indonesia, as I mentioned earlier. You would recall that President Yudhoyono had visited India as the Chief Guest for our Republic Day in January 2011, and again for the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in December 2012. In fact during the last ten years there have been eight visits – four from India to Indonesia and four from Indonesia to India - which shows the importance the two countries attach to this important relationship. But this will be Prime Minister's first visit to Indonesia in bilateral context. PM had earlier visited Indonesia for the Commemorative ASEAN-India Conference in April 2005, and for the 6th EAS in November 2011.

During his forthcoming visit to Jakarta, Prime Minister will have official talks with President Yudhoyono on bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of mutual interest, and will meet with other political leaders. We are working on a number of initiatives to promote our bilateral relations which will be announced during the visit.

India and Indonesia share a strategic partnership which was established in 2005. Our relations with Indonesia are characterised by warm and friendly exchanges which are diverse, strong and growing. Our political-security, economic, cultural and people-to-people contacts are robust and expanding.

Following the visit of President Yudhoyono in January 2011, during which we had concluded major agreements on security, trade and investments, connectivity and cultural cooperation, we have since re-energised our institutional mechanisms and created new ones to achieve progress in key areas such as Foreign Office consultations, energy resources, defence and security cooperation, trade and economic relations, space cooperation, and connectivity.

We have made rapid strides in strengthening defence and security cooperation. The visit of Raksha Mantri (Defence Minister) to Indonesia in October last year enhanced our defence exchanges with that country. On the security front, we have concluded MLAT in criminal matters, an Extradition Treaty, and we are now exploring an Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons.

Our bilateral trade reached US$ 20 billion in 2012-13. In fact, trade has grown almost five times since the establishment of a strategic partnership with Indonesia in 2005. We are positive that the target of US$ 25 billion by 2015 will be achieved. Indian companies view Indonesia as an attractive investment destination and have a significant presence in infrastructure, power, textiles, steel, automotive, mining of resources, banking, FMCG manufacturing and other sectors.

The visit of Prime Minister to Indonesia is expected to further consolidate and expand our strategic partnership and provide a new focus for future cooperation. We are providing some more details about the relationship in a piece of paper Akbar will be circulating shortly.

Thank you very much. These are the opening remarks I wanted to make. I will be very happy to take any questions you may have.

Q: Sir, a territorial dispute over South China Sea would be probably one of the important issues at the ASEAN Summit. How do we look at ASEAN-China talks on the code of conduct over the South China Sea?

Secretary (East): The issue of South China Sea has been getting attention at EAS as well as ARF, as also at various ASEAN Summits with partner countries. As far as India's position on this issue is concerned, I think it has been fairly unambiguous. Protection of maritime commons, we believe, is an issue of increasing relevance to growing economies of East Asia.

We have consistently reaffirmed the unimpeded right of passage and other maritime rights in accordance with accepted principles of international law. We believe that the sovereignty issues that you referred to must be resolved peacefully by all countries concerned in accordance with international law. We oppose the use or threat of use of force.

We welcome some recent developments including the collective commitment by the concerned countries to abide by and implement the 2002 Declaration on the Conduct of Parties in South China Sea, and to work towards the adoption of a code of conduct in the South China Sea on the basis of consensus.

Q: This is on FTA on services and investment. How confident are we that we are going to sign it during the Summit, or you said that later this year? And also, the Philippines and Indonesia, if I am not wrong, have raised some concerns over ... (Inaudible)... transfer of people-to-people in each other's territory. What is the update on that? Have those issues been sorted out?

Secretary (East): All issues pertaining to FTA covering our trade in services and investment have been sorted out. The process of legal scrubbing has been completed. There were certain observations by Philippines and Thailand which have been suitably addressed in the document. Now, the concerned countries are undertaking their respective internal approval procedures. We believe that the signing will take place within the calendar year 2013. This depends on internal procedures in member countries, but we are quite optimistic that it will happen this year.

Q: Could you please give an update about the land and rail connectivity between India and ASEAN? For years we have been told about the missing link of 100 kilometres and odd in Mizoram, Moreh. What is the update and when do you think there could be complete land and rail connectivity at least with some of the ASEAN countries?

Secretary (East): Connectivity with ASEAN is an area of very high priority for us. So, we are working on several projects here, the most important of them being the trilateral highway project which involves India, Myanmar and Thailand. 160 kilometres of Tamu-Kalewa-Kalemyo road of the trilateral highway project is almost complete. Work has begun on other 120 kilometres in Kalewa-Yargi sector, and the repair of 71 bridges on TKK road. The request for proposal for appointment of Consultant to prepare feasibility study on Kalewa-Yargi sector has already been issued, and approval has been taken for tender for 71 bridges.

What I am trying to say is that in these areas where progress is taking place. In fact there is an understanding among India, Myanmar and Thailand that the Foreign Ministers of the three countries will meet sometime later this year to take stock of progress; and we have agreed that this project must be completed by the year 2016. And we seem to be on track.

In parallel we have started working on the soft infrastructure of the project. Once connectivity is established, how do you use that connectivity? That will be one area we will discuss also at the forthcoming meetings in Brunei. In addition there is also a maritime component to our connectivity project. I will not go into detail. The short point I would like to underline is that connectivity with ASEAN is a very high priority for us.

Q: The newly-elected Prime Minister of Australia is very enthusiastic about selling uranium to India. Talks have been going on for some time between the two sides. Can you kindly give an update? When are we likely to sign an agreement with Australia to get uranium?

Secretary (East): As you rightly mentioned, after taking over as the new Prime Minister, Mr. Abbott has made positive comments about the need for expediting, accelerating negotiations between India and Australia on nuclear cooperation. We already have held two rounds of negotiations, and we are hoping to hold a third round of negotiations if possible in December this year. We have not yet firmed up the dates. But I believe there is a strong desire on both sides to try and bring these negotiations to a successful conclusion at an early date.

Q: Mr. Secretary, the maritime concern is one of the major issues to take up with the ASEAN. One you talk about the security and the vacuum of security in this region, and the second is the maritime silk route which has been promoted as a business, instead of the routine silk route. How does India assess the maritime issues with the neighbouring countries?

Secretary (East): I will not comment on any vacuum in security because I do not quite see a vacuum in terms of security architecture in the region. Our focus, as I mentioned earlier, is on a trilateral highway as well as on our engagement with ASEAN countries.

As I mentioned in my opening statement, India has started a dialogue with ASEAN Connectivity Coordination Committee (ACCC), and the first round took place in June this year. That is an important forum under which we are progressing our important agenda pertaining to enhanced connectivity with ASEAN.

Q: Sir, on this trilateral highway India has been doing its bit but, I heard, other countries are not really contributing. Thailand for instance is not doing its bit towards the highway, not as much as it should. So, is that report true?

Secretary (East): That is not our impression really. I was present when Prime Minister met Prime Minister of Thailand Yingluck Shinawatra in late May. From Thai side there is strong commitment both to trilateral highway as well as maritime dimension of the connectivity project. Likewise, Myanmar has been cooperating quite closely with us with regard to these projects.

Q: Could you give some update on the progress on air connectivity between India and ASEAN countries?

Secretary (East): We have reasonably good air connectivity with ASEAN countries, though there is still scope for improvement. For instance, during Prime Minister's visit to Indonesia this will be an important area where we are seeking further movement. I will ask Sanjay to give some details in this regard about Batik Air, their plans to operationalise direct links with India.

By and large while we do not have an open-skies policy vis-a-vis ASEAN countries in terms of movement of passengers, cargo is a different matter; but we have adopted a fairly liberal regime when it comes to our civil aviation arrangements with ASEAN countries. And that is also reflected in an increase in flights between India and Singapore, India and Thailand, India and Malaysia, with various countries of ASEAN. I will ask Sanjay to add something on Indonesia and other ASEAN countries.

Joint Secretary (South)(Shri Sanjay Bhattacharyya): We have Air Services Agreements with most of the ASEAN countries, which are fairly comprehensive. In addition, we have an ASEAN Air Services Agreement under which there are 18 additional points. And these are absolutely open, and the services can be open within these 18 points. The focus of these 18 points has been on the secondary stations as well as the North East because for us it is very important to link the North East to the ASEAN as part of our connectivity projects. While the road and other projects are going on for connectivity of the North East to the ASEAN hinterland, the air services is something that can be taken advantage of immediately.

As regards Indonesia, we have already got the designation of Batik Air to open direct air services between Indonesia and India. And there is a code-sharing agreement which has been worked out between Garuda and Jet.

Q: When we talk about trade and economic cooperation with the ASEAN partners, is the transpacific partnership going to be raised or discussed at all, how it is going to impact most of the members here? There have been some concerns over there.

Secretary (East): As you are aware, we are engaged in the RCEP process but not in TPP process. So, we are not a participant in TPP negotiations. But of course what will be the impact or implications of TPP on India is something that we closely monitor. Our first focus was completing India-ASEAN FTA arrangements. As you know, trade in goods we did earlier, and now we have completed services and investment, and FTA covering trade in services and investment will come into force by July 2014, next year, once all countries have done their approval formalities and we have signed the agreements. Now in September we have started negotiations within the framework of Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP). So, we are making progress, but we are not part of TPP.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): There are some other countries which are there like Brunei, Malaysia, Singapore, Vietnam. They are part of that. But it is more limited coverage among EAS countries.

Official Spokesperson: Okay, anyone else on anything else?

Question: Has the MoD sent any information to MEA regarding the Keran Sector infiltration bids and the crossfire that is on at the border areas? Also, is the Government going to take it up given the fact that Salman Bashir the Pak High Commissioner has already said that there is no Pak involvement?

Official Spokesperson: Geeta, let me try and answer your question although you know that we never talk about intra-Ministerial consultations. That said, I think you have raised an issue which deserves response in its entirety and let me try and frame the response to that.

As you aware, we have repeatedly emphasised that the maintenance of the sanctity of the Line of Control is for us of primary importance. Even at the last meeting between Prime Minister and Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif this issue was reemphasised.

As regards the current situation, you are aware that our armed forces who are responsible for ensuring the sanctity of the area that you referred to are undertaking currently appropriate necessary measures. We have full confidence in their abilities to take those appropriate necessary measures and to address the challenges that have been posed to them. Therefore, at this stage we will await the outcome of their efforts in this regard. I hope I have responded to your question.

Q: High Commissioner of Pakistan in India Salman Bashir had yesterday said I think in Hyderabad that the whole thing of infiltration from Pakistani side is baseless. I think it is one of the most baseless statements in the coming years. What is your take on this?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much for your question and the response to that. I do not need to respond, you have already responded to that question with your own answer.

I have given the viewpoint that currently our armed forces are taking appropriate necessary measures, we have confidence in their abilities to respond to the challenges posed to them. Based on the outcome of those, we will take further necessary action as appropriate. At this stage, let our brave armed forces do their jobs.

Q: After the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan met in the US, it was agreed that the DGMOs of the two countries would talk regarding this violation of ceasefire on the LoC. Any development on that front?

Official Spokesperson: Parul, since you cover the Ministry of Defence also perhaps you are aware that the DGMOs talk on Tuesday. Today we are still on Monday. So, please bear with the schedule of discussions that they have. Every Tuesday is when they talk telephonically.

The issue of when they will meet will depend on the outcome of their talks telephonically. These are step-by-step processes which we will pursue based on the instructions and the agreement of both the Prime Ministers. So, as and when these things happen, you will know about that.

Q: Sir, after some days of Salman Khurshid coming back from Moscow, what can you say about the results of his visit? And based on his visit and the future visit of Manmohan Singhji to Moscow again, what as for you is the top priority in the Indian relationship with Russia?

Official Spokesperson: Our relationship with Russia is one which is tried and tested. The meeting of the External Affairs Minister was there for the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission (IRIGC). This meeting sets the agenda for the annual summit. What we will do is have a separate briefing for you on the entire expanse of issues that will be covered by the summit, and then you will have ample time to ask me these questions. Today let us focus on the here and now. The visit of Prime Minister to Russia is in the latter half of this month. Certainly we will provide you all the details of what will be the major areas of discussion.

But you are aware of the perennials of India and Russia. I do not need to list them out, but I could list them out for you. These are issues of cooperation in a host of strategic sectors including nuclear, including defence, including space, science and technology, etc. The details of those we will provide you later. As you are aware, there are two aspects of the Inter-Governmental Commission – one is where Mr. Khurshid chairs and another is when the Defence Minister interacts with his counterpart. Once both these are over, we will then set the agenda. At this stage, both are not yet over. So, please bear with us for some more time on this.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I have already told you it is in the latter half of this month. You have been following us for a long time. On the 9th Prime Minister is visiting Brunei. We just shared with you that date today. By those standards, I assure you I will not disappoint you.

Q: Sir, after Moscow, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh is also expected to go to Beijing. Is China pushing for any specific thing under BDCA in the run up to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit to Beijing? And is there anything that has been mutually agreed upon?

Official Spokesperson: Maha, when there is a process under way you do not expect us to conduct diplomacy in public glare. May I request you to bear with us until we come out and unfurl and unveil for you the entire issues related to Prime Minister's forthcoming visit to China, and like in the case of Russia because this visit will be after the visit to Russia, so you know we are pretty slow in these matters, we go step by step. Please bear with us in those terms. We will certainly provide you information. We are not like you, three steps away. We have three visits before the visit that you are mentioning will come. So, slow and steady wins the race.

Q: The Prime Minister's of India and Pakistan met in New York on the 29th. Thereafter, on the 1st, after their directive to the DGMOs to discuss plans for restoring the ceasefire, the DGMOs spoke on the 1st. And they are also free to speak whenever to pick up the hotline. Now, there is one massive incursion attempt which has been going since the 23rd of September. Subsequently, after the Prime Ministers spoke and gave the directives to their respective DGMOs, there have been two other attempts in the same area, in the Keran Sector. Now, do we infer that the directive of the Pakistani Prime Minister to his forces on the ground is not having any effect?

Official Spokesperson: Is this a question or a statement?

Q: It is a question.

Official Spokesperson: You said, do we infer? Let me reverse it. I said, right now the challenge is to ensure that our armed forces complete their job. If at the outcome of those efforts there is a requirement for us to take this thing further ahead, we will do so. We cannot do so while an activity is under way. So, please wait for that activity to be completed. We will then make an assessment and the inference will also be known to you.

Q: On the Keran sector, even after 14 days the Indian armed forces have not been able to neutralise the infiltrators. How serious is the situation there? Do you think it will affect the talks process further?

Official Spokesperson: Ranjit, we are going back and forth on the same issue. It is for those who are in charge of security of that area, the sentinels of our borders, to make that assessment. It is not for diplomats to sit here and do that. So, please understand that once they are over with their activities we will then take a call on anything further. So, please have patience and let them finish their activities.

Q: Can you please tell me if in the last two, three weeks there has been some step ahead on the issue of the Italian marines? The investigation of the NIA and police has stopped. Is there any possibility of a dialogue or there is probably a judiciary exit to the question?

Official Spokesperson: Mario, I think we all have to take a clear view of this and that view is that the case is sub judice. Therefore, the final outcome of that case will depend on what the judiciary decides. What was being discussed as part of a discussion between the Italian authorities and the Indian authorities was to overcome some hitches in the judicial process proceeding, not a sort of an extra-judicial outcome of it or not an out-of-court outcome of it. So, the discussion was about how to move ahead with the judicial process because there were some hitches in how India sees that judicial process moving ahead and Italian views on that judicial process moving ahead.

There have been discussions on this and following those discussions and having understood the Italian viewpoint, our authorities are now in consultation to see what we can do and how to take forward the Indian judicial process fully within the four corners of our legal process, nothing beyond that.

Q: Day before yesterday, Prime Ministers of India and Bangladesh laid the foundation stone of a power plant in Bangladesh, which is a joint venture between India's NTPC and their Power Grid Corporation. The power plant is very close to Sundarbans and there has been widespread protest on environmental grounds against this power plant, and there has been a long march of people who say that biodiversity will be ruined. I would like to know what is India's stand on this environmental concern.

Official Spokesperson: Obviously environment is an issue that we take seriously. Obviously we factor into any decision making what will be the impacts. This power plant that you are mentioning has, its obvious there have been people who have indicated their views which are contrary to what we feel. This is a matter which will be addressed at the time of the Detailed Project Report. When we take these various factors into account, that too will be taken into account. But prima facie our understanding is that it does not have an impact of the nature that you are alluding to.

Q: Kashmiri separatist leader Yasin Malik was not allowed to board the flight to Nepal this morning, and he has also said that his daughter's visa application has not been processed till now, it has been nine months. Can we have some status on that?

Official Spokesperson: What is your question for the Ministry of External Affairs?

Q: He was not allowed to board the flight.

Official Spokesperson: The immigration control is an issue which I think you need to address to those who manage immigration. And you know who they are.

Q: And about his daughter's visa application?

Official Spokesperson: I think you know who handles visas. Come on, let us not go through tried and tested territory again and again.

Thank you very much

East Asia Summit

The East Asia Summit started in 2005 December as a Leaders-led forum comprising of the 10 ASEAN countries, plus Australia, China, India, Japan, ROK and New Zealand. United States and Russian Federation joined at the 6th EAS in Bali, Indonesia in November 2011, taking the membership of EAS to 18 countries.

The East Asia Summit integrates a market of more than 3 billion people with a combined GDP of USD 17.23 trillion. EAS Finance Ministers are going to meet on October 12, 2013 in Washington DC on the sidelines of the IMF/ World Bank meetings to discuss issues relating to regional financial integration.

This year, an Indian delegation from DEA participated in the "East Asia Summit Regulatory Roundtable" and a delegation from MoRTH in the Workshop on "Enhancing Connectivity through Multi-layered Regional Frameworks: The Role of Dialogue Partners".

The 2nd ADMM+ was held on August 29, 2013 in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei Darussalam. Raksha Rajya Mantri Shri Jitendra Singh headed the Indian delegation to this meeting. India also attended the 2nd Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum met in Kuala Lumpur on October 3, 2013 to discuss ways to strengthen regional maritime cooperation.

India-Indonesia

India and Indonesia share a strategic partnership, established in 2005. Our relations with Indonesia are characterised by warm and friendly civilisational exchanges which are diverse, strong and growing. Our political-security, economic, cultural and people-to-people relations are robust and expanding. Following the visit of President Yudhoyono in January 2011, during which, we had concluded major agreements on security, trade and investments, connectivity and cultural cooperation.

We have made rapid strides in strengthening defence & security cooperation. The visit of RM to Indonesia enhanced our defence exchanges and added content to our broad based engagement including training, exercises and staff talks. We are working together on CORPATs, anti-piracy operations, maintenance of security of sea lanes and HADR. On the security front, we have concluded MLAT (Criminal) and Extradition Treaty and are now exploring an Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons. We have strengthened mechanisms and outlined a work plan for enhanced cooperation between our law enforcement agencies, particularly, in counter terrorism and are now expanding to other areas including illicit trafficking of drugs, cyber crimes and other transnational crimes.

Our trade and investments have shown a positive growth trend and reached $ 20 billion in 2012-13, despite a dip last year due to the global financial situation. Trade has grown almost 5 times since the establishment of strategic partnership in 2005.

Indian companies view Indonesia as an attractive investment destination and have a significant presence in infrastructure, power, textiles, steel, automotive, mining, banking, FMCG manufacturing and others. Enhanced private sector involvement has contributed to business partnerships and growth in trade and investment. The potential, however, is still greater.

We have close cooperation in space, S&T, technology exchanges and ICT. ISRO and LAPAN work closely on satellite launch, telemetry and data stations, training of scientists and collaborative ASEAN space projects.

Our cultural ties play an important role in deepening the civilizational and historical bonds. The imprint of Indian culture, architecture and mythology is evident in the social ethos of Indonesia. The Ramayana and Mahabharat are as popular in Indonesia. We have been involved in close cultural exchanges through our culture centres in Jakarta and Bali and through the Chairs of Sanskrit and Indian Studies in different Universities. ASI did a major renovation programme in the Prambanam temples, which was widely appreciated. We also have closed exchanges through ICCR and ITEC scholarships. We greatly appreciate the contributions of the Indonesian side towards the establishment of the Nalanda University as an international institute of excellence.

The Indian Ocean is an area for closer cooperation from the security and economic perspectives and we have stepped up our collaboration in IOR-ARC and IONS. Recently, we also held a trilateral track-II dialogue with Indonesia and Australia on issues pertaining to the Indian Ocean.

075. Statement by the Prime Minister prior to departure for Brunei and Indonesia.

New Delhi, October 8, 2013.

I am proceeding today on a visit to Brunei Darussalam and Indonesia, two of our important partners in South East Asia. In Brunei, I will take part in the 11th India-ASEAN Summit and the 8th East Asian Summit. I will thereafter pay an official bilateral visit to Indonesia.

Our engagement with the ASEAN and its member countries is the cornerstone of our “Look East” policy and has evolved into a strong, comprehensive and multi-faceted partnership in recent years. It started with a strong economic emphasis, with focus on commerce and connectivity, but has increasingly acquired strategic content. The Summit in Brunei will be the first since the elevation of our relations with the ASEAN to a Strategic Partnership at the special Commemorative Summit in New Delhi and the conclusion of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Services and Investment in December 2012. It will give me and my ASEAN colleagues an opportunity to review the progress in our relations over the last few months and explore initiatives to add further momentum and content to our relationship.

The East Asia Summit is the foremost forum for promoting peace, stability and prosperity in the dynamic Asia Pacific region. Given our vital stakes in the region, India has been closely involved in the evolution of an open, balanced and inclusive regional architecture, on the basis of the centrality of the ASEAN. India sees the East Asia Summit as a springboard to regional cooperation and integration and is participating in the negotiations for a Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership among the ASEAN and its FTA partners, which will help create an economic community in the region. The Summit has been highly supportive of India's initiative for the revival of the Nalanda University, which is slated to begin academic programmes next year. On the margins of the East Asia Summit, I will have the opportunity to meet other world leaders.

My next destination, Indonesia, is not only a key ASEAN member and a country with growing regional and global profile, but also an important bilateral partner. India and Indonesia share centuries old people-to-people, cultural and spiritual ties. Today, we have extensive common interests as maritime neighbours and in the fields of economy, energy, security, space and development.

We see our ties with Indonesia as an essential part of India's integration with the broader region. I intend to utilize this visit also to re-emphasize our commitment to building a stronger partnership with ASEAN. We will also have the opportunity to exchange views on regional and global issues of common interest.

It will be my effort to maintain the momentum in our comprehensive relations generated by the visit of President Yudhoyono to India as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day in 2011 and create an institutional framework to further enhance the content of our cooperation in the years ahead.

My visits to Brunei Darussalam and Indonesia will further intensify our engagement to our East, which has been at the forefront of our foreign policy, and contribute to peace, prosperity and stability in the Asia Pacific.”

076. Opening Statement by Prime Minister at 11th India-ASEAN Summit.

Bandar Seri Begawan (Brunei Darussalam), October 10, 2013.

Your Majesty Haji Hassanal Bolkiah, Sultan of Brunei Darussalam,

Your Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is indeed a great pleasure to join all of you in this beautiful country for the 11th India-ASEAN Summit. I am grateful to His Majesty the Sultan and the people of Brunei Darussalam for the warm welcome and gracious hospitality accorded to my delegation and me and the excellent arrangements made for our meeting today.

I also thank all of you for a memorable Commemorative Summit in New Delhi last December. Our decision at that Summit to elevate India-ASEAN relations to a Strategic Partnership has set the stage for a truly enriching relationship between us.

Excellencies, all our countries have equal stakes in the security and prosperity of our shared Asian neighbourhood. The global economic crisis and turmoil in different parts of the world underscore the salience of our robust partnership. The scope of India's engagement with East and Southeast Asia has grown steadily in the last two decades. We seek to promote not only mutually beneficial bilateral relations, but also to work institutionally with regional partners and foster a climate that is conducive to stability, security and economic development in our region.

Excellencies, it is to the great credit of the ASEAN countries that they have led the way in cooperation and integration, not only among themselves, but also in the broader region. For India, it is an article of faith of our Look-East policy that ASEAN must remain central to the future evolution of regional mechanisms, which must be open and inclusive. We share your vision and aspirations for the region and we applaud your march towards an ASEAN Economic Community in 2015.

Excellencies, over two decades, India and ASEAN have established a comprehensive agenda of cooperation and a wide-ranging framework to pursue it. Today, we stand on the threshold of the third decade of our engagement. In keeping with our substantial achievements, the recent elevation of our ties to a strategic partnership and the rich potential of our cooperation, I feel it would be appropriate for me to take this opportunity to announce that India will soon set up a separate Mission to the ASEAN in Jakarta with a full time resident Ambassador. I hope we will have your full support and cooperation in this endeavour.

Excellencies, since we last met in Delhi, there have been some important developments that I would like to highlight. India stands ready for the signature of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement on Services and Investment by the end of this year and its early implementation. This will complement our Agreement on Goods and bolster our economic partnership. I also welcome efforts by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry to revitalize the ASEAN-India Business Council and to set up an ASEAN-India Trade and Investment Centre. These measures will contribute to stronger trade and investment flows between us.

India-ASEAN trade stood at 76 billion US dollars last year. I remain confident that we can meet our target of 100 billion US dollars by 2015 and double that volume by 2022.

Connectivity is a strategic priority in our relationship. We are nearing completion of the Tamu-Kalewa-Kalemyo sector of the India-Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway. Repairs to 71 bridges on this road and work on upgrading a 120 km sector between Kalewa and Yargyi are to begin soon. We will work closely with Thailand and Myanmar to ensure that this project is completed by 2016.

It would be useful to look at the extension of this Highway to Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam, its further linkage with ports in ASEAN countries and its integration with models like Special Economic Zones. This would call for innovative financial and institutional mechanisms. I hope our Ministers and officials can discuss these ideas further.

The first meeting between the ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee and India took place this year. The decision to establish a Working Group on Soft Infrastructure along our corridors of connectivity addresses a key factor in the success of the connectivity projects. I would suggest that our officials begin discussions on an ASEAN-India Transit Transport Agreement with a view to completing it by 2015. I also look forward to the proposed Maritime Transport Working Group being set up soon.

Excellencies, the ASEAN theme of “Our People, Our Future Together” for this year is indeed appropriate. People-to-people engagement must also sustain the India-ASEAN Strategic Partnership. We must create a policy environment and visa regime that facilitates our professionals and entrepreneurs to travel and work across our region.

I am particularly pleased with the success of our recently established exchange programme for our students, farmers, diplomats, media and parliamentarians and the ASEAN-India Network of Think Tanks. These exchanges sow the seeds of better understanding and productive partnerships between our countries. I am glad to inform Your Excellencies that, as announced last year, we have set up an ASEAN-India Centre in New Delhi to supplement these efforts towards cooperation.

Many of our cooperative projects with the ASEAN under the Plan of Action for 2010 to 2015 are coming to fruition. The project to establish a Satellite Tracking and Data Reception Station and Data Processing Facility in Vietnam and the upgrading of a Telemetry Tracking and Command Station in Indonesia will begin to see implementation by April 2014. Projects to set up four IT Centres in CLMV countries, supported by a Resource Centre located in India, have also been finalized for implementation.

Excellencies, I would like to thank you for your support to the revival of the Nalanda University. Nalanda is a common heritage of India and Southeast Asia. As the University begins its academic programme next year, I would welcome active participation of ASEAN students and faculty in making it a successful venture.

Excellencies, the growing strategic content in relations between India and ASEAN responds to our shared security challenges and supplements India’s deepening security cooperation with ASEAN countries bilaterally. I am pleased that India and ASEAN have identified eight focus areas for cooperation on transnational crime and that we are in the process of formulating a work plan to combat international terrorism.

Excellencies, before I conclude, I would like to express my deep appreciation for the role played by Brunei Darussalam as the ASEAN Country Coordinator for India this year. I would also like to place on record our appreciation for the ASEAN Secretary General and his team for their assistance in implementing the specific contours of the ASEAN-India Strategic Partnership. Finally, we wish Myanmar, our bridge to the ASEAN, all success and pledge it our support as it assumes the ASEAN Chair in 2014.

Thank you

077. Statement by the Prime Minister at 8th East Asia Summit.
Bandar Seri Begawan (Brunei Darussalam), October 10, 2013.

Your Majesty Haji Hassanal Bolkiah, Sultan of Brunei Darussalam
Your Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I join other speakers in thanking His Majesty Sultan Hassanal Bolkiah for the excellent arrangements made for the 8th East Asia Summit and the warm welcome we have received in his beautiful country.

We gather in Brunei when the need for collective action, cooperation and collaboration in the Asia Pacific region has never been felt more acutely. Global economic uncertainty and political turmoil in other parts of the world have impacted countries in our region equally. In addition, this vast region faces challenges arising not only from its diversity, but also from differences. Clearly, the potential of unprecedented prosperity for our peoples can be realized only by inculcating a cooperative temper. The East Asia Summit is a forum that is, in my view, ideally placed to help us realize our common goals for advancing security and prosperity in a cooperative framework.

In terms of priorities, the implementation of the 6th East Asia Summit Declaration on ASEAN Connectivity requires a sense of greater urgency.

Building of physical infrastructure needs to go hand-in-hand with creation of soft infrastructure along the connectivity corridors. India welcomes dialogue and cooperation with like-minded countries on innovative means of financing these infrastructure requirements. We welcome Brunei Darussalam's initiative to hold a meeting between the ASEAN Connectivity Coordinating Committee and the East Asia Summit later this year.

The Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership, launched in Phnom Penh last year, has given us a roadmap for regional economic integration that can reinforce growth and accelerate development across the region, besides enhancing mutual stakes in regional stability and security. India remains fully engaged in and committed to the RCEP process.

We must supplement this effort with cooperation on the challenges of energy, food, health and human resource development. We, therefore, welcome the adoption of the Declaration of the 8th East Asia Summit on Food Security. We support Australia and Vietnam as co-Chairs of the launch of the Asia-Pacific Leaders' Malaria Alliance. We are happy to co-chair with Australia the Task Force on Access to Quality Medicines to combat malaria. We have also proposed a new initiative for cooperation among East Asia Summit members in trauma care and nursing.

I would like to thank the East Asia Summit participating countries for their support for the establishment of Nalanda University as an international institution of excellence. I am happy that the process of signing the inter-governmental Memorandum of Understanding on the Nalanda University has begun. Academic sessions at the University are set to begin next year. I hope students and faculty from all EAS countries will participate in this exciting venture.

A stable maritime environment is essential to realize our collective regional aspirations. We should reaffirm the principles of maritime security, including the right of passage and unimpeded commerce, in accordance with international law, and peaceful settlement of maritime disputes. We welcome the collective commitment by the concerned countries to abide by and implement the 2002 Declaration on the Conduct of Parties in the South China Sea and to work towards the adoption of a Code of Conduct in the South China Sea on the basis of consensus. We also welcome the establishment of the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum for developing maritime norms that would reinforce existing international law relating to maritime security.

Cooperative mechanisms in disaster management would not only fulfil a humanitarian need, but also foster broader confidence and cooperation in the region. India has initiated the process of establishing a Virtual Knowledge Centre as well as a network of round-the-clock Points of Contact among EAS countries. We hope to strengthen these initiatives further with your support. We should also strengthen efforts to counter threats of piracy, international terrorism, transnational crimes and drug trafficking.

Your Majesty, Excellencies, Asia has been a late starter in terms of building regional architectures of cooperation. We have embarked on this collective journey in large part because of the outstanding vision and leadership of ASEAN, first in pursuing ASEAN integration and then expanding it to the wider region. We will be successful if we adhere to the principles of unity, cooperation and integration that have guided ASEAN and if ASEAN centrality continues to shape the East Asia Summit processes. I reaffirm India's commitment to contribute to this process.

Thank you

ASEM & CHOGM078. Media Briefing on multilateral conferences-ASEM & CHOGM.*New Delhi, November 9, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning everybody and thank you very much for coming over the weekend. I apologise for the slight delay in keeping up with time and I am sorry that you had to wait this morning for this briefing on a weekend.

I have a couple of issues that I will take up first. I also have with me my colleague Mr. Pavan Kapoor who is Joint Secretary (United Nations Political) who is the main pointsperson as far as the Government of India is concerned relating to CHOGM. Pavan will talk about the CHOGM, the agenda for the CHOGM, and India and CHOGM. Before I hand over to Pavan, I have a couple of announcements to make.

You are aware that we had indicated previously that the President of Ghana will be in India from the 10th to the 13th. Since then we have received a communication from the Government of Ghana that due to pressing domestic developments, President John Dramani Mahama will not be able to visit India. We will have to work out through diplomatic channels new dates for his visit. His visit, as you know, was to take place from the 10th to the 13th of this month and that is now not going to happen.

The other issue relates to perhaps one of the biggest diplomatic gatherings this year in India and it is the ASEM Foreign Ministers who are to meet on 11th and 12th of November. This is the first time India is hosting an ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting. It is preceded on 9th and 10th and essentially also on the 8th by Senior Officials meetings, and those meetings are right now on.

We have received unprecedented and enthusiastic response for this meeting. We have 36 Foreign Ministers coming from various Asian and European countries; 12 Deputy Foreign Ministers and two Vice Ministers are participating. In essence, all 51 members of the ASEM are being represented at this meeting.

As you are aware, ASEM is a unique forum which is dedicated to bringing Asia and Europe together. It represents about 60 per cent of the world's population, 52 per cent of the global GDP, and 68 per cent of world trade. ASEM Ministerial Meetings are biennial and they alternate with summit meetings. Last year there was a summit meeting in Lao Peoples Democratic Republic. This year India is hosting the ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting.

For those of you who would like to know a little bit of background, we joined the ASEM in 2007, and this is the first time we are hosting this major ASEM event. The Foreign Ministers Meeting will be inaugurated by the Vice President Shri Hamid Ansari; and the External Affairs Minister will chair the meeting. This year the theme of the meeting is: ASEM – Bridge to Partnership for Growth and Development.

As Chair of the ASEM we have been trying to push for a fresh approach that would reorient discussions of ASEM meetings from dialogue towards actual tangible cooperation thereby taking ASEM to the next level of maturity. ASEM traditionally has been focused on three dimensions - political dialogue, economic collaboration, and socioeconomic cooperation.

Over the years it is a fact that political dialogue has dominated the proceedings. As Chair of ASEM we have ventured to bring about a greater balance in those three dimensions that I just mentioned, and there is support for this approach in the ASEM. We hope it would be confirmed by the Senior Officials and taken up by the Ministers, a more comprehensive approach where all three dimensions of ASEM will be focused on following the outcome of this ASEM Ministerial Meeting.

We have listed several areas for cooperation. These are specific and focused on interests of ASEM member states, for example, on renewable energy, water management, skill development, food safety issues, as well as on disaster management and mitigation.

The ASEM meeting has two Plenaries and a Retreat. The first Plenary will focus on Economic Growth and Sustainable Development - Challenges and Opportunities in Asia and Europe. The second Plenary will focus on Non-Traditional Security Challenges. In addition, on the second day there will be a free-flowing discussion on regional and international issues of interest to ASEM members.

We also hope that we will have a concise outcome document at the conclusion of this meeting. We have tried a different approach this time and we hope that will be successful because it will be concise and will list out tangible areas of cooperation.

To sum up I would say that our effort is to reorient ASEM deliberations through consensus between Asian and European members towards developing it into a bridge that aspires to be a bridge for growth, development and capacity building, a bridge for bringing together expertise to tackle common challenges, a bridge of resources and ideas, a bridge founded on making connections between people, and a bridge strengthened by tangible cooperation and outcomes. That is the agenda for the next four days in what is going to be a very hectic diplomatic period during the next few days.

On the sidelines or the margins of ASEM, the External Affairs Minister, who will chair the Ministerial Meeting, will have several bilateral meetings. I have listed out to you some of them already, and I will circulate the list of the rest so that all of you are aware of all the bilateral meetings on the 11th and 12th also. I think that is what I have in terms of ASEM.

I will now request my colleague Mr. Pavan Kapoor to talk to you about the CHOGM. Following that we will open the floor for questions on all the three issues and on anything else that you want.

Joint Secretary (United Nations Political)(Shri Pavan Kapoor):Thanks Akbar.

As you are probably all aware, we have got CHOGM happening in Colombo from the 15th to 17th of November, that is next Friday to Sunday. Traditionally CHOGM is from Friday morning till Sunday afternoon.

This would be preceded by the Foreign Ministers Meeting, what is called formally the Pre-CHOGM Foreign Ministers Meeting of the Commonwealth, which is on the 13th and 14th of November. And that gets preceded by a couple of days of meetings of the Senior Officials in what is formally known as the Committee of the Whole, on the 11th and 12th of November. So, it is a cumulative meeting across six or seven days, and all that gets cracking on Monday morning.

The programme for CHOGM, as I said, starts on a Friday morning. It starts with an opening ceremony. It then has a formal family photograph. It then gets into its Executive Sessions which are on the record, and that is two of them on the 15th. In the evening there is a dinner hosted by the Prince of Wales and his spouse for visiting Heads.

Next day, the 16th, is really a day of retreat. This is something which is unique to CHOGMs but has been developed over time where it is just Heads in an informal atmosphere sitting around in a semi-circular format without aides, and discussing issues. And there is no formal record of that meeting. But the Secretary-General and the Chair, who in this case would be President Rajapaksa, will come out with developments which they think will take a sense of the house and then come out with what they feel comes out from it.

Seventeenth morning, Sunday, is the final Retreat Session for an hour and then the formal Executive Session, the third one, which really is writing in the records of the developments of the past two days into a formal system. And that is how it wraps up on Sunday at about lunch time. That is as far as the programme is concerned.

In terms of India and our contribution to the Commonwealth, you are probably aware that we are certainly the largest member of the Commonwealth. We contribute about 60 percent of the population of the Commonwealth. We are the fourth largest Commonwealth contributor in terms of the assessed budgets of the Commonwealth.

We are also the fifth largest contributor to a voluntary fund or the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Cooperation, which is this big fund in the Commonwealth which provides technical assistance in capacity development to its member states. We have of course got the current Secretary-General Mr. Kamlesh Sharma, who is now in his second term which will carry on actually till early 2016 but by 2015 they will have a new person chosen.

In terms of the theme for this CHOGM, the Sri Lankan Government has chosen the theme called Growth with Equity or Inclusive Development. They feel this is something which is very pertinent to all. They prepared a basic background paper on it, talked about how many developing countries in the Commonwealth are lacking in terms of achieving the Millennium Development Goals and what all they need to, and have made some suggestions on how that can be taken forward. This should be discussed both at the Executive session and the Retreat.

The agenda frankly this time would be a very development-oriented agenda. Just in terms of background, the last CHOGM which was held in Australia had focused primarily on the governance side of things. Democracy and development are considered the twin pillars of the Commonwealth. So, last time there had been a big focus on governance issues. There was an Eminent Persons Report with 106 recommendations, and a report on strengthening the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group, which is this body of nine Foreign Ministers of the Commonwealth who meet periodically to suggest if there are countries who are erring in terms of fulfilling the values and objectives of the Commonwealth.

This time around the Sri Lankans have made it clear they want the focus back on development. It is now, therefore, focused on the post-2015 development framework. It is focused on the ability of climate-vulnerable small states to access financing.

On the debt, solutions for debt challenges of small states, remember that 32 out of the 54 countries of the Commonwealth are small states. Small states in the Commonwealth context are defined as countries with a population of 1.5 million or less. So, it is a very unique organisation which gives a lot of voice to these countries who are in a majority in this particular format.

Also they are meeting, a month or a few weeks in advance, in the WTO Ministerial in Bali. So, obviously leaders may like to talk and discuss that on international trade. There are a few reports that have just been submitted in advance of CHOGM. There is a report that was done by President Bharrat Jagdeo, former President of Guyana, on this climate financing aspects which has been submitted. There is another one which has been done by the Prime Minister Sinkinson Nevis on the debt and financing challenges of small states.

There is also a report that has been submitted by the Ramphal Institute. This is on trying to reduce the border constraints and travel between Commonwealth countries, looking at possibly how we can make travel easier for business persons and tourists within Commonwealth countries. These are some of the reports that will be considered by CHOGM and see where they will take it from there.

In terms of outcome documents, there will be as usual a communiqué, which is still being negotiated, which will cover a range of international and regional issues and some Commonwealth specific issues. There is also the likelihood of standalone declarations possibly on youth, something on international trade, and possibly something on the theme itself of inclusive development.

I think that is broadly it and I will stop there.

Official Spokesperson: Any questions on ASEM?

Q: India and Pakistan both are members in ASEM. India and Pakistan are members in the Commonwealth also. Do you think that this time we are going to raise the issue of terrorism after the new Taliban leader is elected in Pakistan? And do you think that we are going to focus on terrorism in this area because this is one of the major problems in the South Asian region?

Official Spokesperson: I already indicated to you what the agenda is. What we have between India and Pakistan will be discussed on the sidelines or margins of the ASEM meeting between India and Pakistan. I have also told you what we will discuss there. So, you can put two and two together and work out what will be the agenda of the ASEM. And if you like, I will try and repeat it.

I previously said that in terms of India-Pakistan interaction on the margins, the focus will always be flowing from what was the outcome of the last meeting. The outcome of the last meeting was that for our discussions to go forward, the precondition is that there should be peace and tranquillity on the LOC. And that will be the basis for further discussions during the meeting on the margins.

Q: This is about the bilaterals during ASEM. Of course you said you will circulate the list later. But can I ask if a bilateral has already been scheduled with the Japanese Foreign Minister, and if yes, when?

Official Spokesperson: I can confirm to you that a bilateral has been scheduled with the Japanese Foreign Minister. As of now it will be during the ASEM meeting but not preceding it because the bilaterals preceding the ASEM I have announced and indicated to you. My understanding is that it perhaps will be on the 12th. But the schedule remains flexible because these meetings which are on the sidelines are at short notice. But we try and work out if it is possible perhaps on the 12th.

Official Spokesperson: If there are no other questions on ASEM, the floor is open for questions on CHOGM.

Q: Has a final decision been taken on Prime Minister's visit to Colombo? If the Prime Minister is going, will he also go to Jaffna? Who is representing?

Official Spokesperson: Decision making in terms of participation in an international event starts when we receive an invitation and there is a process after that. As an open and pluralist democracy we have been in that process. Many of you have through your perches at different phases and stages of this process come to some conclusions on the outcome based on certain inputs. But for us as diplomats, the process ends when we confirm to the host Government the composition of our delegation for an international event. We have not yet done that.

As Pavan mentioned to you, there are two meetings before the summit level. For those we have communicated who would be our representatives. For example for the Senior Officials equivalent Meeting, our Additional Secretary (International Organisations) Mr. Navtej Sarna and Mr. Pavan Kapoor will be our primary delegates.

As regards the next level, which is the Ministers, we have communicated that the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid will be our representative. He will also be assisted by the two officials who I mentioned to you earlier, that is Mr. Navtej Sarna and Mr. Pavan Kapoor, as well as the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Sujatha Singh. That leaves the Summit. We have not as yet communicated to the host the outcome of our internal decision making process. And it is normal in diplomatic practice to make this public once we have communicated.

On a possible visit to Jaffna, let me put this to you in terms of historical perspectives. All this depends on who is to lead the delegation. There have been previous leaders from India who, when they visited Sri Lanka had visited Jaffna. For example the former External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna, in January 2012 when he visited Sri Lanka also visited Jaffna. Another example is, when the External Affairs Minister Shri Khurshid earlier this year visited Colombo on a bilateral visit also did visit Jaffna.

I see in your question a Trojan horse. I can only tell about whether visit to Jaffna is on only once we confirm to the Sri Lankan Government who are the hosts about who would lead our delegation. Once that is done the answer to your question will also be known. You please understand what I am saying. You will have to just bear with us and wait and see who will lead the delegation. As I said, we are now in the process of doing that. Once we do that, we will make it public.

Q: In case the Prime Minister decides not to go, who will be the alternative? Is the Vice President likely to attend the Summit?

Official Spokesperson: I understand your question but let me try and put it in perspective. I have here with me a list of Indian participation in the CHOGM during the last two decades. That would perhaps give you a perspective of how this is done. This list indicates that in ten summit-level meetings since 1993 - we have taken a 20-year perspective - in those two decades there have been ten summit-level meetings. Of these, there have been five instances when the Prime Minister participated. On five other instances other Ministers or the Vice President had participated.

What you can surmise from this is that what we have followed in terms of participation in the CHOGM is an approach something akin to horses for courses. We focus on what is required for our national interest, our foreign policy priorities, and our international obligations. Taking those into account, we have our delegations led by different people.

Let me repeat. Ten summits, five at the Head of Government level, four at the level of different Ministers - some External Affairs Minister, some other Ministers – and one at the level of Vice President. From this diversity you would observe that we followed what suited our national interest on each of these occasions.

Q: In the five summits that the Prime Minister has not attended, are any of those in Asia?

Official Spokesperson: There was no summit in Asia in that period. So, this question is moot. We are talking about the last 20 years, I just mentioned. And Pavan has something to add.

Joint Secretary (UNP): That is one thing to be kept in mind, the last summit held in Asia was in India or in South Asia which was 1983. That was thirty years ago. The next time it is coming back to South Asia is this time in Colombo in thirty years. We are looking at 1993 to 2011 so far, Cyprus in 1993 and then moving all around.

Official Spokesperson: Also we would like to tell you that in the history of the Commonwealth after we joined, a maximum of two summits have been attended by Prime Ministers from India. In the fifty-year history there have been a maximum of two Prime Ministerial participations by a Prime Minister. We have had several Prime Ministers over the years and it is normal or it has been so far the trend that you have seen the Prime Minister's visits have been two times by a Prime Minister. That is the factual position. What we are trying to give you is a perspective of this.

And Commonwealth by definition is not an Asian organisation or an Asian forum. It is a forum with Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean and also Asia Pacific being parts of it.

Q: The delegates for the Ministerial and Official Meetings have been communicated. When is the last date by which you will have to communicate who would be the head of the delegation? When would they be expecting it to be communicated?

Official Spokesperson: When you deal with Heads of Governments, there are no such barriers and timelines and schedules kept. Both the host as well as those invited are cognizant of the importance of communicating in time and, as I said, we are in that process.

Joint Secretary (UNP): Just to add one more thing, if you look at the history of CHOGMs, normal participation from over the globe - and it is 54 countries as I said at this stage there are one suspended member and one which has withdrawn recently, so 52 invitees as it were - you normally do not have more than 30, 32 participating at Heads of Government level. So, that is also something which has got to be borne in mind. And I do not think that the actual figure at this time's CHOGM will be widely off that mark.

Q: Is the composition of delegations known? Are the Plenary open for the press or not?

Official Spokesperson: The composition of the delegations is known. If you would like any specific delegation, I will let you know about that. Plenary is not open. We have circulated in accordance with ASEM requirements what are the events which are open. These are available on our website and can be checked. And if you would like to know, from Italy I think it is the Deputy Foreign Minister. I will give you the name. It is not the Foreign Minister.

Official Spokesperson: Anyone else on anything else?

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Ashok, if you could look at the record of the last briefing, I have provided on RIC it is available on the website. You were also sitting here.

Q: Is there something more?

Official Spokesperson: There is never an end to more. There is never an end to appetite for more. I think I have given quite a few details. Have a look at it.

Q: The Foreign Ministers of India and China are going to be meeting on the sidelines of ASEM, and this meeting is taking place barely weeks after the summit meeting. I am just wondering what would a couple of specific issues which would be on the table?

Official Spokesperson: I think I answered this question at the last meeting when somebody else asked. But let me run through it again.

There are several outcomes of the summit meeting which was held. It is the intention of the two Foreign Ministers to take up issues which are listed as outcomes to be followed up. I can list those but these are easily available in public domain and we will take it from there.

Q: Many of the visiting Foreign Ministers perhaps have asked for a meeting with the Prime Minister, especially the Pakistan's Advisor to the PM Sartaj Aziz and other Foreign Ministers. Could you confirm whether the PM is meeting him?

Official Spokesperson: This question was also asked previously and I did say that we have received a request. We are still in touch and working out what are the scheduling timings of Mr. Sartaj Aziz's arrival here and departure from here. Based on that we will have a look at it. At this stage we are not aware of the exact schedule of timings. Once those timings are available, we will then have a look at it. But as I said, since the External Affairs Minister will be in the same place where the ASEM meeting is taking place, we have confirmed the meeting with the External Affairs Minister.

Q: The bilateral meeting with the Foreign Affairs Advisor of Pakistan is something that Pakistan has indicated they have requested. Do we know when it is going to be and what is likely to be discussed?

Official Spokesperson: (a) I can confirm the meeting. (b) I am not able to give a specific timing for the simple reason that we are not aware of when he arrives and when he leaves. Once we know those details, we will try and fit it in. But there is a commitment to have that meeting.

As regards what we will discuss, I think I mentioned earlier but let me repeat. It will take up the outcome of the last meeting between Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif and our Prime Minister. And there was one outcome of that and that is for India and Pakistan to engage it is important as a precondition that there should be peace and tranquillity on the Line of Control. So, what they will engage in right now is to see the situation since the two Prime Minister's last met, and decide on where to go forward based on what is their assessment of the situation during the period that has elapsed since the discussions between the two Prime Ministers.

Q: About the Nitaqat in Saudi Arabia, still lot of Indians are in great concern. They are also saying that the Government of India and the Embassy there are not helping them. Would you like to say something on this?

Official Spokesperson: I think we need to understand this in perspective. When the Nitaqat programme was initiated there were 2.4 million Indians there. Today there are 2.8 million. So, in the period while there has been an option given for people to regularise their stay the number of Indians has increased. (b) Out of the 2.8 million, 1.4 million have in various ways adjusted their legal requirements to stay. (c) 130,000 or so Indians have returned out of which 90,000 were based on the Emergency Certificates provided by the Indian Mission and the Consulate. We are one of those few countries which launched a major campaign using every available avenue to ensure that our nationals abide by local requirements.

It is not my case that everyone has met the deadline. We are committed to assisting all others, who are smaller in number. I have given you these huge numbers. Sure, there may be some people who still have not met the deadline; there may be some people who are having a problem, and we are committed to helping them. If we have been committed for the last six to eight months pursuing this issue vigorously, we certainly will not abandon anybody at this stage. But please understand this in that broader perspective that there are no major issues.

There will always remain issues. Where there is a large Indian community there will remain a few issues. And we are committed to addressing them. Let me assure through you that we intend to reach out and help out everybody who is in need of assistance.

Q: The Tamil Nadu Chief Minister has said that the Government is going very soft on the fishermen issue. Will this also figure when the External Affairs Minister is in Sri Lanka?

Official Spokesperson: The External Affairs Minister as well as the Foreign Secretary will utilise the opportunity when they are in Sri Lanka to have discussions with their respective counterparts. Yes, this is an important issue which we have always focused on in our bilateral interactions with Sri Lanka. We see this as a humanitarian concern which needs to be addressed in a humanitarian way. And I can assure you that at every opportunity we will continue to pursue this.

Q: I just wanted to know what had been our major expectations from Sri Lanka and what has not been fulfilled. This is nothing related to the visit.

Official Spokesperson: We are in diplomatic dialogue with Sri Lanka on every possible occasion. Our participation in CHOGM stands by itself, and our engagement with Sri Lanka is eternal, it will continue. In an engagement there are things that you are satisfied with, there are some things that you are not fully satisfied with, and there are some things that you would expect more. Now it is publicly known what are the things that we are fully satisfied with. Some of the things that we are not satisfied with one of your colleagues just raised, issues related to fishermen. Some of the other things that we are not fully satisfied with or there are concerns, are issues related to the wellbeing of the Tamil minority community there, regarding the 13th Amendment and the commitment to move ahead in a 13th Amendment Plus Process.

But this is an engagement that we are in with Sri Lanka for the long term. Sri Lanka is a close neighbour; it is an important country; it is a country where we have linkages going back to hundreds of years. And it is our neighbour. Like you know we have always emphasised in terms of Indian foreign policy that for us neighbourhood is the most important area of focus and we will continue to engage with Sri Lanka in that endeavour of engaging with important neighbours.

With that we come to the end of this event.

Thank you

ASEM

079. Inaugural Address by Vice President at 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting.

New Delhi, November 11, 2013.

Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs,

Excellencies,

Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen

I am happy to join you this morning for this Inaugural Session of the 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting. India is honoured to be the host today.

The vitality and continuing relevance of ASEM highlights its importance as a bridge between Asia and Europe and as a platform for dialogue to promote stability, peace and development. The theme of the conference, “ASEM: Bridge to Partnership for Growth and Development” is reflective of this.

Our forum brings together 60% of the world's population, 52% of the global GDP and close to 70% of world trade.

Dialogues have to be relevant in situational terms. We are witness today to important evolution in the political-security and socio-economic architectures across the two continents, as also globally. The world economy continues to be sluggish and emerging economies that were previously seen as the engines of economic growth have been compelled to take tough decisions they can ill afford, given the enormity of their developmental needs.

The international community is also facing a degree of unprecedented sophistication in non-traditional security threats. These transcend national borders and traditional response patterns and necessitate considerably higher levels of comprehension and cooperation.

In today's context, therefore, the strategic importance of the Asia-Europe partnership is evident. I believe we should look to optimize ASEM's potential with a sense of greater urgency. We should endeavour to take it beyond being a forum for political dialogue only, make it reach out to the people of Member States and create wider stake-holding amongst economic partners and civil society. We should invest its outcomes with tangible deliverables.

Collective action under ASEM can strengthen the understanding between our peoples, the dynamism in our economies and the realization of our developmental priorities. It can also help us to continue the process of understanding and consultation between ASEM countries in order to respond more effectively to global challenges.

I do hope your discussions will come up with ideas for using the synergies available in the collective capacity within ASEM. While Asia has the strength of emerging markets and its human resource potential, Europe has existing capacities and an edge in technological innovations. There are natural and beneficial partnerships here, which can be strengthened further. Bringing about greater focus on areas of relevance for developing countries and emerging markets will allow us to tap into areas of positive growth and prosperity.

I also hope that your deliberations in the Retreat will add to our understanding and consensus on how best to deal with issues of regional and global concern.

Now that ASEM has reached significant maturity of approach and purpose it is, perhaps, time to take its processes beyond the confines of diplomatic space to involve civil society, industry and media. This could also serve as an accurate barometer for ASEM to gauge the common aspirations of people in Asia and Europe. There is a historical tradition of the flow of ideas, practices and systems between the two continents. We need to see this exchange continue and strengthen.

I would like to commend ASEM FMM-11 for taking on the responsibility to add to the relevance and vitality of ASEM by emphasizing the important dimension of tangible cooperation between its member countries. ASEM can lead the way amongst the numerous multilateral frameworks that exist today to respond to common challenges at the regional and global level. Many of these fora are seeing important success and I see no reason why ASEM cannot assume a leading position amongst these.

ASEM has an unparalleled edge in terms of membership, capacity, economic influence, intellectual depth, strategic expertise and political leadership. ASEM's outcomes must accord greater visibility to these strengths.

This is an ambitious agenda but all our countries, Excellencies, will have to share the burden. I sense greater resolve amongst us to deliver on this expectation.

I wish you strength in your collective political will to take ASEM towards greater maturity, success and more tangible outcomes. I look forward to the continuation of this process at ASEM-10 next year and, I assure you, that India will remain steadfast in partnering Italy at the next ASEM Summit.

Thank you

080. Opening remarks by External Affairs Minister at the Press Conference on conclusion of 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting.

New Delhi (NCR), November 12, 2013.

We have just concluded the 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting. This is the first time that India has hosted the biennial ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting since we joined the group in 2007.

ASEM FMM11 was attended by 34 Foreign Ministers and 11 Deputy Foreign Ministers from Asia and Europe. All 51 ASEM members were represented.

Vice President of India, Shri M. Hamid Ansari inaugurated the ASEM FMM11 yesterday morning. We, thereafter, had two Plenary sessions, followed by Retreat today. This is the first time ASEM Foreign Ministers have met in Retreat.

The overall theme of the meeting was "ASEM: Bridge to Partnership for Growth and Development." It provided us a very useful opportunity to have discussions on a number of issues of interest, including economic and financial issues, sustainable development, non-traditional security challenges and regional and global issues. We also assessed the achievements of ASEM over the past 17 years of its existence as well as the way forward.

In our meeting over the last two days, we agreed to intensify efforts to bring about greater synergy between Asian and European partners in ASEM across the three pillars of political dialogue, economic collaboration and socio-cultural exchanges.

We have issued a Chair's Statement that is a summary of our actual discussions, prepared by the Chair in consensus with ASEM partners. We have successfully avoided the endless text negotiations that had taken up precious time in previous meetings!

Breaking away from the declaratory nature of previous ASEM deliberations, India, as Chair, sought to steer the forum from 'dialogue' to 'deliverables' and I am glad to say that we were successful in our endeavour. ASEM FMM11 was successful in using the strength of political dialogue in ASEM to forge tangible cooperation amongst members. This marks the beginning of a new orientation for future ASEM meetings. Members agreed that the dynamism of ASEM should find expression in tangible result-oriented initiatives which could be utilized to define joint responses by Asia and Europe to global and regional challenges and also seize opportunities for growth and development.

12 areas have been identified by members for tangible cooperation. For each area, multiple countries have expressed interest in identifying specific initiatives for enhancing cooperation in that area between ASEM members.

India would be working with interested ASEM partners in the areas of Sustainable Water Management, Energy Efficiency Technologies, Disaster Mitigation and Response, Vocational and Skills Training and Education and Human Resource Development.

Disaster risk mitigation and management has come out to be an urgent priority for collaboration in ASEM, more so because of the destruction and loss of life caused in Philippines and Viet Nam by the typhoon Haiyan. ASEM Ministers expressed solidarity and support for the victims. We felt that ASEM should have capacity to respond immediately in such instances. Many members have committed support in response to the specific requirements conveyed by the Philippines and also indicated their readiness to do likewise for Viet Nam.

We have seen immediate results in the case of ASEM's response to devastation caused by the typhoon Haiyan. As a measure of support, India proposes to send immediate relief supplies to the Philippines to help those affected by the typhoon. An aircraft with 15 tonnes of relief supplies will depart for the Philippines tonight. The material will consist of medicines and hygiene chemicals; fresh water and water purification material; tents, blankets, mattresses, tarpaulin and ground sheet for shelter; pre cooked meals, biscuits and milk powder; such that the affected persons can be provided immediately relief in terms of medical treatment, shelter and food. As a follow up measure, we shall consider sending a ship to the affected areas equipped with water treatment facilities and additional relief material to provide rehabilitation measures as well as transport to effectively ameliorate the sufferings of those affected.

We have exchanged views and ideas on how to revive growth, create jobs especially for the youth and catalyze economic growth. We have also discussed non-traditional security threats in detail, particularly, terrorism, drug trafficking and transnational crimes. We exchanged ideas to address food, water and energy security, as well as address the emerging issues of cyber space and the issues related to cyber crime and cyber security which are confronting national governments and institutions on both Continents.

We have endorsed the recommendation by our Senior Officials to set up a Working Group comprising ASEM members and ASEF to devise a Press and Public Awareness Management Strategy for ASEM.

In this context, I would like to mention the joint initiative by India and the Asia Europe Foundation to host the 9th Asia Europe Foundation Journalists' Colloquium in Gurgaon on 11-12 November, 2013. We will also be co-hosting with ASEF a two week project in early 2014 on "Sustainable Urbanisation in Heritage Cities" aimed at students and young professionals from ASEM partner countries.

ASEM will celebrate its 20th anniversary in 2016 and the Ministers have decided to set up a Working Group from amongst ASEM members and ASEF to devise a road map for the 20th Anniversary celebrations. This will continue as work in progress until the 12th ASEM FMM in 2015.

The Asia-Europe Foundation, as the only permanent institution of ASEM, is making an important contribution to the ASEM process. We have endorsed the recommendation of Senior Officials that the ASEF Board of Governors and Executive Director partner the effort to bring closer synergy between ASEF activities and ASEM.

We also discussed Croatia's request for membership of ASEM following its accession to the EU earlier this year. Ministers welcomed Croatia as "Guest of Chair" for all ASEM meetings in 2014 till a decision on its membership at the ASEM10 Summit in Milan, Italy in the second half of 2014.

The EU and Italy briefed us on preparations for the 10th ASEM Summit which will take place in Milan, Italy in 2014. Luxembourg has offered to host the 12th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting in 2015.

In all, it was an excellent meeting. I think we made real progress. We have given voice and visibility to the priorities of Asia in the ASEM agenda. Growth and development are of interest and relevance to both Asia and Europe. The reform in working methods will allow ASEM members to make more focussed efforts to give form and content to urgent priorities on both Continents.

I also had bilateral meetings with many of the visiting ASEM Foreign Ministers on the sidelines including my counterparts from China, Japan, Bangladesh, Romania, Lithuania, Poland, Hungary, Malta, Cyprus, Czech Republic, RoK, Norway, Switzerland, Sweden, Bulgaria, Slovenia, Portugal, The Netherlands and the EU High Representative.

Thank you

081. Chair's Statement on the ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting.
NCR-Delhi.
November 12, 2013.

The 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting (ASEM FMM11) was held in Delhi-NCR, India from November 11-12, 2013. It was attended by 34 Foreign Ministers from Asia and Europe, including the High Representative of the European Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and Vice President of the European Commission, Mrs. Catherine Ashton and the Secretary General of the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN), Mr. Le Luong Minh. 11 countries were represented by Deputy Foreign Ministers. The meeting was Chaired by the External Affairs Minister of India, Mr. Salman Khurshid.

2. The theme of the 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting: "ASEM: Bridge to Partnership for Growth and Development" provided opportunity for the Ministers to exchange views on a number of economic and financial issues and sustainable development as also non-traditional security challenges and regional and global issues. They also assessed the achievements of ASEM in the past 17 years and its future orientation. Ministers agreed to intensify efforts to bring about greater synergy between Asian and European partners of the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM) across the three pillars of political dialogue, economic cooperation and socio-cultural exchanges.

3. Ministers commenced their deliberations with expression of solidarity and support for the victims of the typhoon Haiyan in the Philippines and Viet Nam. They felt that ASEM should develop capacity to deliver immediate support for relief and rehabilitation in such instances of natural disasters. Many ASEM members committed support in response to the specific requirements conveyed by the Philippines and also indicated their readiness to do likewise for Viet Nam.
4. Ministers underlined that ASEM provides a strong foundation for a more dynamic partnership between Asia and Europe for addressing regional and global challenges. Dialogue, consensus, flexibility and informality continue to define the strength of deliberations in ASEM. There was consensus that the dynamism of the ASEM partners should find expression in tangible result-oriented initiatives amongst ASEM partners. These initiatives could define joint responses by Asia and Europe to global and regional challenges and also catalyze opportunities for growth and development in Asia and Europe. Ministers underscored the need to strengthen public support for ASEM in Asia and Europe.
5. Recalling ASEM guiding principles, including the 2006 Helsinki Declaration, Ministers endorsed recommendations of ASEM Senior Officials for further optimization of ASEM working methods to strengthen ASEM's substance, efficiency and coherence. In this regard, Ministers welcomed the Yangzhou Initiative as an important contribution to improve ASEM working methods. It was felt that ASEM processes must continue to be responsive to the evolving international situation.

Economic Growth, Sustainable Development and Future Direction of Partnerships for Development

6. Ministers reaffirmed ASEM's utility for finding synergies to mitigate the global financial crisis and address concerns relating to weak demand and high unemployment in member economies. They noted the importance of implementing nationally defined social protection floors at the development pace of respective countries. Ministers underscored that a sustainable model for growth could be found by matching technological innovations and capacities available in many ASEM members to markets and human resource requirements in others. Such bridging of intellectual, scientific and economic capacities between Asia and Europe as well as ensuring inclusiveness of Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs) could act as a force multiplier to facilitate economic growth and sustainable development. ASEM should fully reflect the strong economic and financial interdependence between Asia and Europe. Ministers encouraged early resumption of the ASEM Economic Ministers Meeting.
7. Recognizing the importance of an open rule-based multilateral trading system for global growth, Ministers expressed their deep concern about protectionism, endorsed rolling back of protectionist measures and reiterated that barriers to trade and investment, imposition of export restrictions or implementation of WTO-inconsistent measures must be avoided. Ministers strongly supported efforts for the 9th WTO Ministerial Conference in Bali in December 2013 to deliver substantial outcomes towards the successful conclusion of the Doha Development Round.
8. Ministers recognized that global financial regulatory reform is an ongoing process. They reaffirmed the importance of the call for continuing reforms of international financial institutions to reflect structural changes in the world economy, including, inter alia, the priority of early ratification of the 2010 IMF quota and governance reforms. Ministers acknowledged the need for adequate protection of intellectual property rights, including genetic resources and traditional knowledge and folklore, as well as for efforts to fight counterfeiting and piracy.
9. Ministers urged intensification of efforts to utilize technological and financial capacities in Asia and Europe as well as promotion of Public-Private Partnership to meet the growing need of infrastructure in the emerging economies. This was seen as critical for sustained economic growth, poverty reduction and job creation, in particular, for tackling youth unemployment. Ministers expressed strong political will to restore sustainable and inclusive growth to the global economy.

10. Ministers welcomed the G20's efforts to coordinate common approaches to global economy and finance, including the outcome of the G20 Summit in St. Petersburg in September 2013. Australia provided a briefing on priorities for their G20 Presidency.
11. Ministers noted that ASEM is at a significant crossroads. The depth and maturity of political dialogue in ASEM over the past 17 years must lead to further strengthening of the inter-continental bridging. This would add to the vitality of ASEM. Greater balance in the three pillars of cooperation would strengthen the relevance of ASEM.
12. Ministers emphasized the need to strengthen regional and inter-regional connectivity for more efficient flow of goods, services, capital and people, especially for narrowing developmental gaps.
13. Ministers underscored the need to transform jointly the challenges related to food, water and energy security into opportunities for growth and sustainable development.
14. Ministers acknowledged the potential for human resource development through institutes of technological excellence in ASEM partner countries. It was felt that ASEM's biennial Rectors Conference and ASEM's Higher Education Programme could be further dovetailed to take this forward. They recognized the importance of encouraging the private sector to look at joint ventures in this sector, with transfer of technology as an element to bring about qualitative improvement in education, create jobs and foster economic development.

Non-Traditional Security Challenges

15. Ministers exchanged views on strategies to meet non-traditional security challenges such as all aspects of terrorism, drug trafficking, money laundering and cyber crime. These issues were seen as having serious repercussions for regional and global security, particularly because of their tendency to come together to compound the challenge from terrorism. They underlined the need for a comprehensive global approach to counter terrorism. Ministers also called for greater cooperation to meet other emerging threats such as piracy, smuggling, transnational crimes, human trafficking, illegal migration, arms trafficking and trafficking in plant and animal products, particularly in endangered species. Ministers also emphasized the importance of collective attention to deal with the growing challenge from pandemics.

16. Ministers underscored the need to exchange information on activities of cyber crime and where cyber space is used by terrorists for financing, recruitment, communication and radicalization. They emphasized the need for ensuring cyber security, while underlining that the security of the Internet should not be achieved at the expense of freedom of expression. They noted the work of the UN Group of Government Experts and underlined that the governance of the Internet needs to be democratic, transparent and representative of all stakeholders. Ministers also noted the outcome of the 2013 Conference on Cyber Space held in Seoul on October 17-18, 2013.
17. Ministers underlined that climate change continues to be an important challenge. ASEM partners underscored their commitment to work together to address climate change and environment protection in accordance with all the principles and provisions of UNFCCC, on the basis of equity and in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. They reiterated their commitment to implementation of the outcomes of previous conferences, including most recently, the Doha Conference, and developing a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the UNFCCC applicable to all parties. ASEM partners looked forward to working with Poland as the incoming COP-Presidency towards achieving a successful outcome at COP 19. Recognising the importance of climate finance, Ministers emphasized the need to work together for the early and successful operationalisation and timely resource mobilization of the Green Climate Fund.

18. Ministers supported greater collaboration and coordination in disaster risk reduction and management and mitigation, including, inter alia, through awareness programmes, early warning systems, use of innovations in technology, search, rescue and relief operations and post-disaster rehabilitation. They agreed to mainstream disaster risk reduction and management in the ASEM agenda. They welcomed the ASEM Conference on Technology and Innovation for Disaster Risk Reduction and Management and Climate Change Adaptation to be held in the Philippines in September 2014 and the Third UN World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction to be held in Sendai, Japan in 2015.
19. Ministers supported greater collaboration in ASEM for ensuring food, water and energy security for future generations. They suggested attention to the use of R&D in agricultural productivity, farm practices, conservation of agro-biodiversity and the use of advanced technologies to mitigate the effects of climate change. Ministers emphasized collective interest of members in examining measures to address the volatility of food and agricultural commodity prices, while recognizing national measures to support food security objectives and protect livelihood of farmers.
20. Ministers emphasized the importance of open, competitive and globally integrated energy markets in enhancing energy security. They underlined the importance of ensuring the full engagement of both producers and consumers in global energy governance structures. The need to attain a sustainable energy mix according to national priorities and circumstances was recognized. Ministers also reaffirmed their commitments to promote energy access and energy diversification through exchange of information and best practices and research on new, alternative and renewable energy development. They supported energy efficiency and conservation and the use of affordable environmentally friendly technologies, particularly for developing countries.

21. Ministers supported sustainable usage and integrated management of water resources. They noted that water is a promising area of cooperation with complementarity of capacity within ASEM members, and supported collaboration between ASEM partners, especially through transfer of technology and expertise in this sector. In this context, they took note of the outcome 6 of the ASEM Dialogue on Sustainable Development in June 2012.
22. Ministers encouraged ASEM partners to strengthen collaborations in the above sectors for joint research, development and demonstration, sharing information and knowledge, expanding technology hubs and creating networks for capacity building.

Regional and International Issues

23. Ministers had a candid and constructive discussion on a number of international and regional issues of common interest and concern in the Retreat. They exchanged views and assessments on issues such as Asia-Europe cooperation, including as a net contributor to international peace, security and development; situation in Afghanistan; Iran's nuclear programme; developments in Middle East and North Africa, including Syria, Middle East Peace Process, Libya and Egypt; situation in the Horn of Africa; threat of piracy; problem of illegal migration and increasing flows of internally displaced persons and refugees; protection of vulnerable sections in conflict situations; developments in North East Asia, including the nuclear programme of DPRK and situation in the Korean Peninsula; freedom of navigation, maritime security and other issues pertaining to South China Sea; the objective of a world free from nuclear weapons and issues of proliferation of WMD and their means of delivery; enhancement of efficacy of multilateral institutions, including UNSC reform; expectations from ongoing COP19 negotiations in Warsaw and the forthcoming 9th WTO Ministerial Conference in Bali; and cooperation under the Arctic Council. Ministers agreed that ASEM is a valuable forum for political dialogue and cooperation among members in Asia and Europe with diverse and complementing capacities, perspectives and approaches.

24. Ministers commended the successful outcomes from the 23rd ASEAN Summit and related Summits held in Bandar Seri Begawan on October 9-10, 2013, including the development of the ASEAN Community's Post-2015 Vision. Ministers also commended the successful outcome of the European Council meetings in 2013. Ministers took note, with appreciation, of the successful conclusion of the APEC Economic Leaders Meeting in Bali on October 8, 2013.

ASEM Initiatives for Tangible Cooperation and Future Meetings

25. Ministers welcomed the initiative of the Chair to encourage ASEM members to achieve result-oriented tangible outcomes under ASEM and the Annex I to the Chair's Statement, which would allow countries to continue work on this agenda with like-minded members. They took note of the numerous meetings to be held in 2013-14, listed in Annex II to the Chair's Statement. Ministers supported the trend to incorporate a wider stakeholding amongst business, civil society, media and academia. They suggested that the implementation reports of such initiatives feed into subsequent ASEM meetings and documents, including the SOM meetings.

ASEM Press/ Public Awareness Management Strategy

26. Ministers called for greater effort to promote public awareness and visibility of the ASEM processes for the general public, business, media, executive and parliamentary representatives in ASEM partners. They endorsed the recommendation of the Senior Officials to set up a Working Group, comprising ASEM members and ASEF, to devise a Press and Public Awareness Management Strategy to be discussed further at the ASEM SOM in April 2014 in Brussels. The Ministers noted that the suggestions and topics contained in Annex IV to the Chair's Statement would provide the starting point for discussions in the Working Group. They commended use of modern technologies and social media to strengthen the public interface of ASEM. They supported strengthening of ASEM InfoBoard maintained by ASEF and welcomed the ASEM Dialogue Facility developed by the EU as an additional tool for ASEM to enhance dialogue and cooperation.

27. In this context, Ministers took note of the convening of the 9th ASEF Journalists Colloquium in Delhi-NCR from November 10-12, 2013, organised by ASEF in collaboration with India, to take forward the on-going debate on sustainable development.

Asia-Europe Foundation (ASEF)

28. Ministers recognised ASEF's contributions to the ASEM process, particularly in enhancing awareness of ASEM in civil societies and promoting people-to-people exchanges between Asia and Europe. They recalled ASEF's important mandate as laid down in the Dublin Principles 1996 and mentioned in the Asia-Europe Cooperation Framework (AECF) 2000, i.e. "to continue strong support and encouragement for ASEF which is an important vehicle to promote and catalyze cultural, intellectual and people-to-people exchanges". Ministers welcomed ASEF's result-oriented projects planned for 2014 (Annex-III) and encouraged ASEF to optimize its capacity to attract more annual financial contributions. Ministers endorsed the recommendation of Senior Officials that the Board of Governors and Executive Director of ASEF be requested to offer suggestions for closer synergy between ASEF activities and ASEM, for discussion at the ASEM SOM in April 2014.

Celebrations of the 20th Anniversary of ASEM in 2016

29. On the recommendation of Senior Officials, Ministers decided to set up a Working Group from amongst ASEM members and ASEF to devise a detailed strategy and roadmap for the 20th Anniversary celebrations of ASEM in 2016 and took note of suggestions that were made in this regard as a starting point.

ASEM Enlargement

30. Ministers noted Croatia's request for joining ASEM following its accession to the EU as its 28th member on July 1, 2013. In keeping with the two-key approach of ASEM Enlargement, the Ministers welcomed Croatia as “Guest of Chair” for all ASEM meetings in 2014 till a decision on its membership status at the ASEM10 Summit in Milan, Italy in the second half of 2014.

Preparations for ASEM10 Summit

31. Ministers were informed by the EU and Italy about the preparations for the ASEM10 Summit to be held in Milan, Italy in the second half of 2014. They also discussed events that could be organized in conjunction with the Summit. Ministers assured the EU and Italy that ASEM partners would actively support the successful organization of the ASEM10 Summit.
32. The Ministers welcomed Luxembourg's offer to host the 12th ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting (ASEM FMM12) in 2015.

BRICS082. Media Briefing by National Security Advisor after BRICS Meeting of High Representatives on National Security.

New Delhi, January 10, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being present here for this media interaction.

Since this was the first time that the High Representatives for Security of the BRICS nations are meeting here in New Delhi, we had requested the National Security Advisor to brief you about the concept as well as the discussions that he had today with his counterparts. Along with the NSA we have the Deputy National Security Advisor Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy and, further to NSA's left, Secretary (ER) Mr. Pinak Chakrabarti.

I would now request the NSA to make his opening remarks and then the floor is open for questions.

National Security Advisor (Shri Shivshankar Menon): Thank you Akbar.

We have just concluded the meeting of the National Security Advisors or High Representatives responsible for national security, as we are also called, of BRICS countries. We were honoured to host this meeting; and I must thank all my colleagues in the BRICS for having made this a very successful meeting.

The BRICS NSA's have actually been meeting since 2009. We first met as a group to prepare the Yekaterinburg summit of BRICS leaders which was the first summit of BRICS leaders. But this is the first time that we are doing a standalone meeting of the NSAs. We met after that as well by the way. We met on the sidelines of Sanya; we met on the sidelines of other summits; in Brazil as well. But this is the first standalone meeting as such. We did this because in the Delhi Summit in March we were asked to meet and to look at issues of common concern, and to look at the international situation.

Over time, as you know, the BRICS itself as a platform has grown both in significance and in the nature of the dialogue and the work that we do together. It started of primarily looking at economic issues, at economic cooperation. Over time those consultations and the work that we do has grown considerably. It is natural given the kind of similar interests that we have as emerging economies that national security issues should also come on to the agenda and become an important element. So, what we really used the meeting for was to consult, to coordinate, and to see where we can cooperate on some of these issues.

We discussed how the BRICS - which today account for 43 per cent of the world's population, around one quarter of the world's GDP – of how we can work together for global peace, for stability, for development, and how BRICS could be a factor of stability and growth. I think it is clear that when you look at the world economy and the condition it is in, much of the growth in the economy is actually coming from emerging economies, from what are called developing countries.

Today, most of our discussions actually concentrated on the important regional and global developments. Naturally West Asia and North Africa was a very large part of what we discussed - Syria, Libya, Male. We also discussed ways to enhance our cooperation and coordination in issues like cyber security, terrorism, piracy and other such threats to international security.

We looked at ways to increase coordination and cooperation among us as BRICS on these issues. We each have strong and healthy relationships with each of the other BRICS countries. Those are bilateral. But what we looked at today was how we as BRICS, as a collective, could do something about these issues.

Discussions throughout were constructive, positive, forward looking. There was a high level of congruence in our discussion of these issues. We found it very useful, in fact useful enough that at the end everyone said we must do this again. That gives you an idea of how successful the participants thought it was.

In one sense what we were doing will feed into the preparations for the Durban Summit at the end of March which will be the summit of BRICS leaders and which will be the fifth summit in the first cycle of leaders' summits. Starting in Yekaterinburg we have done it in each of the other countries.

We also had some discussion of what we expect from the Durban Summit. The South African side briefed us about their preparations for it which are well on track and going very well. Much of what we discussed we will report back to our own leaders and then we hope it feeds into what they do at Durban.

I will stop there and maybe leave it open to questions.

Official Spokesperson: Since the NSA has spoken about a vast canvas, we will focus on those issues that he has spoken on first and then we will have questions, if there is time left, on other issues.

Q: Sir, you spoke about issues of national security which came up during the BRICS summit. Could you give us some details on what kind of national security issues came up particularly with reference to India?

National Security Advisor: I told you, terrorism, piracy, cyber security, these were all national security issues, and some of the threats that come out of the situation, the turmoil in West Asia and in North Africa.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... take the opportunity ... BRICS NSAs about what happened between India and Pakistan, the mutilation of the soldiers?

National Security Advisor: No, I did not.

Q: Why not?

National Security Advisor: I do not expect BRICS to do something about it.

Q: Sir, is there any kind of a joint mechanism that is likely to be set up among the BRICS countries to deal with the national security issues? We have many working groups with other countries. Is there any kind of a joint effort or joint mechanism that you are thinking of to deal with the security issues?

National Security Advisor: The way BRICS has worked so far is, we have had occasional meetings of National Security Advisors. When we have a particular issue that we want to develop, that we think that many of us or all of us feel that we need to work on, we set up ad hoc working groups, expert groups and so on. That is how for instance we develop the idea of a BRICS bank for infrastructure development which now seems almost ripe, which will be coming to the Durban.

Today when we discussed these issues which I have mentioned to you, in many of them the other NSAs felt that these are worth carrying forward in expert level discussions. So, what we will try and do now is we will actually see where we can set up groups, which issues there is enough traction in. It is a continuous process. It is not meeting to meeting. We have Sherpas, in fact that is why Secretary (ER) is our BRICS Sherpa, we have Su Sherpas who stay in touch with each other. They will make sure that this process continues.

When you ask if there is a permanent mechanism, I am not quite sure how to answer it. As we have a job to do, we will have a mechanism. And we agreed that we will meet again as well. But we did not say we will meet every month on the second Tuesday or fix a date and time. Nothing like that.

Q: Security situation in Syria is deteriorating rapidly. Have you specifically discussed this issue and evolved a common position on Syria?

National Security Advisor: We had a fairly detailed discussion on it. I hope I reflect the sense of the discussion correctly when I say that it was quite clear that all of us felt that it is for the Syrian people to choose their future; the international community can only be a facilitator. Secondly, we thought that the deterioration in the situation and the increasing violence was something of great concern to all of us, also, the rise in extremist and terrorist forces in the region and in Syria itself which seems to be increasing over time. Our own feeling was that what is needed is that a political process which actually tries to include all Syrians in it is what is required. There are no military solutions to this kind of a problem. There was a detailed discussion on it.

Q: Sir, the question of cyber security sounds very important. How do you and your colleagues see the cooperation of BRICS countries in this question? Did you discuss any mechanism on this cooperation?

National Security Advisor: I think many of us felt that, in fact there were many ideas on cyber security because each of our countries is in the process of putting in place their own systems for cyber security. Whether it is India, China, each of us is in the process of putting in place regulations, structures, organizations to deal with this. So, there was a fairly detailed discussion of that. We all had many ideas actually on how the BRICS could cooperate to do this, whether it is exchanging best practices, whether it is putting our emergency response teams in touch with each other, whether it is dealing with cyber crime. So, we went through it in some detail and there were many good ideas on the table which now we will carry forward as we continue to discuss it as I said in this Su Sherpa process. But it is obviously an issue which bothers all of us. The more networked we get and the more of our citizens who use and depend upon the Internet and social media, the more concern there is about that it be safe, secure and healthy.

Q: Did you have any bilateral discussion with Chinese NSA?

National Security Advisor: We are meeting tomorrow. Most of us are doing bilateral discussions on the sidelines. Some have taken place, some will happen tomorrow, some just after this.

Question: Will you discuss border talks?

National Security Advisor: We will discuss our whole relationship.

Q: The next meeting of the Special Representatives?

National Security Advisor: All that. Let us meet first.

Question: What do you think of Pakistan's suggestion that UNMOGIP should investigate the January 8 incident on the LoC?

National Security Advisor: UNMOGIP still exists? I thought they do not have a role.

Q: CBMs across LoC are unraveling and new rules of engagement are called for. Do you think that Pakistan is trying to make ...(Inaudible)...

National Security Advisor: If you want to make a statement, come and sit here and make it. Do not put words in my mouth.

Q: Can we come back to BRICS...(Inaudible)...

National Security Advisor: Thank you for doing that.

Question: But is there something conclusive coming out of this meeting which we can tell the people?

National Security Advisor: As I said, if you look at the nature of the BRICS process, it started off as an idea originally as BRIC, of four emerging economies, and as an economic concept. The first few meetings were at lower levels where we discussed how we could cooperate in economic fields. That bore some fruit. As that bore fruit, it was raised to the level of the Foreign Ministers. Finally the leaders met in 2009. That process itself took five years. By that time the agenda had grown to cover not just bilateral economic or multilateral economic cooperation but also the global economic situation, issues of global governance, issues of political significance. When you came to the Sanya meeting of the leaders for instance there was a large section expressing views on political developments in the international situation. The first reference to what was happening in West Asia was in Sanya in 2010.

Slowly the ambit of what BRICS has worked on has grown. I think it has resulted in some concrete cooperation measures. There are networks of course of think tanks, there are exchanges at various levels between various BRICS countries. But I think the most concrete suggestion that is now on the table is the one for a development bank or a BRICS bank for infrastructure.

If you ask us on the national security side, it has been in a growing field of cooperation. As I said, we already have strong bilateral cooperation in this field whether it is India-Russia, India-China, India-Brazil, India-South Africa. The question is what we as a group can do on issues. Cyber security for instance is an issue which no individual country or no two countries can actually deal with just on their own. So, there is a long list of things that we think we should be looking at as BRICS. But if you ask me today what have you done, I will say what we have done is take another step forward on this rather long road which we will keep walking on. And everybody who was there in the room at the end thought it had been very useful and very positive.

Q: Mr. Menon, I understand and appreciate your statement that you do not expect BRICS to do anything on this LoC incident. But during your standalone meeting and during your bilaterals, did any of the BRICS NSAs broach the topic with you? Did you happen to brief them, and what is your own assessment of the situation?

National Security Advisor: Simple answer. No.

Q: ... (Inaudible)... to you here. We saw the Foreign Office's statement yesterday on the LoC incident. My question is, whether there is any

...(Inaudible)... in the Government about ...(Inaudible)... There is some speculation that is going around.

National Security Advisor: All this is speculation. You have heard what the Foreign Minister said. He has made it quite clear that he is not jumping to any conclusions at this moment. So, I suggest you wait. After all he has been speaking to you even today. So, I think you need to at least give him more than fifteen minutes before you ask, have you reevaluated, have you changed policy again.

I think it is quite clear. Government has said what it has to say on the event. You have a selection of adjectives – reprehensible, barbaric, dastardly, whatever you want. Sadly, it is not the first time this has happened. I hope it never happens again. But we have also told you exactly what we intend to do. So, now I think you should let Government go about its business.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

National Security Advisor: But you would not hear anything different from me from what he told you.

Q: Could you give us a sense of the number of increase in the ceasefire violations that have been reported especially over the last one year? And given that even during the peak winter timing it is happening, is there a sense that perhaps there are infiltration attempts happening with the possible back up cover of the Pakistan army? Or are there sections within the Pak army that are not on the same page as far as the dialogue process is concerned?

National Security Advisor: I do not speak for the Pak army. I cannot tell you what is in their mind. I can tell you what happens. There has been an increase in ceasefire violations. There been an increase in infiltration attempts, not only in the last few months. In 2012 there was an increase overall over 2011. That is a fact. And that is something we are dealing with, both ourselves and with the Pakistani authorities.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

083. Prime Minister's statement prior to his departure for South Africa.

New Delhi, March 25, 2013.

I leave today for Durban, South Africa, to attend the Fifth BRICS Summit at the invitation of President Jacob Zuma.

Over the last few years, BRICS has emerged as a consequential voice in the international arena. Close coordination between its members through the means of an annual Summit and several area-specific meetings as necessary has strengthened cooperation and improved the effectiveness of the forum. Given the collective economic weight and global standing of BRICS countries, the forum represents a unique mechanism to address regional and global challenges, particularly in so far as the interests of the developing world are concerned.

As the current BRICS Chair, India received the unstinted support of its partners in successfully implementing the ambitious agenda adopted at the New Delhi Summit in March 2012. The Durban Summit gives us an opportunity to make further progress on the initiatives that we launched in Delhi to deepen intra-BRICS cooperation and fulfill our international responsibilities. I look forward to discussions on new ideas in Durban to advance our goals.

At the time when the world is facing multiple challenges, the Durban Summit provides a useful and timely opportunity to consult and coordinate on a broad range of issues with our BRICS partners. We will discuss ways to revive global growth and ensure macroeconomic stability, as well as mechanisms and measures to promote investment in infrastructure and sustainable development. India will also urge faster movement on reform of institutions of global political and economic governance. It is important that BRICS continue to consult closely on developments affecting global peace and security.

This will be the first BRICS Summit on African soil. The 'Partnership for Development, Integration and Industrialization' between BRICS and Africa will be an important theme of the Durban Summit. Given India's long-standing and close friendship with Africa and our growing economic partnership with the continent, including through the India-Africa Forum

Summit mechanism, I look forward to the dialogue that BRICS leaders will have between themselves and, in a special retreat, with a large number of distinguished African leaders who are coming to Durban. I will reaffirm our strong and enduring commitment as a steadfast partner for inclusive development in Africa and for advancing our common interests in international forums.

I will also take the opportunity of my visit to hold substantive bilateral meetings with other BRICS leaders. I look forward to meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping. It will be an opportunity for me not only to greet the new Chinese President personally, but also to discuss how we can maintain the positive trajectory of our relationship and further strengthen this very important bilateral relationship. I also intend to review with President Putin of Russia the progress in India-Russia relations after the successful Summit in Delhi in December 2012. I also look forward to meeting with President Zuma of South Africa and President Dilma Rousseff of Brazil, both of whom will also join us in Delhi in June for the IBSA Summit.

084. Prime Minister's statement on his arrival at King Shaka International Airport, Durban for the 5th BRICS Summit.

March 25, 2013.

I am delighted to be in South Africa once again. We have extremely cordial relations with South Africa. This visit is for the BRICS Summit. BRICS is a new grouping, young with a lot of promise. I look forward to meeting all the dignitaries who are attending the Summit.

085. Statement by the Prime Minister at the BRICS Leaders Africa Dialogue Forum.

March 27, 2013.

Your Excellency President Jacob Zuma,
Distinguished BRICS colleagues,
Distinguished Heads of African countries

Distinguished Heads of institutions from different parts of Africa,

I am pleased to have this opportunity for a dialogue on how BRICS, and in particular India, could contribute to and benefit from the tremendous transformation that has made Africa the continent of hope today.

India's relations with Africa are rooted in the history of our solidarity against colonialism and apartheid. Mahatma Gandhi developed the tools of peaceful resistance on this very soil. Our engagement with Africa has come a long way since then and today we have built a new template for partnership in the form of the India-Africa Forum Summit. This partnership is guided by the vision and priorities of our African partners. India will assist Africa in charting its own course through institution-building, infrastructure development and technical and vocational skill development.

The pan-Africa e-Network for tele-medicine and tele-education, which is now functional in 47 countries in Africa, is a major success story of our institution-building partnership with countries of Africa. We are ready to work with our African partners on e-governance to help bridge the digital divide in Africa. India is also happy to share its experiences of participative political institutions, local governance, media and civil society with Africa.

Human resource development and capacity-building assistance were mentioned in this very meeting, and we consider them to be at the core of India's cooperation with Africa, because they enable and empower people to take charge of their own future. Over 15,000 African students are studying in India. Agricultural and scientific fellowships specially designed for African scholars are highly popular. Our assistance with vocational and entrepreneurial skill development, with particular emphasis on small and medium enterprises, is helping promote employability and job creation for the youth in Africa.

Our concessional assistance is directed towards development of agriculture, infrastructure and industry. We are reviewing the terms and conditions of our lines of credit so that they meet the budgetary requirements of our partners, and are in line with their own development priorities, utilizing local resources and skills, and creating sustainable revenue-generating assets. On the trade front, our non-reciprocal Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for LDCs has significantly enhanced the access of African LDCs to the growing Indian market.

Excellencies, India's enterprising private sector is one of the key drivers of the India-Africa partnership. The Confederation of Indian Industries and the EXIM Bank of India last week organized the 9th Conclave on India-Africa Project Partnership, which generated interest in 500 projects worth 70 billion US dollars.

Excellencies, as has been rightly mentioned by one of the distinguished personalities here, sustainable economic development requires an environment of social and political stability. India actively supports African initiatives for peace and security in the continent. More than 6,500 Indian soldiers support UN Peacekeeping Operations in various parts of Africa. A large Indian contingent is helping the UN Stabilisation Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo carry out its mandate. We have also made financial contributions to the African Union Mission in Somalia and the African-led International Support Mission to Mali. We strongly support the restoration of Mali's territorial integrity as well as constitutional order in that country.

Excellencies, let me conclude by reiterating India's resolve to work with Africa with the entire spectrum of our expertise and capacity. The BRICS forum offers another avenue for our cooperation. Initiatives such as the BRICS bank could further leverage the collective capacity of the BRICS countries to assist the historic transformation taking place in Africa. This is an objective that India remains committed to.

Thank you

086. 5th BRICS Summit - eThekweni Declaration and Action Plan.Thekwini, March 27, 2013.

1. We, the leaders of the Federative Republic of Brazil, the Russian Federation, the Republic of India, the People's Republic of China and the Republic of South Africa, met in Durban, South Africa, on 27 March 2013 at the Fifth BRICS Summit. Our discussions took place under the overarching theme, "BRICS and Africa: Partnership for Development, Integration and Industrialisation". The Fifth BRICS Summit concluded the first cycle of BRICS Summits and we reaffirmed our commitment to the promotion of international law, multilateralism and the central role of the United Nations (UN). Our discussions reflected our growing intra-BRICS solidarity as well as our shared goal to contribute positively to global peace, stability, development and cooperation. We also considered our role in the international system as based on an inclusive approach of shared solidarity and cooperation towards all nations and peoples.
2. We met at a time which requires that we consider issues of mutual interest and systemic importance in order to share concerns and to develop lasting solutions. We aim at progressively developing BRICS into a full-fledged mechanism of current and long-term coordination on a wide range of key issues of the world economy and politics. The prevailing global governance architecture is regulated by institutions which were conceived in circumstances when the international landscape in all its aspects was characterised by very different challenges and opportunities. As the global economy is being reshaped, we are committed to exploring new models and approaches towards more equitable development and inclusive global growth by emphasising complementarities and building on our respective economic strengths.
3. We are open to increasing our engagement and cooperation with non-BRICS countries, in particular Emerging Market and Developing Countries (EMDCs), and relevant international and regional organisations, as envisioned in the Sanya Declaration. We will hold a Retreat together with African leaders after this Summit, under the theme, "Unlocking Africa's potential: BRICS and Africa Cooperation on Infrastructure". The Retreat is an opportunity for BRICS and African leaders to discuss how to strengthen cooperation between the BRICS countries and the African Continent.

4. Recognising the importance of regional integration for Africa's sustainable growth, development and poverty eradication, we reaffirm our support for the Continent's integration processes.
5. Within the framework of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), we support African countries in their industrialisation process through stimulating foreign direct investment, knowledge exchange, capacity-building and diversification of imports from Africa. We acknowledge that infrastructure development in Africa is important and recognise the strides made by the African Union to identify and address the continent's infrastructure challenges through the development of the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa (PIDA), the AU NEPAD Africa Action Plan (2010-2015), the NEPAD Presidential Infrastructure Championing Initiative (PICI), as well as the Regional Infrastructure Development Master Plans that have identified priority infrastructure development projects that are critical to promoting regional integration and industrialisation. We will seek to stimulate infrastructure investment on the basis of mutual benefit to support industrial development, job-creation, skills development, food and nutrition security and poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa. We therefore, reaffirm our support for sustainable infrastructure development in Africa.
6. We note policy actions in Europe, the US and Japan aimed at reducing tail-risks in the world economy. Some of these actions produce negative spillover effects on other economies of the world. Significant risks remain and the performance of the global economy still falls behind our expectations. As a result, uncertainty about strength and durability of the recovery and the direction of policy in some major economies remains high. In some key countries unemployment stays unusually elevated, while high levels of private and public indebtedness inhibit growth. In such circumstances, we reaffirm our strong commitment to support growth and foster financial stability. We also underscore the need for appropriate action to be taken by advanced economies in order to rebuild confidence, foster growth and secure a strong recovery.

7. Central Banks in advanced economies have responded with unconventional monetary policy actions which have increased global liquidity. While this may be consistent with domestic monetary policy mandates, major Central Banks should avoid the unintended consequences of these actions in the form of increased volatility of capital flows, currencies and commodity prices, which may have negative growth effects on other economies, in particular developing countries.
8. We welcome the core objectives of the Russian Presidency in the G20 in 2013, in particular the efforts to increased financing for investment and ensure public debt sustainability aimed at ensuring strong, sustainable, inclusive and balanced growth and job creation around the world. We will also continue to prioritise the G20 development agenda as a vital element of global economic stability and long-term sustainable growth and job creation.
9. Developing countries face challenges of infrastructure development due to insufficient long-term financing and foreign direct investment, especially investment in capital stock. This constrains global aggregate demand. BRICS cooperation towards more productive use of global financial resources can make a positive contribution to addressing this problem. In March 2012 we directed our Finance Ministers to examine the feasibility and viability of setting up a New Development Bank for mobilising resources for infrastructure and sustainable development projects in BRICS and other emerging economies and developing countries, to supplement the existing efforts of multilateral and regional financial institutions for global growth and development. Following the report from our Finance Ministers, we are satisfied that the establishment of a New Development Bank is feasible and viable. We have agreed to establish the New Development Bank. The initial contribution to the Bank should be substantial and sufficient for the Bank to be effective in financing infrastructure.

10. In June 2012, in our meeting in Los Cabos, we tasked our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to explore the construction of a financial safety net through the creation of a Contingent Reserve Arrangement (CRA) amongst BRICS countries. They have concluded that the establishment of a self-managed contingent reserve arrangement would have a positive precautionary effect, help BRICS countries forestall short-term liquidity pressures, provide mutual support and further strengthen financial stability. It would also contribute to strengthening the global financial safety net and complement existing international arrangements as an additional line of defence. We are of the view that the establishment of the CRA with an initial size of US$ 100 billion is feasible and desirable subject to internal legal frameworks and appropriate safeguards. We direct our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to continue working towards its establishment.
11. We are grateful to our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors for the work undertaken on the New Development Bank and the Contingent Reserve Arrangement and direct them to negotiate and conclude the agreements which will establish them. We will review progress made in these two initiatives at our next meeting in September 2013.
12. We welcome the conclusion between our Export-Import Banks (EXIM) and Development Banks, of both the "Multilateral Agreement on Cooperation and Co-financing for Sustainable Development" and, given the steep growth trajectory of the African continent and the significant infrastructure funding requirements directly emanating from this growth path, the “Multilateral Agreement on Infrastructure Co-Financing for Africa”.

13. We call for the reform of International Financial Institutions to make them more representative and to reflect the growing weight of BRICS and other developing countries. We remain concerned with the slow pace of the reform of the IMF. We see an urgent need to implement, as agreed, the 2010 International Monetary Fund (IMF) Governance and Quota Reform. We urge all members to take all necessary steps to achieve an agreement on the quota formula and complete the next general quota review by January 2014. The reform of the IMF should strengthen the voice and representation of the poorest members of the IMF, including Sub-Saharan Africa. All options should be explored, with an open mind, to achieve this. We support the reform and improvement of the international monetary system, with a broad-based international reserve currency system providing stability and certainty. We welcome the discussion about the role of the SDR in the existing international monetary system including the composition of SDR’s basket of currencies. We support the IMF to make its surveillance framework more integrated and even-handed. The leadership selection of IFIs should be through an open, transparent and merit-based process and truly open to candidates from the emerging market economies and developing countries.
14. We emphasise the importance of ensuring steady, adequate and predictable access to long term finance for developing countries from a variety of sources. We would like to see concerted global effort towards infrastructure financing and investment through the instrumentality of adequately resourced Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs) and Regional Development Banks (RDBs). We urge all parties to work towards an ambitious International Development Association (IDA) 17 replenishment.
15. We reaffirm our support for an open, transparent and rules-based multilateral trading system. We will continue in our efforts for the successful conclusion of the Doha Round, based on the progress made and in keeping with its mandate, while upholding the principles of transparency, inclusiveness and multilateralism. We are committed to ensure that new proposals and approaches to the Doha Round negotiations will reinforce the core principles and the developmental mandate of the Doha Round. We look forward to significant and meaningful deliverables that are balanced and address key development concerns of the poorest and most vulnerable WTO members, at the ninth Ministerial Conference of the WTO in Bali.

16. We note that the process is underway for the selection of a new WTO Director-General in 2013. We concur that the WTO requires a new leader who demonstrates a commitment to multilateralism and to enhancing the effectiveness of the WTO including through a commitment to support efforts that will lead to an expeditious conclusion of the DDA. We consider that the next Director-General of the WTO should be a representative of a developing country.
17. We reaffirm the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development's (UNCTAD) mandate as the focal point in the UN system dedicated to consider the interrelated issues of trade, investment, finance and technology from a development perspective. UNCTAD's mandate and work are unique and necessary to deal with the challenges of development and growth in the increasingly interdependent global economy. We also reaffirm the importance of strengthening UNCTAD's capacity to deliver on its programmes of consensus building, policy dialogue, research, technical cooperation and capacity building, so that it is better equipped to deliver on its development mandate.
18. We acknowledge the important role that State Owned Companies (SOCs) play in the economy and encourage our SOCs to explore ways of cooperation, exchange of information and best practices.
19. We recognise the fundamental role played by Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (SMEs) in the economies of our countries. SMEs are major creators of jobs and wealth. In this regard, we will explore opportunities for cooperating in the field of SMEs and recognise the need for promoting dialogue among the respective Ministries and Agencies in charge of the theme, particularly with a view to promoting their international exchange and cooperation and fostering innovation, research and development.

20. We reiterate our strong commitment to the United Nations (UN) as the foremost multilateral forum entrusted with bringing about hope, peace, order and sustainable development to the world. The UN enjoys universal membership and is at the centre of global governance and multilateralism. In this regard, we reaffirm the need for a comprehensive reform of the UN, including its Security Council, with a view to making it more representative, effective and efficient, so that it can be more responsive to global challenges. In this regard, China and Russia reiterate the importance they attach to the status of Brazil, India and South Africa in international affairs and support their aspiration to play a greater role in the UN.
21. We underscore our commitment to work together in the UN to continue our cooperation and strengthen multilateral approaches in international relations based on the rule of law and anchored in the Charter of the United Nations.
22. We are committed to building a harmonious world of lasting peace and common prosperity and reaffirm that the 21st century should be marked by peace, security, development, and cooperation. It is the overarching objective and strong shared desire for peace, security, development and cooperation that brought together BRICS countries.
23. We welcome the twentieth Anniversary of the World Conference on Human Rights and of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and agree to explore cooperation in the field of human rights.
24. We commend the efforts of the international community and acknowledge the central role of the African Union (AU) and its Peace and Security Council in conflict resolution in Africa. We call upon the UNSC to enhance cooperation with the African Union, and its Peace and Security Council, pursuant to UNSC resolutions in this regard. We express our deep concern with instability stretching from North Africa, in particular the Sahel, and the Gulf of Guinea. We also remain concerned about reports of deterioration in humanitarian conditions in some countries.

25. We welcome the appointment of the new Chairperson of the AU Commission as an affirmation of the leadership of women.
26. We express our deep concern with the deterioration of the security and humanitarian situation in Syria and condemn the increasing violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law as a result of continued violence. We believe that the Joint Communiqué of the Geneva Action Group provides a basis for resolution of the Syrian crisis and reaffirm our opposition to any further militarization of the conflict. A Syrian-led political process leading to a transition can be achieved only through broad national dialogue that meets the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society and respect for Syrian independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty as expressed by the Geneva Joint Communiqué and appropriate UNSC resolutions. We support the efforts of the UN-League of Arab States Joint Special Representative. In view of the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Syria, we call upon all parties to allow and facilitate immediate, safe, full and unimpeded access to humanitarian organisations to all in need of assistance. We urge all parties to ensure the safety of humanitarian workers.
27. We welcome the admission of Palestine as an Observer State to the United Nations. We are concerned at the lack of progress in the Middle East Peace Process and call on the international community to assist both Israel and Palestine to work towards a two-state solution with a contiguous and economically viable Palestinian state, existing side by side in peace with Israel, within internationally recognized borders, based on those existing on 4 June 1967, with East Jerusalem as its capital. We are deeply concerned about the construction of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, which is a violation of international law and harmful to the peace process. In recalling the primary responsibility of the UNSC in maintaining international peace and security, we note the importance that the Quartet reports regularly to the Council about its efforts, which should contribute to concrete progress.

28. We believe there is no alternative to a negotiated solution to the Iranian nuclear issue. We recognise Iran's right to peaceful uses of nuclear energy consistent with its international obligations, and support resolution of the issues involved through political and diplomatic means and dialogue, including between the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and Iran and in accordance with the provisions of the relevant UN Security Council Resolutions and consistent with Iran's obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT). We are concerned about threats of military action as well as unilateral sanctions. We note the recent talks held in Almaty and hope that all outstanding issues relating to Iran's nuclear programme will be resolved through discussions and diplomatic means.
29. Afghanistan needs time, development assistance and cooperation, preferential access to world markets, foreign investment and a clear end-state strategy to attain lasting peace and stability. We support the global community's commitment to Afghanistan, enunciated at the Bonn International Conference in December 2011, to remain engaged over the transformation decade from 2015-2024. We affirm our commitment to support Afghanistan's emergence as a peaceful, stable and democratic state, free of terrorism and extremism, and underscore the need for more effective regional and international cooperation for the stabilisation of Afghanistan, including by combating terrorism. We extend support to the efforts aimed at combating illicit traffic in opiates originating in Afghanistan within the framework of the Paris Pact.
30. We commend the efforts of the AU, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and Mali aimed at restoring sovereignty and territorial integrity of Mali. We support the civilian efforts of the Malian Government and its international community partners in realising the transitional programme leading up to the presidential and legislative elections. We emphasise the importance of political inclusiveness and economic and social development in order for Mali to achieve sustainable peace and stability. We express concern about the reports of the deterioration in humanitarian conditions in Mali and call upon the international community to continue to cooperate with Mali and its neighbouring countries in order to ensure humanitarian assistance to civilian population affected by the armed conflict.

31. We are gravely concerned with the deterioration in the current situation in the Central African Republic (CAR) and deplore the loss of life. We strongly condemn the abuses and acts of violence against the civilian population and urge all parties to the conflict to immediately cease hostilities and return to negotiations. We call upon all parties to allow safe and unhindered humanitarian access. We are ready to work with the international community to assist in this endeavour and facilitate progress to a peaceful resolution of the conflict. Brazil, Russia and China express their sympathy to the South African and Indian governments for the casualties that their citizens suffered in the CAR.
32. We are gravely concerned by the ongoing instability in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). We welcome the signing in Addis Ababa on 24 February 2013 of the Peace, Security and Cooperation Framework for the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Region. We support its independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty. We support the efforts of the UN, AU and sub-regional organisations to bring about peace, security and stability in the country.
33. We reiterate our strong condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and stress that there can be no justification, whatsoever, for any acts of terrorism. We believe that the UN has a central role in coordinating international action against terrorism within the framework of the UN Charter and in accordance with principles and norms of international law. In this context, we support the implementation of the UN General Assembly Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and are determined to strengthen cooperation in countering this global threat. We also reiterate our call for concluding negotiations as soon as possible in the UN General Assembly on the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism and its adoption by all Member States and agreed to work together towards this objective.

34. We recognize the critical positive role the Internet plays globally in promoting economic, social and cultural development. We believe it's important to contribute to and participate in a peaceful, secure, and open cyberspace and we emphasise that security in the use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs) through universally accepted norms, standards and practices is of paramount importance.
35. We congratulate Brazil on hosting the UN Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) in June 2012 and welcome the outcome as reflected in "The Future we Want", in particular, the reaffirmation of the Rio Principles and political commitment made towards sustainable development and poverty eradication while creating opportunities for BRICS partners to engage and cooperate in the development of the future Sustainable Development Goals.
36. We congratulate India on the outcome of the 11th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Conference on Biological Diversity (CBD COP11) and the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety.
37. While acknowledging that climate change is one of the greatest challenges and threats towards achieving sustainable development, we call on all parties to build on the decisions adopted in COP18/CMP8 in Doha, with a view to reaching a successful conclusion by 2015, of negotiations on the development of a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all Parties, guided by its principles and provisions.

38. We believe that the internationally agreed development goals including the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) address the needs of developing countries, many of which continue to face developmental challenges, including widespread poverty and inequality. Low Income Countries (LICs) continue to face challenges that threaten the impressive growth performance of recent years. Volatility in food and other commodity prices have made food security an issue as well as constraining their sources of revenue. Progress in rebuilding macro-economic buffers has been relatively slow, partly due to measures adopted to mitigate the social impact of exogenous shocks. Many LICs are currently in a weaker position to deal with exogenous shocks given the more limited fiscal buffers and the constrained aid envelopes, which will affect their ability to sustain progress towards achieving the MDGs. We reiterate that individual countries, especially in Africa and other developing countries of the South, cannot achieve the MDGs on their own and therefore the centrality of Goal 8 on Global Partnerships for Development to achieve the MDGs should remain at the core of the global development discourse for the UN System. Furthermore, this requires the honouring of all commitments made in the outcome documents of previous major international conferences.
39. We reiterate our commitment to work together for accelerated progress in attaining the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by the target date of 2015, and we call upon other members of the international community to work towards the same objective. In this regard, we stress that the development agenda beyond 2015 should build on the MDG framework, keeping the focus on poverty eradication and human development, while addressing emerging challenges of development taking into consideration individual national circumstances of developing countries. In this regard the critical issue of the mobilization of means of implementation in assisting developing countries needs to be an overarching goal. It is important to ensure that any discussion on the UN development agenda, including the “Post 2015 Development Agenda” is an inclusive and transparent inter-Governmental process under a UN-wide process which is universal and broad based.

40. We welcome the establishment of the Open Working Group on the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), in line with the Rio+20 Outcome Document which reaffirmed the Rio Principles of Sustainable Development as the basis for addressing new and emerging challenges. We are fully committed to a coordinated inter-governmental process for the elaboration of the UN development agenda.
41. We note the following meetings held in the implementation of the Delhi Action Plan:
 - Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs on the margins of UNGA.
 - Meeting of National Security Advisors in New Delhi.
 - Meetings of Finance Ministers, and Central Bank Governors in Washington DC and Tokyo.
 - Meeting of Trade Ministers in Puerto Vallarta.
 - Meetings of Health Ministers in New Delhi and Geneva.
42. We welcome the establishment of the BRICS Think Tanks Council and the BRICS Business Council and take note of the following meetings which were held in preparation for this Summit:
 - Fifth Academic Forum
 - Fourth Business Forum
 - Third Financial Forum
43. We welcome the outcomes of the meeting of the BRICS Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors and endorse the Joint Communique of the Third Meeting of the BRICS Trade Ministers held in preparation for the Summit.

44. We are committed to forging a stronger partnership for common development. To this end, we adopt the eThekweni Action Plan.
45. We agree that the next summit cycles will, in principle, follow the sequence of Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa.
46. Brazil, Russia, India and China extend their warm appreciation to the Government and people of South Africa for hosting the Fifth BRICS Summit in Durban.
47. Russia, India, China and South Africa convey their appreciation to Brazil for its offer to host the first Summit of the second cycle of BRICS Summits, i.e. the Sixth BRICS Summit in 2014 and convey their full support thereto.

eThekweni Action Plan:

1. Meeting of BRICS Ministers of Foreign Affairs on the margins of UNGA.
2. Meeting of BRICS National Security Advisors.
3. Mid-term meeting of Sherpas and Sous-Sherpas.
4. Meetings of Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in the margins of G20 meetings, WB/IMF meetings, as well as stand-alone meetings, as required.
5. Meetings of BRICS Trade Ministers on the margins of multilateral events, or stand-alone meetings, as required.
6. Meeting of BRICS Ministers of Agriculture and Agrarian Development, preceded by a preparatory meeting of experts on agro-products and food security issues and the Meeting of Agriculture Expert Working Group.
7. Meeting of BRICS Health Ministers and preparatory meetings.
8. Meeting of BRICS Officials responsible for population on the margins of relevant multilateral events.

9. Meeting of BRICS Ministers of Science and Technology and meeting of BRICS Senior Officials on Science and Technology.
10. Meeting of BRICS Cooperatives.
11. Meetings of financial and fiscal authorities in the margins of WB/IMF meetings as well as stand-alone meetings, as required.
12. Meetings of the BRICS Contact Group on Economic and Trade Issues (CGETI).
13. Meeting of the BRICS Friendship Cities and Local Governments Cooperation Forum.
14. Meeting of the BRICS Urbanisation Forum.
15. Meeting of BRICS Competition Authorities in 2013 in New Delhi.
16. 5th Meeting of BRICS Heads of National Statistical Institutions.
17. Consultations amongst BRICS Permanent Missions and/or Embassies, as appropriate, in New York, Vienna, Rome, Paris, Washington, Nairobi and Geneva, where appropriate.
18. Consultative meeting of BRICS Senior Officials in the margins of relevant sustainable development, environment and climate related international fora, where appropriate.

New areas of cooperation to be explored

- BRICS Public Diplomacy Forum.
- BRICS Anti-Corruption Cooperation.
- BRICS State Owned Companies / State Owned Enterprises.
- National Agencies Responsible for Drug Control.
- BRICS virtual secretariat.
- BRICS Youth Policy Dialogue.

- Tourism.
- Energy.
- Sports and Mega Sporting Events.

087. Onboard media interaction with Prime Minister on March 28, 2013 on return from BRICS Summit.

March 28, 2013.

I have just concluded a very satisfying visit to South Africa for the fifth BRICS Summit.

As you would have seen from the BRICS Declaration, a number of important steps have been taken. I am particularly glad that some projects, which were either conceived at the New Delhi Summit of BRICS in March last year, or were piloted by India during its just-concluded chairmanship of BRICS, have registered important progress.

These include the agreement on Contingent Reserve Pooling arrangements, the announcement on the setting up of a BRICS Development Bank and the setting up of the BRICS Business Council and the BRICS Consortium of Think Tanks.

Apart from pursuing such cooperation that is for our mutual benefit, the BRICS Forum also provides its leaders a platform on which to consult and coordinate policy positions on issues of major international significance. I was glad to see once again that there are many areas in which BRICS countries have shared concerns and perspectives.

I also took the opportunity of my visit to have bilateral meetings with my counterparts. In particular, I had a meeting yesterday with the new President of the People's Republic of China. It was our first meeting and both of us agreed that we would continue to maintain the strong tradition of frequent high-level exchanges between our two countries to further strengthen our relationship. We also agreed that high level visits will be exchanged this year between India and China. I look forward to the opportunity of an early meeting with the new Prime Minister of China as well.

I also held a very productive meeting with President Putin, in which we reviewed progress in our bilateral relationship and major regional and international issues.

Q: I understand in Durban that for the first time you met the new Chinese President. So how you assess your relationship with the new Chinese leadership whereas you had an excellent rapport with his predecessor?

Answer: Well even before the formal meeting, last evening, I had a very productive exchange of views with the new President of China on the sidelines of the Summit. We both agreed that the type of intimate exchanges that used to take place when President Hu Jintao and Premier Wen Jia Bao were holding their respective positions, and both of us agreed that we should aim to maintain similar relationship under the new leadership of China.

Q: We are very excited about your first meeting with the new leadership of Chinese Republic. Can you share with us views exchanged specifically about water issue and what exactly is happening in Brahmaputra?

Answer: We reviewed the whole gamut of our bilateral relationship and also discussed the opportunities that exist in exchanging views and coordinating our positions in various regional and international foras. I also took the opportunity to raise the issue of trans-border river systems and I requested the Chinese Government to provide a joint mechanism to enable us to assess the type of construction activity that is going on in the Tibetan Autonomous Region. The President of China assured me that they were quite conscious of their responsibilities and the interest of the lower riparian countries. As regards the specific mechanism that I had suggested, he said that they would have it further looked into. But as of now, our assessment is that whatever activity are taking place on the Brahmaputra region in Tibet, they are essentially the run-of-the-river projects and therefore there is no cause for worry on our part.

Q: Continuing with the China question, the new President soon after he took over laid down five policy proposals in his dealing with India. Does he represent continuity? Do you see change in it? What are your own proposals in handling the relationship now?

Answer: This was my first meeting and both of us, I think, were keen to get acquainted. While we reviewed the whole gamut of our relationship, we did not go in depth into specific solutions for specific problems. But, I got a distinct impression that the new Chinese leadership is as serious as the former Chinese leadership to promote good neighbourly relations and to find practical, pragmatic solutions to outstanding issues between our two countries.

Q: While we have been talking about multilateralism, all engagements seem to be essentially engagements with China by rest of the world (one sided engagement by world with China). How does China benefit from any economic deal? Are there any issues of joint multilateral collaboration? What are your views about it?

Answer: I think for us BRICS is a very important forum. It represents nearly 27% of the global GDP, about 40% of the world population and as such there is a growing complementarity. Of course this relationship between India and China has elements of coordination, cooperation and competition. But for us it is very useful to have a forum like BRICS whereby we can exchange views not only on events which have implications for the management of our bilateral relationship, but also how the global system affects our interests and our concerns. So I find this as a very useful forum, I certainly value this opportunity annually to review the strength of the global economy, the events that are taking place in various regions of the world and events which have obviously implications for our own growth and prosperity.

Q: Sir, you have staked considerable political capital on the nuclear deal but for the past two-three years your senior foreign policy managers have been trying to sort out the differences in nuclear liability law with other countries with which you have signed deals for nuclear plants. When do you expect all this to be sorted out?

Answer: We have been exchanging notes and papers. We have just received a note from the Russian side. I am confident that we will be able to find practical, pragmatic solutions to various issues that have arisen.

Q: In your five point suggestions yesterday in the Plenary Session of BRICS, the fifth point was regarding the IMF and UN Security Council reforms. What are your expectations from the reforms?

Answer: I think as regards the Security Council, we feel, I think, there is a need to revisit Security Council membership taking into account the contemporary realities and countries like India should certainly find a place in the expanded Security Council. With regard to the IMF, the developing countries would certainly like to have a greater say in the decision making processes, in quotas and it is somewhat disappointing that the reform agenda which got a stimulus soon after the 2008 global economic crisis, there seems to be a slowdown in that areas. Therefore that is a matter of concern to us.

088. Prime Minister's Statement to the Media after the Plenary Session of the 5th BRICS Summit.

Durban, March 27, 2013.

Excellencies,

Distinguished Members of the Media,

I would like to thank His Excellency President Jacob Zuma and the people of South Africa for the warm hospitality and for the excellent arrangements made for Fifth BRICS Summit.

I also take this opportunity to thank the local government and the people of Durban for their welcome. India has a special affinity for this city as it was Durban that first welcomed the Father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi, when he arrived in South Africa nearly 120 years ago in May 1893.

The BRICS platform has evolved tremendously since the First Summit at Yekaterinburg in 2009. Our agenda now encompasses diverse areas, including global economic developments, peace and security, reforms of political and economic institutions of global governance, international trade, sustainable development and food and energy security. We have just concluded very fruitful discussions on many of these issues.

As Chair of BRICS during the last year, India's focus was on consolidating intra-BRICS cooperation, as well as highlighting the capacity of BRICS to contribute meaningfully in addressing global challenges. I am happy that with the support of our BRICS partners, we were able to implement the ambitious Action Plan adopted at the New Delhi Summit in 2012.

It gives me great satisfaction to note that one of the ideas that we first discussed at New Delhi, that of instituting a mechanism to recycle surplus savings into infrastructure investments in developing countries, has been given a concrete shape during the Durban Summit. Our Finance Ministers will now work to develop the details of this project.

Our discussions today demonstrated the similarity of our perspectives on many global issues, such as the situation in West Asia and efforts to rekindle global economic growth. A number of substantial outcomes, such as the launch of the BRICS Business Council and the Consortium of Think Tanks, as well as the enabling agreements between our Development Banks to enhance financing of projects in Africa and for sustainable development, signify the promise of intra-BRICS cooperation. This being the first BRICS Summit on African soil, it is only appropriate that it includes a special BRICS – Africa event and I look forward keenly to our interaction with African leaders later today. I once again thank President Zuma for hosting this Summit, and for admirably guiding it towards a very successful outcome. I also extend my best wishes to him as he takes over the Chairmanship of BRICS.

Thank you

089. BRICS Media Note on the informal meeting of BRICS Leaders ahead of the G20 Summit in St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, September 5, 2013.

BRICS Leaders met on 5 September 2013, ahead of the formal opening of the G20 Summit in St Petersburg.

The Leaders noted the continued slow pace of the recovery, high unemployment in some countries, and on-going challenges and vulnerabilities in the global economy, particularly in advanced economies. They believe that major economies, including G20, could do more to boost global demand and market confidence.

In light of the increase in financial market and capital flow volatility during recent months, the BRICS Leaders reiterated their concerns they had expressed in the Durban Summit in March, regarding the unintended negative spill over of unconventional monetary policies of certain developed economies. They emphasized that the eventual normalization of monetary policies needs to be effectively and carefully calibrated and clearly communicated.

BRICS Leaders also expressed their concern with the stalling of the International Monetary Fund reform process. They recalled the urgent need to implement the 2010 IMF Quota and Governance Reform, as well as to complete the next general quota review by January 2014 as agreed at the G20 Seoul Summit in order ensure the Fund's credibility, legitimacy and effectiveness.

The Leaders look forward to the 9th World Trade Organisation's Ministerial conference to be held in December 2013, and expect that it will be a stepping stone to the successful and balanced conclusion of the Doha Development Round.

The Leaders of Brazil, India, China and South Africa congratulated Russia for the successful Presidency of the G20 in 2013 and appreciated the emphasis by the Russian Presidency on the development agenda.

The Leaders welcomed the good progress made towards the establishment of the BRICS-led New Development Bank (NDB) and the Contingent Reserve Arrangement (CRA).

On the NDB, progress has been made in negotiating its capital structure, membership, shareholding and governance. The Bank will have an initial subscribed capital of US$ 50 billion from the BRICS countries.

On the CRA, consensus has been achieved on many key aspects and operational details regarding its establishment. As agreed in Durban, the CRA will have an initial size of US$100 billion. Country's individual commitments to the CRA will be as follows: China – US$ 41 billion; Brazil, India, and Russia – US$ 18 billion each; and South Africa – US$ 5 billion.

In light of the progress achieved both in the negotiations of the NDB and CRA the BRICS leaders expect tangible results by the time of the next Summit.

The Leaders welcomed the first meeting of the BRICS Business Council held recently in Johannesburg, South Africa, and encouraged the business community to increase contacts and cooperation.

The Leaders noted that the recent developments in the world economy and emphasised the necessity for intra-BRICS economic cooperation.

090. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary in St. Petersburg on BRICS Informal Meeting on the Sidelines of G20 Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 6, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here for this briefing.

We have here with us Mrs. Sujatha Singh who is the Foreign Secretary of India to brief us on the BRICS meeting today because that was the event that has just been completed. So, we will focus on the meeting of the BRICS on the sidelines of the G20 Summit. I will request Mrs. Singh to make a few opening remarks. Followed by that she is willing to respond to any questions that you may have, if that is alright.

On Foreign Secretary's right is Mr. Dinesh Bhatia, Joint Secretary who handles Multilateral Economic Relations in the Ministry of External Affairs in India. To his right is Mr. Pankaj Pachauri, Communications Advisor to the Prime Minister of India.

With those opening remarks I would request the Foreign Secretary to speak to you for a little while.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Thank you, Akbar. Good evening everybody. I hope you are enjoying the bright sunshine in this beautiful city!

The BRICS leaders had their informal meeting this afternoon. Actually St. Petersburg has a very special significance for BRICS because the journey of BRICS started in 2006 from one such meeting at the margins of the G8-O5 outreach meeting when President Putin proposed that BRIC countries should meet as a group. It was BRIC at that time, now it is BRICS. Since then there have been several meetings and it has become an established tradition. Prime Minister paid tribute to President Putin for this visionary initiative. He made it a point to refer to it in his remarks. These meetings are basically meant to facilitate closer consultations among BRICS countries on the G20 agenda.

You would have all seen the media note that has been distributed. So, basically those were the issues that were discussed - the Development Bank, the Contingent Reserve Arrangement and the other areas on which the media statement has covered some ground. I will give you a little feedback on what the Prime Minister covered in his statement.

I was actually struck by the confidence that Prime Minister expressed that the BRICS countries would in the long run remain important drivers of the global economy and will carry significant weight in global affairs. He said that his confidence stemmed not only from the potential of the individual countries in BRICS but also from the progress that we have made on various BRICS initiatives. Of course one of these BRICS initiatives is the new Development Bank which was first mooted during the New Delhi Summit. And now there seems to be agreement on key issues. There are a few remaining issues and we hope these will be resolved soon, before the next BRICS Summit at any rate.

As you have seen from the media statement, we have agreed to subscribe 50 billion US dollars as capital for the Bank. India feels that the authorized capital could be set at a higher value. That is something to be discussed. We welcomed the progress on the Contingent Reserve pooling arrangement, especially now amidst the ongoing global currency volatility.

There was some concern expressed about the external effects of monetary policies, especially on the growth and macroeconomic stability of developing economies. Now, G20 has a vision of policy coordination. So, this achieves a special importance in this connection.

Prime Minister emphasized that we needed to pay attention to promoting growth and creating jobs and that the development agenda must be a core element of our deliberations.

That was by and large the points that he dwelt on. The other BRICS leaders made similar statements on the issues that were between them. It was a good meeting.

I will be happy to take questions.

Q: Was Syria discussed during these discussions?...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: Syria was not on the agenda.

Q: So, it was not discussed at all?

Foreign Secretary: No.

Q: Madam, in the statement prior to the departure for St. Petersburg, the Prime Minister had expressed hope that the BRICS countries would be able to forge a consensus in terms of the tapering of the unconventional monetary policies overseas. And the Reuters news agency has quoted very senior officials from both China and South Africa that their statements reflect that they are not in sync with India's concern over this. So, would it be fair to say that this initiative - which both the PM as well as the Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs on the way had emphasized - was not a success at BRICS?

Foreign Secretary: About the new Development Bank?

Q: No, about the developing economies to take a coordinated effort in telling developed countries that you should be careful, and the tapering of the unconventional monetary policies should be done in a calibrated and predictable manner. Deputy Finance Minister of China and the Finance Minister of South Africa have independently talked to news agencies saying that this is not a concern, not in so many words but ...

Q: In fact even Russia has said that. Basically they have said that these are individual problems because of which...(Inaudible)... specific countries, these are not on common agenda. This is quite disturbing...(Inaudible)...Even on currency swap they have said that it is going to happen whenever it happens...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: If you look at the press note, the press note clearly reflects what the collective position is. "In the light of the increase in financial market and capital flow volatility during recent months, the BRICS leaders reiterated the concerns they had expressed in the Durban Summit". And that was the position. That was pretty much discussed in the informal meeting. So, I am a little surprised that this ...

Q: Madam, this statement is diplomatese.

Foreign Secretary: It is the common position.

Q: But the thing is they have categorically said on record that it is basically India's problem. That is what they said.

Foreign Secretary: I can only tell you what I heard. And I heard all the leaders pretty much expressing concern about this issue, about the spillovers of monetary policies.

Q: Specific numbers have been mentioned on the currency reserve arrangement.

Foreign Secretary: Yes.

Q: I am very keen to know about two things. One is, essentially was this reaffirmation of these numbers today or were these numbers firmed up a bit more today? Also, the statement says, 'to expect tangible results by the time of the next summit'. So, is it fair to expect let us say by this time next year the CRA will actually be in place? Can we expect that? I would also like to see if on the NDB also you can put a timeframe or a timeline on it.

Foreign Secretary: I do not think you can put a timeline on these things. This depends on several issues that have not yet been resolved. That also is clear in the media statement that there are some aspects that still need to be finalized. These figures as given in the statement - China, US, 41 billion dollars, etc. - that is pucca. It is the other areas ...

Q: Those numbers were decided earlier, not today.

Foreign Secretary: They were decided earlier.

Q: On this occasion is there any consensus where the Bank would be located?

Foreign Secretary: Not yet decided.

Q: Madam, in fact that same report mentioned that the Deputy Finance Minister of China and a senior person from Russia have actually said that in India's case they need to tackle the external deficit by devaluing the currency and raising interest rates. Your comments on that.

Foreign Secretary: I do not want to comment on somebody else's comments on my economy. On the Indian economy I would rather go by our own comments.

Q: Was there any discussion on the...(Inaudible)...?

Foreign Secretary: There was certainly no discussion on the Indian economy.

Q: Not on Indian economy but did Russia and China raise the issue of what other emerging market economies should be doing?

Foreign Secretary: No. They did not.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: Just let me repeat. I can only tell you what I heard. There was no discussion on these issues. There was a general concern raised about the spillover effects of monetary policies and the withdrawal of quantitative easing.

Q: What are we really taking back? We came here expressing a lot of hope and raising a whole lot of substantial points on how to deal with the so-called global economic crisis. Even Mr. Mayaram told us onboard the aircraft that this is all linked to global developments and we need to thrash this out. So, what are we really taking back with us?

Foreign Secretary: Are you talking about the BRICS or the G20?

Q: About our currency problem, about our economic mess. Are we taking back anything specific, concrete steps, any assurances?

Foreign Secretary: I suggest that you wait till tomorrow morning when the Deputy Chairman will brief you. The G20 has just started. It is going to continue tomorrow.

Q: There is a tweet on PMO saying that PM expressed concerns over the developments in West Asia. In that light, was Syria actually discussed or it was not discussed at all?

Foreign Secretary: PM did not say anything on Syria. There was no discussion on Syria. It was just mentioned in passing by one of the delegations who talked about it in the context of the global economic situation.

Q: You said it was discussed on the agenda...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: It was not discussed, it was on the agenda, it was raised in passing by one of the delegations. It was not discussed. He did not say anything on Syria. Syria was not discussed.

Q: Madam, this agreed position of the BRICS countries, what would be the format? How would this be placed in the G20? Will it be raised by the individual countries or as BRICS group they will articulate their views in the G20? What would be the format?

Foreign Secretary: BRICS meets informally on the margins of the G20. So, once they go into the G20, they would express their views as members of the G20.

Q: Madam, this is a question on the Indian contribution that has been mentioned in the statement as far as the currency reserve arrangement is concerned – 18 billion dollars. The statement says that tangible results would be had by the next BRICS summit. The question that comes is, is there a commitment in terms of a timeline because this 18 billion dollars will have a clear impact on our currency and, therefore, this would be read probably a little negatively back home?

Foreign Secretary: There is no timeline.

Q: Are BRICS nations going to press for including their views on a calibrated withdrawal from monetary stimulus in the communiqué which will be released tomorrow?

Foreign Secretary: I think we need to be clear that the BRICS meeting is an informal meeting on the sidelines of the G20. Once the G20 starts, then it is the G20 process that takes over. So, let us wait and see how the various members of the G20 formulate their positions and arrive at a common position.

Q: One small supplementary, Madam. Since you said that you cannot put a timeline and there are aspects that need to be firmed up, is it possible to perhaps indicate a couple of these factors that might be of concern in their working out of details, at least in terms of broad parameters?

Foreign Secretary: I do not want to go into further details beyond this. I suggest you ask the Deputy Chairman when he speaks to you in his media briefing tomorrow.

Q: What are your expectations from the G20 Summit which is going to start today? Are you thoroughly satisfied with the informal discussion which BRICS held?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is important to understand that all these mechanisms are mechanisms to exchange views on various issues whether they have been ongoing for some time and the various other issues that engage the countries that take part. So, it is a way of talking directly to each other, finding out how they approach the problems, how they approach the issues. And as such it is an important part of our policy of reaching out and engaging with key economic and political partners. So, to that extent, yes, I am happy with the manner in which things have gone in BRICS. We had a good meeting. Even with the G20 these are useful mechanisms, they are useful mechanisms to bring the leaders of the most important economies in the world together and to make sure that each of them knows what the other feels about the current state of the economy and the steps that need to be taken in this regard.

Q: I just wanted to know if BRICS summit is giving a strong consensus for the unintended spillover effects. Do you hope to see that in the G20 because that is what we were told that India will be pushing for? How hopeful are you that you will be able to achieve that?

Foreign Secretary: I do not want to prejudge the situation. Let us wait for the G20 to finish. Let us wait for the G20 to come to its conclusions and then you have people who are actually sitting on those meetings.

You have Arvind Mayaram, you have the Deputy Chairman, you can speak to them about that. I do not want to prejudge the issue.

Q: The position was not like this as was discussed in the BRICS today or in the Note: the promises made in 2010 are now sought to be redeemed before the next Summit. Things like IMF quota reforms or financial restructuring etc should be redeemed now in the Summit. How firm is the position of the Government of India or of other BRICS countries on this question. (free translation from Hindi text)

Foreign Secretary: The Prime Minister has said in his speech that these structural reforms should be undertaken early. He described the delay as unfortunate. All the BRICS countries have also expressed their disappointment. Our position is quite firm. It is too indicated in the media note. (free translation from Hindi text)

Q: Madam, you said...(Inaudible)...some aspects ...(Inaudible)... Could you just throw light on one or two aspects that have ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: I wish I could but the point is that it is Arvind Mayaram who is heading the group that looks after these issues. So, he would brief on that.

Unless there is something you want to add, Dinesh!

Joint Secretary (MER)(Shri Dinesh Bhatia): There are so many issues, it is difficult to pinpoint exactly one issue or two issues. It is not every day that you set up a bank of this order. So, there is a humungous amount of issues.

Q: Anything on the currency arrangement?

Joint Secretary (MER): For currency arrangement as well as for the Development Bank, the same expert group is working on which is led by Secretary DEA, as Foreign Secretary mentioned. And they are in discussion; they have had extremely good meetings in the past. The last meeting was held in Delhi in the beginning of August and they have been able to thrash out the capital of the Bank as well as the total amount of the CRA. But further details as to how to implement, how to formalize both the things, the discussions are yet to take place.

Q: So, we have no idea on the timeline?

Foreign Secretary: No, there are no timelines.

Q: What was discussed today because all these issues were discussed earlier also? We know...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: We did not know about the amount, the 50 billion for the New Development Bank.

Q: Of the two ideas which have progressed, one is the Bank and the other one is currency swap arrangement. I was at the Durban BRICS Summit and I had the distinct impression that of the two, the currency swap is on a faster track. Is that true? There seems to be greater urgency on that.

Foreign Secretary: I cannot tell you this because this is something that Arvind Mayaram is dealing with. I would have been very happy to have had him sitting next to me at this media briefing but he is in there at the G20. So, you will get the details from them. They are the ones who are in the nuts and bolts of this.

Q: The sense I have is that the currency swap has far less disagreements than the idea of Bank which has a lot of other micro details to be tied up.

Foreign Secretary: You probably are right but I do not want to confirm or deny because I am not the person who should be doing that. I would rather leave it to the people who are actually dealing with this issue. So, I seek your indulgence on that.

Q: Can I ask you a question on Syria? Today Putin has given an interview to Channel-1 in Russia where he very clearly says and very aggressively says that there is no concrete evidence as far as he is concerned in regard to chemical weapons having been used by the Syrian Government. And he says it seems absolutely absurd that a regular armed force currently on the offensive and which is in control of the situation in many areas should be using such weapons and attracting use of force. He called it simply absurd and illogical. Does India kind of broadly agree with this view?

Foreign Secretary: India has her own view. You would have seen the media statement that was released just two days back. That pretty much sums of our view on that. President Putin has his views, we have our views.

Q: Madam, This has not been mentioned in these words. Do you accept that the position on Syria of the BRICS is against the American position? (free translation from Hindi text)

Foreign Secretary: When Syria was not discussed, how can I say what was the dominant position.

Q: So far, as of yesterday or today it seemed that barring Russia...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: I would not really like to generalize on this. I think that there are nuances in each country's position. You cannot just put it all together and say that it is overwhelmingly against one country's position or another's.

Q: Does India still stand by its position that you would like to go through the UN Security Council for whatever action needs to be taken against Syria?

Foreign Secretary: The UN Security Council has to authorize collective action, is not it?

Q: But President Obama has a different view. Putin says that...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: President Putin says what he says, which is President Putin's prerogative. We say what we say, which is our prerogative.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event..... etc.

Thank you

091. Joint Press Statement on the meeting of BRICS Foreign Ministers on the margins of the 68th session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, September 26, 2013.

The BRICS Foreign Ministers met on 26 September 2013 on the margins of the 68th session of the United Nations General Assembly.

The Ministers congratulated the South African Presidency and appreciated the good pace of implementation of the eThekweni Action Plan.

The Ministers exchanged their points of view on the following issues of the United Nations agenda.

SYRIA

The Ministers expressed deep concern about the ongoing violence and the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Syria. They called upon all parties to commit immediately to a complete cease-fire, to halt violence and to end all violations of human rights and humanitarian law.

Taking note of the Report of the United Nations Secretary-General, the Ministers strongly condemned the use of such weapons by anyone in any circumstances.

The Ministers expressed satisfaction with recent important developments that bring renewed hope for a peaceful resolution to the Syrian conflict. They welcomed the framework agreement for the elimination of Syrian chemical weapons reached by Russia and the United States. They further welcomed, in particular, the decision of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to accede to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the commitment of the Syrian authorities to provisionally apply the Convention prior to its entry into force and the delivery of the initial roster. They recognised the key responsibility of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) in this regard and look forward to the decisions of the OPCW and the Security Council in support to the Framework Agreement.

The Ministers reiterated that there is no military solution to the conflict and that it is time for diplomacy.

They stressed that the elimination of chemical weapons and the political process aimed at resolving the Syrian conflict should be pursued in parallel. They also reiterated their support for the convening of an international conference on the Syrian situation as early as possible. They stressed that only an inclusive political process, led by the Syrians, as recommended in the Action Group on Syria Communiqué issued in 2012 could lead to peace, to the effective protection of civilians and to the realization of the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian society for freedom and prosperity. They expressed their full support to the efforts of the UN-Arab League Representative Lakhdar Brahimi in helping finding a political solution to the crisis.

MIDDLE-EAST PEACE PROCESS

The Ministers welcomed the announcement of the resumption of negotiations between Palestinians and Israelis as an encouraging development. They reaffirmed that the resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. They expressed their expectation that this renewed effort will lead to a two-state solution with a contiguous and economically viable Palestinian state, existing side by side in peace with Israel, within internationally recognized borders, based on those existing on 4 June 1967, with East Jerusalem as its capital. In recalling the primary responsibility of the UNSC in maintaining international peace and security, they noted the importance that the Quartet reports regularly to the Council about its efforts, which should contribute to concrete progress. They expressed concern about the construction of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, which constitutes a violation of international law and is harmful to the peace process.

CYBER SECURITY

The Ministers expressed their concern about the reported practices of unauthorized interception of communications and data from citizens, businesses and members of governments, compromising national sovereignty and individual rights. They reiterated that it is important to contribute to and participate in a peaceful, secure, and open cyberspace and emphasized that security in the use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs) through universally accepted norms, standards and practices is of paramount importance.

The Ministers thanked Brazil for the briefing on the plans and preparations for the VI BRICS Summit to be held in 2014.

093. Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) Declaration.

15-17 November, 2013.

Colombo Declaration on Sustainable, Inclusive and Equitable Development

1. We, the Commonwealth Heads of Government, recognise that accelerating growth has become central to policy efforts globally. However, we note that rising inequality at both international and national levels has implications for poverty reduction and future growth potentials of member states. Countries grappling with natural and man-made disasters and other pressing global challenges are the worst affected. This situation has led to the economic marginalisation of societies, within and among countries. Therefore, we agree that achieving growth with equity and inclusivity must be one of the main policy priorities for the Commonwealth, in keeping with its Charter adopted in December 2012.
2. We express our deep concern about the adverse impacts of the world financial and economic crises on development prospects, particularly in developing states. We emphasise the need to act decisively to tackle the challenges confronting the global economy to ensure balanced, sustainable, inclusive and equitable global growth with full and productive employment. We affirm the importance of reforms of the international trade, monetary and financial institutions in order to ensure fair representation for developing countries.
3. We recognise that improving access to productive employment is a critical element to achieve equitable growth, and requires enhancing employability of the workforce, and creating productive employment opportunities. Improvements in employability are largely linked to access to quality education, skills development, better health care, and equitable access to resources. We agree to take concerted efforts to create productive employment with equitable access to all, to achieve inclusive growth.
4. We reaffirm the right to development for all individuals, and commit ourselves to eliminate disparities and focus on making growth more inclusive for all, including for vulnerable groups, women, youth, and the differently abled.

5. We recognise the importance of meaningful social protection for all, in achieving inclusive development, and also as an important tool in addressing poverty, inequality, vulnerability and social exclusion. Given the varying degrees of vulnerability to crises, particularly among the developing states, we underline the need for having proactive national initiatives on social protection, based on relevant international agreements.
6. Member states of the Commonwealth are home to a diverse array of natural resources, which have been preserved and sustainably utilised over centuries for their benefit. We recognise the sovereign right of nations to manage their own natural resource base, according to national needs and priorities, in a sustainable manner, enabling their further growth and development.
7. We note the findings of the 2013 UN Millennium Development Goals Progress Report, which states that some of the MDGs have already been met and that more targets are within reach by the 2015 target date. However, we are concerned that certain targets remain off-track both globally and within the Commonwealth. We therefore call for an urgent implementation of all commitments undertaken, individually and collectively, in particular on Goal 8, related to global partnerships. We reaffirm our determination to collectively call for a strong and effective partnership for development, while emphasizing that the successful achievement of the MDGs by 2015 should remain a global priority.
8. We therefore pledge to engage collectively and help shape the Post-2015 Development Agenda, by constituting an open-ended High-Level Working Group of Heads to identify through a Commonwealth Statement on the Post-2015 Development Agenda, our shared Commonwealth perspectives and recommendations. We will advance these shared perspectives through individual member governments in the intergovernmental consultations at the 69th Session of the UN General Assembly.

9. We welcome the Report of the High Level Panel of the Eminent Persons Group on the Post-2015 Development Agenda, the Report of the UN Secretary-General entitled A Life of Dignity for All – Accelerating progress towards the Millennium Development Goals and Advancing the UN Development Agenda beyond 2015, United Nations Development Group consultations, the United Nations Global Compact and the Sustainable Development Solutions Network. We note their contents as inputs into the intergovernmental process on the Post-2015 Agenda.
10. As we seek to further strengthen the global partnership, we are aware of the wealth of knowledge, expertise and experience available within the Commonwealth which remains underutilised. We therefore commit to actively explore the unrealised potential for collaboration and partnerships within the Commonwealth. We also recognise it as a useful step to facilitate the efforts of individual member states towards equitable distribution of benefits and to achieve better living standards and prosperity for all.
11. In the context of a rapidly-changing global environment, achieving growth with equity and promoting sustainable development will require intensified efforts at both the national and international levels. At national level, this could be achieved through strengthened public administration and institutions and reinforcing accountability; developing the necessary institutional capacity, knowledge and skill levels, particularly among young people; promoting the smoother functioning and increasing openness of markets; and strengthening the private sector and expanding infrastructure to foster long-term growth, including by making full use of public-private partnerships (PPPs) as an investment tool to achieve sustainable development. At the international level, we acknowledge the importance of strengthened financial, technical and institutional efforts to support national efforts in addressing vulnerability and building resilience and the need for new international approaches that respond to the rapidly changing global environment in which sustainable development policies are being pursued. We recognise the special role the Commonwealth can play in exchanging experiences and lessons learned.

12. In furthering partnership building, we also recognise the useful contribution that tools such as 'Commonwealth Connects' can bring to the member states, and encourage its full use to enhance connectivity among the people of the Commonwealth.
13. We express our commitment to work towards developing supportive global policies to address poverty, food security, climate change mitigation and adaptation, inequalities in trade, predictable and adequate finances, investments, knowledge and technology transfers, as well as in increasing voices in the global economic, trade and financial order to achieve growth with equity.
14. We recall the Millennium Declaration and the outcome of the United Nations General Assembly special event on the MDGs. We reaffirm their commitment to the Millennium Declaration, the outcome document of Rio+20, the Monterrey Consensus, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development and the outcomes of all major UN conferences and summits in the economic, social and environmental fields. We will continue to be guided by the values and principles enshrined in these texts. We reaffirm all the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, including, inter alia, the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, as set out in principle 7 thereof.
15. We are of the firm view that our chosen national paths forward to realise sustainable, inclusive and equitable development in our societies can be reinforced and further advanced through concerted initiatives in the economic sphere. To this end, we request the Commonwealth Secretariat to convene and inform a discussions at forthcoming Commonwealth Finance Ministers Meetings, drawing on inputs from members and expert development practitioners, on the key economic and other factors affecting Commonwealth member states' ability to meet development goals, including the Post-2015 Development Agenda once defined. This work should consider other areas of potential for economic cooperation within the Commonwealth. Progress will be reviewed at the next Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in 2015.

CLIMATE CHANGE

094. Remarks by External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid at the Valedictory Session of Delhi Sustainable Development Summit.

New Delhi, February 5, 2013.

1. I am delighted to address this distinguished gathering at the Valedictory Session of the Delhi Sustainable Development Summit. I thank the organisers for giving me this special privilege.
2. The year 2012 has indeed been a special year for sustainable development. We celebrated the 20th Anniversary of the landmark Earth Summit in Rio, Brazil in June of last year and adopted a comprehensive and significant document on “the future we want”. Later the same year, India hosted the Conference of Parties of the Convention on Biodiversity in Hyderabad. As the Presidency, it was a matter of satisfaction for us that the Conference agreed to double finances for biodiversity. This was particularly significant when the world is focussing its energies on climate change, sometimes at the cost of other equally important environmental and sustainable development issues. And finally, we concluded a successful COP on climate change in Doha in December 2012. In many ways, 2012 has laid the foundation for sustainable development of our planet for some years to come.
3. Rio+20 has placed poverty eradication at the centre of global sustainable development agenda. Freedom from want and hunger is the best antidote to social inequality and environmental degradation. It is also the path as well as the direct beneficiary of resource-efficient growth and development, which is the theme of this conference. I am reminded of the words of Prime Minister Smt. Indira Gandhi at the Stockholm Conference of 1972 when she observed perceptively 'Poverty is the biggest polluter.'

4. India has had a long tradition of living in union with nature. We have not perceived a duality between development and resource efficient growth. The Earth is the giver of life and happiness. We are its progeny and in turn have a responsibility to protect it and utilise its fruits sustainably. My government is committed to pursuing holistic sustainable development in its march towards economic growth and development.
5. Just when we have started solving the problems of our generation, we have new challenges facing us as indeed the rest of the world. Shrinking of opportunities to ensure food, energy, water and livelihood security, expansion of unplanned urban growth and mass migration, and growing inequalities coupled with depleting natural resources and land degradation, and unsustainable consumption patterns and lifestyles of the developed countries place undue burden on developmental aspirations. Lack of access to energy remains a concern. The slowdown in the global economy have only made things worse. Means of implementation for developing countries are drying up. Our ability to provide safety nets to the vulnerable sections of our society has been shrinking, thereby widening the North-South gap. As the Father of our Nation said "Earth provides enough to satisfy every man's need, but not every man's greed."
6. Even as we grapple with these multiple issues, and realising the multiple challenges facing us, internationally we are engaged in charting out a post-2015 Development Agenda. Discussions are taking place in different UN and other fora on evolving an architecture which would accommodate the on-going implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), the Sustainable Development Goals (SGDs) set out by Rio+20 and forge an acceptable post-2015 Development framework which all countries can subscribe to. We view this as an important development and my government has already put in place a process to take a clear stand on the various issues that would inevitably be dealt with in this architecture. Naturally, the emphasis is on the word “development” where national policy space and priorities are preserved while focussing on economic growth, social protection and environmental preservation. We hope that the rubric will apply to both developed and developing countries, unlike the MDGs, and does not become a mere governance agenda, but address sustainable development issues in a holistic manner. In this pursuit, we need to be respectful of the Rio Principles, reaffirmed in Rio+20 last year, as well as the UNGA mandated intergovernmental process about to start in a few days time in New York.

7. Even as we seek to forge a post-2015 Development Agenda, and chart ways through resource-efficient growth and development is achieved, it is natural that there is increased expectation of enhanced means of implementation among developing countries. New and additional financing, especially public finance as a catalyst for private investment, is more than just a cliché for those struggling with day-to-day existence, particularly in the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) and the Small Island Developing States. Technology transfer remains the key to solving many new challenges. Our efforts should not just be to divert domestic funding of such countries, but also ensure genuine partnership between the Developed and the Developing so that there is meaningful cooperation in transfer of environmentally-friendly technology, in encouraging creativity, incentivising research and promoting innovation and in financing of sustainable development activities.
8. Sustainable Development is a process which should involve the civil society, private sector, local governments and all stakeholders. We must strengthen their hands to forge stronger partnerships and enable governments to take the right decisions. In this, we remain committed to sharing our knowledge and expertise with our fellow developing countries in particular the Least Developed Countries, countries in Africa and the Small Island Developing States.

9. While we may agree or disagree on issues, or argue on the how and why of things, its important that we do not let short-term difficulties and interests act as a red herring to achieve our more important objectives - that which may alter fundamentally how we live on this planet. We need to accommodate each others views and approaches, but, as Mahatma Gandhi said "All compromise is based on give and take, but there can be no give and take on fundamentals."
10. Before I conclude, allow me to thank the organisers once again for giving me this opportunity to share a few thoughts on the issues of importance facing the world today as we seek a sustainable world.

095. Joint Statement issued at the Conclusion of the 14th BASIC Ministerial Meeting on Climate Change Chennai, India

1. The 14th BASIC (Brazil, South Africa, India and China) Ministerial Meeting on climate change was held in Chennai, India on February 15-16, 2013. H.E. Mrs. Jayanthi Natarajan, Minister for State (Independent Charge) Environment and Forests of India, H.E. Mr. Xie Zhenhua, Vice Chairman of the National Development and Reform Commission of China, H.E. Mr. Carlos Augusto Klink, Secretary for Climate Change and Environment Quality, Ministry of Environment, Brazil and Mr Alfred James Wills, Deputy Director General, Department of Environmental Affairs of South Africa, participated in the meeting. In line with 'BASIC-Plus' approach, H.E. Mr. Abdullah Bin Hamad Al-Attiyah, President of COP18/CMP8, Qatar also participated in the meeting.
2. BASIC Ministers welcomed the Doha Climate Gateway (as the package of Doha decisions is called) as a balanced outcome of COP-18/CMP8. In this regard, Ministers expressed their appreciation for the leadership of Qatar as the COP-18/CMP8 Presidency and the contribution of H.E. Mr. Abdullah Bin Hamad Al-Attiyah to its success. Ministers reiterated their support to the Government of Poland as the incoming Presidency to achieve a comprehensive and balanced outcome in Warsaw in an open and transparent, inclusive and party-driven process.

3. Ministers welcomed the decision on operationalization of the 2nd commitment period and the consequent amendments to the Kyoto Protocol as a key element of Doha Climate Gateway. They appreciated the leadership shown by those developed country parties which have joined the second commitment period. They reaffirmed that Kyoto Protocol remains a key component of the international climate regime and an essential basis for ambition within the regime. They called for parties, particularly developed country parties, to ratify the amendments as soon as possible so as to ensure legal certainty.
4. Ministers emphasized that one of the key issues to be considered in the run up to COP 21 is the question of ambition under both the KP and the Convention. They stressed that Annex I Parties should raise ambition and, in this context, also take into consideration the latest available scientific evidence on climate change trends, the impact of historical emissions of developed countries at the global level and the IPCC report which indicates that aggregate emissions of greenhouse gases by Parties included in Annex I should be reduced by at least 25–40 per cent below 1990 levels by 2020 .
5. Ministers expressed disappointment over the low level of mitigation ambition pledged under the 2nd commitment period of the Kyoto Protocol. They hoped that the developed countries who have taken commitments under the 2nd commitment period of the Kyoto Protocol will raise their ambition level in 2014 in consonance with science and their historical responsibility. At the same time, they strongly emphasized that developed countries which are not part of Kyoto Protocol or have not joined the 2nd commitment period must equally raise their ambition in the same timeframe and take on comparable mitigation commitments under the Convention.

6. In addition, Ministers stressed that actions of others can be enhanced further with greater provision of finance and technology transfer. They urged that, in the overall interest of raising global ambition, the developed countries must take the lead and scale up ambition not just in mitigation but also in adaptation, finance, technology transfer and capacity building.
7. Ministers reiterated that the developing countries, including the BASIC countries have done much to raise the global ambition. They have voluntarily presented their ambitious nationally appropriate mitigation actions at the international level and have agreed to a regime of transparency of actions. These actions constitute far greater in quantum and impact than those of the developed countries. Keeping in mind the need to enhance global effort, Ministers urged the developed countries to come forward and reciprocate the gesture and efforts of developing countries.
8. Ministers reaffirmed the centrality of the principles and provisions of UNFCCC process. In this regard they welcomed the Doha decision on agreed outcome pursuant to Bali Action Plan that Parties efforts should be undertaken on the basis of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, and should be supported and enabled by finance, technology transfer and capacity building directed towards developing countries and should take into account their imperatives of equitable access to sustainable development.
9. Ministers underlined the importance of means of implementation to enable the mitigation and adaptation actions in developing countries and stressed that the obligations of developed countries to provide financial, technology transfer and capacity building support to developing country Parties must be fulfilled to enhance the implementation of Convention. They reiterated the importance of achieving the goal of providing US$ 100 billion per year by 2020 as committed by developed country Parties and underscored the need for a clear roadmap in this regard. They expressed disappointment on the lack of commitment to any roadmap to ratchet up the provision of such finance and called upon Annex I Parties to continue to provide, in the short term, at least the same level as Fast Start Finance till the roadmap is delineated. They underscored the need for Global Environment Facility to provide additional financial resources to developing countries, including for preparing National Communications and Biennial Update Reports.

10. Ministers underscored that the early and meaningful operationalization of the mechanisms set up in recent years to support developing countries, including the Green Climate Fund, Technology Mechanism, Adaptation Committee etc needs to be prioritized.
11. Ministers welcomed the advancement in work of the Durban Platform and the planning of work through decision adopted at Doha. Ministers reiterated their belief that the work of the Durban Platform was not taking place in a vacuum but rather is based on and must build on the work carried out by parties under the Bali Road Map with its two tracks of KP and LCA.
12. Ministers welcomed the decision in Doha that acknowledges that the work of ADP shall be guided by the principles of the Convention. This understanding was the basis for the agreement on the Durban Platform at COP-17. They reaffirmed that the objective of Durban Platform is to enhance efforts of all parties by further strengthening the multilateral rules-based climate regime and ensuring the full, effective and sustained implementation of the Convention after 2020. The Durban Platform is by no means a process to negotiate a new regime, nor to renegotiate, rewrite or reinterpret the Convention and its principles and provisions. As agreed by all Parties, both the process and the outcome of the Durban Platform are under the Convention, in accordance with all its principles and provisions, in particular the principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities.

13. In the context of ADP, Ministers stressed that the pre-2020 ambition should primarily be addressed in the context of actions of parties under KP CP2 and the agreed outcome pursuant to Bali Action Plan and in accordance with the principles and provisions of the Convention, respecting the nationally appropriate mitigation actions already presented.
14. Ministers underlined that the new market based mechanism under the Convention requires the enhancement of emission reduction commitments by developed countries given their current low levels of ambition. In this context, the new market based mechanism should be guided by the principles of the Convention, including CBDR and Equity, and promote environmental integrity. They also emphasized that the framework for various approaches should not be decided in isolation and should also include the scope and nature of such approaches.
15. Ministers further underlined that the principles of the Convention should underpin the on-going discussions in the ICAO on international civil aviation emissions and in the IMO on maritime emissions. In the context of international civil aviation negotiations in ICAO, they rejected the unilateral approach of EU under the EU-ETS and reiterated the importance of adhering to multilateralism. Further, there was a need to focus on the entire basket of measures and considerably enhance work on non-market based measures. The discussion on market based measures in ICAO, even if these market based measures are undertaken within the national jurisdiction, should be based on the principles of the UNFCCC, environmental integrity, voluntary participation and not prejudice the outcome of the negotiations in the UNFCCC.
16. Ministers reaffirmed the importance of multilateralism in addressing climate change in accordance with the principles and provisions of the Convention and reiterated their strong opposition to any unilateral measures on international aviation and shipping as well as similar intentions regarding other sectors.

17. Ministers emphasized the importance of adaptation and loss and damage for developing countries and underlined that particular focus should be given to enhance risk management, risk reduction, climate resilience and disaster response and to clarifying the institutional mechanism for addressing loss and damage.
18. Ministers recognized the importance of 2013-15 Review under the UNFCCC and welcomed the reaffirmation that the Review was not a review of the Convention itself and must include a review of the implementation of the commitments under the Convention.
19. Ministers noted the recommendation of the BASIC experts to organize an international conference on scientific and technical aspects of black carbon and the need for further work for enhancement of knowledge and understanding of the potential role of black carbon in global warming, besides reduction of the extant uncertainty. They further noted the recommendation of the BASIC experts to devise a work programme on aspects, such as Equity and the market based mechanism, considered relevant in the context of international climate change negotiations. They requested BASIC experts to provide inputs for the 2013-15 Review under the UNFCCC. Ministers also requested the experts to engage on the IPCC 5th Assessment Report and inform them periodically.
20. Ministers underlined their commitment to their unity of the BASIC countries. They stressed the utmost importance of the unity of G77 and China, and reaffirmed the commitment of BASIC countries to strengthen it. Ministers underlined the urgency of tackling climate change, and reiterated their continued efforts to enhance South-South cooperation.
21. Ministers welcomed the offer by South Africa to host the 15th BASIC Ministerial Meeting in the second quarter of 2013.

096. Speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 4th Clean Energy Ministerial Conference.

New Delhi, April 17, 2013.

I am very pleased to inaugurate this Fourth Clean Energy Ministerial in New Delhi. This is the first time this Ministerial meeting has been convened in India. I take this opportunity to welcome all the participating Ministers and members of their delegations, and also the representatives of international organizations, the private sector and non-governmental organizations participating in this important meeting.

The search for clean energy is extremely important for two reasons. First, energy is both scarce and expensive and yet it is vital for development. If developing countries are to meet their developmental objectives they have to expand all sources of supply, including both conventional and non-conventional energy. Second, clean energy is especially important because it can progressively substitute for fossil fuel based energy, which brings with it the collateral damage associated with emissions of CO₂ and other green house gases.

Greater use of clean energy obviously contributes to sustainability of the development process, and this issue will become more important in the years that lie ahead. Developing countries account for 82 percent of the world's population and they use 55 percent of the available global supply of energy. They must aim at faster growth of their GDP to improve the living standards of their populations and this will entail an expanded demand for energy. If they follow the industrialized countries in meeting their energy requirements through fossil fuel based energy, we know that the impact on the global climate would be simply unsustainable.

This poses a global challenge. We can only meet the challenge by responding in two ways. First, we must contain the total growth in energy associated with the growth of GDP by improving energy efficiency. Second, we can work to shift from conventional to non-conventional or clean energy.

Both actions help to mitigate emissions and both involve costs. But, the costs are borne by the country taking the actions whereas the benefits extend to the whole world. An optimal level of mitigation on the part of all countries can come only through globally coordinated action. An acceptable global energy strategy must also be based on equitable sharing of the burden of mitigation and adjustment.

On any principle of equity, the industrialized countries have to bear a large share of the burden. They are historically responsible for the bulk of the accumulated GHG emissions and this alone suggests a greater responsibility. They also have high per capita incomes which give them the highest capacity to bear the burden. They are technically the most advanced, and to that extent best placed to provide workable solutions not only for themselves but for the entire world.

These issues have been the focus of intense discussion in the Climate Change Negotiations being conducted under the auspices of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change. Unfortunately, progress in these negotiations is painfully slow. The goal of stabilising global temperatures at acceptable levels is nowhere in sight.

However, while we must work to ensure that the UN Framework Convention process reaches some acceptable outcome, individual countries have to take action to increase energy efficiency and also promote clean energy. There is need for inter-country consultation and discussion in these areas to promote information exchange and to identify possible areas of collaboration, and also to learn from each other's experience in addressing common problems. The Clean Energy Ministerial has made a major contribution to such discussions.

The initiative for launching the Ministerial was taken by Dr. Steven Chu, U.S. Energy Secretary. Dr. Chu, a very distinguished Nobel Laureate, has announced his intention to return to academic life. We are therefore fortunate in having him with us today, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank him for his contribution and to wish him well for the future. I have no doubt that he will continue to contribute to evolving a consensus on the important issues which the CEM has been grappling with.

In the three years since it was first launched, the Clean Energy Ministerial has promoted a number of initiatives in the area of expanding supplies of clean energy and promoting technologies for energy efficiency in a cost effective manner. I am very happy to state that India is an active participant of several of these initiatives.

Our 12th Five Year Plan recognises the importance of evolving a low carbon strategy for inclusive and sustainable growth. We have set ourselves a national target of increasing the efficiency of energy use to bring about a 20 to 25 percent reduction in the energy intensity of our GDP by 2020. The Plan also envisages an expanded role for clean energy, including traditional sources of clean energy such as hydel power and non conventional sources such as solar and wind power.

The full exploitation of hydel power has long been a part of India's energy strategy, though there are environmental limitations in this regard owing to problems of submergence of forests and the need to rehabilitate affected populations. We will work to resolve these problems.

We are also taking steps to exploit non conventional clean energy sources such as solar and wind power, and also energy from the bio mass. It is proposed to double the renewable energy capacity in our country from 25000 MW in 2012 to 55000 MW by the year 2017.

The pace at which we can expand our reliance on these new energy sources is constrained by the fact that they are more expensive than conventional energy. However, costs are falling. The cost of solar energy for example has nearly halved over the last two years, though it remains higher than the cost of fossil fuel based electricity. If the cost imposed by carbon emissions is taken into account, then solar energy is more cost effective, but it is still more expensive. However, with costs expected to fall further in the years that lie ahead, it will soon be fully competitive at the margin.

Counting on the probability of falling costs in this area, we have launched a Jawaharlal Nehru National Solar Mission with the objective of developing 22,000 MW of solar capacity by the year 2022 covering both solar photovoltaic and solar thermal. The cost differential is being covered by different forms of subsidy and cross subsidy. A solar capacity of about 1500 MW has already been installed in the country, and an additional 10,000 MW will be implemented by the end of the 12th Five Year Plan, ending in 2017.

Solar energy has the advantage of permitting decentralized generation which is cost effective in serving people in the remote rural areas where extension of the grid would be rather expensive.

As we expand our reliance on solar energy, we are keen to ensure induction of the best technology and also to encourage domestic production of the equipment needed. India is potentially a large market for production of such equipment. It is also a potentially competitive and attractive production base for supplying other countries. We therefore strongly encourage global manufacturers to set up production facilities in this area.

As part of the Solar Mission we are setting up a National Institute of Solar Energy, which would be a global level R&D centre, which could draw upon international cooperation as well, to enable the creation of more affordable and convenient solar power systems, and promote innovations that enable the storage of solar power for sustained, long-term use. It is expected that this Institute will be in position by the year 2015.

India's wind potential in both onshore and offshore areas is being re-assessed to draw a long term plan for exploiting this source of energy. It appears that our potential for harnessing wind power is much larger than was earlier anticipated, though the potential is concentrated in certain parts of our country.

Expanding grid interactive renewable power requires supporting improvements in technologies of grid management to deal with the expected fluctuation in generation from these energy sources. There are fluctuations within the day as in the case of solar energy, and also fluctuations over seasons in the case of wind. How are we to manage a system where important components fluctuate significantly is an important focus area for our Government. Battery storage is one solution and pump storage another. Here too costs are critical but there is scope for cost reduction. We are keen to learn from international experience in this regard.

The Government has also launched a National Mission for Enhanced Energy Efficiency to focus on energy efficiency in sectors ranging from appliances, buildings, transport and industries. The Mission focuses on establishment of standards and also on market related incentives based on the imposition of mandated efficiency standards in selected industries with tradable energy certificates incentivising companies to do better than the standard.

I am sure other countries participating in this Ministerial have similar initiatives. We are keen to learn from their experience and would be happy to share ours.

We are in the process of raising fuel efficiency standards in our transport sector. We have already decided to mandate 5% blending of ethanol in the motor spirit.

We are also launching a National Mission on Electric Mobility and I am happy to state that the Government of India will be joining the Electric Vehicle Initiative of the Clean Energy Ministerial.

One of the critical issues in promoting expansion of clean energy is financing of green energy. Investments in green energy are subject to technological, commercial and regulatory risk. For the moment green energy is not viable on its own without subsidy or regulatory incentives. Investors obviously need assurance that these incentives will continue. Market forces alone will not provide sufficient financing in this environment unless the risks of policy change are appropriately addressed. I am happy that the Ministers have scheduled a separate session on financing. We need to know more about what each of us is doing and this Ministerial is an excellent platform for experience sharing across the countries.

These are early days in our effort at developing a workable strategy and much remains to be done. I have no doubt that your deliberations will go a long way in developing a workable agenda for energy efficiency and expansion of clean energy for the world.

I wish you all success in the course of your deliberations over these two days and I hope you will all enjoy your stay in New Delhi, and perhaps even get a chance to see some of our country.

097. Media report that India has opposed signing a piecemeal Global Climate Treaty.

September 19, 2013.

India has opposed proposals to sign a piecemeal global climate treaty with greenhouse gas reduction targets being decided first in 2015 and decisions on technology and finance adaptation being segregated and postponed for later years.

The global community is to sign a new compact on climate change under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) by 2015. The negotiations for this deal have been on since 2011 and are beginning to heat up with the next big meeting — referred to as the Conference of Parties (COP), slated for this November in Warsaw, Poland.

Perceiving that the developed countries have through the year been pushing at a piecemeal approach to the global deal, India has put in a submission to the UNFCCC, advocating that all elements of the deal — mitigation, adaptation, technology and finance — should be addressed at the same time as part of a balanced package.

Any action by the developing countries to reduce emissions is required to be enabled by funds and technology from the developed world under the UNFCCC. This linkage between the provision of enabling finance and technology has been diluted over the past few years through successive decisions at the annual COPs. But, the recent push from the developed world to postpone final decisions on all other elements of the 2015 deal, except for mitigation, has been read in the Indian camp as a grand ploy to completely de-link the actions of the developing countries from the support they should rightfully be getting under the UNFCCC to achieve these goals.

“In the negotiations throughout this year, we have warned that these elements are part of a balanced package and progress cannot be made on just one at the cost of all others but we have seen that the developed countries are only interested in discussing mitigation till 2015,” said an Indian climate negotiator who wished to remain anonymous.

He explained that such segregation would break the linkage between the provision of finance and technology on one hand, and the mitigation actions on the other.

The Indian submission to the UNFCCC reads, "The work of Ad- Hoc Working Group on the Durban Platform is a comprehensive process, covering mitigation, adaptation, finance, technology and capacity building and transparency. It must address the issues related to these pillars of the Convention in a holistic, balanced and coordinated manner."

The Ad-Hoc Working Group is one track of negotiations under the UNFCCC. It was launched in 2011. This track itself has two distinct streams of talks. One of the two is meant to finalise the new global deal meant to be signed by 2015 and operationalised by 2020. The other stream of talks is also meant to produce decisions on what actions can be taken between now and 2020.

The submissions from the U.S. and the EU in the run-up to the November COP meeting have not inspired much confidence in the Indian negotiating team either. The focus in the submissions has remained strongly on fixing the nature of mitigation actions that they propose should be undertaken in the 2015 compact. On this they have presented detailed suggestions. Their submissions on funds to be made available to the developing world for adaptation, on the other hand, have remained rather general.

098. Media report on BASIC Ministers call for specifics on funds to mitigate climate change.

October 30,2013.

The BASIC countries have countered the US position and demanded that the global climate agreement to be signed by 2015 should not focus just on actions to reduce greenhouse emission reductions but also resolve how these actions in the developing world be funded, supported by technology transfer and the adaptation needs met.

The BASIC position was put forth in a meeting of the four countries – India, China, South Africa and Brazil in Beijing on October 29. The meeting was held to strategise ahead of the annual climate negotiations that are to start in Warsaw on November 11.

The statement put out by the four countries jointly at the end of the meeting said, “(The BASIC) Ministers reiterated that the 2015 agreement should address all elements referred to in paragraph 5 of Decision 1/CP.17 in a balanced and comprehensive manner, and should not just be confined to mitigation.”

The decision referred to in the statement demands that countries discuss all the key elements of the UN climate talks - mitigation, adaptation, finance, technology development and transfer, transparency of action and support, and capacity-building for reaching a comprehensive 2015 agreement.

More than 190 country members of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change have decided that a new agreement would be signed by 2015 to combat climate change and be made operational by 2020.

The US had earlier suggested in a formal submission to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change that the 2015 climate pact should concentrate on emission reduction targets and issues of how countries are held accountable for what they claim to be doing and the rest of the concerns should be relegated to less legally onerous forms of decisions under the UN climate convention.

The BASIC countries and several developing countries have expressed reservations that separating mitigation actions from the enabling support – financial and technological – would diminish the existing obligations of the developed world to pay for actions of the poorer countries.

The BASIC ministers meeting in Beijing countered the US proposal, stating “Ministers called for a more balanced, structured and formal mode of work focusing on the four pillars of the Convention, i.e. mitigation, adaptation, finance and technology.”

The BASIC countries went on to say, “Ministers noted with concern that pre-2020 ambition gaps exist not only in mitigation, but also in adaptation, finance, technology and capacity building as well as in equitable access to sustainable development.”

The phrase ‘ambition-gap’ has often been used in public domain to refer only to the difference between the reductions that existing commitments of countries - to cut greenhouse gas emission - can achieve and what is required to keep temperatures from rising to dangerous levels. The BASIC countries have tried to push the point that the gap in action exists as the developed world has not provided the resources to the poorer countries to do more, as is currently required under the UN climate negotiations.

099. Media Briefing by Deputy Chairman of Planning Commission on G20 Summit.

New Delhi, September 2, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming here towards the end of the week.

As you are aware, this is a briefing about the forthcoming G20 meeting in St Petersburg. We have here with us Deputy Chairman Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, who is the Sherpa of the Prime Minister for this meeting. Along with him is Mr. Dinesh Bhatia, Joint Secretary from the Ministry of External Affairs who is the Su Sherpa. Further to his right is Ms. Usha Titus, Joint Secretary from the Ministry of Finance. She also is the Su Sherpa.

What we will do is I will request the Deputy Chairperson to make a few opening remarks following which we will open the floor for questions relating to the G20. I am certain that you would also like questions on other issues. So, after the closure of the questions on the G20, the Deputy Chairperson has agreed to respond to a few questions on other matters.

With those introductory remarks I will ask the Deputy Chairperson to make his opening remarks.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission (Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia): Thanks very much and thank you all for coming.

There is not much to be said in the opening remarks other than to say that we are heading out to a very important summit meeting at Saint Petersburg. As you know, the G20 was constituted to be the premier international forum for discussing international economic issues, and that is going to be the agenda. There are lots of international economic issues that are concerning many people. So, we are looking forward to a really good meeting.

It is going to be a two-day meeting. The Heads of Government will come. Out of that, based on various discussions some of which have actually started and they will now intensify in the next two days when the Sherpas and Finance Deputies meet, we hope that at the end of it we will have a sort of Saint Petersburg Action Plan which will sort of indicate how do the G20 see the top priorities for the coming year.

Since I am about to head out there tomorrow, I cannot anticipate what will happen in these meetings. But I would be very happy to give you our perspective on whatever questions that you have. So, questions.

Q: This is specifically related to the G20. There has been a build-up of expectations in a lot of commentary over the past four to five weeks that (1) India is considering approaching multilateral institutions for support to counter the ongoing economic issues that it faces, and then (2) two days back, in fact yesterday, there have been reports quoting Finance Ministry officials, advisors, that as far as currency is concerned this is going to be a specific issue that will come, a currency swap arrangement, which in fact there was something that we had already operationalised a year back and have not utilised from countries like Japan. Could you offer us details on whether you are going to take up and approach the issue of currency stabilisation in any manner whatsoever at the G20 deliberations? And from your point of view, from the country's point of view, what are the other points that you would like to bring on the agenda there?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: You asked I suppose questions on the same subject but triangulating from different ways. So, let me respond. At one stage you seemed to be asking whether we are using this summit to approach the multilateral institutions. Presumably you had in mind approaching them for some sort of financial assistance. Categorically – no, that is not on the agenda. And my personal view by the way is that we do not need it either. If we ever needed it, of course we have done it before and we can do it again. But I can assure that as far as I am concerned, this is not at all on the agenda. This will not be discussed.

It is a different issue that the role of multilateral institutions vis-à-vis emerging market countries, that of course will be discussed. But it is not an India-specific issue and certainly not connected with any of the currency volatility that you have seen.

Then you talked about Finance; Finance Ministry officials should speak for themselves. But as far as currency swap arrangements are concerned, you mentioned the one we have with Japan. It is there. That is not something that we would be discussing in the summit for sure.

You also mentioned something on which a decision had been taken and I think you have in mind the possibility of a currency swap among the BRICS, and that has been discussed. Again it would not be on the agenda of the summit. But it is quite possible that the BRICS leaders – they usually meet on the sidelines of the Summit - might give an indication of what the latest position is. We have been in favour of entering into some kind of a swap arrangement. But that again is not really the G20 summit. That is simply updating you.

If I am not wrong, I think in Durban last year they sort of agreed on a swap adding up to 100 billion dollars, and then they have been working on what would be the different components etc. Maybe you will get an update. I do not have any role vis-à-vis the BRICS because I am not the Sherpa for the BRICS summit. So, that is the position really.

Now on the larger issue, I do think that currency volatility is going to be and should be a very important part of the summit-level discussions because newspapers all over the world have been focusing on the fact that the anticipated sort of withdrawal of Quantitative Easing 3 will lead to a change in flows, and already markets have anticipated that and money flows to the US have gone up and money has moved out from other markets into the United States and that has led to a lot of currency volatility, we have also been affected by that.

Obviously countries have to have their own monetary policy guided by whatever their national and domestic objectives are. That is what we do, that is what the European Central Bank does. But the purpose of the G20 is that different policies which are ultimately guided invariably by national interest should be so calibrated to keep in mind the impact on other countries because actually that is also in the national interest. It is not in anybody's interest to do something assuming that the domestic positive effects are good and, if there are negative global effects that they would not impact on them.

So, certainly my view, I have no idea exactly how the discussions go, is that the G20 mutual assessment process which was designed to be able to talk to each other and to get a sense of what are you going to do, what am I going to do, what is going to be the combined effect, etc., I think this should include consideration of deployment of monetary policy instruments for the reserve currency countries. In principle the same thing would be true in all other countries also. But the spill-over effects of a non-reserve currency monetary policy are very small. And certainly we will raise this issue. I have no idea how people will react to it. But that is an important part of the plurilateral effort to coordinate policy amongst these major countries.

Q: Dr. Ahluwalia, the G4 leaders also will be there. Are you expecting a possible meeting of the G4 on the sidelines of the G20?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Who is G4?

Q: The Group of Four countries aspiring for Security Council membership – Germany, Japan, Brazil and India.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That G4? Okay. Is that a conventional terminology now?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, ...(Inaudible)... politically.

Q: Is there likely to be a meeting of the G4 leaders and does the possibility of the expansion of the Security Council ever figure in the G20 meetings? And is it likely to be taken up at this meeting?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is a good point. It tells you, since I did not even recognise the phrase G4, this is not my area. This is the principal forum for international economic interaction. So, the whole UN structure that you can call economic, which is the Bretton Woods institutions WTO, others, etc., they are included. To my knowledge, in the past we have not focused on Security Council reform or even broadly UN reform. That is a very important area. But I do not think it has ever been covered in the G20. Therefore, I assume that it would not be on the formal agenda.

Q: Dr. Ahluwalia, Azim Premji wrote to the prime minister last week suggesting that the USA immigration bill has become a big problem for the industry, particularly for the IT industry; just like UK visa fee, which everyone has to pay two and a half lakh. Every year there is discussion in the G20 on protectionism. Will these issues be raised by the government this year? (free translation from the Hindi text)

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: This is a bilateral issue between India and the USA. I can tell you that when India-US discussions take place, this question will certainly be raised. This is not an issue for the G20. This could have been an issue for the G20, if there were an international agreement on immigration. But there is no international agreement. Immigration is not covered by the agreement in the WTO on goods. So, it is not an international issue. You can do whatever you want on immigration without violating any international agreement. That does not mean you should do it. And we certainly argue with them bilaterally.

This is an important issue you have raised. They have not yet imposed those restrictions, but it is in the legislative process. This will hurt India.

Our view is that it will impact the US competitiveness also. But this is a bilateral issue. May be it will come up in September when the PM goes there. (text in italics is free translation from Hindi text)

Q: Dr. Ahluwalia, I just would want you to elaborate a bit on the currency swap as a concept. It is very sketchy right now I agree but at least at the conceptual level we should have some clarity. You have a 100 billion dollars tied up in Durban. What does it mean? Maybe Ms Titus can answer that. Also, the larger question is, does it in any way resemble the old rupee trade or anything that we used to have with Russia?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Good point! Since this particular arrangement is not yet in place, I will give you a reaction based on what currency swaps normally are, and I am sure that whenever we get the details it will be something similar.

Point No.1 is this is not rupee trade, this is not bilateral settlement of trade in any way in local rupees. This is a straight forward, if you like, cooperation in providing liquidity. And most currency swaps operate in the following manner. That is what Chiang Mai does. Basically different countries agree to make a certain amount of money available. Okay? When they make a certain amount of money available, then each country can draw on that pool. And if a country needs to draw, then the other countries in effect make the money available in the proportion that they have committed to the pool.

So, it is not as if you take the money and put it into another organisation. It is there on call and you make the money available. And usually there are some rules. Those rules usually are that let us say hypothetically if you enter into a swap where you are contributing 10 billion or 20 billion or something like that. So, if you are contributing 10 billion dollars, then what it usually means is a certain amount you can draw just for the asking. If you want three, four billion dollars or something like that, everybody else has to dish it out and you repay it at a certain time.

Q: It is akin to the Special Drawing Rights in some way.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That depends on how you denominate the swap. This is nothing to the IMF. This is a cooperative arrangement between three or four central banks. If there are four central banks and one of them decides to draw the money, the other three fellows will dip into their reserves and give them the money like a kind of loan.

I want to add one more thing and that is that I think in Chang Mai when you go beyond a certain level, countries concerned actually say, look if you want more money then it has to be linked to an IMF arrangement. That is interesting because if you are forced to go to the IMF, then it is not a completely free swap. But on the other hand the argument is that you will be going to the IMF for less than you otherwise would. And that strengthens your bargaining power with that institution.

None of these things is relevant for us at present in my view because I do not think our reserves position is such that we would need. However, it has become a bit of a fashion globally now to have currency swaps. If you read some of the documents that the IMF produces, the latest assessments are that there are three levels of safety nets. Level No.1 of safety nets is your own reserves; level No.2 of safety nets is some kind of regional currency arrangement, which is a little more informal and depends on whatever your own relationship is. Level No.3 is going to be IMF which is much more formal and usually involves conditionality. So, that is the position. I have no idea what is going to happen. My information is that 100 billion is agreed; we now have to operationalise it. This is not a G20 issue, this is a BRICS issue.

Q: Sir. Prime Minister yesterday during his clarification in Rajya Sabha said that he has certain influence over the Finance Ministers and Heads of State in G20. So, it will be interesting to know what issues are you going to raise in G20 meeting. Are you going to suggest any mode by which India can regain its old status in economy? Are you going to take any help from IMF at this point of time?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: You mean take the help of the IMF to make suggestions to the G20 or you are saying go to the IMF?

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I have already said, I am not aware of any plan to approach the IMF. I do not think our current economic situation requires it. My view on these matters is that if your situation requires it, we are members of the IMF, we should go. But we do not need to go. And I do not anticipate that in the near future at all.

Now the question you asked is, what is PM going to say. I do not want to anticipate that because after all if you are going with him on the flight you can always ask him. He will be better informed by then. But broadly I would expect that as always he would be a very important, to my mind, knowledgeable voice reflecting not just India's concerns but actually the concerns of the major emerging markets and also the developing world as a whole. That is a very big agenda. The agenda includes the global economy, it includes development issues, it includes financial sector reform post the financial crisis, it includes international financial architecture reform, the World Bank, IMF reform and those kinds of things, it includes trade and it includes energy and a whole slew of other issues.

So, I think on all of these issues he will be talking his colleagues. We will be briefing him on what are the other countries saying. So, basically it will be India's view on these issues that he will be putting forward and we would hope that he will be able to persuade his colleagues to a similar point of view and the extent to which he is able to do that will be reflected in whatever the declaration is that comes out.

Q: There is going to be an important meeting of BRICS leaders on the sidelines of the G20 summit. What broadly is going to be the agenda? It has been five months since the Durban Summit. What is the progress on Development Bank for example? Also, is the BRICS grouping going to work as a grouping within the G20 process to advance common position and interest?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: As I have already clarified, I am not the Sherpa for the BRICS meeting and so I am not informed. But on both these issues – BRICS bank and so on – I think the actual hard work on that is done in the BRICS Finance Ministers meeting, and when they are ready the summit more or less endorses. You remember, this is not a BRICS Summit, this is a BRICS meeting on the sideline of the G20. So, generally I would have thought major announcements of a BRICS new initiative would come in the BRICS summit. The next summit is going to be in Brazil. That is when all the BRICS preparatory work takes place.

They have in the past traditionally met on the sidelines of the G20 partly to simply coordinate their views or hear each other - you know that is one of the things that make a lot of sense – and sometimes they have used the occasion to update people on ongoing BRICS activity. The two ongoing items are the currency arrangement and also the BRICS Bank. But whether they will be in a position to make an announcement on those, I honestly do not know. I doubt if you will get any announcements on the BRICS Bank because I do not think that work is done. They will be reviewing progress in these areas.

Q: Mr. Ahluwalia, you talked initially about the Saint Petersburg Action Plan. I just want to know a broad outline of the component of the Action Plan which is likely to emerge of cooperation among the G20.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: To some extent when we get there that is when it is drafted. Normally what has happened is the Action Plan sort of reflects what is the agreed position of leaders, but it puts it down with a little bit more detail and it builds into it what the G20 Finance Ministers have also agreed. So, this will be one of the things that we will be looking at in terms of drafting sessions. Therefore, it is not yet a final product any way. I think broadly it will cover the issues I have talked about.

But most importantly, it will signal what do the leaders say on these issues or in a way is it possible at this point to say that would be what it would be unless you resort to astrology or something. To be fair, there are lots of drafts that float around typically at any given time. There are drafts, then hundreds of comments from different countries and there is not a document which is an agreed document there.

Q: Sir, yesterday the Prime Minister in both the Houses of Parliament raised the issue about subsidies, as you see, the monetary policy is having an effect on the dollar vis-à-vis the oil subsidy. Do you believe that this is something that does not really benefit the poor, and does this mean that we should be ready for cutting the oil subsidy bill because it is now going to nearly Rs.1,80,000 crore?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think we have moved away from the G20 to a domestic matter. Let me put it this way. Let us finish with the G20.

Incidentally the issue of energy subsidies is one of the issues that come up in the G20. The G20 on many summits have said that we must cut down fossil fuel subsidy except those that are targeted to the poor. The Indian policy documents, the Eleventh Plan, the Twelfth Plan, the integrated energy, all of them say the same thing. We do not have any real difference with the rest of the world on the merits of this broad approach. I do not think they are asking us to make any commitments or anything.

The only commitments that are being made in the G20 are, are we going to maintain a reasonable fiscal deficit or not. And I think we have indicated to them - the Finance Minister has indicated this, the Prime Minister has indicated this – that the fiscal deficit is going to be at 4.8 per cent of the GDP. Now on energy subsidies more generally, our policy has been to phase out energy subsidies except those that are targeted. And I think that is correct policy. So, I hope that that will actually be implemented over time.

Q: Sir, could you run us through the key issues in terms of trade and tariff barriers, etc? Also, on Syria, it is bound to come up at the G20. If it does come up, what is going to be our position? Or will we make a statement on that?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: As you can imagine, since this is a very recent development, and no earlier meeting has actually discussed Syria, and besides it is not part of the normal economic agenda, it is obviously a very important issue. So, I cannot judge what would be the position in that regard and to what extent the leaders would want to take note of it at all. So, on Syria I have really no comment to make at all at this point.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: As regards trade, I am sorry I zeroed in one obviously what is the most, what everyone is speculating on.

On trade I will tell you what our position has been. First of all, and I think most countries agree with this, multilateral trade liberalisation is an extremely important part of any sensible global policy for stimulating growth and production and efficiency and so on. We have been engaged in the Doha Round. It used to be called the Doha Development Round and we have been engaged in it for a long time, not been able to make progress. Most countries would want to assert that we should bring the Doha Development Round to a successful conclusion. Certainly that would be our position and I would hope that the Summit also endorses that. More practically, there is going to be a Ministerial meeting in Bali on the 9th of November and that has certain items on it. There are several but trade facilitation is one of them, something on agriculture which responds to the developing countries' concerns is another, global value chains was the third. And I think that most people would like to see a successful outcome in Bali.

As far as we are concerned, that is also our view but we do not view Bali as a separate thing. Really it should be a stepping stone to achieving a successful outcome of the Doha Round. I think India and many other developing countries are concerned that the central focus on making progress in the Doha Round should not be lost sight of.

Meanwhile, in the past we have voluntarily, all of us, undertaken some kind of a pledge not to resort to protectionist measures. The truth is that the WTO gives us a report as to what extent has this been maintained. They look at every single measure that a country has taken including liberalisation measures and then they try to look at the net effect. I think their assessment has been that in past several occasions it is not the case that no protectionist measure has been taken. The measures that have been taken are all small and many of them are offset by measures to liberalise. The general assessment is that this declaration has certainly contained what many would have feared to be an excessive resort to protectionism. Although if you view it on the sort of whitest of white kind of criteria, almost every country has undertaken some measures which can be called a little bit protectionist.

I think this issue will come up again and I know that many countries want that since we have not concluded the Doha Round, the last promise we made was that we undertake not to have any protectionist measures until the end of December 2014, which is next year. Most people feel that there is not enough time to conclude the Doha Round between now and then. So, there is a move that perhaps the leaders should give a commitment to extend this pledge. There are different views on this. So, one of the interesting things that would come out of the Summit is what happens to this move. Do the leaders agree to extend the pledge or not? I think that is a substantive issue.

Q: Russia offered to organise a G20 agenda based on three priority issues in eight areas. Which amongst them India feels is special for itself?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think most countries, certainly India, generally have agreed with the broad priorities that the Russian Presidency has brought to the Saint Petersburg Summit. None of those areas are areas that we do not think are important. I do not want to say now which one is important and which one is less important, I think they are all important. I would hope that we will see progress in each of them.

Q: You briefed us about many aspects of currency. I have a small question. The situation in which currency is, the country's well known economists, intellectuals, policy makers, who understand the country closely, and are nationalist too, when the dollar is in happy situation and the pound is doing better, when will our rupee have a better time. Considering this is the situation for the past four months, do you think better situation will come; It would be appreciated if you could throw some light.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: So, are we closing the G20 discussion?

Official Spokesperson: I think there is one more question. We will come back to this.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Yes, madam. There has been no gender balance in this press conference so far, so why do not you ask your question.

Q: On taxation I understand that Mr. Chidambaram after meeting Finance Ministers had said that it should be 'enriched' to take into account the concerns of developing countries. This is on transfer pricing and legal taxation. Is there going to be anything further from India's point of view in terms of a suggestion on what needs to be done because this has been a big issue of late here?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is a very important point actually. The OECD and the G20 together had initiated some work in what they call base erosion and profit shifting. It is a phenomenon of the modern world that you have highly global enterprises operating in multiple countries. So, when they are operating in multiple countries, if they are all subsidiaries of the same company, when they are buying a product from one country for the main parent company, the issue is, is the profit that is being generated from the activity in the first country actually being made available to tax, or is it all being shifted to the other country through basically transfer pricing?

I think this is a very important area and most countries worry about this. I think developing countries worry about it especially because there is a perception, and quite logical, that with globalisation, multinational companies based in the industrialised world, it makes sense for them to shift a lot of their production to developing countries which are more competitive. We actually welcome this and other developing countries do. So, we want them to locate their units in India. But you also want to be able to make sure that there is a reasonable profit taxation. So, the OECD has done some work and they will be making a presentation to the Summit on the conclusions of their work on base erosion and profit shifting.

There is also the issue of tax information transparency. That is, countries get a lot of information about people and transactions. Are they willing to share that? Our position on this has always been that we want tax jurisdictions should cooperate with each other in a symmetric way in the sense that we are willing to give them what they think is legitimate information and they should give us what we think is legitimate information just for processing the determination of tax liability. So, what is going to happen is that these initiatives are there. The OECD will put them forward and the leaders will consider that and sort of give their views, indicate the extent to which they support.

We are fully involved in this. I do not know what Mr. Chidambaram said to you but the Ministry of Finance is actually involved in the process by which these reports are being prepared. I think at various stages Mr. Chidambaram has said that, look being involved is not enough, you have also got to take account of our concerns that it should be a two-way process. And I think it is reasonably a two-way process.

I have to read what they are going to present. It is not as if the Summit is going to sort of put a seal of approval on specifics. This is more broad kind of framework. What it does is, if there is a set of principles that are agreed, then each country can devise its own taxation rules to take advantage of those principles. And when people complain about it, each country can say, look we are only doing what best practice is as defined by this OECD-G20 effort.

Q: My question is on Syria again. If the situation in Syria explodes, do not you think it will have serious consequences for economies like India and other developing countries? And do not you think you should raise this issue with your G20 partners and advise them not to take certain military steps which will destabilise West Asia? Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: You are asking two hypothetical questions. One is a hypothetical question about something that may happen; and then there is the hypothetical question of since it is not on the agenda, in what manner it will be put on the agenda. Obviously, I cannot, I am hoping that we will not have any disruptive event. Obviously it is politically a very important issue, and for me to comment on it is sort of saying if it happens this is what we will do, would not be proper. I have no basis.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Prime Minister is free, but it is not appropriate for me to comment. So, I am not going to go beyond what the Prime Minister said.

Official Spokesperson: We will now go back to the question about the Rupee.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Okay, the question about the Rupee. Now that the G20 has been taken care of, we get back to more exciting things.

I do not have very much to add to what has already been said by the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister. We have had a lot of volatility in the currency in India. The Rupee has depreciated quite a bit. Very often in the Indian press the impression given is that the whole world is stable but the Rupee has depreciated. This is not the case. The truth of the matter is, there is a lot of currency volatility and there has been depreciation in the Brazilian Rial, in the Indonesian Rupiah, in the South African Rand and all kinds of currencies. It is true that the Rupee has actually depreciated more than the others.

I think we have explained that because India had a somewhat high current account deficit, and this is not something that we were by the way ignoring. If you look at the Twelfth Plan which has been available on our website for quite sometime and even the hard copies are now available, we said quite categorically that in the first year of the Twelfth Plan, the current account deficit was too high, something like four per cent or so, and it should be brought down gradually. So, we knew it was a problem. Now, it turned out that in the first year - we were writing when only half the year's information was available - it was worst than the fourth in the sense that it ended up being 4.7 per cent of GDP not just about 4. A very important reason for that was a huge increase in gold imports which reflects all kinds of other factors I do not want to go into. But the Government has quite categorically recognized that we cannot be continuing with such a large current account deficit. I think Finance Minister in Parliament the other day sort of said that, look last year i.e. 2012-13 we had a current account deficit of $88 billion, we are planning to bring it down to $70 billion.

So, the first point that I want to make is that it is true that the current account deficit was high. What triggered the problem was, although it was high last year at $88 billion, we actually were able to finance it with $90 billion of inflow. So, reserves actually went up slightly. So, it did not look as if it is a big problem although we knew that it had to be brought down. Now the change is that when the Chairman of the Federal Reserve made this statement about withdrawing or reversing the QE3, that obviously shook markets around the world and affected India also, and money that was earlier coming in quite freely started stopping and to some extent even going back. Now, that obviously creates a serious financial problem and we have to address that problem. And that problem we are addressing by making sure that current account deficit for the year as a whole is actually going to be significantly lower.

I want to emphasize to you one thing and that is that you will not see that in the first quarter result for 2013-14 for the Balance of Payments. The reason for that is that it is in April-May that you had a big increase in gold imports. Since then gold imports have come down quite sharply. So, the Finance Minister's prediction was that the current account deficit in the current year, 2013-14, will be approximately 3.7 per cent of GDP. It will be much higher than that in the first quarter. I do not know what it will be but I do not want you, when it comes out probably at the end of September, to say: you said 3.7, look it is much higher than the first quarter.

I am telling you now – it is not an official statement, it is my expectation - you will not see an improvement in the current account deficit until the second quarter results are available. Okay? But the Finance Minister is aware of all this. So when he said 3.7, he is talking about the year as a whole. I think that is possible. I think that is possible because gold imports will be sharply curtailed. We have, in fact, already because of the depreciation and the impact on imports, there is an improvement that is evident in the trade account. So, I expect that we will actually be able to reduce the current account deficit.

When you are trying to reduce the current account deficit in any country, you do a Economics 101 Exam and you say there is a country called whatever it is and it has big current account deficit, what should it do? Well most people will say it should contain aggregate demand and it should allow the exchange rate to change. So, the first point is we have in fact seen quite a substantial change in the exchange rate. And that change is consistent with trying to reduce the current account deficit. So, a lot of people who keep saying, no, no, no, why do you let the Rupee depreciate, I mean the honest truth is that depreciation hurts some people but it helps a lot of other people. And this is a very important point.

I know that a lot of people think depreciation as some question of national pride. But actually if you want to have sensible macroeconomic management and you want to bring down the current account deficit, basically you have to allow the exchange rate to change. And what it is doing is, its putting our exporters in a very strong position because exporters now have a much more favourable position just about at a point when we think the global economy may be turning around. So that is good. Also the depreciation is going to make imports more expensive. And all the Indian producers who for a long time have been complaining that it is very difficult to compete against imports, imports are flooding in, imports are cheap, they will find it a lot easier to compete against imports because imports have become more expensive.

As far as aggregate demand is concerned, the Finance Minister has categorically said that he is going to maintain the fiscal deficit target, 4.8 per cent GDP. We have in fact communicated that target to the global community. I think the G20 know about it also. So, I think what the Finance Minister has said is that that is a red line. So, I think it is true that the exchange rate has depreciated; it is not true that it has only happened in India. You could say that part of it is due to the high current account deficit but actually it is due to the high current account deficit combined with a change in the financing capability. And we have reacted to that by, planning to reduce the deficit, and at the same time doing a lot of things that will stimulate inflows. Just in case any of you interview me after the first quarter numbers come out, please remember that you will not see that improvement in the April-June current account deficit.

Q: Should we expect the control in situation, whatever you are telling us, by April 2014? I mean, this situation will stay until April 2014, or it will stabilize.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: It is difficult to predict this; depends on the world conditions, what are the oil prices, I am trying to say there is some depreciation. It appears to me the rupee has over depreciated. That too is normal, we don't it, it goes by market flexibility. If it depreciates a little more, it can improve too. So that is the way to handle or look at it.

Q: Sir, there seems to be a sort of veiled suggestion from your Government. that the responsibility for this current crisis lies with the economic policies of Pranab Mukherjee. Now this has also made the papers today. Very straight, Sir, does the UPA Government believe that Pranab Mukherjee's economic policies over three years when he was Finance Minister are responsible for the state of the economy today?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: We may be reading different papers, but I do not recall the particular news item and I do not respond to newspaper stories either. Look, I think to attribute anything to any one factor is not I think correct. I do not believe that any one has said that. Possibly people are interpreting different things in different ways. After all our view is that the present problem is in large part due to a change in global financing conditions. And that certainly cannot be attributed to whatever happened last year. Global financing conditions changed dramatically only earlier this year. Please remember that in the year 2012-13, of which the first half was under the previous Finance Minister, in that period the inflows that came in to finance current account deficit were $90 billion. So, I am not aware that that is a Government position. But if you are putting in different people's mouth, you should ask them.

Q: Sir, there is need for dollars in the country, we want more foreign investments, we should concentrate on this aspect, which will improve the fiscal situation. But the World Bank report on doing business places India at the 173rd position. What needs to be done in that direction so that the fiscal situation is put back on the rails, and more and more foreign direct investments are attracted?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: The Doing Business report which you referred to is 2009 report and is based on the 2008 and 2007 data. This is true, but this was also true when the country was growing at 8 to 9 percent. Now growth has slowdown, and we should find out why? The ease of doing business is not that good, as it should be; and we should correct this situation. This is also stated in our twelfth Five-year Plan and this report is quoted there; To put is right we have to do many things; this ease of business is composed of 9—10 indicators; Half of them are in the Central Government domain and the other half in the state governments'. What falls under the state governments, the Centre cannot do anything. But what falls in the Central domain, there we must act, there is no doubt in my mind that we should do that.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this media interaction.

100. Statement by the Prime Minister prior to his departure for the St. Petersburg Summit.

New Delhi, September 4, 2013.

"I leave today for St. Petersburg, Russia, to attend the 8th G-20 Summit at the invitation of President Vladimir Putin.

The G-20 has emerged as the premier international forum for discussing global economic issues. Its 8th Summit will take place against the backdrop of persisting challenges and vulnerabilities in the global economy. Though there are encouraging signs of growth in industrialized countries, there is also a slowdown in emerging economies, which are facing the adverse impact of significant capital outflows. I will emphasize in St. Petersburg the need for an orderly exit from the unconventional monetary policies being pursued by the developed world for the last few years, so as to avoid damaging the growth prospects of the developing world.

It is also important that G-20 encourages and promotes policy coordination among major economies in a manner that provides for a broad-based and sustained global economic recovery and growth. India has been an active participant in this endeavour as co-Chair of the Working Group on the "Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth". At the Summit, I will once again emphasize that the G-20 should ensure primacy of the development dimension in its deliberations, focus on job creation, promote investment in infrastructure as a means of stimulating global growth and create potential in developing countries to sustain higher growth in the medium term. There is also an urgent need to reform institutions of global political and economic governance. I am happy that the Russian Presidency has paid special attention to these issues in the G-20 agenda this year, particularly through a new financing for investment initiative. I look forward to constructive discussions and decisions on these issues during the St. Petersburg Summit.

St. Petersburg is also the place where the idea of the BRIC grouping was born in July 2006. As per the practice during the last few G-20 Summits, an informal meeting of BRICS Leaders will be held on the margins of the G-20 meeting to exchange views on the agenda of the Summit. This will also provide an opportunity to review progress in the implementation of important decisions taken at the Fifth BRICS Summit in Durban on 27 March 2013 and review global developments.

The Summit comes at a time when we in India have introduced several reform measures and taken steps to strengthen macro-economic stability, stabilize the Rupee and create a more investor-friendly environment. At the same time, a stable and supportive external economic environment is also required to revive economic growth. The G 20 Summit, therefore, is an important forum to seek an international climate that is beneficial for all countries.

I also look forward to bilateral meetings with other G-20 Leaders on the margins of the Summit.”

101. Media Interaction by Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs on Prime Minister’s Special Flight on way to St. Petersburg.

September 5, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning friends. We have here with us Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs, Dr. Arvind Mayaram who will speak to you on the G20 Summit.

What we will do is, as is usual I will request him to make a few opening remarks and then he is willing to answer questions on the G20. In case there are any questions on anything else, we will take them in the end. With that I will request Secretary DEA to make his opening remarks.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs (Shri Arvind Mayaram): Good morning to all of you.

In the G20 this year we are going to have four major areas over which the discussions will take place: (1) Growth and the Global Economy, (2) Growth and Inclusive Development, (3) Investing in Growth and Job Creation, and (4) Growth and Trade. There will be several subthemes under these four themes on which discussions will take place.

Under the Russian Presidency, the three overarching issues that they have identified are: Growth Through Quality Jobs and Investment, Growth Through Trust and Transparency, and Growth Through Effective Regulation.

On global outlook, it is interesting to note that whereas there has been a concern about the reduction in the estimation of the growth rates in India, in the last one year the global economy has been downgraded by the IMF three times. This is on account of the uncertainties that still remain relating to the recession in Eurozone and also of course the reduction in the emerging markets on consumption demand. The IMF for instance has reduced its forecast from 3.3 per cent in April to 3.1 per cent, and the World Bank similarly has also downgraded the world economic forecast.

We have concerns in terms of the impact of spillovers especially on account of the unconventional monetary policy which has been followed by some of the advanced economies. One of the areas on which India has laid emphasis is that there has to be a predictability regarding the withdrawal of the unconventional monetary policies which are followed as they have a spillover on the other economies, especially the emerging economies. We expect there would be some discussion on this during the Summit.

There is also a concern in regard to the lack of consensus on areas on which we have been laying emphasis such as infrastructure investment for providing impulses for growth in the global economy. There is a general consensus that the growth has to be sustainable, and on this account India is contributing through its own policy papers, etc.

One new area which is now being looked at relates to tax issues. OECD has a project on base erosion and profit shifting. And there is a resonance of India's position that there is a need for having new standards which are developed through consensus to keep pace with the larger economic integration across borders to ensure that the countries do not lose out on the tax that is due to them.

On trade related issues, one of the areas of great concern to India is the effort by some of the emerging countries to roll back the trade related agreements that have been reached especially in terms of the movement of labour. Our position is that there should be no roll back from that position and the earlier regimes that permitted movement of labour for the purposes of providing services should be retained.

On infrastructure development and investment, India has prepared and circulated a paper in which we have laid emphasis not only on the development of capital markets especially the domestic capital markets but also in enhancing the resource base of multilateral development agencies and regional development agencies to provide much-needed capital for the developing countries.

Broadly, these are the areas on which the discussions will take place. I would be happy to take any questions that you would have on this account.

Q: Sir, you spoke about exit from the monetary stimulus by the West, that India is going to raise that issue. But most of our problems are domestic. Like on fiscal front the reforms are not happening. So, how are you going to convince the West about all those issues? It is not just the problem from the western markets. Also, the currency. The Government has said many a times that most of the currencies of the emerging markets have taken a beating. Why is Indian currency the worst hit of all the currencies?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I would like to answer the question in two parts. First, I do not believe it is a correct position that structural reforms have not taken place in the recent past. There is a large number of reforms that have been undertaken. Some path-breaking decisions have taken place a list of which I can provide to you any time. There is a long list of the reforms that have taken place. These have been seen by the investors. And, therefore, I would only indicate one indicator which perhaps would give you a flavour of why this perception may not be correct.

In the first quarter of this year India has received FDI worth nine billion dollars as against five billion dollars in the first quarter of the last year. This clearly shows that the foreign investors, especially the long-term investors, are beginning to find traction in the India's policy reforms that are taking place. So, whereas there is a case for greater reforms, there is a case for deepening the reforms. But I think there is no reason to believe that reforms are not taking place.

Second, as far as the easing of the monetary policy, or the roll back in the monetary policies which are unconventional monetary policies which have been followed, is concerned it is now globally accepted that the liquidity which was there in the markets initially created problems of excess for us. And now it is creating a problem where this capital is being pulled out of the emerging markets.

This problem is arising also from the fact that we are a globalised economy and we are an open economy, and that is why we do not have any controls on capital flows. So, when the emerging markets are pulling back on the liberal policies that they were following, there is an uncertainty in the market and, therefore, the money moves out of India and other emerging markets, and it has an impact on our currency per se.

Now to the question that you are asking – why Indian currency is being hit more than other currencies – the answer is quite obvious. India's current account deficit is the highest amongst all the economies if you look at them. In fact I have the numbers here. I can give you the numbers for each country where you would see there is a direct correlation between the level of current account deficit and the percentage of depreciation that has taken place, since May 20. So, the perception that current account deficit in India is very high is certainly contributing to the weakening of the Rupee.

But I must also state here very clearly and strongly that the Finance Minister's statement two weeks ago that we shall contain current account deficit at 3.7 per cent of the GDP this year is the red line that shall not be breached, and we are working towards that. We have a very credible programme which of course the Finance Minister had presented before the nation two weeks ago. We are working towards that and we will ensure that the current account deficit is not just 3.7 per cent but perhaps we might surprise you with a little lesser than 3.7 per cent.

Now the question is of transmission. This belief that it will happen has to be transmitted to the general markets. That transmission takes a little while. Last year when we were looking at fiscal deficit from a level which the Kelkar Committee had predicted of 6.4 per cent, we brought the fiscal deficit down to 4.9 per cent. Nobody ever believed it could happen. It happened. That time too the Finance Minister said there is a red line and we will not breach that red line. So, let me assure you, this year we shall not breach the red line on current account deficit, and it shall not be higher than 3.7 per cent.

Q: When it comes to actual negotiations or discussions with the G20 leaders, particularly the US following QE3, what recourse does India have apart from moral suasion or persuasion in this? Does India reserve the right to insulate itself from the adverse consequences of any withdrawal? Having adopted globalization and if there is no interconnected network for stabilization of growth, does India reserve the option to take any suitable measures to stabilize its own economy? Is there a lever that we have at all in G20?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: Once again, the question has two parts. First is, do we have a lever in the G20? The position that India is taking is also the position that the other emerging markets are taking. For instance, China, Brazil, South Africa, are the countries who are very much on board and it is not simply India which is concerned with this. These are all the other emerging market countries which are also concerned with this.

Therefore, I do not believe that our voices are not heard. And this is a reason why even in the last meeting of the Finance Ministers of the G20 our concern found a mention in the declaration. Obviously, G20 is not a decision-making body. It is certainly a body which creates consensus, which creates a general awareness. And to the extent that our voices are strong and our voices are clear and our thinking is clear, it is heard and heard with respect.

The second part of your question is, do we have the right or do we reserve the right to protect ourselves? Certainly every country reserves the right to protect itself. But the question is, do we need to do something which will be drastic in nature? I do not believe we have that situation where that would be required. I think we are very much in control and I think we will be able to manage the situation without having to resort to any drastic measures.

Q: Sir, two small questions. When you say that developed world is following unconventional monetary policies what do you exactly mean by that? Second, in a recent report the European Commission has accused India along with China and other emerging economies, of following abusive trade practices and turning their back from free trade. How do you react to that?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: The first part is, unconventional monetary policies are those which are against the conventional wisdom. The conventional wisdom always has been that if you are going to create too much of liquidity, you continue to create too much of a liquidity, it is going to create inflation or other kind of problems in countries. But where you have open borders, it also has spillover effect on other countries. If you look at Japan for instance, Japan is following a policy where they are not only doing quantitative easing but they are also saying we are going to inflate the economy, create some inflation in the economy.

Well, it is important that every country follows their own method of taking care of their own problems, there is no issue with that. Our point is only this that if you follow an unconventional monetary policy which has spillover effects, then it is important that these are deliberated upon and the measures which are taken are calibrated and are predictable. That is the only point that we make on this part.

As far as the European Union's statement is concerned, I do not believe we are following any trade practices which are against any of our international obligations. Of course there are non-trade barriers which are put up by the advanced economies as and when they need to protect their own trade or industry, and we believe that it is a retrograde step and we should not support any of those measures that they take, especially, as I had mentioned earlier in the case of movement of labour, in the services sector.

Q: The Finance Minister recently said in the Rajya Sabha that the steps and decisions taken between 2009 and 2012 to a certain are responsible for the state of the economy. Would you like to say something on that? (free translation from Hindi text)

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I would not comment on anything that the Minister said in the Parliament.

Q: As we head into the G20, a couple of major headwinds in terms of the data. One, the crude is back at 112 dollars to the barrel. This is the Indian basket which is what we buy at. And the second is, S&P comment yesterday which caused a lot of turmoil in the markets saying that India now stands close to a downgrade - not the exact words but effectively saying that - and that therefore, contradicting in some ways what the Indian Government has been doing and saying as far as restoring fiscal discipline is concerned. Your response on both these issues, Sir.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: On the first issue, it is a matter of concern for us because when the oil prices go up, it increases our forex requirement and also it has an impact on the subsidies. So, it is a matter of concern for us. Therefore, you would have seen in the past couple of days there has been a major effort to bring some measures in to restrict the oil imports, and I believe that we will continue to work towards that.

What S&P said has to be carefully seen. They said two things. One, the chances of India getting a downgrade in the next three years has increased by 33 per cent. Now, I would be really interested in knowing why it is 33, not 32 and a half or 34 and one quarter. How 33 per cent, the mathematical model which gives you in next three years to be able to do crystal gazing and say that. So, to my mind it should be taken in the manner in which it has been stated.

I do not think we have any case for downgrade. We have raised this issue in the past. We have taken measures. We are taking measures which are, to the extent possible, stabilizing the economy despite the headwinds which are global in nature. Therefore, I do not believe there is any case for downgrade. Whether 33 per cent or 23 and a half per cent, I do not believe that there is any mathematical model which can tell you that in the next three years India is going to be downgraded.

Q: About ten days ago the Federal Reserve Governors and Economists in the US had a meeting where pressure was brought upon Mexico as well as IMF asking for not to taper down the quantitative easing programme. And their response which has been reported is that we are here to make policies for ourselves, and the third world emerging countries can take care of themselves, we are not bothered about it. You say that you are going to raise issues about monetary policies. Actually it does not matter to them whether you raise it or not.

On the other hand, by the same logic, we have this issue and your Oil Minister has written both to the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister that we should step up our oil imports from Iran which seems to be very viable and it is backed by sufficient logic to go ahead for it and buy oil from Iran by paying in rupees. Are we seriously pursuing that option?

If their crisis and if their economic situation is in their interest and the policies are tailored to that, why do not we go ahead and do it? Why do we have to really oblige to US in not importing oil from Iran?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: On the first question about the response in the US to the demand that the quantitative easing should not be done in the manner in which it is being done, you would recall that the response that you have just mentioned came from the Chairmen of two State Federal Reserves. They belonged to two States. It was not the Federal Reserve of US which gave a statement of that nature. You would see that the United States is a democratic country like we are. In India also we have several opinions which are voiced, but what is the considered voice of the Government of India in international fora is determined at a different level. So, I believe that the issue that this is a major concern for emerging markets is very much understood and will be discussed in the G20; and I do believe that, as I mentioned earlier, our voice will be heard with respect.

The issue of oil from Iran, we know that there are certain international sanctions under which the global community operates. We intend to remain within those parameters which are laid down by the UN sanctions and within that whatever we have to do to protect the interest of the country in terms of our oil security, we are already taking those measures.

Q: On the base erosion and profit shifting issue at the G20, there is a view that it is not in the interest of the emerging markets to go after corporations in this manner because as it is there is a lot of global volatility and this is a matter that interests the advanced economies but we have nothing to gain by scaring off corporates at a time like this when we should actually be incentivising them to invest.

Secondly, I just wanted to come back to this S&P issue once again. For more than a year and a half now ever since the time when Pranab Mukherjee was Finance Minister we have had economic administrators in Delhi assuring us that the rating agencies are wrong, or underplaying whatever downgrades or other predictions they have made. But the events of the past few months have actually proved that they have been right all along. Now S&P is saying that our sovereign rating might be reduced to junk status. Now you have again assured us that this is not something to be overly bothered by. But, if this happens, do not you think there will be greater flight of capital, and would it not contribute to a grave situation?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: What are the three big parameters that you would look at if you were going to do a rating of a country? First is growth. You would say our growth is slowing down. In my opening statement I told you that the global economic forecast has been reduced. So, is it only India which is facing this? This is a global phenomenon. So, if you want to downgrade the whole world, I have nothing to say. But obviously this is not something which is only intrinsic to us.

But then there are three factors in India which we have not seen and, therefore, we have become very worried about the first quarter numbers that we have seen. First is, that the first quarter of this financial year has an impact of the spillover of the last financial year's very sharp contraction in the deficit. In over a period of eight months, we contracted more than 120 basis points. No other country in the world has ever done such a sharp fiscal correction. Obviously, that fiscal correction has an impact and a price the country pays. And that comes right into the first quarter.

But in the first quarter the Government of India's expenditure levels if you see, the monies for the plan expenditure have been released in a very planned manner and very quickly. So, almost 48 per cent of the total expenditure on plan is now booked not because Government of India has spent it, but you would know plan is plan, money is spent by the State Governments. And the money has been released to the State Governments so that this expenditure begins to happen. The impact will be seen in the second quarter and the third quarter because this expenditure would pick up. That is the first factor.

The second factor is, there has been a nine per cent expansion in the sown area in agriculture this year over the last year. Therefore, the agricultural production we expect is going to be bumper. If that happens, that would add, we believe, for the whole year at least close to one per cent to the GDP if the kind of agriculture we are expecting happens.

The third is, if you look at the investments in the projects since January up to June, the Cabinet Committee on Investment has given approvals to projects that total to 30 million dollars. These are very large projects. I have mentioned this in the past. The mobilization time from the time you get approval to actual investment beginning is almost six months. In the third and fourth quarters you will begin to see the investments coming in in these very large projects which have been provided approvals. And then there are large number of very path-breaking decisions which have been taken. Gas pricing is one. Providing coal linkages is another.

What I am explaining here is, you have three very major factors which are going to contribute to picking up of the growth in this year for the country. Growth comes looking at the global forecast if we are able to pick up and go beyond five per cent or close to 5.5 per cent in this year, then there is no case for us to say that we are going to be fit for downgrade.

The second is fiscal deficit. Again, Finance Minister has drawn a red line at 4.8 per cent this year. We have said that whatever it takes, that 4.8 per cent will be met. You have seen in the last year that we actually did so. We contracted the deficit by 120 points. So, there is no reason why you should not believe we will keep the fiscal deficit this year either. So, there is no case for downgrade on account of fiscal deficit.

On current account deficit, I have said there is a red line of 3.7 per cent, I am willing to say to you a whole list of things that we are doing and which is going to keep it at 3.7 per cent. There is no case for downgrade there. Now, tell me what is the case for downgrade after this? So, I do not believe that there is a case for downgrade and I have credible numbers to prove it.

Q: Base erosion question.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: On the base erosion question, nobody goes after anybody. All we are saying is, pay your taxes. Why is it that Indian companies should pay taxes, MNCs should not pay taxes? We give national treatment to foreign investors: we do not give special treatment to foreign investors. We treat them as we treat our own companies. So, if Indian companies pay taxes, they should pay taxes. Where is the question of going after anybody? I do not see that that should be a cause of concern for anybody.

Q: In your preliminary remarks you made a mention that there is a lack of consensus in the area of infrastructure investment which could give impetus to growth. Do you expect any progress in the current summit?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I could not understand the question.

Q: This is regarding your remark on a lack of consensus in the area of infrastructure investments. Do you expect any progress in this area at the current summit?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: We do expect some progress because the World Bank has been now mandated to prepare a paper. They are working on what they call a global infrastructure facility. The final contours are not known to us. But we believe that some draft may be presented during this G20, and we would like to see what they have to say on this.

Q: You have said in your opening remarks that you will be looking at, though the G20 is not a decision-making body, some kind of minimum kind of statement from the G20 especially on the spillover. You have listed your case for not to be downgraded, and no influx of funds going out from here. What will be the minimum statement that you feel will be acceptable for India at the G20 on this?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I think there should be a very strong statement on the G20 having a consensus on the concern about the spillover effects and also its determinations to work towards minimizing those spillover effects. I think if a strong statement is made on these two points, it will have a major calming impact on the markets in the emerging economies.

Q: At the WTO in Bali there will be discussion about all types of tariff and non-tariff barriers. I had asked this question from Montek Singh Ahluwalia too. Is it desirable to discuss the Visa fee in the US immigration bill. This is equal to all the non-tariff barriers. Is there need to discuss it seriously on the platform of the G-20 or not? If there is need, how serious are we going to be? In the NCDEX or MSCL, do the Government of India need to have a fresh look at that? In the NCDEX there is default of 400 crores. Would the Government have a fresh look at that?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I can assure you that there will be no discussion in the G20 about these. About this non-tariff barrier like Visa etc., there are no country specific in the G20. About the broad principle, as I told you earlier, we will talk. There is also a labour track in that, we would use that track too to raise this issue. There should be no barriers like that. As far as MSCL is concerned, it is under investigation, and after this it will be taken up. (free translation from Hindi text)

Official Spokesperson:

Thank you very much

102. Prime Minister's address at the St. Petersburg G-20 Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 05, 2013.

President Putin, other colleagues,

It is a pleasure to be here in this beautiful and historic city. I join other speakers in thanking President Putin for the excellent arrangements made and the warm welcome we have received.

We have a long agenda but I will restrict myself to commenting only on some major issues.

The world economy is not in good shape. There is some good news of a strengthening of growth in some industrialised countries, but it is not broad based. The prospects for the Eurozone as a whole remain uncertain. Unemployment in all industrialised countries is too high, with no early prospect of relief. Growth in emerging markets, which was strong until recently, and was a major force for global recovery, has slowed down significantly.

The G 20 is the premier international forum for discussing international economic issues. I think we need to reflect on why we are having less success in restoring global growth than we had hoped.

Fiscal consolidation was necessary but the initial targets were perhaps too ambitious. Combined with private sector de-leveraging, this produced a deficiency of demand which led to slow growth and high unemployment. The possibility of these negative effects was known, but they were supposed to be offset by strong structural reforms in industrialised countries that would enhance productivity and therefore private investment. This did not happen, or at least not as widely, or at the pace that was expected.

Faced with persistent demand deficiency, industrialised countries relied heavily on unconventional monetary expansion on an unprecedented scale. This did not emerge from the agreed policy coordination process. It emerged from internal decision making processes in the individual countries, reacting to their respective economic outcomes.

The policy of unconventional monetary expansion in advanced countries had some success but it also had spill over effects. When policy was being loosened, there was a surge in capital flows to emerging markets, which helped some countries finance their current account deficits while generating upward pressure on the currencies of other countries. With markets now anticipating a reversal, we are seeing a large outward flow from emerging markets. Since most emerging markets now operate with flexible exchange rates, they have experienced varying degrees of currency depreciation, posing problems in many cases.

The conventional view that capital volatility should not be a source of concern as long as exchange rates were flexible is now being questioned. Sudden increases in cross border flows not only affect the exchange rate, they also affect credit volumes and asset prices. Such flows led to excess leverage in the industrial countries before the global financial crisis. They are leading to stock market and exchange rate volatility in emerging markets today.

These problems suggest that the G20 policy co-ordination process needs to pay more attention to monetary policy than it has. I recognise this poses special challenges. Central Banks typically guard their independence, and some also have narrow legal mandates focussed on domestic objectives. The impact of monetary policy on capital flows is also difficult to predict since it depends on how markets react, which cannot always be anticipated. However, if we accept the need for coordination of fiscal policy among the systemically important countries, there is an equally compelling case to cover monetary policy in the reserve currency countries. There is certainly room for more extensive consultation and more effective communication on this issue. Our Finance Ministers should find ways of strengthening the Mutual Assessment Process to achieve these objectives.

India has been affected by currency volatility in the past few weeks. One reason for this is that we had a high current account deficit of 4.8 percent of our GDP in 2012-13. This was easily financed when flows were ample. It became a problem when flows suddenly dried up. We have taken steps to reduce our current account deficit to 3.7 percent of GDP in 2013-14, and we intend to reduce it further to about 2.5 percent. Meanwhile, we are taking steps to finance this deficit by establishing a macro economic environment that is seen to be friendly to stable foreign flows.

We will continue to work within the framework of an open economy to restore growth to earlier levels. We have undertaken a number of reforms, and intend to do more in future. The reforms that lie ahead are the more difficult reforms, relating to control of subsidies, reform of the tax system and reform of the financial sector. We are working on all these areas. The new Governor of the Reserve Bank of India has indicated important changes in banking regulations that will accelerate the reform process.

Our efforts at restoring growth will be greatly helped if we have a stable external environment that is supportive of growth. The G 20 has a major role to play in this context. This Summit must send a clear signal of our collective commitment to work together for the revival of growth, which is the only way of ensuring a sustainable growth in quality jobs. We must focus especially on the need to restore robust growth in the emerging market countries, which will also contribute to global recovery.

Fiscal consolidation is important for many countries and must remain a key medium term objective. However, it must be pursued with realistic time paths, keeping in mind the current weaknesses in demand in many countries. On our part, we are determined to ensure that the fiscal deficit will not exceed the target indicated.

A strategy for job creation in developing countries must include stronger efforts to impart employable skills to the labour force. We can learn from international experience in this area, including the experience of industrialised countries. We also need better functioning labour markets in both industrialised and developing countries.

International labour mobility in high end skills has become an important lubricant of global integration across countries. Pending the evolution of an international agreement on these issues, we must do whatever we can to avoid new restrictive measures in this area.

Let me now turn to the issue of reform of the financial system, which has been an important part of our agenda. I congratulate the Financial Stability Board for the very considerable progress that has been made in spelling out the details of improved capital requirements under Basel III, and getting commitments from countries to meet the new capital adequacy standards.

There are other areas that are more complex and on which work is ongoing. This includes development of guidelines for leverage ratios to supplement capital adequacy, regulation of the shadow banking system, and regulation of over the counter derivatives. We also need to develop a framework which can overcome the “too big to fail” problem. This involves identification and regulation of systemically important financial institutions, designing better systems of supervision of such institutions that operate across borders, and developing a cross border resolution mechanism. Good work has been done in all these areas, but it remains a work in progress. We must persevere towards its successful conclusion.

There is a note of caution I would like to insert from the perspective of developing countries. Regulations aimed at increasing the stability of the financial system should not operate to the disadvantage of developing countries. If we cannot moderate the volatility of total capital flows, let us at least avoid amplifying this volatility through the banking system.

As we work towards a better regulated financial system, we must also ensure financial inclusion. We in India, are currently engaged in a massive exercise to enable the large population in rural areas to have access to banks. This is being achieved through the use of a bio-metric unique identification system which establishes identity and enables the individual to access her bank account through a network of banking correspondents using information technology and mobile connectivity. Thanks to modern technology and institutional innovation, we expect to add hundreds of millions of individuals as customers of banks in the short space of a few years.

The flow of credit to small and medium enterprises is an important aspect of financial inclusion. I note that several industrialised countries are taking government initiatives to encourage such credit flows. Many developing countries used to be criticised for such directed credit policies in the past on the grounds that they amounted to an interference in prudent banking. Now that there is greater appreciation of the need for such intervention, we need to share experience in this area. We have a common aim of ensuring financial inclusion consistent with prudential banking.

The reform of the international financial institutions has been a key part of our agenda. The Fourteenth Quota Review produced an agreement which would improve the voting share of the developing countries and achieve a better representation on the IMF Board. We had hoped to be able to welcome ratification of the quota increase in the St. Petersburg Summit, but that has not been possible. We must call for the earliest possible completion of the ratification process, so that the Fifteenth Quota Review can be completed in January 2014 as originally envisaged.

Let me now turn to the subject of development, which was added to our agenda in the Seoul Summit. Much useful work has been done under the various pillars, but most of it involves actions that countries have to take themselves. However, the G-20 can add the most value by pushing in areas where active international cooperation is needed.

The most important initiative in this context is the promotion of investment in infrastructure in developing countries. Larger investments in infrastructure in emerging markets will increase the potential of these countries to grow more rapidly in the medium run and will also contribute to much needed global demand in the short run.

At the Los Cabos summit we directed our Finance Ministers to explore how the G-20 can help, including through more active involvement of the multilateral development banks. We have not yet seen the results of their efforts, but there are several things we can do. The industrialised countries have shown that unconventional monetary policy can be used to great effect. We need to bring the same innovativeness in devising “unconventional development financing” also.

The World Bank and ADB could create a special window for ensuring finance in support of infrastructure development, including provision of finance for ongoing projects which face a sudden scarcity of funds owing to volatile capital flows. Access to this window should be beyond the normal country limits, which otherwise introduce inflexibility. The aim should be to create mechanisms which can increase the flow of infrastructure financing at times when other investments are slowing down.

The active involvement of international financial institutions in critical areas in developing countries can often leverage greater private investment flows to these areas. The IFC has done sterling work in many sectors, and a greater involvement of the IFC in infrastructure financing would help catalyse private sector flows into this sector.

Any significant involvement by the multilateral development banks, notably the World Bank, IFC and the ADB, to promote investment in infrastructure in emerging markets will involve additional capital. I hope the G 20 can give a signal that we are willing to provide the capital.

Another area where international action is vitally needed is in reinvigorating the Doha round. This was the first Round of Trade Negotiations that was explicitly called a Development Round. It has become a victim of the slowdown following the international financial crisis, and the preoccupation of industrialised countries with short term economic revival and reduction in unemployment. We need to get back to the negotiating table with the will to reach a conclusion.

India firmly believes that strengthening the WTO is critical for anchoring expectations about the continued commitment to an open world economy. We are willing to extend the standstill on protectionist measures, but I would urge that this must be part of a commitment to take credible steps to show progress on the Doha Round. We look forward to a positive outcome in the Ministerial Meeting in Bali in the hope that it will encourage all countries to move ahead quickly on the main agenda.

Mr. Chairman,

I have not commented on many items in the agenda because of lack of time and because I feel that the text of the draft declaration that has emerged from our Sherpas' discussions adequately reflects our point of view.

I conclude by congratulating you and the Russian Presidency for the work that has been done to ensure that the St Petersburg Summit makes a substantive contribution to evolving a consensus on many difficult issues facing the world economy.

Thank you

103. Intervention of the Prime Minister in the Second Working Session of the St. Petersburg G-20 Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 6, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

We are all agreed that growth and job creation should be the central message of this summit. India is a nation of youth and our working age population is expected to expand. We are pursuing a massive skills development programme to ensure that our young people get gainful employment so that they can both contribute to, and benefit from, economic growth.

All developing countries must emphasize skill development. There is room for learning from international experience, including that of industrialized countries.

International labour mobility in high end skills has become an important aspect of global integration across countries. Pending the evolution of international agreements in this area, we must do whatever we can to avoid new restrictive measures, which can stifle a sector that can contribute to global growth in the years ahead.

Small and medium enterprises have a leading role to play in creating jobs. I recognise the importance of this sector and note that several industrialised countries are taking steps to increase the flow of credit to small and medium enterprises. Directed credit policies have been followed by many developing countries, and I recall we used to be criticised for them on the grounds that they interfered with prudent banking. With increased appreciation of such interventions, we need to share experience in this area.

Financial inclusion is essential for inclusive growth. We, in India, are currently engaged in a massive exercise to enable our large population in rural areas to have access to banks. This is being achieved through the use of a bio-metric unique identification system which establishes identity and enables the individual to access her bank account through a network of banking correspondents using information technology and mobile connectivity. In this way, modern technology and institutional innovation will help add hundreds of millions of individuals as customers of banks in the short space of a few years.

A key instrument for growth and job creation in developing countries is investment in infrastructure. At the Los Cabos summit, we had directed our Finance Ministers to consider ways in which the G-20 could help increase the flow of finance for infrastructure. Industrialised countries have shown that unconventional monetary policy can be used to great effect. We need to show the same innovativeness in devising unconventional development financing also.

The World Bank and ADB could create a special window for financing infrastructure development, including for ongoing projects that face a sudden scarcity of funds owing to volatile capital flows. The aim should be to create flexible mechanisms which not only maintain the flow of infrastructure financing at times when other investments are slowing down, but actually expand such investments to play a counter cyclical role.

International financial institutions can often leverage greater private flows to infrastructure. The IFC has done sterling work in many sectors, and a greater involvement of the IFC in infrastructure financing would help catalyse private sector flows into the sector.

All this will involve additional capital. I hope the G-20 can give a signal that we are willing to provide the necessary capital.

Thank You

104 Media Briefing by Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission at the G20 Leaders' Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 6, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning friends. We have here with us the Deputy Chairman Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia to brief you on G20 meeting on behalf of Prime Minister.

I will request the Deputy Chairman to make a few opening remarks and then he is available for a very short time for any questions that you may ask. Because there are bilateral meetings in the morning, we will have to leave early. I would request any of you who would be asking questions to be specific and ask just one question each.

With those opening remarks I would request Mr. Ahluwalia to make his opening remarks.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission (Shri Montek Singh Ahluwalia): Thank you very much.

We are in the middle of the session. I believe the Prime Minister's speech has been distributed. He will...(Inaudible)...on two occasions based on the speech. The global economy and some of the international stuff he has already touched upon in the opening session yesterday. Basically the leaders are speaking in different groups. But he has said this and his speech is distributed. So, I can actually answer any question on the speech itself.

Most of the session on the economic side was taken up by the issues of the global economy, what we need to do, what steps can be taken and that sort of thing. Of course it is going to...(Inaudible)... today. I do not know if the declaration was going to be released today. So, you have not yet seen that but based on the PM's speech I can give you a sense of what is happening.

Okay, questions.

Q: There is a paragraph in his speech yesterday where he says that in current global conditions flexibility in exchange rates need not necessarily act as a self-correcting mechanism and help calibrate capital flows and, therefore, growth. Can you elaborate on this? It seems that he is suggesting that some of the regular market forces, self-correcting market forces, are not working at this time given the unconventional monetary policy.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I do not think that issue is actually connected with unconventional monetary policy. That issue is really connected with the fact that if you are going to have surges of capital flows up and down - whatever is the reason, in this particular case we think it was triggered by market anticipation of the taper, there is a lot of thinking - PM was really referring to the fact that people are now beginning to question the proposition which used to be argued at one point that if you want capital mobility, and you want an independent monetary policy, then the trilemma is solved if you just allow the exchange rate to fluctuate.

That is perfectly all right if variations in capital flows are modest and actually reflects fundamentals. It just means that if for the next few years you are not going to get less capital and the market is signaling that, then you take whatever action is necessary and within that framework you keep the exchange rate flexible. But if markets are subject to very large flows as a result of a lot of liquidity sloshing around, a lot of which would then get moved not because of judgments of fundamentals but sometimes judgments of the dynamics of what is going to happen next week and next month, then many people in the academic world are questioning whether the old notion is okay. The limited point here is that you may, therefore, need to intervene at one point.

The other is, you may need to try to be sure that you do not exacerbate volatility. The extreme view of exchange rate flexibility was that you just do not intervene. Theoretically, the exchange rate flexibility people could actually argue that you do not need any reserves at all. I think it is recognized now that that sort of view of exchange rate flexibility is not a valid view. But at the same time, I think the view is that you must have a flexible exchange rate but you have to keep judging when is it that the capital markets are overreacting.

The problem here is, it is all very well for you to judge that they are overreacting but the judgment is most effective if it is done in a coordinated manner, particularly when monetary policy changes are triggering the capital flows. That is what he was really trying to get at.

There is a very good article by a lady Professor - I forget her name, it is Elizabeth something - from the London Business School which is being talked about on everybody's blog and she has outlined all this.

Q: How do you...(Inaudible)... emerging economies coordinate? Are there some practical...(Inaudible)...?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think this is the crux of it actually. A couple of points need to be made. The first point is, and I think the Prime Minister makes it in his speech, the resort to monetary policy was not part of the G20 coordination process. When the G20 originally got going, the initial consensus was, a fiscal stimulus is needed. There was some debate but they all agreed to that.

Then around about Toronto, I think in 2010 or so, there was a perception that in the developed countries, the fiscal expansion, the rise in debt had gone too far and they need to go back to fiscal consolidation. I think in Toronto the signal was very strongly that the time has come for fiscal consolidation. And actually the Prime Minister at that time had made this point that - do not you think at a point when private deleveraging is taking place and credit is also constrained, that if you go in for a very strong fiscal consolidation, it will lead to a short-term depression of economic activity. If you look at the Prime Minister's speech in Toronto, it is there.

There was a debate, there was a consensus, and we were in any case of the view that we must gradually taper down. The view of western countries at that time was that maybe the time for consolidation is very strong. Now, the negative effects of this demand compression were known. But at that time the expectation was that lot of structural reforms are going to be done, in Europe particularly, and those structural reforms are going to transform the situation, they are going to lead to an increase in productivity, they will lead to a revival of private investment, etc. And I think in the PM's speech there is a sentence which says, 'without the expectation', but it did not happen. And so, monetary policy was resorted to.

We did not actually object to the easing of monetary policy. I think the Prime Minister has said that when monetary policy was loosened, it helped some countries to finance the deficit. That includes us. In other countries which did not want to run a big deficit like Brazil, it led to a huge currency appreciation. Mr. Mantega, the Finance Minister of Brazil, that is when he started using the term 'currency wars'. So, the loosening also had some problem.

First point is, Mr. Bernanke says we will have to wind this down. That is not a surprise. What is surprising is that the markets reacted the way they did. This is one of the problems with monetary policy coordination. No country locks itself into a monetary policy as a result of an international negotiation. But I can imagine, by the way most of us knew that this reversal will occur. One problem is that markets can suddenly overreact much beyond what anyone could think. And it is not very clear how you would handle that problem.

There are also technical problems which the Prime Minister has mentioned. Some central banks have legal mandates, and the legal mandate does not include looking at after-effects. The concern about after-effects is not purely what I would call a concern for well-being of others. It is also a concern for well-being of everybody including oneself. Because it is all very well to say why I should I care about the spillover effects of my policy, the point is that you are doing it in a coordinated way, so, you are going to coordinate other peoples' spillover effects. So, while you look as if you are disciplining yourself here, you may be benefiting elsewhere. That is why fiscal policy is being coordinated.

I think the Prime Minister recognized that this is so. I think this is also now well appreciated and we hope that the declaration will contain some acceptance I hope that this is an important point. But at the same time let us realize that when you are dealing with international economic management, between a strong dialogue and a little bit better understanding and a predictability of what is going to happen is a big gap which is nobody's fault. But at least the dialogue will be a lot stronger.

Q: I want to ask you about the Prime Minister's mention on fiscal policy. The speech seems to suggest that if developed economies are entitled to unconventional monetary policies for whatever reasons, given the circumstances India is entitled to its own fiscal elbow room and, therefore...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: There are no entitlements here. Let us put it this way.

Q: Sovereign rights!

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: All countries, we have the sovereign right to consult amongst each other and come out with a mutually better situation. That is true for us: that is true for them also.

One of the newspaper stories gives, to my mind, a slightly over aggressive, sort of attacking the developed countries picture. I think the Prime Minister's speech actually is very carefully worded. I do not think he was attacking the developing countries, but he was kind of zeroing in on what is a complex problem, recognizing that there are a lot of technical difficulties and trying to create a consensus that, look let us see how we can move forward.

The key thing here is reserve currency. India's monetary policy is not going to have any impact on anybody other than India. I am sure they would be happy if Dr. Raghuram Rajan tells them in advance what he is going to do, but we are not a systemically important country from the monetary policy point of view. But the reserve currency countries are. Which really means that if you want to organize yourself, then certainly the Yen, the Euro and the Dollar - and I think increasingly the Renminbi because Renminbi is not yet a reserve currency because it is not a fully open capital account but it is the Chinese intention to make it more of an international currency. So, these are the currencies where monetary policy will affect economies, and it will have some spillover effects that people need to know about.

Q: We were told by the Finance Secretary that there will be a strong statement. You are now tapering it a little bit by saying that it will be reflected.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Sorry, what will be a strong statement?

Q: From the G20 about the spill over effects, especially ...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I do not want to prejudge what the G20, I mean we are very clear on what we have said and I am certainly hoping that there will be a reflection. Let us be clear. The purpose of the G20 is to enlarge the area of consensus. So, I am a little concerned that the Indian press says the Prime Minister is attacking the developing countries and then the next headline is developed countries succumbing to the attack. This is not the tone in which international negotiations are conducted. I believe by the way that the position that India is taking is very much supported by many other countries, not just developing. But there is the other side of the picture also and we have to keep that in mind.

Q: Since you are the Second Sherpa and you were there in that room, did Syria get reflected in any way because that is uppermost on most world leaders' mind?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Syria was not discussed during the main conference but it did come up at the dinner. Since this is a continuing matter, I am happy to clarify what our Prime Minister said, and since these discussions will continue bilaterally I would not comment on what others have said.

Essentially, President Putin asked the Secretary-General to speak on Syria. The Secretary-General used the opportunity to actually explain what was happening, that they have mobilized a scientific team which actually is operating in very difficult circumstances, collected a lot of evidence - this, from what I gathered, really relates to human tissue samples from either people who died in the attack or those who are affected but are not casualties yet - and these have been sent off to different laboratories in Europe. He did not mention where in which countries. He said that they are hoping to get results as quickly as possible.

I take it that what these results will establish is that there was use of chemical weapons. So, from the UN point of view that proposition will get resolved based on evidence. Many people have asserted, that was there. But really if you are talking about legitimizing action, you do need to have some scientific evidence. Therefore, the UN stepping in is actually a very good idea. And he did say that he would make the findings known to the Security Council and to the membership generally. So, we will get information.

As far as Prime Minister's own statement is concerned, he made a number of points and I just want to make sure that I do not miss any. One is that we condemn the use of chemical weapons whether in Syria or anywhere. We do condemn them. That is point number one.

Second, we need to be certain of the facts particularly keeping in mind past experience. We should be certain of what has happened even if probabilities point in a certain direction. I took that to mean that we need to wait to see what the UN inspectors come up with. Hopefully they will come up relatively soon. Prime Minister also said that whatever action is taken should be under UN auspices and not outside the UN framework. He also said that we are not in favour of armed action that is aimed at regime change, but clearly if there is a violation of international law, then the Security Council should authorize whatever action is necessary.

These were the main points that the PM made. It is quite possible that discussions are actually continuing bilaterally and may even continue for the rest of the day. I do not know whether there will be any reference to that in the communiqué.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think they must be having a briefing. So, why do not you ask them?

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think that is not fair.

Q: Despite what the Prime Minister said really about the impact of global monetary policies on India's economy, global economy, just before the informal BRICS dialogue, the Russians and the Chinese both said, they went on record and it was reported by Reuters, that what is happening in India is really India's problem, and that they need to tackle their weak fundamentals, and it is not really linked to what is happening elsewhere. Do we react to that yet?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I have not seen that statement. But let me say, the Indian position is not that we had no problem and then this happened. I think if you look at the Prime Minister's speech, he himself says that we have too large a current account deficit. Mind you, I will go into that in a second, domestically on any number of occasions I think what the Prime Minister has said is that there were domestic problems that need to be addressed. In any country it is never smooth sailing. Problems arise, you have to address them. So, that should not be a surprise.

But it is definitely our view that the exchange rate volatility that we faced, the sudden and sharp exchange rate volatility that we faced was actually triggered by the change in market expectations. In some sense you can say that had this not happened, had markets been totally stable, there would have been an India-specific reaction over a different period of time. But the extent of the overshooting of the rupee was not at all unconnected with the high volatility globally.

The Prime Minister may or may not have said but I think the Finance Minister has recently said and many of us have said that some depreciation was actually justifiable. There has been a lot of discussion on that. The problem is, when it is happening, government officials naturally do not want to say how much is justifiable. But in retrospect let me just share with you that I have seen a lot of studies on what is the depreciation that is justifiable. That basically depends on whenever your inflation rate is higher than that of your competitors, there is an element of real appreciation that is taking place.

If the current account deficit is not actually improving, then that is a problem and you need to address it. So, you calculate what is the correction factor. And that depends on what is your base level that you use, how many currencies you compare with, what is the price index you use both for yourself and other countries. Different estimates, therefore, come out differently. I have seen a number of estimates that vary from as low as Rs.59 to the dollar to something like Rs.65. The highest I had seen was Rs.65 to the dollar. When the Rupee went to 69 or something close to that, in my view that was clear overshooting. I think that overshooting would not have happened if we were not in the middle of a global sort of currency reaction.

Q: There are a couple of points that we would want you to clarify. One is, the entire issue as far as our currency swaps are concerned - and there has been some commentary about it including the 100 billion dollar currency reserve arrangement, and the fact that the BRICS statement said that it will be reviewed or tangible results will be had only by the time of next visit - how does it at all benefit India? Is there some sort of horizon that we have in mind for operationalising any of those aspects?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is a very good question and I just want to clarify my view on this. I have not checked this with the Finance Minister. I do not believe that the current currency swap discussions are meant to trigger putting something in place that will enable us to handle what is the current, actually the current problem seems to have stabilized already. But the purpose of currency sharing arrangement is really building long-term kind of safety nets. The present international consensus is that because of volatility you have got to have some safety nets.

By the way, the very fact that they say that means that they are not expecting that all problems will be taken care of by currency depreciation. If the exchange rate flexibility was a solution to all problems, you do not need any reserves at all except you have got to have some cash if somebody needs a little bit of money. The international view is that you do need reserves. So, the first safety net is your own reserves. I think we have a lot of them – 280 billion dollars.

Second safety net is regional currency arrangements. To my knowledge, the only one that we have in place is with Japan. The one that is now being discussed is the BRICS one. Hopefully they will agree, they have sort of agreed on the number and we more or less know. I saw news reports which I am not denying which give the right sort of numbers on how much is going to be contributed by different countries.

What is not yet known fully is what are the terms on which you can draw from the currency reserve. The usual terms are that up to a certain amount of your own, you do not actually make your contribution into a fund. You keep it with you but you are obligated to deliver on that promise. You can draw a certain percentage of that without any question. Generally beyond that, at least that is what they have in the Chiang Mai arrangement, it is done in parallel with the IMF. So, the IMF arrangement gives some indication of a corrective policy and you go to the IMF with a little bit of strength because you say, we need so much money and this much we are getting from our currency arrangement and you give us the rest. So, that puts a little bit of pressure on the IMF that look you should be helpful, which is good.

We are not members of the Chiang Mai initiative. But when the BRICS one comes into play, which looks very likely now, we will be. But that is not meant to be, we are not counting on that to take care of the current problem at all. So, that is the important thing.

Q: Is there an interest payment involved in the swap arrangement?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I think when you draw you pay some interest. Again that is a matter of detail.

Q: I just want you to clarify this. PM's statement yesterday as articulated by Foreign Secretary says that he is very happy with the currency arrangement especially in the context of the current ...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Let me explain. Markets anticipate things. So, markets factor these things in.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Anything one does should be linked to some benefit. But what I am saying is, I do not expect. With 280 billion dollars of reserves I do not expect that we will be drawing on a currency swap arrangement unless there is a radical change in the situation. So, in the current situation this is like an extra buffer. And you know markets take note of it. That part is certainly good.

Q: That is a leverage point I think ...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Sure It is exactly the same effect as an increase in the IMF quota. If the IMF quota were doubled tomorrow, we would move some of our reserves into the reserve tranche of the IMF. So, our reserves remain the same. But our borrowing capacity from the IMF suddenly shoots up. Not that we are going to use it, but it has a positive effect, calming impact shall we say.

Q: I would like you to come back to that dinner meeting where Syria was discussed.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I thought you would!

Q: Was there any timeline indicated by Secretary-General as to when report is expected? Secondly, was there any consensus among the leaders that till reports come US or anybody else should not launch any military action against Syria?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I do not want to speak for other leaders, that is not fair. But my impression was that virtually everybody appreciated and applauded what the Secretary-General is saying. The Secretary-General did not actually indicate timelines of when the reports would be available. But he did give the impression that it is a matter of days. So, if you were to ask me, is it five days or fifteen days, I would not know. But I certainly got the impression that it is somewhere in that range and not 180 days ... (Inaudible)... I do not remember anyone specifically saying that it is too long.

Q:... (Inaudible)...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is the impression. What he said is, normally these things take several days and we are trying to get it done as quickly as possible. So, I got the impression that it is going to be a matter of a few days. That is it. I do not remember anyone, therefore, saying that they cannot wait for these results. But the issue is not the results alone. The issue is the UN process. That can be a different thing.

Q: When the Prime Minister suggested that the issue should be resolved under UN, were many countries were taken up with this idea?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Let me put it this way not wanting to comment on other leaders, this is not the unique Indian position. There were several who took the same view.

Q: Last week in Delhi, the Principal Advisor to Finance Ministry, Mr. Deepak Dasgupta, said that there was a plan under way and he said it will be operationalised in a matter of days and not even weeks, to make a coordinated intervention in currency markets by emerging economies. Was there ever a plan of this sort? What was the shape of this plan? Did you hold discussions in this regard with other countries?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: My understanding is that it has been clarified by the Finance Ministry, perhaps Dasgupta was misreported which with all respect does happen every now and then, I am not aware of any plan nor do I think is such a thing feasible. But I do believe that maybe the then Chief Economic Advisor and now our central bank Governor, had said that he was never...(Inaudible)... That is what I know.

Official Spokesperson: Last question to you since you are the only lady with us.

Q: We already have a currency swap agreement with Japan of 15 billion. That is in place but there is a lot of confusion on this.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is already in place and my understanding is that it is about 15 billion dollars.

Q: So, we can draw down any time.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: That is what it means, having an arrangement.

Q: No, because there was talk yesterday there will be a further...(Inaudible)...Just a clarification.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I must assure you, I am not the right person to comment. It is really for the Finance Minister and the Reserve Bank Governor. I do not think that we are in a position where we are looking to see from where we can draw down because with 280 billion dollars in reserves, you only start drawing down currency swaps after you use quite a lot of your own resources.

You have a right to draw down. But drawing down a currency is simply deciding to pay an interest on a loan and keep collecting interest on your investments in the reserves. So, it is really not such a big deal. It is really in my view, given the present situation, looking ahead. I think it is important for us to build up this second line of defence. Now that internationally it has become an established principle, we should have more of them and expand the ones that we have got.

Q: One clarification on India's contribution.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Ah! You are not the only lady, there are two. Welcome!

Q: India's contribution to this currency pool, where is it going to come from? Is it going to be the part of our ...

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: You mean the BRICS currency pool?

Q: Yes.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: This is called a reserve pooling arrangement. What it means is that the Reserve Bank of India, let us assume that the newspapers are right and that our contribution is whatever, 18 billion, ...

Q: We have got a release yesterday.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: Okay. I mean it is not yet done. I think the BRICS Summit will actually sanctify it. Eighteen billion - what does it mean? What it means is that the Reserve Bank undertakes that it becomes liable to the other currency pool people to allow up to 18 billion to be drawn.

Now every country in the reserve pool has a certain right to draw. As and when they trigger that right, if 18 billion is about 18 per cent of the total size, whenever a country draws 'x' billion, 18 per cent of that will be given by our Reserve Bank to the country. And then the country will repay it in dollars with whatever little interest rate that there will be. So, it is like a contingent liability on your own reserves. Obviously you do not expect every country to be making such a demand but you keep that in mind in your calculations. That is all.

Q: But you do not put that money aside in an escrow account?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: No. It stays with you. It is a mistaken notion that you have got a pool. For example, when we give money to the IMF, the hard currency contribution, there we do not have the money, we give it to the IMF, we gain in the IMF reserve currency position which is included in our reserves. We have an absolute right to get all of this back plus a little more. And it is the IMF's job to manage the pool so that for countries that contributed money and need it back, there is enough liquidity to meet them. But that money is managed by them. This is not going to be the case in a currency reserve arrangement.

Q: I am the third lady on the floor!

Official Spokesperson: Certainly.

Q: I just wanted to get your general impression from last night's dinner. Did Syria issue dominate the dinner as opposed to economic issues?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: They had a broad ranging discussion. I think Angel Gurría, the Secretary-General of the OECD opened the discussion and talked about some of the economic issues that are before the Summit. And then the Secretary-General spoke on Syria. The dinner went on for a very long time. Actually I had to come back before it finished. So, I do not know what happened after that.

But you are right, the majority of the time perhaps, and it is understandable because all these other issues they are discussing in the plenary forum all the time. So that was the position.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

105. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary and Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs in St. Petersburg on G20 Leaders' Summit Outcome and Bilaterals.

September 6, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends. We have here with us Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs, Mr. Arvind Mayaram, and Foreign Secretary Mrs. Sujatha Singh.

I will request first Secretary DEA, to give you a round-up of the outcome of the G20. Subsequently Foreign Secretary will brief you on the bilaterals. And then we will take questions at the end. I will ask Secretary DEA to first make his remarks about the outcome of the G20.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs (Shri Arvind Mayaram): Good evening everyone.

Broadly the discussions went around the major themes of the conference. The general consensus that was reached was around achieving a strong recovery while ensuring fiscal sustainability.

There was also a discussion on unemployment and underemployment and there was an emphasis in creating employment opportunities. And, therefore, investment was linked with employment where the investment had to be of a nature where employment will be generated. So, for that purposes importance of long-term financing for investment, which included for infrastructure and SMEs, to boost economic growth and development was also emphasised.

There was some discussion on free and rules-based trade. Then there was a major understanding on cross-border tax evasion and avoidance which undermines the public finances. There was a broad consensus that more work should be done to create standards for automatic exchange of information between nations.

There was a general consensus around financial reforms that needed to be effected, especially for building more resilient financial institutions. There was also a discussion on developing cleaner energy.

As far as India is concerned, we agreed with the broad analysis that the main challenges to global economy continue to be weak growth and persistently high unemployment. There is also a problem of slower growth in some emerging market economies reflecting in some cases the effect of volatile capital flows, tighter financial conditions, and commodity price volatility. In our case oil has been one of the areas of major concern.

There was also a discussion in terms of creating a much better format for long-term financing, especially on infrastructure. Our emphasis on infrastructure was accepted. There was also some detailed discussion on the manner in which joint action can be undertaken to create a favourable environment for capital flows for long-term investment from the global capital markets and also through private investments in infrastructure.

There is a growing concern, which we reiterated from our point of view, on the base erosion and profit shifting, especially in the case of multinational corporations. This is a matter of satisfaction for India that whereas in the past there has been a lot of concern expressed by developed countries on our taxation and the manner in which we ask the MNCs to pay their taxes. But it only now fully justifies our stand on recovering taxes which are due to the country as now other countries including OECD countries are having a great concern on this issue of tax erosion and non tax compliance.

On quota formula, once again we reiterated our position that the voice in the IMF must reflect the changed realities of the world. The emphasis that the 15th General Quota Review should be completed by January, 2014 was broadly accepted by all the members of the G20.

There is one interesting new area of discussion which is coming, which is on financial inclusion and also on food security. This is an area where the experience of India has been of great value to the participants. This was especially in terms of the financial inclusion. The Prime Minister did speak of the Direct Benefit Transfer Scheme that we are undertaking and also the food security that we are now going in for to provide this security for the vulnerable sections of the society.

There is a general acceptance that food security is important not only from the point of view of ensuring that there are no sections of the society which are left out from this cover but also on account of malnutrition which continues to be one of the major problems in the world.

This is basically broadly the understanding which has come in and our concerns were fully reflected in the discussions that took place.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Let me give you a sense of the bilaterals that the Prime Minister had.

Yesterday he had brief pull-asides with Nursultan Nazarbayev of Kazakhstan, Stephen Harper of Canada, before that Shinzo Abe of Japan. Today he met President Putin briefly. President Cristina Kirchner of Argentina met Prime Minister. As a matter of fact, it was here in this very room. Both of them had a good discussion on how to intensify bilateral economic relations.

As you are aware, President Kirchner visited India in October 2009 and both sides had agreed to develop a comprehensive dialogue towards a strategic partnership. We have various agreements in place relating to space, geological survey, science and technology, sports, trade promotion, hydrocarbons and civil nuclear energy. There is good investment from India in Argentina of about 800 million dollars in agrochemicals and pharmaceuticals; and we also cooperate in Antarctic cooperation and space sectors.

After that Deputy Prime Minister Taro Aso came and they discussed increasing the swap from 15 to 50 billion dollars. We expressed our happiness at the forthcoming visit of Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko, and the increasing involvement of Japan in our infrastructure including the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor.

This in short were the bilaterals.

Official Spokesperson: Any questions? Maybe we could have first for Secretary DEA and then for Foreign Secretary.

Question: Prime Minister in his statement yesterday asked for a coordinated action from developed world on the monetary policy. The declaration which has been released today mentions about spillover effects but it is silent on any coordinated action on the monetary policy front. Can you just tell us a little bit about it?...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I think it is not correct. In fact, the declaration very clearly says that there should be calibrated effort and coordination between the nations should take place on these issues. It is there.

Q: The question really has to do with clause 14. If you read the first line it says very pointedly that monetary policy action will be determined by central banks with regard to their domestic situation. Further on the same para at the end clarifies on the unintended spillover effects. This is being read widely as a clear hint and this is obviously of particular concern to us that central banks all across the world will continue to do what is in their best domestic interest.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: Actually if you see, the last line of para 14 says: "Our central banks have committed that future changes to monetary policy settings" - which obviously refers to for instance withdrawal of quantitative easing is a monetary policy setting - "will continue to be carefully calibrated and clearly communicated". They will calibrate means, they will calibrate amongst themselves the policies in a manner and communicate it in a manner that there is no uncertainty in the market.

Q: Sir, do you expect the United States, therefore, - and the crucial dates of 17th and 18th September that are coming up - that position to be at all influenced by the G20 outcome?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I do not believe any country would change its policy which will not be in its domestic interest. There is no question of that. I do not think we should even expect it. It is in fact unrealistic to expect. For instance, will India change any policy of its own if it was not in its own interest? Obviously not. But the question here is different.

The question is, when you say it is calibrated it means that you create a certain certainty in that issue. For instance a kind of a roadmap should be known how you will do it. Certainly the roadmap will be determined by their self interest. Any country's self interest determines what the roadmap should be. But that roadmap should be seen and known and understood so that the markets do not speculate, their speculation is reduced to the minimum. To that extent I do certainly believe that there is a general understanding that this is how it should move. And in our discourse with the officials from the US side, they have assured that they have no intention of allowing a kind of a volatility which comes from speculation or uncertainty. So, we do believe that it is going to move in a calibrated manner.

Q: Sir, on the way here you said that if there is a strong statement from G20 on the need to calibrate the taper, it will have a soothing impact on the markets. Now that it has found a mention in the statement, what kind of impact do you reckon this will have on the markets? Per se on the Rupee do you think this will have an impact?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I do not know whether this will have an effect or not but certainly the policies of Government of India are having a good soothing effect on the Rupee because today it has ended very sharply I think at 65 or something. It is not a single statement which makes a difference. It has to be overall how the domestic policies and how the international environment is working on this. So, I would think that there should be less volatility.

Of course, let us see. There are other effects also. There are other developments that can take place. There are geopolitical developments that take place which can have an impact adversely. So, we do not know. But to the extent of the uncertainty relating to quantitative easing, I certainly believe that a much greater comfort will be there than it was before this statement.

Q: Behind the scenes, was there conflict on the need to include this? Which countries supported the inclusion of this particular spillover clause and which countries were opposed to it?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: There is no conflict. You talk on wordings, what wordings should come in or not come in, whether it should be calibrated or it should be some other word. Those are the discussions which happen. I do not think there is any conflict in these matters. Therefore, at the end of the day the consensus that emerges is more important.

Q: Do you believe that the consensus in the declaration takes note of India's concern and, therefore, could be seen as some kind of an affirmation or commitment that will help India in terms of ...?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I certainly believe so.

Q: On taxation, there is a clear para in the reference, in the declaration that profits should be taxed only in the country where the activity takes place and, therefore, in case of transfer pricing involving let us say software operations happening in India, do you think it really removes the ambiguity so that India gains on taxation? Is there any imperative or implications that you want to mention?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I would suggest let us not look at it in a very specific manner because obviously international discussions do not happen on specific clauses like transfer pricing. That is not how they operate. The principle that countries have a right to tax profits where they are made, that principle is being accepted. And, therefore, it only validates our position when we say that we are going to tax profits that are made in India and it is a valid aspiration of any country to do so. I think that has been accepted and that I think is an important landmark for a global understanding on this.

Q: You talked about financial inclusion, about the DBT and the Food Security Bill. Did Prime Minister hard sell these ideas to other countries or what exactly were you attempting, factoring was included in the statement itself?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: One, I never mentioned Bill. I spoke of food security. Food security has not come out of our statement. Food security is something which has come out of the general understanding in the global community that food security is a very important aspect now which cuts across all the countries of the world. Therefore, what I mentioned to you was that the statement which we are making is basically speaking of these issues which are now concerning the world. We are already addressing them to that extent. We mentioned that we are using DBT for financial inclusion of the people, and we also have a programme for food security.

Q: Basically you all are taking the lead there in telling the rest of the world that they should follow.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I would also not claim that lofty a position. We are only stating that we are doing it and many countries actually came up after the Prime Minister's statement to find out and ask ...

Q: Or in a more humble way is it possible to say that any subsidy bill that India incurs on the ground of food security will be looked upon more benignly in the context of fiscal adjustment?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I think we will just leave it at this that food security is an issue which is now globally recognised and we are addressing it effectively.

Q: Sorry, you were saying that world leaders came across to the Prime Minister and asking.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I did not say world leaders, I said many leaders from the countries were talking in the meeting, came to us. Not just to the Prime Minister they also talked to us about our experience on this issue. So, there is an interest in what we are doing. That is the point I was making.

Q: On Japan, on the swap apart from what has been agreed before, apart from the change in the amount, is there any other detail you can give us in terms of what are the terms, timeline or anything more than that change in amount?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: The broad principle of enhancing from 15 to 50 billion was agreed today. The details would be worked out separately. But because we already have a swap arrangement which is 15 billion dollars now, it is not going to be very much different from what we already have in place. Some minor details may be worked out but broadly it is on the same principles as before.

Qu: But how does this swap work? Say, if India needs 20 billion dollars, will you borrow from Japan that 20 billion at a certain interest rate returnable over a period of time? Is that how it works?

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: What happens is that the swap arrangement works in this manner. This facility is available to both countries. So, if Japan wants it India will have to provide the same. If we need it they will provide the same.

Q: But Japan is hugely current account surplus. They do not need it.

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: I was just explaining what swap arrangement is. I do not even believe we will need it. But it is just an arrangement between the two countries. It is a reciprocal arrangement where any country which requires foreign exchange can call for this support and there is an interest rate which is predetermined, which is a concessional interest rate, which has to be paid for the period for which it is taken. It is like a programme. You take that money in a programmatic manner and then you return it in a particular manner. That is how broadly it functions.

Q: One related question. Montek in the morning was saying that this swap arrangement, you sort of resort to it only in times of need, a really dire need or something. He was suggesting that it is just a kind of comfort. It is out there. But in the context of Japan, you have so many infrastructure projects which Japanese are funding. So, do you think you might sort of use it to drive long-term infrastructure projects which is also a part of the long-term means for infrastructure etc., part of the understanding in the Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: Actually swap is never used in that manner. The instrument is not for that. The instrument is basically to take care of your balance of payment problem. It is specific for that. It is not a line of credit in that sense that you could use it for anything. For the projects the lines of credits are different. So, JICA gives a separate line of credit.

Q: If both India and Japan do not need it, where is the need for...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Department of Economic Affairs: It is a very good question. The problem today is not simply of reality but of perception, and markets behave on perception. Because of a huge amount of uncertainty, because of asymmetry of information, because it is difficult to predict what is in the future, if there is a negative sentiment which builds up in the market, it begins to speculate on the negatives. Therefore, as we have seen in the past 15, 20 days Rupee has come under pressure, etc., for the simple reason that they believe current account deficit is very large, the capital flows are not coming in, there is going to be a reverse flow of capital and, therefore, there is a speculation in the market.

We are confident, as the Finance Minister said earlier, that we can fully finance the current account deficit; that current account deficit would be at 3.7 per cent and no more. We have done our math correctly and we know that this is going to happen. There is no question on that. But the market continues to have a kind of a fear of the unknown. When you have arrangements of this nature, it shores up the sentiment. It provides a sense that there is a wall which is available should there be a need in the most unprecedented circumstances.

So, as I mentioned earlier, we will never use it. We do not need to use it. We are fully equipped to deal with our balance of payment requirements. However, for the purposes of shoring up the sentiment it is a good instrument. And because Japan is a very friendly country, we have very longstanding economic relations with them, we believe that this also creates a much greater confidence amongst each other, between the investors of each country. And now that there is a greater interest on the Japanese investors, as was just mentioned by you, the Japanese investors also feel a little greater comfort when there is a strong economic relation between the two countries. So, we believe this also creates a better format for Japanese long-term investments to flow into projects in India. From that perspective I think it is a very good agreement that has been reached today.

Q: Madam, did the Prime Minister discuss Syria in any of the bilaterals with any other world leader?

Foreign Secretary: It was discussed with Argentina. As a matter of fact, President Christina raised it and both leaders agreed that a political solution was what we should all be trying for.

Q: In the morning they said that the UN should find out evidence ...

Foreign Secretary: That we should await the report of the inspectors and await their determination and thereafter think of a collective response. But the emphasis is on finding a political solution because the region is already troubled and we do not want to aggravate the situation there, or all the fault lines that cut across Syria, whether sectarian, ethnic. So, our attempt is to find a political solution.

Q: You say political solution. Yesterday Prime Minister when he intervened said we are not aimed at any regime change.

Foreign Secretary: Correct.

Q: He was quite focused that it should be done through the UN and we must wait for the UN inspectors, etc.

Foreign Secretary: Correct.

Q: If you want a political solution, it means it is long-term. It is not immediate because you know the Americans are rushing. They were of course outnumbered yesterday but the fact is that they believe that action should be taken.

Foreign Secretary: We would like the Geneva-2 process to start. We believe that all the parties should come to the negotiating table and there should be a political solution.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

106. G20 LEADERS' DECLARATION Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 5-6, 2013.

Preamble

1. We, the Leaders of the G20, met in St Petersburg on 5-6 September 2013, united by our continued commitment to work together to strengthen the global economy.
2. Strengthening growth and creating jobs is our top priority and we are fully committed to taking decisive actions to return to a job-rich, strong, sustainable and balanced growth path.
3. In the five years since we first met, coordinated action by the G20 has been critical to tackling the financial crisis and putting the world economy on a path to recovery. But our work is not yet complete and we agreed that it remains critical for G20 countries to focus all our joint efforts on engineering a durable exit from the longest and most protracted crisis in modern history.

4. Our most urgent need is to increase the momentum of the global recovery, generate higher growth and better jobs, while strengthening the foundations for long-term growth and avoiding policies that could cause the recovery to falter or promote growth at other countries' expense.
5. We understand that sound and sustainable economic growth will be firmly based on increased and predictable investments, trust and transparency, as well as on effective regulation as part of the market policy and practice.
6. As Leaders of the world's largest economies, we share responsibility for reinforcing the open and rules-based global economic system. We are committed to working cooperatively to address key global economic challenges:
 - Achieving a stronger recovery while ensuring fiscal sustainability. We have today agreed the St Petersburg Action Plan, which sets out our strategies to achieve strong, sustainable and balanced growth.
 - Unemployment and underemployment, particularly among young people. We are united in the resolve to achieve better quality and more productive jobs. Coordinated and integrated public policies (macroeconomic, financial, fiscal, education, skills development, innovation, employment and social protection) are key to reach this goal. We today committed to continue our efforts to support inclusive labour markets, with the exchange of country-specific plans or sets of actions, developed as appropriate according to our different constitutional circumstances.
 - Importance of long-term financing for investment, including for infrastructure and SMEs to boost economic growth, job creation and development. Today we endorsed the work plan that helped us to assess factors affecting the availability and accessibility of long-term financing for investment and committed to identify and start to implement a set of collective and country-specific measures that tangibly improve our domestic investment environments.

- Free and rules-based trade fosters economic opportunities. We stress the crucial importance of strong multilateral trading system and call on all the WTO members to show the necessary flexibility and reach a successful outcome in this year's multilateral trade negotiations. We extend our commitment to refrain from protectionist measures and aim at enhancing transparency in trade, including in regional trade agreements.
- Cross-border tax evasion and avoidance undermine our public finances and our people's trust in the fairness of the tax system. Today, we endorsed plans to address these problems and committed to take steps to change our rules to tackle tax avoidance, harmful practices, and aggressive tax planning.
- We have agreed and are implementing a broad range of financial reforms to address the major fault lines that caused the crisis. We are building more resilient financial institutions, making substantial progress towards ending too-big-to-fail, increasing transparency and market integrity, filling regulatory gaps and addressing the risks from shadow banking. We will pursue our work to build a safe, reliable financial system responsive to the needs of our citizens.
- G20 countries have a responsibility to ensure that all people have an opportunity to gain from strong, sustainable and balanced growth. We endorse the St Petersburg Development Outlook to focus our efforts on concrete steps to improve food security, financial inclusion, infrastructure, human resource development and domestic resource mobilization.

- Corruption impedes sustainable economic growth and poverty reduction, threatening financial stability and economy as a whole. We will hold ourselves to our commitment to implement the G20 Anti-Corruption Action Plan, combating domestic and foreign bribery, tackling corruption in high-risk sectors, strengthening international cooperation and promoting public integrity and transparency in the fight against corruption. Recognizing the need for sustained and concerted efforts we endorse the St Petersburg Strategic Framework.
 - We share a common interest in developing cleaner, more efficient and reliable energy supplies, as well as more transparent physical and financial commodity markets. We commit to enhance energy cooperation, to make energy market data more accurate and available and to take steps to support the development of cleaner and more efficient energy technologies to enhance the efficiency of markets and shift towards a more sustainable energy future. We underscore our commitment to work together to address climate change and environment protection, which is a global problem that requires a global solution.
 - We will continue to develop comprehensive growth strategies to achieve stronger, more sustainable and balanced growth in the context of fiscal sustainability.
7. Too many of our citizens have yet to participate in the economic global recovery that is underway. The G20 must strive not only for strong, sustainable and balanced growth but also for a more inclusive pattern of growth that will better mobilize the talents of our entire populations.
8. Cooperation, Coordination and Confidence is what we will continue to strive for.

Global Economy and G20 Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth

9. We have taken a number of important policy actions that have helped to contain key tail risks, improve financial market conditions and sustain the recovery. Private demand has strengthened in the U.S. and growth has picked up in Japan and the U.K. There are signs of recovery in the euro area. While growth has continued in emerging market economies, it has slowed down in some of them. Global growth prospects for 2013 have been marked down repeatedly over the last year, global rebalancing is incomplete, regional growth disparities remain wide, and unemployment, particularly among youth, remains unacceptably high. Despite our actions, the recovery is too weak, and risks remain tilted to the downside. In the last months financial market volatility has increased.
10. We consider the main challenges to the global economy to be:
 - Weak growth and persistently high unemployment, particularly among youth, and the need for more inclusive growth in many economies;
 - Financial market fragmentation in Europe and the decisive implementation of banking union;
 - Slower growth in some emerging market economies, reflecting in some cases the effect of volatile capital flows, tighter financial conditions and commodity price volatility, as well as domestic structural challenges;
 - Insufficient levels of private investment in many countries, in part due to continuing market uncertainties, as well as internal rigidities;
 - High public debt and its sustainability in some countries that need to be addressed while properly supporting the recovery in the near-term, especially in countries with the highest actual and projected debt to GDP levels;
 - Volatility of capital flows as growth strengthens and there are expectations of eventual monetary policy recalibration in advanced economies;

- An incomplete rebalancing of global demand; and
 - Continued uncertainties about fiscal policy deliberations.
11. To address these challenges and to place the global economy on a stronger, more sustainable and balanced growth path, we have built on our previous actions with new measures as set out in the St Petersburg Action Plan (Annex). The Action Plan is designed to boost economic activity and job creation, support the recovery, and address near-term risks to the outlook, while strengthening the foundations for strong, sustainable and balanced growth through ambitious and well-targeted reforms. We will act together and implement all our commitments in a timely manner and rigorously monitor this process.
 12. Our immediate focus is on creating the conditions to increase growth and employment with timely actions that build on the signs of a recovery in advanced economies to make it durable to the benefit of the whole global economy.
 13. In this respect, the euro area commits to strengthen the foundations for economic and monetary union, including through further efforts to strengthen bank balance sheets, reduce financial fragmentation and moving ahead decisively and without delay toward a banking union. Advanced G20 countries agree to maintain a flexible approach in implementing their fiscal strategies, while remaining committed to sustainable public finances. Facing increased financial volatility, emerging markets agree to take the necessary actions to support growth and maintain stability, including efforts to improve fundamentals, increase resilience to external shocks and strengthen financial systems.
 14. Monetary policy will continue to be directed towards domestic price stability and supporting the economic recovery according to the respective mandates of central banks. We recognize the support that has been provided to the global economy in recent years from accommodative monetary policies, including unconventional monetary policies. We remain mindful of the risks and unintended negative side effects of extended periods of monetary easing. We recognize that strengthened and sustained growth will be accompanied by an eventual transition toward the normalization of monetary policies. Our central banks have committed that future changes to monetary policy settings will continue to be carefully calibrated and clearly communicated.

15. We reiterate that excess volatility of financial flows and disorderly movements in exchange rates can have adverse implications for economic and financial stability, as observed recently in some emerging markets. Generally stronger policy frameworks in these countries allow them to better deal with these challenges. Sound macroeconomic policies, structural reforms and strong prudential frameworks will help address an increase in volatility. We will continue to monitor financial market conditions carefully.
16. We commit to cooperate to ensure that policies implemented to support domestic growth also support global growth and financial stability and to manage their spillovers on other countries.
17. We reiterate our commitments to move more rapidly toward more market-determined exchange rate systems and exchange rate flexibility to reflect underlying fundamentals, and avoid persistent exchange rate misalignments. We will refrain from competitive devaluation and will not target our exchange rates for competitive purposes. We will resist all forms of protectionism and keep our markets open.
18. We are also committed to strengthening the foundations for long-term growth through implementing ambitious and targeted reforms designed to ensure fiscal sustainability, boost investment, increase productivity and labor force participation, and address internal and external imbalances.
19. Achieving a stronger and sustainable recovery, while ensuring fiscal sustainability in advanced economies remains critical. As agreed, all advanced economies have developed credible, ambitious, and country-specific medium-term fiscal strategies. These strategies will be implemented flexibly to take into account near-term economic conditions, so as to support economic growth and job creation, while putting debt as a share of GDP on a sustainable path. A number of emerging market economies have also laid out key elements of their strategies to promote fiscal sustainability.

20. Recognizing the need to push ahead more urgently with important structural reforms, we have reset our reform agenda along more relevant, concrete and well-targeted lines. Members have committed to a wide range of reforms to strengthen the foundations for strong, sustainable and balanced growth over the long term by boosting investment, addressing fundamental weaknesses, enhancing productivity and competitiveness, increasing labour force participation, improving financial stability and credit access, and addressing internal and external imbalances. These reforms are key to achieving a lasting improvement in potential growth, job creation and rebalancing demand.
21. We are determined to achieve more progress toward broad based rebalancing of global demand. While global current account imbalances have declined, reflecting in part important reforms in a number of countries, a substantial part of this progress has occurred due to demand compression. In order to ensure a durable improvement as global growth strengthens, we are determined to undertake further policy adjustments toward rebalancing global demand between surplus and deficit countries, as well as internal rebalancing. In this respect, it is essential to achieve stronger domestic demand growth in large surplus economies, increased savings and enhanced competitiveness in deficit economies and more flexible exchange rates. We are committed to actions in all these areas and will regularly assess progress.
22. The St Petersburg Action Plan sets forth our reforms for achieving strong, sustainable and balanced growth. Further, our Accountability Assessment describes the progress we have made on past commitments. We will identify the remaining key obstacles to be addressed and reforms needed to achieve stronger, more sustainable and balanced growth in our economies. We ask our Finance Ministers to develop further the comprehensive growth strategies for presentation to the Brisbane Summit.

Growth through Quality Jobs

23. We remain united in our resolve to promote inclusive growth and more and better jobs.
24. Unemployment and underemployment in many countries, particularly among young people, remains one of the key challenges confronting the global economy and a top priority for the G20.
25. Creating more productive and better quality jobs is at the heart of our countries' policies aimed at achieving strong sustainable and balanced growth, poverty reduction and increasing social cohesion. We agree that strong and supportive macroeconomic, trade, investment, and labour market policies, sustainable public finance, a sound and well-regulated financial system, and resilient and effective social protection systems are the foundation for sustainable job-creating economic growth.
26. Policy reforms to support higher employment and facilitate job creation and better matching of skills with job opportunities are central in our growth strategies. We commit to take a broad-ranged action, tailored to national circumstances, to promote more and better jobs:
 - Improve business environment and stimulate the creation of formal, more productive and rewarding jobs, through pro-growth structural reforms in product and labour markets, including by promoting labour market adaptability and efficiency, ensuring adequate labour protection, as well as appropriate tax regimes and other government initiatives that may be required according to national circumstances.
 - Invest in our people's skills, quality education and lifelong learning programs to give them skill portability and better prospects, to facilitate mobility and enhance employability.

- Foster targeted investments to ensure that labour market infrastructure and effective labour activation policies are in place to help jobseekers find work and bring under-represented and vulnerable groups into the labour market and reduce informality.
 - Improve job quality, including through working conditions, wage bargaining frameworks, national wage-setting systems, and access to social protection.
 - Develop country-specific plans or sets of actions on employment and we will discuss the progress in Brisbane.
27. Coordinated and integrated public policies are crucial to achieving strong, sustainable, and balanced growth, and restoring confidence in the global economy. We endorse the recommendations of our Labour and Employment and Finance Ministers to mobilize, coordinate and integrate, our national policies (macroeconomic, financial, fiscal, education, skills development, innovation, employment, social protection) to promote the creation of quality jobs, while increasing productivity with full respect for Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, to ensure higher employment levels and a sustained decline in unemployment, underemployment and informal employment.
28. The joint meeting of our Labour and Employment and Finance Ministers, organized for the first time, was a welcome step towards coordination and integration of labour, employment and social policies with our macroeconomic and financial policies. We call upon our Ministers of Labour and Employment and our Ministers of Economy and Finance to continue to collaborate to promote quality job creation and job-rich and sustained growth. We encourage relevant international organizations including the ILO, the OECD, and the World Bank Group to analyze the recent experiences of the G20 countries and identify best practices that have been most successful in creating more and better jobs, promoting labour formalization, reducing inequality, ensuring effective social protection and labour market adaptability, as inputs to future deliberations of the G20 Labour and Employment Ministers.

29. Promoting youth employment is a global priority. We are committed to quality apprenticeship and vocational training programmes, finding innovative ways to encourage firms to hire youth for example by, where appropriate, reducing non-wage labour costs, moving towards early intervention measures and effective job-search assistance for different groups of youth, and motivating youth entrepreneurship and business start-ups. Tailored strategies including youth guarantee approaches, developing school and university curricula that support entrepreneurship, and facilitating exchange of best practices among the G20 countries and the social partners are crucial in this respect.
30. We commit to increase our efforts to support inclusive labour markets, better labour market information and effective employment services, which will contribute to higher employment levels along with a sustained decline in unemployment, underemployment and informal employment. We agree that appropriate labour market and social policies can ensure better social cohesion, economic stabilization, support aggregate demand and medium to longer-term growth. Sound national social protection floors are needed, which are affordable, effective, efficient, and socially adequate. Our social protection policies should encourage employment and job-search, providing help if necessary. We commit to encourage the private sector, including small and medium sized enterprises as one of our most important partners, in fostering inclusive economic growth including for job creation and labour absorption. We encourage the IMF as well as other relevant international organizations to continue their research in the area of growth, employment and income distribution.
31. We recognize the importance of ensuring that underrepresented and vulnerable groups are given both incentives and support to find productive and rewarding jobs. Special attention must be given to those groups facing the greatest barriers to finding or remaining in employment such as youth, women, long-term unemployed, low skilled workers, single parents, people with disabilities and older workers. We are committed therefore to develop and strengthen tailored activation strategies for these groups that combine income support for those out of work with measures to improve their employability through job search assistance, work experience, public employment programs, hiring subsidies, conditional transfers and training as well as reduced obstacles for employment as per country's circumstances. These measures should be linked to more general efforts to provide better opportunities to gain formal employment. We call upon our Ministers of Labour and Employment and Ministers of Finance to work together to exchange best practices and to deliver on implementation of this commitment with the support of the ILO, the OECD and the World Bank Group in identifying good practices and effective measures for more inclusive labour markets.

32. We confirm the importance of reporting progress in meeting our commitments and of sharing our experience of effective policies and measures. We consider the database prepared by the G20 Task Force on Employment as an important tool, which allows sharing best practices and ways to address labour market and employment challenges, and serves as an important source of information for the economic analyses and decision-making. This is particularly important for the employment and skills development of young people. We commit to continue to work and to broaden this approach including the scope of the database, to develop country owned and country specific monitoring methodologies, where necessary, and use the database when building upon our country owned and country specific policies.
33. We appreciate the contribution of the B20 and the L20 and acknowledge the crucial role of social dialogue as a means to achieve the G20 objectives of fostering growth, employment, and social cohesion.

34. We thank the G20 Task Force on Employment for its work, and extend its mandate for another year. We ask the G20 Task Force on Employment to continue exploring the issues related to economic and labour and employment policies, and to focus on strategies to address structural unemployment, especially among youth and the long-term unemployed, and on national social protection systems. This will build on the terms proposed by our Labour and Employment Ministers including for sharing of best practices and reviewing progress on the key elements identified on quality apprenticeships. We ask the Task Force to coordinate the exchange of country-specific plans or sets of actions on employment, developed as appropriate according to our different constitutional circumstances, working with the ILO, OECD and the World Bank Group. These reports should include information on the mix of policies and programs that will be used by participating G20 members to address their respective employment challenges. In addition, given the recurring loss to human life and assets across the world on account of unsafe working places, we direct the Task Force to partner with ILO in consultation with countries, and to consider how the G20 might contribute to safer workplaces. We encourage further cooperation and coordination between the Task Force on Employment and Framework and Development Working Groups on the activities related to the labour issues under the G20.

Financing for Investment

35. We recognize the key role of long-term investment for sustainable growth and job creation, as well as the importance of putting in place conditions that could promote long-term financing for investment, including in infrastructure and small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), taking into consideration country-specific circumstances. In particular, we recognize the paramount importance of the investment climate in attracting long-term financing and will take a comprehensive approach to identifying and addressing impediments to the mobilization of private capital and improving underlying investment conditions and the efficiency of public investment.

36. To lift growth and create jobs by boosting investment, we commit to identify and start to implement by the Brisbane Summit a set of collective and country-specific actions that tangibly improve our domestic investment environments such that they are more favorable to long-term investment financing and can lead to an effective increase of implemented projects, particularly in infrastructure and for SMEs. These actions will be part of our country-growth strategies.
37. We endorse the Work plan prepared by the G20 Study Group on Financing for Investment (Annex). We call on our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors with input from relevant international organizations and in cooperation with other relevant G20 working groups to extend the analysis of the challenges associated with the availability of financing for long-term investment to drive well-founded, evidence-based policy initiatives. We look forward to the recommendations by our Finance Ministers at our next Summit informed by the reports of the relevant international organizations.
38. We agree in particular on the need for governments to promote policies that facilitate and encourage institutional investors to finance long-term investment consistent with their mandates and prudent risk-taking. We endorse the G20/OECD High-Level Principles of Long-Term Investment Financing by Institutional Investors (Annex) and ask our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to identify approaches to their implementation working with the OECD and other interested participants by the next Summit. We look forward to the FSB's ongoing monitoring of the impact of financial regulatory reforms on the supply of long-term investment financing.
39. We call on our Finance Ministers to identify measures by the next Summit to facilitate domestic capital market development and improve the intermediation of global savings for productive long-term investments, including in infrastructure, and to improve access to financing for SMEs. We ask Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to explore the ways in which private financing and capital markets can be better mobilized. We also look forward to building on the ongoing work of the Multilateral Development Banks to develop new approaches in order to optimize the use of existing resources, including through leveraging private capital, and to strengthen their lending capacity. We take note of the work underway by the World Bank Group and Regional Development Banks to mobilize and catalyze additional financing for infrastructure investment, particularly in emerging markets and developing countries.

40. We recognize the importance of improving processes and transparency in the prioritization, planning, and funding of investment projects, especially in infrastructure, and in making better use of project preparation funds. Particular attention will also be given to ways to improve the design of and conditions for productive public-private partnership (PPP) arrangements.

Enhancing Multilateral Trade

41. Free trade and investment, and achieving the open, rules-based, transparent and non-discriminatory WTO-based trading system are crucial for restoring global growth. We underline the importance of trade as a key to economic growth, sustainable development and job creation globally and at national level.
42. We reaffirm the significance of the successful functioning of the multilateral trading system and its importance in ensuring proper rules enforcement. A successful outcome at the WTO Ministerial Conference (MC9) in Bali in December 2013 on trade facilitation, and some elements of agriculture and development issues, would be a stepping stone to further multilateral trade liberalization and progress in Doha Development Agenda negotiations, providing new confidence in successful post-Bali Doha round negotiations.
43. We call on all WTO members to show the necessary flexibilities in order to bridge existing gaps and deliver positive and balanced results at MC9. We stand ready to make significant contributions in these negotiations to achieve such results, delivering an early harvest at MC9 and demonstrating the credibility of the negotiating function of the WTO.

44. We recognize the risks of economic slowdown and trade weakening posed by protectionism. We extend until the end of 2016 our standstill commitment; being fully committed to further progress in removing barriers and impediments to global trade and investment, we reaffirm commitment to roll back new protectionist measures. With these commitments we stress the importance of further curbing protectionism through the WTO, and to this end we will endeavor to make MC9 successful as a step towards a successful conclusion of the Doha Development Round and as an impetus for negotiations on a roadmap to reach this goal.
45. We value monitoring of trade and investment restrictive/opening measures by the WTO, the OECD and the UNCTAD. We call on them to continue and reinforce this work consistent with their respective mandates so as to better resist protectionism and promote liberalization of global trade and investment. We welcome the WTO's public website providing transparency over these measures for the benefit of governments, private sector, and civil society.
46. Transparency is a cornerstone of the multilateral trading system. We are committed to timely complying with WTO notification requirements and enhancing transparency through the existing WTO rules.
47. We understand the importance of regional trade agreements (RTAs) and their contribution to trade and investment liberalization. We commit to ensure that RTAs support the multilateral trading system. Realizing that enhancing transparency in RTAs and understanding of RTAs and their effects on the further development of multilateral rules are of systemic interest to all G20 members, we are committed to continue our work on RTAs in the WTO, and share our approach for Advancing Transparency in Regional Trade Agreements (Annex).
48. We support the Transparency in Trade (TNT) Initiative, a partnership between the African Development Bank, the International Trade Centre (ITC), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and the World Bank, which will provide for open use of the trade policy data and analysis system to identify new trade opportunities and facilitate trade flows. We also welcome the WTO's Integrated Trade Information Portal (I-TIP).

49. We recognize the importance of better understanding the rapid expansion of global value chains (GVCs) and impacts of participation in GVCs for growth, industrial structure, development and job creation. In this regard, we welcome the work done by the OECD, the WTO and the UNCTAD and ask them to seek the views of governments and continue their research on the impact of GVCs, particularly in relation to the influence of GVCs on trade, economic growth, development, job creation and distribution of value-added along GVCs. Identifying the opportunities and challenges of participation in GVCs and making available value-added trade statistics may help countries in due course to decide upon appropriate policymaking options to benefit from GVCs. . We call for the OECD in cooperation with the WTO and the UNCTAD to deliver a report in the first half of 2014.

Addressing Base Erosion and Profit Shifting, Tackling Tax Avoidance, and Promoting Tax Transparency and Automatic Exchange of Information

50. In a context of severe fiscal consolidation and social hardship, in many countries ensuring that all taxpayers pay their fair share of taxes is more than ever a priority. Tax avoidance, harmful practices and aggressive tax planning have to be tackled. The growth of the digital economy also poses challenges for international taxation. We fully endorse the ambitious and comprehensive Action Plan – originated in the OECD – aimed at addressing base erosion and profit shifting with mechanism to enrich the Plan as appropriate. We welcome the establishment of the G20/OECD BEPS project and we encourage all interested countries to participate. Profits should be taxed where economic activities deriving the profits are performed and where value is created. In order to minimize BEPS, we call on member countries to examine how our own domestic laws contribute to BEPS and to ensure that international and our own tax rules do not allow or encourage multinational enterprises to reduce overall taxes paid by artificially shifting profits to low-tax jurisdictions. We acknowledge that effective taxation of mobile income is one of the key challenges. We look forward to regular reporting on the development of proposals and recommendations to tackle the 15 issues identified in the Action Plan and commit to take the necessary individual and collective action with the paradigm of sovereignty taken into consideration.

51. We commend the progress recently achieved in the area of tax transparency and we fully endorse the OECD proposal for a truly global model for multilateral and bilateral automatic exchange of information. Calling on all other jurisdictions to join us by the earliest possible date, we are committed to automatic exchange of information as the new global standard, which must ensure confidentiality and the proper use of information exchanged, and we fully support the OECD work with G20 countries aimed at presenting such a new single global standard for automatic exchange of information by February 2014 and to finalizing technical modalities of effective automatic exchange by mid-2014. In parallel, we expect to begin to exchange information automatically on tax matters among G20 members by the end of 2015. We call on all countries to join the Multilateral Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters without further delay. We look forward to the practical and full implementation of the new standard on a global scale. We encourage the Global Forum to complete the allocation of comprehensive country ratings regarding the effective implementation of information exchange upon request and ensure that the implementation of the standards are monitored on a continuous basis. We urge all jurisdictions to address the Global Forum recommendations in particular those 14 that have not yet moved to Phase 2. We invite the Global Forum to draw on the work of the FATF with respect to beneficial ownership. We also ask the Global Forum to establish a mechanism to monitor and review the implementation of the new global standard on automatic exchange of information.

52. Developing countries should be able to reap the benefits of a more transparent international tax system, and to enhance their revenue capacity, as mobilizing domestic resources is critical to financing development. We recognize the importance of all countries benefitting from greater tax information exchange. We are committed to make automatic exchange of information attainable by all countries, including LICs, and will seek to provide capacity building support to them. We call on the Development Working Group in conjunction with the Finance Track, to work with the OECD, the Global Forum and other IOs to develop a roadmap showing how developing countries can overcome obstacles to participation in the emerging new standard in automatic exchange of information, and to assist them in meeting the standard in accordance with the action envisaged in the St Petersburg Development Outlook. The Working Group should report back by our next meeting. Working with international organizations, we will continue to share our expertise, help build capacity, and engage in long-term partnership programmes to secure success. In this respect, we welcome the OECD Tax Inspectors without Borders initiative, which aims to share knowledge and increase domestic capacities in developing countries in the tax area. Finally, we are committed to continue to assist developing countries, including through the IOs, in identifying individual country needs and building capacity in the area of tax administration (in addition to automatic exchange of information) and encourage such support to be developing country led.

14 International Financial Architecture

53. Completing the ongoing reforms of IMF governance is indispensable for enhancing the Fund's credibility, legitimacy and effectiveness. For this reason, the ratification of the 2010 IMF Quota and Governance Reform is urgently needed. We continue to support the IMF Executive Board's decision to integrate the process of reaching a final agreement on a new quota formula with the 15th General Review of Quotas. We remain committed, together with the whole IMF membership, to agree on the quota formula and complete the 15th General Quota Review by January 2014 as agreed at the Seoul Summit and reiterated in Cannes and Los Cabos. We attach high importance to securing continued progress in meeting this objective, including by the time of the October 2013 G20 Ministerial and IMFC meetings. We reaffirm our previous commitment that the distribution of quotas based on the formula should better reflect the relative weights of IMF members in the world economy, which have changed substantially in view of strong GDP growth in dynamic emerging market and developing countries. We reaffirm the need to protect the voice and representation of the IMF poorest members as part of this General Review of Quotas.

54. Recognizing the importance of effective global safety nets, in Los Cabos we welcomed the commitments to increase temporary resources available to the IMF by US$ 461 billion made by a significant number of countries. Today we are pleased to announce that the vast majority of these committed resources have been made available to the IMF through bilateral loan or note purchase agreements. This broad cooperative effort demonstrates the international community's determination to enhance the IMF's role in crisis prevention and resolution and thus contribute to safeguarding global financial stability.
55. We also reiterate that Regional Financing Arrangements (RFAs) can play an important role in the existing global financial safety net. We reaffirm the common principles for cooperation between the IMF and RFAs that we adopted in Cannes, which emphasize the importance of cooperation while safeguarding the mandate and independence of the respective institutions. Recognizing recent work undertaken in this area by both the IMF and G20, we look forward to a flexible and voluntary dialogue between the IMF and RFAs on an ongoing basis through well-established communication channels. We take note of the importance of a dialogue among RFAs to foster an informal exchange of views and experiences in a flexible and voluntary way. In this context, we ask our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to follow the developments and progress in the IMF-RFA cooperation, as well as the dialogue among RFAs.

56. Strengthening existing public debt management practices is important to achieve more resilient public finances. We welcome the ongoing work by the IMF and World Bank Group to review and update the “Guidelines for Public Debt Management” in light of recent experiences. We ask our Finance Ministers to consider, at their October meeting, progress in updating the Guidelines, and review the OECD’s interim report on updating its leading practices for raising, managing, and retiring public debt, including on state guarantees.
57. Events in recent years have shown the importance of debt sustainability for all. We, therefore, endorse continued attention to this issue by the IMF and the World Bank. We also support the implementation of the IMF-World Bank Debt Sustainability Framework for Low-Income Countries and will take the Framework into consideration in order to better inform our practices and promote sustainable financing and sustainable growth and development through appropriate channels. We agree that further inclusive discussions with low-income countries are needed on these issues, including on the possibility of developing guidelines for sustainable financing. We ask the IMF and the World Bank to continue assisting low-income countries at their request in developing prudent medium-term debt management strategies and enhancing their debt management capacity.
58. We note the work undertaken by the IMF and BIS in developing indicators that reflect global liquidity conditions, looking both at price and quantity-based measures. We call on the Fund to carry out further research with a view to develop proposals on how to incorporate global liquidity indicators more broadly into the Fund’s surveillance work.
59. We reiterate that well developed local currency bond markets (LCBMs) play an important role in improving the resilience of the domestic economy and financial systems. We welcome the work of the IMF, the World Bank Group, the EBRD OECD and other IOs to implement the G20 Action Plan on the Development of LCBMs, including through the creation of a Diagnostic Framework on LCBM. We encourage International Organizations, other technical assistance providers, and country authorities to consider the use of the Diagnostic Framework in identifying and setting reform and capacity building priorities in support of LCBM development.

60. We will fulfill our commitment to contribute to a successful International Development Association (IDA) 17 Replenishment, as well as African Development Fund (AfDF) 13 Replenishment.

Financial Regulation

Achievements to date and a road ahead

61. In the past five years, we have made substantial progress in implementing internationally consistent reforms to our financial systems. All major jurisdictions, in part or in full, have:
- implemented new global capital standards (Basel 3);
 - completed the necessary frameworks for OTC derivatives to be traded on exchanges or electronic trading platforms, centrally cleared, and reported;
 - identified global systemically important banks and insurers, and agreed to subject them to heightened prudential standards to mitigate the risks they pose;
 - implemented agreed tools and procedures for the orderly resolution of large, complex financial institutions without taxpayer loss; and
 - progressed in addressing potential systemic risks to financial stability emanating from the shadow-banking system.

The international coordination and commitment to the implementation of these reforms is unprecedented. But we have more work to do. We are committed to maintain the momentum of reform until the job is done.

Towards a financial system that supports strong, sustainable and balanced economic growth

62. Since our commitments in Washington in November 2008 we have agreed and are implementing a broad range of policy reforms that address the major fault lines that caused the crisis, and ensure that all financial institutions, markets and participants are regulated or subject to oversight appropriate to their circumstances in an internationally consistent and non-discriminatory way. Our work has advanced substantially, but is not yet complete. We are fully committed to tackling systemic risk. We are building more resilient financial institutions, making substantial progress towards ending too-big-to-fail, increasing transparency and market integrity, filling regulatory gaps and addressing the risks from shadow banking. We are promoting continuously functioning financial markets by making derivatives markets safer, strengthening market infrastructure and reforming credit rating agencies.
63. We are committed to fully realizing the benefits of an open, integrated and resilient global financial system. To this end, we will continue to take necessary actions in each of our jurisdictions to fully implement the agreed reforms in a consistent and non-discriminatory way. We will enhance cooperation and information sharing.
64. We are promoting financial regulatory reforms targeted at reducing moral hazard and systemic risk and fostering a stable financial system that supports sustainable and balanced economic growth. Thus, we welcome the establishment this year of the FSB as a legal entity with greater financial autonomy and enhanced capacity to coordinate the development and implementation of financial regulatory policies. We also welcome the FSB overall and narrative progress reports on financial regulatory reform, prepared for our Summit, and the substantial progress achieved to date. We support the FSB's intention to review the structure of its representation and ask the FSB to report on this review to our next Summit.

65. We commend the progress made by the FSB together with standard setting bodies and the IMF and the World Bank Group in monitoring the effects of evolving regulatory reforms on emerging markets and developing economies (EMDEs) with the view to address material unintended consequences without prejudice to our commitment to implement the agreed reforms. We ask the IMF, the World Bank Group and standard setting bodies to step up their monitoring, analysis and assistance in this area. Lastly, we encourage the FSB to continue to monitor, analyze and report on the effects of evolving regulatory reforms on EMDEs as a part of its overall implementation monitoring framework.
66. We are resolved to see the financial reform agenda through to its completion in a manner that avoids fragmenting the global financial system. We will continue to cooperate on all financial regulation issues and look forward to further progress by our Finance Ministers, Central Bank Governors and the FSB when we next meet. We will also continue to monitor and assess the impact of financial regulatory reforms on the robustness of the financial system, stability and on economic growth, and on the availability of long-term finance for investment.

Building resilient financial institutions and ending “too-big-to-fail”

67. We reiterate our commitment to implement Basel III according to internationally agreed timelines and welcome the progress that has been made since Los Cabos. It is imperative that the Basel III standards are consistently applied. We therefore welcome the work of the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (BCBS) to assess the consistency of jurisdictions' rules with Basel III and their updated progress report on Basel III implementation. We also welcome the recent BCBS report on the regulatory consistency of risk-weighted assets. We look forward to the work by the BCBS to improve comparability of regulatory capital ratios. We expect the BCBS to finalize its proposals on the remaining components agreed to in the Basel III framework – the internationally harmonized leverage ratio and the net stable funding ratio - in line with agreed timelines and procedures.

68. We welcome the FSB report on the progress made and next steps towards ending "too big to fail". We renew our commitment to make any necessary reforms to implement fully the FSB's Key Attributes of Effective Resolution Regimes for all parts of the financial sector that could cause systemic problems. We will undertake the necessary actions to remove obstacles to cross-border resolution. We reaffirm our commitment to ensure that supervisors have strong mandates, adequate resources and independence to act. We call on the FSB, in consultation with standard setting bodies, to assess and develop proposals by end-2014 on the adequacy of global systemically important financial institutions' loss absorbing capacity when they fail. We recognize that structural banking reforms can facilitate resolvability and call on the FSB, in collaboration with the IMF and the OECD, to assess cross-border consistencies and global financial stability implications, taking into account country-specific circumstances, and report to our next Summit.
69. We welcome the publication of the initial list of global systemically important insurers (G-SIIs), to which resolution planning and enhanced group-wide supervision will initially apply. We look forward to its annual update and to the finalization of a straightforward, group-wide capital requirement by the International Association of Insurance Supervisors by the next G20 Summit in 2014 that will serve as a foundation for higher loss absorbency requirements for G-SIIs. In addition, we look forward to its further work to develop a comprehensive, group-wide supervisory and regulatory framework for internationally active insurance groups, including a quantitative capital standard.
70. We ask the FSB, in consultation with the International Organization of Securities Commissions (IOSCO) and other standard setting bodies, to develop for public consultation methodologies for identifying global systemically important non-bank non-insurance financial institutions by end-2013. We call on the Committee on Payment and Settlement Systems and IOSCO to continue their work on systemically important market infrastructures.

Promoting transparent, continuously functioning financial markets

71. We welcome the FSB's report on progress in over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives reforms, including members' confirmed actions and committed timetables to put the agreed OTC derivatives reforms into practice. We also welcome the recent set of understandings by key regulators on cross-border issues related to OTC derivatives reforms, as a major constructive step forward for resolving remaining conflicts, inconsistencies, gaps and duplicative requirements globally, and look forward to speedy implementation of these understandings once regimes are in force and available for assessment. We agree that jurisdictions and regulators should be able to defer to each other when it is justified by the quality of their respective regulatory and enforcement regimes, based on similar outcomes, in a non-discriminatory way, paying due respect to home country regulation regimes. We call on regulators in cooperation with the FSB and the OTC Derivatives Regulators Group to report on their timeline to settle the remaining issues related to overlapping cross-border regulatory regimes, and regulatory arbitrage.
72. We note the outcomes of the G20 high-level seminar on benchmarks and credit rating agencies. We call on national authorities and standard setting bodies to accelerate progress in reducing reliance on credit rating agencies, in accordance with the FSB roadmap. We encourage further steps to enhance transparency and competition among credit rating agencies and look forward to IOSCO's review of its Code of Conduct for credit rating agencies. We support the establishment of the FSB's Official Sector Steering Group to coordinate work on the necessary reforms of financial benchmarks. We endorse IOSCO's Principles for Financial Benchmarks and look forward to reform as necessary of the benchmarks used internationally in the banking industry and financial markets, consistent with the IOSCO Principles.
73. We welcome the FSB's progress report on the implementation of the principles and standards for sound compensation practices. We reaffirm our commitment to ensure that these principles and standards are implemented in a consistent manner and ask the FSB to continue its ongoing monitoring.

74. We underline the importance of continuing work on accounting standards convergence in order to enhance resilience of financial system. We urge the International Accounting Standards Board and the US Financial Accounting Standards Board to complete by the end of 2013 their work on key outstanding projects for achieving a single set of high-quality accounting standards. We encourage further efforts by the public and private sector to enhance financial institutions' disclosures of the risks they face, including the ongoing work of the Enhanced Disclosure Task Force.
75. We reiterate our call for further progress and encourage adherence to international cooperation and information exchange standards for financial supervision and regulation.

Addressing risks posed by the shadow banking

76. We welcome the progress achieved in developing policy recommendations for the oversight and regulation of the shadow banking system, as an important step in mitigating the potential systemic risks associated with this market while recognizing that nonbank financial intermediation can provide an alternative to banks in extending credit to support the economy. We will work towards timely implementation of the recommendations while taking into account country specific circumstances. We welcome the respective FSB reports and agreed on a straightforward roadmap (Annex) for work on relevant shadow banking entities and activities with clear deadlines and actions to progress rapidly towards strengthened and comprehensive oversight and regulation appropriate to the systemic risks posed.

Tackling money laundering and terrorism financing

77. We reiterate our commitment to FATF's work in fighting money laundering and terrorism financing and its key contribution into tackling other crimes such as tax crimes, corruption, terrorism, and drug trafficking. In particular, we support the identification and monitoring of high-risk jurisdictions with strategic anti-money laundering (AML)/countering the financing of terrorism (CFT) deficiencies while recognizing the countries' positive progress in fulfilling the FATF's standards. We encourage all countries to tackle the risks raised by opacity of legal persons and legal arrangements, and we commit to take measures to ensure that we meet the FATF standards regarding the identification of the beneficial owners of companies and other legal arrangements such as trusts that are also relevant for tax purposes. We will ensure that this information is available in a timely fashion to law enforcement, tax collection agencies and other relevant authorities in accordance with the confidentiality legal requirements, for example through central registries or other appropriate mechanisms. We ask our Finance Ministers to update us by our next meeting on the steps taken to meet FATF standards regarding the beneficial ownership of companies and other legal arrangements such as trusts by G20 countries leading by example.

Financial Inclusion, Financial Education, Consumer Protection

78. We welcome the progress made by the Global Partnership for Financial Inclusion (GPII) on advancing financial inclusion and integrating consumer empowerment and protection, particularly through the establishment of the GPII subgroup focused on Financial Consumer Protection and Financial Literacy. We endorse the extension of the G20 Basic Set into a more holistic set of the G20 Financial Inclusion Indicators, thereby enabling more informed financial inclusion target setting and monitoring. We acknowledge the support from the implementing partners, including the Alliance for Financial Inclusion (AFI), Consultative Group to Assist the Poor (CGAP), IFC, OECD and the World Bank. We endorse the recommendations laid out in the GPII's report, annexed to this Declaration, and commit to further pursue these efforts under the Australian Presidency. We welcome the discussions of the AFI members to establish the organization as an independent international institution.

79. Recognizing the key role of small- and medium-size enterprises (SMEs) for promoting growth, job creation and poverty reduction, we welcome the progress made at the country level to address the specific challenges in access to finance faced by SMEs through the implementation of the SME Finance Challenge and the SME finance Initiative as well as the support for peer learning through the SME Finance Compact in cooperation with the Working Group on SME Finance of the AFI. As the SME finance gap remains large worldwide, we call upon the IFI/DFIs to further improve financial market infrastructure and to support the development of innovative tools to address the SMEs finance challenges and constraints.
80. We welcome practical tools to measure financial literacy and evaluate financial education programs, developed by the OECD/ International Network for Financial Education (INFE) and the World Bank Group, support their widespread use in countries along with instruments to measure youth financial literacy such as the Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA). We also look forward to the development of international core competencies frameworks for adults and youth on financial literacy by the OECD/INFE by our next Summit. We welcome progress reports on barriers for women and youth in financial inclusion and education prepared by the OECD/INFE and the World Bank Group and endorse the OECD/INFE policy guidance on addressing women and girls' needs for financial education. We endorse the recommendations of the progress report on women and finance, including that the GPFI, the OECD and the World Bank Group conduct a stocktaking of promising and successful initiatives to enhance women's financial inclusion. We welcome the G20 Russia's Presidency and the OECD publication on national strategies for financial education and look forward to the development by the OECD/INFE of a Policy Handbook on the Implementation of National Strategies for Financial Education by our next Summit. We support the work done by the G20/ OECD Task Force on Financial Consumer Protection on the first set of effective approaches to support the implementation of the G20 High-Level Principles on Financial Consumer Protection and look forward to their report on other principles in 2014. We take note of the formalization process of the FinCoNet and look forward to its conclusion.

Promoting Development for All

81. Supporting strong, sustainable, inclusive and resilient growth and narrowing the development gap remain critical to our overall objective for jobs and growth. In this regard, we welcome the progress within the forum achieved this year, in particular on:

- Food Security: Support to the Secure Nutrition Knowledge Platform, exchange of best practices through the seminar on "Food Security through Social Safety Nets and Risk Management", and convening the second G20 Meeting of Agricultural Chief Scientists, along with its ongoing work to identify global research priorities and targets and support results-based agricultural research in 2014.
- Infrastructure: Completion of the Assessment of Project Preparation Facilities (PPFs) for Infrastructure in Africa; a toolkit on Urban Mass Transportation Infrastructure Projects in Medium and Large Cities by the World Bank and the ADB; and a public-private partnerships (PPP) sourcebook by the World Bank, IDB and ADB, and progress in implementing the recommendations of the High Level Panel on Infrastructure.
- Financial Inclusion: Enhanced coherence with the G20 finance track through the Global Partnership for Financial Inclusion (GPII) to pursue efforts to strengthen financial inclusion including work to further reducing the global average cost of transferring remittances to 5% including through innovative result-based mechanisms, to enhance financial literacy and consumer protection for the poor and to foster access to finance for investment, for SMEs for growth, job creation and poverty reduction; and together with the IFC launching the Women Finance Hub.

- Human Resource Development: Launch of a global public-private knowledge sharing platform on skills for employment and the development of national actions plans on skills for employment in LICs and of a database on skills indicators.
 - Inclusive Green Growth: Further development, dissemination and implementation of the non-prescriptive, voluntary toolkit of policy options for inclusive green growth in the context of sustainable development, including a workshop with developing countries, and initiation of the G20 Dialogue Platform on Inclusive Green Investments for sustainable development and poverty eradication.
 - Domestic Resource Mobilization: Continued work on strengthening tax administrations in developing countries, particularly LIC's, through both bilateral and multilateral programs, such as the work of the OECD and G20 members on BEPS, automatic exchange of information, the Global Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information for Tax Purposes and "Tax Inspectors without Borders" and the expansion of the work of the World Bank Group and the IMF to support developing countries' ability to raise domestic resources.
82. We acknowledge that food security and nutrition will remain a top priority in our agenda. We recognize the importance of boosting agricultural productivity, investment and trade to strengthen the global food system to promote economic growth and job creation. We encourage all ongoing efforts in the agricultural sector to further reduce hunger, under-nutrition and malnutrition, through increased coordination in the G20 to promote the identification and implementation of effective actions in support of production and productivity growth as well as enhancement of food security and nutrition for vulnerable population through, among others, nutrition sensitive policies and comprehensive social protection systems, with particular emphasis on low income countries. We support discussions in the WTO to respond to legitimate food security concerns, without distorting trade, including those related to carefully targeted policies to protect vulnerable populations. We recognize that the agricultural market situation needs closer attention and that the Agricultural Market Information System (AMIS) is generating better transparency and still needs more efforts to be fully implemented. We reaffirm our determination to implement all previous G20 commitments and existing initiatives including that stated in the Action Plan on Food Price Volatility and Agriculture which the G20 endorsed in 2011.

83. We welcome the Saint Petersburg Accountability Report on G20 Development Commitments, which sets out the progress achieved since we adopted the 2010 Seoul Multi-Year Action Plan on Development (MYAP) (Annex). This report demonstrates that many of our development commitments have now been implemented and identifies lessons learned and it highlights the successes achieved. The Accountability Report underlines the importance of continued monitoring and identifies areas where we must continue to work and opportunities to strengthen and streamline the G20 development agenda.
84. In this spirit, we endorse the Saint Petersburg Development Outlook, which states our core priorities, new initiatives and ongoing commitments (Annex). Building on the foundation of the 2010 Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth, the Outlook frames the approach to our future work. We ask the Development Working Group to focus on concrete actions under the core priorities of food security, financial inclusion and remittances, infrastructure, human resource development and domestic resource mobilization, and to deliver specific outcomes at the Brisbane summit. We commit to improve working practices for more effective outcomes by:
 - concentrating on fewer key areas where action and reform remain most critical to ensure inclusive and sustainable growth in developing countries;

- enhancing policy coordination across different G20 work streams in order to ensure greater impact on developing countries;
 - implementing a forward accountability process to improve monitoring and coordination, and ensure greater transparency of our work;
 - continuing to expand engagement and partnerships with stakeholders, including non-G20 countries (especially LICs), international organizations, the private sector and civil society;
 - ensuring flexible approaches to respond to new priorities and circumstances.
85. We welcome the substantial progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) since 2000 and the success in galvanizing global action to reach specific targets globally, as well as in individual countries, particularly in eradicating extreme poverty and promoting development. However, the prospects for achieving all of the MDGs differ sharply across and within countries and regions. We remain committed to accelerating progress towards achieving the MDGs, particularly through the implementation of our development agenda and our focus on promoting strong, sustainable, inclusive and resilient growth.
86. We support the ongoing efforts in the UN for the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda. We commit to participate actively in this process and engage in the discussion on the direction of the new framework and its key principles and ideas and effectively contribute to the timely conclusion of the process. The final outcome will be determined through an intergovernmental process in which we will all participate, but much preparatory work is still underway. We welcome the contribution of the report prepared by the High-Level Panel of Eminent Persons on the Post-2015 Development Agenda, which sets out some illustrative goals. We also welcome the ongoing work of the UN General Assembly Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing. We stress the crucial importance of collective action, including international development cooperation, based on the principles outlined in the Millennium Declaration, the 2012 Rio+20 outcome document "The Future We Want", the Istanbul Declaration and Programme of Action of the Fourth UN Conference on Least Developed Countries and the outcomes of other relevant UN Conferences and Summits in the economic, social and environmental fields.

87. We call for an agreement on an integrated post-2015 development agenda with concise, implementable and measurable goals taking into account different national realities and levels of development and respecting national policies and priorities, focused both on the eradication of extreme poverty, promoting development and on balancing the environmental, economic and social dimensions of sustainable development. We commit to ensure that G20 activities beyond 2015 are coherent with the new development framework.
88. To improve rapid and effective responses to the outbreak of new diseases that threaten human life and disrupt economic activity, we call on countries to strengthen compliance with the World Health Organization's International Health Regulations.
89. We acknowledge the progress already made by G20 members on duty-free and quota-free (DFQF) market access for the LDCs products.

Sustainable Energy Policy and Resilience of Global Commodity Markets

90. Access to energy is a key factor to achieve better quality of life and to improve global economic performance. Access to reliable and affordable energy is particularly critical to the development agenda, poverty eradication and social inclusion. Transparent, well-functioning, reliable energy markets and sufficient investment are needed to boost economic growth, job creation and sustainable development.

91. To promote market transparency and efficiency, we commit to strengthen Joint Organizations Data Initiative (JODI) - Oil by ensuring greater visibility, more complete and comprehensive data, enhanced access and improved availability, and by maintaining support for capacity building. We look forward to the launch of JODI-Gas at earliest date possible. We note the second report prepared by the International Energy Agency (IEA), the International Energy Forum (IEF) and the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in May 2013 on practical steps to increase transparency in international gas and coal markets. We ask the IEF to come back with a report on progress in these areas before the next G20 Ministers of Finance and Central Bank Governors meeting in October.
92. We welcome the Report on energy-related issues including on G20 work to facilitate better functioning of physical and financial commodity markets. We welcome Finance ministers' commitment to take actions on PRAs as set out in their Communique of July 20, 2013 with a view to improve their functioning through transparency and regulation as appropriate, and would welcome a further update in 2014. We also call on Finance ministers to monitor on a regular basis the proper implementation of IOSCO's principles for the regulation and supervision on commodity derivatives markets and encourage broader publishing and unrestricted access to aggregated open interest data.
93. We welcome efforts aimed at promoting sustainable development, energy efficiency, inclusive green growth and clean energy technologies and energy security for the long term prosperity and well being of current and future generations in our countries. We will continue in cooperation with international organisations sharing national experiences and case studies regarding sustainable development, clean energy, and energy efficiency as well as development, deployment and broader application of related technologies and will take forward work, on a voluntary basis, on corresponding policy options and technologies. We take note of the new World Bank report 'Toward a Sustainable Energy Future for All', which aims to promote access to reliable and affordable energy in developing countries and recognise the importance of the sustainable and responsible production and use of modern bioenergy and the role played by the Global Bioenergy Partnership (GBEP) in this regard.

94. We reaffirm our commitment to rationalise and phase out inefficient fossil fuel subsidies that encourage wasteful consumption over the medium term while being conscious of necessity to provide targeted support for the poorest. We welcome the efforts underway in some G20 countries as described in the country progress reports. We welcome the development of a methodology for a voluntary peer review process and the initiation of country-owned peer reviews and we encourage broad voluntary participation in reviews as a valuable means of enhanced transparency and accountability. We ask Finance Ministers to report back by the next Summit on outcomes from the first rounds of voluntary peer reviews. Recognising the importance of providing those in need with essential energy services, we ask Finance Ministers to consider, in conjunction with the relevant international institutions, policy options for designing transitional policies including strengthening social safety nets to ensure access for the most vulnerable.
95. Sizable investment, including from private sources, will be needed in the G20 and other economies in energy infrastructure in the years ahead to support global growth and development. It is our common interest to assess existing obstacles and identify opportunities to facilitate more investment into more smart and low-carbon energy infrastructure, particularly in clean and sustainable electricity infrastructure where feasible. In this regard we encourage a closer engagement of private sector and multilateral development banks with the G20 Energy Sustainability Working Group (ESWG) and call for a dialogue to be launched on its basis in 2014 that will bring interested public sector, market players and international organizations together to discuss the factors hindering energy investment, including in clean and energy efficient technologies and to scope possible measures needed to promote sustainable, affordable, efficient and secure energy supply.

96. Regulation among other policy levers can play an important role in creating a proper context for investment. Noting that regulatory roles differ from country to country and that regulation remains a country-led process, but in some cases is shared within regional integration space, we welcome the dialogue between interested G20 national power sector regulators supported by regulatory associations and international organisations, and take note of the statement they have provided on sound regulation and promoting investment in energy infrastructure agreed at the G20 Outreach Energy Regulators Round Table in Kazan. In the context of our efforts to promote investment in energy infrastructure, notably in clean, affordable and sustainable energy, and in order to engage all interested parties, we encourage interested regulators to continue their dialogue and ask the ESWG to take note of this dialogue.
97. Many countries are trying to improve their energy mix and use, such as by promoting renewable and/or nuclear energy. Nuclear power is a low-carbon option, but it is capital intensive and comes with responsibilities for nuclear safety, security and safeguards/nonproliferation. G20 countries, whether nascent or established nuclear power producers should strive for the highest possible level of nuclear safety, to foster robust nuclear safety and nuclear security cultures and, as called for in the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Action Plan on Nuclear Safety, we encourage multilateral cooperation towards achieving a global nuclear liability regime.
98. We appreciate the progress achieved since the establishment of the G20 Global Marine Environment Protection (GMEP) Initiative and welcome the launch of the GMEP Initiative website as a key element of the GMEP Mechanism for the voluntary exchange of national best practices to protect the marine environment, in particular to prevent accidents related to offshore oil and gas exploration and development, as well as marine transportation, and to deal with their consequences. We encourage participants to make full use of the website and share relevant information under the auspices of the G20 in cooperation with relevant international organizations in accordance with the GMEP mandates.

99. We recognize the value of multilateral cooperation and coordination in advancing the global energy security agenda through resilient energy markets and welcome the IEA's current efforts to deepen its engagement with non-members and will monitor progress in this regard.

Pursuing the Fight against Climate Change

100. Climate change will continue to have a significant impact on the world economy, and cost will be higher to the extent we delay additional actions. We reiterate our commitment to fight climate change and welcome the outcome of the 18th conference of the Parties to the UN climate change conferences. We are committed to a full implementation of the outcomes of Cancun, Durban and Doha and will work with Poland as the incoming presidency towards achieving a successful outcome at COP 19.
101. We are committed to support the full implementation of the agreed outcomes under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and its ongoing negotiations. We strongly welcome the efforts of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to mobilize political will through 2014 towards the successful adoption of a protocol, another legal instrument, or an agreed outcome with legal force under the convention applicable to all Parties by 2015, during COP-21 that France stands ready to host. We also support complementary initiatives, through multilateral approaches that include using the expertise and the institutions of the Montreal Protocol to phase down the production and consumption of hydrofluorocarbons (HFCs), based on the examination of economically viable and technically feasible alternatives. We will continue to include HFCs within the scope of UNFCCC and its Kyoto Protocol for accounting and reporting of emissions.

102. Taking note of the developments over the past year, we support the operationalization of the Green Climate Fund (GCF). We welcome the report of the G20 Climate Finance Study Group on G20 countries' experiences on ways to effectively mobilize climate finance taking into account the objectives, provisions, and principles of the UNFCCC. For the purpose of elaborating on the issues and identifying approaches to climate finance, we ask our Finance Ministers to continue the work building on the working group report and report back to us in one year.

Intensifying Fight Against Corruption

103. Corruption is a severe impediment to sustainable economic growth and poverty reduction and can threaten financial stability and the economy as a whole. Corruption is corrosive, destroying public trust, distorting the allocation of resources and undermining the rule of law. To provide a better understanding of the factors constraining the economic potential of countries affected by corruption, we make available the Issues Paper on Anti-Corruption and Economic Growth and encourage the OECD, in collaboration with the World Bank to continue work in this area.
104. As a group of the world's largest economies, the G20 has the potential to create unstoppable momentum towards a global culture of intolerance towards corruption. We will redouble our efforts to achieve this goal, in particular by enhancing transparency and closing implementation and enforcement gaps. In this regard
105. We warmly welcome the ratification by Saudi Arabia of the United Nations Convention against Corruption (UNCAC). We will continue to encourage all G20 member-countries to ratify and implement the UNCAC, and encourage engagement with the OECD Working Group on Bribery with a view to explore possible adherence to the OECD Anti-bribery Convention as appropriate. We commit to lead by example by enhancing the transparency and inclusivity of our UNCAC reviews by making use on a voluntary basis of the options in the Terms of Reference to the UNCAC Review Mechanism.

106. We reiterate our determination to combat domestic and foreign bribery, as well as solicitation, and endorse the non-binding Guiding Principles on Enforcement of the Foreign Bribery Offence and the Guiding Principles to Combat Solicitation.
107. We will continue to develop and strengthen frameworks to facilitate cooperation among G20 member-countries in the fight against corruption. We have established a G20 network to share information and cooperate in order to deny entry to our countries by corrupt officials and those who corrupt them, in accordance with national laws and regulations. To enhance international collaboration in the investigation and prosecution of corruption offences, as well as in the recovery of proceeds of corruption, we endorse the High-Level Principles on Mutual Legal Assistance.
108. We renew our commitment to ensure the independence of the judiciary, as well as to share best practices and enforce legislation to protect whistleblowers, ensure the effectiveness of anti-corruption authorities free from any undue influence, and promote the integrity of public officials.
109. We also place a high value on implementing and raising awareness regarding effective anti-corruption education programs to build and reinforce a culture of intolerance towards corruption.
110. We express support for the FATF's ongoing work in the anti-corruption field. Leveraging anti-money laundering (AML)/countering the financing of terrorism (CFT) measures to fight corruption will remain a significant area of growing cooperation between anti-corruption experts of the G20 and FATF as well as increasing cooperation against tax crimes, addressing the risks posed by tax havens.
111. We will pay special attention to combating corruption in high-risk sectors. We commend the efforts to fight corruption in organization of sporting, cultural and other major international events and welcome the initiative to develop a Global Alliance for Integrity in Sports. We also commit to promote integrity in buy-and-sell relations between the public and private sectors, including public procurement and privatization of state-owned property. We welcome initiatives aimed at increasing extractive transparency, including voluntary participation in the Extractives Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) and take note of the progress. We ask the G20 Anti-Corruption Working Group to further follow this issue.

112. We recognize that a culture of intolerance towards corruption will only be achieved if we work in partnership with business and civil society. We commit to maintain and build on the enhanced dialogue between the G20 Anti-Corruption Working Group and the B20 and C20, and have taken note of the recommendations of these two groups. In particular, we welcome the business community's initiatives to enhance anti-corruption collective actions and to develop institutional arrangements to promote anti-corruption compliance in the private sector.
113. We welcome the progress which the G20 Anti-Corruption Working Group is making to implement its 2013-14 Action Plan and commend its Progress Report which is annexed to this statement. Recognizing that the fight against corruption will require sustained, concerted effort, we endorse the St. Petersburg Strategic Framework to guide the work of the ACWG and provide a foundation for the Action Plans. In 2014, we will advance our existing commitments and consider further G20 actions on the global fight against corruption.

Conclusion

114. We thank Russia for its G20 Presidency and for hosting the successful Saint Petersburg Summit, and we look forward to our next meeting in Brisbane in November 2014 under the Australian Presidency.

107 Prime Minister's on-board briefing en route from St. Petersburg G20 Summit.

St. Petersburg, September 7, 2013.

Prime Minister of India (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and Gentlemen, the Group of 20 is on the international plane an essay in persuasion. In that context I believe we had a very successful G20 meeting. The Leaders' Declaration and the St. Petersburg Action Plan are in line with the position we had advocated in the meeting. You have seen the documents. So, I will not attempt to summarise their contents. But I would be happy to answer questions.

We also had a very useful BRICS meeting. The Leaders confirmed that agreement has been reached on the 100 billion dollar currency arrangement. There is also progress on the BRICS Bank which will lead to a concrete proposal by the next BRICS meeting.

On the sidelines of the Summit I had a brief discussion with the Prime Minister of Japan, and the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister of Japan, and we have agreed to raise the limit of the swap arrangement between our two countries from 15 billion dollars to 50 billion dollars. This is something by way of a second line of defence for our currency.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Questions now.

Q: Sir, what are the important takeaways for India from the G20?

Prime Minister: As I said, G20 is at the international level an essay in persuasion about good practices. The Leaders' Declaration and the Action Programme reflect our concerns that the world economy is not in good shape, that all countries who have influence in global affairs must work together to revive the growth process. In particular we have been arguing at Los Cabos that infrastructure development is a commodity which can contribute to revival of growth as well as acceleration of the development process. And that is reflected in the Action Programme and also in the statements that were made by the President of the World Bank that they are working on a world infrastructure financing facility. If that comes about, it will certainly help us greatly.

Q: Sir, what kind of a role do you see BRICS playing in the global economy and India's contribution to it as well?

Prime Minister: BRICS is an important factor in the world economy because China, Russia, South Africa, Brazil and India together command a significant proportion of the GDP and trade of the world and, therefore, whatever happens inside or to the development process in these countries has an influence all over the world. I mentioned that as concrete acts the BRICS countries have agreed to a 100 billion dollar currency reserve arrangement. There is also agreement to start a BRICS Bank with 50 billion dollars, and the concrete proposal is now being finalized and will be brought before the next Summit of the BRICS.

Q: Sir, do you think that the Japanese swap enhancement to 50 billion dollars and the 100 billion BRICS Contingency Reserve Fund together will have a calming effect on the markets, on Indian currency? And now what should be done domestically also to take care of the current account deficit?

Prime Minister: On the margins, certainly what we have agreed with Japan will help. But ultimately we have to get the fundamentals of our economy in robust health. The last week, Parliament has passed some important legislation, economic legislation. That will also help to revive confidence. And we have to work to ensure that the fiscal deficit does not exceed 4.8 per cent, and whatever we can to contain the current account deficit will be put in practice.

Q: Sir, this is a question on the point that you had raised on the unconventional monetary policies and how they should be tackled because of the impact. The final Declaration, clause 14, seems to suggest that Central Banks across the world in the advanced economies will continue to be dictated by domestic considerations including price stability. Was your point of view, therefore, a point that found resonance within the G20? What can we expect as far as the rollback of tapering is concerned?

Prime Minister: There was widespread appreciation of the point that I made about the unintended consequences of unorthodox monetary policies being pursued by countries like the United States and the Eurozone. But I also pointed out in my own speech that I do not see immediate concrete action because Central Banks are the creation of their domestic legislation. Some value their independence; some also have a limited mandate. But overall there was general appreciation that when it comes to consultations on global economic policies, macroeconomic policies, for example in the mutual development process, the countries should be discussing how monetary policies are being shaped, what are the concerns, and how we can soften the impact on other countries. So, I would say that as a general idea there was widespread appreciation. In fact most developing countries' leaders made the same point that I made. And I expect that as an essay in persuasion it was a good idea, and good ideas are scarce in the world. I do believe that sooner or later it will catch attention.

Q: Sir, I need to know how the Indian economy and markets are going to benefit from your forthcoming visits to the United States, ASEAN, Russia, and China?

Prime Minister: I have important visits lined up later this month to the United States, then next month to Russia, and there are also visits planned to ASEAN and then to China. All these countries are important trading partners and, therefore, whatever we may do in these meetings, they create a climate conducive to accelerating the processes of cooperation. I, therefore, sincerely hope that my discussions in Washington, in Russia, in China, in Brunei, would certainly help to create at the margin a better environment for cooperation between us and these countries in matters relating to trade, in matters relating to investment. And certainly, I think, the visit to the United States, if we do the right things before going there, they will have an influence on the climate for capital flows from the United States to our country.

Q: Sir, exactly three weeks from now you will be in New York for the UNGA. The possibility of a meeting with your Pakistan counterpart has been a matter of intense speculation. What do you think are the prospects of such a meeting taking place, especially since there is a view in India that you should avoid meeting Mr. Sharif?

Prime Minister: I have always maintained that we can choose our friends but we have no choice with regard to our neighbours. Therefore, under normal conditions I would be happy to meet with Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, whom I respect, who has said the right things about how relations between our two countries should evolve. But there are certain harsh realities on the ground. If the terror acts do not stop, if those who voice terrorist thoughts move about freely, if there is no significant progress in bringing the culprits of the Mumbai massacre to book, that I have to factor in before arriving at a final decision.

Q: Sir, my question relates to the recent killing of a woman writer in Afghanistan. Do you think that this killing once again proves that Taliban is again raising its head particularly by killing a woman writer? And how is it that Afghanistan forces have not been able to contain these forces? I want your reaction on both these issues.

Prime Minister: I was very sad when I heard about the attack and killing of Sushmita Banerjee. It is a very sad development. She was living in Afghanistan for a long number of years. She was engaged in important social work. So, I feel very sad that such a noble person should have been the victim of the Taliban's wrath. Obviously, Afghanistan still is plagued by the Taliban menace. The Government and people of Afghanistan ultimately will have to make up their minds whether the Taliban philosophy, particularly with regard to the role of women in societies, is the theme which should decide their approach to life.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

108 Speech of Finance Minister at the International Conference on 'Governance and Development: Views From G20 Countries' Organised by ICRIER.

New Delhi, September 18, 2013.

Chairperson Dr Isher Judge Ahluwalia,

Dear Colleagues,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to join you at this international conference on 'Governance and Development: Views from G20 Countries.' I understand that the conference has been organized around 6 broad thematic issues - global governance, food security, energy sustainability, long-term investment finance, trade and protectionism, and growth and employment. In each of these areas, the world is facing several challenges and these are the subject of ongoing discussions in the G20. I congratulate ICRIER and its partners for organizing this conference and bringing together eminent academicians and policymakers from G20 countries, to discuss and deliberate on these critical issues.

As you are aware, it was the 2008 global financial crisis that brought the G20 into the centre of global economic governance. G20 owes pre-eminence to its quick, effective and coordinated response to the financial crisis resulting in the designation of the G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation among its members. In fact the G20 Leaders' process is one of the most significant developments in the history of global economic cooperation as it has led to a significant geopolitical shift regarding global economic governance. It has a different balance of power where both advanced and emerging countries come together as equal partners allowing for a more inclusive deliberation and more effective response to today's complex global challenges and opportunities.

Given its track record, G20 is now moving from a temporary crisis bailout mechanism towards a permanent organisation of global economic governance. Considering the range of complex issues confronting the world economy, and the persistent weak recovery, it is important for all countries that G20 continues to be successful. However, there are inherent challenges facing the G20 going forward. I would like to highlight a few of them today and I would expect policymakers attending this conference to deliberate further during this conference on some of these issues.

Firstly, the agenda setting of G20 has had an advanced country perspective so far. This is highlighted by the emphasis given on financial regulation and on transparency whether it be in taxation or in the Extractive Industry Transparency Initiative (EITI). As the crisis originated in the advanced countries, it is natural that higher capital requirements and asset quality have been stressed in the Basel norms for banking sector. Emerging markets have accepted these norms in a spirit of multilateralism. However in the context of a weak global recovery, we should be careful that the procyclical bias should not be a stumbling block in developing countries. Since growth in emerging markets is crucial to the strength of the global economy, it is critical that G20 find ways to develop strong links of coordination and cooperation and take up issues of importance to emerging economies as otherwise, G20 may evolve as a loose forum instead of a powerful steering wheel of global governance.

Secondly, there is a big challenge relating to mission creep. Many experts have expressed concern that the G20 agenda has been expanding too widely, covering far too many unrelated issues. The outreach process of subsequent Chairs of the G20 is partly to blame as this widening of agenda is encouraged mostly by outside players including civil societies, academics and international agencies who hope that high level discussion and endorsement by leaders will advance their various causes. I am not saying that the outreach programme is a bad idea; I am simply saying that interaction with various players should not result in the G20 losing its focus. I do believe that to be able to play a meaningful role in the global governance, the G20 agenda should be sharper, and focused only on those issues on which it can make a distinctive contribution particularly on economic and financial issues, as premier forum for international economic cooperation.

Thirdly, reforms of international financial institutions of global governance have been among the top priorities of G20. Indeed the G20 has initiated a considerable governance reforms in the pillars of global governance namely IMF, World Bank, and Financial Stability Board (FSB), as well as in many of the Standard Setting bodies (SSBs). However, progress thus far has been extremely limited and far from satisfactory, and some members have not been able to adhere to the commitment on certain reforms by Leaders. Most advanced countries have now clearly indicated their unwillingness to move ahead on IFI governance and capital reforms. This has hampered credibility of the G20, and makes it difficult to progress on other issues as well.

India and other emerging economies have repeatedly underscored the critical role that investment, particularly in infrastructure could play in sustaining the global recovery and rebalancing. The G20 Leaders had mandated the G20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors at their Los Cabos Summit in 2012 "to consider ways in which the G20 can foster investment in infrastructure and ensure the availability of sufficient funding for infrastructure projects, including Multilateral Development Banks' (MDBs) financing and technical support". The mandate had been taken up during this year, but by broadening the subject to cover financing for all kinds of investment, it resulted in the situation that one year later, in the 2013 Summit, they could only just endorse the work plan of the Study Group. This is surely an opportunity loss, and we hope that the matter would be taken up more meaningfully during the next Presidency of the G20.

In this regard, one issue that deserves priority is recycling global savings for infrastructure investment. Enhancing infrastructure investment in emerging economies and developing countries, would have positive implications for rebalancing global demand. At the same time, high savings would find productive use into areas where there is a need for real investment that results in tangible growth and development. The G20 is well placed to coordinate various stakeholders including governments, especially the ones that have large surpluses, the private sector, and multilateral development banks, for investment in developing economies. I hope the conference can suggest innovative ways to recycle global savings and develop viable strategies that overcome the presumed hurdle of 'lack of enabling environment' for infrastructure investment in emerging and developing countries.

Finally it is important to ensure that the decisions taken in G20 meetings are carried forward expeditiously. Leaders at St Petersburg committed to remain mindful of the risks and unintended negative side effects of extended periods of monetary easing while carefully calibrating and communicating clearly, future changes to monetary policy settings and to cooperate to manage their spillovers on other countries. Similarly in the backdrop of the upcoming WTO Ministerial in Bali in December 2013, G20 Leaders have called on all the WTO members to show the necessary flexibility so as to achieve a successful outcome in Bali. I believe that such language of consensus and cooperation is very important for the interests of both the developed as well as the developing countries.

I see an important signal emerging from the St. Petersburg Leaders Declaration with regard to the manner in which development issues are being addressed in G20 forum and that is the clear recognition that the dimensions of development challenges vary from country to country and therefore any policy that is being recommended in an international forum has to be tailored to national circumstances. It is also welcoming to note that the G20 Leaders have taken a comprehensive approach to addressing the challenges of unemployment and underemployment faced by advanced as well as developing countries. While emphasis has been placed on creation of more jobs, the G20 also focuses on generating quality jobs by addressing issues of skills portability, youth employment, labour flexibility and improvement of the labour market infrastructure. Under the upcoming Presidency of G20 under Australia, we must make use of the opportunity provided by the St. Petersburg Leaders Declaration to ensure that we study the complex issue of labour mobility as the free movement of capital with restraints on movement of the necessary skills does hamper productivity.

I am hopeful that the deliberations during this conference will provide an opportunity to discuss the possible approaches to dealing with global challenges at the current juncture in a spirit of cooperation. I would like to thank you for your kind attention and wish you all a very productive discussion. I look forward to the outcome of your deliberations which I hope can be a useful input to the incoming G20 Chair in 2014.

Thank you

HEART OF ASIA MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE

109 Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson on the visit of External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid to Almaty for the "Heart of Asia Ministerial Conference".

New Delhi, April 23, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this interaction. I have two announcements to make following which I will take any questions related to those announcements. Subsequently if you would like me to respond to any other question, I will try and respond to those.

The first announcement that I have to make is about the forthcoming visit of the External Affairs Minister to Almaty in Kazakhstan for the Heart of Asia Ministerial Conference within the framework of the Istanbul Process. For those of you who are following this, this is the third Ministerial Conference. The first was in Istanbul in 2011, I think in November; the second was in Kabul in June, 2012; and this is the third conference.

This brings together fourteen countries which are in the neighbourhood of Afghanistan. Along with them there are sixteen other countries which are not in the neighbourhood or the vicinity but which have extended support for this process. Then there are several other international and regional organizations which provide support to Afghanistan.

This conference basically has three elements. One is of course the political consultations at the Ministerial level. There will be an outcome document at the conclusion of these consultations. The second level is the various CBMs that were discussed at the Kabul Ministerial Conference and how we move forward in terms of those CBMs. For those of you who are interested, there are six confidence-building measures that were agreed to in Kabul last year. These relate to: counterterrorism, counter-narcotics, disaster management, trade, commerce and investment opportunities - and this is the CBM where we as India had taken the lead, and those of you who have been following this would recollect that we had an Investment Summit conference in Delhi last June. In addition there are two other CBMs. These deal with infrastructure and education.

These are the CBMs that we are likely to discuss and plans for these will be considered at the Conference.

Finally, the third element is coherence in terms of the actions of the regional organizations so that there is no overlap or duplication of the activities of these organizations.

The Ministerial Conference is scheduled to be held on 26th of April. It will be of course follow a Senior Officials Meeting on 25th April. Along with the External Affairs Minister we will have the Special Envoy to the Prime Minister for Afghanistan, Mr. S.K. Lambah, who will be attending the Conference. He will be assisted by senior officials of the Ministry of External Affairs, the Additional Secretary Mr. Yash Sinha, along with our Ambassador Designate to Afghanistan. That is item No.1 on my agenda.

Q. Also, could you tell us which are the participating countries in this conference?

As regards your question relating to the membership of the Istanbul Process, there are 14 members and 16 supporting members. The 14 members are: Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, China, India, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, and the UAE. If you would like to know who are the supporting members and the regional organizations, we can circulate that information because it is factual in nature.

At this stage the programme is still evolving and we will keep you informed once the final programme including the dates of travel and stay there are finalized. We are still finalizing that programme.

Thank you very much

110 Statement by External Affairs Minister at Istanbul Process meeting in Almaty.

Almaty, April 26, 2013.

Excellency, Mr. Erlan A. Idrissov, Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan, Excellency, Dr. Zalmay Rassoul, Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan,

Mr. Jan Kubis, Special Representative of the UN Secretary General

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to be here today in the beautiful city of Almaty for the Ministerial Meeting of the Istanbul 'Heart of Asia' Process. I would like to thank the Government of Kazakhstan for the warm hospitality extended to me and to my delegation, and to the Afghan and Turkish governments for shepherding this important process since its inception in November, 2011 in Istanbul and bringing it to its present avatar, where it ranks as the most inclusive regional process that is centered on Afghanistan.

It is, indeed, a tribute to Afghanistan's leadership that we are gathered here today joined by our commitment to Afghanistan's stability and development and our faith in its future. It is also a testimony to the promise of regional confidence-building, cooperation and political consultations over Afghanistan exemplified by the Istanbul process. It therefore gives me great pleasure to join others in sharing the vision of the Declaration we shall be adopting today.

Afghanistan is a traditional friend and partner of India. It is a strategically important neighbor with whom our historical, cultural and economic ties go back to the dawn of history. India's vision of the Heart of Asia process is one of trade, transit, energy and communication routes criss-crossing and knitting the entire region from Turkey to India and other countries of South Asia, and between Eurasia and the Arabian Sea, with Afghanistan at its heart. But we do not see Afghanistan as merely a "bridge" or a "roundabout" connecting these regions contributing only as a transit route, but as a possible driver of economic growth in the region with development of its human resources; its natural endowment including minerals and hydrocarbon resources.

Excellencies,

It is with this long-term vision in mind that India has taken a number of initiatives starting with our Strategic Partnership Agreement with Afghanistan. Our focus has been on economic empowerment of Afghanistan- witness the elimination of basic customs duties on all Afghan products giving Afghanistan the benefit of preferential access to the 1.2 billion Indian market; our planned investment in the Hajigak iron ore mines with the intention of not only evacuating iron ore, but constructing Afghanistan's first steel plant; the Delhi Investment Summit on Afghanistan of June, 2012, and a new thrust on bilateral and regional trade and investment.

India's leadership of the Trade, Commerce and Investment opportunities CBM within the Istanbul process is rooted in the belief that Afghanistan will experience lasting peace only if short-sighted perceptions of competition and strategic depth are replaced by collaboration and economic investment in Afghanistan by countries of the region and the rest of the world. India does not see Afghanistan as a zone of competitive influence and wants it to be an area of opportunity for regional cooperation.

While striving for realization of this vision, we however do not have any illusion that, we can ignore political and security issues that stand in the way. We have no doubt that the greatest challenge posed to vision of Afghanistan is the persistent threat of terrorism that emanates from beyond its borders. Other countries of the region, especially India, are not immune to this threat. An honest commitment to the principles enshrined in this declaration today will have to begin with an acknowledgment of the rising dangers posed by these forces of extremism and terrorism to the future of Afghanistan and the wider world as Afghanistan approaches critical transitions.

We recognize that the solution to Afghanistan's problems cannot be purely military but has to be rooted in a political approach that enjoys a democratic sanction. We are also glad to note that there is wide-spread agreement that an acceptable solution can only be one that comes from within Afghanistan and finds its sustenance from the respect for Afghan society and its institutions.

Excellencies,

The "Heart of Asia" process offers an invaluable opportunity to evolve a joint approach on issues of mutual concern through its pillar of political consultations. The process also offers us the opportunity to fulfill the promise of regional cooperation that was identified at Istanbul, Kabul and Delhi and further elaborated in the deliberations on the Implementation plan of the Trade, Commerce & Investment Opportunities CBM that India is leading. The endorsement of the Implementation plan today is an affirmation of that shared ideal.

Reflecting on progress since the last Ministerial on the Istanbul Process in Kabul ten months ago, we can be satisfied with some progress we have made. I look forward to further deliberations with all of you who are Afghanistan's friends from across the world today. I am also hopeful that we will be filled with an even greater sense of achievement when we meet a year later at the next Ministerial in 2014.

Thank you

IBSA

111 IBSA Statement on Middle East Peace Process. Joint Communiqué on the sidelines of 68th UNGA.

August 23, 2013.

Please see Document no. 367

112 IBSA Joint Communiqué on the sidelines of 68th UNGA.
New York, September 25, 2013.

1. The Minister of External Affairs of the Republic of India, H.E. Mr. Salman Khurshid, the Minister of External Relations of the Federative Republic of Brazil, H.E. Ambassador Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado, and the Minister of International Relations and Cooperation of the Republic of South Africa, H.E. Ms. Maite Nkoana-Mashabane met in New York on 25 September 2013, on the margins of 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.
2. Marking the tenth anniversary of formal launch of IBSA, the meeting was availed of by the three Ministers to exchange views on the contemporary global and regional issues of mutual interest as well as to review progress made by IBSA cooperation since its formalization through the Brasilia Declaration of June 2003.
3. The Ministers noted with satisfaction the progress on the consolidation of the IBSA Dialogue Forum. They underscored that IBSA has succeeded in laying strong foundation for multi-dimensional and multi-sectoral cooperation in a wide range of areas. They noted with satisfaction the positive results of IBSA coordination in various organizations and groupings, including: UN, WTO, WIPO, G20, G24, BRICS and BASIC. They recalled the important role played by IBSA members on the sustainable development agenda, having hosted in 2011-12 three major conferences, and also recalled the 16th BASIC Ministerial Meeting, recently held in Brazil, which reiterated the commitment to a successful outcome of the Warsaw Climate Conference.
4. They stressed that IBSA is an important framework that provides additional impetus to further contacts between developing countries of Asia, South America and Africa, as well as strengthens the spirit of South-South cooperation. Political dialogue among the three countries has positively contributed to the global discourse on issues of common interest. The Ministers reaffirmed their commitment for further strengthening the trilateral cooperation and recognized the renewed relevance of IBSA.

5. The IBSA Fund for Alleviation of Poverty and Hunger has successfully demonstrated the relevance and viability of South-South cooperation through implementation of a number of projects in several developing countries to address developmental challenges. The Ministers stressed the need to explore widening the footprint of the IBSA Fund in regions which have been unattended so far and in countries that need immediate development assistance. They highlighted that the IBSA Fund has concluded 7 projects in Africa, the Middle East and in the Caribbean, and that 9 projects are under implementation in countries including Cape Verde, Sierra Leone, Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam and Palestine.
6. Calling for new models and approaches towards more equitable development, inclusive growth as well as reformed, more representative and democratic global political and economic governance reflecting the current politico-economic realities, the Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to cooperate towards enhancing the representation of developing countries in the decision-making bodies of the United Nations and other multilateral institutions. In particular, the Ministers underscored that the reform of IMF should also strengthen the voice and representation of the poorest members, including Sub-Saharan Africa.
7. The Ministers underscored that, almost 70 years after the creation of the United Nations and 10 years after the adoption of the Outcome Document of the 2005 World Summit, time has come for a decision on reforming the Security Council with the addition of new permanent and non-permanent members. Therefore, they stressed that it will be crucial to intensify efforts with the objective of translating by 2015, the existing agreement on the urgency for action into a final decision and a concrete outcome on this long overdue process. In this context, they reaffirmed their full support for each other's candidature for a permanent seat in a reformed UN Security Council. They agreed to have closer consultations amongst themselves and directed their Permanent Representatives in New York and Geneva to continue to have regular consultations on issues of mutual interest.

8. Recalling the IBSA initiative of August 2011 to send a joint delegation to Damascus to engage with the Syrian government, the Ministers maintained that the crisis in Syria should be resolved through an inclusive Syrian-led political process supported by the United Nations and the international community, in the interest of the Syrian people, the region and the world. They condemned the increasing violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law as a result of continued violence in Syria. They reiterated their call upon all parties to allow and facilitate immediate, safe, full and unimpeded access to humanitarian organizations to all in need of assistance.
9. The Ministers reaffirmed that there is no military solution to the conflict. They reiterated their support for the convening of Geneva-2 International Conference on Syria as soon as possible, under the auspices of United Nations with a view to facilitating negotiations between the Syrian parties on the implementation of the final Communiqué of the Action Group (Geneva-I). They stressed that any settlement of the crisis should meet the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society and respect for Syrian independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty.
10. They strongly condemned the use of chemical weapons in any circumstances. The Ministers noted the recent developments which offer an opportunity for the peaceful resolution of the Syrian conflict. They welcomed the decision of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to accede to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the commitment of the Syrian authorities to provisionally apply the Convention prior to its entry into force. The Ministers highlighted the need to avoid further militarization of the conflict and to immediately stop the external supply of weapons to all sides.
11. Recalling their Declaration on Middle East Peace Process issued in August 2013, the Ministers reiterated that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict remains an urgent and key issue for the international community, the resolution of which is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. They welcomed the resumption of negotiations between Palestinians and Israelis. The Ministers called for the UN Security Council to remain seized of the matter and to provide support to the peace process until its satisfactory conclusion.

12. The Ministers stressed that peace and stability in Afghanistan is in the interest of both the country and the international community. It is crucial that the international community remain committed to Afghanistan in the form of development and security assistance during this period of transition and transformation. The Ministers recognized that the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability is terrorism which also endangers regional and global peace and security. They emphasized the need for joint and concerted efforts to address the challenge of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including the dismantling of terrorist sanctuaries and safe havens beyond Afghanistan's borders, as well as disrupting all financial and tactical support for terrorism.
13. The Ministers expressed their concern over the unauthorized practices of illegal interception of communications and data from citizens, businesses and members of governments by foreign governments and businesses. They underlined that this constitutes serious violation of national sovereignty and individual rights, and is incompatible with the democratic coexistence between friendly countries. They also reaffirmed their willingness to discuss these issues openly and cooperate in relevant multilateral fora to secure the development of appropriate international governance on cyber security.
14. The Ministers welcomed the outcomes of the 8th G20 Summit held under the Russian Presidency. They stressed the need for the G20 to remain focussed on the core issues of addressing coordination of macro-economic policies to deal with the evolving global economic and financial issues and also on reform of institutions of global economic governance. The Ministers noted that the G20 is not a substitute for the United Nations and other relevant international organizations.

15. The Ministers noted the significance and relevance of MDGs and the contribution it has made to the social and economic development of countries across the globe. While emphasizing the need to accelerate the implementation of MDGs, the Ministers underlined their commitment to the overarching goal of poverty alleviation and, in that context, expressed hope that the post-2015 Development Agenda will be focused on poverty eradication, economic growth, job creation, social inclusion and sustainable development. They emphasized that it should be applicable to both developed and developing countries and at the same time preserve the national policy space and priorities of developing countries. They reaffirmed that the Rio principles, in particular, the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, must form the bedrock of the sustainable development agenda. The Ministers acknowledged that provision of additional financial resources, technology development and transfer as well as capacity building assistance from developed to developing countries are key components of any international compact for development cooperation. They recognized the need for launching of intergovernmental negotiations to finalize the post-2015 development agenda. In this context, the concerted actions by India, Brazil and South Africa, as vibrant democracies with large populations will be of extreme importance to build any new development agenda.
16. Recalling the 20th anniversary of the Vienna Declaration and Plan of Action, the Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to the promotion and protection of all human rights and called for further cooperation among them in this area, both within the IBSA framework and in multilateral fora.
17. The Ministers reiterated the need for Members to work with an open mind and show flexibility in the forthcoming 9th World Trade Organisation's Ministerial conference to be held in Bali, Indonesia, in December 2013 and expressed hope that it will catalyse a successful and balanced conclusion of the Doha Round, in accordance with its development mandate benefitting the poorest and most vulnerable countries.

18. The Ministers looked forward to the 8th IBSA Trilateral Commission Meeting to be hosted by South Africa.

INDIAN OCEAN RIM ASSOCIATION

113 India-Mauritius Co-host IOR-ARC Economic and Business Conference on Economic and Business Conference.

New Delhi, July 4, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma today said that the Indian Ocean Rim region has exhibited healthy prospects for both international and intra-regional trade. Speaking in a session on "Enhancing Trade and Investment in the IOR-ARC Region" during the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) Economic and Business Conference in Port Louis today, Shri Sharma highlighted the fact that this region as a whole has managed to maintain a trade surplus in most years of the last decade even when the economies elsewhere were getting affected by the subdued global demands and contracting growth in the West. "We have identified the key areas and our business leaders are keen to take it forward," said Shri Sharma. But, at the same time, Shri Sharma voiced his concern that "despite the establishment of Working Group on Trade and Investment, not much progress has been made for achieving substantial outcomes based on the promise that this region holds out and the potential that has largely remained unharnessed."

As a result, Shri Sharma said that the need for this Conference is to initiate the process of deliberations and gather suggestions of the business leaders for chartering the future roadmap of engagement, focused on enhancing trade and investment as an engine of economic growth and prosperity with businesses driving the growth agenda as partners in progress.

Replying to a question from the audience, Shri Sharma said that visa regimes in the countries of the region need to be further liberalised. India is considering visa on arrival for many countries including Mauritius.

With many countries of the Ocean Region being part of several sub-regional groupings like ASEAN, SAARC, COMESA, GCC, SACU which assist in exploring institutionalised mechanisms for building regional cooperation for trade and investment, Shri Sharma said that "this experience as part of the sub-groupings should be gainfully utilised for consolidating our partnerships in this expanding Rim Region Association." He further added that "it is important to take forward the momentum of our pan-Indian ocean regional cooperation to the next logical level by creating an institutionalised mechanism for an interaction of our businesses by defining areas of cooperation."

Speaking during the inaugural session of the Conference themed "Deepening Economic Linkages For Balanced, Inclusive And Sustainable Growth", which was attended by Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister of Mauritius, Shri Sharma said that "there is an immense scope among IOR countries for diversifying the trade basket to value added products for achieving more balanced outcomes in trade both global and intra regional." Speaking on the utilisation of a special fund established by IOR-ARC five years ago for financing priority projects and programmes adopted by the Association, Shri Sharma said that "it is time to simplify procedures for utilisation of the Special Fund for effective implementation of projects in priority areas of this association."

Dr. Ramgoolam noted the leadership that India provided to IOR-ARC. "We acknowledge the tremendous efforts that India has made in last two years and also the significant contribution made to the fight against piracy. Under Mr. Sharma's stewardship, IOR-ARC displayed a remarkable degree of dynamism," said Dr. Ramgoolam.

As the IOR region is home to world's richest agricultural resources and with many countries emerging as major exporters of processed food making agro-industry, Shri Sharma said that "India welcomes equity and technology participation in the Agro and Food Processing Zones that are coming up in India, especially in setting up cold storage and logistic supply chains for reducing post harvest losses under the liberalised Foreign Direct Investment architecture in Multi-Brand Retailing." Shri Sharma also welcomed the participation by businesses in the region in India's infrastructure development.

Showcasing the importance of maritime cooperation, Shri Sharma stressed that "India can play a crucial role for enhanced regional trade through high seas which calls for concerted action on a common maritime enforcement regime that provides security and combats piracy without militarisation of the peaceful region." Shri Sharma also said that with the association evolving in the direction of building stronger economic linkages with willingness to cooperate in identified areas of priority as suggested by the Working Group on Trade and Investment, "it is opportune to institutionalise and consolidate our collective strengths to chart a new course in the global growth story and strengthen our prosperity as a region."

The inaugural session of the Conference was attended by Dr. Ramgoolam, Dr. Arvind Boolell, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration & International Trade, Mauritius, Mr. K. V. Bhagirath, Secretary General IOR-ARC, and Ministers, Dialogue Partners and leaders from the Indian Ocean Rim countries.

114 Press Communiqué on the IOR ARC Economic and Business Conference.

New Delhi, July 5, 2013.

1. We, the Ministers of Trade, Commerce and Industry of Member States and Dialogue Partners of the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IORARC), met in the Republic of Mauritius, for the First Economic and Business Conference on July 4-5, 2013, under the theme of 'Deepening Economic Linkages for Balanced, Inclusive & Sustainable Growth'. The meeting was co-hosted by the Governments of Mauritius and India and brought together Ministers and business representatives from across the Indian Ocean Rim
2. We recognize that the First IOR-ARC Economic and Business Conference was in keeping with the decisions taken by the IOR Business Forum held in Gurgaon, India, during the IOR-ARC

Council of Ministers and Related Meetings in October-November 2012, which recommended that Business-to-Business meetings have an important role to play for expanding trade and commerce between Member States.

3. We are satisfied with the discussions which took place in the four panel sessions, namely, 'Unlocking the Potential of the Services Sector in the IOR-ARC (ICT, Tourism, Financial Services)'; 'Enhancing Trade and Investment in the IOR-ARC'; 'Creating Agri-business linkages, addressing Food Security and Sustainable Development'; and 'Ocean Economy/Blue Economy. We hope that the proposals and ideas raised and agreed to in these sessions can be taken forward by member states
4. We express concern at the weak global economic environment and observe that the low rates of growth in advanced economies have impacted developing economies through slower international trade and decreased FDI inflows. We stress that Member States should consider and adopt measures, consistent with their WTO obligations to stimulate growth and development in the Indian Ocean region.
5. We undertake to encourage the concept of 'Open Regionalism' and identify trade as an integral factor in promoting economic cooperation and development. We urge Member States to harmonise trade practices in line with international norms and take steps to minimize barriers to trade in the Indian Ocean region and emphasize the need to build on the complementarities of our economies and identify key growth sectors.
6. We propose that initiatives taken at this conference should facilitate interaction between trade and investment promotion bodies of Member States. We welcome the IOR-ARC Work Program in Trade Facilitation initiated by Member States and fully support efforts to implement this for boosting intra-IOR-ARC trade and commerce.
7. We noted that the study on "Trade and Investment Prospects of the IOR-ARC in the New Millennium" which was released in 2011 in the Council of Ministers Meeting in Bengaluru, has highlighted ten areas of cooperation namely trade cooperation, tariffs, food sector trade, standards cooperation, regional value chains, mining, pharmaceutical and traditional medicine, coordination among EXIM Banks, investment and trade facilitation. We hope that Member States cooperate further in these sectors and emerging ones such as the ocean economy.

8. We welcome the participation of business entities particularly in the small and medium size enterprises and entrepreneurs in the First IOR-ARC Economic and Business Conference, emphasise the critical role of the private sector in the success of this conference and call on the IOR Business Forum to turn the challenges into opportunities.
9. We recognise the Indian Ocean as a binding force of the Association and therefore think it is imperative that Member States identify areas of cooperation in harnessing the oceanic resources which could become a pillar to sustain our development efforts.
10. We recognize the value of ongoing dialogue among Ministers of Economy, Trade and Industries as an integral part of economic dialogue involving the National Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

115 Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, October 31, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. We have not met in this format for some time. Lest you think we have abandoned this format, I just thought we will jog your memory and tell you that it still exists.

I have three announcements to make, which I will make in terms of sequence of the dates on which these events are going to take place, following which the floor is open for you to ask any questions.

The first announcement that I have to make is about the travel of the External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid to Perth. Mr. Khurshid left last night. He will be participating in the Indian Ocean Region Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) meeting in Perth.

As many of you perhaps are aware, we were the Chair of this organisation for two years. EAM will hand over the baton to Australia who will be the Chair from November 1st onwards. Indonesia will take over as the Vice Chair from Australia. This is a 20-member organisation which has littoral countries of the Indian Ocean who are likely to discuss a range of issues. I will try and summarise for you some of those issues.

I understand that one of the things on the agenda is the name of this organisation. As some of you are aware, last year there was an initiative to try and shorten the name and this is on the agenda. Other issues are: cooperation with the UN and specialised agencies, how should we engage dialogue partners more, the secretariat of the organisation and mechanisms and ways to strengthen it, and also an initiative that we lay great store on and that is university mobility in the Indian Ocean region universities.

We expect that at the conclusion of this meeting in Perth there will be of course the usual communiqué. Also Australia is proposing a Declaration of Perth Principles for the Peaceful and Sustainable Use of the Indian Ocean and its Resources. We look forward to that meeting on the 1st, and the outcome of course will be shared with you.

The second announcement that I have to make is about the convening of the Fifth Heads of Mission Conference of all Indian Heads of Mission abroad. This is an annual feature. Usually it is held in August. This time it is proposed to be held in November. It will be held from the 4th to the 7th of November. We expect approximately 120 of Indian Ambassadors and High Commissioners to various countries to converge in Delhi for this annual feature.

This year we have a theme for this conference and that is "India's Place in Changing World Order: Where Do We See Ourselves? What Do We Wish to Achieve?" So, much of the discussion is going to be focused on this theme.

As is usual, the Heads of Mission will interact with the President, the Vice-President. The Prime Minister will address them. They will also be addressed by the External Affairs Minister, the Minister for Commerce, and the National Security Advisor.

Interestingly this year, in addition to the usual focus on neighbours and South Asia the effort is also to focus in a very specific regional manner. Therefore, we are having with CII and FICCI roundtables focused on different regions. These will be interactions between the Heads of Missions from various regions with leading Indian businessmen etc., who have interest in those regions.

Also within the Conference itself specific sessions are devoted to Africa, to Latin America, to Central Asia, to Europe, etc. In addition, there will also be sessions devoted to consular and passport issues which are assuming increasing importance.

Finally, Mr. Sam Pitroda will address the Ambassadors on "Innovations as Instruments of Foreign Policy". This is again a new venture that we are endeavouring.

The third announcement that I have is about the visit of the Prime Minister of Kuwait. At the invitation of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, His Highness Sheikh Jaber Al-Mubarak Al-Hamad Al-Sabah, the Prime Minister of Kuwait will be visiting India from the 7th to the 9th of November. This is the first visit of a Head of Government from Kuwait since they bifurcated the Crown Prince from the Head of Government. The last visit of a Head of Government from India to Kuwait was in 1981 when Prime Minister Indira Gandhi visited Kuwait. Of course we have had other high-level visits both from India to Kuwait as well as from Kuwait to India.

Perhaps you are aware that Kuwait is amongst our largest suppliers of oil. We import something in the vicinity of 10 to 12 per cent of our oil imports. The total bilateral trade between Kuwait and India is in the vicinity of US$ 17 billion of which US$ 15 billion is oil. Our exports to Kuwait are in the vicinity of a little above US$ 1 billion.

We have a very large Indian community in Kuwait. It is the largest expatriate community in Kuwait, and it is in the vicinity of 700,000.

So, we expect a full agenda between the visiting Prime Minister as well as our Prime Minister. We will separately in due course provide you a detailed briefing on that.

That is about what I have in terms of formal announcements. As is usual, I will open the floor for any questions that you may have first on the announcements that I made and after that on anything else that you may like to ask.

Q: Which sessions or any other things are open for the media of these Ambassadors who are coming?

Official Spokesperson: This is usually in the context of brainstorming. Therefore, none of the sessions are open. These are closed sessions where they exchange forthrightly their viewpoints. We have not in the past followed a practice of making them publicly available or open for the media, and that practice will continue.

Q: Is even the inaugural session not open for the media?

Official Spokesperson: Even that. However, if there are elements which would need to be highlighted, we will certainly, like in previous years, circulate to you the main points of any important issues which may be highlighted.

Q: Can you give some hints as to what would be the likely change in the name of the organisation? Is it Indian Ocean Dialogue or something? Any name being proposed by India?

Official Spokesperson: I think you have a valid question. There is no proposal by India on this. There was a proposal initiated by Australia last time, and this is to focus on a shorter name because they found that the way the name is now structured along with the short form, is fairly long. And they are thinking of a concise name which perhaps will be encapsulated in four alphabets rather than the number of the alphabets now. And it will still have Indian Ocean Region, but perhaps it will have one other alphabet. And you will know in a day's time.

If there are no more questions related to the announcements made, we will move on to other issues.

Q: This is about one of the reports in the papers today about the possibility of the Prime Minister going for the CHOGM conference in Colombo. Has a final decision been taken? What is the procedure?

Official Spokesperson: This is a question which is a rather high priority and perhaps what you are trying to find out right now is the level of Indian participation in the Commonwealth Heads of Governments Meeting which will be held in Colombo from the 15th of next month.

I can confirm to you that a process has been set in motion to arrive at a decision on this matter. We are taking into consideration all aspects of our national interest, our foreign policy priorities and our international obligations. I can also confirm to you that that process has not reached its culmination. There is still some way down the track on this. Once that process reached its culmination, we will certainly share the outcome with you, and perhaps that is where we are on that issue.

Q: It has also been reported that Chief Minister Vigneshwaran has written to the Prime Minister requesting him to visit Jaffna. Is there...(Inaudible)...?

Official Spokesperson: Without of course divulging what is a privileged communication between the Chief Minister of the Northern Provincial Council of Sri Lanka and our Prime Minister, I can confirm to you that he did receive a letter on the 28th of this month late in the evening. I will not get into the exact details of the letter, but again I can inform you that the letter basically indicates that he is grateful for Indian assistance in terms of ensuring that the elections were held and an elected body has taken its place. He does inform that he has now assumed charge and he is grateful to India for that. Also, in the context that letter he has invited the Prime Minister to visit Jaffna. This of course is an input into the decision-making process and will be considered with a variety of other factors. Right now, as I said, the process is underway. So I cannot let you on to anything further apart from the details that I have shared with you

Q: Is it routine and usual for Chief Ministers of individual Provinces in foreign countries to approach our Prime Minister directly and vice-versa? Is it usual or is it accepted for Ministers of individual States in India to approach Presidents or Prime Ministers or Heads of State of other countries?

Official Spokesperson: The relationship between India and Sri Lanka should not be characterised as usual. It is a very strong relationship, it is a very close relationship, and it is a relationship where India has worked with Sri Lanka for a variety of issues including the welfare of the people in the northern areas who have been adversely impacted. So, let us not judge these things by the usual parameters of what you think is usual.

As for other relationships, each relationship each unique and our relationship with Sri Lanka is certainly unique and, therefore, our interaction is also in a way is distinct. And I think we should respect that distinctiveness and that is a distinctiveness that is reflected in our foreign policy and our approach towards Sri Lanka.

Q: Akbar, I am not asking you whether there is a change in India's Pakistan policy. What I am asking you is, are we seeing a new nuance in India's Pakistan policy, a new shift, sort of a subtle shift in view of these LOC flare-ups? Will it be a correct thing to say that MEA has given a completely free hand to MOD and it will be, so to say, Defence Ministry versus their forces or whatever as far as the LOC flare-up is concerned? And are we seeing any kind of forward movement diplomatically with Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: I think we need to go back to the last substantive diplomatic discussion between India and Pakistan and that was the discussion between the two Prime Ministers in New York. Let me recall for you what the common understanding as an outcome of that meeting was. The common understanding was that the precondition for a forward movement in the relationship, which both the Prime Ministers desire, is an improvement of the situation on the Line of Control. That is a common understanding between our two countries and that is what guides our diplomatic interaction with Pakistan. I repeat, the precondition for a forward movement in the relationship is an improvement of the situation on the Line of Control. That is it.

Q: Could you throw some light on US Ambassador to Bangladesh Dan Mozena's recent visit to India and what transpired in the meetings?

Official Spokesperson: We are not in the business of telling if an Ambassador of a certain country came to India and that Ambassador met middle level officials in South Block. This is not something which is unusual. We have regular interactions with various Ambassadors from various countries who are in India, because many of those countries see India as a leading player in South Asia and they would like to ascertain our views, and these are as a matter of normal diplomatic discourse shared with them.

Q: LOC has not reached a satisfactory situation. Will the EAM meet Sartaj Aziz when he comes to India?

Official Spokesperson: Perhaps you are aware that we are going to have a major biennial event called the ASEM. Minister's Conference. This is to be held on 11th and 12th of November. I understand that Mr. Sartaj Aziz, who is the Pakistani National Security and Foreign Affairs Adviser to the Prime Minister is also participating in this event. Based on this we have received a request from them for a meeting with the External Affairs Minister on the margins of that event. We intend to have that meeting based on that request. As hosts, India is meeting several countries whose Foreign Ministers are participating in that meeting. I can confirm to you that includes Mr. Sartaj Aziz.

Q: Can you give us an update on the visit of the Pak Judicial Commission and also the condition of Indian prisoners in Pakistani Jails, the numbers?

Official Spokesperson: This is a normal feature between India and Pakistan. Despite the difficulties and differences that we have had, we view issues relating to prisoners as humanitarian issues. Therefore, you would recollect that even when the Composite Dialogue earlier this year was suspended or had not been resumed at that stage in April, an Indian Judicial Commission - two Judges - had visited along with a Pakistani Judge. And this is a reciprocal visit. My understanding is that they will be submitting a report today. And this report will feature issues relating to Pakistani prisoners in Indian prisons. Also, my understanding is that as a follow-up to this there would be another visit later on early in the first half of next year of Indian members to Pakistan to follow up on the situation of Indian prisoners in Pakistan.

As regards Indian prisoners in Pakistan, my understanding is that there are approximately 400 or so Indians who are in Pakistani prisons. These are approximately 214 civilian prisoners and 186 fishermen. Of these, by our count, almost 90 have completed their sentences and should be released because according to the India-Pakistan bilateral agreement all prisoners who have completed their sentence should be released within one month. So, we would hope that this is abided by. My understanding is that earlier this year - in some cases in March and in most other cases in July - those 90 prisoners had completed their sentence terms and, therefore, they are entitled to return India. And we look forward to Pakistan releasing them, and welcoming them back home.

Q: Can you please tell us what India's stake on the present political stalemate going on in Bangladesh is?

Official Spokesperson: I am not here to comment on the internal affairs of any country. Therefore, I am not able to answer your question.

Q: Would the deliberations of the Heads of Missions be confined to India's role in the present international scenario or would they discuss the repeated ceasefire violations by Pakistan and developments in China on our borders?

Official Spokesperson: All the issues that you mentioned will be discussed, as will India's socioeconomic realities be discussed, as will areas about our development agenda and what we are doing to implement the global development agenda be discussed. So this is a holistic approach. It is for four days all through the day. We expect that all issues of interest to practitioners of Indian foreign policy will be covered in that discussion.

Q: What would be MEA's response to Infosys' visa fallout issue with the US Government? They have agreed to pay the penalty. Any comments you would like to make?

Official Spokesperson: This is a civil settlement between an Indian company and a US Government agency. Why would you like the Government of India to comment on a civil settlement when it is mutually agreed to between both the parties to arrive at that settlement?

Q: Sir, would India be participating in the IOR-ARC meeting starting on Friday? I missed out on the announcement.

Official Spokesperson: That was my first announcement. Mr. Salman Khurshid, the External Affairs Minister, is right now on his way to Perth. This will be held on the 1st. We will participate actively and hand over the baton as Chairman to Australia. I have provided other details of those discussions as well as our approach to that. These are available and I do not want to repeat since others have already taken them down. But I will pass them on to you.

Thank you very much

116 Declaration of the Indian Ocean Rim Association on the principles for peaceful, productive and sustainable use of the Indian Ocean and its resource.

Perth, November 6, 2013.

"Perth Principles"

WE, the Foreign Ministers of the Member States of the Indian Ocean Rim Association (IORA), Australia, Bangladesh, Comoros, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Oman, Seychelles, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Tanzania, Thailand, United Arab Emirates and Yemen, on the occasion of the thirteenth Council of Ministers' Meeting (COMM)

1. REITERATING that IORA is the apex pan-regional organisation for the Indian Ocean.
2. RECALLING the six priority areas of cooperation agreed at the eleventh COMM in Bengaluru, namely: Maritime Safety and Security; Trade and Investment Facilitation; Fisheries Management; Disaster Risk Management; Academic and Science and Technology Cooperation; and Tourism and Cultural Exchanges.

3. RECALLING ALSO our desire to promote the sustainable growth and balanced development of the Indian Ocean region and IORA Member States, and to create common ground for regional economic cooperation.
4. COMMITTED to promoting cooperation and collaboration between IORA and other Indian Ocean regional stakeholders including Dialogue Partner States and other regional and international forums.
5. REAFFIRMING our commitment to the Charter of the United Nations, to the Charter of IORA, and to the applicable principles of international law.
6. REAFFIRMING ALSO our commitment to 'The Future We Want', as adopted at the 2012 United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, and to the protection, restoration, health, productivity and resilience of the Indian Ocean and its resources.
7. RECOGNISING that the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea provides the legal framework for the conservation and sustainable use of the oceans and their resources and plays a vital role in maintaining peaceful cooperation and stability across the Indian Ocean.

HEREBY DECLARE AS FOLLOWS:

That the Member States of IORA are guided by the following principles for productive and sustainable use of the Indian Ocean and its resources:

1. Recognition of the importance of the Indian Ocean's biodiversity, including its marine life and ecosystems.
2. Commitment to the conservation and sustainable use of the Indian Ocean and its resources in accordance with international law, including fisheries stocks, water and seabed resources and other - marine life; and commitment to deliver on the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development.

3. Recognition of the important contribution of the conservation and sustainable use of the Indian Ocean and its resources to poverty eradication, sustained economic growth, food security and creation of sustainable livelihoods and decent work.
 4. Recognition of the importance of building the capacity of countries to conserve, sustainably manage and realise the benefits of sustainable fisheries.
 5. Commitment to intensify efforts, individually and collectively, to take the measures necessary to maintain or restore all fish stocks to levels that can produce the maximum sustainable yield.
 6. Commitment to understand and address the main threats to the Indian Ocean and its resources, including illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, unsustainable fishing practices, loss of critical coastal ecosystems and the adverse impacts of pollution, ocean acidification, marine debris, and invasive species on the marine environment.
 7. Recognition of the importance of building the capacity of countries to understand, forecast and address marine, ocean and climate science issues in the Indian Ocean.

ADOPTED by the Foreign Ministers of the Member States of the Indian Ocean Rim Association on 1 November 2013 in Perth, Australia.

117 Perth Communiqué-13th Meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Indian Ocean Rim Association.Perth, November 6, 2013.

We the Ministers of the Member States of the Indian Ocean Rim Association (IORA) met in Perth, Australia, for the 13th Meeting of the Council of Ministers on 1 November 2013. Our meeting was held in a spirit of collegiality and common endeavour.

1. We welcome the adoption of IORA as the new name for our organisation, known formerly as the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IORARC). This as an important step signifying our renewed resolve to strengthen our Association and its work.
2. Our discussion followed productive meetings of the Committee of Senior Officials, Working Group on Trade and Investment, IOR Business Forum and IOR Academic Group. We thank these groups for their valuable contributions, which shaped the direction of our dialogue.
3. We reaffirm our shared interest in the stability, security and prosperity of all countries of the Indian Ocean rim and our commitment to enhancing cooperation to deliver sustained economic growth and broad-based and balanced development in this strategically vital region.
4. IORA is the lead body for promoting regional collaboration across the Indian Ocean rim. We will take forward IORA's role in addressing the development, security, resource and environmental challenges that face our region through policy-oriented consideration of opportunities and risks and high-quality projects in the six priority areas we identified at our meeting in Bengaluru in 2011.
5. We wish to broaden and deepen efforts through IORA to bolster maritime security and safety, particularly in light of continued threats to maritime commerce, and freedom of the high seas, consistent with the UN Convention on the Law of the Seas (UNCLOS); as well as on the safety of sea farers. We look to the upcoming Indian Ocean Dialogue in India to explore, inter-alia, concrete options to enhance counter-piracy cooperation, including through improved maritime information-sharing arrangements and stronger national legal capacity and laws.

6. We welcomed work through the Indian Ocean Memorandum of Understanding on Port State Control to develop stronger port state control measures in IORA Member States in order to enhance the safety of shipping across the Indian Ocean.
7. We encourage Member States to implement fully their obligations under the Safety of Life at Sea Convention and the annexed International Ship and Port Facility Security Code through domestic implementation of these instruments.
8. There is much potential for IORA to build cooperation among Member States and others in disaster response and risk management, including by drawing on 'best practice' models developed in other regions and through other organisations. This includes natural and other disasters especially in the maritime domain, particularly including tsunamis, as well as activities such as search and rescue and response to oil spills.
9. All IORA Member States have a stake as invited participants in the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS). We consider it important that IORA's work on maritime security and safety and disaster management align with and complement possible IONS initiatives in these areas, including in information-sharing and other activities with both civilian and non-civilian dimensions.
10. We are focused on increasing trade and investment intra-regionally and further afield. This is central to IORA's purpose. Regional trade facilitation and customs simplification are important areas of ongoing cooperation. We encourage further such work among IORA Member States to promote economic integration and development in the Indian Ocean region.
11. We strongly encourage private sector involvement in IORA activities to enhance regional trade and investment, and commit to developing business-friendly initiatives to address issues related to energy security, food security, tourism and infrastructure. We also recognise the opportunities offered by the ocean ('blue') economy.

12. We support work to address needs in fisheries management and aquaculture and artisanal fishing, and underscore the need to combat illegal fishing. We reaffirm our commitment to the peaceful, productive and sustainable use of the ocean and its resources, as outlined in our 'Perth Principles' Declaration, and aim for IORA to do more in this field.
13. More can also be done in IORA to foster collaboration and build capacity in areas of oceanic research. We endorse work undertaken in IORA to strengthen ocean monitoring and forecasting and seasonal climate forecasting capacities and knowledge of climate change adaptation practices.
14. The second International Indian Ocean Expedition (IIOE-2), planned for 2015 on the 50th anniversary of the original expedition, will be a unique opportunity for regional collaboration in research, training and capacity-building. We support this important scientific endeavour to enhance our understanding of the Indian Ocean.
15. We also support efforts to better connect existing academic and other research institutions in the Indian Ocean region, including through exchanges and joint projects. Through such efforts, IORA can help to foster nodes of excellence and understanding in areas of common interest.
16. We value the cooperative contributions of IORA's Fisheries Support Unit and Regional Centre for Science and Technology Transfer in developing and delivering proposals to the benefit of members in their respective areas of responsibility.
17. The Indian Ocean rim is marked by great diversity in cultures and societies. Closer people-to-people links, including through tourism, education and business, will contribute to greater cohesion and sense of regional identity. IORA should play a part in building these connections, for economic and wider benefit.

18. We will work together to ensure that the people of the Indian Ocean region have access to the best possible levels of education. The empowerment of women and girls in the region is a high priority for IORA.
19. We welcome the important contribution made by IORA Dialogue Partners, and invite their involvement across our six priority areas of activity, including the possibility of a formal post-meeting dialogue between IORA Member States and Dialogue Partners to strengthen awareness of opportunities for mutual engagement.
20. In addition, we agree on the value of extending IORA's ties with other international and regional bodies, to build synergies and maximise the prospects for capacity-building and exchange of experiences, and to avoid duplication of effort.
21. We will continue to refine IORA's working practices and meeting arrangements so that Member States work together as productively as possible at all levels; and that every opportunity is afforded for input by business and academia. We encourage thematic experts from Member States and Dialogue Partners to collaborate in IORA's six priority areas.
22. We will ensure IORA's work program is pitched strategically to focus on issues of interest across the membership. The IORA Special Fund must be better utilised to support projects that advance meaningful practical cooperation in the six priority areas. We encourage Member States to draw on the Fund to take forward initiatives that enjoy wide support and will deliver widespread benefit.
23. We recognise the strong contribution made by the Secretary-General and the Secretariat in advancing IORA's aims and activities. We invite all Member States to consider what more could be done to strengthen the Secretariat and enhance its capabilities.
24. We convey our deep appreciation for the leadership India has provided as Chair for the past two years and welcome Australia to the role. We affirm support for the new Chair and look forward to continued leadership from the new troika of Australia, India and Indonesia.

25. We thank the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Australia for hosting the 13th Council of Ministers' Meeting and related meetings and extend our appreciation for the excellent hospitality and arrangements in Perth.

118 Joint Communiqué of the 12th Meeting of Foreign Ministers of Russia-India-China.

New Delhi, November 10, 2013.

The Foreign Ministers of the Republic of India, the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China met in New Delhi on 10 November 2013 for their 12th Meeting. The meeting was held in an atmosphere marked with cordiality and warmth.

1. The Ministers reiterated the importance attached to the Russia-India-China Trilateral format as a platform to foster closer dialogue and practical cooperation in identified areas among the three countries. They stressed that this cooperation was not directed against any other country. They expressed their resolve to strengthen the trilateral dialogue for consultation and coordination on regional and global issues of mutual interest in the spirit of openness, solidarity, mutual understanding and trust.
2. The Meeting took place in the backdrop of evolving political scenario in the Middle East and North Africa, upcoming 9th WTO Ministerial Conference in Bali, numerous challenges in putting the world economy back on growth track, concerns relating to terrorism, transnational organized crime, illicit drug trafficking, natural and man-made disasters, food security and climate change. The Ministers agreed to continue to consult and coordinate with each other to contribute to addressing these regional and global challenges in a responsible and constructive manner.

3. The Ministers expressed their condolences and sympathy to the people and the Government of the Republic of Philippines at the loss of lives following the typhoon that struck the country recently.
4. The Foreign Ministers of the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China recalled successful outcomes of the recent bilateral visits of India's Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Russia and China.
5. The Ministers agreed that the world had entered a new era of establishing a multipolar international system in line with the realities and needs of the 21st century. The Ministers reiterated commitment to work together for a more stable, secure and fair system of international relations based on the rule of international law, equal partnerships between states and respect for the purposes and principles of the UN Charter. They agreed to remain engaged with each other with a view to strengthening the central role of the UN in maintaining international peace and security and ensuring steady social and economic development.
6. The Ministers welcomed the 12th Trilateral Academic Conference held in New Delhi on 20-22 November 2012. This marked the conclusion of the 4th round of trilateral exchanges commenced in 2001 amongst scholars from the Institute of Chinese Studies (ICS), Delhi; the Institute of Far Eastern Studies (IFES) Russian Academy of Sciences and China Institute of International Studies (CIIS).
7. The Ministers noted with satisfaction that the 5th Trilateral RIC experts meeting on Disaster Relief was held in Chengdu, China on 13-14 November 2012. The meeting agreed to further enhance the trilateral cooperation on information sharing, technology exchanges and personnel training in this area.
8. The Ministers reiterated that terrorism is a threat to international peace and security and a grave violation of human rights and a crime against humanity. They condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever, and for whatever purposes. The Ministers affirmed the need for all States to join efforts in combating terrorism under the auspices of the United Nations, based on the UN Charter, the relevant UN Security Council (UNSC) resolutions, the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and relevant principles and norms of international law. They condemned in the strongest terms the terrorist attack in Beijing on 28 October 2013.

9. The Ministers agreed that there cannot be ideological, religious, political, racial, ethnic, or any other justification for acts of terrorism. They underlined the need to bring to justice perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of terrorist acts.
10. The Ministers expressed deep concern about the deterioration of the security and humanitarian situation in Syria and condemned the increasing violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law as a result of continued violence. The Ministers welcomed the adoption of UNSC resolution which endorsed the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) Executive Council decision calling on Syria to comply with all aspects of the OPCW decision. They further welcomed the framework agreement reached between Russia and the US on the time-bound safeguarding and destruction of Syria's chemical weapons stockpiles and also the recent steps taken by Syria to accede to the Chemical Weapons Convention. The Ministers urged for early convening of International Conference on Syria (Geneva-II), to take forward the Geneva-I Communiqué adopted on 30 June 2012, which will bring all Syrian parties to the conflict to the negotiating table. Any settlement of the crisis should meet the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society and respect for Syrian independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty. The Ministers reiterated that there is no military solution to the conflict.
11. The Ministers reaffirmed that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict remains an urgent and key issue for the international community, the resolution of which is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. The Ministers expressed support to the resumed Palestinian-Israeli negotiations and called on the international community to assist both Israel and Palestine to work towards a two-state solution resulting in a sovereign, democratic, independent, united and viable Palestinian state, with East Jerusalem as its capital, existing side by side in peace with Israel, within secure borders, on the basis of relevant UNSC resolutions, the Madrid Principles and the Arab Peace Initiative.

12. The Ministers discussed the evolving situation in Egypt. They viewed Egypt as a stabilising factor in the Middle East region and wished Egypt to promote national reconciliation as soon as possible to continue to play that role, contributing to peace and prosperity in the region.
13. The Ministers expressed deep concern over the continuing situation in Afghanistan and acknowledged that the main threat to Afghanistan's security, stability and prosperity is terrorism, radicalism and violent extremism. They stressed upon the need for joint and concerted efforts to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including elimination of terrorist bases and safe havens and cutting off all financial and tactical support to terrorism.
14. The Ministers stressed the importance of the international community remaining engaged in Afghanistan and fulfilling its commitments on civilian and security assistance during the period of transition and through the decade of transformation in Afghanistan. In this context, they called upon developing the capability of Afghan National Security Forces so as to enable it to shoulder the responsibility for security of Afghanistan. The Ministers reaffirmed the imperative need for the international community to continue to actively support Afghanistan's peaceful reconstruction and help Afghanistan to achieve peace, stability and prosperity. They emphasized the importance of Afghanistan's regional integration through expanding its trade and transit networks as well as its regional connectivity.

15. The Ministers stressed the core coordinating role of the UN in promoting peace and stability in Afghanistan. They reaffirmed readiness to closely interact on Afghanistan in the framework of the UN and within other international fora and regional initiatives, including the Istanbul Process, the Regional Economic Cooperation Conference on Afghanistan, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO), the Collective Security Treaty Organization (CSTO) and the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC). Russia and India welcomed and expressed full support to China for hosting the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Istanbul Process in 2014.
16. The Ministers held the view that the evolving situation in Afghanistan is closely linked with security of the region. They believed that achieving broad and inclusive reconciliation is the key to enduring peace and stability of Afghanistan. The Ministers reiterated that the national reconciliation in Afghanistan should be Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-driven, as laid out in the 20 July 2010 Kabul Conference Communiqué and further elaborated in the 5 December 2011 Bonn Conference Conclusions supported by the Government of Afghanistan and the international community.
17. The Ministers expressed concern about the scale of illicit drug production and trafficking in Afghanistan. They underlined that revenue from drug trafficking is one of the main sources of financing terrorist organizations. The Ministers emphasized the urgent need for the international community to counteract illicit production and trafficking of drugs of Afghan origin in line with the provisions of the Paris Pact and the SCO Anti-Drug Strategy.¹⁹ The Ministers reaffirmed that being responsible States that possess advanced nuclear technologies, Russia, India and China considered it as their common task to prevent proliferation of nuclear weapons and contribute actively to strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation regime. They welcomed progress on nuclear security and underlined the importance of upholding and implementing the consensus understandings reached at the 2010 Washington and 2012 Seoul Nuclear Security Summits.

18. The Ministers called for the early resolution of the Iranian nuclear issue through political and diplomatic means on the basis of a step-by-step approach and reciprocity to restore international confidence in the peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear programme. They recognized Iran's right to peaceful uses of nuclear energy, including for uranium enrichment under strict IAEA safeguards and consistent with its international obligations. The Ministers supported the intensification of the negotiation process to resolve this issue.
19. The Ministers expressed concern at the growing threat of the use of information and communication technologies for criminal and terrorist purposes, as well as for purposes that are inconsistent with the UN Charter. They reiterated that it is important to contribute to and participate in a peaceful, secure, and open cyberspace and emphasized that security in the use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs) through universally accepted norms, standards and practices is of paramount importance.
20. The Ministers considered the UN to be the foremost multilateral forum entrusted with bringing about hope, peace and sustainable development to the world. They expressed strong commitment to multilateral diplomacy with the United Nations playing the leading role in dealing with global challenges and threats. In this context, they reaffirmed the need for a comprehensive reform of the UN, including its Security Council, with a view to making it more effective, efficient and representative, so that it can deal with today's global challenges more successfully.
21. The Ministers reiterated the importance attached by their countries to cooperation within BRICS. In this context, they reaffirmed their determination to work together to further strengthen BRICS as a mechanism for consultation, coordination and cooperation on global and regional political and economic issues of mutual interests.

22. The Foreign Ministers of China and Russia supported India's active engagement with and positive contributions to the Shanghai Cooperation Organization.
23. The Ministers stressed the need to develop an open, inclusive and transparent security architecture in the Asia Pacific region based upon universally agreed principles of international law. They underscored the importance of the East Asia Summit as a forum for dialogue and cooperation on broad strategic, political and economic issues of common interest with the aim of promoting peace, stability and economic prosperity in East Asia. They underlined the necessity to further strengthen coordination and cooperation in various regional fora such as the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), ASEAN Defense Ministers Plus (ADMM-Plus), Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM), Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO), Conference on Interaction and Confidence Building Measures in Asia (CICA) and Asia Cooperation Dialogue (ACD). India and Russia expressed their support to China for hosting the CICA Summit in 2014.
24. The Ministers noted the rising role of the Asia-Pacific region in international affairs and supported regional integration and cooperation. The Ministers recognized the important role played by Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) towards creating conducive environment for promoting trade and investment as well as regional integration in the Asia-Pacific region. Foreign Ministers of China and Russia noted India's growing economic profile and its important role in the global economic growth and its significant economic and trade linkages with APEC members and supported the openness of APEC.
25. The Ministers recognized that the world economic growth was facing vulnerabilities and numerous challenges. They underlined the need to boost multilateral cooperation in order to tackle these challenges. The Ministers welcomed the outcomes of the G20 Saint Petersburg Summit held under the Russian Presidency. They stressed that the continuous implementation of its recommendations with respect to the decisions aimed at accelerating world economic growth, midterm fiscal consolidation, higher employment, building an open world economy and promoting development will facilitate the resolution of the key global economic issues.

26. The Ministers stressed the need for the G20 to remain focused on the core issues of addressing coordination of macro-economic policies to deal with the evolving global economic and financial issues as well as the reform of institutions of global economic governance including the IMF quota and governance reforms.
27. The Ministers noted the significance and relevance of Millennium Development Goals [MDGs] and the contribution to the social and economic development of countries across the globe. Emphasizing the need to accelerate the implementation of MDGs, the Ministers reiterated their commitment to the overarching goal of poverty alleviation and, in that context, expressed hope that the post-2015 Development Agenda will be focused on poverty eradication, economic growth, job creation, social inclusion and sustainable development. They emphasized that it should be applicable to both developed and developing countries and at the same time preserve the national policy space and priorities of developing countries. They recalled all the principles of Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. The Ministers underscored that provision of additional financial resources, technology development and transfer as well as capacity building assistance from developed to developing countries are key components of any international compact for development cooperation.
28. The Ministers reiterated the need for Members to work with an open mind and show flexibility to achieve successful outcomes at the forthcoming WTO Ministerial Conference (MC9) in Bali, in December 2013 which would be a stepping stone to future progress in the Doha Development Agenda negotiations, in accordance with its development mandate.
29. The Foreign Ministers of Russia and China appreciated India's active role and contribution to further the goals and objectives of Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM) and to provide a renewed relevance to ASEM by re-orienting its discussions towards tangible cooperation among ASEM partners in key areas of mutual interest. In this context, they congratulated and extended their full support to the External Affairs Minister of India for hosting the 11th ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting (ASEM FMM11) in New Delhi on 11-12 November 2013.

30. The Foreign Ministers of the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China extended their warm appreciation and sincere gratitude to the External Affairs Minister of the Republic of India for hosting and making excellent arrangements for the meeting in New Delhi.
31. The Foreign Ministers of the Russian Federation and the External Affairs Minister of the Republic of India thanked the Foreign Minister of the People's Republic of China for his offer to host the next Trilateral meeting in 2014 and pledged their full support.

SCO

119 Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation Summit.

New Delhi, September 10, 2013.

The Official Spokesperson.....the External Affairs Minister, Mr. Salman Khurshid, will be traveling to Bishkek on the 12th of this month to attend the SCO Summit meeting. The SCO Summit meeting is to be held on the 13th in Bishkek.

Those of you who are following our participation in the SCO process are aware that it has usually been the External Affairs Minister who has been representing India at the SCO summits. While he is in Bishkek, it is expected that he will take the opportunity to have informal discussions with other leaders who will be present there during the Summit.

From Bishkek, he will then move on to Uzbekistan. On the 14th and 15th the External Affairs Minister will be in Uzbekistan where he will have discussions with his counterpart and also preside over the meeting of Indian regional Heads of Mission, who are meeting there, and he will interact with Heads of Mission from approximately ten countries in that area.

Those are the two announcements that I have to make. Maybe I will try and answer any questions you may have on this before I request my colleagues to talk to you on the more substantive aspects of our interaction on consular, passport and visa matters. If that is all right, I will begin with indicating my response to any question that you may have on these two things.

Q: Would EAM be meeting Mr. Sartaj Aziz in Bishkek?

Official Spokesperson: I have mentioned to you that while he is in Bishkek on 12th and 13th of this month he will also take the opportunity to interact informally with several leaders who will be present there depending on their schedules and mutually convenient timeslots. These are usually in the form of meetings which are informal conversations. There are no structured and full-fledged meetings that are planned during the SCO Summit because this is a short Summit level meeting.

As regards any specific meeting, we are still working on these things. Should we have a finality to this process, we will certainly let you know.

Q: What is the status of India's application to become a full member at the SCO?

Official Spokesperson: As you are aware, we have evinced interest in joining the SCO and have indicated our willingness to play a broader and larger role in the SCO. Having said that, it is also correct to state that the SCO members are working on the modalities to see how they would approach the entire issue of expansion. These modalities include various administrative, financial and legal issues. They are yet to come to a consensual decision on how to expand the SCO. Once they do come to that decision, they will indicate to us, and we will until then patiently continue our role as an Observer in the SCO.

Q: Akbar, Nawaz Sharif had nominated his Advisor Sartaj Aziz to attend the SCO Summit at Bishkek. But a few days back, Russia requested

Pakistan that Nawaz Sharif himself should attend the Summit, which is likely. The question is, when would India consider representing itself at the SCO Summit at the summit level considering that China is in favour of full membership for both India and Pakistan? And what is the timeframe you look at for India getting full membership?

Official Spokesperson: Rajiv, let me try and answer your question in terms of background history.

India has been previously represented at the summit level by our Head of Government. So, this is not new, we have had occasion before. Subsequently we have decided that it would be best if it is represented at External Affairs Minister level. You could have a look at the record. I think it was in 2009. Today there is an article on the website of the Ministry of External Affairs which lists out this position.

As regards your other question about who represents other countries, this is not for me to respond to. Who represents other countries is a choice those countries make.

You have very cleverly, as usual, put question within question. It is like the Matryoshka Doll, you open one and another comes out. That said, to answer your third question, it is for the member states to decide. We will take it as it comes. We see SCO as an important regional organization in our regional space. There are issues that the SCO considers, for example Afghanistan and the challenges posed by it. We see SCO as a useful regional forum which can address issues relating to Afghanistan. We also see SCO as a useful forum in terms of our antiterrorist stance in a regional context. I presume you are aware of RATS. This is an SCO antiterrorism mechanism and we participating through that.

The third thing is energy. As you are aware, we are interested in TAPI pipeline which is currently from Turkmenistan to Afghanistan, Pakistan and India. These are again in the same common space. So, we see our links with the SCO as part of our extended neighbourhood and with countries where we have a civilisational and cultural linkage for years. Therefore, we hope that as and when there is a decision taken about expansion of the SCO, we will be ready to fully participate in it.

Bishkek, (Kyrgyz Republic), September 12, 2013.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid):...(Inaudible)... any major bilaterals here. We are concentrating on the SCO. But since we are all going to be here and there is a lot of time, we will use it usefully, we will use it for anything that can be usefully exchanged, discussed, etc. I am told that we are all in the same building. So, we may have a chance informally to bump into each other, sit and talk. But the focus here has to be the SCO which is very important for us.

We are Observers here, which is a higher status than Dialogue Partners. Over the years there has been discussion about the role of Observers, how much they can be involved, and how much contribution they can make. I think this will continue this time as well. Our aspiration of course is to become a full member. They are working on rules for engagement and to take on new members. We are not sure of a timeline whether this time it will be possible for them to arrive at a document that can be the basis for this. But we have indicated that we are obviously interested, we would want.

I think my letter to all the present members had received a very good response. So, we will try and concentrate on that but I certainly would be happy to use an opportunity like this when we are all together to informally discuss anything of mutual interest that we may have with any of the other delegates that are present, and certainly delegates from Pakistan.

Mr. Sartaj Aziz is here. I am sure we will have a chance to come face to face and discuss informally. But we have not actually worked out anything specific in advance. Let us see how things go.

Q: Any ground work which you are trying to create with your counterpart for the, I mean our Prime Minister...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: Ground work has been done in Delhi. As you know, there were some contacts in Delhi as well. It is pretty clear, I do not think that there is rocket science in this. If you want a meeting at the highest level, there has to be an atmosphere for it; there has to be of course a desire on both sides to meet, which I can imagine is there. But it is the context, circumstances and prevailing conditions.

So, we have been saying repeatedly that it is important that those issues that we know are intractable issues perhaps on which some delivery, some satisfaction and some honest attempt to resolve them must be shown so that the atmospherics improve. And when the atmospherics improve, you can then think of the next stage and the next step.

We have really had an unfortunate situation at the Line of Control. I think you were reporting only two days ago there was firing on both sides now. It is not conducive, it is not the best of circumstances in which you want to proceed with something of a meaningful conversation, dialogue and outreach. So, let us see. Let us see how things happen. A week is a long time in politics on how things shape up, what is the mood, what is the sense. But the call finally has to be taken by the leadership on both sides.

Q: Sir, the Pakistani indications are that they released a lot of fishermen and they want that to be interpreted as a confidence-building measure. On India's demand that something to be done on the LoC, tangible measures with respect to LoC and with respect to Hafiz Saeed, they say that casualties on both sides of the border have been nearly equal, people have died in equal numbers and there has been firing. So, India to that says that the quality of Pakistani firing and Indian firing is vastly different. Indian is defensive to ward off infiltrators while Pakistani is aggressive in that extent.

External Affairs Minister: We are going around in circles. Stating the problem as a point of solution does not make sense. We all know there is this problem. Despite that problem there was repeatedly, over the years, not just our government but governments over the years have said, let us find a way of overcoming this problem. The problem is partly something that can be contained, partly something that will take a long time to resolve.

But despite that we had a composite dialogue, a dialogue for good reason. As you know, under very tragic circumstances this came to an end. Then there was a resumed dialogue and the resumed dialogue continues. But resumed dialogue at what level, at what speed, and with what content will obviously depend upon the prevailing conditions during which the dialogue is to be examined.

In the prevailing conditions nobody would say on either side, I do not think Pakistan, really if they are being honest, would say that the prevailing conditions were good for us to respond. Prevailing conditions were not good and have not been good. Therefore, we have been economical with our responses as we must be.

It is not just how the Government feels, it is how people feel, it is how various institutions assess as circumstances. That is not us alone, sports bodies, cultural institutions, everybody who has to organise visitors or exchange with their counterparts from Pakistan, take an independent view as well. We can advise them but they take an independent view also on the convenience and the security and the implications and complications that are involved.

So, I think it would not be correct for me to take up an individual item and say, that is the item which is causing the irritation. I think it is the overall atmospherics that are important. And how much can be done? As far as we are concerned, we can only say this that we are very sincere and we have given no reason for anyone to feel a grievance against us. We have a whole list of issues that frankly anyone would have a grievance about, and those grievances need to be addressed. Nobody is saying you address them all together and now. But certainly there must be a clear indication that there is intent to address them, and that can only be possible if you begin some delivery.

Now, if you isolate them, one delivery is that there should be some movement as far as the trials are concerned, prosecutors' appointment, the collection of evidence and giving evidence to court. And if they require cross-examination we have agreed that judicial commission can cross examine. But that should be done and that material should be placed before court. If the court begins to look at that material, accept that material, pass some orders, then one can say, yes, we are moving in the right direction.

But right now for me to say that enough has been done at least to begin the process all over again, would be difficult. As I said, time will tell whether we have enough. We have a positive attitude. And despite the caution that everyone is giving us in terms of public opinion, we have a positive attitude, but we do expect some delivery. And as I speak to you now, it will be difficult for me to say that we have substantial delivery or delivery to the extent that we believe could be a starting point.

Q: Sir, there are media reports in today's papers in India that this time Pakistan has shown a proactive approach to meet, especially like Sartaj Aziz is very willing to meet you here.

External Affairs Minister: It is not an issue of being willing or being reluctant and needing to be persuaded. We do not disagree that good relations with Pakistan, and peaceful relations, tranquillity on the border and the Line of Control, is a high priority. It is for us. We do not want to score points against them. We do not want to appear difficult and rude and unapproachable. But we have a responsibility to the people. They must assess their own responsibility, and we assess our responsibility.

We would be willing to take risk about ourselves, but we cannot take a risk about the country and our people. So, there has to be satisfaction. What level of satisfaction, is something that can be worked out. But there must be some satisfaction. And it is not difficult to give signals that your intention is good. Frankly it is not a very welcome thought to say, I want to do something but I am unable to. None of us in public life can take up that sort of position and posture.

Q: Any specific agenda for the SCO meet?

External Affairs Minister: Frankly, Observers observe, they watch. But we will have a chance to meet everyone as I said. Informally we will all meet together this evening over dinner. Tomorrow again the Observers will be in a separate place before we actually participate. We will be together at the lunch. Altogether we will have some times for bilaterals.

As I have said, if you are at the same place you will bump into each other, sometime you get a chance to have a coffee together and talk about things. But there is not fixed agenda. The fixed agenda was that we had to meet with, time permitting, the President of Kyrgyzstan and the Foreign Minister. They were both very generous and kind. We had very good meetings today. A very very clear and strong indication has been given that they would like India to participate in the growth and development of Kyrgyzstan in a very big way, major way.

We have problems about connectivity. Of course they have an airline that works out at the time when students and tourism is on a peak. But otherwise they discontinue that flight. So, we do not have a direct flight and that is a little bit of a problem. But, we are going to mount a business group.. FICCI will bring one later this year. I have invited the Foreign Minister to come to India. We can try and work out if there will be a higher level visit on either side in the few months that are left before the next elections.

Certainly as far as important flagship programmes are concerned, doing university here giving it perhaps greater spin of being a technical university, they are trying to fast-track that. We will also explore those areas that they have highlighted - investment and power is one such area. But we can do a great deal in the small-scale sector, we can do a great deal in collaboration in agriculture, pharmaceuticals. So, what we would like to do is to keep them in the loop and move a little fast. This can be a very important stepping stone for a much larger region. Their own absorptive capacity is obviously limited. It is a small population. But I think the opportunities here for using this as collaborative base along with them to reach out to a much larger region, I think are absolutely wonderful and we will have to take them seriously. Most of all, I think it is the special feel that they have for India and the very warm and positive outreach they indicated immediately. I think that is a very welcome thing.

Q: Sir, will political issues also come up for discussion?

External Affairs Minister: They do not have any major political issues to discuss with us frankly. They are looking at institution building. They are very excited about their Parliamentary system which they say they have taken inspiration from India for. They want us to work closer in using of the Parliamentary system and training of Parliamentary officers and also Members of Parliament. The Speaker will visit India in the near future. So, we talked about that. We talked also about India's role as an expanding, emerging economy. And in fact we did not have to persuade them that India needs to be here in the region a lot more. They said that you need to be here in the region a lot more which was a very welcome thing.

We did not really go into any other major issues because I think there will be a chance to talk about some of these things tomorrow, whatever is happening in the world. But certainly as far as the region is concerned, we were able to get a very good sense.

Q: Sir, when you were last here in this region - you were in Almaty and Tashkent - there was talk of Karkand field 8.33 per cent stake, there was talk of Yamal Peninsula. Both have now gone to the Chinese. So, what do you think about oil diplomacy in this region?

External Affairs Minister: That is not the end of the world. Let us face it. China has a significant presence here. They are in the neighbourhood. In many of the openings China also staked their claim long before we did. But I think there is a clear indication that there are many alternatives that are available, and it is for our experts and our stakeholders to pursue them. When you want something, you have to show eagerness and you have to invest in trying to get it. Nothing is going to come home.

I think in terms of political and emotional back up that anyone needs to do business, we are on a very very good wicket here. I would certainly advise my colleagues who are dealing with petroleum and commerce that we should take advantage of this.

There is a generational change taking place here. There is a huge amount of goodwill that we have because of the past. But there is a generational change taking place. New generation is coming. Fortunately, it is not a generation that has been completely weaned away from the past. But I think we need to connect with them. And since we have, as a matter of policy, already taken up Connect Central Asia as an important policy imperative for us, it is now only applications of that policy in specific instances is what we need to work on.

I think you do not get a relationship of substance without working on it. No free lunches. So, we need to at least work on this relationship. I think that we have no reason to worry about any unfair competition. I think there is enough going for us. We must be able to show that we are adequately equipped and interested.

Q: On the antiterrorism front, RATS has been one area where India has been interested even before they spoke of opening up the membership. So, how do you plan?

External Affairs Minister: I think one of the substantive issues of the meeting here is that there a meeting of minds on counterterrorism. I do not think that one gets so much convergence and congruence on this issue easily elsewhere as you get here. Let us not forget that this is despite the presence of some other points of view in the region.

I think on this we are on a very very strong wicket. They are willing to work very closely with us, expand our cooperation with them, not just them but Uzbekistan and everybody. I think that this is something on which we can look forward to a satisfactory engagement.

Q: On Pakistan there is nothing.

External Affairs Minister: On Pakistan I told you, we will bump into each other, we will sit and talk. I am not going to say I would not look at you. But the thing is that I do not have a prepared speech for Pakistan and I hope that they do not have for me. I think it is important that sometimes you should take things as they come. You are all here. I am sure that you will see me, you will see Mr. Sartaj Aziz, you will pick up bits at coffee tables and so on. We will just let it be a natural - sit down, have a chance, talk. But it will only be an informal conversation that will help in atmospherics, if it is the right kind of conversation.

I think but it is neither an imperative nor a dipstick, nor a test. It is just that we naturally come across each other, sit down and have a chat. If something comes off it that we can factor back into our decision making in Delhi, we will do it. If we do not get anything out of it, we will just leave it at that.

Q: Sir, you tried a lot for a political consensus on the land boundary agreement with Bangladesh.

External Affairs Minister: I have not given up!

Q: Is there another chance now?

External Affairs Minister: Of course. There is always a chance and there will be a chance and we are working on it.

The decision to show consensus could not be taken. But in fairness to the BJP, there has been, at least up to this stage, consensus with BJP. Despite their own perceived or real difficulties, there has been consensus. Problem came from a very small group of MPs from Trinamool. But then they are more affected because they believe it concerns them immediately. And I think although it was very irksome for us not to be able to do it...(Inaudible)...agreeing to talk rather than agreeing to agree.

So, we are agreeing to talk and I think that in a democracy that is a very important part of decision making. So, I am not dejected, disappointed or distressed. I think that process is on and I will be very happy to meet with the CM. I offered to meet her. The MPs said it is not necessary, we will sit and talk about it and if there is an opportunity, you can even talk to her. I have spoken to her before once and I will be happy. I know her very well. She has been a colleague and a good friend. We will talk. No problem.

Q: Sir, you have done so much of background work on this LBA. You prepared documents, background papers, everything. Where is the rub? Whether it is exclaves and enclaves, or the 6.5 kilometre of the boundary?

External Affairs Minister: The rub is that there is an imaginary loss that somebody feels. It is like that someone who is to agonise now over partition and say it should not have happened. There is not much I can do except to say that this is a historical fact and we all have to live with it.

It is not like an alternative. Nobody is saying, do not do it this way, this is the way it can be done. Nobody is saying that. Nobody is saying that this will never be done. Someone is saying next session, someone is saying next Parliament, somebody is saying next year. Therefore, we are not in disagreement. It is just putting it together and again atmospherics. So, we must get the right atmospherics, and hopefully next session if you are lucky and all works, we can bring it.

Q: So, why is not your government getting atmospherics right or wrong?

External Affairs Minister: Atmospherics of what?

Q: Bangladesh and also Sri Lanka.

External Affairs Minister: Is not this atmospherics that I am saying publicly that I will talk to the Chief Minister instead of hiding it from you that I will go quietly, clandestinely I will say I did not go, she came to me. I will go to her. There is no problem. She is a Chief Minister. She is concerned and I think we should address that concern.

I have clear indications from the Prime Minister that whatever we do must get people on board, we should have them engaged and involved.

So, we are not going to bulldoze anything. We could have done it that day, we could have bulldozed. We may have lost half ...(Inaudible)...

Q: Yes, you backed away.

External Affairs Minister: No, but I was clear that we would take the responsibility on our shoulders rather than push it through and create distress on the other side. So, I think this is what atmospherics are about.

Q: There is more problem from the BJP, not from the RSS. Do you think that the BJP can get rid of the RSS pressure? Their stand is not to give up an inch of territory. Rhetoric like this.....(inaudible)

External Affairs Minister: Rhetoric is a small thing; we are not worried about that, BJP has made a prudent suggestion. Their worry is the impact that it would make on the cadres, from the election angle. I believe it is not going to have any impact on the elections. What you don't have would not be with you. What impact can this have on the elections? If this is the worry, we should at least make efforts to remove them.

Q: Sir, how are your preparations for the US trip?

External Affairs Minister: Preparation is going on. I think the crucial thing there is a low hanging fruit. I think it is important for you and it is important for us that there is no rescheduling of everything. And we are attempting that at least those things that were flagged during the Vice-President's visit and Secretary Kerry's visit do get delivered when we go there.

We are also keen that some of the things that are creating an issue for our industry at least get addressed. We may not finally find a solution immediately but at least get addressed. But I think that understanding is very clearly there with the US. And if we both take up issues that have some problem for us, if we even address them, we will be moving forward.

So, I think it is going to be a good visit, an important visit and it will be a landmark visit because it will come after so many things have happened in the world on which the important thing is that the worst that one had imagined did not happen. So, in that sense the conversation continues along the same lines that we had when the Vice-President, and Kerry came to India and we will continue along that. Let us keep our fingers crossed.

I think Mr. Lavrov will come today evening. So, we will have a better idea of what is happening on the Syria front. So, we will have a better idea. But from what one gathers from the media, I think at least as a breather and people have a chance to look at things afresh and perhaps find some way out of this very very unfortunate situation.

So, if there is any chance meeting, if we bump into each other, you can ask me what happened, I will say he said this and I said that, or you can ask him.

Thank you

121 Statement by the External Affairs Minister at the SCO Summit- 2013.

Bishkek, September 13 2013.

Your Excellency, President Almazbek Atambayev,

Distinguished Heads of State

Secretary General of the SCO,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

- It is an honour for me to represent India at this important Summit of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization. I bring with me the good wishes of the President, the Prime Minister and the people of India to our friends here today. I also wish to thank the Government and the people of the Kyrgyz Republic for the gracious hospitality and warm welcome.
- This SCO Summit is taking place in politically and economically turbulent times. The world economy is troubled. In times of globalization, we know that growth can be restored only with collective efforts by creating more jobs, bringing in financial reforms and creating a conducive environment for business. We commend Russia's lead in organizing a successful G20 Summit in St. Petersburg recently, where G20 leaders deliberated, discussed and agreed on measures that are needed for global economic recovery.

- But this is more an occasion for us to celebrate the milestones which the SCO has crossed over the years, in addressing the security and developmental challenges of our common region. The SCO, we feel, would need to continuously adapt to a changing world and reorient its objectives without necessarily diluting its original vision. We have no doubt that the SCO members will guide the destiny of the organization with a strong sense of history.
- On its part, India has been associated with the SCO as an observer since 2005. During this period, we have discovered a great degree of convergence with the SCO in underlying values, working principles and strategic ethos. India strongly believes in the philosophical principles guiding the SCO, like progress through consensus, decisions by constructive dialogue and strengthening mutual confidence, friendship and good neighbourly relations. India is guided in its approach by the mantra or principle of multilateralism, that the common good of all has primacy over any bilateral differences. Given this fundamental approach, given India's emergence as a vibrant economy and a vast market; our repository of human, scientific & technological knowledge; and our development and security related experience of over six decades, we believe that India can make deeper contributions to enrich the SCO process and contribute to its success.
- India is civilisationally linked to the ancient networks of the Silk Route which traversed the landmass occupied by the modern day SCO. These networks stimulated trans-continental development at the time, and also catalysed cultural linkages, clear evidence of which exist till today. We therefore feel that SCO, among its other endeavours, should also focus on creating well-connected trade and investment corridors within the SCO region - with India, as in earlier times, adding value and content. These connections between our countries, whether rails, roads or pipelines, will help re-energise our economies and bring our people closer together.

Excellencies

- India has long been a victim of terrorism and we are acutely aware of the threat that its perpetrators pose to our people. We are of the firm view that only multilateral efforts and integrated actions can help effectively counter these negative forces including the related evils of drug trafficking and small arms proliferation. We are keen to deepen our security-related cooperation with the SCO in general and with the Regional Anti Terrorism Structure, in particular. We look forward to the signing of the Model Protocol of Intent in the near future as a demonstration of our willingness and commitment.
- India is increasingly concerned about the security challenges which may emanate from the developing situation in Afghanistan. India strongly believes that Afghanistan can successfully complete the security, political and economic transitions in coming years and regain its historical place as a hub for regional trade and transit routes. However, this presupposes fulfillment of pledges made by the international community for security and civilian assistance to Afghanistan and non-interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. We see SCO as an important body that can offer a credible alternative regional platform to discuss the challenges related to Afghanistan.
- This Summit of the SCO is taking place at a crucial juncture in global politics, with many nations seared by violence and conflict. We have today the opportunity to reflect on events of deep geo-political significance in our neighbourhood. India is deeply concerned at the ongoing conflict in Syria and is closely watching the fast paced developments. We have consistently called upon all sides to abjure violence so that conditions can be created for an inclusive political dialogue leading to a comprehensive political solution, taking into account the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian people. At the same time, any external military intervention in Syria's affairs should be excluded. We are encouraged by the current proposal, steered by Russia, that is aimed at bringing the Syrian chemical stockpile under international control. This proposal is in alignment with India's own consistent stance of supporting the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons worldwide. India sees any move in this direction, within the framework of the UN, as a positive development. We are hopeful that this development will reinvigorate the peace efforts towards a political solution to the Syrian conflict, including the early holding of the proposed 'International Conference on Syria' (Geneva-II), bringing all parties to the conflict to the negotiating table.

- In conclusion, let me reiterate that India stands ready to play a larger role in the SCO as a full member, once the organization reaches consensus on the expansion process. It is our conviction that an expanded SCO will be a more effective body to address the numerous security and developmental challenges that our region faces.
- I once again, thank the Government of the Kyrgyz Republic for guiding the SCO this year and for organizing this Summit.

122 Foreign Secretary Smt. Sujatha Singh leads Indian Delegation at the SCO Heads of Government Summit.

Tashkent, November 29, 2013.

1. Foreign Secretary, Smt Sujatha Singh, led the Indian delegation to the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) Heads of Government Council in Tashkent, Uzbekistan on 29 November. Addressing the Council, Smt Singh emphasized the role of the SCO in promoting rapid economic development and connectivity in the region, as also in countering terrorism and promoting peace. She called for a greater SCO role in the rebuilding and reconstruction of Afghanistan
2. On the sidelines of the SCO meeting, the Foreign Secretary held bilateral meetings with Mr Murad Askarov, the Deputy Foreign Minister of Uzbekistan; Mr Mohammadrezo Nematzade, the Trade, Mines and Industry Minister of Uzbekistan; Mr Mohammad Karim Khalili, the Second Vice-President of Afghanistan and Mr Dmitry Mezentsev, the Secretary General of the SCO.
3. India has been an observer country in the SCO since 2005. The six-member organization now plans to expand its membership.

123 Statement by Foreign Secretary at the SCO - Council of Heads of Government Meeting at Tashkent.

November 29, 2013

Your Excellency Prime Minister Shavkat Mirziyayev,

Distinguished Heads of Government of the Members and Observers of the SCO, Special invitees, Dialogue Partners,

Secretary General of the SCO,

Excellencies, Gentlemen, Ladies

1. It is an honour for me to represent my Prime Minister and my country at this important meeting of the Council of Heads of Governments of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. I bring with me good wishes from my Prime Minister and from the people of India to our friends in the SCO region. At the outset, let me thank the Government and the friendly people of Uzbekistan for their gracious hospitality and warm welcome. It is appropriate that this meeting is taking place in Tashkent, the very heart of Central Asia, at an important time of transition for the region. Tashkent sits at the crossroads of history and is a wonderful symbol of not just the glorious heritage of Central Asia but also of a bright future.
2. India has been proactively participating since 2005, in various SCO fora open to the observer countries. India has also been following closely the evolution of the SCO, learning much in the process, as also sharing our experiences in development and security. The SCO has played a constructive and valuable role in bringing peace and prosperity to our region. We are impressed that the SCO has emerged as an important regional forum focussing on issues of regional importance that are relevant and contemporary. We believe that the SCO is poised to play a much larger role in the future, both for the security and stability of our region.

Excellencies,

3. The SCO region is one of the fastest growing of the world. The rapid pace of economic development in our common region is closely linked with our common concern for environmental conservation. India is engaged with the SCO in its various conservation initiatives and this year, we participated in the Global Snow Leopard Conservation Forum in Bishkek. Our habitat is our common heritage and therefore in areas like disaster management and ecological conservation, we can benefit through sharing our experiences and best practices.

4. We are brought together by a common vision and approach for rapid economic development of our nations and peoples. An improved transportation and communication network would help strengthen regional cooperation in our common space, in critical areas like energy, finance, infrastructure and telecommunications. It would also boost trade and investment in the region. The SCO's role in achieving these objectives is crucial. In this connection, India welcomes the SCO initiative for the creation of the Energy Club of SCO member states, observers and dialogue partners. We will participate in the meeting in Moscow next week to work out a common document to guide our work.
5. India is already engaged with several SCO member states in diverse areas such as capacity building and human resource development, information technology, pharmaceuticals and health care, small and medium enterprises and entrepreneurship development. We would specifically like to share our experience in economic areas like banking, capital markets and micro-finance. India has articulated a 'Connect-Central Asia' policy in recent years, to further our vision of a region connected closely by its common aspiration for a better life for its people.
6. In the security sphere we would like to see all states under the SCO umbrella vanquish terrorism from their territories and areas under their sovereign control.
7. In the same vein, we are cognizant of terrorism as the major threat to the security and stability of Afghanistan. We believe that a long term solution can be achieved by supporting the efforts made by Afghanistan itself to begin an Afghan-led dialogue on reconciliation with the armed opposition forces, provided that these groups respect the principles adopted by the international community.

8. On its part, India remains committed to Afghanistan's institutional and socio-economic development, and the overall social upliftment of its people. We are of the opinion that the SCO should step up its engagement in the rebuilding and reconstruction of Afghanistan, through common projects and financial commitments. We support the efforts by Russia to craft common SCO positions on Afghanistan and will be happy to join the specialised meetings to focus on this issue.

Excellencies,

9. India recognizes the inalienable right of all states to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in accordance with universally agreed international norms, conventions and obligations. In this context, we are encouraged by the recent tidings about the multilateral dialogue in Geneva to explore a comprehensive settlement of the Iranian nuclear question, through political and diplomatic means. The positive resolution of this issue can lead to multiple and far-reaching benefits across the region, including in the SCO space.
10. As an Observer, India has always endeavoured to play a constructive role in the SCO both on security and developmental issues. With our experience and institutional capabilities, we feel that we can add value and share best practices in areas which may be of interest to the SCO - disaster management, food security and agricultural techniques, public administration, youth exchanges, information technology, telecommunications and pharmaceuticals, to name only a few. On the expansion of the SCO, we patiently await the beginning of the formal process. Our External Affairs Minister has already written to all his counterparts in SCO member States, conveying our interest in membership of the organisation. We stand ready to formally apply for full membership once the SCO announces the application modalities.

11. In conclusion, Mr Chairman, I once again thank the Government of Uzbekistan for the warm hospitality and the excellent arrangements.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-III

CIVIL NUCLEAR ENERGY

124. Press Interaction of Foreign Secretary and DG, IAEA.New Delhi, March 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: Good Afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this media interaction. As is usual, we will begin with brief opening remarks by the Foreign Secretary followed by the Director General, IAEA. Following that they have agreed to respond to a few questions. I will then begin by asking Foreign Secretary to make his opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary:

Excellency Dr Yukiya Amano

Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

It gives me great pleasure to extend a warm welcome to Dr Amano, Director General of the IAEA on his second visit to India in three years. We are also privileged that Dr Amano has chosen to visit India soon after the IAEA BOG had approved by acclamation earlier this month his second term as Director General of the Agency.

Dr Amano has had meetings for the past two days in Mumbai with the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and has visited BARC and other nuclear facilities. During his stay in Delhi he will be meeting the National Security Advisor and will be calling on the Prime Minister.

During our meeting today, I conveyed to Dr Amano our appreciation for his support for further consolidating the very productive relations that so happily exist between India and the Agency.

Dr Amano has been briefed on plans for major expansion of our nuclear programme in which international cooperation is an important component. We have concluded nuclear cooperation agreements with a number of major nuclear industry countries.

India views nuclear energy as an essential element of its national energy basket and is committed to taking forward its three stage nuclear programme based on a closed fuel cycle. There are also enormous benefits from other peaceful applications of nuclear energy in the fields of health, industry and agriculture.

As we mark the second anniversary of the Fukushima Accident, we express our solidarity with the Japanese people in the face of the grave tragedy resulting from the Great East Japan Earthquake and Tsunami. Dr Amano has led the Agency's admirable efforts to address nuclear safety issues after Fukushima thus reinforcing its central role in international efforts to strengthen nuclear safety standards worldwide. Our Prime Minister has underscored that safety of our nuclear plants is a matter of the highest priority. The Government has undertaken a number of measures in this regard, which were discussed in our meetings with Dr Amano. Dr Amano has been able to see some of these features himself when he visited TAPS in Mumbai.

Our nuclear safety track record has been impeccable. India is committed to continuous improvement and innovation in our nuclear safety standards and practices to maintain public confidence in nuclear power as a clean and safe energy source.

We have cooperated closely on nuclear security issues, including through the NSS, our Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnerships and Agency participation in the NSS Sherpa meeting and 1540 Workshop held in New Delhi last year. EAM will be representing India at the Ministerial Meeting on Nuclear Security being hosted by the DG in Vienna in July this year.

India has longstanding constructive relations with the IAEA on safeguards implementation. After the conclusion of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement in 2008, twelve nuclear power plant units and 7 other facilities have been offered for safeguards under the India Specific Safeguards Agreement.

We are at an advanced stage of consultations with the Agency relating to our Additional Protocol and India will ratify once these discussions are concluded.

The IAEA and its statute are a vital component of the international framework for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The IAEA is an indispensable international institution and should have the necessary resources to fulfill its mandate in accordance with its Statute.

We underline the continuing importance of an effective IAEA Safeguards system, with relevant safeguard agreements and the Additional Protocol as the verification norm, and the full implementation by member states of their respective safeguards agreements with the Agency. We will remain engaged on various proposals for securing sensitive materials and technologies.

As a major nuclear industry country with the capability to produce all items for a complete nuclear fuel cycle, India is committed to maintaining the highest export control standards. I am happy to announce that the national SCOMET list has been updated to be on par with the current NSG and MTCR lists. In some respects, our controls are more stringent than those practiced by the NSG and MTCR.

As a like-minded country, India has demonstrated responsible non-proliferation and export control practices and has shown the ability and willingness to contribute substantially to global non-proliferation objectives and is engaged with the multilateral regimes with a view to joining these groups as a full member.

I would like to convey our appreciation to Dr Amano for his leadership of the IAEA at a challenging time and in enhancing public confidence in nuclear energy as a clean, affordable, safe and secure source of energy, vital to meeting global energy demands especially in developing countries.

We welcome your visit as an important opportunity to further strengthen the longstanding cooperative relations between India and the IAEA.

I would like to invite you to make your remarks.

Thank you.

DG, IAEA:

Good Afternoon, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Now I am visiting India. Yesterday I moved from Mumbai to New Delhi. I already had an occasion to visit the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre and Tarapore Nuclear Power Plant site. The reason why I am visiting India is simple. India is an extremely important partner for the IAEA. It has an extensive nuclear programme, very much advanced in the nuclear application for peaceful purposes, helping other countries and a good record of non-proliferation and safety. So, this time I wanted to meet with the policy makers and also visit the sites and discuss with the engineers, researchers and scientists to better understand India's activities. This is a two way dialogue. I want to learn more from India and my visit would be on occasion to share my views of the activities of IAEA. I visited India in January 2011, two months before the Fukushima accident. Things have changed a lot and I had to work a lot to address this Fukushima accident. There are things that have not changed. The use of nuclear power for the generation of electricity continues to be a very important option. There is a misunderstanding that the Fukushima accident should mean the end of nuclear power or should mean the decline of the use of nuclear power. According to the latest IAEA estimates by 2013, there would be minimum 23% increase of electricity production by using nuclear power. That is the minimum estimate. According to our high estimate, there would be 100% increase. So double the present. The reason is very clear. The basic situations or conditions like the need to mitigate global warming effect, ensuring energy security, or mitigate the effect of volatile fossil fuel price and in many countries they need to stay economically competitive or need to secure energy for development.

So, I keep on saying that despite Fukushima accident nuclear continues to be an important option for many countries. Of course it is up to State to decide whether or not to use but IAEA's role is to help them if they decide to use nuclear power and one important thing that has changed after Fukushima is the pronounced emphasis on safety. Safety must come first. Fukushima accident was a big wake up call for every country, everyone on the importance of safety. I visited Tarapur site and witnessed the serious efforts, enthusiasm by the operators, engineers to further improve, further enhance the level of safety. Mobile generators were added after Fukushima. The outside hookup to cool down the power plant in case of blackout was added. These are some of the examples of improvements, enhancement of safety at the site of Tarapur. This is very important information for us. Also I first had information on the activities of your country in the fight against cancer or use of nuclear techniques for the increase of agriculture products or water management or water desalination. The nuclear techniques are very useful to promote the global development agenda and your country is using this technology for the development of your country but also helping other countries and I am very grateful for the contribution that India is extending to other countries. India is also a very important partner in nuclear security, nuclear security means to prevent fissile material and radio active material falling into the hands of terrorists and on the initiative of the Prime Minister you have established GC&P. I am very glad that India would be represented at the IAEA Nuclear Security Ministerial level conference that we would hold in July this year at Vienna. Your country's participation at a high level will add political weight to this conference and to this important issue. The implementation of India Specific Safeguard Agreement is being implemented very smoothly and we have had meetings between your experts and other experts to bring into force of additional protocol and some other issues. I am very confident that the implementation of this agreement India Specific Safeguard Agreement will be very smooth. There were other issues but I think that it is better to stop here and rather take your questions.

Q: My question is to Dr. Amano, Dr. Amano, you are known in the international community as an honest broker as the DG of IAEA, but the question is whenever it comes to Iran, there is always doubt whenever there is a meeting happening between P5+1 or whether it is the last week meeting which was with the 35 members. Can you please throw light really what is the positive or constructive outcome of all these talks?

DG, IAEA: Iran nuclear issue is very complicated one but the essential element is very simple. All the countries including Iran have to fully implement the Comprehensive Safeguard Agreement if they are non-nuclear weapon states and other relevant obligations if there are any. In case of Iran, Iran has a comprehensive agreement with IAEA and Iran is subject to UN Security Council resolutions which are legally binding. This is the standard. In light of this standard, I can say that declared activities and material of Iran are staying in peaceful purposes, but as Iran is not implementing UN Security Council resolutions and the part of the Safeguard Agreement, we cannot give assurance that everything is for peaceful purposes. Then what should be done? I firmly believe that the solution should be through diplomatic means and dialogue. The IAEA and Iran have been intensifying dialogue since November 2011 and tried to clarify the issues through dialogue and agreement. Unfortunately to make the long story short, as of today, we have not yet reached agreement and as a consequence no concrete result has been achieved. This is not a good situation. So before the March Board of Governors meeting of the IAEA, we have thought and I stated in the Board of Governors meeting in Vienna that we have to work on this issue with a sense of urgency and the agreement must be in accordance with the effective verification practice and I repeated that the IAEA is committed to solve this issue through dialogue. I will continue the dialogue with Iran and hope that we can report positive results through our next meeting in June.

Q: Mr. Amano, Are you seeking any changes in India's nuclear liability norm?

DG, IAEA: I think this is a matter that India is addressing now. India has signed the CSC agreement. India has some domestic law to implement it. For us, we would like to promote the entry into force of CSC but for that it is not only India but other countries need to ratify. I leave it for India to address the domestic law to implement the CSC.

Q: Mr. Amano, after the North Korean recent tests, there were initial assessments that the technology may have come from Pakistan. What is your view ? Have you conducted an assessment ?

DG, IAEA: On DPRK nuclear tests, I can say that it is deeply regrettable that North Korea conducted its third nuclear test. This is clearly against the UN Security Council resolution and it gives negative impact to the Northeast Asian region and beyond. North Korea has the obligation under the UN Security Council resolutions to discontinue the nuclear activities and abandon nuclear weapons. I sincerely hope that North Korea abides by and implements all the UN Security Council resolutions. On the part of the IAEA, we are prepared to play a role. As the only multi-lateral verification organization, in the de-nuclearization of the Korean peninsula, it is necessary that the IAEA plays its role verification. For now, it may be difficult but we will like to send back our staff to North Korea to monitor their activities and play a role in this regard.

Q: My question is to Mr. Mathai. Sir, in view of the breach of assurance by Italy which has been described by PM as violation of every rule of diplomatic discourse is New Delhi planning to give marching orders?

FS: I think we have made our position very clear. As I mentioned yesterday after summoned the Ambassador of Italy, we have conveyed to the Government of Italy that the contents of their note are completely unacceptable to us. We are waiting for their response. And as soon as their response is received, we will take a decision on what to do.

Official Spokesperson:

Thank you

125. Statement by Dr. R.K. Sinha, Chairman, Atomic Energy Commission, and Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Atomic Energy, at the 2013 IAEA International Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Power in the 21st Century.

St. Petersburg, June 27-29, 2013.

Mr. Chairman, India joins the previous speakers in complimenting the IAEA and the Government of Russian Federation and OECD/NEA for organising this important Ministerial Conference in this beautiful and historic city of St. Petersburg. Mr. Chairman, Following the Fukushima-Daiichi (F-D) accident in Japan, the two very important considerations for nuclear power, namely, nuclear safety and radiological safety, have occupied centre stage in many a forum. In India, the utility (NPCIL), and the regulatory agency, Atomic Energy Regulatory Board (AERB), independently conducted extensive safety reviews, pursuant to which necessary measures to further augment safety of our operating nuclear power plants (NPPs), under extreme external events, have been taken. India will continue to contribute to the IAEA efforts in enhancing international cooperation in nuclear safety matters, especially through the various activities under the IAEA Action Plan for Nuclear Safety.

I wish to draw attention to the World Health Organisation's (WHO) report released in February 2013 on the studies carried out on the health risk assessment, and which is based on preliminary radiation dose estimation in the areas affected by the release of radioactivity from the Fukushima-Daiichi reactors. To avoid an under-estimation of risks, the WHO Expert Group adopted the Linear-No-Threshold (LNT) model in their assessment and they also made certain assumptions, which reflect a high degree of conservatism. In spite of this conservative approach, the WHO Report concludes that the possible impact of Fukushima accident on the health of the population in the affected regions is practically insignificant. More recently, following the 60th Session of the Vienna-based United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effect of Atomic Radiation (UNSCEAR) held in the last week of May 2013, there was a Press Release from the UN Information Service. It cites the conclusion of the Session, I quote, "Radiation exposure following the nuclear accident at Fukushima-Daiichi did not cause any immediate health effects. It is unlikely to be able to attribute any health effects in the future among the general public and the vast majority of workers". It is further reported there, that, "On the whole, the exposure of the Japanese population was low, or very low, leading to correspondingly low risks of health effects in later life". The final report of UNSCEAR to be submitted to the UN General Assembly later this year may further help allay the public concerns. In this context, it may be reiterated that it is absolutely essential that the extremely large margins of safety, inherent in the prescribed permissible radiation dose limits, are adequately explained to members of the public, as well as to decision makers. I am sure, an an outcome of these and other ongoing studies, a more rational, science-based criteria for post-accident evaluation, and restrictions on land use in contaminated areas, will emerge. The above-mentioned international findings go to also endorse the view that India articulated at the IAEA General Conference in September 2012, when we said that 'it is essential to project credible and authentic scientific information on the effects of nuclear radiation on human health to dispel misconceptions about nuclear power'. Coming from international peer groups, the WHO and UNSCEAR findings would be extremely important to policy makers and other stakeholders, including the IAEA and this Conference. The Conference may give careful consideration to these findings, even as we all need to continue to attach the highest importance to nuclear and radiological safety.

Mr. Chairman, The Prime Minister of India said during an event in January 2013, "As we pursue our national growth objectives to meet the rising aspirations of our people, the supply of affordable clean energy will be one of our foremost national challenges and a key priority for our government. Nuclear energy will remain an essential and increasingly important element of our energy mix. We are in the process of expanding our indigenous nuclear power programme.” He also reiterated that ‘we will continue to ensure that nuclear power remains wholly safe’. India’s continued progress in the industrial front, as well as in enhancing the quality of life of its very large population, depends strongly on assured and sustainable growth in the installed power generation capacity and adequate power availability on the grid at all times, in every part of the vast country. The constraint of depleting reserves of fossil fuels, leave alone the sheer enormity of the quantities of coal required, taken along with the need to shift to low carbon energy sources for addressing the global warming related concerns, would drive the options that could meet the Indian energy needs in future. It is here, that nuclear energy becomes a very important option. There is no shift in the policy on nuclear power in India that is based on the utilisation of India’s nuclear resources of modest uranium and abundant thorium, through the closed fuel cycle option, and the 3-stage programme, aimed at large-scale deployment of Thorium in the long-term.

With regard to current nuclear power projects, the construction of four indigenously designed 700 MWe Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs), two each at existing sites of Kakrapar in Gujarat and Rawatbhata in Rajasthan, is in progress. In addition, sixteen more PHWRs of 700 MWe capacity will be progressively taken up for construction (twin units or quadruple units) at five different inland sites already identified. India is also planning to set up PWRs of indigenous design by mid 2020s. Thanks to the long-standing nuclear co-operation between India and the Russian Federation (the erstwhile USSR), two Light Water Reactors (LWRs) of Russian design, each of 1000 MWe capacity, are currently being set up in Kudankulam. The unit-1 of Kudankulam NPP is in an advanced stage of commissioning, following multi-tier safety reviews. The 2nd unit is envisaged to follow suit about six months thereafter. Under the international civil nuclear co-operation agreement, additional options for expanding installed capacity through import of Light Water Reactors have been envisaged, and related discussions are underway with identified vendors, for setting up these reactors at designated coastal sites, including Kudankulam. The first commercial fast breeder reactor of India - PFBR of 500 MWe capacity - is at an advanced stage of completion of construction at Kalpakkam. All the major equipment of PFBR have been erected and the loading of dummy fuel bundles at peripheral locations is in progress. Indigenously developed mixed oxide type fuel pins for the first core of the PFBR are under manufacture and progressive delivery. Mr. Chairman, The safety of nuclear power plants (NPPs) in India is regulated by the Atomic Energy Regulatory Board (AERB). The regulatory practices followed and the standards developed by AERB are in line with IAEA Safety Standards and international best practices. With over three decades of experience and established plan for augmentation of regulatory resources, AERB will be able to meet the future regulatory demands for reactors based on several different designs and technologies, and their associated fuel cycle facilities.

The IAEA Operational Safety Review Team (OSART) Mission for review of Rajasthan Atomic Power Station 3&4 took place from October 29 to November 14, 2012.

The OSART Mission team reported a series of good practices and made recommendations and suggestions to further reinforce safety practices. The Indian Government has decided to declassify the report of the OSART mission. India, as one of the leaders in nuclear technology, remains committed to the highest levels of safety in its NPPs and in the associated fuel cycle facilities. Mr. Chairman, Energy is one of the main drivers for the growth of human civilisation and it is imperative to achieve sustainable means to meet the developmental aspirations of the global mankind, without affecting the environment. Nuclear energy is an important component of an energy mix for sustainable long-term energy security. The IAEA - INPRO projection of the growth of nuclear energy cites an installed nuclear capacity of 1250 GWe (moderate growth) and 1875 GWe (high growth) by 2050. In order to facilitate the enhancement of the global reach of nuclear energy, while at the same time addressing the proliferation concerns, judicious choice of 'safeguards-friendly technological options of fuel cycle and advanced reactor technologies' would become increasingly necessary. In this context, the utilisation of thorium based fuel cycle offers attractive pathways. It is heartening to note that the fourth and final Panel Session of this Conference is devoted to the topic, 'Drivers for deployment of sustainable and innovative technology', and which includes due emphasis on thorium utilisation among the topics to be discussed. To conclude, Mr. Chairman, let us remind ourselves that the nuclear power era is nearly 60 years old, and that the current global nuclear competencies are capable of meeting the challenges to expand the nuclear power horizon for the greater benefit of the mankind.

Thank you Mr Chairman.

126. Press Release on meeting between India and the Nuclear Suppliers Group(NSG) Troika.

Vienna, July 1, 2013.

An outreach meeting between India and the Nuclear Suppliers Group(NSG) Troika was held in Vienna on 28 June 2013. The Indian delegation led by Foreign Secretary included representatives of the Ministry of External Affairs and the Department of Atomic Energy. The NSG delegation was led by its current chair - Ambassador Veronika Smigolova of the Czech Republic.

The meeting was in continuation of the regular outreach meetings between India and the NSG. The NSG provided an update on its activities following the Prague Plenary. India expressed continued interest in enhanced engagement with the NSG with a view to securing full membership. India's SCOMET list updated in March 2103 is on par with the current NSG control lists.

Foreign Secretary also attended the Sherpa meeting of the 2014 Nuclear Security Summit which was held in Vienna on 28 June 2013.

127. International Atomic Energy Agency 57th General Conference, Vienna,

18 September 2013

Statement by Dr. Ratan Kumar Sinha, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and Leader of the Indian Delegation Mr. President, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election as the President of the 57th General Conference. Under your able leadership, I am sure the current General Conference will accomplish all the tasks before it.

India congratulates His Excellency Mr. Yukia Amano on his unanimous election for a second term as Director General of the IAEA. I am sure that the Agency and the international community will benefit from his experience and foresight.

India welcomes the new Members to the IAEA and I take this opportunity to congratulate Brunei Darussalam and the Commonwealth of the Bahamas on the occasion of their joining the IAEA family.

Mr. President,

We are meeting now after two important meetings related to nuclear energy, namely, the Fukushima Ministerial Conference in Japan during December 15-17, 2012, and the IAEA International Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Power in the 21st Century in the Russian Federation during June 27-29, 2013. Both these meetings have underscored the role that nuclear energy continues to play in the energy mix of various countries for achieving energy security and sustainable development goals in the 21st century for their respective populations. The international community has learned its lessons from the Fukushima Daiichi accident and come out with new guidelines for further enhanced levels of safety of nuclear reactors against beyond- design-basis accident scenarios.

India is committed to implement the highest standards for the safety of Indian nuclear power plants and the associated fuel cycle facilities. India will continue to participate and assist the IAEA Secretariat in its endeavour to enhance nuclear safety through the cluster of measures it has formulated in the IAEA Action Plan on Nuclear Safety. In this connection, I wish to inform you that the first IAEA Operational Safety Review Team (OSART) mission to India for Rajasthan Atomic Power Station (RAPS) units - 3&4, took place during October 29 to November 14, 2012. A follow-up OSART mission is planned in 2014. Preparation and planning for inviting IAEA's Integrated Regulatory Review Service (IRRS) for peer review of our regulatory system is also in progress, and India will approach the Agency in due course with a request to undertake this mission.

Further, as I had informed last year, India, along with the IAEA, organised an International Workshop on "Safety of Multi-Unit Nuclear Power Plant Sites against External Natural Hazards" at Mumbai, during October 17-19 2012. The Workshop addressed the complex task of safety evaluation of a multi-unit site with respect to multiple hazards, such as earthquake, tsunami and fire. The Workshop was attended by experts from regulatory authorities and plant operators from different countries as well as the IAEA. Actions taken by Member States and International Organisations following Fukushima Accident were also discussed.

Mr. President,

I now turn to updating on India's progress in the three-stage nuclear power programme, formulated under the visionary leadership of Dr. Homi Jehangir Bhabha. India has adopted the policy of a closed nuclear fuel cycle in order to extract the maximum energy from the limited uranium resources, to ensure sustainable nuclear waste management, and above all, to achieve sustainable, long-term energy security through utilisation of thorium.

The performance of the Indian nuclear power plants (NPPs), as well as of the several fuel cycle facilities, reached their highest levels last year. This includes NPPs registering 80% capacity factor, PHWR fuel production of 812 MT (an increase of 8% over the previous year), and the highest ever production of heavy water with the lowest specific energy consumption.

The average annual availability of the Indian NPPs has remained at 90%. Six of the nineteen reactors, currently under operation in the country, have logged continuous operation of more than 300 days during the year.

The Indian nuclear power sector has registered over 379 reactor years of safe operation. In this connection, I would like to once again reiterate that the Indian Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) offer a highly competitive capital cost per MWe and a low unit energy cost.

I am happy to inform you that the first unit of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant achieved its first criticality on July 13, 2013, and is expected to begin commercial operation shortly. This plant has been built in cooperation with the Russian Federation. The second unit is also in an advanced stage of commissioning.

The construction of four indigenously designed 700 MWe PHWRs, two each at existing sites of Kakrapar in Gujarat and Rawatbhata in Rajasthan, is progressing on schedule, and India is planning to construct sixteen more PHWRs of 700 MWe at five different inland sites.

The construction of the 500 MWe Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor (PFBR) is nearing completion at Kalpakkam. The critical erection of all permanent in-core components has been completed. Filling of sodium in the secondary sodium loop is planned shortly, and PFBR is expected to achieve first criticality in about a year from now.

A co-located Fast Reactor Fuel Cycle Facility (FRFCF), to reprocess and re-fabricate the fuel from PFBR, is being set up at Kalpakkam. Necessary site infrastructure has already been created and preparations for launching the Project are being taken up.

The Fast Breeder Test Reactor (FBTR), fuelled with unique mixed carbide fuel, located at the Indira Gandhi Centre for Atomic Research (IGCAR) has been performing well with high availability factor, providing valuable operating experience, as well as technical inputs to India's fast reactor programme. Irradiation of indigenously fabricated sodium bonded metallic fuel pins has been initiated in this reactor.

India continues to carry forward intense development of Thorium fuel cycle based technologies for demonstration in its AHWR programme. It is heartening to note that one of the Panel Sessions at the IAEA International Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Power in the 21st Century held at St. Petersburg was devoted to the topic 'Drivers for deployment of sustainable and innovative technology'. In this Session, I had the opportunity to share India's rich experience in the development and implementation of Thorium utilisation programme. Thorium-based fuel cycles and technologies present opportunities for enhanced passive safety features, utilisation of the larger natural resources of Thorium, and inherent proliferation resistance. International collaboration under the IAEA would help provide a much wider resource base for future nuclear technology development in this direction.

Mr. President,

India has continued to make good progress in finding new uranium resources in the country through extensive exploration work using multiple technologies. As a result of the use of advanced techniques, we have been able to identify new resources of Uranium. Last year, our reserves have registered an increase of about five percent.

The Nuclear Fuel Complex has developed a new process route, based on adopting radial forging for extrusion of blanks, to manufacture pressure tubes with improved metallurgical properties leading to better creep performance.

Considering India's domestic strength in nuclear power and non-power applications, India continues to host events in support of many programmes of the IAEA. An IAEA Technical meeting on Advanced Fuel Cycles for PHWR was held in India during April 8-11, 2013. In this Meeting, twenty one papers were presented covering the areas of new fuel cycle, fuel design, performance, post irradiation examination and accident modeling. An IAEA Inter-regional training course on "Uranium exploration and processing techniques" was hosted by the Uranium Corporation of India Limited at Jamshedpur. Delegates from twenty three countries participated in this Course.

India, as a founder Member of IAEA's International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles (INPRO), appreciates the significant progress made by INPRO over the years. The INPRO methodology for assessment of innovative nuclear reactors and fuel cycles provides a broad framework for developing specific goals and acceptance criteria for new designs. India continues to support INPRO, and will be making a voluntary contribution of US $50,000 later this year.

Mr. President,

The impact of nuclear power in addressing climate change concerns needs to be emphasised, since nuclear power involves low greenhouse gas emissions. In this direction, the decision of the Director General to organise the Scientific Forum on the theme of Nuclear Applications for a Sustainable Marine Environment during this session of the General Conference, is quite relevant.

India is developing technologies for high temperature reactors and hydrogen production processes. The current R&D activities target technologies for high temperature nuclear reactors, capable of supplying process heat up to 1000°C, and high efficiency hydrogen production processes, such as thermo-chemical processes and high temperature steam electrolysis. In addition, India is also developing hydrogen storage materials, as well as fuel cells for applications in transport and power generation sectors. As a contribution to the IAEA activities related to nuclear hydrogen production, a software tool for Hydrogen Economic Evaluation Programme (HEEP) has been developed by an Indian team under a contract with the IAEA. This tool is being used for economic analysis of nuclear hydrogen production so as to compare various options.

Non-power applications of nuclear and radiation technologies in the area of health-care, water, industry and environmental protection are extremely important. We have been a strong supporter and contributor to the Regional Cooperation Agreement (RCA) initiatives right from its inception, and India is the RCA Lead Country in the area of industrial applications and cancer treatment for the past several years.

The Tata Memorial Centre (TMC), an autonomous institution under the Indian Department of Atomic Energy, continues to play a major role in developing cost-effective methods for cancer diagnosis and treatment. TMC has developed a low-cost screening method for cervical cancer using acetic acid. In a recently published study carried out over twelve years covering 150000 women, it has been shown that the use of this technique has resulted in reducing mortality by 31%.

The Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC) has developed a Digital Radiotherapy Simulator (DRS) "Imagin" as a vital supplement to the indigenous teletherapy system, Bhabhatron. One of the three DRS Units installed at TMC was inaugurated remotely by the DG, IAEA during his visit to India in March this year. The technology of DRS has been transferred to private industry for its wider deployment.

India is highly appreciative of the IAEA's efforts in cancer management, and in particular the Programme on Action for Cancer Therapy (PACT).

India has been offering education and training programmes for physicians and technologists in the field of nuclear medicine. The Radiation Medicine Centre (RMC) of BARC in Mumbai leads these efforts, including those under various IAEA programmes. In early September this year, the RMC completed fifty years of sustained service in the field of nuclear medicine. RMC-trained specialists are not only serving in centres all over India, but also in several other countries.

Mr. President,

In addition to the various core activities related to nuclear energy and non-power applications, India is engaged in the development of high technologies in several other areas, including nuclear fusion and particle accelerators.

India has an active programme in nuclear fusion. The Steady State Superconducting Tokamak (SST-1) at the Institute for Plasma Research (IPR) has been successfully commissioned with the first plasma obtained on June 20, 2013. With this achievement, India has joined the select group of countries where research in 'Superconducting Tokamak' is currently being carried out. As a partner in the ITER Project, India is also working on the development of the concepts for Test Blanket Module (TBM). The Indian Lead-Lithium Ceramic Breeder Test Blanket Module will be tested in the ITER machine. The Indian TBM team is involved in the indigenous development of tritium breeder material by solid state reaction and solution combustion methods, as well as in the characterisation of these materials.

The Indus-2 Synchrotron Radiation Source at Indore operated at an enhanced current of 158 mA at 2.5 GeV using indigenously developed solid state Radio-Frequency amplifier modules. An indigenously designed and developed Radio Frequency Quadrupole (RFQ) has been commissioned at BARC and a proton beam was successfully accelerated to 200 keV through the RFQ. This is part of the R&D for India's roadmap of Accelerator Driven Systems (ADS). As a part of our accelerator development programme, and also as Indian contribution under an international collaboration initiative, a prototype non-invasive Beam Position Monitor for use in GANIL accelerator facility in France, has been developed and tested in France.

Mr. President,

India actively participated in the IAEA International Conference on Nuclear Security at Vienna during July 1-5, 2013.

India has signed an Arrangement with the IAEA concerning its voluntary contribution to the Nuclear Security Fund. During the last year, we have identified activities to be taken up with the IAEA and look forward to holding the first activity - "Review of Guiding Principles on applying Computer Security Controls to Instrumentation & Control Systems at Nuclear Facilities" during September 23-27, 2013. This activity will be held under the aegis of the Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership (GCNEP), being established near Delhi. Off-campus activities of GCNEP are taking place, involving organisation of different training programmes. Recently, a National Programme on Prevention and Response to Radiological Threats was organized during August 26-30, 2013 at GCNEP. During the current year, two other programmes, one on Food Irradiation, and the second on Radiological Safety, were organised.

Mr. President,

To conclude, I would like to look ahead at the world energy scenario beyond 2050. By then the accessibility and affordability, if not the global availability, of the fossil fuels will decline. Other energy sources, including nuclear, will need to bridge this deficiency so as to ensure clean and sustainable energy supply for different sectors, and at various scales. This would, in turn, necessitate a more rational approach and strategy, seeking a well-balanced use of all the energy resources available to us. Apart from electricity, nuclear will need to address the large-scale energy needs for industrial use and transport as well. In this context, ten years ago, the IAEA Scientific Forum had discussed the rising hydrogen economy, including the fuel's future production by advanced next generation nuclear power plants. The IAEA's latest Nuclear Technology Review is now carrying a feature article on, 'Nuclear Hydrogen Production Technology'.

Considering the long gestation period for deployment of new technologies in the nuclear field, it is essential to further strengthen the role of the Agency for facilitating pooling of international knowledge resources, to achieve sustainable energy security at the global level, looking at the challenges of the future.

Thank you, Mr. President.

128. Statement issued by Department of Atomic Energy in response to media reports on Nuclear Power Projects.

New Delhi, September 19, 2013.

“We have seen media reports on the ongoing negotiations for commercial contracts between Nuclear Power Corporation of India Ltd. (NPCIL) and its potential foreign suppliers.

The Government has repeatedly affirmed that these contracts will be subject to Indian law. Foreign suppliers as well as domestic vendors have raised a number of queries with regard to the manner in which the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Act 2010 and its associated rules will apply to their contracts. Since these queries involve questions of law, Department of Atomic Energy sought the opinion of the Ministry of Law and Justice on these issues. This will be examined by the Department of Atomic Energy and NPCIL.

The contracts, which will have to be approved by the competent authority of the Government, will be fully consistent with Indian law. There is no question of Indian law being violated or diluted. The projects will have to meet the highest standards of safety and the power generated will have to be competitive with other sources of nuclear as well as alternative forms of power. This will apply to our projects with Russia, France and the United States.

While NPCIL’s negotiations with Russia’s ASE for further reactors at Kudankulam are at an advanced stage and preliminary agreement has been signed with AREVA of France, NPCIL is currently negotiating a preliminary contract with Westinghouse. The proposed contract with Westinghouse is for a limited range of pre-project services. NPCIL will enter into this preliminary contract only with the approval of Atomic Energy Commission and the Government of India. This contract, if approved, will not bind NPCIL to enter into a contract with Westinghouse for the supply of reactors without establishing safety and techno-commercial viability.”

* Since the parties supplying the nuclear power equipment had certain reservations with regard to the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Act 2010, media reports suspected that the Government was thinking of tweaking the law to accommodate the objections of the suppliers. A report on September 19th said that under sustained pressure, the Indian government was looking to use the opinion of the Attorney- General to effectively neutralise a key provision of India's nuclear liability law that held the reactor suppliers liable in the event of an accident caused by faulty or defective equipment. In the opinion to the Department of Atomic Energy, which referred the matter to the AG on September 4, Goolam Vahanvati reportedly said it was for the operator of a nuclear plant in India to decide whether it wished to exercise the 'right of recourse' provided to it by section 17 of the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Act. The media report added that AG's opinion effectively paved the way for the Nuclear Power Corporation of India Ltd, which would operate any nuclear plant using imported reactors, to repudiate a right that Parliament explicitly wrote into section 17(b) of the law to ensure that foreign suppliers did not get away scot-free if a nuclear accident was traced back to "equipment or material with patent or latent defects or sub standard services." American nuclear vendors Westinghouse and GE were reported to have lobbied hard with Washington and Delhi to have this provision amended or removed. Though India stuck to the line that dilution of this provision was not possible, Mr. Vahanvati's view opened a window for the government to accommodate the U.S. suppliers' demand. External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid however said that the government did not want to sign any nuclear contract with the U.S. that was against national interest. Reacting to a report in The Hindu about the Attorney General's opinion, he said, "Laws are framed by Parliament and nobody can overrule it. This is impossible. The government will act according to the law of the land and not take any decision which is against the nation's interest."

India's Civil Liability for Nuclear Damages Act, 2010 was considered a watershed in international nuclear liability jurisprudence because of the unique way in which it dealt with supplier liability. Up till now, all liability in relation to a nuclear power plant was channelled exclusively to the operator. The only two situations in which a operator could claim a subsequent right of recourse against a supplier under international liability law as well as under domestic law of other countries were i) where the nuclear incident arose out of an act or omission by the supplier with an intent to cause damage (which is covered under Section 17(c) of the Act); and ii) a contractual right of recourse (which is covered under Section 17(a) of the Act). The Act however, also introduced a novel concept of supplier liability in Section 17(b) by which the operator would have the ability to reclaim any compensation it may pay, from a supplier, if the product supplied had patent or latent defects or the service provided was substandard.

129. Statement by External Affairs Minister at the High Level Meeting of the General Assembly on Nuclear Disarmament.

New York, September 26, 2013.

His Excellency, President of the General Assembly,

His Excellency the Secretary General of the United Nations,

Distinguished colleagues, ladies and gentlemen

It is an honour to address this high level gathering on Nuclear Disarmament. We associate ourselves with the statement made by the NAM.

Mr. President, from the days of our freedom struggle, we have been consistent in our support for the global elimination of all weapons of mass destruction. Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of our nation, was moved by the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki but remained unshaken in his belief in non-violence. He wrote that he regarded the employment of the atom bomb for the wholesale destruction of men, women and children as the most diabolical use of science. More than six decades later, it remains our collective challenge to craft a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order.

India remains convinced that its security would be strengthened in a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order. This conviction is based both on principle as well as pragmatism. We believe that the goal of nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed multilateral framework that is global and non-discriminatory. There is need for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Progressive steps are needed for the de-legitimization of nuclear weapons paving the way for their complete elimination.

In 1988, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi presented to the UN General a comprehensive Action Plan for a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order, which if implemented would have rid the world of nuclear weapons by 2008. India's subsequent proposals in the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament are testimony to our consistent support for nuclear disarmament based on the key principles of the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan for achieving nuclear disarmament in a time bound manner.

As a responsible nuclear power, we have a credible minimum deterrence policy and a posture of no-first use. We refuse to participate in an arms race, including a nuclear arms race. We are prepared to negotiate a global No-First-Use treaty and our proposal for a Convention banning the use of nuclear weapons remains on the table. As we see no contradiction between nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, we are also committed to working with the international community to advance our common objectives of non-proliferation, including through strong export controls and membership of the multilateral export regimes.

Mr. President, the Non-Aligned Movement, of which India is a proud founding member, has proposed today the early commencement of negotiations in the CD on nuclear disarmament. We support this call. Without prejudice to the priority we attach to nuclear disarmament, we also support the negotiation in the CD of a non-discriminatory and internationally verifiable treaty banning the future production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices that meets India's national security interests. It should be our collective endeavour to return the CD, which remains the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, to substantive work as early as possible.

Mr. President, this meeting is proof that the international community remains concerned about the catastrophic consequences of nuclear war and the lack of progress in moving toward global nuclear disarmament. In recent years, many initiatives both official and non-governmental have been launched in order to make the vision of a nuclear weapon free world a reality. Simultaneously, there has been a welcome and well-deserved focus on preventing access by non-state actors, in particular terrorists, to weapons of mass destruction and related materials. The recent use of chemical weapons in Syria point to an urgent need for the international community to strengthen restraints on use of weapons of mass destruction and in particular preventing their access to non state actors and terrorists. We hope that our discussions today would galvanize political will and help channel our collective efforts towards the noble goal of ridding the world of nuclear weapons and all other weapons of mass destruction. To that end, Mr. President, we pledge to you our full support and cooperation.

I thank you.

130. Second India-Afghanistan-United States Trilateral Dialogue.
New Delhi, February 18, 2013.

1. The second India-Afghanistan-US trilateral dialogue will be held in New Delhi on February 19, 2013. The Afghan delegation will be led by Afghan Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Jawed Ludin, with Assistant Secretary for South and Central Asian Affairs Mr. Robert O. Blake, Jr. leading the U.S. delegation. Additional Secretary (Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran) Shri Y. K. Sinha will lead the Indian delegation.
2. It may be recalled that the first trilateral dialogue was held in New York on September 25, 2012.

131. Second India-Afghanistan-United States Trilateral Dialogue: Chairman's Statement.
New Delhi, February 19, 2013.

1. Today India hosted the second meeting of India-Afghanistan-US trilateral dialogue in New Delhi. The Afghan delegation was led by Afghan Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Jawed Ludin, with Assistant Secretary for South and Central Asian Affairs Mr. Robert O. Blake, Jr. leading the U.S. delegation. Additional Secretary (Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran) Shri Y. K. Sinha led the Indian delegation. Later the three delegations jointly called on Foreign Secretary Shri Ranjan Mathai.
2. India has strategic partnerships with both Afghanistan and the US, and jointly they share a vision of a secure, peaceful, democratic and prosperous Afghanistan. The second trilateral dialogue provided a platform for in-depth consultations on issues ranging from political and security spheres to trade, commerce and investment, and other areas of mutual interest. The three sides agreed to continue this trilateral process as a vehicle for achieving the shared goal of peace, security and development of Afghanistan.

3. It may be recalled that the first trilateral dialogue was hosted by Afghanistan in New York on September 25, 2012.

132. Question in the Lok Sabha on the 'Agreement with Russia on Afghanistan'.

New Delhi, March 20, 2013.

Will the Minister of EXTERNAL AFFAIRS be pleased to state:

- (a) whether India has signed any pact with Russia regarding Afghanistan; (b) if so, the details thereof;
- (c) whether the Government has taken diplomatic steps to safeguard India's interests in Afghanistan; and
- (d) if so, the details thereof?

ANSWER

THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (SHRIMATI PRENEET KAUR)

(a) & (b) No specific agreements regarding Afghanistan have been signed with the Russian Federation.

However, the situation in Afghanistan is a matter of constant deliberation between the Governments of India and the Russian Federation. The subject is discussed and views exchanged at the highest political level. It is also periodically reviewed at the level of the respective Ministries of External/Foreign Affairs as well as between the security agencies.

India and the Russian Federation share a high degree of convergence and commonality of views regarding the situation in Afghanistan. During the recent visit of the President of the Russian Federation, Mr. Vladimir Putin to New Delhi (Dec 24, 2012), the two sides concluded a Joint Statement that elaborates on the mutually agreed positions of both the sides on Afghanistan.

In the Joint Statement, the two sides recognised terrorism as the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability. The two countries also recognised the regional dimensions of terrorism and extremism, emphasizing the need for joint and concerted efforts and cooperation among the regional countries to address this challenge in all its forms and manifestations.

The Joint Statement also recalled the holding of the Delhi Investment Summit on Afghanistan in June 2012 to promote investments into Afghanistan.

(c) & (d) Government is closely monitoring the evolving situation in Afghanistan and is in touch with various stakeholders, including the Government of Afghanistan, its regional and international partners on developments pertaining to Afghanistan. India is also part of various international efforts to bring about peace and stability in that country. Government will take all necessary measures to safeguard India's interests in this regard. India believes that a peaceful, stable, democratic and prosperous Afghanistan is the best guarantee for securing Indian interests in that country. India has, accordingly, signed a comprehensive Strategic Partnership Agreement with Afghanistan in October 2011 aimed at stepping up political, economic, security, social and cultural ties with Afghanistan. In addition to ongoing assistance, India organized the Delhi Investment Summit on Afghanistan in June 2012 in an effort to encourage Indian and foreign investment into Afghanistan.

133. Press Release issued by the President's Secretariat on the call by Afghan President on President Pranab Mukherjee.

New Delhi, May 21, 2013.

Mr. Hamid Karzai, President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan called on President Pranab Mukherjee at Rashtrapati Bhavan today (May 21, 2013).

The President said India would stand by the Government and the people of Afghanistan in the critical period of transition, development and nation-building. India is proud to partner the Government and people of Afghanistan in their efforts towards reconstruction and development of Afghanistan.

The President said we should strengthen and deepen India-Afghanistan relations in all areas as prescribed in the Strategic Partnership Agreement. India is prepared to increase bilateral contribution to institution-building, training and equipment to the extent India can.

The Afghan President warmly reciprocated the President's words and said India is amongst the closest of countries to Afghanistan and according to many surveys the country most liked by the Afghan people. India-Afghan relations stand today on solid cemented grounds. Our relations are greater than any time before.

134. Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson on some aspects of relations with Afghanistan and Saudi Arabia.

New Delhi, May 22, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Ladies and gentlemen, I am ready now for what you have to ask me on anything other than what we had the briefing on.

Q: Sir, could you give us some sense of the meeting between Afghan President and the Prime Minister, and reaction about his so-called wish list?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, I have been plagued with these requests. Some call it a wish list and others say a shopping list but I do not want to get into an approach of say a fly on the wall because that is what you would like to know. I certainly was not a fly on the wall there. Otherwise I would have been swatted and would not be here. So, I will try and give you a different perspective and that is what were the broad areas that were the fulcrum of this visit and how we see this visit in the context of our relations. And I think you will get a feel despite not being there and despite not getting the ingredients of this dream wish that you have to know about it. I will try and give you some information which will perhaps try and satisfy you about the contours of President Karzai's engagements in India.

President Karzai was on a two-day visit to India. This was his third visit in the last three years to India. He came here for the Strategic Partnership Agreement following which he also came here last year for a state visit, and this was his third visit. Of course if you take the visit of our Prime Minister, that was four visits during the course of three plus years, etc. That said, this was his third visit. You have seen how laudatory he was in terms of his responses to India's development assistance to Afghanistan during his convocation address at the Lovely Professional University in Punjab.

Subsequent to that he did come to Delhi and he had meetings with both the President and the Prime Minister. In addition he also had meetings with the BJP leader Mr. Lal Krishna Advani and several CEOs of Indian companies. Our assessment is that such visits and regular consultations strengthen our bilateral relations. The current visit has in our assessment further strengthened the strategic partnership between India and Afghanistan which have historic and civilisational ties going back several millennia. Our assessment is that this was a visit which did enhance our strategic partnership.

As Afghanistan moves towards its critical security, political and economic transitions, which are also marked by a drawdown of the NATO forces and scheduled Presidential elections in 2014, we feel that the strategic partnership between Afghanistan and India can play an important and crucial role in providing security and stability to Afghanistan. India is ready to stand by Afghanistan as a close and friendly as well as historic neighbour through this transition and will play a due and responsible role in this regard.

During the meetings it was also agreed India and Afghanistan will work together and will do all within their means to promote stability and security in Afghanistan. That broadly covers the security-related issues. But then our relationship is not limited to safety and security while this is an important factor. There was also an occasion for both the sides at the meeting to review Indian-assisted projects in Afghanistan.

Let me try and tell you, during the last two weeks there have been some developments on these projects. One is that the Vice-President of Tata Consultancy Services Mr. Ramadurai had visited Afghanistan and explored the prospects of Indian investments in skill building in Afghanistan, skill building specifically related to computer software.

Separately, Dr. M.S. Swaminathan, who is the founder of the Swaminathan Foundation and has been designated as the Chairman of a task force constituted to establish a National Agricultural University in Kabul, did visit. The idea is to try and realize the potential of Afghanistan's agricultural development. These were two examples of Indian industry and expertise trying to contribute to Afghanistan's development. Both the leaders felt that these were positive developments, these were in accordance with our core capabilities in this regard.

Finally there was a discussion on the Salma dam and the new Parliament building, and these projects were reviewed. And it was agreed to expedite and complete the work on the new Parliament building so that it is completed in the first half of next year. That is the timeline on which we are working.

If I may try and sum up, there was a discussion on political and security issues, there was also a discussion on development and economic issues. That is the sum and substance of President Karzai's discussions with the President and the Prime Minister.

Q: Is there any pointed help that they have sought with regards to security?

Official Spokesperson: I think I did mention that I was not a fly on the wall. You can either come and try and see is there pointed or not pointed; or as I said, we stand ready and will do everything within our means to promote stability and security of Afghanistan.

Q: You mentioned the word critical and you also pointed out that.

Official Spokesperson: I said critical security, economic and political transition.

Q: The way you said it sounded as if you were apprehending something. Can you please tell us what are India's fears in Afghanistan? We hear a lot about what Afghanistan is moving towards but we do not understand what are India's fears in Afghanistan. What might happen in that country that might be bad for India? Can you please spell it out?

Official Spokesperson: I think you need not worry about fears. I do not think I ever said fear. We have to understand that our interests in Afghanistan are neither transitional nor transitory. We are there and we will be there in Afghanistan for all times because we are neighbours. Neighbours cannot transit in and transit out. Let us be very clear that as far as India is concerned, our engagement with Afghanistan is neither transitory nor in transition. It is an engagement which will continue.

But we do understand that 2014, and I have indicated to you the issues in 2014, they are in a transition, a political transition which means they are going to have Presidential elections next year. They are in an economic transition which means that they will increasingly have options of economic assistance in terms of investment etc., from a period where they have had a lot of assistance because of the security situation, and security of course because now it is going to be the Afghan national armed forces who are in a transition to take over. So, there are three types of transitions. And we are ready to provide and work with Afghanistan in all these areas. I do not think there is any concern as such. But as a neighbour we do understand that there is need to be engaged in all these fields.

Q: Around this time last year we hosted an investment summit in New Delhi. Was there any discussion to look at the tangible outcomes of that summit in terms of how it has boosted Indian investments in Afghanistan? Have Indian businessmen felt more encouraged to invest in Afghanistan?

Official Spokesperson: The very fact that amongst President Karzai's important meetings in Delhi were meetings with CEOs indicates Indian interest as well as Afghanistan's interest in economic engagement. The very fact that we opted to have a summit of a kind, which was unprecedented as far as we were concerned, a summit for investment in a third country in India, this is the first time we have ever done it, shows our interest and our keenness to push forward on the economic engagement.

I just wanted to go back to some of the things that Kalol indicated. I think I need to explain that as far as we are concerned we respect the choices and the decision of the people and the government of Afghanistan. We also recognize that there is a political process under way. All we seek from that is that it should be Afghan-led, inclusive, transparent and it adheres to the red lines which have been agreed to between the Afghan Government itself and the international community. As long as these issues are met, we have no major concerns because these are agreed-to parameters and frameworks for transition in Afghanistan.

Q: Afghan army officers are trained in academies here. Is there any proposal to expand their quota? I understand we cannot put boots on the ground.

Official Spokesperson: Our capabilities in terms of training are modest, and within those modest capabilities we are trying to do our best. We are engaged in a regular dialogue with Afghanistan about their needs, and we will take it from there as regards our training. But while it is modest, it is not insignificant that we are providing that assistance.

Q: Among the things that India must be weighing up regarding expanding its security cooperation with Afghanistan is the very stability of the Afghan army. Is that something prior to 2014 that has been taken into consideration, the risk that if you do increase the supply of equipment to the army it ends up falling into the wrong hands? And when will we know more about the decision on whether or not to respond to Mr. Karzai's request?

Official Spokesperson: As you are aware, I did mention that we will have a meeting of the Strategic Partnership Council a little later during the year. I have also indicated to you previously that under that there is a subgroup which deals with political and security consultations. These are all mechanisms that we have to continue this dialogue. The very fact that we meet at very high levels and also at other levels is testimony to the extremely regular exchange of information that we have. For example, from the beginning of the year we have had a visit by the National Security Advisor to Afghanistan, we have also had a meeting between the External Affairs Minister and his counterpart in Almaty, and we have had a visit of President Karzai, all within the space of say five months. We have a regular schedule of interactions. And it is also normal that some of our leaders meet on the sidelines. While President Karzai was last here in November, prior to that he met Prime Minister in Tehran at the NAM Summit. So, they are virtually meeting at very short intervals, exchanging information, and we have no problems in terms of our channels of communication being active all the time.

Q: Sir, of the subgroups of the Strategic Partnership Council, how many have met so far?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have explained this previously. One has met. We have just constituted the three others along with who are going to head these groups. We intend that they meet shortly. If you want the details of those, I will provide them to you as to who heads each of those subgroups from our side.

Q: Sir, the Chinese Premier has left India but the Chinese flags are still flying on Rajpath. Is there any particular reason for that?

Official Spokesperson: I would suggest that what we always do is we keep the flags till the day of the dignitaries leaving India. His visit is from 19th to 22nd. These, I can assure you, will be taken off. You do not have any concerns on that.

Q: There are some reports that the Japanese Government is ready to resume nuclear talks with India. Do you expect that both Governments will agree on the resumption of nuclear talks on the occasion of the Prime Minister's visit?

Official Spokesperson: I can answer it in several ways. You, like other Japanese media, are scheduled to meet the Prime Minister, you can ask that question. Secondly, we also have a briefing on that shortly. However, if you would like to understand our wish list, since today is the day of wish list, of course nuclear is an important component of our energy mix. Therefore, we see and have interest in engagement on nuclear matters with several countries including Japan. We have started that dialogue. That dialogue is under way. And if what you say is correct, obviously India will be ready for that.

Q: On 25th, External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid is to visit Saudi Arabia. In that visit, what are your hopes to solve the issue which relates to the new rule Nitaqat?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have to understand that the Nitaqat law is a domestic Saudi issue. It does not apply only to Indians, it applies to all nationalities. Our focus has always been to try and see if the law and its implementation has an impact on Indian nationals in Saudi Arabia. Then we would like to ensure that it is done in a humane way, in a dignified way and which meets the interests of our nationals. My understanding is that they have given a three-month period in which the Saudi Government has told all those who are irregular in Saudi Arabia to either regularize their stay there or to leave the country with dignity. We are in that process.

As far as the External Affairs Minister's visit is concerned, he is visiting on a bilateral invitation from his counterpart Prince Saud Al-Faisal who is the Foreign Minister of Saudi Arabia. This was originally scheduled earlier this year but for various reasons it had to be rescheduled and he goes now. This of course will be an important matter in terms of the discussions. But the discussions are to cover a variety of other issues. Those issues are matters of energy, matters of cooperation, antiterrorism cooperation, issues relating to the Arab world.

We have two major declarations between India and Saudi Arabia. Those are the Riyadh Declaration which was issued when Prime Minister Singh went to Riyadh in 2010, and the Delhi Declaration which goes back to the visit of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah when he came to Delhi in 2006. This is to review the implementation of those declarations and how far we have proceeded on that. So, on the table is a large menu of issues including of course the Nitaqat.

Thank you very much

135. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Afghan President Karzai.

New Delhi, May 23, 2013.

The President of Afghanistan, Hamid Karzai, paid a two day working visit to India from May 20-22 during the course of which he was conferred an Doctoris Honoris Causa for Letters by the Lovely Professional University, Phagwara, Punjab, on May 20, and met Prime Minister and President separately on May 21. Prime Minister also hosted a dinner for President Karzai and his delegation on May 21. President Karzai also met senior BJP leader, Shri L.K. Advani and a delegation of CEOs from the CII amongst others while in Delhi.

The visit of President Karzai was his third to India in the last three years after Prime Minister Man Mohan Singh's landmark visit to Afghanistan in May 2011, following visits in October 2011 in which Prime Minister and President Karzai signed the historic Strategic Partnership Agreement between the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan and India, and his subsequent State Visit to India in November 2012 which reinforced this partnership with a new business dimension. Earlier, in May 2012, the Partnership Council headed by the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and India met in Delhi in May 2012 to review and advance this relationship. This was followed by the Delhi Investment Summit organized by the Confederation of Indian Industry in June 2012 just before the Tokyo Conference on Afghanistan where the international community pledged continued development support for Afghanistan post 2014 under the Tokyo Mutual Accountability Framework. The current visit further enhanced the strategic partnership between the two countries which have historic and civilizational ties going back several millennia. As Afghanistan moves towards its critical security, political and economic transitions marked by the drawdown of NATO forces and the Presidential elections in 2014, the strategic partnership between Afghanistan and India can play an important/crucial role in providing security and stability to Afghanistan. India is ready to stand by Afghanistan as close, friendly and historic neighbour through these transitions and play a due and responsible role in this regard.

President Karzai's visit was also an occasion to review the status of ongoing Indian-assisted development projects in and for Afghanistan. At his address in Lovely Professional University, Punjab, President Karzai paid fulsome tribute to India's development assistance for Afghanistan and the role that India was playing in educating Afghanistan's youth in Indian universities. Over the last two weeks, Shri S. Ramadorai, Vice President of Tata Consultancy Services and Prof. M.S. Swaminathan, founder of the M.S. Swaminathan Foundation and Chairman of a Task Force constituted to establish the National Agricultural University of Afghanistan, have visited Kabul separately to explore the prospects of Indian investments in skill-building in Afghanistan and the Afghan economy and help realize the potential of Afghanistan's agricultural development respectively, areas where Indian industry and expertise can contribute. The progress of work on the Salma Dam and the new Parliament building was also reviewed. It was agreed to expedite and complete the work on the new Parliament building in the first half of the year.

President Karzai left Delhi for Kabul after his working visit in the forenoon of May 22

* Media reports said that India had reservations on Afghanistan's request for supply of lethal weapons, saying it was neither in a position nor willing to contribute lethal weapons right now, Afghan President Hamid Karzai raised the issue with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. "We are going to help with non-lethal equipment but I don't think we are either in the position to or willing to contribute lethal weapons right now," External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid said. Noting that India already supplies important elements of supporting equipment, transportation, which includes helicopters, the minister said "...we think it is not advisable to go beyond that. It is a fragile area, there are stakeholders, there are other people. We don't want to become part of the problem."

Reports said that during his recent visit to India, Mr. Karzai had handed a "wish list" to Indian leadership seeking greater military and civilian support in the wake of proposed withdrawal of US-led forces from Afghanistan in 2014. Mr. Khurshid, in an interview to Straits Times, said there were lots of people who have perceptions about the future of Afghanistan and "if we can help Afghanistan without creating further problems for them, I think that would be a preferred way to do it." He said, "We are in touch with them constantly, and we are committed and have said very categorically... We are not looking at exit routes for ourselves which means we are there to stay for a long term. We are very comforted by the fact that Afghans have confidence in us. We won't let them down."

136. Statement by Official Spokesperson in response to a question on the opening of the Taliban Office in Qatar.

New Delhi, June 21, 2013.

“We have followed developments relating to the opening of an office of the Taliban in Qatar and statements made by the representatives of that office and others. These statements reflect some confusion about the name of the Qatar office, its structure, its political and legal status, and its objectives. We have also seen the reaction of the Government of Afghanistan to these developments.

Our position is clear. Government of India has always called for a broad-based Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-controlled reconciliation process, within the framework of the Afghan Constitution and the internationally accepted red lines. Such a process would necessarily recognise the centrality of the Government of Afghanistan in the process, and involve all sections of the Afghan society, as also the insurgent groups, including the Taliban, who wish to join the mainstream.

The reconciliation process should not seek to create equivalence between an internationally recognised Government of Afghanistan and insurgent groups, confer legitimacy to insurgent groups or convey the impression of two competing state authorities for Afghanistan, which could undermine the legitimate Afghan State, Afghan Government and the political, social and economic progress witnessed in Afghanistan over the past decade, to which the international community itself has contributed in great measure.

India remains committed to supporting the Government and the people of Afghanistan, in accordance with the India-Afghanistan Strategic Partnership Agreement, and a reconciliation process that has the support of the Government and the people of Afghanistan.”

137. Official Spokesperson's response to a media query about the visit of the Minister of Education of Afghanistan.

New Delhi, June 27, 2013.

1. H.E. Dr. Ghulam Farooq Wardak, Minister of Education of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan met the External Affairs Minister on June 27, 2013 and discussed issues of mutual interests. Both sides pledged to enhance their bilateral cooperation across various sectors particularly, in the field of education. India is currently one of the largest providers of education scholarships to Afghan youth under ICCR, ITEC and various other programmes.
2. The Afghan Minister is also attending the World Education Congress in Mumbai on June 28-29

138. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question on the attack on the Consulate General of India in Jalalabad.

New Delhi, August 3, 2013.

"The suicide attacks against the Indian Consulate General in Jalalabad, which has led to the injuries and deaths of several valiant Afghan Police personnel as well as deaths of several innocent Afghan civilians including children, must be condemned in the strongest possible terms.

This attack has once again highlighted that the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability stems from terrorism and the terror machine that continues to operate from beyond its borders.

India will not be deterred from its commitment to assist Afghanistan in its reconstruction and development effort; this was clearly an attack not just against India but an attack against the efforts to help the Afghan people overcome the tragic hardships they have endured due to several decades of war.

We wish to express our deep gratitude to the valiant Afghan security personnel who laid down their lives while protecting the Indian Consulate.

We wish to express our grief and condolences to the families of the innocent Afghan civilians who also lost their lives during this attack.”

139. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of President of Afghanistan to India.

New Delhi, December 12-15, 2013.

At the invitation of the Government of India, His Excellency Hamid Karzai, President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, is on a Working Visit to India from 12-15 December 2013. During the Delhi leg of his visit, President Hamid Karzai met with His Excellency Pranab Mukherjee, President of India and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. The Foreign Minister Salman Khurshid and National Security Advisor, Shivshankar Menon called on President Hamid Karzai.

During the bilateral talks, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh expressed great pleasure at the strong and broad-based strategic partnership between India and Afghanistan and exchanged views on regional and global environment.

The two leaders spoke with warmth and satisfaction at the state of bilateral relations and, in particular, the progress in the implementation of the Strategic Partnership Agreement.

President Karzai briefed Prime Minister on the political, security, and economic situation in Afghanistan, including the ongoing security transition in the country and Afghanistan's relations with other countries. Prime Minister conveyed India's confidence in the ability of the people and the government of Afghanistan to build a strong, united, stable, peaceful and prosperous Afghanistan that also contributes to regional peace and prosperity. He reiterated India's commitment to support Afghanistan through the transition and beyond. The two leaders also agreed to work on further strengthening regional cooperation with the aim of regional integration and development, including through the Heart of Asia process. India is hosting the next meeting of the Senior Officials of Heart of Asia on 18 January 2014.

Consistent with their shared vision of Afghanistan and peace and security in the region, Prime Minister and President Karzai affirmed their commitment to further intensify their partnership in all areas, in accordance with their Strategic Partnership Agreement. Prime Minister conveyed India's continuing support for all-round socio-economic development of Afghanistan through promotion of business links, educational scholarships, and implementation of Indian assisted development and reconstruction projects. The two leaders also agreed to work with the Islamic Republic of Iran for development of new trade routes to facilitate trade and transit to Afghanistan and beyond.

The two leaders also agreed on deepening defence and security cooperation, including through enhancement in training and meeting the equipment and infrastructure needs of Afghanistan National Security and Defence Forces that would increase their operational capabilities and mobility. The two leaders also agreed to expand opportunities for higher military education in India for Afghan officers.

Prime Minister thanked President Karzai for the support extended by the Government of Afghanistan in safeguarding Indian Missions and personnel in Afghanistan. He conveyed deep gratitude to the Afghan security forces for thwarting the suicide attack against Indian Consulate in Jalalabad in August 2013. The two leaders reiterated their resolve to work together as well as with the international community to counter the

* According to media reports Afghanistan gave a wish list of military equipment as well as sought greater cooperation in building up a battle-capable Afghan National Defence Force and police. Mr. Karzai said it was up to India to determine the schedule and type of equipment it can transfer to Afghanistan. Besides defence and security, the two leaders also agreed to work with Iran for development of new trade routes to facilitate trade and transit to Afghanistan and beyond. One of these is a land route beginning from the Iranian port of Iran and entering Zaranj on the Afghan border from where India has built a road that feeds into the garland highway connecting the country's major cities. A spur takes the route over the Afghan border in the north to Central Asia, thus opening up further prospects for India's trade and economic drive in non-traditional markets.

Ministry of External Affairs spokesperson Syed Akbaruddin had given an 'idea about India's thinking' on the proposed US-Afghanistan Bilateral Security Arrangement by stating that it was against attempts to pressurise and would support any stand taken by Mr. Karzai. The Prime Minister conveyed India's confidence in Afghanistan's ability to build a strong nation that also contributes to regional peace and prosperity. India, in the meantime sided with Afghanistan in its ongoing dispute over a security pact that would allow a smaller contingent of U.S. troops to stay back after the bulk of western forces withdraws from the country in 2014. "He [President Karzai] will do whatever is best for forces of terrorism and extremism that have been affecting the two countries and threatening the entire region.

President Pranab Mukherjee hosted President Karzai to a private dinner, where the two leaders discussed bilateral, regional and international issues of common concern. President Mukherjee fondly recalled his visit to Afghanistan to inaugurate the Zaranj-Delaram Highway. President Karzai extended an invitation to President Mukherjee to visit Afghanistan.

President Karzai is accompanied by a high level delegation comprising Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Zarar Ahmad Osmani, National Security Advisor Dr. Rangin Dadfar Spanta, Acting Minister of Commerce & Industries, Mr. Shaker Kargar and other senior officials.

the people of Afghanistan and, in accordance with India's approach to Afghanistan, we will support it," Ministry of External Affairs spokesperson Syed Akbaruddin told newsmen after a meeting between Mr. Karzai and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

"Yes, it was discussed because India and Afghanistan both see the Bilateral Security Agreement as important for the security and stability of Afghanistan. Our approach has always been one of not being prescriptive, intrusive or judgemental. And therefore this is the paradigm through which we approach this matter. We are confident that President Karzai is a wise and sagacious leader. As a close and steadfast friend of Afghanistan and in accordance with the Indian approach to Afghanistan, we will support it," said Mr. Akbaruddin.

Media reports said both the Afghan President and U.S. officials had exchanged strong words over the timing of signing the BSA. Mr. Karzai wanted it inked by his successor after next year's elections, in which he would not be eligible to contest, while the U.S. had threatened to walk out if it is not done immediately. "Aggressive rhetoric won't work. We are not a nation that is known for giving into intimidation. If they have not recognised this, they should; it will be good for them to recognise. We will sign it when we feel sure that our signature will bring peace and security," Mr. Karzai told the NDTV in an interview. U.S. Special Representative on Afghanistan and Pakistan James Dobbins told a Senate Committee that he hoped India would help persuade Mr. Karzai to ink the agreement. But the Indian response appears to have belied those hopes. Mr. Karzai also met businessmen and all three chambers of commerce and industry in Pune after holding a news conference and a meeting with think tanks in New Delhi. India was planning a major game-changing project in Afghanistan which would start taking shape once its Parliament approved new mining laws. Mr. Karzai felt Indian businessmen were shy and did not come forward like Chinese traders. "Even South Africa has invested in Afghanistan. I would again request, rather urge our Indian partners in business to come forward and invest," Mr. Karzai told NDTV. The major investment planned by India was in Hajigak mines, said to be Asia's biggest untapped deposits of iron ore. "India has to just come forward and get the deal through," Mr. Karzai said. According to Afghanistan Ambassador Shaida Abdali, Mr. Karzai's focus was on three issues — the state of play on the BSA, the peace process and then the transition process and discuss the way ahead.

BANGLADESH

140. Foreign Secretary's Remarks to Media. Dhaka, February 10, 2013.

I am happy to be in Bangladesh at a time when our two democracies are moving ahead with a spirit of cooperation which is at its best.

India attaches the highest importance to its relations with Bangladesh, our close and friendly neighbour. Our regular and intensive engagement over the previous three years has led to significant progress in our bilateral cooperation encompassing a wide range of areas. The vision for such accelerated cooperation, based on the principles of equality, partnership and mutual benefit, has undoubtedly come from the landmark visits of the Prime Minister of Bangladesh to India in January 2010 and the Prime Minister of India to Bangladesh in September 2011.

We have just concluded a very productive round of discussions in a very warm and cordial atmosphere covering the entire gamut of bilateral relations and other issues of mutual interest. The meeting today provided us the opportunity to prepare for the 2nd meeting of the Joint Consultative Commission at the level of the Foreign Ministers.

Foreign Secretary Md. Shahidul Haque and I have today signed an MOU on Cooperation between the Foreign Service Institute of India and the Foreign Service Academy of Bangladesh. I have no doubt that this would facilitate exchanges between the diplomatic services of our two countries. More importantly, it will enable recent entrants into the diplomatic services of India and Bangladesh to meet, exchange ideas and even learn from each other.

I am greatly honoured by the call I will be making shortly on Hon'ble Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. I have called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs and am also scheduled to call on Ministers of Finance and Local Government and Rural Development of Bangladesh.

Let me conclude by saying that our two countries share similar values of democracy, free and open societies and systems. The unique cultural and historical linkages with similarities in developmental challenges call upon us to intensify our bilateral cooperation and work for the betterment and development of our two neighbouring countries.

141. Joint Press Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister of Bangladesh in Dhaka.

Dhaka, February 16, 2013.

Q: I have one question with two parts, one is land boundary agreement. We understand that your Indian Cabinet have adopted the draft constitution amendment bill but BJP, the Opposition, is opposing the bill. So in this situation how far you are hopeful about the passing of the Constitution Amendment Bill by the Lok Sabha and the second question is about the Teesta water sharing agreement. Last time, it did not happen because of strong opposition by Paschimbanga Chief Minister.....

External Affairs Minister: Thank you very much. And I am not quite sure that your information is correct. What we are doing on the Land Boundary Agreement and what we are doing on Teesta Water Agreement is a collective aspiration of India and our most valuable friends of Bangladesh. And these are decisions that we are taking in the mutual interests of both sides and these are win-win decisions for both sides in partnership and with the vision of our great leaders who saw these as steps of consolidating and bonding between us from generation to generation. I think both sides have shown the utmost sensitivity to the requirements, concerns and aspirations of the other side. So I think that you shouldn't jump to any conclusions about any major group in India opposing anything, but people have a right to ask questions in democracy as indeed they ask questions here and it is upon us to ensure that we persuade them with the right answers. We are moving forward with full consultations and full involvement of all stakeholders and it will be of course my duty to ensure that it gets passed in the Parliament with cooperation of all parties including the main Opposition, the BJP.

As far as the Teesta river water sharing is concerned, that's a matter which again you know that many of our Chief Ministers have very generously accommodated and supported and stood by a decision that once again is a collective decision of the people of India. We are only there to ensure that it is implemented. Because Teesta is a water issue and is directly associated with our state of West Bengal, we, therefore, have to ensure that West Bengal is fully on board with us and that's a matter that will be attended to once in the land boundary matter is through. I can assure you that I have great regard for the Chief Minister of Bengal. I believe she is a good friend of Bangladesh and she is conscious of her responsibilities and the responsibilities on her shoulders are very great but I can assure you that there is no lack of good will and sense of friendship towards Bangladesh and that is what will prevail. I can say this to you categorically that we are committed to ensuring that both the agreements go through.

Q: When would this commitment about Land Boundary Agreement.....

External Affairs Minister: Land boundary is to come by way of constitutional amendment which requires 2/3rd majority in the House. We are bringing it to Parliament in the coming Session which begins around the last week of this month and we hope that this will be actually passed during the Session itself. That is why I had it passed by Cabinet even before I came here. When I go back, I will do the work that is necessary to bring it before the House and if all goes well, we will be able to get it passed during the Parliament Session.

Q: Can I ask a question on the present scenario in Dhaka on banning of Jamaat. I want to ask both of you whether government of Bangladesh is trying to ban Jamaat or not and also what government of India thinks about it as it is not only a domestic issue but an issue of security in the South East Asian region and all this is linked with fundamentalist forces. What the government of India thinks about this? Is government of India in favour of banning Jamaat or not?

External Affairs Minister: I will first answer the part that I should be answering and then Hon'ble Minister will answer the part that I believe she has to answer. Let me just say this to you if I may say so that it is always wonderful to see young people engage in any democratic process, when the new generation stirs to express its dreams, it gives you a tremendous high about democracy and it revives your strongest feelings and faith in democracy. Young people of every country have their respective dreams and I hope that part of dreams include global dreams. But they have their own dreams and I think, we must not only respect them, but applaud those dreams. Of course, the Hon'ble Minister will respondbut the fact that they show their concerns and their involvement and aspirations is what I can hear and see and I applaud and admire. As far as the issues that you have raised, are issues of unwholesome behavior by people described as terrorism, described as extremism and I must say that we have deep appreciation for the cooperation and the extent to which assistance has been given by the government of Bangladesh and we are tremendously grateful and this has not been done in easy circumstances. I do know that there are always conflicting opinions in a free society and, therefore, acting with conviction on principles particularly if you do so in terms of your friendship and your commitment to international peace and security is something that needs to be applauded. We acknowledge it and we express our gratitude and solidarity.

Foreign Minister of Bangladesh: Thank you. As we all know that Bangladesh was formed with the ideals of secularism. Given our history, we wanted to be a secular country at that time. Our first constitution, because of the involvement of some political parties, we fought crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide; religion based politics was banned under the constitution. But that ban was withdrawn after the father of nation was assassinated and when power was captured unconstitutionally by usurpers. Now that the young generation has raised this demand and people from all walks of life are supporting this movement and supporting this demand and obviously as a people's demand of a democratic country and as a government of a democratic country, we are considering it as demand of people and definitely Election Commission also has a role and this will be seen from that perspective.

Q: During the meeting what was discussion on Teesta?

Foreign Minister of Bangladesh: We have talked about it because we have talked about all issues. We have bilateral relations, we have talked about transit and we have a joint working group which will have meetings, we hope soon, to consider issues like we have meetings joint working groups on sub-regional cooperation. So, we have all these joint working group meetings coming up in the next few months. Thank you.

External Affairs Minister: May I just say that the journey of a thousand miles starts with the first step you take. We are travellers together – Bangladesh and India. We are travelers together for a long journey for our destination and there will be many milestones on the path. But we walk steadily step by step and we know the direction that we have to go and I am pleased to say that we are today reaching an important milestone and look forward to crossing many more in the future.

142. External Affairs Minister's media statement following the 2nd meeting of the India-Bangladesh Joint Consultative Commission.

Dhaka, February 16, 2013.

Your Excellency Dr Dipu Moni, Foreign Minister of Bangladesh,
Friends from the media,

My friend and colleague Foreign Affairs Minister Her Excellency Dr Dipu Moni and I have just concluded very comprehensive and constructive discussions under the auspices of the India-Bangladesh Joint Consultative Commission (JCC).

The scope and range of our discussions are a manifestation of the qualitative and quantitative transformation that relations between India and Bangladesh have witnessed in the recent years. Our efforts are now aimed at harnessing every possible area of cooperation for the mutual benefit of the people of our two countries.

The Foreign Minister of Bangladesh and I have reviewed progress made in the entire gamut of our bilateral cooperation, including power, water resources, security, border management, people-to-people exchanges, trade, connectivity, culture, development cooperation, environment and education.

The vision for such unprecedented cooperation, based on the principles of equality, partnership and mutual growth, has undoubtedly emanated from the landmark visits of the Prime Minister of Bangladesh to India in January 2010 and the Prime Minister of India to Bangladesh in September 2011.

We are extremely pleased that our mutual cooperation has resulted in a number of remarkable achievements in recent months. These include,

- Signing of the landmark Extradition Treaty, Revised Travel Arrangements liberalizing visa regime between our two countries;
- Conclusion of MoUs in the fields of Health and Medical Services; on cooperation between the Foreign Service Institutes; and establishment of India-Bangladesh Foundation;
- Signing of the MOU on the Akhaura-Agartala Railway link and India-Bangladesh boundary Strip Maps.

We noted the success of Border Haats in Meghalaya. Foreign Minister Dr. Dipu Moni has assured me that a quick decision would be taken in Bangladesh to our proposal to open more Haats along the International Border in the States of Tripura and Mizoram.

We were happy to note that work on power inter-grid connectivity is proceeding satisfactory, with 500 MW of power expected to flow from India to Bangladesh this summer. We have been promised that necessary clearances for the speedy setting up of the 1320 MW coal based joint venture power plant will be expedited. We welcome the participation of Bangladesh in power projects in India, particularly in the North-Eastern states of India.

Dr. Dipu Moni and I are satisfied at the pace of utilization of the Line of Credit extended by India. The entire consignment of buses has been delivered to Bangladesh. Deliveries of railway rolling stock will commence in the coming days. I am happy to announce that we are ready to release the first tranche of US $50 million of the total grant of US$ 200 million soon for projects of priority to Bangladesh.

On the trade and investment front, new opportunities are being actively developed by our corporate and business entities. I understand there has been a significant increase of textile exports from Bangladesh to India following the facility of duty free exports extended by India in September 2011. We are jointly working on ways and means to introduce balance in our trade relationship.

We are encouraged by the positive response received from the visit of 100 member youth delegation from Bangladesh to India last year. I am glad to announce that we are ready to organize a similar visit later this year.

I am happy that we have today exchanged all the signed Strip Maps of the land boundary as part of the implementation of the 1974 Land Boundary Agreement and its 2011 Protocol. I have informed Her Excellency the Foreign Minister that the Indian Cabinet has already approved the Constitution Amendment Bill to pave the way for full implementation of the Agreement. It will now be considered by the Indian Parliament.

I would like to reassure you that India remains committed to an early resolution of the issue of sharing of Teesta waters. Consultations are on amongst stakeholders in India. India and Bangladesh have already exchanged data on the flow of Teesta at Dalia and Gazaldoba at the Joint Technical Meeting held in Kolkata. On the Tipaimukh project, I reiterate our Prime Minister's proposal for joint participation and invite you to take a stake in the project. We are also happy to note that the second meeting of the Sub Group on Tipaimukh was held in Dhaka early this month.

Friends, India and Bangladesh share a unique position in the world with our historical and cultural linkages as well as common perspectives with regard to open societies, democracy, value systems and ethics. I earnestly believe that our destinies are not only interlinked but that the cost of non-cooperation is too high.

I take this opportunity to reiterate that India attaches the highest importance to our relations with Bangladesh. Her Excellency Dr. Dipu Moni and I fully concur that full potential of our geographic and economic complementarities must be realized to mutual benefit. We shall continue our endeavour to move forward in a spirit of trust, understanding, accommodation, friendship and respect for each other.

Thank you

143. MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDIA AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF BANGLADESH FOR DEVELOPMENT OF RAILWAY INFRASTRUCTURE TO ESTABLISH RAIL LINK BETWEEN AGARTALA (INDIA) AND AKHAURA (BANGLADESH).

143-A PROTOCOL AMENDING THE CONVENTION BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDIA AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF BANGLADESH FOR THE AVOIDANCE OF DOUBLE TAXATION AND THE PREVENTION OF FISCAL EVASION WITH RESPECT TO TAXES ON INCOME.

The Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, Desiring to amend the Convention between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income signed at New Delhi on the 27th day of August 1991 (in this Protocol referred to as "the Convention"),

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The Convention is amended by omitting Article 21 and substituting:

“Article 21 - STUDENTS

1. A student who is or was a resident of one of the Contracting States immediately before visiting the other Contracting State and who is present in that other Contracting State solely for the purpose of his education or training, shall be exempt from tax in that other State on:
 - (a) grants, allowances, scholarships or awards; or
 - (b) payments made to him by persons residing outside that other State for the purposes of his maintenance, education or training; or
 - (c) remuneration which he derives from an employment which he exercises in the other Contracting State if the employment is directly related to his studies.
2. The benefits of this Article shall extend only for such period of time as may be reasonable or customarily required to complete the education or training undertaken, but in no event shall any individual have the benefits of this Article, for more than six consecutive years from the date of his first arrival in that other State for the purpose of his education or training.”

Article 2

The Convention is amended by omitting Article 28 and substituting:

“Article 28 - EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

1. The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall exchange such information (including documents and certified copies thereof) as is foreseeably relevant for carrying out the provisions of this Convention or to the administration or enforcement of the domestic laws concerning taxes of every kind and description imposed on behalf of the Contracting States, or of their political subdivisions or local authorities, insofar as the taxation there under is not contrary to the Convention. The exchange of information is not restricted by Articles 1 and 2.

2. Any information received under paragraph 1 by a Contracting State shall be treated as secret in the same manner as information obtained under the domestic laws of that State and shall be disclosed only to persons or authorities (including courts and administrative bodies) concerned with the assessment or collection of, the enforcement or prosecution in respect of, the determination of appeals in relation to the taxes referred to in paragraph 1, or the oversight of the above. Such persons or authorities shall use the information only for such purposes and may disclose the information in public court proceedings or in judicial decisions. The information may not be disclosed to any other authority or enforcement agency of the requesting Contracting State without the express written consent of the competent authority of the requested Contracting State.
3. In no case shall the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 be construed so as to impose on a Contracting State the obligation:
 - (a) to carry out administrative measures at variance with the laws and administrative practice of that or of the other Contracting State;
 - (b) to supply information (including documents and certified copies thereof) which is not obtainable under the laws or in the normal course of the administration of that or of the other Contracting State;
 - (c) to supply information which would disclose any trade, business, industrial, commercial or professional secret or trade process, or information the disclosure of which would be contrary to public policy (ordre public).
4. If information is requested by a Contracting State in accordance with this Article, the other Contracting State shall use its information gathering measures to obtain the requested information, even though that other State may not need such information for its own tax purposes. The obligation contained in the preceding sentence is subject to the limitations of paragraph 3 but in no case shall such limitations be construed to permit a Contracting State to decline to supply information solely because it has no domestic interest in such information.

5. In no case shall the provisions of paragraph 3 be construed to permit a Contracting State to decline to supply information solely because the information is held by a bank, other financial institution, nominee or person acting in an agency or a fiduciary capacity or because it relates to ownership interests in a person.”

Article 3

ENTRY INTO FORCE

The Contracting States shall notify each other in writing through diplomatic channel of the completion of their domestic requirements for the entry into force of this Protocol. The Protocol, which shall form an integral part of the Convention, shall enter into force on the date of the last notification, and thereupon shall have effect from the date of entry into force of this Protocol.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, duly authorised, have signed this Protocol.

143-B Memorandum of Understanding Between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh for the Establishment of the India-Bangladesh Foundation.

The Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh (hereinafter referred to as the "Parties")

Desiring to further provide mutual understanding and cooperation between the peoples of India and Bangladesh by a wider appreciation and greater sharing of knowledge of India-Bangladesh relations in all its aspects and the exchange of professional talent through academic and technical contacts between the two countries,

HAVE REACHED the following understanding:

ARTICLE I

There shall be established a foundation, to be known as the India-Bangladesh Foundation (hereinafter referred to as "Foundation"), with the objective of fostering India-Bangladesh relations, particularly through the enhancement of economic, scientific, educational, technical and cultural co-operation between India- Bangladesh and the promotion of greater understanding between the peoples of the two countries. The Foundation shall function under the forms of this Memorandum of Understanding and shall implement programmes aimed at achieving the goals thereof (hereinafter referred to as the "Memorandum")

ARTICLE II

The Foundation shall be financed through revenues from a Trust Fund to be set up through grants made by the Parties. The Principal of the Trust Fund shall comprise a sum, contribution to which will be on an equitable basis to be mutually agreed upon. The said principal may be augmented through mutual consultation and confirmed through an exchange of Diplomatic Notes between the Parties.

ARTICLE III

The revenues from the Trust Fund, within the conditions and limitations hereinafter set forth, shall be used by the Foundation for the purpose of:

- i) Financing higher studies, research and other educational activities and in-service training for citizens of India and Bangladesh at institutions of learning located in India and Bangladesh;
- ii) Financing visit and exchanges between India and Bangladesh of scholars, academics, professionals, artists and experts in the fields of referred to in Article-I and such other fields as may be agreed upon by the Board of the Foundation;
- iii) Financing other related programmes and activities such as seminars, symposia, colloquia and workshops on subjects of common interests;
- iv) Contributing towards the publication of standard works on India-Bangladesh relation in specific fields as may be determined by the Foundation;
- v) Encouraging the translation of standard works of literature of Bangladesh into Indian languages and vice-versa and arranging for their publication;
- vi) Adopting any other measure which may be considered necessary for the fulfillment of the objectives of the Foundation;
- vii) As far as applicable, there will be equal participation of representatives from India and Bangladesh in the activities funded by the Foundation.

ARTICLE IV

The following shall be among the thrust areas of the activities to be carried out by the Foundation:

Education and Culture; Archaeological Studies; Agricultural Research; Science and Technology; Health; Technical Training; Development Studies and Women's Studies.

ARTICLE V

In furtherance of the aforementioned purposes, the Foundation may, subject to the provision of this Memorandum, exercise all the powers necessary for carrying the purposes of this Memorandum including the following:

- 1) Receive funds from mutually agreed sources, in addition to the initial contribution of the Parties;
- 2) Open and operate bank accounts in India and Bangladesh in the name of the Foundation;
- 3) Disburse funds and make grants and advance of funds to meet the objectives of the Foundation;
- 4) Plan, adapt and carry out programmes in accordance with the purposes of this Memorandum;
- 5) Recommend / nominate to educational institutions in India and Bangladesh trainees, professors, research scholars, leaders and professionals resident in India or Bangladesh for various programmes / courses in such institutions;
- 6) Provide for periodic audit of the accounts of the Foundation in such frequency as may be decided from time to time by either Government, by auditors nominated separately by the Parties.

ARTICLE VI

The management and direction of the affairs of the Foundation shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of 6 Directors (hereinafter designated as "The Board"). The High Commissioner of India to Bangladesh and the High Commissioner of Bangladesh to India shall be the co-Chairpersons of the Board. For this purpose, in the absence of either High Commissioner, the respective Acting High Commissioners would serve as co-Chairpersons ad interim. With regard to the balance, the Parties shall each nominate two other members to the Board, both of whom shall be of recognized competence and who have distinguished themselves in fields relevant to the activities of the Foundation and who will hold office in their personal capacity. Respective High Commission officials designated by concerned co-Chairpersons shall act jointly as cosecretaries of the Foundation.

ARTICLE VII

All commitments, obligations and expenditures by the Foundation shall be made pursuant to an annual budget to be approved by the Board. The Board may, however, frame such rules as would permit the Board to incur expenditure up to specific monetary ceilings on specific projects / schemes not otherwise budgeted for. The Board will also make recommendations for necessary funding to replenish the Trust Fund.

ARTICLE VIII

The Board shall adopt such by-laws and appoint such committees as it shall deem necessary for the conduct of the affairs of the Foundation.

ARTICLE IX

A report on the activities of the Foundation shall be prepared annually by the Board and two copies shall be presented to each of the Governments through the nodal authorities.

ARTICLE X

The co-Chairpersons of the Board shall be responsible for the direction and supervision of the Board's programmes and activities in accordance with the Board's resolution and directives with the provisions of the Memorandum.

ARTICLE XI

Meetings of the Board shall be held once a year alternately in India and Bangladesh. However, the Board may, if it so desires, call for additional meetings as necessary.

ARTICLE XII

The nodal authorities responsible for the implementation of the present MOU shall be respective Foreign Secretaries of the two Governments.

ARTICLE XIII

The present Memorandum may be amended on terms mutually agreed upon through an exchange of Diplomatic Notes between the Parties.

ARTICLE XIV

The Parties shall make every effort to facilitate the task of the Foundation and assist in the resolution of such problems which may arise in the operation thereof through bilateral discussions.

ARTICLE XV

The implementation of the present Memorandum will be without prejudice to the activities under the Programmes of Cultural Cooperation Agreement concluded between the two Governments. The Parties will endeavor to ensure to the extent feasible, that, there is no overlap of activities under the present Memorandum and the aforesaid Programme.

ARTICLE XVI

This Memorandum shall come into force upon the date of its signature and will continue to remain valid for 10 years from the date of signing. In case for any reason it is not possible to renew the Memorandum before the validity period, it will continue to be valid till a new MOU is signed or the existing one renewed. Either Party may terminate the MOU by giving at least 6 (six) months notice in advance of its intention to terminate the MOU. Termination of this Memorandum shall not affect the validity or duration of any implementing arrangement/project executed and commenced thereunder and the activities in progress shall continue until completed.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Memorandum of Understanding.

Signed at Dhaka on this Sixteenth day of February 2013, in two originals, each in Hindi, Bangla and English languages. In case of doubt in interpretation, the English text shall prevail.

144. Joint Statement on the Second meeting of the Joint Consultative Commission between Bangladesh and India.

Dhaka, February 16, 2013.

1. The second meeting of the Bangladesh-India Joint Consultative Commission (JCC) was held in Dhaka on 16 February 2013. The Bangladesh delegation was led by Foreign Minister Dr. Dipu Moni, while the Indian delegation was led by External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid.
2. The Ministers reviewed the entire gamut of bilateral relations and expressed satisfaction at the significant forward movement in implementation of the decisions taken by the two sides, including during the first JCC meeting. This has widened the scope of bilateral cooperation and relations have become truly multifaceted, encompassing a wide range of areas including trade and investment, security, connectivity, border management, water, power, shipping, renewable energy, development cooperation, art and culture, people to people exchanges, human resource development, among others.
3. Both sides welcomed regular exchanges, both political and official, which had helped create goodwill between the two countries. The Ministers noted with satisfaction that the Foreign Secretaries had met twice and Director General/Joint Secretary of the concerned Division of the Ministries of Foreign/External Affairs had met in Dhaka for formal consultations since the 1st JCC.
4. The two Ministers expressed satisfaction about the recent meetings on security cooperation at different levels viz. Home Ministers, Home Secretaries, JWG on Security and Directors-General of the BGB and BSF. They welcomed the signing of the Extradition Treaty during the recent visit of Home Minister of India to Dhaka and hoped that this would further facilitate cooperation on security related matters between the two countries. The External Affairs Minister of India reiterated the appreciation of the government of India for the cooperation extended by Bangladesh in the security related matters. Both Ministers reiterated their commitment to fight terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

5. The two Ministers welcomed the signing of the Revised Travel Arrangements during the Indian Home Ministers visit and its notification by both sides. They expressed confidence that this liberalized visa regime would have a significant impact on further enhancing bilateral relations by facilitating people-to-people contact.
6. The two Ministers stressed on effective implementation of the Coordinated Border Management Plan (CBMP), including regular coordination and exchange between the nodal officers at different levels for better border management to prevent cross border criminal activities, illegal movement incidents of violence and loss of lives and early completion of fencing of vulnerable patches along the border.
7. The Ministers noted that the signing of the Protocol to the Land Boundary Agreement had paved the way for settlement of all remaining land boundary issues. They agreed on the need for ratification of the Land Boundary Agreement (LBA) 1974 and its Protocol at the earliest to resolve all pending boundary related issues including exchange of enclaves and areas in adverse possession. They noted with satisfaction that all the signed strip maps were exchanged between the two sides during the visit.
8. The two sides noted that signing of the Protocol amending the Convention for Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income would enhance bilateral cooperation for effective exchange of information
9. The Ministers noted with satisfaction the various measures taken for enhancement of trade and investment between the two countries. They stressed the urgent need for upgradation of infrastructure of the Land Customs Stations (LCSs)/Land Ports and Integrated Check Posts (ICPs) and for completion of the upgradation works at the identified LCS/ICPs on schedule. The External Affairs Minister of India conveyed India's concurrence for the development works proposed to be undertaken by Bangladesh side for Land Custom Stations at nine sites within 150 yards of the International Boundary. Both sides agreed to put in place necessary infrastructure for operationalising the LCS at Thegamukh–Demagiri and Sabroom–Ramgarh at an early date. They also underscored the need for removal of non-tariff barriers on both sides. Both sides agreed to hold the next meeting of the Joint Working Group on Trade at the earliest. The two Ministers noted with appreciation the positive response received from the users of Border Haats. Welcoming the understanding reached on opening of the two new Border Haats along the Bangladesh-Tripura border the two sides agreed to consider new proposals for setting up border haats along Bangladesh-India border that would contribute to the income generation and well-being of the people of those areas. They agreed on the need to convene a meeting of the Joint Committee on Border Haat to review their operations and make further recommendations for their management. The Ministers noted the need for harmonization of standards and mutual recognition of certificates as an important element of trade facilitation between the two countries. They expressed hope that Agreement on Cooperation between the Bureau of Indian Standards and the Bangladesh Standards and Testing Institute (BSTI) would be signed at the earliest. The External Affairs Minister conveyed the approval of the Government of India for inclusion of proposal for upgradation of BSTI under the US$ 800 million Line of Credit.

10. Referring to the connectivity between the two countries through waterways, railways, roadways and air, the Bangladesh Foreign Minister stated that Bangladesh had formed a Working Group under the coordination of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for evolving a comprehensive framework with a view to facilitate movement of goods between the two countries. They agreed on the need to extend the validity of the Protocol on Inland Water Transit and Trade to make it co-terminus with the Bilateral Trade Agreement. They expressed hope that the forthcoming Shipping

Secretary level talks scheduled to be held from 27 February 2013 would enable the two sides to identify ways to further enhance cooperation under the framework of the Protocol. They hoped that the concerned agencies would complete the feasibility study under Indian grant for upgradation of Ashuganj Inland Port with a view to its full utilization as a transshipment point at an early date. They expressed satisfaction that the two sides had met to explore the possibilities and prospects of Coastal Shipping between the two countries. They welcomed the signing of the MoU on establishing rail link between Akhaura and Agartala and expressed hope that the ongoing work for establishing rail linkages between Shahbazpur-Mahishashan and Chilahati-Haldibari would also be completed at the earliest. The two Ministers hoped that the Empowered Group set up to examine the ways and means of popularizing the Maitree Express would be submitting their report at an early date to ease the travel of the passengers. Bangladesh side assured that it would be conveying its views on the draft Motor Vehicle Agreement soon.

11. The two Ministers reiterated their commitment for early finalization of the Interim Agreement for sharing of the waters of the Teesta and Feni rivers. They also noted with satisfaction that the Sub-Group of JRC for Tipaimukh hydro-electric project had held two productive meetings over the last few months. They further noted that the river bank protection works were being implemented in phases to save valuable land and properties on both sides. The Indian side reiterated its earlier commitment that it would not take any unilateral decision on the Himalayan component of the proposed River-Interlinking project which may adversely affect Bangladesh.
12. Both the Ministers expressed satisfaction at the progress of cooperation in the power sector overall. They appreciated that the work on grid inter-connection between Bheramara-Baharampur was expected to be completed by June/July 2013. They also took note of the progress of work of setting up the 1320 MW Bangladesh-India Friendship Power Company at Rampal, Bagerhat, Khulna and expressed hope that the related issues would be resolved soon. The two sides noted that Bangladesh was in the process of finalizing purchase of additional 250MW power from the open market of India. The External Affairs Minister of India welcomed the Bangladesh participation in power projects in India, particularly in the Northeastern States of India. The two Ministers also agreed that there remains much scope for cooperation in the renewable energy sector. In this connection, they expressed satisfaction at the holding of the 1st meeting of the JWG on Renewable Energy Cooperation where both sides identified some priority areas for mutual cooperation and it was agreed that the next meeting of the JWG would be held shortly.

13. The Ministers reviewed the status of implementation of projects under the $ 800 Million Indian Line of Credit. They noted that projects amounting to US $ 785.45 million were being processed and were at various stages of implementation. They stressed the need to expedite early completion of all formalities of the new projects so that the benefits could reach the people.
14. Foreign Minister of Bangladesh reiterated the appreciation of the government for conversion of US$ 200 Million of the LOC into grant. The External Affairs Minister of India stated that the first tranche of the grant would be released to Bangladesh shortly for utilization for projects that were of priority to Bangladesh.
15. Both the Ministers agreed on the need to move forward on the decision to explore possibilities of cooperation in power/ hydropower, water, connectivity and transit in the sub-regional context. Foreign Minister of Bangladesh reiterated her invitation to host meetings of both the Joint Working Groups in March 2013 between Bangladesh-India-Bhutan and Bangladesh-India-Nepal for exploratory discussions.
16. Both the Ministers noted with great satisfaction the successful hosting of the year-long programme for joint celebration of the 150th Birth Anniversary of Rabindranath Tagore and the joint celebration of the 90th anniversary of Bidrohi by Poet Kazi Nazrul Islam. They also expressed satisfaction that the 150th birth anniversary of Swami Vivekananda was jointly celebrated by both the countries and noted that these initiatives had encouraged interaction among the people and helped foster greater understanding and goodwill between the peoples of the two countries. Both sides agreed to conclude a new Cultural Exchange Programme at the earliest.

17. The two Ministers noted with satisfaction the level of cooperation in the education sector and human resources development. They noted that the signing of the MoU on Cooperation between the Foreign Service Academy of Bangladesh (FSA) and the Foreign Service Institute of India (FSI) would facilitate understanding between the diplomatic services of the two countries. They also agreed to explore further avenues of cooperation including more training programmes, exchanges of delegations/trainees and hosting of officials of various training institutes in this regard. They also expressed confidence that signing of the MoU on Bangladesh-India Foundation would further promote friendly exchanges between the two countries.
18. Both the Ministers also noted that with the signing of the MoU on Cooperation in the fields of Health and Medical Sciences, medical professionals of both countries would get the benefits of exchange of scientific materials and information and joint collaboration in research in medical science.
19. The two Ministers expressed hope that the JWG on Conservation of Royal Bengal Tigers at the Sundarbans would be meeting soon to explore the possibilities of mutual cooperation in this sector.
20. The Ministers expressed satisfaction that the JWG on Fisheries would be meeting very soon and hoped that there both the sides would be able to agree on ways and means for optimal utilization of the fishing resources to the benefit of the two peoples. The Ministers further expressed hope that the JWG on would also be meeting soon to intensify cooperation in the field of agriculture.
21. Both sides agreed to enhance telecommunication connectivity between the two countries.

22. The two sides signed the following documents:
- MoU for Establishment of Bangladesh-India Foundation
 - MoU on establishment of Akhaura Agartala Rail link
 - Protocol amending the Convention for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income.
23. The External Affairs Minister will call on the Hon'ble Prime Minister and will also meet the Hon'ble Minister for Home Affairs and Hon'ble Minister for Water Resources of Bangladesh during his visit to Dhaka.
24. Both sides agreed to hold the next meeting of the Joint Consultative Commission in New Delhi at a mutually convenient date to be decided through diplomatic channels.

145. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister in Dhaka.

Dhaka, February 18, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends. Thank you very much for being very patient and waiting, and I apologise for the slight delay. It was due to prior commitments and then the engagements went a little beyond schedule.

Let me introduce myself. My name is Syed Akbaruddin. I am the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs in New Delhi.

We have here with us our External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid. We have about twenty or so minutes for this interaction. I would request the Hon. Minister to make his opening remarks. Following that you can ask any question that you may like to.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Good evening ladies and gentlemen. I must apologise. As Mr. Akbaruddin said, we have had very full two days and your traffic is not exactly the sort of traffic in which you go from one place to another in a jiffy. But we have had excellent arrangements made and I compliment the escorts that were conducting us. So we were able to just about get everywhere with a few minutes delay here. And then of course we have the cherry on the cake, this final dinner after which I will depart for Delhi.

You have all been very enthusiastic and very kind to us in the coverage that you provided. And I must say that I am deeply impressed with the nuances that I had hoped that I would be able to convey during this important visit, and that you have got those nuances and have very generously put them out so that what message we wanted to carry to our friendly people in Bangladesh could accurately be represented to them.

It has been an outstanding visit. It has been very successful visit. Everything that I had hoped, we have been able to accomplish. The quality of discussions and exchanges has been absolutely outstanding. I do believe that we have been able to lay the appropriate foundations, we prepared the ground for the visit of our President - who again is extremely well-known to all of you, who has been a very good friend of Bangladesh from the time of its birth and who looks forward as his first visit outside India after taking the oath as President of our country. Mr. Pranab Mukherjee looks forward to his trip early in March. On the 3rd of March his trip will begin. I think I can go back and report to him that we are in full readiness of having him received here.

We also look forward thereafter to a lot of work that we need to do before Her Excellency the Prime Minister of Bangladesh arrives in our country sometime in September. But between now and then, as I said, we have a lot of work to do and primarily the two things that you have already widely covered. The Land Boundary Agreement ratification which actually will take place through a Constitutional amendment at home in India has been cleared by the Cabinet and we will bring it before Parliament during this coming session, the Budget Session that begins in a few days' time. And I hope that if all goes well, we will actually have it passed during the Budget Session itself and one very major milestone would have been achieved.

I will meanwhile continue to work on the agreement on sharing of Teesta waters, which is less cumbersome for me because there is not legislation involved and therefore we are not tied down to any schedules at that end but on which I will work to have cooperation and support of the Chief Minister of Bengal because that is largely the State that is affected by the sharing of waters. I do sincerely hope that that is another thing that we will be able to accomplish over the next few weeks giving it very high priority. I do realize that in public mind that carries a very important place.

We have already issued a very positive Joint Statement which will be available to you. I would not go through all the details of each of the items that we have actually discussed, reviewed, and on which we are preparing further steps that we will take. That would take a very long time. I would rather give more time to you for your questions.

With these few words, I would be very happy to attempt answering your questions.

Q: Mr. Minister, there are two parts to my question. Despite the joint efforts to keep a peaceful a border, sometimes we are hearing of killing of innocent civilians by the Border Security Force. What is your comment about that? What is the direction from your highest level on how to keep a peaceful border without killing civilians? Secondly, on the river issue, India has started discussion with Bangladesh on Tipaimukh Project. But what we are hearing is that India is also constructing several dams upstream of our country. What we are hearing from ABP report that more than ... (Inaudible)... Do you have a similar initiative to talk with the ... (Inaudible)... as you have expressed concern for the Chinese dams in the upstream of Brahmaputra.

External Affairs Minister: I take the second part of your question firstly. Extremely complicated as it looks in terms of your geographical coverage but in terms of my answer to you is straightforward, transparent and simple. We are neither building any dams, nor will we take up any project without full involvement, cooperation and ensuring that no adverse impact takes place on downstream citizens of Bangladesh. You can be absolutely clear, our commitment is complete and total; no qualifications to that commitment at all.

I want to say to you that on Tipaimukh we have not only found the mechanism by which complete transparency in sharing of data is taking place and such data as is thought is being made available. I do not know the technical details but I do believe that there is no reason there for anyone to complain. We also have made an offer that the Government of Bangladesh should consider seriously taking a stake in the Tipaimukh Project, as indeed they should be looking at similar stakes in any other project that comes up because ownership is the best way of control. We would like Bangladesh to have ownership and participation so that there is not any problem. So I can assure you fully, completely that there is no cause of concern. We have already an agreement on sharing of six other rivers beyond Teesta. And it is our view and position that we should continue working on such arrangements that we need to make on those rivers even while the Teesta issue is taken to its final conclusion.

As far as China's position is concerned, I have been Water Resources Minister of India in the past, this issue arose then. I think if you are familiar with a famous play called "The Phantom of the Opera" – I think you might have seen the movie as well – I think there is a phantom in this opera who continues to talk about dams that do not exist. China has assured us then and reassured us now that it will do nothing that affects adversely interests of downstream countries including India. The information that is available with us is that these dams that are being constructed are run-of-the-river dams, and therefore it will not impact on the quantity of water that flows down. We are keeping a close watch. China has, as I said to you, reassured us. And I think for the present that is all that we need to do. If some further developments happen any time in the future, we will address them at that time. There is no cause for any concern at present.

As regards your first question, I told you, you asked a complicated geographical question that one can lose sight of where one was going. As far as the border is concerned, this is a matter of immense importance to both of us and concern. I do not want to go into numbers. I think that when you are talking about something of a humanitarian nature between friends, numbers do not count.

One casualty on either side is one casualty too many. There was an unfortunate incident last week on our side. There has been sadly an unfortunate incident while I am here. I know that the previous Home Minister, who is now the Finance Minister had in my presence held several meetings to alert and to sensitize the Border Security Force, the paramilitary forces on our side. I know that the matter has been taken up at the highest level on both sides. The Home Minister Mr. Shinde when he came here, who acknowledges with tremendous gratitude the help given by the Home Minister of country in arriving at what were difficult agreements including the agreement on extradition.

We also have in place an arrangement for joint management of the border. And we had hoped that many of the steps that have been taken including the coordination between the District Magistrates and Commissioners on the two sides and such other steps that we have taken to improve border management would conclusively address this issue which is an extremely tragic issue.

But I do believe that, as I said, even one casualty is one too many, and some of them have been very very tragic. So, when I get back we will consult with the Home Minister once again and whatever needs to be done will be done and addressed. And this is exactly how we have discussed here with my counterpart. I hope that concrete adequate steps will be taken to put this thing behind us completely. We all know that there is a backdrop to this. That backdrop also needs to be addressed why people should need to resort to the kind of crossings that they do. I think we need to address those things as well.

And we have taken on board a decision that an overall look at the causes that lead to movements that become in some way calls for further incidents of this nature should be addressed. Why does this kind of border transports take place of either equipment or of bovines? Why do people stray across the border? What can we do both in terms of professional handling of the management of the border as well as the public nature of an outreach? We will consider all these.

For the present I can only say, it is a very sad thing, both of us are extremely concerned, and we can address it collectively. It is not something that we will succeed in doing unilaterally. But whatever we can do on our side, of course you will not find us wanting.

Q: Mr. Minister, you met the Leader of the Opposition. What talks did you have with her? What topics did you discuss with her?

External Affairs Minister: This was in fact in a sense a courtesy call on the Leader of Opposition and in a sense my reciprocating the meeting that we had in Delhi. We did not actually necessarily go over every point that we had discussed in Delhi. I think the issue of cooperation from the Bangladesh side as far as our concerns on the border were enumerated. It is being taken care of adequately with all the cooperation and assistance that we could have expected.

We have reasons to be satisfied with the progress that is being made on this. Of course it is not something that can magically overnight be completely transformed. But I think we have made very satisfactory progress and this is something that had been endorsed by the Leader of Opposition when she was in Delhi. There was not any new information that needed further discussion. But the broad issues that are issues of concern to Bangladesh and which have constantly been highlighted, including the two agreements that we have already discussed.

We certainly talked about how much progress had been made on that and she talked broadly about the situation that exists today in the country here, as we always do when we meet with leaders from the countries that we visit. We get briefing about their perceptions, understanding of both the economics and the political and sociological situation. So we did a broad conversation about many issues of that nature. It was a very pleasant meeting, it was a very cordial meeting.

Q: Mr. Khurshid, would your visit ...(Inaudible)... in Indo-Bangladesh relations which had taken a turn for the worse over Teesta ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: I do not know if your description of relationship having taken a turn for the worse is necessarily accurate. I think it is an important issue for Bangladesh and we understand that and realize that. It is also I think an issue both of politics, morality and humanity. We have a very strong commitment and we are very satisfied that Bangladesh recognizes that commitment is an honest, sincere, meaningful commitment. And they also understand that there have been local considerations and conditions because of which we perhaps could not move as fast as we all had hoped on both sides that we would move.

But this is an ongoing relationship. And in ongoing relationships there are moments of joy, there are moments of concern, there are moments of advice, there are moments of expectation, there are moments of delivery, and there are moments of dreams. I think that at any given moment to say that this represents the entire relationship, it would be unfair. A long and a valued, cherished relationship that began in the fateful days of 1971 and which will continue to times immemorial is for us, simply to say, a very very important, significant and a very satisfying relationship. I certainly felt that it was the same attitude that welcomed us in Bangladesh and therefore I go back very pleased with this visit and look forward to much more meaningful contacts between us.

Q: Hon. Minister, I am honoured to be here. I work for an English Daily. I also would like to refer to your visit to our Leader of Opposition once again. I understand that you have told her what you have told us that Teesta Agreement is going to happen and LBA is going to happen in the coming session of the Parliament. Has she expressed her happiness over the prospect of a solution to these two problems because many ... (Inaudible)... believe that the solution to this particular problem will give you ... (Inaudible)... chance of election ... on this.

External Affairs Minister: I do not think that is what we are thinking and I am grateful to the leadership of Bangladesh that they have certainly expressed the same understanding and perception that this is something between the people of India and people of Bangladesh and not between political parties and Governments alone. I think that is the perspective in which both the Government as well as the leader of opposition have treated this matter and that is how we are approaching it. If you are asking me specifically of the Leader of Opposition, I think she has a very gracious way of expressing her pleasure, and I think she certainly smiled and showed satisfaction that any graceful lady can show.

But I know that the delivery is what is important. Promises are only half way. Full delivery is what is important. Therefore, I have given myself the task of ensuring that we push the Land Boundary Agreement during the coming session of Parliament. We cleared it, therefore, before my coming here in Cabinet and my Prime Minister has given me very very strict instructions that we must have everybody on board and outreach to all Members of Parliament and all political parties should be effective and urgent, and that we should show that the decision that we are taking is a decision that is unanimously supported by everybody in India because that is the relationship that we want with Bangladesh.

Q: Sir, in the Joint Statement you have mentioned that both Bangladesh and India are likely to set up a JWG that was coterminous with the trade agreement. Can you elaborate what you mean by this particular term 'coterminous' in the bilateral terms? Secondly, do you feel that this ...(Inaudible)... helped you to ...(Inaudible)... Indian security ...(Inaudible)...quell the Northeastern Indian ...(Inaudible)... So do you feel that if political situation changes, that sort of cooperation ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: I have no reason to believe that the movement forward and the journey completed between two countries would be in any way reversed. The march of history takes you forward. And whatever may be at any given moment the steps or initiatives taken by any particular section of leadership, ultimately it all gets subsumed in the relationship between the people of two countries and the shared history and destiny of the two countries. So I think that we have moved forward. And I have not seen any signs of disagreement or dissent or departure or divergence of views as far as this dimension and aspect of our relationship between India and Bangladesh is concerned. So, yes, I am optimistic, I believe that this march forward in history will continue.

We are doing whatever we need to do as responsible Government at our end to ensure that there is less cause for such things to happen. And we are grateful and acknowledge with gratitude what the Government of Bangladesh has done to cooperate with us to ensure that our security is not compromised because of the people using Bangladesh territory to undermine our security. So I have really no reason to be in any doubt that this is something that will stand the test of time and it is permanent in nature.

Q: Regarding the ...(Inaudible)... What do you mean by the term 'coterminous' with the bilateral ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: I understand that trade and investment agreements are essentially long-term arrangements, and the idea of double taxation is to back those agreements and provide them with the adequate incentive that is needed. Double taxation agreements can be standalone agreements as well, but frankly, they really work in tandem with and in supplement of trade and investment agreements. So it is a package of arrangement between us for trade and investment. I hope that that is what is meant and I believe that that is how it will work.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... As you said, Mr. Minister, during the talks with the Opposition leader, ...(Inaudible)...the upcoming election ...(Inaudible)... Secondly, as the Prime Minister is going to visit India again, do you have any plans to invite Opposition leader ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: We would welcome any visit by any leader. It is my opinion that between Bangladesh and India as indeed between India and other neighbours we should follow the example of leaders in Europe who meet without the formality and without the protocol that requires a lot of preparation. They meet periodically, they fly across to each other's country, they spend half a day or one day in order to ensure that these relationships remain strong and the bonds remain very strong. I hope that it is the same thing that we see between our two countries, not only between people who man institutions outside governments, civil society, media and scholars and people in the field of culture, but also people in public life. They should be meeting more extensively and more often and sharing views. I think that collective vision of our region, SAARC region, is something which will be much stronger if we spend more time with each other.

There are some meetings and some visits already scheduled. But if some more have to be scheduled, we will be happy to do that. As you know, calendar between national leaders tends to be very tight and to find suitable dates where you can give appropriate attention and show the courtesies that are called for. So a little bit of programming becomes necessary. But we have only announced the schedules that are already available with us. One is the visit of our President and one is the return visit of the Prime Minister. But, as I said, I would welcome as many leaders from this country coming to India, coming to Delhi. A lot of leaders travel to Bengal, travel to Kolkata and come back. But I hope more people will come to Delhi as well.

When I said that we discussed the broad spectrum of the situation here, I do not mean to say that I made any questions about the specifics of internal nature of politics but the broad pattern of what is happening. I certainly enquired about the situation of the coming elections, on which I do believe that there is not much progress since we last met in Delhi. There is I think a kind of divergence of views on the actual election process and how it will be held. I have not got any more substantive details about that. But I am sure that all the political parties will now as the clock begins to run towards an election, will presumably find their own ways of communication and preparing themselves for the election.

As far as the concern or issue about these young people protesting in the streets is concerned, I think to tell you honestly, nobody has a very clear idea how much this is a permanent change in the politics of Bangladesh, how much of this is a passing phase, how much of it is a limited concern, how much of it will grow and engage into larger concern about issues of governance, I think it is too early for anyone to give a very comprehensive view. But certainly I think most people are trying to analyse it and trying to understand it. Hopefully, reading what you write and talking to my friends who come on the media with us, debriefing them and engaging with them, I will have a better idea.

Sadly, my appointments here were back to back so tight that I did not really get the time to talk to any of these young people who are in the streets. Some of them I saw in the hotel lobby and I exchanged one or two sentences with them. But I did see a lot of idealism on their faces and I have seen the slogans and I have seen the flags that are being flown all around. But I think this is too quick a trip for me to be able to make a sociological study. I am sure that your writings will educate me.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: I certainly think that I see no reason to believe that on the issue of India there is divergence of opinion that is perceptible or noticeable. That certainly for me is a very welcome position. With friends of longstanding, as between India and Bangladesh, I think it should not be important that a particular government or another government is in power in any of our countries. I think our fundamentals and the foundations of our relationship should be such that there may be issues about priority and the speed at which we build further upon a relationship. But the foundation should remain solid and acceptable and sustainable to everyone. And I certainly see that sense prevailing in Bangladesh, and I hope that we are able to show a similar sense prevailing in India.

Q: About two years back, a young girl named ...(Inaudible)... was killed by BSF. Do you have any knowledge of what is happening on that case?

External Affairs Minister: I cannot give you any details. The very picture of a young girl losing her life is a very sad picture. I do not think that you should think of her as a Bangladeshi girl. I think you should think of her as a young child, a daughter, and a sister to all of us on both sides of the border. There is, I understand, an inquiry in progress as there would be for any event that leads to any such tragic outcome. I cannot say to you that I am in possession of any details about the findings, but I can assure you that in any such matter the internal inquiries that we do are done with utmost sincerity and a sense of urgency. I am sad that such a thing happened, as indeed said for many many other incidents that caused loss of life on both sides. But I hope that we can together find a method by which and a management by which we would go beyond such sad tragedies and look forward to a more happier and a safer life.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much friends. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

(Concluded)

146. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary on the President's Visit to Bangladesh.

New Delhi, March 1, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this interaction. I would like to welcome you to this new facility that we are using for the first time with the media. I do hope you will like it. It is part of our unveiling all the facilities that we have in this building. Some of you have been here in Conference Room 1. Previously also we had the BRICS NSAs meeting and so there was a small media event there, and now we have decided that we will check the facilities here so that they are all ready. In due course we will have regular briefings here.

With that I would like to welcome Foreign Secretary who is here actually for the briefing today on the visit of the President to Bangladesh. Along with the Foreign Secretary we have on his right Mr. Harsh Vardhan Shringla who is Joint Secretary (Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Maldives and Myanmar). On my left is Mr. Venu Rajamony who is Press Secretary to the President.

As usual, I will request Foreign Secretary to make his opening remarks and then the floor is open for questions related to what he has spoken and that is on the visit to Bangladesh. At the end of it if we have some more time available, he is willing to answer a couple of more questions on other issues. With that I would request Foreign Secretary to make his opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Ranjan Mathai): This is a new experience for me also. Let me just say that usually I sit in Shastri Bhavan with all of you sitting at a height and looking down at me. The situation now seems to have got reversed. But that is certainly not the intention. I am happy to have this occasion. This is part, as Akbar said, of our new facilities in this building. It has taken a long time mainly because there are many finishing touches for the professional use of this building. There are many finishing touches in the facilities here which we are working on so that we have a completely ready building and clearly this microphone not being as effective as the one you have in Shastri Bhavan shows that we still have a way to go. Thank you very much.

Rashtrapatiiji will pay a state visit to Bangladesh from March 3 to 5 this year at the invitation of the President of Bangladesh. This is Rashtrapatiiji's first visit abroad after his assumption of the Office of President of India. The choice is reflective of the fact that India attaches the highest importance to its relations with Bangladesh and seeks a deeper and stronger partnership with that country. The President will be accompanied by the Minister of State for Railways and four Members of Parliament.

In terms of the programme, as has been reflected in the press release we issued yesterday, Rashtrapatiiji will call on the President of Bangladesh, Mr. Mohammed Zillur Rahman and receive from him the Bangladesh Liberation War Honour Award. The President will also meet the Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina. The leader of the opposition and the Chairperson of the BNP Begum Khaleda Ziya, the Foreign Minister of Bangladesh Dr. Dipu Moni, the Finance Minister Mr. M.A. Muhith of Bangladesh, the Speaker of the Jatiya Sangsad, and the Chairperson of the Jatiya Party Gen. Ershad are also expected to call on Rashtrapatiji.

The President will receive an honorary Doctorate of Law from the University of Dhaka at a formal convocation ceremony. He will attend a reception to meet members of the Indian community in Bangladesh. During his stay in Bangladesh Rashtrapatiji along with the Prime Minister of Bangladesh would also flag off a freight train from the Dhaka Cantonment railway station that is comprised of the tank wagons and locomotives being supplied from India under our $800 million line of credit.

As you know, with Bangladesh we share not only a common history of the struggle for freedom and liberation but also enduring feelings of both fraternal and familial ties. Shared history and common heritage, linguistic and cultural ties, the passion for music, literature and arts are some of the factors that unite the people of India and Bangladesh. In this context you would note that Rashtrapatiji would pay a visit to the home of Rabindranath Tagore in Shilaidaha in Kushtiya District. It may be recalled that India and Bangladesh had jointly celebrated the year long celebrations of the 150th birth anniversary of Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore. Rashtrapatiji had in fact, in his capacity at that time as the Finance Minister of India, participated in the closing ceremony of that event which was held in May 2012 in Dhaka.

During this visit the President and the first lady will also travel out of Dhaka to Bhadrabila in the Narail District of Bangladesh where he would visit old family relations of the first lady. Rashtrapatiji would also visit Kumudini Welfare Trust in Mirzapur in Bangladesh.

I would like to emphasise here that the visit of the Rashtrapatiji comes at a time when the relations between India and Bangladesh are among the most diversified and productive on account of the pragmatic and forward looking steps taken on both sides. As you would recall, just a few weeks ago the External Affairs Minister had visited Bangladesh for the work we do together in the Joint Committee.

Several initiatives that emanated from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's visit to India in January 2010 and the visit of our Prime Minister to Bangladesh in September 2011 are now under advanced stages of implementation. I referred to the recent visit of the External Affairs Minister for the Second Joint Consultative Commission where many of these projects and ideas were further discussed.

We also had the visit of our Home Minister to Bangladesh in January of this year, which has provided further momentum in bilateral relations particularly with reference to the extradition agreement which was signed at that time. We now have an MoU on Akhaura-Agartala and the revised travel arrangements which have also been concluded.

The endeavour on both sides over the past few years has been to establish a comprehensive framework of development cooperation between the two countries. Considerable progress has been achieved on issues that have eluded solutions for decades. We have broken fresh ground in areas such as trade, power, connectivity, people-to-people exchanges, and security cooperation. The visit of Rashtrapatiiji would provide an opportunity to take bilateral relations to new heights and contribute to enhancing friendship and mutual understanding, and help in realizing the full potential of our relations.

Thank you

Official Spokesperson: We will first focus on questions relating to the visit.

Q: You have said that this visit ... (Inaudible)...our bilateral relations to a new high. We know about the current engagement between with Bangladesh and India. But whether... (Inaudible)... or take forward the unresolved issues which are still pending between Bangladesh and India?

Foreign Secretary: This visit is not designed to engage in political negotiations. We are very conscious of the need for forward movement on the unresolved issues. And I think what the President will do is to underline the Government's commitment here to work on those and to achieve the resolution of those unresolved issues in as short a time frame as is feasible.

Q: Sir, just ahead of the President's visit to Dhaka there has been the violence that we have seen, as a result of the verdicts of the tribunal. How does India look at these developments? Is this a concern that the President will also talk about in his discussions with the leadership there?

How do we look at what is going on there right now?

Foreign Secretary: Right now we are looking at the situation which has arisen out of a tribunal's decision in Bangladesh, which is a judicial process; and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on that. In general our position regarding the upsurge which has taken place in Bangladesh has already been spelt out in our statements by the External Affairs Minister when he was in that country, and again I had also visited Dhaka a few weeks ago. The situation as we understand now is that the overall security situation at least in Dhaka is completely calm. We are in touch with the authorities there and we are looking forward to a very productive visit.

Q: Mr. Mathai, will it be prudent for the President to visit Bangladesh at this point of time particularly when almost 20 per cent of the Bangladeshi territory is violence hit? Has the thought crossed the Rashtrapati Bhavan's mind so far? Also could you say something about whether some rough edges had been noticed in India's line of credit to Bangladesh, whether these rough edges have been smoothed out?

Foreign Secretary: We have done a lot of preparation for the President's visit including the visits of advanced teams which have gone to Bangladesh, in the normal manner in which we prepare for visits. And certainly the overall situation in that country has been carefully examined. We feel that it would be appropriate for the President to carry out his first visit abroad to Bangladesh, and so this visit is going ahead.

As far as the rough edges in the line of credit are concerned, let me say two things. We find now we had a period when there was a lot of discussions going on between the two Governments about the manner in which the line of credit had to be actually utilized. I believe that we now have a much clearer understanding of how to make fast progress. In fact the flagging off of the locomotives - and if you have been to Dhaka recently you would have seen the presence of Indian double-decker buses on the roads - I think is demonstrative of the fact that we are now making very rapid progress on the actual signing of contracts under the LoC.

You would also recall that from the original one-billion-dollar line of credit, 200 million was decided to be delinked and made into a grant. Of that 200 million, the first tranche of 50 million dollars was actually handed over when the External Affairs Minister visited Dhaka a few days ago. So I think we have made a very steady and very rapid progress on that. We hope to get another tranche of that once the Supplementaries in the current budget are finalized. So I think we will make very rapid progress. Certainly if you look at the areas in which the LoC is being used, these are for transport, for connectivity and those kinds of issues where I think there is now a better understanding of our procedures and their procedures and how to actually undertake.

We have, as I mentioned in one of my earlier briefings, created a separate body within this Ministry, which is in fact in this building, called our Development Partnership Administration, and they have a separate group of people who are now concentrating on the lines of credit, their utilization in a more centralized fashion. So I think we will make very rapid progress. On their side also now they understand our procedures and the way in which contracts have to be finalized.

Q: Sir, you said that this visit is not designed to engage in political negotiations. Apart from ceremonials, what substantive outcome can we expect from this visit?

Foreign Secretary: When I was saying it was not designed, obviously the visit of as high an authority as our President, who is the highest authority in our country, is concerned, the symbolism of it is first of all the political importance that we attach to this relationship. Rashtrapatiji has himself in his earlier capacities has been to Bangladesh before, and we know that we have a large number of negotiations still to be concluded. What I meant was that the visit itself will not see any negotiations, but clearly the political symbolism, the determination of our Government to build firm bridges with the people of Bangladesh, with the Government of Bangladesh will be underlined. And we believe this will have an important effect on the overall bilateral relationship.

Q: There were many proposals from big industrial houses like Tatas for heavy investments, so do you think those proposals will be revived again taking advantage of the visit?

Foreign Secretary: I would not like to comment on the business plans of individual business houses. What we have been told by the Indian trade and industry in our engagement with them is that they continue to see Bangladesh as a very very important partner, and they would certainly like to take forward plans for investment, for trade and for joint ventures. There are requirements of course of energy, of understanding their investment policies better, and understanding the market access which has now become virtually a non-issue after all the liberalizations. So we would certainly encourage Indian business houses, Indian industry and Indian trade to engage much more actively with Bangladesh. I will ask my colleague, if he would like to add something on this.

Joint Secretary (BSM)(Shri Harsh Vardhan Shringla): There is a significant increase in outward investments from India, and there is also talk of Special Economic Zones which are being set up along the India-Bangladesh border to facilitate more such investments. And there have been some significant big investments from India including Bharti Airtel and very large investments in the readymade garments sector. All of this seems to be set to expand exponentially given the market access that the Foreign Secretary spoke about and given Bangladesh's own access to international markets through GSP and other benefits. So I think there is a distinct possibility of our being able to increase the outward flow of investments towards Bangladesh. And the sense we have got from the Bangladesh Government is that they would do what it takes to attract Indian investments and give them a climate conducive to their commercial success.

Foreign Secretary: I would just add one thing to it and that is the number of business partners who have engaged with us in MEA, the Indian industry and so on, are also aware that Bangladesh itself is a fast-growing economy. They have recorded something like six per cent consistently. It is a large market, 150 million, with a very growing middle class. So Bangladesh itself, apart from the export opportunities or the opportunities of access to India, presents a number of opportunities.

Joint Secretary (BSM): If I can add just one thing, just in terms of figures, in the last six months or so there were 38 Indian investments registered with the Board of Investments in Bangladesh for about 183 million dollars. Major Indian companies such as Bharti Airtel, I have already mentioned that, TATA Motors, Sun Pharma, Asian Paints, Marico, Godrej, Venky's Hatcheries, Parle Products, Forbes, Marshall etc., lots of companies have really actually invested there in the recent past. And of course there are also plans for companies such as CEAT, which is the tyre manufacturer, to invest a very significant amount. This is all in the pipeline it seems. Also manufacture of commercial vehicles, two-wheelers, etc., are in the pipeline. Aditya Birla Group's Ultratech Cement and BFRL, which has signed a joint venture for 20 million dollars for garment manufacturing - this is just a sense of Indian investments that are going in now.

And of course Bangladesh investments in India are also significantly set to increase because we have removed some of the hurdles and roadblocks that were there earlier. And of course now FIPB clearance is required which is much faster. And I think 100 per cent FDI is going to be allowed in a number of sectors through the automatic route. And a number of Bangladesh companies Pran Agro Foods etc., have already applied to FIPB for clearances, and we expect to see Bangladesh investments in India as well. So two-way flow of trade and investments is very encouraging.

Q: Mr. Foreign Secretary, the exploration of oil and gas in the offshore is common between the countries. Is there any strategy by India in dealing with this joint venture, especially at the time of rising of the extremism in the region?

Foreign Secretary: I do not know whether oil and gas has anything to do with extremism, but I think your question is a very important one. I think the potential for hydrocarbons both in Bangladesh and offshore is certainly quite significant. We have our oil companies who would be interested in joining in the international bidding, which the Bangladesh would be engaged in on its offshore blocks in particular. Certainly we would want to participate in that very actively.

There are also some blocks which both from our perspective and Bangladesh perspective straddle a maritime boundary line which has not been finally settled. We are hopeful that the arbitration process, which is on in regard to that maritime boundary line, once it is concluded in about a year should be able to open up new blocks for exploration. But certainly we are working with Bangladesh in the power sector in general. We are working with them to set up a 1300 MW coal-based power plant in Khulna, and we hope to conclude that before too long.

Similarly the potential for gas is certainly something which we will keep in mind. We are aware that in Tripura, on the eastern side, we have had some successes in gas exploration. Certainly there is potential in Bangladesh. But, as I said, the offshore blocks is where there is a lot of international interest.

Q: The practical roadblock between India and Bangladesh is the illegal immigration, and sometimes it echoed in Indian Parliament also. The short point I am trying to make is whether we have any space or scope in Indira-Mujib pact of 1971 so that we can have free visa regime between India and Bangladesh like India and Nepal. Are there any chances in the near future for the relationship to come to this extent?

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say on the subject of illegal immigration that this is an issue which has been discussed between us as Governments for many years now. We have developed institutional mechanisms to deal with that, particularly those in the Home Ministry and in the relationship between the BSF and the Border Guard of Bangladesh. There are mechanisms worked out to deal with the matter of illegal immigration.

As regards travel between the two countries, we have just signed, as I said, revised travel arrangements, a new system to make issue of visas easier particularly for categories like those who want to come for medical treatment, those who want to come for business, students, and people like that. So I think that is the direction in which we are heading, to make visas a lot easier for legitimate travel.

Q: Sir, I wanted to ask you about the land boundary agreement. Have discussions begun with political parties on this agreement on which legislation is to be introduced in Parliament? And who are the four MPs accompanying the President?

Foreign Secretary: The discussions on the land boundary have in fact been going on for some months now. We in MEA have done an outreach to many of the political parties, individual Members of Parliament, and others to discuss the land boundary agreement and explain it in its full ramifications. We are hopeful that in this current session, we do not have a date yet, we will be able to introduce it and get the support of all those whom we have briefed.

I have four names of Members of Rajya Sabha with me. They are: Shri Sitaram Yechury, Dr. Chandan Mitra, Shri Mukul Roy and Shri Bhubaneswar Kalita. They are the four MPs accompanying the President. The Minister of State for Railways, Shri Adhir Ranjan Chowdhury, is the Minister accompanying the President.

Official Spokesperson: I understand there are no further questions on this. So, Foreign Secretary will take a couple of questions.

Foreign Secretary: I would like to ask whether the Press Secretary to the President would like to say something on this.

Press Secretary to the President (Shri Venu Rajamony): The Foreign Secretary has given a very comprehensive briefing. On behalf of the President let me just say that the Hon. President is extremely excited and keenly looking forward to this visit not just because it is his first visit or because it is Bangladesh, but also because it is our immediate neighbourhood and one of the most important countries to India.

Bangladesh is a country with which he has had a long association. He virtually knows all the important leaders in Bangladesh, and we are told that when he arrives at the airport almost all of them would be there to greet him in the ceremonial reception. Since he assumed office he has also had a large number of Ministers and senior officials of the Bangladesh Government come and call on him. Also Begum Khaleda Zia the opposition leader as well as Gen. Ershad had also come and called on him.

So, he looks forward to this opportunity to, as Foreign Secretary said, reiterate the importance that Bangladesh has for India and to try and take the relationship forward through intensive interaction with the entire spectrum of leadership in Bangladesh.

Question: Sir, David Cameron was here quite a few days ago. While he was here he said he would help out India as far as Westland was concerned. Now he has gone back. Has the MEA got any documents or any form of help from the British Government on Westland so far? Also, a few days ago Vijay Singh, who was then Defence Secretary, has said on record that top members of the British High Commission came to meet him a few years ago when this deal was about to be done, and they really pushed very hard for it. He has said on record that these top officials were extra conscious about the Westland deal. Now that we know that it could be a dubious deal, is there any move to check with the British High Commission why they were extra conscious?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say that I do not have information as of today. What I do know is that a team had gone to Italy, and the procedure was that they would first finish their examination in Italy. What the British had said earlier to us was that they would follow on after that investigation.

As regards the comments of Shri Vijay Singh, I am not familiar with the context in which these were made. But anyone who has dealt with High Commissions and Embassies around the world knows that officials do promote the interests of their country and their individual companies on a regular basis. That is fairly normal.

Q: Can you provide us an update on the situation in Maldives? What is this deal which everybody has been talking about which we seem to have struck with their Government for Mr. Nasheed's walking out from the High Commission?

Foreign Secretary: What we had done is to go there and engage with the Government of the Maldives, with the former President, and all the stakeholders in that country. Through all these discussions, we believe we have created some kind of a window of opportunity for what we had earlier mentioned as our main objective, which is a free, fair and inclusive election in the Maldives. But there are legal processes; there are political issues and so on. But this window of opportunity which has been created for solving those problems is not necessarily a very big one. But it is there and we hope it will be taken by all concerned.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

147. President Pranab Mukherjee's interview to The Independent on the eve of his State visit to Bangladesh.

New Delhi, March 3, 2013.

Q 1. Ahead of assuming the highest office of the Rashtrapati Bhavan - Pranab Mukherjee was regarded as a pioneer in promoting Bangladesh-India relations for decades. How you want to describe your current role in regard to the bilateral relations as the Indian President?

Answer: As you know, this is my first overseas visit after taking over as President. Over the years, my association with Bangladesh has become deeper. The cause of promoting closer and deeper ties between the peoples of the two countries has always been very dear to my heart.

India is fully committed to developing the best possible relationship with Bangladesh. If you reflect on many of the initiatives that have been taken in the last few years, and which are in the pipeline, you will realize that we have made progress on issues that have eluded solution for decades.

Moreover, we have broken fresh ground in areas such as trade, power, people to people exchanges and security cooperation. There is certainly much more that can and should be done. We are committed to it.

Q 2. You are aware that your installation at the Rashtrapati Bhavan as the first Bengali President of India was widely celebrated in Bangladesh also. What message you want to deliver for the people of Bangladesh from the highest office of your country?

Answer: I wish to thank all those who sent me congratulatory messages on my election as President. I have great respect for the people of Bangladesh and their sense of patriotism, courage and independence. Above all, they have shown their belief in democracy and participative politics.

We have recently seen a reawakening of the youth who recall the extraordinary sacrifices that led to the birth of the Nation.

The youth of this country will determine it's future.

I wish the people of Bangladesh well in the strengthening of their democracy, maintaining peace and stability and upholding the rule of law and human rights. With these fundamentals in place; the dynamic growth of the economy should help create a real 'Sonar Bangla'.

Q 3. The People of India stood by Bangladesh at the time of its most crucial need during its 1971 Liberation War. Bangladesh is set to acknowledge formally your personal role in promoting the cause of Bengalis as a relatively young politician at that time. Could I please ask you to recall your memories of that time for new generation?

Answer: I was already in active politics at that time, and a Member of the Rajya Sabha. At a personal level I remember the events leading to the Liberation of Bangladesh. I distinctly remember the profound impact events in the then East Bengal had on us in India, and particularly in West Bengal and other states of India bordering East Bengal.

We did whatever we could to support the refugees, provide them food and shelter, and create awareness in the world about the terrible atrocities being committed against the people of what is today Bangladesh. That our contribution is remembered today is really a matter of great satisfaction.

Q 4. As one of the senior most politicians of the South Asia region, you witnessed several critical or crucial junctures of history having impacts on bilateral or multilateral ties among the neighbouring nations. What you think about the prospect of regional integrity in the near future?

Answer: The compelling logic of geography dictates that South Asian countries find new paradigms of cooperation to deal with the common challenges of development.

Bangladesh will realise its full potential when economic integration, geographical connectivity and more people to people contacts unleash the dynamism within. History tells us that this region was one of the great manufacturers and trading regions of an earlier era. By working together in a regional framework we can find common solutions which are a win-win for everybody and create a new era of prosperity.

Q 5. What issues you think need to be addressed to remove the barriers of integration by the countries in the region for mutual benefit? What you think the countries should do to remove the "trust deficit", which is widely believed to have stood on the way to regional integration.

Answer: I do not think there is a trust deficit. There is already a lot happening between India and Bangladesh. In general, it is certainly necessary to have more contacts at all levels.

There is no other way but dialogue to build a durable and mutually beneficial relationship, especially among neighbours who are as close to each other as India and Bangladesh.

While our borders are a sovereign reality, the attempt should be to make them enabling frontiers of cooperation and opportunity.

Individual countries in the South Asian region cannot hope to be secluded islands of growth and prosperity while others continue to grapple with challenges like terrorism and extremism, poverty, illiteracy, malnutrition, environmental degradation or poor infrastructure.

We should move towards a more enlightened and cooperative approach, and perhaps learn from the successes of other regional organizations.

Q 6. Being the biggest country of the region with its huge resources and fast expanding economy, what role could India play to meet expectations of its neighbours?

Answer: Being located in South Asia which is located between West Asia and East Asia and by virtue of being at the cross-roads of the Indian Ocean, India is aware of its responsibilities towards this region. We are willing to be a catalyst for development based on the principles of equality, partnership and mutual benefit.

India has experienced reasonable economic growth in the last twenty years. We can help by ensuring that the opportunities created by its growth and transformation are available to its immediate and wider neighbourhood.

We have already taken several steps in this direction, such as the opening of our market to our LDC neighbours, and we are ready to take more steps as best as we can. I have no doubt that India cannot prosper alone. Our destinies are inter-linked, and we have to grow and prosper together.

Q 7. Anything else what you want to tell Bangladesh media ahead of your planned and maiden Dhaka visit as the Indian Head of State.

Answer: I am eagerly looking forward to my visit. This is a special moment in my life, and a rare occurrence in the history of relations between our two countries. I do hope that my visit to Bangladesh will contribute to enhancing friendship and mutual understanding between us and help in realizing the full potential of our relations.

148. Speech of President Pranab Mukherjee accepting the Bangladesh “Liberation War Honour” and his speech at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the Bangladesh President.

Dhaka, March 4, 2013.

Your Excellency Mr. Mohammad Zillur Rahman,
President of the People’s Republic of Bangladesh,
Your Excellency Sheikh Hasina, Prime Minister of the People’s Republic of Bangladesh,
Your Excellency Dr. Dipu Moni, Minister of Foreign Affairs,
Your Excellency Capt. A.B. Tajul Islam, Minister of State for Liberation War Affairs, Distinguished Members of the Cabinet of the Government of Bangladesh,
Your Excellency Mr. Muhammad Musharraf Hussain Bhuiyan, Cabinet Secretary,
Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Thank you for your warm words. I am delighted to be here and am grateful for the affection with which I have been received. This is my first State Visit abroad since I assumed the office of the President the Republic of India.

As I stand here tonight I am filled with memories of the events of 1971. I was 36 years old and a Member of Parliament when the people of Bangladesh engaged themselves in their liberation struggle. Many of us were passionately concerned about the events that were unfolding then. 24-hour television channels did not exist in those days – and it was the Free Bangladesh Radio and All India Radio that gave us reports of the heroic struggle of our brothers and sisters in Bangladesh. These bulletins were keenly followed by us in India - as the minds and hearts of all Indians were with the people of Bangladesh. The plight of millions of homeless people crossing the border, seeking refuge in the neighbouring States of India stirred the hearts of our people as they felt the anguish of that hapless multitude. They came forward wholeheartedly to succour and any assistance they could provide to their brethren from Bangladesh in their hour of need. The images of the proud people of Bangladesh and their brave fight for justice and dignity were etched in every Indian's consciousness.

I recall that, on June 15, 1971, I had the privilege to initiate a discussion on the floor of the Rajya Sabha, the upper house of the Indian Parliament, when I suggested that India should accord diplomatic recognition to the Government of Bangladesh in exile in Mujibnagar. My words are on the record in proceedings of Rajya Sabha. When a Member sought my suggestion on how to tackle the problem, I responded by saying: "I am talking of a political solution which means categorically recognising the sovereign democratic Government of Bangladesh. Political solution means giving material help to the democratic, sovereign Government of Bangladesh.....". I reminded the House of the many instances in world history when intervention on similar grounds had taken place in past.

We may recall that as early as 1949 Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of India stated that "where freedom is menaced, or justice threatened or where aggression takes place, we cannot be and shall not be neutral."

Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman recognized what had to be done and did not lose time in courageously taking the lead and achieving the cherished dream of independence for the proud people of Bangladesh.

Shrimati Indira Gandhi, the then Prime Minister of India without any hesitation translated the vision of Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru into action by extending the support to the people of Bangladesh.

I feel humbled as I receive this prestigious award, the “Bangladesh Liberation War Honour” as I feel that my contribution was very modest.

As a Member of Indian Delegation in the 59th Conference of Inter Parliamentary Union in Paris (France) in 1971 from 2nd to 10th September, we took the opportunity of the presence of large number of Members of Parliaments of different countries to explain the situation in Bangladesh and urged them to prevail upon their Governments to speak out against the violation of human rights in Bangladesh. I also had the privilege of visiting the United Kingdom and the then Federal Republic of Germany as a Member of the Goodwill Parliamentary Delegation in the same visit. I was mandated to brief the Members of the Parliaments and to the leaders of those countries about the situation. Late Shri H.D. Malviya, former Member of Parliament and activist of the World Peace Council had accompanied me in this mission. Later I was given the responsibility of visiting the refugee camps in the neighbouring States of India – including Tripura, Assam and Meghalaya and coordinating with the local Governments on making them functional and comfortable.

As I recall those days, I cannot help the feeling that my effort was almost peripheral compared to the enormous responsibilities shouldered by many others during the struggle – not only in Bangladesh but also in India. Therefore, I accept this distinction conferred on me with the greatest humility. A few lines from a poem written by Annadashankar at that time will epitomise the sentiments we had about the liberation struggle of Bangladesh. The author wrote and I am quoting in Bengali:

* * * *

Your Excellency, I would like to thank you and the Government of Bangladesh for your gracious gesture in conferring on me the Bangladesh Liberation War Honour. I thank you for remembering, in this manner, the contribution of the Indian brothers and sisters who were by your side, who stood shoulder to shoulder with you and even sacrificed their lives for your liberation. The number of proud Indian citizens that have been honoured and accorded your hospitality in the last year is a tribute to our close friendship. I thank you on their behalf and on behalf of India.

Today, I also take this opportunity to pay tribute to the innocent men, women and children who gave their lives for the freedom of the future generations - whose memory is cast in stone at the Savar Memorial and the Shaheed Minar. They showed us how even the weakest can triumph when the cause is righteous. Your Government has redeemed its pledge with history. Today, the children of the mukti joddhas are proud in the knowledge that the blood of their forefathers was not spilled in vain. It is with pride that Bangladesh engages in the task of building a modern, progressive and prosperous nation. As in 1971, so in 2013, the people of India stand beside the people of Bangladesh. We will walk with you as equal partners, shoulder to shoulder, arm in arm. We are both inheritors of an undivided civilizational legacy. It is no wonder that India and her people share a special connection with Bangladesh. We have an abiding interest in the all-round development of Bangladesh. However, the full potential of our cooperation is yet to be tapped. My discussions during this visit have been extremely rewarding. Our Governments have established a comprehensive framework for cooperation. Our endeavour will be to see how our bilateral cooperation can bring sustained benefits to our people and improve the quality of their lives. This will be the litmus test of the success of our relationship.

Excellency, ladies and gentlemen,

We, in India are happy to see the tremendous strides made by Bangladesh. The impressive and path-breaking manner in which Bangladesh has faced the challenges of eradication of poverty is worthy of emulation. I pay tribute to the people of Bangladesh, its farmers, entrepreneurs, doctors, teachers, scientists and many others who represent the creative genius of its people.

Excellency, I, personally, have a deep attachment with this land. My wife has family roots here, as she spent a very early and happy part of her childhood here. I am touched by your warm gesture. I see in this award, a strong message of enduring friendship and brotherhood between India and Bangladesh. I fully reciprocate this sentiment as I accept this honour bestowed on me with the deepest gratitude.

With these words, once again I thank Your Excellency President Zillur Rahman, Her Excellency, the Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and the people of Bangladesh who have received me and my wife and members of my delegation with a warmth and affection that has touched us deeply.

We sincerely wish to see India-Bangladesh bilateral relations prosper in all spheres for the progress and prosperity of both our peoples.

Jai Hind

Joy Bangla.

* In a historic recognition Bangladesh awards to its 'foreign friends' who played a crucial role for her independence 42 years ago. In the seventh and last phase of recognition, the country later in the year in October honoured more than 60 foreign dignitaries and organisations, including 44 from India. The process began on July 25, 2011. In all a total of 338 foreign nationals and organisations, mostly from India, were felicitated for supporting the nation's liberation war against Pakistan. The former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was the first among prominent foreign friends who was given posthumously the highest state honour — Bangladesh Freedom Honour. V.K. Krishna Menon was one of the prominent recipients of the 'Bangladesh Liberation War Honour' for his contribution to the country's independence as the Defence Minister of India. The State accolades were given in two categories — 'Bangladesh Liberation War Honour' and 'Friends of Liberation War Honour. These friends extended all possible help to Bangladesh refugees and freedom fighters providing them food, humanitarian relief, medical facilities, military training, access to global media, generation of public opinion and mobilisation of financial assistance. Ms. Hasina sought global support to accomplish the war crimes trial, to try those who had perpetrated crimes against humanity as cohorts of the Pakistani Army. The prominent Indian nationals who received "Friends of Liberation War Honour" in the concluding phase were, among others, Air Vice Marshal Swaroop Krishna Kaul, Maj. Gen. Lachhman Singh Lehl, film actor Waheeda Rehman, Zainal Abedin, Biswajit R. Chatterjee, Gouri Ghosh, Shakti Chattapadhaya, Pannalal Dasgupta, Shaheed Capt. Manmohan Sagor Duggal, Asghar Ali, Snehangshu Kanta Acharyya, Somnath Hore, Maulana Syed Asad Madni, Suchitra Mitra, Kulwant Singh Pannu, Kishore Parekh, Subhash Mukhopadhaya, Samar Sen, Shaheed Subedar Mailkiat Singh, Sukhdev Singh Sanhu and Tapishwar Narain Raina. One of the award recipients, Swaroop Krishna Kaul, a retired Indian Air Chief Marshal, led a fleet of aircraft which bombed the Government House in Dhaka on December 15, 1971, where Pakistani General Amir Abdullah Khan Niazi was holding a meeting with his officials. The surprise attack played an important role leading to the historic surrender of the Pakistani forces to the India-Bangladesh Joint Command on December 16, 1971.

149. Convocation Address and Acceptance Speech of President Pranab Mukherjee at the ceremony conferring the Doctor of Law Honoris Causa on him by the University of Dhaka. Dhaka, March 4, 2013.

1. I am delighted to be here today in your midst at this historic venue. You have given me an extraordinary welcome. I am overwhelmed by the love and affection you have showered on me, and by this magnificent reception.
2. Bangladesh is the first country that I am visiting as President of India. The last visit by an Indian President to Bangladesh was almost forty years ago by President V.V. Giri in 1974.
3. For me personally, this is an emotional journey. I have my roots in the soil of Bengal, and have imbibed its language, traditions and culture. My wife was born in Narail and started her education here. I have grown up reading the compositions of the same poets as you, listening to the same songs which both our people love and walked along the banks of the same rivers which inspire the songs that make us all similarly wistful. When I was a child I never dreamt that one day I would come here as the President of my country.
4. I was overwhelmed by the spontaneous outpouring of support and goodwill that I received from the people of Bangladesh when I became the President of India. I received many congratulatory messages from people from all walks of life and all parts of this country. I take this opportunity to express my deep gratitude to the people of Bangladesh for their good wishes on that day.
5. Today, I stand on hallowed ground at this great University of Dhaka which will soon celebrate its centenary. It has been a century of accomplishment and on this occasion of its convocation ceremony, I felicitate all the students of this University who have successfully graduated in their respective academic disciplines. Dhaka University is the oldest and largest public University in Bangladesh. Today, as we recall its old reputation as the “Oxford of the East”, we note with pride its place among the top institutions of contemporary Asia. Students who graduate today are following in the footsteps of the great alumni who passed through these portals in the generations before you. The names of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, Tajuddin Ahmed, Satyendranath Bose, R.C. Majumdar, Humayun Ahmed, Buddhadeb Basu and Shamsur Rahman come to mind. They include many of the brightest minds of the last century – who distinguished themselves through their academic achievements.

6. No one who comes here can forget how uniquely this University is identified with your nationhood. The halls of this great institution were the crucible and the Karma bhoomi of the creation of Bangladesh. Numberless architects of the Liberation War sacrificed their lives in this campus. And before them there were the pioneers. Who can forget the day of February 21, 1952 when the students of Dhaka University defied the banning of public rallies by the then Government? The sacrifices made by the martyrs of the language movement have now been recognized by the United Nations, which has declared February 21 as the “International Mother Language Day”.
7. It was again the students of Dhaka University who heroically resisted the brutal attack on the night of March 25, 1971 that killed more than three hundred of their colleagues, faculty members and intelligentsia. They along with many others had been a bulwark against the intolerance and hatred which had descended on this land – and who, in the years after Liberation, took forward the socio-political transformation of the country.
8. Today, when Bangladesh is free and liberated and is happily engaged in its own development, the sacrifices of its martyrs are vindicated. It is because of them that the youth of Bangladesh are today able to call this land their own. Young men and women like you are the engine of socio-economic development of our region. The future of Bangladesh is in your hands. You should know that you have a past which is steeped in glory, and a future that is full of promise. I have been deeply impressed by the maturity, awareness and involvement of the youth of Bangladesh in the task of nation building. It is a labour of love - that is how the Father of this nation – Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman described his inspiration: “As a man, what concerns mankind concerns me. As a Bengalee I am deeply involved in all that concerns Bengalees. This abiding involvement is born and nourished by love, enduring love, which gives meaning to my politics and to my very being.”

9. It is this extraordinary spirit of humanity and confidence that has been instrumental in the advancement of Bangladesh by leaps and bounds. Bangladesh has emerged as one of the fastest growing economies in South Asia. This is laudable. I would compliment the government led by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and the people of Bangladesh for their achievements in all aspects of human development. In many social indicators, Bangladesh has acquitted itself in an exemplary manner. It is seen that the literacy rate amongst youth in Bangladesh - in the age bracket of 15 to 24 years – is now 77 percent while life expectancy at birth is now about 69 years. You have made good progress and set new benchmarks in the amelioration of poverty, eradication of hunger and universalization of education. The school text book programme of Bangladesh is known to be one of the largest in the world – and the gross enrollment ratio at the secondary school level is now about 51 percent. While the poverty ratio in Bangladesh is about 31 percent, you have world class achievements on which the edifice of a prosperous and developed Bangladesh will be built. I am sure that you, the youth of Bangladesh, will carry forward this great task with dedication.
10. If, today, Bangladesh has embraced democracy, it is largely due to the values and principles which its people held dear when they fought for their independence in 1971. You have been steadfast. You, better than anyone else, know that democracy means the ability to respect differences and allow the will of the people to prevail for the common good. You know that it means respect for the rule of law and building of strong institutions along with free speech and a vibrant media. I am confident that democratic traditions in Bangladesh will grow stronger with time and that you will preserve democracy with your constant vigil.

11. India and Bangladesh are interlinked like no other nations on earth. Our destinies are interwoven just like our history and our geography. Within our resources, India remains committed to supporting the comprehensive development of Bangladesh and the aspirations of its people. We believe that India and Bangladesh must develop and grow together, ensuring that our growth provides more opportunities to both our peoples. We both face common challenges and, as Her Excellency, Prime Minister, Sheikh Hasina has said, we have the same enemy – poverty. We need to work together to maximize the potential of our economic cooperation. Bangladesh is uniquely placed to exploit its natural and human resources to emerge as a fast growing, modern economy. Apart from the potential of its resources on land and sea, the geographical location of Bangladesh is an advantage that must be fully explored and exploited. Bangladesh lies at the cross-roads of South and South-East Asia. The idea of South Asian regional cooperation was born in Bangladesh. Bangladesh has once again taken the leadership in moving towards sub-regional cooperation. This will lead to practical results in terms of better water management, more electricity and grid connectivity, more trade and more cross-country movement of goods and people. India and Bangladesh can lead the way towards greater integration within our region and beyond in South East Asia.
12. Bilateral relations between India and Bangladesh have received a major boost following the visit of Her Excellency Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to India in January 2010 and our Prime Minister's visit to Bangladesh in September 2011. We now have a "Framework Agreement on Cooperation for Development" that lays down the roadmap for our work together in the years to come. I am happy to note that both countries have made considerable progress in the implementation of the far-reaching decisions taken during these historic Visits. I assure you that India remains committed to implementing the decisions that have been taken.

13. India and Bangladesh have vast opportunities to increase our bilateral trade and commerce. Government of India has taken the first step by removing quota and duty restrictions from all categories of imports from Bangladesh except twenty five tariff lines. Bangladesh now has duty-free access to our large market. I invite Bangladesh's industry to make full use of this opportunity. We are working with the Government of Bangladesh to remove the remaining non-tariff barriers, open more border haats and harmonise our respective standards.
14. The recently signed Revised Travel Arrangements between India and Bangladesh will lead to the liberalisation of visa arrangements between our countries. These will particularly help businessmen, students, journalists, tourists and those travelling for medical treatment. Greater people-to-people contacts and exchanges are the best way to bring our two countries even closer together.
15. I am happy with the progress made in the implementation of the Line of Credit extended by my Government to the Government of Bangladesh. Several development projects, especially those pertaining to the railways sector, are now beginning to take off. I was happy to see double decker buses purchased under the Line of Credit plying on the roads. Many new Indian locomotives and wagons will soon be on the rail lines of Bangladesh. We have offered a grant of 200 million US Dollars to Bangladesh for utilization in projects of priority to Bangladesh. The first tranche - of 50 million US Dollars of this grant - was handed over a few weeks ago.
16. Our countries have also made considerable progress in our co-operation in the power sector. The power grids of our countries will, for the first time in our post-independence history, be connected by the middle of this year. This will allow the flow of 500 MW of power from India to Bangladesh. The India-Bangladesh Friendship Power Company is setting up an ultra-modern super thermal 1320 MW power station at Rampal near Mongla to meet the energy needs of Bangladesh.

17. My Government proposes to introduce a Constitutional Amendment Bill in Parliament to give effect to the provisions of the Land Boundary Agreement with Bangladesh and its 2011 Protocol. We are committed to working closely with Bangladesh to avoid any untoward incidents on our border. We can together make it a gateway of peace and mutually beneficial cooperation.
18. The sharing of the waters of our common rivers is a high priority for us. We have successfully forged agreements in the past and are hopeful of arriving at an early accord on the sharing of the Teesta waters.
19. Meanwhile, there are areas where we must substantially increase our cooperation, such as in information technology, skill development, agricultural research, environment protection, climate change, and in protecting the Sunderbans and harnessing energies, both traditional as well as new and renewable sources of energy.
20. We must invest more in the field of education. There must be more exchanges of students, faculty, research scholars and academics between us. Government of India offers a large number of scholarships for students and professionals from Bangladesh. Many more students from Bangladesh are coming to India at their own cost to pursue higher studies. The Indian Council for Cultural Relations has established a Tagore Chair and a Hindi Chair at Dhaka University. These have contributed to greater academic exchanges between India and Bangladesh.
21. I was delighted to meet a 100-strong youth delegation, the first ever from Bangladesh, last year. Many of the students were from the Dhaka University. I am happy to note that a similar delegation will again visit India this year.
22. There are few countries in the world where music, poetry, art and drama are as deeply ingrained in a nation's conscience as in Bangladesh. There is a lot that we, in India, can learn from you. I have the pleasure to announce that the Visva Bharati University at Santi Niketan will provide land within its campus to Bangladesh for the construction of 'Bangladesh Bhaban'. This will serve as a focal point for research and documentation under the 'Bangladesh Studies Programme' of Visva Bharati.

23. Looking at you, I am convinced that the future of Bangladesh is bright. I wish you all every success in making the dream of Sonar Bangla a reality. India will stand by your side as you shape the destiny of your country.
24. With these words, I accept, with utmost humility, the award of the Doctor of Laws Honoris Causa from Dhaka University.
25. I once again thank the Dhaka University for inviting me to be among you all today. I take this opportunity of conveying, through you, the greetings of the people of India to the friendly people of Bangladesh.

Long live India-Bangladesh friendship.

Thank You

150. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary in Dhaka on the ongoing State Visit of President to Bangladesh.

Dhaka, March 4, 2013.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): Good evening friends and apologies for the delay. There was a one-to-one between the Hon'ble President and Hon'ble Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina which we had to wait for it to finish before we came over.

As all of you know, today the most important meeting was the meeting between the Hon'ble President and the Hon'ble Prime Minister. Hon'ble Foreign Minister Dipu Moni and Hon'ble Finance Minister Muhith also called on the Hon'ble President. That was preceded by the President going to the War Memorial where he placed a wreath. The Foreign Secretary will make his initial statement and then we shall continue with the press briefing.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Ranjan Mathai): Thank you, Venu. Thank you all for joining this press briefing. I have just rushed here from the last meeting and I was told that all of you are in fact going to be having a dinner shortly. I am happy to join you in filing your stories before you go for dinner. Mr. Rajamony has been good enough to tell you about a couple of the meetings which took place today. I will start with the statement and then we will take questions.

To my right is Mr. Deepak Mittal, Director in the BSM Division, which is Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Maldives and Myanmar Division, of the Ministry of External Affairs. Of course Venu is an old friend of all of yours, so I do not have to introduce him.

As you all know Rashtrapatiji arrived earlier today on his first visit to a foreign country and that was in Bangladesh, where he was accorded a ceremonial welcome. He visited the National Martyr Memorial at Savar where he laid a wreath in honour of the liberation of Bangladesh and also planted a mango sapling over there. While over there, he also looked at a sapling which had been planted in 1985 by the former Prime Minister of India Late Shri Rajiv Gandhi.

As Mr. Rajamony mentioned, Rashtrapatiji has just concluded his meeting with the Prime Minister of Bangladesh. He met her first in a delegation-level discussion which was followed by a restricted meeting limited to only the Hon'ble President and the Hon'ble Prime Minister. Subsequently, a cultural function and a dinner is being hosted by the Hon'ble Prime Minister in honour of Rashtrapatiji. The cultural function is going on even as we speak.

At these meetings, Rashtrapatiji was accompanied by the Minister of State for Railways Shri Adhir Ranjan Chowdhury, and four Members of Parliament – Shri Sitaram Yechury, Dr. Chandan Mitra, Shri Mukul Roy and Shri Bhubaneswar Kalita, and senior officials. Before the meeting with the Hon'ble Prime Minister, the Hon'ble Foreign Minister of Bangladesh Dr. Dipu Moni, and the Hon'ble Finance Minister Dr. M.A. Muhith also called on Rashtrapatiji.

In these talks Rashtrapatiji thanked the Government of Bangladesh for the warm welcome extended to him since his arrival. He expressed appreciation for the recognition that the Government of Bangladesh has accorded to the Indian people for their support to the movement for the liberation of Bangladesh. He reiterated the importance that India attaches to its overall relations with this country.

It was noted that bilateral relations between India and Bangladesh have undergone significant transformation over the past few years. This has been made possible by the vision of mutually beneficial and prosperous progress together which was provided by the leadership on both sides. The Hon'ble President also felicitated the Bangladesh Government on their significant achievements in economic growth and more importantly in achieving development goals particularly in the social sector and on human resource development.

To take you back to an issue of bilateral significance, the US$ 800 million Line of Credit Agreement, which was signed in May 2010 during the visit of Rashtrapatiji in his capacity at that time as the External Affairs Minister, has seen steady implementation. Fourteen projects worth nearly US$ 736 million out of 800 million have been approved. These include 11 projects valued at about US$ 630 million in the railways sector for supply of locomotives, tank wagons, flat wagons and brake wagons. A freight train consisting of 20 tank wagons and a brake van and locomotives supplied from India is scheduled to be flagged off day after tomorrow by the Hon'ble President. The supply of buses is in an advanced stage with the delivery of 290 double-decker buses having been completed in November last year. I do not know if any of you saw the double-decker buses on the streets. The supply of 100 remaining single-decker buses is expected to be completed by the middle of 2013. Some of them are already plying on the Dhaka roads and other cities in Chittagong and Bogra.

As you are aware, in keeping with the commitment made by Rashtrapatiji during, when he was the Finance Minister, in May 2012, US$ 200 million of the Line of Credit has been converted into grant, US$ 50 million was handed over in February 2013 during the visit of the External Affairs Minister. The second installment of US$ 50 million is expected to be released after the approval of supplementary grants for MEA by the Indian Parliament during March.

The President's visit is a State visit and on occasions such as State visits, negotiations on bilateral matters are not held. But as you are all aware, Rashtrapatiji has long experience in having dealt with India-Bangladesh relations in his different capacities, as External Affairs Minister, as Defence Minister, as Finance Minister. As Hon'ble President, he conveyed the commitment of the Government of India to work towards the early ratification of the 1974 Land Boundary Agreement and the protocol which we concluded in 2011. In this context he noted that the Government was in the process of introducing a Constitution (Amendment) Bill in Parliament shortly.

Rashtrapatiji also conveyed to his interlocutors the Government of India's commitment to work towards early conclusion of an agreement on sharing of waters of the Teesta river based on fair and equitable basis that protects the interest of all stakeholders.

Noting that significant progress has been achieved in furthering relations in the areas of power, security - in security just recall that we signed an Extradition Agreement during the visit of the Hon'ble Home Minister here in January - trade and investment – if I can quote a figure, since 2012 while Bangladesh exports have not shown dramatic increase because of the jute factor – in the area of garments, Bangladesh exports have gone up by something like 65 per cent, garments and textiles put together. Also, border management, development cooperation, culture, human resource development, capacity building, the two sides agreed on the need for enhancing bilateral cooperation, including through restoration of connectivities that existed between the people of the two countries.

People-to-people relations have also been stressed by both Governments during our discussions today. The Revised Travel Arrangement has produced a visa regime which liberalises the visa system. Youth exchanges have been held. One hundred Bangladesh youth had come to India last year on an exchange visit. We are expecting another group in a few months' time.

Tomorrow Rashtrapatiji has a busy day. During the day he would visit the Dhaka University where he would receive an honorary Doctorate of Law at a formal convocation ceremony. I would request the Press Secretary to President to add to my remarks, to brief you on what is going to happen tomorrow.

Press Secretary to President: Thank you, Sir. I think I will just give you a few of the lighter elements of the interaction between the President and the Prime Minister as well as the other Ministers and then we will go to the programme.

First of all the President said that he was extremely happy that Bangladesh was the first country he was visiting among all foreign countries after assuming office. He said that there were many visitors from Bangladesh after he assumed office and some of them told him of how Bangladeshi newspapers have been describing him as a 'son in law' of Bangladesh, and of how happy they are that he has become the President of India. And he said that really touched him. And he received a large number of congratulations letters, telephone calls and messages from a large cross-section of people in Bangladesh on assumption of office.

He was a little taken back when he first got the proposal that he was to be given an award for his contribution to the liberation of Bangladesh. But in particular he felt that there are many more Indians who have contributed much more than him and he was not very sure that he was worthy of that honour. However, he recognized an important fact that while Indian soldiers have fought for many foreign countries across the world in World War I and World War II, Bangladesh is one country which has recognized the contribution of Indian soldiers in a manner much better than any other country in an absolutely special and unique manner. So, he felt he had to come to Bangladesh. He also recollected that he said when he received news of this honour, he went back to the days of 1971 and it was like he was reliving the events of 1971. It was not just Indian soldiers or Indian political leaders, but lawyers, intellectuals, writers, the whole of India was involved in Bangladesh's liberation in a way. It was like something which touched the lives of Indian people. There were a large number of refugees who came. They were given shelter. There were family connections which were established between those who gave shelter and those who caught refuge etc.

The Hon'ble President remembered that there is a large number of bilateral visits which have taken place in recent times. The Minister of Power, the Home Minister, the Minorities, the Corporate Affairs Minister and EAM have been here recently and that reflects the depth and wide canvas of cooperation. He complimented the Hon'ble Prime Minister and Bangladesh for conceptualizing the regional cooperation and trilateral cooperation in particular India-Nepal-Bhutan cooperation and India. He said that the credit goes to Bangladesh for being the first to think of this, and now the challenge is to put it into operation.

He complimented Bangladesh for its economic achievements in particular the fact that when there were a population of 7 crore they have to import food. But now there are a population of 16 crore and they are self-sufficient in food.

He said the mighty economies of the world including the Indian economy is suffering in many ways because of the 2008 financial crisis as well as the Euro crisis. But Bangladesh's economy has been consistently doing well. He conveyed the regards of the Hon'ble Prime Minister and said that the Hon'ble Prime Minister wanted him to assure that India stands by all its commitments to Bangladesh.

The last point that I would just mentioned is that the Hon'ble President also talked about India-Bangladesh relations being an essential element in India's Look East Policy, and that the enhancing connectivity between the sub-region, between Bangladesh would contribute in an enormous manner to the growth and prosperity of the region as a whole.

The Bangladesh Prime Minister said that honouring the Hon'ble President is honouring Bangladesh itself, Bangladeshi's itself. It may be late but the Bangladesh people and the Government strongly feel that those who supported Bangladesh in its liberation struggle should be encouraged. The Bangladesh Prime Minister as well as the other Ministers - Hon'ble Finance Minister and the Hon'ble Foreign Minister – emphasize the importance of improving connectivity. The Bangladesh Prime Minister has said that the common challenge which India and Bangladesh raise, which the region raises, is poverty, and this needs to be addressed jointly by both the countries.

She also said that the people of India sacrificed a lot for the liberation of Bangladesh. This is something which Bangladesh cannot forget and the new generation of Bangladesh should know what happened in 1971 and who stood by Bangladesh and who supported to Bangladesh.

The programme we could go into later after you ask your questions.

Q: Mr. Foreign Secretary, what is the reason why Opposition Leader Khaleda Zia has cancelled her meeting with the President, and what do you have to say to that? Your comments!

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that we have fixed a time for Begum Khaleda Zia to call on our President well in advance, and this had been in our programme for some time. The President was in fact looking forward to meeting Begum Khaleda Zia.

As you would recall, our External Affairs Minister had met Begum Khaleda Zia on the 17th of February. Begum Khaleda Zia was also in India at the end of October, early November, and on that occasion she had called on Rashtrapati ji at the Rashtrapati Bhavan. In his earlier capacity both as the External Affairs Minister and as Finance Minister, during his visits to Bangladesh Shri Pranab Mukherjee had actually met Dr. Khaleda Zia. The programme was accepted and, as I said, we were looking forward to this meeting. The reason given in an e-mail to the High Commissioner of India was that there is a hartal between 3rd and 5th of March, and experience shows that such hartals often turn violent thereby causing security and safety concerns on the movement of people. And it is precisely on these concerns that the proposed timetable for the meeting with President would not be suitable. That is what we have been told. I do not wish to comment further on that.

Q: What progress has been made on Teesta because there is a lot of speculation in the media that - there is a Trinamool Congress in the Delegation of the President – there is a softening of stand of Mamata Banerjee on Teesta and perhaps India is going to move faster on Teesta Agreement?

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that this visit, as I said in Delhi before we set out, is not designed for negotiations on specific issues. What the Hon. President conveyed to his Bangladesh interlocutors was that the Government of India is committed to finding a fair and reasonable solution to the issue of the sharing of the waters of the Teesta between our two countries. You are aware, as everyone is aware, that in a federal system we have to have an agreement with all stakeholders including the State Government of Paschim Banga, West Bengal. That process will continue, and the President underlined the commitment of the Government to seek this kind of a solution as I said in as early a timeframe as is possible. But there was no specific negotiation on the agreement itself.

Q: Did the current political situation in Bangladesh come up during the talks?

Foreign Secretary: The current political situation, beyond what Venu has already told you, did not come up in the talks. The situation in our bilateral relationship was really the main focus of those talks.

Q: Has the President expressed concern about the current political situation? Since he has visited Dhaka so often, he has a very close relationship with the people here, is he concerned about it?

Foreign Secretary: I think he is concerned about the fact that India-Bangladesh relations are in a very good state, and that we seek the best of relations with the people of Bangladesh. I think to that extent we did have a discussion on the need for a broad-based relationship between our two countries. But in the context of the very specific internal situation, that was not discussed.

Press Secretary to President: If I could just add, we have been repeatedly saying that the President is extremely happy to be here, he has been looking forward to be here, and that itself is a statement in itself, and second thing you have been circulated copies of interviews which he had given to some of the Bangladesh media where there was a question on the political situation and there is an answer. That will also give you material on what you are seeking.

Foreign Secretary: There was I think a question which was put to him by the Bangladesh media which has been answered and that has been circulated.

Q: Sir, apart from ... how long was the restricted meeting? Secondly, could you give us a sense of delegation-level talks? What was the nature of the delegation? Were all other members interacting amongst themselves? What was the subject of that ... (Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: The restricted talks took a little over half an hour. When I say restricted, they were really restricted because I was not present. They were basically between the Prime Minister and the President. During the delegation-level talks, yes certainly there was a considerable degree of interaction. There was a recognition that our relationship is one which involves all parties, all stakeholders who have an interest in the kind of issues which are under discussion between us. There was also considerable discussion on the historical background.

As I said, the discussion started with a recollection of India's role in the early years in 1971, in the Liberation Struggle, which had already started in this country. I think Venu has some anecdotes which he might be able to share with you from that period too. President certainly asked all the accompanying members of his delegation which included the Minister of State for Railways and four Members of Parliament, all of who are by the way Bengali speaking, to add to that conversation.

And I think the general sense was that there is an acceptance that the India-Bangladesh relationship is founded on a basic commonality of interest between our people, and that there is a nonpartisan understanding that these need to be taken forward. I think that is what I would take away from that delegation-level talks.

Of course we spoke about the specifics which come into our bilateral relations. As I said, President referred to the fact that we would be moving an Amendment Bill in Parliament for the Land Boundary Agreement, that he would be asking the Government to work towards finalizing the Teesta accord, that the lines of credit are now moving forward and this is very positive, and that on all relations whether it is cultural and all other areas of our relationship, this is not a relationship which is founded on a Government-to-Government basis. It really involves the people of both countries.

Press Secretary to President: If I can just add to what the Foreign Secretary has already mentioned, first of all I would say that from what happened in the delegation-level talks it was very evident that Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina was very happy that there was a Parliamentary delegation, there was a Minister there, there were representatives of various parties. The President underlined the fact that though they come from different parties, almost all of them are Bengali-speaking and are very familiar with Bangladesh and India-Bangladesh relations. And Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina effectively said that we need the support of the whole Parliament for the progress of India-Bangladesh relations.

Q: Just two Supplementaries, Sir. Did the four MPs accompanying Hon. President speak at all during the discussion? If so, what was their version, perspective?

Foreign Secretary: I am sure you will have an opportunity to meet them tomorrow and you will get their version. But they did certainly participate very actively in the discussion with Sheikh Hasina and also they were all present during the meeting with the Foreign Minister and with the Finance Minister. They are going to be present in the meetings tomorrow, which I thought he was going to brief you about, and I hope he still will. Yes, they participated very actively and the sense they conveyed, if I can put it this way, is that what the Hon. President said is that there is a general consensus in India that the relationship between our two countries is very very important in Indian foreign policy, in the making of India's regional economic cooperation in the eastern part of India, also bringing in other countries, and in the entire Look East Policy. So, both from a domestic and a foreign policy point of view, the participation of members of all shades of political opinion in our Parliament is very important. I think this was underlined, and I think it came through quite strongly. As I said, the additional dimension which Dr. Rajamony mentioned, that they could all speak Bengali definitely added to the flavor of the occasion.

Press Secretary to President: Let me just add, it was not structured, it was not that each person was asked to speak, but it was an informal discussion wherein whoever wanted to contribute, contributed to the discussions. But please speak to the MPs themselves, they are the best people who can brief you on whatever they wanted to say or they wish to say.

Q: A meeting with the leader of the opposition is normally a part of the state visit. We do it in our country. After first agreeing to such a meeting it was cancelled. Would you call it a breach of diplomatic propriety?

Foreign Secretary: As I explained, we had arranged this meeting well in advance and we were looking forward to it because this is an interaction which we have always had. We had as recently as two weeks ago when the External Affairs Minister was here and called on the Leader of Opposition. Beyond that it was not for me to comment. This is an issue which I think the Spokesperson of Begum Khaleda would be in a better position to speak.

Q: Sir, specifically to the issue of the four MPs participating, did Dr. Chandan Mitra also mention about how as an opposition member team visited areas earlier relating to land boundary issue and then prepared a report for his own party?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think this was mentioned during the discussions. It did not come up.

Q: Did he refer to anything about how his party is going to ...

Press Secretary to President: I think you should ask the Member of Parliament Dr. Chandan Mitra. Do not ask the Foreign Office to speak on what Dr. Mitra said.

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that during the discussions there was a considerable amount of exchanges between the two sides, but this was not mentioned. Whether it came up in any other format, you could ask the Hon. Member of Parliament himself.

Q: Has there been any flavoured language?

Press Secretary to President: I was just about to mention that there was lot of discussions on the first Bengali PM I think much of which went over Foreign Secretary and my head. But please speak to Mr. Sitaram Yechury and you will get a flavor of what the discussions were.

Foreign Secretary: That is what I was trying to hint at. There was a free-flowing conversation about the first Bengali President and why we did not have a first Bengali Prime Minister. That was a light-hearted historical diversion, shall I call it?

Press Secretary to President: Which was equally participated in by both the sides.

Thank you.

151. Remarks by President of India during his visit to Kumudini*.
Dhaka, March 5, 2013.

*(The President spoke in Bengali. English transcript of his remarks is given below)

Shri Rajiv Prasad Shaha, Managing Director, Kumudini Welfare Trust
Shrimati Shaha,

Miss Pratibha Mutsuddy, Director of Bharateshwari Home

Trustees and Staff Members of Kumudini Welfare Trust,

My dear students,

I am delighted to be here with you at Kumudini and the Bharateshwari Home for Girls. You have put up an extraordinary performance which combines beauty with elegance, discipline and physical fitness. I am truly impressed and overwhelmed by your talent and hard work.

Looking at all of you I can see that Bangladesh has a very bright future. Each of you will one day go forth into the outside world. The training and education that you are receiving here will equip you to become proud and productive citizens of your motherland. You will be the makers of a new Bangladesh. To everybody you are the representatives of the youth who aspire to see a beautiful future. Our greetings to you, the youth of Bangladesh. In the last speech of my visit to this wonderful country, I am quoting a few verses from a poem by Gurudev Rabindranath:

Where the world is without fear and the head is held high

Where knowledge is free

Where the world has not been broken up

By narrow domestic walls.....

Bangladesh has taken rapid strides in the field of education and women's empowerment. A growing number of girls are now attending school. I congratulate the Government of Bangladesh for taking far reaching initiatives in the field of education such as compulsory primary education, free education for girls up to class ten, stipends for female students and distribution of free text books.

Women's education is an essential pre-requisite for building a healthy and safe society. This however cannot be done by governments alone, and I am therefore glad that the Kumudini Trust has joined the national effort to impart quality education to girls in Bangladesh.

I take this opportunity to remember, with profound respect, Shri Ranada Prasad Shaha, one of the greatest philanthropists of this country. He and his family had dedicated themselves to the service of the suffering and the needy. One of Shri Ranada Prasad's priorities was to establish a hospital for the poor so that they, especially women, could receive free treatment. To spread female education, he established schools that were dedicated to girls, giving them a well - rounded education and moulding them into socially responsible women. It is sad that not only Shri Ranada Prasad Shaha but also his family suffered considerably in the days before the creation of Bangladesh. We respect them for their bravery and pay homage to their memory. It is a tribute to him that the Kumudini Trust and its affiliated bodies have grown from strength to strength, and have served the nation so well. The Kumudini hospital and medical college have been carrying out charitable work for the most needy and destitute. You are fortunate to be studying in an institution which symbolizes the highest values of selfless service.

As a small token of support of the Government of India for your efforts, I am happy to announce that we will fund the upgradation of the sewerage system of your Complex which, I understand, has been a long pending need. In addition, we will also fund the construction of an advanced waste water treatment plant system. I am happy to be informed that the project will significantly change the landscape of the Complex and that the land saved from the installation of the waste water treatment system will be gainfully used for agriculture and other productive purposes.

I recall that some of you had met me as part of a Youth Delegation that visited Delhi last year. Today, I am happy to be here to meet you and to see, for myself, this remarkable institution.

I am deeply impressed by what I have seen and have no doubt that you will be outstanding citizens of Bangladesh.

I wish each one of you the best of success and a bright future.

152. On board Media Interaction of President en route from Dhaka.

March 6, 2013.

Hon. President of India (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): First of all I hope you have enjoyed your stay there. I could not meet you there, but I hope our people and their people have taken care of you and you did not have to face any uncomfortable situation.

I have concluded my first visit abroad as President to friendly neighbour in Bangladesh. I am fully satisfied by my visit which was fruitful and productive. I was received with exceptional warmth and friendship, and wish to thank the Government of Bangladesh once again for the excellent arrangements they made.

I was touched by the gesture of the Government of Bangladesh to recognize my modest contribution to their Liberation War. As I said in my acceptance speech yesterday, the honour goes to India as a whole and the large number of Indians who actively supported the birth of Bangladesh.

My visit has served to reinforce the special importance that the Government and people of India attach to developing the best possible relations with an important and large neighbour like Bangladesh. We believe that a strong, stable and rapidly developing Bangladesh is in the interest of not only its people but in the interest of the entire region. I, therefore, assured the Government and people of Bangladesh that India will be a willing long-term development partner.

I underlined our commitment to resolving all outstanding issues in our bilateral relations. I was happy to see that the line of credit extended by India is being used effectively to enhance transport facilities and development projects in the country.

I am happy that Shri Adhir Ranjan Chowdhury, Minister of State for Railways, and four hon'ble Members of Parliament - Shri Sitaram Yechury, Dr. Chandan Mitra, Shri Mukul Roy and Shri Bhubaneswar Kalita - from leading political parties in India could accompany me to meetings with Bangladesh leaders. Their presence is reflective of the broad-based support in India, cutting across party lines, to developing strong and friendly relations with Bangladesh.

I was impressed by the vibrancy of the people of Bangladesh. Like India, they have a large population of youth. They are committed to democracy, tolerance, an inclusive social order, free media, and building a modern and progressive state. They seek to consolidate the institutions of democracy and keep alive the spirit of their liberation struggle. We wish them well in this great endeavour.

It is important for us to enable better people-to-people exchanges which will benefit both countries. I made it clear that we wish to grow together with Bangladesh because our destinies are interlinked. Apart from bilateral cooperation, we are now preparing to expand our cooperation at the sub-regional level. This holds great promise for the security, growth and connectivity that can transform the entire region.

I had excellent discussions with the leadership of Bangladesh and also had the opportunity to meet a cross section of society. A democratic, secular and progressive Bangladesh is clearly in India's interest. In this context, we conveyed to all our interlocutors the need for an inclusive political process and the maintenance of communal peace and harmony. We are hopeful that internal political differences can be resolved through dialogue, and that the rights of all communities could be fully respected. I am returning with the hope and confidence that India and Bangladesh can together build a better future for our people and that our relations can serve as an example for the rest of South Asia.

Thank you

Q: ...(Inaudible)... unprecedented reception at Dhaka University. ...(Inaudible)...

Hon. President: Perhaps one thing is I am told but the facts are to be fully verified that in the history of the 92 years of the existence of Dhaka University, mine was the first all Bengali convocation speech. Earlier to me, Professor Amartya Sen delivered the convocation speech some years ago. But it was a mixture of English and Bengali. Mine was a prepared text of convocation address fully in Bengali language. And you know the commitment of the Dhaka University to furthering the cause of their language and culture. It is well-known. Secondly, as I mentioned umpteen number of times that in my life I have seen that I have received much more than I have given to others. That could be the difference.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Hon. President: These are essentially the internal political issues which are to be resolved by the political parties of the countries concerned. In a multiparty democratic system, there would be divergences of the view on issues. But at the same time the beauty of the multiparty democratic system is that it is resolved in the way which is acceptable to the participants.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Hon. President: We had the joint celebration of the 150th birth anniversary of Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore. The 100th year of Gitanjali was observed by Bangladesh artistes. Indian artistes also participated in the complex of the Silaidaha ...(Inaudible)... And what I saw there I am quite impressed. It has been developed into a beautiful tourist heritage centre. The articles used by Tagore are maintained very carefully. The place is neat and clean. Bangladesh Government and people of Bangladesh are maintaining it very well. Though I had very little time, I was running one hour late, but I fully enjoyed it.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Hon. President: I have already said in my statement that all outstanding issues will be resolved through dialogue.

Q: How did you feel during your visit to Narail?

Hon. President: It is exclusively personal, but I can share with you that it was the first time I was visiting my in-laws' house. And that too, I have married in 1957, more than half a century ago. But my visit to my in-laws' house is for the first time. And except one, whom I saw very young, I did not know anybody. I told him to introduce the others who are supposed to be my relatives.

Q: What did they gift you?

Hon. President: They treated me exactly the same way when a new bridegroom is received in the house, at this age of 78. Question: In Bengali it is called Dwiragaman.

Hon. President: Dwiragaman hoi nai, because the first time I did not go.

During the marriage, the groom goes for the first time. And when he goes second time, then it is called Dwiragaman, that is coming twice. In my case it was not even the first time.

Q: What about Jamai Shashti?

Hon. President: There is a system in Bengal that on that particular day they send some gifts to the bridegroom's house. Prime Minister Hasina was telling me that this year I shall have to think of sending some gift to you on that occasion. It was just a joke.

Q: Sir, the entire trip was good but there was some little bit pinch of salt in between because the Leader of Opposition Begum Khaleda Zia had cancelled her meeting with you at the last moment. What is your reaction about that?

Hon. President: I think Foreign Secretary has already briefed you on that.

Thank you

153. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Information & Broadcasting on the meeting between the Ministers of Information and Broadcasting of India and Bangladesh.

New Delhi, April 11, 2013.

Minister of Information & Broadcasting, Shri Manish Tewari today met the Bangladesh Minister for Information & Broadcasting Mr. Hasanul Haq Inu and had extensive discussions on critical issues related to Information and Broadcasting Sector. During the discussions, both the Ministers agreed to consider a joint collaboration for production of a mega film depicting the "War of Liberation". In this context, it was agreed to work towards a roadmap to finalize the proposal shortly. In this context, the Information Minister of Bangladesh also requested that the Government of India could consider providing the names of the soldiers who had laid down their lives during the War of Liberation. He reiterated that the Government of Bangladesh would like to recognize their contribution made during this historical event.

During the discussions, both the Ministers also agreed to explore the possibility of setting up of a Joint Working Group on the critical sectors of the Information and Broadcasting domain. The Working Group would provide a roadmap for future collaborations between the two countries. The Bangladesh Information Minister also requested the Minister for Information and Broadcasting to facilitate the downlinking of Bangladesh TV Channels through the private distribution network. Both Ministers also agreed to intensify the collaboration between Prasar Bharti and Bangladesh State Television in view of the Memorandum of Understanding signed between the two entities in 2011. The MoU had focused on mutual cooperation in the broadcast of television programmes between the two broadcasters. It was also mentioned that both countries could consider exchange of programmes and also explore the possibility of executive TV co-production. Both Shri Tewari and Shri Hasanul Haq Inu discussed the possibility of strengthening collaboration as far as training and capacity building was concerned between institutions of mutual interests.

During the discussions, both Ministers also agreed to facilitate the exchange of archival material between the two countries. In this context, Shri Tewari highlighted the major policy initiatives undertaken by the Ministry that had enabled the sector to grow exponentially. Specific reference was made to the initiatives undertaken by the Ministry to commemorate 100 years of Indian Cinema, the Digitization programme and the policies that were introduced to promote inclusive growth in the country. Both the Ministers were assisted by senior officials of the Ministries of Information and Broadcasting of India and Bangladesh.

154. Official Spokesperson's response to question on explosion near High Commissioner's vehicle in Bangladesh.

New Delhi, April 13, 2013.

Q: Sir, yesterday there was an attack in Bangladesh on High Commissioner's vehicle. That was bomb attack and in that attack, the driver was also wounded. What is your reaction on this attack and how much of it is a matter of concern for the security of Indians in Bangladesh especially officials and diplomats?

Answer: As per our information, yesterday while the High Commissioner was attending a function in Khulna, there were crude bomb explosions approximately 20 meters away from where his car was parked. As per our information, nobody involved with the High Commission was either injured nor was the car damaged in any form. I may also clarify that this was not the High Commission's vehicle. This was a local car hired by the High Commission. That said the High Commissioner has continued his engagements in Khulna. Today he is in Jessore visiting the Ramakrishna Mission there and he will fly back to Dhaka in accordance with his pre-scheduled programme.

Since those explosions, High Commissioner has received a large number of calls conveying concern to him and assuring him that all security will be provided to him and all High Commission officials. So, we have no cause for concern there.

Our High Commission is in touch with Bangladeshi authorities who are investigating the case and let us wait for the outcome of those investigations before jumping to any conclusion whether this was even an attack related to the High Commission at all.

155. Joint Communiqué issued at the end of the 14th meeting of the Home Secretaries of India and Bangladesh.

New Delhi, July 22, 2013.

“The 14th meeting of the Home Secretaries of India and Bangladesh was held in New Delhi from July 19th to July 22nd, 2013. The Indian delegation was led by Mr. Anil Goswami, Union Home Secretary, Government of India. The Bangladesh delegation was led by Mr. C. Q. K. Mustaq Ahmed, Senior Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of Bangladesh.

The two Home Secretaries recalled the excellent and friendly bilateral relations existing between India and Bangladesh and reiterated their commitment to further take these relations forward. They noted that the exchange of visits by the Prime Ministers of Bangladesh and India in January 2010 and September 2011 respectively and by the Home Minister of Bangladesh to India in February and December 2012 and the Home Minister of India to Bangladesh in July 2011 and January 2013 has infused a new dynamism in the bilateral relations in general and security cooperation in particular. They also noted that the bilateral cooperation in the field of security and border management has been strengthened with the signing of four agreements pertaining to security cooperation including the Extradition Treaty*.

They took note of the outcome of the 13th JWG meeting on Security issues held on 18 July 2013, wherein the two sides discussed issues such as security, border management, incidents of deaths due to firing on the border, implementation of agreements, ratification of the land boundary agreement, visa and consular related matters, capacity building etc.

The Indian Home Secretary conveyed the appreciation of Government of India to Government of Bangladesh for extending cooperation for addressing the security concerns of India. The two Home Secretaries reaffirmed their commitment not to allow the territory of either country to be used for any activity inimical to each other's interests. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the smooth operation of Coordinated Border Management Plan (CBMP) and agreed to increase the frequency of coordinated patrolling with a view to curbing criminal activities along the border.

They noted with satisfaction that the implementation of the CBMP has resulted in reduced number of border incidents. Agreeing that it is a joint responsibility, both Home Secretaries expressed confidence that increased number of coordinated patrolling would enhance cooperation between the border guarding forces of the two countries, and enable them to prevent the movement of criminals and manage the identified vulnerable areas with a view to prevent criminal activities, acts of violence and loss of lives along the border areas. As an additional measure for better border management, both sides welcomed the recent DC-DM conference between Brahmanbaria district of Bangladesh and West Tripura district of India. They agreed to have regular consultations between the DMs-DCs of border districts for resolving local issues. Both the sides also agreed to sensitize the media about ground realities of border management.

Both sides agreed to further intensify the activities of the different nodal points in different areas of cooperation such as human trafficking, drugs, INTERPOL, etc. They expressed satisfaction at the regular interaction of different bilateral mechanisms, including BGB-BSF DG level meetings, Narcotics DG level meetings, JWG on Security issues etc. and noted that these regular exchanges helped to enhance understanding and resolve issues to mutual satisfaction.

Both sides agreed to extend cooperation for apprehension of wanted criminals and fugitives. The Bangladesh Home Secretary urged for immediate tracking, arresting, and handing over the killers of Bangabandhu, the Father of the nation of Bangladesh, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. The Indian Home Secretary assured that India will continue to extend all possible assistance in this regard.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the level of cooperation in the seizure and prevention of trafficking of drugs. Bangladesh side also appreciated the decision of the Indian Government to invoke the provisions of the NDPS Act to contain the trafficking of Codeine based syrups like Phensedyl. It was also agreed to expand and strengthen further cooperation in sharing actionable intelligence in real time.

Both sides noted that the implementation of three agreements (Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons and Combating Terrorism, organized crime and illicit drug trafficking) signed during the visit of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to India in 2010 has been satisfactory.

Both the Home Secretaries reviewed the measures taken to expedite the verification and repatriation of prisoners who have completed their sentences. Both sides welcomed the recent setting up of procedures for transfer of sentenced prisoners and agreed to expedite the process so that nationals who are in each other's jails could serve remaining period of their sentence in their native country.

Both sides discussed the ratification of the LBA-1974 and the protocol signed in 2011 and noted that early ratification of the same would pave the way for implementation of the provisions of the agreement and lay the long pending boundary related issues at rest.

Both sides welcomed that the Joint Task Force on Fake Currency Notes has been set up and agreed that the first meeting may be convened soon to develop a mechanism to deal with the menace.

Both sides agreed that there should be greater number of goodwill visits and increased cooperation in training on subjects like Cyber Crime, ICT, Forensic Sciences etc. The Indian side reiterated its offer of training courses for law enforcement agencies of Bangladesh in Indian Institutions.

The Home Secretary of Bangladesh invited the Home Secretary of India for the 15th Home Secretary level talks at a mutually convenient time in Bangladesh.”

* The extradition treaty between Bangladesh and India which was signed on January 28, 2013 by the Home Ministers of the two countries came into effect on 23rd October, 2013 with the handing over of the instruments of ratification of the pact. This enables the two countries to exchange convicts or under-trials as and when required. Bangladesh Home Secretary C.Q.K. Mostak Ahmed and Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Pankaj Saran signed the documents. The treaty allows exchange of convicts sentenced for more than a year in prison but not be applicable to political prisoners and asylum seekers. Both sides have the option to cancel the treaty in six-month notice. India can now take back ULFA leader Anup Chetia, who had been lodged in prison for many years, from Bangladesh. Dhaka too can bring back fugitive crime lords such as Subrata Bain and Sazzad Hossain and put them on trial. “With the signature of the ratification instruments and the exchange, we are now in a position to bring the treaty into effect,” Mr. Pankaj Saran said. He hoped that the treaty would strengthen the security of the two countries.

156. Remarks by Prime Minister at the Inauguration of India-Bangladesh Grid Interconnection, Bheramara & Laying of Foundation Stone of Thermal Power Project, Rampal, Bangladesh (The inauguration was performed through video conferencing from New Delhi).

New Delhi, October 5, 2013.

Your Excellency Sheikh Hasina, Prime Minister of the People's Republic of Bangladesh Distinguished Ministers of the Government of Bangladesh, Dr. Farooq Abdullah sahib, Minister of New and Renewable Energy, Government of India Distinguished Guests Let me begin by saying how delighted I am to see Her Excellency the Prime Minister of Bangladesh once again following our meeting last week in New York. Madam Prime Minister, I thank you for your kind words this morning and for inviting me to join you and the people of Bangladesh at this historic moment, when we embark on a new partnership for prosperity between our two countries.

Madam Prime Minister, the initiative we took during your historic visit to India in January 2010 is being realized today. The transmission line and the HVDC station in Bheramara provide a safe and reliable interconnection of the power grids of our two countries, which will enable supply of 500 MW of power from India to Bangladesh. A shared aspiration of our people has been translated into a concrete outcome. I would therefore like to congratulate you, your colleagues and the people of Bangladesh for this extraordinary accomplishment. I also wish to thank my ministerial colleagues, our technical personnel and officials at the Centre and in the State Government of West Bengal for implementing this landmark project in South Asia in such a short span of time.

Today, we are also laying the foundation stone for the 1320 MW Maitri Thermal Power Project being developed by the Bangladesh-India Friendship Power Company, which is a joint venture of India's NTPC Ltd and the Bangladesh Power Development Board. I extend my best wishes to the project and call upon the project authorities to observe the highest environmental standards in its execution, given that the Sunderbans are our common heritage.

The initiatives being undertaken today strengthen the bonds of friendship between India and Bangladesh and add a rich new dimension to our bilateral relations. Economic development is the biggest challenge for all countries in South Asia. Our destinies are inter-linked and so must our economies be. I have always believed – and I believe Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina shares my conviction – that the prospects for economic development in South Asia will be substantially enhanced through a partnership for shared prosperity between the countries of the region. The key to shared prosperity is greater trade and investment in our region and improved connectivity through transport, road, rail, telecom, cyber and energy links. Today's inauguration represents an important milestone in connecting our two countries and the broader region through a growing web of cross-border energy links and trade.

Madam Prime Minister, we applaud the significant progress that Bangladesh has made under your distinguished leadership, including in the area of energy security. Bangladesh is one of the fastest growing economies in South Asia and its achievements in meeting the Millennium Development Goals stand as an example for the rest of the world. India wishes to see a strong and prosperous Bangladesh. I assure you that India will remain a steadfast and long-term partner in your development efforts.

* This marked the beginning of energy cooperation between the two collaborative power projects. The projects are a transmission line for exporting 500 MW from West Bengal and a 1,320-MW thermal power project in Bangladesh. The Maitri thermal power project was developed by Bangladesh-India Friendship Power Company, a joint venture between NTPC and Bangladesh Power Development Board.

On the Bangladesh side, India's Minister for New and Renewable Energy Minister Farooq Abdullah was present along with Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, at Bheramara, 240 km from Dhaka. "The inter-grid connectivity is part of an immediate solution which would go a long way to alleviate the power deficit in Bangladesh," Hasina said. Such cooperation would allow the two sides to embark on more ambitious projects, she added. The formal opening of the transmission line came a week after India launched a test transmission of electricity. The inauguration began with the supply of 175 MW to Bangladesh's National Grid. Bangladesh will import 250 MW from the Indian government's "unallocated quota" and another 250 MW will be supplied by a private firm. The Bangladesh government said modern technology used in the plant would ensure the protection of the forest and a lot of money would be spent on environmental management to prevent any adverse impact of the project on the Sunderbans. State-run Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB) will purchase electricity from India under a deal

I also wish to thank you, Madam Prime Minister, for strengthening mutually beneficial relations between our two countries. The Framework Agreement on Cooperation for Development that we signed in Dhaka in 2011 provides the template for our cooperation in the future. In the past few years, our cooperation has made rapid progress in many areas. We do recognize that we have to make progress in other areas. We are committed to completing the tasks we had agreed upon in a manner that responds to the mutual aspirations of both our peoples. Madam Prime Minister

The people of India and Bangladesh have always been good neighbours. In recent years, we have shown that we can pursue cooperative endeavours to harness the boundless economic potential of our relationship based on the principles of equality, sovereignty and mutual prosperity. I look forward with confidence to a future of deeper cooperation in energy and all other dimensions of our relationship. And I convey to you, Madam Prime Minister and, through you, to the people of Bangladesh my best wishes for success in all your endeavours for national development and prosperity.

Thank you

signed in February 2012 with NTPC Vidyut Vyapar Nigam Ltd (NVVN), a subsidiary of National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC). This was Bangladesh's first-ever deal for importing electricity from any country. The average power tariff is Taka 6 under the 25-year agreement while BPDB would pay an additional Tk 0.80 per unit as wheeling charge to the power distribution firm. In June last year, BPDB also inked a deal with NTPC to set up Bangladesh's biggest coal-based power plant at Rampal at a cost of USD 1.5 billion. A joint venture company would run the project, and implemented by PDB and NTPC on a 50:50 equity basis. Of the total project cost, 70 per cent was arranged through loan and the remainder equally shared by PDB and NTPC.

157. Statement by Foreign Secretary at the meeting with Editors in Dhaka.

Dhaka, December 4, 2013.

I am delighted to be here, and to have the opportunity to meet the leading Editors of the media in Bangladesh. The Bangladeshi media has a well earned reputation for its fierce independence, diversity of opinion and professionalism. So, as much as I speak to you this evening, I also look forward to hearing from you.

This is my first visit to Bangladesh as Foreign Secretary. I am deeply impressed by the progress Bangladesh has made in all spheres. In many areas, we have a lot to learn from Bangladesh's achievements and development model. Dhaka is a modern and vibrant city, and a reminder of the historical links between our two countries.

I have had a very fruitful set of meetings. This morning I called on His Excellency Foreign Minister AH Mahmud Ali following which I had the opportunity of calling on Her Excellency Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. In the afternoon, I called on the Leader of the Opposition and Chairperson of the BNP Her Excellency Begum Khaleda Zia and Chairperson of the Jatiya Party General Ershad. I am scheduled to meet my counterpart, Foreign Secretary M. Shahidul Haque, later this evening.

I conveyed to the Prime Minister the high importance which India attaches to having good relations with Bangladesh and to peace and stability in Bangladesh. Both these are essential elements for ensuring the larger good of our region. This is a region which is connected by history, culture and civilisational ties. We share not just common borders but common challenges. The welfare, prosperity and security of our people are organically linked.

We therefore cannot remain indifferent to or unaffected by developments in each other's countries. India's consistent view has been that a strong, stable, independent and well developed Bangladesh is in the interests not only of the people of Bangladesh but also in the interests of the people of the region.

We proceed with our relations with Bangladesh on the principles of mutual respect, mutual benefit, non-interference and respect for each other's sovereignty. Based on this, we have made concrete progress in our relations in the last few years. This includes cooperation in the areas of political understanding, security, trade and economic relations, economic development, energy and people to people exchanges. Substantial progress has been made in the following areas:

- Energy (500 MW intergrid connectivity and commencement of work on a 1320 MW power plant in Rampal);
- Sub-regional cooperation in power and water and trade and connectivity;
- Development assistance (US$ 800 million credit line well on its way to implementation and US$ 200 million untied grants-in-aid)
- Trade (Unilateral zero duty quota free access to all Bangladeshi products except 25 tariff lines that has led to significant increases in Bangladesh's exports to India, particularly in garments);
- Border Haats;
- Cultural cooperation and people-to-people exchanges;
- Security (for which we are most grateful to Bangladesh);
- Border Management; and
- Border infrastructure (ICP at Akhaura-Agartala)

We want to build upon these successes.

My meetings with the Leader of Opposition and Chairperson of the Jatiya Party were part of our ongoing dialogue with major political parties in Bangladesh. The opposition has an important role to play in any democracy, and Bangladesh is no different. We want our relations with Bangladesh to be broad based and inclusive. The test of our success is when the partnership between our two countries benefits all sections of society and translates into results on the ground, making it is durable and sustainable over the long term.

This is an important time for Bangladesh. Elections are an intrinsic part of the democratic process. The people of Bangladesh, like anywhere in the world, deserve the right to choose their elected representatives freely and fairly. Political parties are the pillars of democracy. As a fellow democracy, India hopes that the forthcoming elections will strengthen democratic institutions, practices and processes in Bangladesh. We hope that the forthcoming elections will respond to the aspirations of the people of Bangladesh and that they will be free, fair, impartial and peaceful and find wide acceptability.

Democracy also means the ability to resolve differences through dialogue and peaceful means, without recourse to violence. We are concerned by the ongoing violence and we hope that wisdom and maturity will prevail. Experience has shown that violence impacts most on the vulnerable sections of society. This is in no one's interest.

In conclusion, let me say we have deep respect for the wisdom and achievements of the people of Bangladesh. Theirs has been a history of sacrifice, courage and pride. We wish Bangladesh well at this time. India will remain an honest and enduring partner in your nation building efforts.

I thank you. I would now be happy to listen to your views.

158. Interaction of Foreign Secretary with Bangladesh Media in Dhaka.

Dhaka, December 5, 2013.

Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh (Shri Pankaj Saran): Good evening ladies and gentlemen and dear friends. Firstly our apologies to keep you waiting this evening. It was because we were running behind schedule in the meetings in the afternoon. So, I apologise for keeping you waiting. I also thank you very much for coming here this evening to meet with the Foreign Secretary.

Madam, we are very honoured to have you here, and thank you for agreeing to meet some of the Editors in Bangladesh who represent a diversity of opinion in Bangladesh. They are senior columnists, editors, writers and opinion makers. With your permission, I would quickly ask them to briefly introduce themselves.

Thereafter I would request the Foreign Secretary to make a few opening remarks, and thereafter we could enter into a discussion, a question-answer session. Please note that this is not exactly a press conference but it is an opportunity for you to interact with the Foreign Secretary. Since we have a limitation of time, we will be very conservative with the number of questions that we take.

(Introduction of Bangladeshi media representatives)

High Commissioner: Madam Foreign Secretary, could I please request you to make your opening remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Thank you, High Commissioner.

Let me start by saying how I delighted I am to be here and to have the opportunity to meet the leading Editors of the media in Bangladesh. The Bangladeshi media has a well-earned reputation for its fierce independence, diversity of opinion and professionalism. So, as much as I am here to speak to you this evening, I also look forward to hearing from you.

This includes cooperation in the areas of political understanding, security, trade and economic relations, economic development, energy and people-to-people exchanges.

Substantial progress has been made in the following areas:

1. In energy where I am sure you all know about the 500 MW intergrid connectivity and the commencement of work on the 1320 MW power plant in Rampal.
2. Sub-regional cooperation in power and water and trade and connectivity.
3. Development assistance.
4. Trade - Unilateral zero-duty quota-free access to all Bangladeshi products except 25 tariff lines that has led to significant increases in Bangladesh's exports to India, particularly in garments.
5. Border Haats.
6. Cultural cooperation and people-to-people exchanges.
7. Security, for which we are most grateful to Bangladesh.
8. Border Management.
9. Border infrastructure.

We want to build even further on these successes.

My meetings with the Leader of the Opposition and Chairperson of the Jatiya Party were part of our ongoing dialogue with major political parties in Bangladesh. The opposition has an important role to play in any democracy, and Bangladesh is no different. We want our relations with Bangladesh to be broad based and inclusive. I thank you. I would now be happy to listen to you.

Q: Hon. Foreign Secretary, you have met the President, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and General Ershad. What message have you extended with regard to upcoming election and about participatory or inclusive election without intimidation and violence?

Foreign Secretary: As I have already mentioned, in my meetings I have stressed on the importance that India attaches to a stable, peaceful and prosperous Bangladesh, and to the successful completion of the democratic processes.

Q: You have also said that the differences can be resolved through dialogue. Did you see any intention among the leaders that they would engage in a productive dialogue to sort out the present political imbroglio?

Foreign Secretary: This is an ongoing process. This is an ongoing process for the leaders themselves to resolve and to decide.

Q: Did you find any hopeful sign that they will be engaged in a dialogue?

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that I do not want to comment on something that is up to the leaders of Bangladesh to decide for themselves. I do not want to prejudge, I do not want to indicate something right now. You will see as time goes by as to what the leaders decide to do.

Q: Excellency, ...(Inaudible)... you need to know your neighbour. But given the political scenario of Bangladesh ...(Inaudible)... may I just ask you as to whether during the meeting with our leaders like the hon. Prime Minister, hon. Leader of Opposition, did you deliver any special message ...(Inaudible)...?

Foreign Secretary: The message that I delivered is contained in my opening statement. It is a message of support, it is a message of solidarity, of India with Bangladesh. I do not wish to go into further details. I am sure you will understand.

Q: Madam, this is your first visit and you are here at a time when Bangladesh is experiencing a political turmoil and a ...(Inaudible)... What perception are you taking back with you about the forthcoming election? Do you perceive any sort of ...(Inaudible)... participation in the election?

Foreign Secretary: The perception I take back is of a very vibrant democracy. Democratic processes, they have their twists they have their turns, and it is no neat set of linear solutions. So, this is what you would find in any democratic process and this is what I see happening in Bangladesh.

Q: The hon. High Commissioner in his introductory remarks to the programme spoke about ...(Inaudible)... the tight time schedule and said that we will get a little time for a few questions. But I find that you are actually very conservative about things because you are not elaborating almost anything. You are giving very short, very cryptic answers. You did not say so far one word ...(Inaudible)...whether we are going forward towards an inclusive election where major parties are ...(Inaudible)...What did you feel? And also Indian interest, we have heard from Indian leaders that India believes in a relationship with both Opposition and the party in position. This time we do not hear that thing. Is this just because of shortage of time or do you really not want to mention both the parties?

Foreign Secretary: You have seen from my schedule of meetings that I have met the leaders of all the three major political parties. That in itself will give you an indication as to what India's approach is. What is India's interest? India's interest is in supporting the democratic process in Bangladesh. India's interest is in a stable and prosperous Bangladesh. These are the broad parameters of what our interest is. And further than this, I do not want to go into details.

Q: Madam, you have seen the present ...(Inaudible)... situation in Bangladesh is really conducive for ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: It is a bit of a chicken and egg situation. Unless you have elections, how do you build the traditions of a democratic process? You have to have the elections in order to build the institutions of democracy.

Q: There should be an inclusive election to support that.

Foreign Secretary: Yes. Any election that is held should have the participation of the maximum number of parties.

Q: Or the major opposition. That is the recognised definition in the United Nations. An election is inclusive when the major opposition participates in it.

Foreign Secretary: Do not try and pin me down to UN definitions or Oxford definitions or Websters' definitions. You have democracies and democracies. There are different kinds of democracies in different countries of the world. There are democracies that have to adapt themselves to local conditions, to local situations. No democracy is exactly like the other. So, what the quality of the democracy in Bangladesh is for the people of Bangladesh to decide.

Q: Do you have any special effort ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: We would like to see an election where, as I said, as many parties as possible participate; and we would like to see an election where the people have a chance to exercise their franchise freely and fairly; and we would like to see an election result that is accepted by the people. It is for the people of Bangladesh to decide.

Q: Hon. Foreign Secretary, the line between politics and diplomacy is very thin. From that perspective, you must be realising the importance that is being attached to your visit here, happening at a time in the foreground of the UN Under Secretary-General coming to Dhaka and set against the backdrop of EU and other representatives of European countries sort of calling for participatory, free and fair election, etc. They emphasise mostly on a complete renunciation of violence. Did you see any hint that there will be a remission in the ...(Inaudible)...?

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that I am not here on a mission of mediation. This is not a task that India will appropriate for itself. I have taken over as Foreign Secretary just about four months ago and it is my mission to visit all the neighbouring countries, and Bangladesh is one of our most important neighbours. It is to come here to convey a message of solidarity and goodwill and our support to the democratic process. And in this democratic process you mentioned about violence. I think that all right-thinking people will appreciate the fact that violence has no part in a democratic process. You cannot use violent means to achieve your ends.

And as regards people who are coming here, ultimately I think that it is for each country to find its own path. Just as we in India do what we think is right for us, I am sure that you in Bangladesh will listen to everybody and then go ahead and do what you think is right for your country and right by your people. This is the privilege of every country.

Q: Did you not see some points of fluctuation on either side? Or did you sense any reconciliatory mood on either side a little bit?

Foreign Secretary: I must compliment you on your efforts to draw me out. But I must with all respect say that what I discussed with your leaders is a matter between your leaders and us, and I would not like to share details of it with the media. You will understand my position on this. And of course we favour dialogue between all the sides, but let us not get into the details.

Q: Madam, I would like to ask about something else, say the Land Boundary Agreement. Did you bring any goodwill for us about the agreement with Bangladesh?

Foreign Secretary: There is a lot of goodwill for Bangladesh. And you know that we have tried to introduce the Land Boundary Agreement Bill in Parliament in the past two sessions. So, let us see how it goes in the upcoming session.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: I think that your dates have been notified by the Election Commission. Is it?

Q: Earlier in November we saw a report in newspapers that President Obama asked his Administration to hold consultations with Indian officials on the Bangladesh issue. What kind of consultations did you have with the United States? The High Commissioner also indicated that they were holding discussions with the Administration of the United States about the crisis in Bangladesh. Any development in this regard?

Hon. Prime Minister also indicated that there will be other contacts with other countries. ...(Inaudible)... So, we would like to know how India feels. ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: As you know, India has many strategic partners, and as part of our ongoing dialogue process with our strategic partners, we discuss issues of mutual interest. The eyes of the world are on Bangladesh at this point of time. Your elections are due. And this is one of the areas that we do discuss with our strategic partners, with the United States, with the European Union, with Germany, with the United Kingdom. So, we discuss it, we discuss what developments are, and all of us are interested in peace and stability in Bangladesh. I do not want to go into further details beyond that.

Q: We saw a report that you brokered a deal in Nepal ...(Inaudible)... to hold the elections. Did you ...(Inaudible)... in Bangladesh? There was a media report.

Foreign Secretary: You are the media, you will know. But I do not broker any deals, I do not mediate. That was a goodwill visit to Nepal, exactly as this is a goodwill visit to Bangladesh. And as I said, I am a very new Foreign Secretary, I have just taken over four months ago. So, I went to meet the Government, to meet the leaders, the political leaders, to introduce myself, and to say that we look forward to working together. That was it. Nothing more than that.

Q: Madam, India is the largest democracy in the world. From your democratic experience do you see that holding elections under a caretaker government is a very model process to run a democracy?

Foreign Secretary: Like I said, every country has its own democratic process and its own democratic model. In India, like in Bangladesh, there is an Election Commission. Once the elections are declared, the Election Commission makes sure that all the rules of the elections are followed by all the parties, and that includes the government. So, there is really no question of the government giving way to a caretaker government in India. I am sure you know that, and it has worked pretty well for us.

High Commissioner: Maybe we can take the last two, three questions because the Foreign Secretary has a meeting in a short while.

Q: Just a supplementary to that question. I know that India does not ... (Inaudible)... caretaker government and in Bangladesh and in Nepal and in Pakistan also there is a model of the caretaker government. Just from your mature democratic position, do you see any role of a caretaker government to hold election, to run the democratic process?

Foreign Secretary: From my mature democratic point of view I feel that it is for each democracy to determine its own rules of democratic processes. I do not think there is one-size-fits-all. I think each country has to develop its own model based on free and fair elections, the right of every person to vote in an atmosphere free of violence and intimidation.

Q: So, you would appreciate that Bangladeshi people would ... (Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: That is for the Bangladeshi people to decide.

Q: The United Nations representative is coming to Bangladesh. Ban Ki-moon, Secretary-General, has telephoned public leaders in Bangladesh.

You are very much aware of this move. Do you feel that the UN move is backed by India also?

Foreign Secretary: What the United Nations envoy will say or do is something that we will know when he comes over here. So, I cannot back something that has not happened as yet. I think we are all trying to work towards a process whereby you have elections taking place in Bangladesh, and then people have a chance to fulfil their democratic aspirations. I think we will leave it at that.

High Commissioner: Thank you. I think with this we would like to end. Once again, everyone, thank you so much. I know this is a busy time and all of you have taken time out from your offices to come here and be present here today and listen to the Foreign Secretary. On behalf of the High Commission I want to thank you and I hope that we will continue our engagement with all of you on behalf of the High Commission in the period ahead. What we will do is to put the Foreign Secretary's remarks on website so that you can have a copy of that electronically.

Thank you

BHUTAN

159. Interview of Foreign Secretary Ranjan Mathai to Bhutanese Daily Kuensel.

New Delhi, February 3, 2013.

(During His Majesty's recent state visit to India, Kuensel's Rinzin Wangchuk seized a moment to speak with foreign secretary of Indian external affairs, Ranjan Mathai on Indo-Bhutan relationship and issues concerning the two nations.)

Kuensel: How do you see India's role in Bhutan's future?

Mathai: India's role in Bhutan's future is really for people of Bhutan to decide.

But what we are encouraged about is that we have had a continuous relation with Bhutan for decades since the mid 1960s when the plan process of the development of Bhutan started with His Majesty the Third King, His Majesty the fourth King and His Majesty himself.

This process of planned development has continued and India has been able to play its part in assisting this plan process. We are also very happy that with the elected government, we have been able to continue the same development assistance.

So what is happening is, we are in fact indispensable to each other because we have common interests, we are in a very important part of Asia, and our economic development, energy security, security perceptions are all tied together. So we feel that we are two countries, which are very closely bound by geography, history and culture.

Kuensel: As Bhutan's biggest development partner, what are the future areas of cooperation between the two countries?

Mathai: India's role in the development plans of Bhutan has been increasing in total numbers but decreasing as a percentage of the total plan because Bhutan's own development and resources are now contributing to the plan process. That is the way we want to do it.

The second thing is, we have built a lot of emphasis on capacity building and I think this is where a lot of focus is going to be in future. There is a very large number of Bhutanese students, who come to India for training and we are assisting in establishing new educational institutions and new skills development centres within Bhutan.

Of course, hydropower and its development remains another strong pillar of our relationship that will also continue. But if we look at some of the new areas, which have been developed, like IT skills, medical skills, business development, these are the future areas where you will see a lot of support coming from India for development in Bhutan.

Kuensel: Are there plans to allow free access and movement of Bhutan's products and open trade routes that were not included in the transit agreement?

Mathai: Restrictions arise because there are some areas in our common border region and region from there to the ports and others, and there are some security restrictions from our side, which apply even to our own people.

But we will certainly be happy to look at new possibilities, new routes so that Bhutan has many more options available to it. We have also ways and means to discuss in the context of regional cooperation between India, Bangladesh and Bhutan on new routes, new possibilities of trade and development of common development objectives.

Kuensel: Because of restriction on third country trade, orange exporters in Kalikhola (Lhamoizingkha) had to transport their products to Jaigoan to declare at the customs instead of taking directly to Bangladesh...

Mathai: I will ask our ambassador in Bhutan to look into this subject to see what is the practical solution for this kind of problems.

Kuensel: Now Bhutan has also started domestic air service, would India support Bhutan's move to manage its own air space?

Mathai: Yes, we would very much support it. But there are issues relating to which air space you are referring to. If it is the same air space, which all civil aviation is using, there should not be a problem. When it comes to Gelephu domestic air service, I am not aware of this specific point you are mentioning but I'm sure we can find some practical solution to ensure that air services are not hindered by any of our rules and regulations.

Kuensel: Bhutan has become a strategic location for both India and China. What are India's concerns on Bhutan-China relation?

Mathai: I don't know if it would be right for me to discuss what is Bhutan's relationship with china because these are other countries.

I will put it this way, if you look at the traditional, historical roots of trade and communication then in fact, India is and has been closest partner and there is no doubt about that. Also we have strong cultural and religious links.

The issue of how Bhutan builds its relationship with other countries or rest of the world is a matter for Bhutanese people to decide. It is not right for India to come and try and tell you how it could be done.

Kuensel: Did the way in which Indian media reported on Bhutanese Prime Minister meeting the Chinese Premier in Brazil last year reflect the Indian government's sentiment?

Mathai: The media are always writing very interesting stories and may be you should ask them.

As far as we are concerned, it is the Bhutanese people's choice. Bhutanese people's direction is something we had always respected. What we are very conscious of was that we have a very strong traditional relationship and we would like to preserve it.

160. Message of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Bhutan PDP leaders on the success of their party in the Bhutan's general elections.

New Delhi, July 14, 2013.

"It gives me great pleasure to felicitate Your Excellency on the success of the people's Democratic Party, as well as your own election to the National Assembly in the historic second democratic election in Bhutan.

I would like to avail of this opportunity to assure you of the steadfast and unflinching support of India and its citizens for the steady steps that Bhutan is taking to further strengthen democratic processes and institutions. India is a privileged partner of Bhutan and it's people in their socio-economic progress and development. Our bilateral ties are anchored in a strong foundation of trust, mutual confidence and understanding. I wish to reiterate India's undiminished commitment to Bhutan in preserving these unique and special traditional ties. India is, and will remain, sensitive to Bhutan and its interests.

I would also like to emphasize that India- Bhutan relations, which are indeed exemplary, have been carefully nurtured and fostered over many decades with the guidance and vision of Their Majesties the Druk Gyalpos of Bhutan and the constructive cooperation of our governments. Our endeavour would be to strengthen these ties further. We look forward to working with you and your colleague to further enhance our cooperation for the benefit of the people of both our countries. I have therefore already instructed officials of my Government to prepare for the discussions on our plan assistance to Bhutan.

I also look forward to an early opportunity of welcoming you in India.

Please accept, Your Excellency, my very best wishes and the assurances of my highest consideration."

161. Extract relevant to Bhutan from the Media briefing by Official Spokesperson.

New Delhi, July 15, 2013.

Q: Sir, there is a regime change in Bhutan. Do you think that there is something going from Indian side to Bhutan now?

Official Spokesperson: I do not know whether the word that you use is the appropriate word for consolidation of democracy in a nascent or young democracy. As far as we see it, this is consolidation of democracy in Bhutan as this was the second democratic election there and, therefore, we welcome that.

As you are aware, India and Bhutan have special and unique relations and, therefore, our Prime Minister has yesterday written to the leader of the party which won a majority in the Bhutanese elections. My understanding is that there are another eight days which are given for any of the candidates to lodge any complaints or any other petitions against these results following which a government will be in place in Bhutan. And we expect to take the matter up because we have, as you are aware, extremely close relationship. The Prime Minister in fact has invited the leader of the majority party to visit India. But even otherwise we expect intensive consultations with Bhutan as soon as the government is in office there.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... the subsidy component that was taken away from Bhutan. So, can we see any forward movement on that?

Official Spokesperson: I am grateful that you clarified your question. I think we need to understand that the issue of subsidy relates to the delivery mechanisms of India's development partnership with Bhutan. It has no political or other implications or intentions. That said, we will certainly engage with Bhutan on this. And we have previously said that it is not the intention of India to in any way adversely impact on the poor in Bhutan or on people in Bhutan in any manner. That is the broad parameters under which we work. We look forward to engaging on this matter as soon as possible. I hope that clarifies the issue.

162. Information supplied to the Lok Sabha on Bilateral Relations with Bhutan in answer to a question.

New Delhi, August 7, 2013.

India has supported the steady steps that Bhutan has taken to further strengthen its democratic processes and institutions. India is committed to preserve its unique and special traditional ties with Bhutan and will continue to do so.

Following the successful conduct of elections in July 2013, a delegation of the National Council (Upper House) of Bhutan visited India from July 24-August 1, 2013. Government of India is in regular contact with the Bhutanese authorities. High level exchanges, as well as discussions on our plan assistance to Bhutan are being scheduled.

As a committed developmental partner in the socio-economic progress of Bhutan, Government of India is providing subsidy on petroleum products to Bhutan.

163. Joint Press Statement on the Visit of Prime Minister of Bhutan to India.

New Delhi, August 31, 2013.

1. The Prime Minister of Bhutan, His Excellency Lyonchhen Tshering Tobgay is on an official visit to India from August 30 to September 4, 2013. He is accompanied by Aum Tashi Doma, His Excellency Lyonpo Rinzin Dorje, Foreign Minister and senior officials from the Royal Government of Bhutan. This is the first overseas visit by Prime Minister Tobgay after being elected Prime Minister, following the second democratic elections in Bhutan in July 2013. The visit is in conformity with the tradition of regular exchange of visits at the highest levels between India and Bhutan, and adds momentum to our time-tested and enduring relations.

2. During his visit, H.E. Lyonchhen Tshering Tobgay met with the President, Vice President, and the Prime Minister. His programme also includes meetings with the Chairperson UPA, Finance Minister, Home Minister, External Affairs Minister, Minister of State for Power and Leader of the Opposition in Lok Sabha, besides a joint business meeting with ASSOCHAM, FICCI and CII. In his talks with the Prime Minister of India, all areas of mutual interest and cooperation were covered. The meetings were held in a warm and friendly atmosphere, reflecting the spirit of mutual confidence, cooperation and understanding that characterize the unique and special nature of relations between the two countries.
3. The main outcomes of the discussions were:
 - I. Government of India reiterated its commitment to Bhutan's socio-economic development. The two countries agreed to work together to further strengthen bilateral relations. Prime Minister Tshering Tobgay thanked India for the support extended for Bhutan's development and expressed keenness to strengthen people-to-people links.
 - II. Government of India's Assistance Package for Bhutan's 11th Five Year Plan for the period July 1, 2013 to June 30, 2018, was agreed upon. At Bhutan's request, India will contribute Rs 4500 Crores towards Bhutan's 11th Plan, as well as Rs. 500 Crores towards an Economic Stimulus Package.
 - III. The importance of continued cooperation in developing hydroelectric projects in Bhutan was also agreed upon. India reiterated its commitment to install an additional 10,000 MW of generating capacity. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the progress in the three ongoing projects.

- IV. India expressed its satisfaction at being a privileged partner of Bhutan in its socio-economic development, and reassured the Bhutanese Prime Minister of its commitment to capacity building in Bhutan.
- V. The two sides reaffirmed the trust and confidence between the two countries and their mutual security interests. They agreed to continue their close coordination and cooperation with each other on issues relating to their national interest.

Prime Minister Tshering Tobgay will be visiting Hyderabad, where he will call on the Governor of Andhra Pradesh, visit an IT Park and Green Business Centre.

The visit of the Prime Minister of Bhutan to India will further strengthen the close bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

MALDIVES

164. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on cooperation in Defence between India and Maldives.

New Delhi, April 15, 2013.

The Minister of Defence and National Security of the Republic of Maldives, Mr. Mohamed Nazim had a one hour long meeting with the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony at South Block on Monday, 15 April, 2013, followed by a meeting with the Chairman Chiefs of Staff Committee and CAS and the Vice Chiefs of Army and Navy and DG, Coast Guard. The Maldivian Minister is on a 4 day official visit to India during which he would be visiting military establishments in various parts of the country.

During the meeting with Shri Antony on 15 April, the Maldivian Minister was accompanied by the High Commissioner of Maldives in India and other senior officers of the Maldivian National Defence Forces. On the Indian side, Defence Secretary, DGAFMS , the Indian High Commissioner in Male and senior officers of the Armed Forces and from the Ministry of Defence and External Affairs were present. The official meeting was preceded by the Maldivian Defence Minister's visit and laying of a wreath at the Amar Jawan Jyoti and a ceremonial tri-Service Guard of Honour at South Block.

During the meeting, both sides noted that defence cooperation between India and Maldives has been growing over the years, to the mutual benefit of both sides. As close neighbours sharing common security concerns, there is scope to further develop the relationship in mutually agreed areas. Shri Antony conveyed that India stands committed to enhance the ongoing defence and security partnership with Maldives. Ongoing exchanges between the Armed Forces of both sides in areas of training, exercises and strengthening of infrastructure and capabilities were reviewed by both Ministers. It was decided to take measures to further enhance such exchanges. Both sides also agreed that there is a need for India and Maldives to continue to work together to tackle security concerns, in the interests of peace and stability in the region.

165. Press Release on the visit of External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid to Nepal and Fact Sheet on Nepal.

New Delhi, July 9, 2013.

India's External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, visited Nepal on 9th July 2013 at the invitation of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nepal, Hon'ble Mr. Madhav Prasad Ghimire. Both the Ministers held official talks covering all aspects of bilateral relations and issues of mutual interests. The talks were held in an atmosphere of utmost cordiality and warmth.

During his visit, the Minister of External Affairs of India called on Rt. Hon. Dr. Ram Baran Yadav, President of Nepal and Rt. Hon. Mr. Khil Raj Regmi, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Nepal.

External Affairs Minister of India reiterated the fact that, as a close friend, India remains strongly committed to the success of Nepal's peace process and institutionalisation of democracy in Nepal in a constitutional and multi-party framework. India is supportive of the successful conduct of free and fair election for the Constituent Assembly-cum-Parliament on 19th November 2013.

The visit afforded both Ministers the opportunity to review the current progress of India-Nepal partnership, some of the highlights of which are as follows:

Logistics for Constituent Assembly-cum-Parliamentary Election

Government of India has agreed to provide all the logistical support for the security agencies and Election Commission of Nepal as requested by the Government of Nepal. This comprises 764 different types of vehicles costing approximately NRs 800 million. The vehicles will be delivered to the Government of Nepal by October 2013. The two sides exchanged Letters to this effect.

Water resources

The Ministers reviewed the joint efforts against flood-related disasters, including the repair and maintenance works at major border rivers, especially Kosi and Gandak. Besides activating all the existing bilateral consultative mechanisms and maintaining the embankments of Kosi and Gandak under the respective bilateral agreements, India has provided grant assistance of NRS 2.543 billion during the past three years for protection works on the Kamala, Lalbakya, Khando and Bagmati rivers. For the current year, an amount of NRS 256.94 million has been released for this purpose, and a further amount of NRs 374.47 million will be made available later in the year. In addition, India has committed grant assistance of NRS 181.37 million under the bilateral Small Development Projects for flood protection works along Trijuga, Lkahndehi, Sunsari, Kankai, and Kaligandaki rivers and NRs 95.2 million along Gagan river.

Augmenting electricity supply

To augment electricity supply from India to Nepal, particularly during the lean season, India has already implemented short-term grid connectivity projects (grant assistance of NRs 124.6 million), resulting in Nepal importing an additional 80 MWs of electricity through 14 different upgraded exchange points in the last lean season. A further medium-term grid upgradation project (amounting to grant assistance of NRs 464 million) has been tendered. This will enable a further drawing of between 120 – 175 MWs of electricity from India, whenever required. To supplement financing of the long-term cross-border grid connectivity from Muzaffarpur to Dhalkebar, India's Eximbank is contributing U.S. $13.2 million.

Exim Bank Line of Credit

Specific approvals have been obtained last month for Phase II of the Rahughat Hydroelectric Project, 220 KV Kosi Corridor Transmission Line Project, 132 KV Solu Corridor Transmission Live Project, and the 132 KV Modi Leknath Transmission Line Project, for utilising $175 million or NRs 15.8 billion out of the existing $250 million Exim bank's Line of Credit for Nepal. Approvals for utilisation of the balance amount, for the construction of roads within Nepal, are in the pipeline.

Trade and economic cooperation

India accounts for nearly two-thirds of Nepal's foreign trade, 70% of Nepal's exports, and almost half of its foreign direct investments. The Ministers felt the need to continue consultations on measures to promote trade bilaterally and with third countries to optimize opportunities for Nepal's economic growth, including on finalising legal and administrative arrangements for additional transit routes, revision of the Rail Services Agreement to enable the implementation of the long-standing Nepalese request for the movement of open box wagons and transit of bulk cargo movement on flat wagons, finalisation of the Motor Vehicles Agreement, energy banking and power trading, currency conversion facilitation, new routes for increased air-connectivity, and strengthening Nepal's capacity for certification for food and agriculture products exports by establishing testing and lab facilities along the India-Nepal border.

Defence cooperation

India-Nepal defence ties include military educational exchanges, joint exercises, and supplies of military stores and equipment, as required by Nepal. Following the successful completion of integration of former Maoists combatants into the Nepal Army (NA) and the decision of the Government of Nepal to resume imports of stores and equipment for NA, these materials, identified in the Bilateral Consultative Group on Security Issues, will be supplied to Nepal over the coming months (the immediate supplies sought are valued at NRs 1.76 billion)

Development partnership

The Ministers reviewed progress of the bilateral development partnership programme, which includes large, cross-border connectivity and infrastructure projects, as well as community and grass-roots oriented Small Development Projects (SDPs) in the key areas of education, health and rural infrastructure. The infrastructure projects include construction of four Integrated Check Posts (ICPs) for trade promotion and facilitation, 1450 kms of Terai Roads, and cross-border rail links at five locations. In the first phase, works have been taken up in two of the four ICPs (grant assistance of NRs 4.32 billion for the segment falling in Nepal), six segments of Terai Roads Project (totalling 605 kms entailing grant assistance of NRs 11 billion) and two of the five rail connections (grant assistance of NRs 10.4 billion). Under SDPs, of the 425 projects undertaken, 218 have been completed. The current year's outlay for these development projects is NRs 6.08 billion.

India partners Nepal in capacity building and human resource development. This year, the number of scholarships offered to Nepalese students has nearly doubled to 3,000. The number of training programmes under India Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) & Colombo Plan has also gone up to 230 from 100 last year.

166. Press statement on the situation in Maldives.

New Delhi, February 13, 2013.

Following the arrest warrant issued against him by the Hulhumale Magistrate Court, the former Maldivian President Mohamed Nasheed, who is a candidate for the Presidential elections in Maldives scheduled for September 2013, is in the Indian High Commission and has sought India's assistance. We are in touch with the relevant Maldivian authorities to resolve the situation.

As a close and friendly neighbour, India has expressed concern over the ongoing political instability in Maldives and called upon the Government and all political parties to adhere strictly to democratic principles and the rule of law, thereby paving the way for free, fair, credible and inclusive elections. Now that the President of the Election Commission of Maldives has announced that Presidential elections would be held on 7 September 2013, it is necessary that the Presidential nominees of recognized political parties be free to participate in the elections without any hindrance. Prevention of participation by political leaders in the contest would call into question the integrity of the electoral process, thereby perpetuating the current political instability in Maldives. This is not in the interest of Maldives or the region. India would call upon the Government and all political parties in Maldives to avoid any actions that would vitiate the political atmosphere in the Maldives.

167. External Affairs Minister's telephonic discussion with the Foreign Minister of Maldives.

New Delhi, February 15, 2013.

In response to a question, the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs said:

“The Minister of External Affairs Mr. Salman Khurshid had a telephonic discussion with the Foreign Minister of Maldives yesterday. It was recalled that India has traditional and age old ties of friendship and cooperation with Maldives. India has been working with the Government and other relevant authorities in Maldives to strengthen the democratic framework in that country.

As part of its commitment to multi-party democracy, India has broad based contacts with all political parties and democratic institutions in Maldives without interfering in the internal affairs of that country.

India has also stressed in the past that it would like to see free, fair, credible and inclusive elections leading up to a stable, peaceful and prosperous Maldives. India would be happy to work with the Government and all political parties in the facilitation of this objective.

The Maldives Foreign Minister assured the External Affairs Minister that the Maldivian Government would do its utmost to prevent any precipitate act that adversely affects the atmosphere for a free and fair democratic process and rule of law.”

168. Official Spokesperson’s response on former President Nasheed leaving the Indian High Commission in Male.

New Delhi, February 23, 2013.

In response to a question, the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs stated the following:

“Mr. Mohamed Nasheed, former President of Maldives, had left the premises of the High Commission of India, Male at 1615 hrs (IST) today. It will be recalled that the former President had entered the Indian Mission in Male on 13 February 2013 on his own volition and had similarly decided to leave on his own. It is hoped that with this development the former President will again resume his social and political life. The visiting Indian delegation led by Shri Harsh Vardhan Shringla, Joint Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs and the High Commissioner of India to Maldives had held a series of meeting with the officials of the Government of Maldives and other stake holders in this context. The Government of India wishes to thank all those who have cooperated in these efforts.

India has been working closely with the Government and other relevant stakeholders in Maldives to strengthen the democratic framework of the country. India has maintained broad based contacts with all political parties and democratic institutions in Maldives without interfering in its internal affairs. The Government of India urges all parties to maintain peace and calm and hopes to continue its positive engagement in the spirit of the close and friendly relations between the two countries.

The Minister of External Affairs Shri Salman Khurshid has conveyed to his Maldivian counterpart that India has traditional and age old ties of friendship and cooperation with Maldives. India would be happy to support all efforts to create favourable conditions for free, fair, credible and inclusive Presidential elections in September 2013 that can contribute to durable peace, stability and prosperity in Maldives and the region.”

169. Response of Official Spokesperson to the arrest of the former President of Maldives.

New Delhi, March 5, 2013.

In response to a query on the arrest of the former President of Maldives, the Official Spokesperson said:

“We have received information that former President Nasheed was taken into (Police) custody following an order issued by the Hulhumale Magistrate Court to produce him at 1600 hrs on March 6, 2013;

India expects due process and the Rule of Law would be followed; We would urge all concerned to exercise caution and restraint and not to resort to any violence or extra-constitutional means and steps which would weaken the democratic system;

We have been informed that former President Nasheed's lawyers and family are going to meet him now as allowed by the authorities;

We are monitoring the situation closely.”

170. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question in connection with the Presidential Elections in Maldives.

New Delhi, August 30, 2013.

“India welcomes the holding of Presidential elections in the Maldives on 7 September 2013. We attach importance to the holding of free, fair and credible elections in a peaceful environment followed by a smooth transition.

India has been engaged with all Presidential candidates and political leaders in Maldives in its efforts to facilitate a smooth political process leading up to Presidential elections. Several Maldivian political leaders have visited India including President Dr. Mohamed Waheed in May 2012; former President Mr. Mohamed Nasheed in August 2013; former President Mr. Maumoon Abdul Gayoom in June 2013; and Mr. Abdulla Yameen in August 2013. In addition, India had also received in 2013, delegations led by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Maldives Mr. Ahmed Faiz Hussain in June; Speaker of People's Majlis Mr. Abdulla Shahid in May; and Defence Minister Mr. Mohamed Nazim in April.

India is committed to strengthening the institutions of democracy in the Maldives. In this context, the Election Commission of India is working closely with the Elections Commission of Maldives to further strengthen its capacity. India is also arranging for the training of Maldivian Judges in India.

In response to an invitation from the Elections Commission of Maldives, the Government of India proposes to send a high-level team of observers for the Presidential elections in Maldives consisting of former Chief Election Commissioners of India, Mr. J.M. Lyngdoh, Mr. B.B. Tandon and Mr. N. Gopala Swami, and former High Commissioner of India to Maldives, Mr. S.M. Gavai. The observers are scheduled to reach Male on 1st September 2013 and would undertake visits to a number of polling stations in different islands.

India attaches the highest importance to its relations with Maldives, a close and friendly neighbour, and desires to see a peaceful, stable and prosperous Maldives.

171. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question on Presidential Elections in Maldives.

New Delhi, September 9, 2013.

“We congratulate the people of Maldives for the peaceful conclusion of the first round of Presidential elections held on September 7, 2013. The exceptionally high turnout of 88.44% was indicative of the high commitment attached by the people of Maldives towards a consolidation of democracy in the country.

The high-level delegation of Indian Observers had noted that polling was “orderly and unblemished by any notable incident”. The six teams of Indian Observers covered 158 polling booths (33.6% of total booths) across the country. They appreciated the competence, industry and cheerfulness of the election staff; mutual trust between the candidates’ representatives and counting personnel; and above all the discipline, patience and dignity of the Maldivian voters.

India encourages the people and all concerned in Maldives to ensure an environment conducive to a peaceful and transparent second round of Presidential elections on September 28, 2013.

India reiterates its commitment to strengthening the institutions of democracy in the Maldives and expresses the conviction that the candidates would accept the verdict of the people and work together for a peaceful transition.”

* The Spokesperson was referring to the recently concluded first round of Presidential elections in Maldives. The ousted President Nasheed though secured a high percentage of votes yet fell short of 50 percent of the electorate, thus necessitating a second round of voting between the two candidates who secured the highest number of votes.

172. Official Spokesperson's response to media queries regarding the recent developments related to the Presidential elections in Maldives.

September 18, 2013.

In response to media queries regarding the recent developments related to the Presidential elections in Maldives, the official spokesperson said:

“We have seen reports on developments in the aftermath of the first round of the Presidential elections in Maldives, held on September 7, 2013. We once again commend the people and Government of Maldives for successfully conducting the first round of Presidential elections in a peaceful and organised manner.

The exceptionally high turnout of voters as well as smooth conduct of elections in an orderly fashion unblemished by any notable incident demonstrated the high commitment reposed by the people of Maldives in democratic process and in consolidation of democracy in the country. The high-level delegation of Indian Observers as well as international observers from the UN and Commonwealth have all noted that polling was fair, transparent and orderly.

It is important that all sides respect the verdict and aspirations of the people of Maldives. We hope that the second round of Presidential elections will be held as scheduled on September 28, 2013 in a similar transparent, organised and peaceful manner.

As a long-standing friend of Maldives committed to strengthening the institutions of democracy in the country, India believes that it is of utmost importance that the electoral process is allowed to proceed unhindered so that the second round is conducted according to schedule and the will of the people of Maldives is fully recognised.”

173. Official Spokesperson's response to queries regarding recent developments related to Presidential elections in Maldives.

New Delhi, September 24, 2014.

"It would be recalled that India has consistently conveyed its support for the democratic process in Maldives. It was in this regard that India had called for free, fair and credible Presidential elections in meeting the aspirations of the people of Maldives. The first round of Presidential elections was held on 7 September 2013 in a transparent, organised and peaceful manner. This was acknowledged by domestic and international observers, including those from India.

We have seen recent reports that the Supreme Court of Maldives has postponed the second round of Presidential elections scheduled to be held on 28 September 2013. This development has resulted in uncertainty concerning the second round, which may have an impact on peace, stability and security in the country.

We, therefore, call upon all concerned in the Maldives to address the current situation at the earliest so that the electoral process could be resumed in a manner that respects the will of the Maldivian people. In this context, it is important that the second round of the Presidential elections is held as scheduled and the candidate elected by the people of Maldives assumes the Presidency on 11th November 2013 as mandated by the Constitution."

* In the mean time the Elections Commission of Maldives (ECM) announced that it was continuing preparatory work to hold the second round of polls as scheduled on September 28. "While awaiting for the Supreme Court verdict on this matter we are continuing the preparation work to hold the election on the previously scheduled date 28th September 2013 so that in case, if the Supreme Court issues a ruling on this matter before the scheduled date of this election we would be able to hold the second round of Presidential Election as previously planned," it said in a communication. Noting that the Elections Commission of Maldives was ordered by the Maldivian Supreme Court to postpone the second round of Presidential Elections till it reached a verdict on a case filed by a political party that competed in the first round but did not reach the second round, the ECM said that it was going ahead with preparations. Hectic parleys continued among political parties and government officials in the wake of the Indian statement on the elections. India wants the polls to go ahead as scheduled. Meanwhile, the Australian Government, in a statement, noted that "it is important that the results of the democratic process are respected." It welcomed "the positive findings of international observers, including the Commonwealth Observer Group, on the conduct of the recent first round of Presidential Elections in the Maldives. These elections are an important step in entrenching democracy following the disputed transfer of power there in February 2012.

174. Declaration of Verdict on Presidential Election by the Supreme Court of Maldives.

New Delhi, October 10, 2013.

We have noted the Supreme Court verdict announced on 7 October 2013 annulling the first round of the Presidential elections held on 7 September 2013 and announcing a fresh schedule of elections.

As a close friend and neighbour, India has consistently supported the strengthening of democratic processes and institutions in Maldives. We believe that it is important that the stalled electoral process is put back on track. India strongly urges that the fresh elections dates stipulated in the verdict are adhered to so that a new President is elected in accordance with the wishes and democratic aspirations of the people of Maldives.

We deplore the recent incidents of political violence and appeal to all sides to maintain peace and calm and to refrain from extra-constitutional measures.

We encourage all concerned in Maldives to work for free, fair, inclusive and credible elections in a peaceful environment followed by a smooth transition on 11 November 2013, as stipulated by the Constitution of Maldives. In this regard, we welcome the statement issued by the Maldives' President today afternoon condemning efforts to stop former President Mohamed Nasheed from running for office of President of Maldives.

India continues to stand by its commitment to work with the Government of Maldives and its state institutions for success of elections.

175. Press Statement of the Government of India on the Presidential elections in Maldives.

New Delhi, October 19, 2013.

India is deeply disappointed that the repeat first round of the Presidential elections was not held as scheduled today, October 19 and that the Elections Commission was not allowed to proceed with holding elections as per its Constitutional mandate.

India and the international community have been closely watching the developments in Maldives and are seriously concerned at the attempts to stall the democratic process. It is for the people of Maldives to decide their future, and their strong desire to elect a new president is evident from the turnout of 88% in the first round of elections held on September 7, 2013, which was considered free and fair by the large contingent of international and domestic observers present.

Keeping in mind the wishes and aspirations of the people of Maldives, who have so far shown admirable patience and restraint, it is important

* India expressed "deep concern" over the fact that the rescheduled first round of polls to be held on October 19, were being put off. In a release issued in Male on October 18 night, the Indian High Commission in Male said: "We call upon all political parties to show a spirit of understanding, cooperation and accommodation by supporting the efforts for holding elections as scheduled, including accepting of the voters' register. Holding free, fair and credible elections without further delay is essential without further delay is essential for fulfilling the political aspirations of the people of Maldives." Earlier the Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh who was in Male asked all Maldivian leaders to accept the outcome of the elections so that there was a "smooth transfer of power". Media reports said she had expressed the hope and expectation that the electoral process would proceed as scheduled with the first round to be held on October 19, and if required, the second round before November 3 so that a new President was sworn in on November 11 as stipulated by the constitution of Maldives. She said she "strongly conveyed" to all parties to accept the results of elections to enable a smooth transfer of power and reconciliation post elections. New Delhi was disappointed that the elections had to be postponed for technical reasons.

Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh had rushed to the Maldives to discuss the prevailing political situation in the Maldives. During her stay, she called on incumbent President Mohamed Waheed, met with Defence Minister Mohamed Nazim, former President Abdul Gayoom and presidential candidates — former President Mohamed Nasheed and Gasim Ibrahim. Media quoted sources in Maldives to suggest that during her meetings, she conveyed that as a "close-friend and a strategic partner" of Maldives, India had always supported the efforts for a peaceful, prosperous and stable Maldives and the strengthening of its democratic process and institutions.

that the electoral process is put back on track immediately with a definite timeline so that a new president is elected and sworn in on November 11, 2013 as mandated by the constitution.

India calls upon the Government of Maldives and all parties concerned to fulfil their responsibility towards the people of Maldives by playing a constructive role in the elections process and fully assisting the Elections Commission in holding the Presidential elections without further delay. India also calls upon all parties to abjure violence and maintain calm.

176. Prime Minister congratulates Mr Abdulla Yameen Abdul Gayoom, newly elected President of the Republic of Maldives.

November 18, 2013.

Excellency,

It gives me great pleasure to extend to you my heartiest congratulations on your victory in the presidential elections. Your success is also a triumph for the forces of democratic pluralism in the Maldives. I am confident that, under your stewardship, Maldives will move further ahead on the path of stability, peace, progress and development.

India and Maldives are bound together by historical, cultural and civilizational ties. Our geographical proximity has provided a strong foundation for the close and friendly relations that have been built between our two countries. I would like to reiterate what I had the occasion to mention to Your Excellency when we met in Delhi earlier this year, namely, that India attaches the highest importance to its relationship with Maldives. As you prepare to take office, I wish you a successful tenure and assure you of India's full support in your endeavour to provide a peaceful and prosperous future for the people of Maldives.

* Newly-elected President of Maldives Abdulla Yameen Abdul Gayoom has assured Prime Minister Manmohan Singh that he prioritised relations with India and was keen on finding ways to enhance the longstanding close friendly ties between the two countries if Dr. Singh decides to visit Male.

Replying to a congratulatory message sent out by Dr. Singh on November 17 after he won the elections defeating the former President, Mohd. Nasheed, Mr. Yameen pointed out that his first formal appointment with a foreign dignitary was with Indian High Commissioner Rajiv Sahare.

Pl accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

(Mammohan Singh)

177. Press Release of the Ministry of Defence on strengthening the Defence relations with Maldives.

New Delhi, December 12, 2013.

Defence Minister Shri AK Antony has reiterated India's commitment to continue to strengthen bilateral defence relations with Maldives. Meeting with Maldivian Minister of Defence and National Security H.E. Mohamed Nazim here today, Shri Antony conveyed continued support to the strengthening of medical facilities and expertise for the Maldives National Defence Force (MNDF). During the meeting, training of Maldivian medical specialists in India, deputation of Indian Armed Forces medical specialists to Maldives and strengthening of medical infrastructure in Maldives were among the proposals discussed. Shri Antony also announced that all MNDF personnel will henceforth be eligible for treatment in Armed Forces medical institutions in India for major surgeries and for treatment of major and serious illnesses. The Maldivian Defence Minister conveyed his appreciation of the assistance being provided by India in this regard.

Both Ministers also discussed and agreed to pursue measures to enhance interactions between the Armed Forces of both countries. The continued conduct of bilateral exercise was discussed and it was agreed that the next joint exercise between both sides will be held in 2014.

During the one hour long meeting, both Defence Ministers discussed a number of issues relating to regional security and matters pertaining to bilateral defence cooperation between both countries. The Maldivian Defence Minister was accompanied by the Maldivian High Commissioner to India and senior officers of the Maldivian National Defence Force (MNDF). From the Indian side, Defence Secretary, Vice Chief of Naval

Staff and senior officers of the Armed Forces, Ministry of Defence and Ministry of External Affairs were present at the meeting.

Earlier, the Maldivian Defence Minister laid a wreath at Amar JawanJyoti and was accorded a ceremonial Guard of Honour.

The visiting dignitary will also be visiting Kochi on 14 December, 2013 and would be visiting naval facilities under the Southern Naval Command. During the visit, an Advanced Light Helicopter (ALH) manufactured by HAL will also be symbolically handed over to the MNDF in the presence of the Minister. The ALH is expected to be positioned in Male by early 2014 and would be the second ALH to be provided to Maldives.

* The Helicopter referred to in the last paragraph above was handed over to Maldives on 14th December 2013. This is the second naval Advanced Light Helicopter (ALH), Dhruv, to the Maldives in a gesture that was described by Maldivian Minister for Defence Mohamed Nazim as “paving the way for further strengthening of ties between both countries.” A brand new, Mark-III (the latest) variant of the India-made multi-role helicopter in Maldives National Defence Force (MNDF) colours was unveiled at a simple ceremony attended by Mr. Nazim, Vice-Admiral Satish Soni, Flag Officer Commanding-in-Chief of India’s Southern Naval Command, and MNDF Brigadier General Ali Zuhair besides senior formations from both sides, officials from the Ministry of External Affairs and representatives of the helicopter manufacturer, Hindustan Aeronautics Limited, at naval air station Garuda in Kochi. On the last leg of his visit to India Mr. Nazim said the Maldives maintained a friendly and cordial relation with its neighbours, especially India, which stood by the nation whenever it needed support. Defence cooperation between both countries grew drastically over the past few years with Indian armed forces, particularly the Navy, contributing greatly to MNDF’s capacity-building. He said the ‘gift’ would help the island nation’s Coast Guard carry out search and rescue and medical evacuation from its far-flung territories. Vice-Admiral Soni said India shared long-standing ties with Maldives. While Indian Navy trained MNDF personnel and despatched its ships and aircraft to patrol the Maldivian exclusive economic zone, the Maldives contributed to security in the Indian Ocean region by enhanced surveillance and anti-piracy patrol. The nation also actively participated in forums such as the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS) and the biennial exercise Milan. Vice-Admiral Soni told the media later that provisioning the ALH, the face of India’s aviation industry, was indicative of the importance India attached to its relationship with the island nation. While the ALH already in operation with the Maldivian Coast Guard was based at the southern Maldivian island of Addu, the more advanced, second helicopter — which also sports a weather radar— would operate from the northern Hannimadhoo Island, primarily on medical evacuation duty. The helicopter would be initially manned and maintained by an all-Indian crew.

NEPAL178. Prime Minister congratulates Chairman Regmi of Nepal.
New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has congratulated Chairman Khil Raj Regmi on his assumption of office as Head of the Interim Election Government of Nepal. In his message the Prime Minister commended the people of Nepal on reaching an agreement that is an important step in consolidating Nepal's democratic gains and institutionalizing multi party democracy.

The text of the Prime Minister's message is as follows:

"Please accept our felicitations on assuming the office of the Chairman of the Cabinet of the Interim Election Government of Nepal. I commend the people and political parties of Nepal on reaching the agreement, which represents an important step in taking forward the political process in Nepal for consolidating the democratic gains and institutionalizing multi-party democracy in the country.

I have the greatest pleasure in conveying to you the best wishes of the Government and the people of India as you prepare to undertake the critical task of holding early elections for the Constituent Assembly-cum-Parliament of Nepal. India stands ready to provide any assistance required for the successful conduct of the elections.

India remains steadfast in its support to the people of Nepal in their effort to build a stable, democratic and prosperous Nepal."

179. Press Statement on behalf of the Government of India on formation of new Interim Election Government in Nepal.

New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Government welcomes the formation today of the Interim Election Government led by the Chief Justice of Nepal, Rt. Hon'ble Mr. Khil Raj Regmi. We commend the people of Nepal and the political parties representing them for finding a way out of the impasse of the past few months.

The formation of the Interim Election Government in Nepal comes at a critical juncture in Nepal's quest to hold Constituent Assembly–cum-Parliament Elections, which is essential to consolidate the democratic gains made by its people and institutionalise a strong multi-party democracy in Nepal. We hope that the Interim Election Government, with the support of all the political parties and the people of Nepal, will move forward in the spirit of the political agreements reached, including with regard to the election.

India stands behind the people of Nepal in their efforts to build a stable, democratic and prosperous Nepal and will continue to extend all possible cooperation to the people and Government of Nepal in accordance with their aspirations and priorities.

180. Government of India's Statement on the successful conduct of free and fair elections in Nepal.

New Delhi, November 19, 2013.

The successful conduct of free and fair elections today in Nepal for the Constituent Assembly-cum-Parliament is an important step towards realising Nepal's goal of a democratic and prosperous future. The people of Nepal, political parties, Government and security forces and the Election Commission of Nepal deserve to be congratulated for this achievement. The impressive turnout reflects the faith that the people of Nepal have reposed in the democratic process.

Government of India was happy to extend necessary logistical support for the smooth conduct of elections, in accordance with the request of the Government of Nepal.

India believes that the early promulgation of a new Constitution reflecting the aspirations of the people of Nepal together with progress on the development agenda would contribute to peace, prosperity and stability in Nepal. As a close friend and neighbour, India stands ready to support the Government and people of Nepal in their historic endeavours.

PAKISTAN

181. Cease fire violation across the Line of Control.

New Delhi, January 8, 2013.

In response to a question on violation of cease fire across the Line of Control, the Official Spokesperson stated:

“We deny that Indian troops had crossed the Line of Control in the Rampur sector, or had violated the cease fire.

The fact is that in the early hours of January 6, Pakistan troops in the sector commenced unprovoked firing on Indian troops. The roof of a civilian house in Churunda village was damaged in the Pak mortar fire. Indian troops undertook controlled retaliation in response.

India is strongly committed to the sanctity of the Line of Control in Jammu & Kashmir, which is the most important Confidence Building Measure between the two countries. The cease fire along the Line of Control, which has largely held since 2003, is an important element of this Confidence Building Measure. The Director Generals for Military Operations (DGsMO) of both sides have spoken to each other on the incident.

We call upon the Pakistani authorities to ensure that the sanctity of the Line of Control is upheld at all times, and to ensure that such incidents of unprovoked firing across the LoC do not recur.”

182. India summons Pakistan High Commissioner and lodges a strong protest on the actions of Pakistan army.

New Delhi, January 9, 2013.

Foreign Secretary Shri Ranjan Mathai summoned Pakistan High Commissioner to the Ministry of External Affairs today and lodged a strong protest on the actions of the Pakistan army on January 8, 2013. Regular Pakistani troops crossed the Line of Control at Mendhar sector and engaged the Indian troops who were patrolling this sector. Two Indian soldiers were killed in the attack and their bodies subjected to barbaric and inhuman mutilation. The Government of Pakistan was asked to immediately investigate these actions that are in contravention of all norms of international conduct and ensure that these do not recur. Foreign Secretary recalled that the experts of both countries had met in New Delhi on December 27, 2012 to discuss conventional CBMs, wherein maintaining the sanctity of the LOC, one of the most important CBMs between the two countries, was emphasized.

183. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister responding to a crisis across the Line of Control.

New Delhi, January 9, 2013.

Q: Sir, Yesterday the barbaric manner in which two of our Indian soldiers were killed and the head of one of them was taken away by them, how have the Government of India protested? Will there be an immediate action in this that at least they return the head of the Indian soldier?

External Affairs Minister: Whatever has happened is very sad. And any amount of its condemnation is not enough. The entire country has felt sad at this unfortunate incident. We have condemned it in the strongest term. The Pakistan envoy was called to the ministry and told that he should convey our message to his government urgently.

There are two issues. One is that the ceasefire line and LOC has been violated. This is itself a mistake and its impact would be unfortunate. This will impact our efforts in recent months to improve the relations, normalise the relations. This incident that has happened I agree that on the question of human rights, and whatever action is required will be taken. We have in clear terms told Pakistan and we will see what more action can be taken on this, or what will be their reaction from their side.

Q: Sir, you said that we must not allow the situation to escalate, and that if this is not contained it could adversely affect our efforts to normalize ties. Is the onus on India or on Pakistan at this moment to ensure that this does not happen?

External Affairs Minister: Frankly, I think that whatever we do with Pakistan is in mutual interest of both countries and indeed for the entire region and the world. It is more than clear now at this time as to who is responsible for violation and also who is responsible for an act which is inhuman and cannot possibly be accepted. Therefore, the onus obviously flows from that. Having said that, I think it is important that we take a responsible position. Our sense of hurt and our sense of indignation are very obvious and we have emphasized this in no uncertain terms. But I still think that we have to be careful that forces that are attempting to derail all the good work that has been done towards normalization should not be successful.

Q: Sir, That question that also came up in the case of Surabh Kali, this is also violation of international norms; you have also expressed your concern on this and expressed anger too. Will India like to raise this issue at international fora? Would you take this up at the UN Human Rights Commission?

External Affairs Minister: it cannot be answered immediately. The reason being it has a particular aspect. Earlier also similar issue was raised in another connection at the international level, we regard it a bilateral issue between the two countries, and there should be no outside intervention; it is not desirable or possible to do so. It is an issue which has to be considered seriously and then come to some actionable measure, It do not think it is the right time to tell you about this aspect.

Q: what about the families? Aur jo parivar hai,...

External Affairs Minister: for the martyrs, from our side and Defence Ministry side whatever can be done will be done. The Defence Ministry after due consideration on this issue will take necessary action. At this time we want to send a clear message to the Pakistan Government. We want their clear reaction should be available to us. We want to settle this matter here itself. Let us see what happens.

Q: Sir, you say you are expecting the response of the Pakistani side. They have already said, their ISPR said that their soldiers have not done it. So, their response is clear.

External Affairs Minister: We have summoned the High Commissioner. We have given a very clear message to the High Commissioner. We expect we will get a response back.

Q: Sir, is it time that India reviews its policy towards Pakistan and redefines its engagement with Pakistan?

External Affairs Minister: I do not think that we need to go into a dramatic review. These are factors that are constantly taken in to account as we move forward. We are careful about ensuring that we do not move too soon, too fast, and then leave ground uncovered. Therefore, whenever there are positive or negative developments that take place, they are factored into our plans. They are factored into the roadmap. And I am sure that that will happen in this case as well.

Q: Sir, there is a public sentiment that the nation should honour those who are defending our troubled frontiers, it should look after their honour especially in this context, and that it should be reflected in the dialogue process with Pakistan.

External Affairs Minister: The gratitude that we owe, and I think it is a gratitude the whole nation owes, to the young men and women who fight at the borders and who protect and provide security to all of us on the borders in peace time or in times of war is something that can never be overstated. I think that the nation joins the family in deep sorrow and determination that this is something that we must make sure does not get repeated. But having said that, I cannot specifically today indicate what the impact of any one or a series of events has on policy that we finally decide in terms of an overall perspective. That is obviously something that will become apparent as we go forward. But I can tell you this much that any such event inevitably gets factored into our policy making.

Q: the road map you prepared for peace with Pakistan and gave permission for Pakistani cricket team to visit India, do you think after this incident, it will impact the road map for peace with Pakistan? Can that be delayed after this incident?

External Affairs Minister: I wont be able to tell you. I believe if proper steps are taken, it can help in moving forward, as against that it can also impeded the progress. What is our goal and what we have to do to achieve it. If we look at this incident I agree it is regress step. This incident cannot help us to go ahead. When any thing like this happens, we have to carefully think and then proceed further. I agree what we have to do and what is expected of us, we have acted like that. If there is any other consideration we would let you know.

Q: Sir, do you consider this a war crime?

External Affairs Minister: I am not here actually to define the nature of the event that has happened except to say that it is completely unacceptable; it is very sad; it is very hurtful; and I think extremely counterproductive in terms of what we need to achieve and what we were determined to do as late as 27th of December when we met to review the confidence building measures. So, obviously it is counterproductive. And I can just express both my sorrow and to an extent my indignation. We have already done that. We have conveyed the message to the High Commissioner and, as I said, we hope that there will be an adequate and reasonable response.

Thank you very much

184. Official Spokesperson's briefing.New Delhi, January 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: I think with that we come to the end of this element. If you have any questions on anything else, I will be willing to answer them.

Q: Sir, what is our response to the demarche by Pakistan Foreign Office to Indian High Commissioner in Islamabad over the reported killing of one Pakistani soldier by Indian army?

Official Spokesperson: You are right that the Indian High Commissioner in Islamabad was called to the Pakistani Foreign Office today afternoon. He met the Pakistani Foreign Secretary Mr. Jilani. At the meeting he was handed a note verbale regarding an incident that is said to have occurred at the Hotspring Sector on the LoC on 10th January, 2013. This is said to have led to the death of a Pakistani soldier. Those are the contents of that note verbale.

The High Commissioner in his response stated that as we understand it there has been unprovoked firing from the Pakistani side in the afternoon yesterday, 10th January, 2013, in the Mendhar sector and there was a controlled response from our side. The High Commissioner also emphasized the sanctity of the LoC in Jammu and Kashmir established after the Simla Agreement of 1972. And he said this was the most important confidence-building measure between India and Pakistan.

Q: Pakistan has held up 25 of our trucks loaded with Indian good for trade. There is also news that they have stopped our bus also. What you propose to do from your side?

Official Spokesperson: You are right that as per information received yesterday, that in one of the sector for local reasons, neither any truck nor any bus could come. Our officials are discussing the issue. We shall let you know its outcome.

Q: Has Pakistan also stopped the cross LoC bus service?

Official Spokesperson: I think he was referring to the same issue. There is only one issue there. My understanding is that because of local circumstances, yesterday the gates could not be opened on the Pakistani side on one route which has led to both the trucks and the bus not being able to go. At this stage, there will be a discussion with the concerned authorities and we will let you know the outcome of this.

Q: Sir, we heard the National Security Advisor yesterday pretty much dismissing any mandate the UN Military Observers Group might have in terms of investigating ceasefire violations. But again we have heard from Pakistan's Foreign Minister following the NSA's clarification. What do you make of this public sparring on this particular issue? What is India's position? Do they have a mandate? What is their presence in India all about?

Official Spokesperson: You know it is well-known that following the signing of the Simla Agreement in January 1972 and the establishment of the Line of Control, the UNMOGIP has no relevance or role to play whatsoever. The Simla Agreement commits both countries to resolve all issues through bilateral negotiations.

Many of you have raised this question time and again. I would just like to mention to all of you that we are in 2013. Let us not look at instrumentalities which were last used more than forty years ago to try and solve problems of today and to avoid any future problems. India and Pakistan have a mechanism for trying to resolve these issues bilaterally. The DGMOs have been in touch. We have regular interactions at the diplomatic level. And we are fully capable of handling all these matters without any reference whatsoever to either what you mentioned to or to any other third party. I hope I have made that very very clear.

Q: Sir, the Pakistan Foreign Office summoned the Indian Deputy High Commissioner and then the High Commissioner today in a space of less than five days basically to protest ceasefire violation according to them. There were 117 ceasefire violations reported by India last year. For any of the ceasefire violations which happened from either side, did the Pakistanis summon India's High Commissioner or Deputy High Commissioner in Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: You would have known that before if they had, like you knew of the last instance. Question: Mr. Menon has met today his counterpart from China. Could you please tell us about the outcome of the meeting? Official Spokesperson: I am afraid I do not have a full readout of that. But based on our understanding the idea was Mr. Dai

Bingo, the Special Representative from the Chinese side, is here for a multilateral event, the meeting of BRICS National Security Advisors or the High Representatives for National Security. This was sort of a meeting on the sidelines of that. I do not have a full readout of that meeting but my understanding is that it was to cover all issues of bilateral interest. Also, this is likely to be Mr. Dai Bingo's last visit to India, and so, a sort of summary of what has been the interaction so far. But I do not have a specific readout of all issues that were covered.

Q: Sir, despite leaders meeting on both the sides for de-escalation of violence ... (Inaudible)... Where do you think does the solution lie?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have mentioned that the DGMOs are in contact and the solutions, as required, are being sorted out bilaterally.

Q: Pakistan denies every time that there is some thing happening on their side. When you provide the proof, they don't accept. They repeat innocence. Despite this you go on saying that we have to sit down and talk. They are not violating Simla agreement for the first time. They have done it before also. When Musharraf came, even then he did not accept that there was any issue. We only show large heartedness. Our people ask, it is not that we are saying, why should we extend our hand of friendship? How many time are we to be betrayed?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much for that enlightened discourse on India-Pakistan relations. But this has been an established policy of all our leadership that ultimately we have to work out our problems with our neighbours. Neighbours are not going to go away. Therefore, it is in the interest of India and Pakistan both to work out a relationship which will ensure peace and security for both our people. I understand your concern. It is those concerns which are reflected in Government meetings. So, please do not think that concerns that you have espoused just now are not reflected. These are reflected and are reflected very strongly including in the last meeting that the Foreign Secretary had with the Pakistani High Commissioner here.

Thank you very much

185. Statement by External Affairs Minister on the killing of two Indian soldiers in the Mendhar sector of LoC.

New Delhi, January 15, 2013.

The recent incident of the killing of two Indian soldiers in the Mendhar sector and the barbaric mutilation of their bodies has been condemned in the strongest possible terms. Government has deplored this grave provocation and repugnant act of the Pakistan army and called on the Government of Pakistan to carry out a proper investigation of this unacceptable action and ensure that this does not recur. This was immediately conveyed by our Director General Military Operations to his Pakistani counterpart after this incident and reiterated during the Brigadier level Flag Meeting held at Chakan da Bagh yesterday. Foreign Secretary had summoned the Pakistan High Commissioner on January 09, a day after this heinous incident and lodged a strong protest on the actions of the Pakistan army.

It should not be felt that the brazen denial and the lack of a proper response from the Government of Pakistan to our repeated demarches on this incident will be ignored and that bilateral relations could be unaffected or that there will be business as usual. Such actions by the Pakistan army, which are in contravention of all norms of international conduct, not only constitute a grave provocation but lead us to draw appropriate conclusions about Pakistan's seriousness in pursuing normalisation of relations with India.

186. Media briefing by External Affairs Minister.New Delhi, January 15, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: Good afternoon friends. Thank you very much for coming here at short notice. We have here with us the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid. The idea is that the External Affairs Minister will make a statement and after that, since he has another meeting to attend to, he will take only a couple of questions. With that background I would now request the External Affairs Minister to make his statement.

External Affairs Minister: Thank you very much and good evening. Sorry, we have called you at such a short notice. But, it was largely to do with the sense of urgency that we all have felt about this matter and the enormous curiosity that you have expressed, quite rightly so. This was a matter on which we have reflected very carefully and closely and we believe that at the present juncture it is important that we state this on behalf of the Government very clearly and precisely. And this is what we have to say.

The recent incident of the killing of two Indian soldiers in the Mendhar sector and the barbaric mutilation of their bodies has been condemned in the strongest possible terms. Government has deplored this grave provocation and repugnant act of the Pakistan army and called on the Government of Pakistan to carry out a proper investigation of this unacceptable action and ensure that this does not recur. This was immediately conveyed by our Director General Military Operations to his Pakistani counterpart after this incident and reiterated during the Brigadier level Flag Meeting held at Chakan da Bagh yesterday. Foreign Secretary had summoned the Pakistan High Commissioner on January 09, a day after this heinous incident and lodged a strong protest on the actions of the Pakistan army.

It should not be felt that the brazen denial and the lack of a proper response from the Government of Pakistan to our repeated demarches on this incident will be ignored and that bilateral relations could be unaffected or that there will be business as usual. Such actions by the Pakistan army, which are in contravention of all norms of international conduct, not only constitute a grave provocation but lead us to draw appropriate conclusions about Pakistan's seriousness in pursuing normalisation of relations with India. thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Wait a minute. These are two question , first in English and then in English. Please ask first in Hindi.

Q: The way the incident has happened, but there is no reaction from Pakistan. The Government has lodged so many protests, but Pakistan's higher authorities have show no reaction. They continue to maintain that it is only Indian propaganda.

Answer: We have represented to the Pakistan authorities in very clear terms, we are placing these facts before you because we understand our duty. I agree that we have to face this situation with determination and prudently, that is why we have placed this fact before you. How the situation change in future, we shall see and keep you informed.

Official Spokesperson: One question in English please.

Q: You said that it is not going to be business as usual. What tangibles is the Government talking about?

Answer: We leave at this point. I thing specifics of what might be necessary or found useful are decisions that will be taken as we move forward. At present, we feel that its important that a convergent single point of view on behalf of the Government which reflects a large section of our public opinion should be made clear and let it be known to everyone here as well as across the border that we are extremely determined and serious in this concern of ours and we have taken resort to all such instruments and all such methods that are available to us at this time.

Official Spokesperson: The Minister has replied. At this stage we will bring this event to an end. And also I would request you please that after this we will not be issuing any further statements. So, you have this on the record and we will also put it on our website in 5 minutes. Thank you very much.

External Affairs Minister: Thank you very much. We will talk later.

187. Interview of the External Affairs Minister with the Asian Age.

New Delhi, January 20, 2013.

“We’ll do what’s appropriate with regard to the soldiers’ killings”

External affairs minister Salman Khurshid says, ‘Nobody should feel that we are not serious about what has happened (on the LoC recently).’ He tells Parul Chandra that India’s dialogue with Pakistan is influenced by the level of satisfaction we get with regard to the Mumbai attacks.

Will the dialogue process with Pakistan be impacted after the recent macabre incident on the Line of Control?

The dialogue process is faster when things look good and not so fast when things are not so good. The dialogue must address issues such as ceasefire violations, peace and accountability. It is inherent in the dialogue to cater to circumstances around it. So as the situation evolves, we will do whatever is appropriate. What is our duty, we will do.

What made India’s stance suddenly look more hardline?

There is no change in our stand. All this is part of an evolving situation. We’re still in the process of assessing what happened with regard to the soldiers’ killings. Nobody should feel that we are not serious about what has happened. We’re committed to the ceasefire. At the same time, we feel there should be a response. Our stand is consistent. We’ve not indicated any items at all on our agenda. We believe that as the situation evolves we will do whatever is appropriate and is our duty.

Trade, cultural and sporting ties between the two countries are already hit. Where do they go from here?

Unless we take a decision and announce it, things will remain as they are.

Pakistan foreign minister Hina Rabbani Khar, while responding to corruption charges against Prime Minister Raja Parvez Ashraf, said that even Prime Minister Manmohan Singh had faced corruption charges. What do you make of this?

The kind of language they use while commenting on their domestic politics is not something that we're going to respond to.

Is India satisfied with what Pakistan has done so far to bring the masterminds of 26/11 to book?

No, we're not. We haven't found our level of satisfaction vis-à-vis the Mumbai attacks. The Pakistani response has not met our expectations. Our dialogue with Pakistan is influenced by the level of satisfaction we get with regard to the Mumbai attacks.

With the US and Nato forces leaving Afghanistan by 2014, the Taliban are being assiduously wooed by Pakistan. Does this worry India?

I wouldn't use the word "worry", but we've not been as enthusiastic or willing to get into any kind of a conversation with the Taliban, good or bad. We have adhered to, and believe everyone should adhere to, the red lines that have been drawn. We're conscious that the combat forces are being withdrawn on the understanding that there will be a political settlement. It's part of the political settlement that the Americans have gone along with those elements in the Taliban they can engage with. Afghanistan, too, has proceeded with the engagement. Since we're not directly involved in any such initiative or enterprise, we don't have to take a call right away though we're watching carefully.

How is India looking at Afghanistan as the endgame nears, particularly when the US appears to be veering towards Pakistan, keeping India out?

Nobody's keeping India out. That's more than clear. If anything, there are a lot of invites for India. But India itself is taking steps very carefully because we want to be part of the solution, not the problem. Despite Kabul's willingness, and Kabul nudging us, we've said, "Let it be done in a manner that's comforting and acceptable to all stakeholders in the region." What happens after 2014, nobody knows. Kabul is yet to come out clearly with its own perception of things beyond 2014.

Despite Pakistan's fears about Indian influence in Afghanistan, shouldn't New Delhi be playing a more pro-active role at this stage?

I think we have evolved a style that is careful and cautious and we believe it is good for Afghanistan. Moving slowly but surely is more important than moving hastily. We're reasonably sure-footed about the manner in which we're proceeding.

There's a perception that India is not "serious" about its relations with the US — that after signing the civilian nuclear deal, matters remain stuck on issues of suppliers' liability.

Certainly, some of the companies have reservations. We have indicated that it's not possible for us to rework the legislation and rules within which there is adequate addressing of their concerns. We'll be opening a Pandora's box if we try to tinker with it. We also have Canada, Australia, France dealing with us on this. If something is safe and secure for one major nuclear country, there is no reason why others should have problems.

The US would like India as a "pivot in Asia" in rebalancing its forces. Your view?

If it's something that complements or supplements India's "Look East" policy, then we're on the same page. However, we haven't ever responded to or encouraged anything that looks like a containment or an attempt to create another pole of influence and power vis-à-vis anybody else in Asia. It can be a larger collaboration but not by way of directing it against anyone.

What is the state of boundary talks with China?

The talks have proceeded at a snail's pace but always proceeded in the right direction. China's new leadership has indicated it is positive about moving forward.

India has close bilateral ties with Israel but appears cagey about being overt about it.

It's a good thing that Israel understands that our commitment to Palestine is undiluted. Israel didn't want us to go with Palestine when it was trying for UN membership, but we did. We've found the right sort of balance between our legitimate concerns about Palestine and our growing relationship with Israel. It's important that we keep in mind popular perceptions in the country that, historically, we have been strongly in favour of Palestine. The relationship with Israel is steady, firm and moving in the right

188. Resolution moved in Lok Sabha rejects the resolution passed by the National Assembly of Pakistan.

New Delhi, March 15, 2013.

This House totally rejects the Resolution passed by the National Assembly of Pakistan on March 14, 2013. The House notes that Pakistan has committed that it would not allow its territory to be used for terrorism against India and only fulfillment of this commitment can be the basis for peaceful relations with Pakistan. The House rejects interference in the internal affairs of India and calls upon the National Assembly of Pakistan to desist from such acts of support for extremist and terrorist elements.

The House reiterates that the entire State of Jammu & Kashmir including the territory under illegal occupation of Pakistan is and shall always be an integral part of India. Any attempt from any quarter to interfere in the internal affairs of India will be met resolutely and with complete unity of our nations.

189. Award of the Court of Arbitration at the Hague on Kishenganga Hydro-Electric Project.

New Delhi, February 18, 2013.

In response to question on Award of the Court of Arbitration at the Hague on Kishenganga Hydro-Electric Project, the Official Spokesperson said:

“The award of the Court of Arbitration at the Hague today reaffirms the validity of India’s position regarding the Kishenganga Hydro-electric project (KHEP) by allowing diversion of water from the KHEP as envisaged by India. It highlights once again that India is adhering to all the provisions of the Indus Waters Treaty.

The details of the award are being studied.”

190. Interview of External Affairs Minister to the TV channel CNN-IBN.

New Delhi, January 17, 2013.

Q (Paarull Malhotra): Mr. Khurshid the atmospherics seem to have improved suddenly. Now you are hearing that the Pakistani Foreign Minister actually reach out to you for talks with you to defuse tensions. Would you be willing to take up the offer at this moment?

Answer: Well, if your impression is that atmospherics are improving and I think we should be relieved. It's something that we should welcome. These are, you know, straws in the wind you ...(inaudible).. judging yourself about what's the next best move. I think it's clearly a positive step that what we have always maintained. India has always maintained that if there is a problem we have to resolve amongst ourselves, between India and Pakistan, and we cannot be hoping and working towards finding some players to step to resolve our problems. So if we remain on that bilateral track, I think that's a time tested successful way of dealing with our problems. And I think that's the best way to move forward. But having said that, I think it's not just one statement or one response that works. You have to take up the whole structure with you and it's certainly something that you noted and started to look at very carefully. And let's see what's the next step will be.

Q: Am I understating correctly in that, the fact is that there has been no investigation ordered into the incident which is incidentally is the demand that was put forward by the Prime Minister himself. Till that happens there can be no direct talks between you and your counterpart?

Answer: Direct talks between counterparts don't just come in a jiffy; you sort of work up gradually or work towards something. We, for instance, when we come in contact at our level, that becomes a base for the contact between Heads of Government to come together. So there is lot of work that you need to do. You can't these days particularly, with everything in the media focus, you can't get into a meeting ill prepared and then walk out of the meeting, and then everybody tells the world that the whole thing has collapsed. You cant do that, you have to work towards these things. You have to be clear what your agenda is, you have to be clear how you will achieve it and you have to be clear about what your expectations are, both the minimum and the maximum. But having said that, I think it is important that we shouldn't give an impression that whatever was said earlier is something that was said only for effect and it was not said because we substantively believed in something as an obligation and as something that you believe is very necessary. So, we obviously stand by the content and the substance of what we believe is critical and crucial to what went wrong. And therefore obviously, addressing that will be a move towards putting it right. But, we can remove a lot of words and phrases that have been thrown around by various people, not necessarily by the Foreign Ministry or the Government, and those phrases can lead to a different impression, you can sort off those phrases. The content, the substance of what we believe is our duty to expect and demand and what our analysis is, is relevant to improving the situation and returning back to normal and that is what is stated and that remains.

Q: Good news is that the Pakistani Army has finally assured the Indian Army that they are willing to respect the ceasefire. Do you actually expect the Line of Control to actually cool down now?

Answer: I think that's a very positive development. I think it's something that could have come earlier but it's a very positive development. But it's something that is within the domain of the armed forces on both sides. We created that structure but it's something that they handle at their own level. It's a good thing that they handle it at their own level and if it is contained at their own level then it doesn't create a larger political issue at the higher level. And the signs that we have, certainly from yesterday, are good signs and welcome signs. I think that when something good is done and happens you should encourage it by praising it and appreciating it because we have been complaining a lot about things going wrong. I think if something was right we should put in a word of appreciation.

Q: Very quickly I will put a follow up - You encourage the positive dynamics at the movement by, for instance categorically issuing visas for Pakistani women cricketers who want to play the world cup.

Answer: We haven't. I don't believe that we have done anything that was exclusively negative but even the atmospherics play their own role. You may not actually specifically be focusing on an event or a decision that sort of falls by the way because people are not talking to each other or things are not normal etc.,. That should not be counted as a conscious effort to stall things. It should just be taken in one's stride. But yes, when you feel it's important that a message be clear and that your priority and your intensity of your feelings be conveyed, I think it's important that this should be conveyed in that manner which is what we tried to do. I don't think that we have added to any negativity and we wouldn't want to add any negativity. If there is something positive on the horizon, we should welcome it.

Q: But you are not in a position to assure Pakistani cricketers that they will in fact play the world cup here.

Answer: Let's just take it one step at a time. I think we shouldn't jump to either negatives or positives in a hurry. Let's just take it one step at a time. If the situation normalises, if the situation is peaceful and normal, then many of these questions will disappear by themselves. But frankly if that doesn't happen then many questions will arise and then we will have to deal with each question as we go along.

Q: Finally, very briefly final question. Are the two commerce ministers expected to actually meet later this month? Fact is trade liberalization was not just Pakistani Government's heart but also the Indian Government's heart. It would be an important message that if the Indian Minister actually met the Pakistani minister.

Answer: It is true that we were looking forward to MFN for a long time and we have had a deadline and a date also fixed for it. It didn't happen then which obviously was a little disappointing but both sides were working on it and it would culminate obviously in the meeting of the two ministers. I don't have any information right now of any meetings being called off but it's obviously also something that we will be reflected upon on both sides and then you will know that. Today, as I speak to you, I have no such information. Let us see. We take it one day at a time, one step at a time.

Thank you very much

191. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister.New Delhi, January 22, 2013.

Q: The statement given by Shushil Kumar Shinde about Hafiz Saeed who is involved in many case of terrorist attack in Mumbai, hopefully Indian position has not been compromised by this statement?

External Affairs Minister: We cannot have a peaceful settlement by this controversial approach. It is our utmost effort, that our expectations from our neighbours and particularly our expectations from Pakistan, we have in clear words explained and expressed. All the ministers in the government are aware of or stand and accept it too. It is hoped our stated position, which we have authoritatively stated, we stand firmly by that. You should also make it firm. The media will also help and every body will give full cooperation. This is national issue, in this we believe, every body speaks with one voice.

Q: Mr. Khurshid, do you concede that your Home Minister has given a handle for anti-India propaganda in Pakistan with his comments on Hindu terror and saffron terror?

External Affairs Minister: Let me just say this to you very clearly that our stated position that is shared fully by the Home Minister and the past Home Minister is based entirely on facts as the investigative agencies have made available to the Government. The attempt to divert attention and to push it in a particular premeditated direction by some people was obviously repudiated by the information that was available with the Home Ministry. That is the context in which all these statements are made. I think that we should not be looking at finer notions of what should be and can be said at any given time. I think the core understanding is that there are elements who want to use some cover of pretense and some cover of allegations against other groups to continue on their nefarious and unwholesome activities.

We have categorically said, not once but many times over, that any form of violence that is propagated by extremists of any kind irrespective of religion is what is dangerous for our country. Terror does not have religion; this we have said very clearly. And religion should not be associated with colour; this we have said very clearly. It is terror that we have to fight and terror directed against India that we are fighting. Those are the facts available to the Home Ministry on which we have been consistently taking this statement. I think we should not get distracted by a phrase here or a phrase there frankly. The intention, the commitment, the determination is what really matters. I would urge media and people as a whole to support us in our fight against unwholesome terror.

Q: Hina Rabani has said in an interview that the two foreign minister could meet. The Pakistan High Commissioner has also conveyed this through diplomatic channels, Is there a chance for talks either between foreign ministers or foreign secretaries?

External Affairs Minister: The most important thing is about the atmosphere; recently there was indication of bad atmosphere. We believe that until all this come a stop and the atmosphere does not change, we should not be in a hurry. We have made clear our expectations, and our problems made it clear to them. We want peace in our region; this has been made clear by our government and all the governments, we want peace in our regions which should not be fragile. This is our expectations and this is what we want.

Q: Are you willing to take up Pakistan's offer for talks now that it has come through official channel?

External Affairs Minister: As you know, the situation had unfortunately because of certain unacceptable incidents come under a severe question mark. The atmospherics were deteriorating considerably. Therefore, it was important for us that we first ensure that the atmospherics return to normal or near normal; that the expectation that we have in context of the unfortunate incidents that took place be honoured and responded to; and that in totality the situation becomes more amenable and acceptable in terms of public perceptions and the general support that one needs to build when one takes these strong decisions and important decisions. Only then we will be able to take these decisions. We would advisedly not want to do anything in haste that would not lead to a constructive and creative outcome. So, it is a situation in which we have to be careful. We have to watch and analyse before we take any steps in the direction that would be a meaningful one.

Q: Sir, you had a very long interaction, very detailed discussions with Sri Lankan Foreign Minister. During the discussions at any point of time, was any reference made regarding the more than 300 worship places including mosques and temples which were demolished by the Sri Lankan Government in Sri Lanka? Also they have changed the names of more than 16 Tamilian Provinces. For example, Killinochi which was well known has been renamed after Singhalas ... (Inaudible)... In those places instead of Tamilians, the Singhalas have been forced to settle. Has the Government of India taken serious note of it or any point of discussion which was brought into the discussion today?

External Affairs Minister: We have discussed the broad principles of rehabilitation, reconstruction and reparation. We have looked at the speed and the creativity with which attempts have been made to ensure that there is both equity and justice in a pervasive way. I think that the entire landscape is not possible to review in every minute detail as far as two governments are concerned. But obviously, as and when anything comes that should be put on the table for discussions, we would always be willing to do so.

There are obviously some decisions that are of local nature, decisions that need to be taken in a consensual manner and acceptable manner by Sri Lankan Government in terms of expectations of all their citizens. I think that is something they will do. We are hopeful that there are steps being taken towards rehabilitation and reconciliation which are very significant and important and in which we certainly give our full support to Sri Lankan Government.

I cannot actually talk about every specific detail which needs to be addressed and attended to by the Sri Lankan Government. But as and when issues come to our notice which we should get involved in and that we should be able to bring that into the broad framework of any dialogue or conversation we have with a friendly country like Sri Lanka, we would certainly do so.

Q: ... (Inaudible)... On the issue of Hafiz Saeed and the likes, Shinde's comments ... (Inaudible)... I was just trying to understand, are you supporting Mr. Shinde while cautioning that the Home Minister. what he said was based on information ...

External Affairs Minister: I am simply saying that the Home Ministry as well as any other Ministry makes its position in public and addresses public opinion based on facts that we believe are correct and true. And that is what would have been done. I am only urging and requesting you not to be distracted by commentary that comes from elsewhere which must be a self-serving commentary. What is important for us to do is to be clear about our position. And our position I think does not call for any further questions in one form or the other. I think our position is very clear. Working on around one phrase or another does not change our position. Position is clear, concise and based on facts as we know them.

Thank you

192. External Affairs Minister's interview to Outlook.

New Delhi, January 26, 2013.

(Outlook/by Pranay Sharma)

Is the Indo-Pak peace process back on tracks?

Fortunately, the peace process was not entirely derailed. There were hiccups that appeared to be very serious but the peace process itself was never derailed. May be it was an issue of both substance and perception. As we know perception can vacillate and it is more malleable, while substance is somewhat more solid. We didn't get to the point where the substance could be damaged substantially. We were able to arrest it in good time. But there is a lot of repair that is necessary in order to get the perception back n place. So the substance was relatively intact, it was the perception that was affected.

But Pakistani hockey players were asked to go back...

Every organization had its own reaction and response. The fact that Pakistani players were to be sent back was not the decision of the government of India. The Pakistani players talked to the organizers who felt that things were getting difficult and what otherwise would have been a peaceful and enjoyable exercise would become very tense and unpredictable. They took a consensual decision to go away. This is just as someone who decides not to come, like Javed Miandad decided not to come though he was given a visa.

What about the visa regime was that not put on hold?

Yes, as far as the visa regime is concerned, it is a far-reaching visa regime and we were all keen to push it forward. But there were some queries that the agencies had. Now the queries—may be contextually something happens and therefore, they arise, or it could be that the queries were already there in the pipeline and they could not be handled because of the short deadline. I wouldn't put it beyond coincidence. But anything can affect perception and perception can affect anything. However, it was not a conscious decision like we had taken that here are 10 switches and we are going to switch off eight of them and dim the lights in the room. Fortunately that's not the stage we had reached. So if you want to retrieve the situation—as we all want to do—it is much easier. I will admit that perceptions were affected and they got further exaggerated and amplified because of media interface of people who have very strong opinion. Now whether because of ideological or historical reasons, strong opinions were being expressed. That kept feeding negative perceptions. But in the last few days, particularly because the LoC is quiet and the DGMOs had met, I think we are steadily moving towards better perceptions.

The DGMOs mechanism was set up by the two countries to deal with possible tension along the LoC. Why did it take so long to activate it?

The idea of this process and procedures is that before things go into the public, the first people to notice something that can cause concern is the military itself who then immediately try to sort it out amongst themselves. This time before that could be done it got into the public space. Why and how etc are another matter. But because it got into the public space the whole process got reversed. The issue in the public became: Should the DGMOs meet? And this reversed the whole process and it took a few days' time. The flag meet which takes place before the DGMOs was not very successful this time. But fortunately the dialogue and conversation between the DGMOs was far more meaningful and positive in nature and that reversed the perception process.

Looking back how do you see the war hysteria and the hawkish line that had gripped sections in India?

Well it surprises me. I respect feelings of somebody who thinks we have been let down, not once but many times and the sense of hurt because of betrayal. Here lot of things had combined to give much greater traction and greater level of noise than there should have been. But this is a matter that touches the core of our patriotic sense and sense of betrayal. We have fought wars and we have then gone back and talked peace. No matter how terrible an incident may make you feel, it can't be worse than massive destruction of life and property caused by war. We have learnt to return to the peace table every time that we have suffered a war. So it's important that while one feels deeply sympathetic and responsible to these feelings—and they were very raw feelings of the aggrieved families because of the terrible incident—we will also have to think of all the men and women who have lost their lives in armed conflicts with our neighbours. We don't want to see a repeat of that happen in our generation. We don't want to deprive more families of their cherished dear ones simply because we are angry with something that someone has done to us.

But we all know cross-border firing happen often, so why did it reach such heights? Was it because of the beheading?

I think it was the matter getting into the public domain before adequate preparations were done to put things in perspective and also to seek adequate response and preparation from the other side. If that had become apparent and clear that the process for getting an appropriate response has already begun, it may have been seen in a different light. But here the process appears to begin after it became public and therefore the process also became difficult. It is unfortunate that it panned out in this manner and extremely unfortunate that it happened. Cruelty, both in times of war and at other times, cruelty of this nature and inhuman treatment of men in uniform is unacceptable. I don't think anyone publicly in Pakistan can say this is something you will have to accept. Our argument with them was that responsibility must be taken and what follows from that, I don't think our argument was to say whether this is okay during times of tension or is it okay to do to each other. I don't think this was the issue and I don't think they disagree on this.

Could they have taken the responsibility after it became an issue in the public domain?

I know, perhaps it becomes difficult. But you have to have broad shoulders. People have taken responsibility in the past for things having gone wrong under their command and supervision. You have to be tall and broad enough to take such responsibility.

Does it apply to both sides because many feel that armies of both sides in the past have engaged in beheading of each other's soldiers?

There are rules of engagement and there are basic human expectations that you don't do this. In fact you give full honour even to your enemy once he is incapacitated or killed. You provide the best of health facility to an injured enemy, we all know that. But we also know that in the battle fields or in conflict zones things happen that are very, very difficult to explain. But that is why every time something like this happens we have to put some accountability on ourselves—you do it yourself vis-à-vis your own armed forces and you expect it from the others if it happens from the other side.

Do you see any major breakthrough in Indo-Pak relations or more of a "holding operations" since both countries are getting into the election mode?

I don't think this is necessarily what we should be doing. We shouldn't lose time since your practical sense tells you your window is getting narrow and narrower because of elections and preoccupations at home. But I think the time has come for us as countries to conduct our affairs so that we don't lose critical moments and critical times simply because we are preoccupied with democratic processes etc. It is important that some use must be made of whatever time there is. If political people are not available then the civil service continues and a lot of ground work needs to be done for political people to come and put their stamp of endorsement on it.

How do you see Hina Rabbani's suggestion for a meeting of the two foreign ministers to sort out things?

I don't think you should see it as an offer; rather it should be seen as a suggestion that this is one way that it can be sorted out. It is a positive suggestion. We were concerned because there were constant signals about getting someone else to investigate and decide and adjudicate. That is not acceptable to us. Therefore, this suggestion is welcome and a positive one. But it's not an actual offer, like an invitation. But it was a publicly made suggestion, a good suggestion and I have also said so publicly. But it is not as if over a cup of coffee we will be able to sort something that has been going on for over 50 years. However, it calls for preparations at the different levels. At least get the routine things back in place and ensure the perceptions are repaired. And to repair that some content delivery on some of things that we have raised including how these fallen soldiers were treated. There must be some extent to which these things must be addressed because that will help perceptions. And if the perceptions and the atmospherics are good then I think we can move forward.

How you do see Mr Shinde's comments on "saffron terror" panning out? What is its likely diplomatic fallout since even the militant outfits in Pakistan have welcomed them?

These are people who have their own little game to play. The minister said what he said based on specific briefings that he has access to. I think something has also been said by the previous home minister, Mr Chidambaram. The point is that it is not their intention to pinpoint a religion or a political party. But there are certain facts available that indicate either complicity, or encouragement or some kind of collaboration with organizations that in common parlance or in short hand often get expressed by one or another expression. If people have problem with an expression, we can use another expression. But as far as the unwholesome groups across the borders are concerned, they are just wasting their time. Simply because we find a particular group of people are involved in an incident in India doesn't mean that many more incidents—and may be even this—has not been promoted by these unwholesome elements from across the borders. There is no way of condoning what they do, excusing them for what they do or even to think that we have given them a clean chit. There is no such question. It is unfair to say look Mr Home Minister someone from across the border is using your statement and taking advantage. By saying such a thing we are actually giving advantage to such people. This is too important and too significant a matter to be lost in a debate about linguistics. It is the core that matters and people who are concerned should answer the core issues that the home minister has raised.

193. Official Spokesperson's response to a query on the statement by Foreign Minister of Pakistan at OIC.

New Delhi, February 8, 2013.

In response to a question regarding the statement made by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan at the recently concluded OIC Contact Group meeting on Jammu & Kashmir held in Cairo the Official Spokesperson stated:

"The OIC has no locus standi on matters concerning the internal affairs of India or the recent incidents on the LoC. We have already clarified that UMOGIP has no relevance in regard to the latter. The propagandist suggestions made in the Foreign Minister's statement are neither new nor helpful"

194. External Affairs Minister's media byte after meeting the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

Ajmer, March 9, 2013.

External Affairs Minister: Thanks very much for your presence here. As you know, Pakistan Prime Minister came on a pilgrimage to Ajmer Sharif, He has left for Ajmer now. According to protocol and keeping in mind his position, we received him here. We had lunch and wished him wished good luck for his journey. I will now go to the airport and leave for Delhi.

Question: What did you talk particularly?

External Affairs Minister: When some body comes for pilgrimage, then we talk about what is his expectations from pilgrimage are? It is important part of sufi thinking which is connected with Ajmer Sharif. People from all over the world come to Ajmer Sharif. Those who have faith in Ajmer

Sharif, they come with complete faith in Khwaja Garib Nawaz. Many pilgrims from Pakistan come too from time to time. They come otherwise too. Our people come from all parts of the country. The Pakistan Prime Minister, as you know has also come on pilgrimage.

Question: Were India's concern regarding terrorism conveyed to him?

External Affairs Minister: it is not such an occasion, I had no reason to talk to him about issues. At appropriate time we have been raising issues and will continue to raise them.

Question: Opposition and also particularly BJP has said that why was the need to actually invite him and call him for lunch.

External Affairs Minister: They just have to look at their history and they will know why.

Thank you very much

195. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the Interview of External Affairs Minister with The Tribune.

New Delhi, March 25, 2013.

(The Tribune/by Raj Chengappa)

You had lunch with the Pakistani Prime Minister recently in Jaipur when he came to India. Why didn't the Indian Prime Minister invite him to Delhi for lunch?

Look at the kind of reactions to my having lunch with him – it would have been much worse if the Prime Minister had had lunch with him. He was on a private visit and not on official visit. There was a minimalist time required for him to go and pay obeisance at the Ajmer Dargah. We took a call that it would be appropriate for the Foreign Minister to go. So I went there, had lunch with him and came back.

Did you discuss relations between India and Pakistan?

We kept mostly to general topics. We talked about Sufism, we talked about music, we talked about food. But I did ask the Prime Minister if he had a vision for the relationship between India and Pakistan. We didn't go into specifics. I just asked him about a broad vision as anyone would over a meal. He then expanded on that. He talked a lot about it. Then I asked him what he was saying, which was obviously very positive in articulation, was only a position of his party or was it acceptable across the board in Pakistan politics. He said everyone shares it and that Pakistan was changing, particularly the younger generation.

Did you raise any of India's concerns with him?

No, this was a spiritual visit and I made it very clear that we didn't want to raise the issues we had. Words are not the only things that you require to convey feelings. These things are understood instinctively by people at that level. You don't have to take him through the alphabets all over again. I had made it clear that we were extending a courtesy for the spiritual visit. Therefore, my discussions hovered over spiritual issues more than politics.

So India's dialogue with Pakistan is almost dead?

I would not say it is dead or in a coma. I will say it has gone very sleepy.

When a new government in Pakistan takes charge in May, what does India expect it to do?

One, we have to go beyond the irritants as they serve little purpose. The irritant on the LoC, for instance, I don't think it served any purpose. If someone thinks it served an electoral purpose, they were probably barking up the wrong tree. Two, we still do not know whether it is lack of conviction on their part whoever is in the civilian government or lack of capacity to deliver on all those things that we want them to deliver in terms of the safety and security of our citizens. The bottomline is this that these mosquito bites must stop.

You would call the attacks mosquito bites?

Well, I think we are too powerful a country. We should not undermine our own strength and our own stature by reducing ourselves to that. I don't think it is more than very itchy mosquito bites. India is not going to be pushed and shoved by a mosquito bite. I think it is important that we get beyond the pranks and tricks of the past and make a serious effort to take forward the investment that both countries have made in the peace initiative.

Do we expect any changes in our relationship with China with a new leadership taking over?

The signals they have given us are very good. So far we have not had any eyeball-to-eyeball contact. But our Prime Minister developed a very good working relationship with the previous Chinese government. We have been given to understand that there is going to be continuity and enhancement of the relationship. We are very happy with that and we will reciprocate it. The good thing is the fundamental understanding that difficult issues will not keep us away from moving forward on areas of convergence. It is already articulated by them, by us and by the new Government in China and we reiterate that as well.

196. Prime Minister condoles the loss of lives in the earthquake in Pakistan.

New Delhi, April 17, 2013.

The Prime Minister has condoled the loss of lives and destruction in the earthquake in Pakistan. He has sent his condolence message to President Zardari of Pakistan

Excerpt of the Prime Minister's message is as follows:

"I was deeply saddened to learn of the damage and loss of life caused in Pakistan following the earthquake that struck the eastern region of Iran yesterday. While the reported magnitude of the earthquake is large, it is our sincere hope that its impact has been minimal. Our thoughts and prayers are with all those who have lost their dear ones, sustained injuries or suffered damage to their property. I am confident that under your leadership, your government and the people of Pakistan will come together to respond quickly and effectively to the natural disaster and help people rebuild their lives."

197. Joint Statement on Sixth meeting of the India-Pakistan Judicial Committee on Prisoners to Pakistan.

Lahore, April 30, 2013.

1. Members of the India-Pakistan Judicial Committee on Prisoners visited Pakistani Jails in Karachi, Rawalpindi and Lahore from April 26-May 1, 2013. The members of the Committee, Justice (Retd.) Mr A.S Gill and Justice (Retd) Mr. M.A Khan from the Indian side and Justice (Retd) Abdul Qadir Chaudhry, Justice (Retd.) Mr. Nasir Aslam Zahid and Justice (Retd.) Mian Muhammad Ajmal from Pakistan side visited the Jails.
2. A total number of 535 Indian prisoners including 483 fishermen (including 11 juveniles) and 8 civil prisoners, believed to be Indian nationals at District Jail Malir, Karachi, 8 Prisoners, believed to be Indian nationals at Adiyala Jail, Rawalpindi and 36 Prisoners, believed to be Indian nationals at Kot Lakhpat Jail, Lahore were presented before the Committee.
3. The Committee also visited Jinnah Hospital, Lahore and saw Indian prisoner Sarabjit Singh, who was admitted in the Intensive Care Unit of the Hospital on April 26, 2013 following an assault on him by few other inmates in the prison and is in a state of coma. The Committee interacted with the doctors about the prognosis of the case. The Committee noted the unfortunate incident of violent attacks on two Indian prisoners at Kot Lakhpat Jail, Lahore and recommended that Jail authorities to ensure adequate security for all Indian prisoners to avoid any such incident in the future; and would review the arrangements during its next visit to Kot Lakhpat Jail, Lahore. The Committee also recommended that detailed report of the official inquiry conducted by relevant Pakistani authorities on the assault on Sarabjit Singh on April 26, 2013 be shared with the members of the Committee at the earliest.
4. The Committee was also informed about escape of one under-trial Indian fisherman from District Jail, Malir, Karachi on February 11, 2013 and detention of the crew of the two Indian wooden vessels along with its cargo, off Pasni, Pakistan on April 18/19 by Pakistan authorities and requested Pakistan side to apprise about these two incidents to Indian side at the earliest.

5. The Committee noted with satisfaction that as per the Agreement on Consular Access signed on 21st May 2008 between the two countries, the list of prisoners was exchanged on 1st January 2013. The Committee appreciated the release of 684 Indian fishermen and 30 Indian civil prisoners by Pakistani authorities and 96 Pakistani fisherman and 59 Pakistani civil prisoners by Indian authorities since January 2012 till date.
6. On the conclusion of the visit, the Committee made the following recommendations:
 - a) The “Consular Access Agreement” of May 2008 signed between two governments be implemented in letter and spirit and consular access must be provided within three months of the arrest and not after completion of the prisoners’ prison term. Complete details of charges on the prisoners and a copy of court’s judgment of the sentence be shared in each case. The prisoners must be repatriated within one month of confirmation of national status and completion of sentences; it was noticed that in District Jail Malir, Karachi, there were 29 Indian prisoners who had completed their sentence more than a month ago; it was recommended that they be released and repatriated before May 17, 2013 and the two Governments should make all efforts that the time schedule is complied with strictly.
 - b) Consular access must be provided immediately to all those prisoners who have not been given consular access so far and the process of nationality confirmation should start immediately after consular access is provided; it was found that there were 459 fishermen and 10 such civil prisoners in the three jails for whom consular access was not provided. The Committee recommended providing consular access to all such prisoners and fishermen before May 17 and the Pakistani side agreed for the same.

- c) Consular access be provided to all prisoners/fishermen who are believed to be Indian, in Pakistani jails and vice versa, every year, at least four times, namely in the first week of February, first week of May, first week of August, and first week of November.
- d) The Committee noted that several names of prisoners had been dropped from the successive lists of prisoners, believed to be Indian, which were shared by Pakistan side twice every year. It is recommended that Pakistan side provide a formal verification to Indian side and vice versa if any names were left out from the previous list of prisoners, so that each side could follow up on each case and discrepancy in list maintained by each side reduced.
- e) A mechanism should be developed for compassionate and humanitarian consideration to be given to women, juvenile, mentally challenged, old aged and all those prisoners suffering from serious illness/permanent physical disability; Indian prisoners (like Pakistani prisoners in Karachi jail) should be allowed to make phone calls to their relatives in India at least once a month. The Indian prisoners appreciated the provision of basic necessities to them by the Prison and further demanded that they should be given some additional facilities. It is recommended that the existing facilities be continued and additional facilities required be provided by the Prison Authorities. Further, High Commission of India is allowed to supplementing any such requests for Indian prisoners.
- f) It was also recommended that serious/terminally ill, mentally challenged and deaf and mute prisoners must be kept in appropriate hospitals/special institutions irrespective of confirmation of their national status and offence; it would noticed that 1 prisoner in District Jail, Malir, Karachi, 2 prisoners in Adiyala Jail, Rawalpindi and 20 prisoners in Kot Lakhpat Jail, Lahore were mentally challenged; additionally, copies of the FIR, medical report and photograph at the time of their detention, to be shared with the High Commission of India, so that renewed efforts could be made to confirm their nationality; moreover, effort should also be made to rule out that these prisoners are not Pakistani nationals.

- g) While noting that mortal remains of Mr Chambail Singh, Indian prisoner at Kot Lakhpat Jail, was repatriated to India after a lapse of nearly 2 months after his death on January 15, 2013, the copy of the post mortem report has not yet been shared with Indian side. It was recommended that post mortem report of Mr Chambail Singh be shared with the Indian side without any further delay.
- h) Prisoners involved in minor offences like violation of Foreigners' Act, visa violation and inadvertent border crossing deserve compassion from both the sides.
- i) The Committee noted that the respective courts must be requested for expeditious trial of all "under trial" prisoners. Respective High Commissions should create a panel of good repute lawyers/firms to pursue the cases of their prisoners in the local courts to locate, identify and defend such prisoners at all stages of their cases, if the prisoner(s) so wishes.
- j) The Committee also endorsed the recommendations of the Home/Interior Secretary level talks held on 28-29 March 2011 at New Delhi to task the Pakistani Maritime Security Agency and Coast Guard of India to work on setting up a mechanism for release of inadvertent crossers (fishermen) and their boats, on the same lines as the inadvertent crossers on land; It was recommended that the fishermen should be repatriated by sea lanes along with their boats; a delegation of boat owners could visit Pakistan within the next 3 months to inspect all the Indian fishing boats detained in Pakistan so that decision could be taken regarding their return to India or sale in Pakistan, in consultation with concerned authorities and the same action be taken for return of Pakistani fishing vessels detained in India.

- k) It was suggested that, subject to the confirmation of dates by both the sides through diplomatic channels, the next visit of the Committee to Indian jails will be arranged during the second half of September 2013 for at least 7- 9 days to ensure that the Committee is able to see each case in detail.
- l) The Committee will review the action taken report on the earlier recommendations when the Committee meets next in India.

Justice (Retired) Abdul Qadir Chaudhry

Justice (Retired) Mr. Nasir Aslam Zahid

198. Passing away of Sarabjit Singh in Lahore Jail.
Official Spokesperson's response to question on Shri Sarabjit Singh.

New Delhi, May 1, 2013.

We are concerned at the condition of Shri Sarabjit Singh indicated by reports made available by doctors treating him in Jinnah Hospital.

Our High Commissioner has met the Pakistan Foreign Secretary and urged the Government of Pakistan to immediately release Shri Sarabjit Singh on humanitarian and sympathetic grounds so that he can benefit from the best available treatment in India.

Alternatively we have also proposed that Shri Sarabjit Singh should be sent to a third country for proper medical treatment.

This is not the time for invoking legal and bureaucratic reasons for not taking the right steps to save a human life. We believe that every endeavour should be made to save his life.

On May 2, the Ministry of External Affairs issued another press release on learning the demise of Sarabjit Singh.

We express great anguish at the demise of Shri Sarabjit Singh who succumbed to injuries after the brutal attack on him in Kot Lakhpat jail. This was, put simply, the killing of our citizen while in the custody of Pakistan jail authorities. We demand that the Government of Pakistan conducts a thorough investigation to identify those who were responsible, and ensure that they are punished.

We share the pain and sorrow of Sarabjit Singh's family. We have asked the Pakistani authorities to release the body of Sarabjit Singh so that he can be given a funeral in India and among his own people.

The shocking attack on Shri Sarabjit Singh highlights the need for concerted action by Pakistan to safeguard Indians in Pakistani jails.

On the same day (May 2) the Spokesperson of the MEA held a press briefing on the sad demise of Sarabjit Singh:

Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson - May 2, 2013

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin):

Q: Can you please throw some light on these things. Has the aircraft with Sarabjit Singh's body taken off from Lahore for Amritsar? Were the Indian officials there during the autopsy? By when do we expect the autopsy report to be shared and the proceedings thereon?

Official Spokesperson: Let me confirm to you that an aircraft has taken off from Delhi at 3:46 p.m. The flying time to Lahore approximately is an hour. So, we expect that aircraft to reach there in about 45 minutes time. As of now there are no passengers except for the crew on that aircraft. It is an Air India aircraft.

As regards its return flight, it is expected that the aircraft will fly from Lahore to Amritsar and on that flight will be two officials of the Indian High Commission there, Counsellor Dr. Acquino Vimal and Mr. Dasgupta who is the Attache there. It is expected that the aircraft will be received on arrival there by the Minister of State for External Affairs Ms Preet Kaur.

As regards other issues that you raised in terms of the autopsy and whether there was anybody from the Indian Mission there, as all of you are aware, an autopsy is a medical procedure and only medically-qualified personnel can attend that and can discern what is happening. So, obviously we do not have anybody there. As and when the autopsy report is received, we will of course communicate it to the family members. At this stage I do not have information on how long the timeline would be for receiving that report.

Q: Did Pakistan consult with India before taking Sarabjit off the life-support systems, and had India asked for being informed before the life-support systems were taken off?

Official Spokesperson: I think I resent the question that you ask us that we would ever be consulted on such a matter and we would ever be party to such a decision. Please understand that all of us have been toiling to try and ensure that an Indian citizen's life is saved. And do you think that this sort of an issue will ever be raised with the Indian High Commission? I think this issue is just off the table. Never was this an issue. Nobody raised it with us. We did not expect this to be raised because our idea was to ensure that he lives as long as possible and not to turn off his life-support systems. So, I totally resent even an allusion to that.

Q: Is there any thinking within the Government to take up Sarabjit's case politically? So far we have seen diplomats talk with diplomats. Politically will the Government take up Sarabjit's case from here on?

Official Spokesperson: At this stage our primary focus is to ensure that the body of Shri Sarabjit Singh comes back to India as early as possible and he is given a funeral among his near and dear. That is the primary focus and we have had interactions at various levels on this. We have had the Foreign Secretary talk to his counterpart. We have had the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan talk to the Chief Minister of Punjab. We have had our Deputy High Commissioner talk there with various officials in Islamabad. We have had our officials dealing with Pakistan in touch with officials of the Pakistani High Commission. So, let me assure you that everything possible is being done at all levels.

If there is a requirement of anything else that requires a further initiative at any level, I am certain there would not be any hesitation in any segment of the Indian state to provide assistance or to ensure that our goals are met in this context.

Q: Obviously this has a long history, goes back 23 years. Has the Indian Government ever expressed an official position on where it stands, on whether or not Mr. Singh was guilty of the allegations that were levelled at him by Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: This is not a new story, we have raised it at every level. And if we did not think that this was a case deserving of humanitarian and sympathetic consideration, we would not have raised it even at the level of the Prime Minister of India in his summit level meeting as far back as in 2005 with President Musharraf. Since then we have raised it on numerous occasions at all levels - at the level of the Foreign Minister, at the level of the Home Minister, at the level of the Foreign Secretary, at the level of our High Commission there. And in each of these cases we have reiterated the need to deal with this sympathetically and in a humanitarian manner. If we were not convinced of that, we would not have done that.

Q: You have made clear your belief that the case should be treated humanely. But has the Government ever stated whether or not it believes he is guilty or innocent of the allegations that were levelled at him by Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: If he was considered guilty, we would not have pursued his case ever.

Q: Do you think that the Pakistani Government or the jail authorities did enough to provide Sarabjit Singh security while he was in prison?

Official Spokesperson: It is the norm worldwide that ensuring the safety and security of prisoners, and this includes Sarabjit Singh, when they are incarcerated in prisons is the responsibility of the state authorities. Therefore, there cannot be two arguments in terms of the responsibility of the authorities in this matter. We have taken this up previously. In fact when we had concerns about the safety and security on this issue following the death of another Indian prisoner, Chamel Singh, in January, we had triggered what is known as the Judicial Committee. This is a mechanism of retired Justices of the Indian and Pakistani courts who visit prisons to see about the conditions of prisoners in the country concerned.

Despite not having talks at the official level or at the political level, we pursued with this following the incident in the case of Shri Chamel Singh and finally were able to convince the Pakistani authorities to accept the visit of the Judicial Commission. Alas, we must confess that by the time they reached Lahore, Sarabjit Singh was in hospital. And I understand a couple of days ago they did visit him. So, the point that I would like to make is that we have raised this issue of safety and security in the context of the Judicial Committee, and that is the mechanism available to us.

Q: How many Indian prisoners are there in Pakistani jails? Would we also be taking up their cases?

Official Spokesperson: We exchange lists of prisoners on the 1st of January every year. As per that lists, since then there has been addition, there were 215 Indian fishermen in Pakistani prisons. Also according to the list that the Pakistani authorities gave us, 215 fishermen, and 55 Indian nationals other than fishermen were in prison. So, that is the list. However, since then there has been an accretion in these categories but this is a work in progress. If you take the baseline as 1st of January, that is where it is.

Q: Do you propose to take this issue to some international forum?

Official Spokesperson: India and Pakistan are wedded to bilateralism. You are all aware of our long-stated position on that. We know each other well, we understand each other well, and we will continue to follow the pattern that has governed our relationship in the past.

199. Response of the Official Spokesperson to query on the incident involving a Pakistani prisoner.

New Delhi, May 3, 2013.

“We are aware of the regrettable incident involving a Pakistani prisoner, Sanaullah Ranjay, who was injured today during an altercation with another inmate of a jail in Jammu.

The matter is being investigated and the guilty will be punished. As you are aware an advisory had been issued to strengthen security for Pakistani prisoners in Indian jails. Safety and security of prisoners in custody lies with the jail authorities and necessary action is being taken.

We are in touch with the Pakistani High Commission in New Delhi on the matter. The injured is receiving medical treatment and once the medical arrangements are in place consular access will be provided.

There are 535 Indian prisoners (including 483 fishermen) in Pakistani jails and a total of 272 Pakistani prisoners in Indian jails.

We had requested the joint Judicial Committee to visit jails in Pakistan. This was the Committee’s sixth meeting and they have made some recommendations.

In view of the tragic events that include the killing of two Indian prisoners in Pakistani jails and the incident involving a Pakistani prisoner in a jail in Jammu today there is a need to take stock of the current measures in place to ensure the safety, security and humane treatment of Indian and Pakistani prisoners in each others jails. For this, we are proposing a meeting of the concerned authorities of both countries to study the recommendations and identify and put in place further measures to avoid such tragic incidents in future.”

200. Official Spokesperson's response to a query on the demise of Pakistani prisoner Sanaullah Ranjay.

New Delhi, May 9, 2013.

(This response was in continuation of what the Spokesman had said on May 3., 2013 about the demise of Sanaullah Ranjay)

“Sanaullah Ranjay, a Pakistani prisoner undergoing imprisonment in a terrorism related case at the Kot Bhalawal Jail Jammu, died today. The Pakistani prisoner, who was injured on May 3, had been airlifted to PGI Chandigarh and has been receiving the best possible medical treatment. Unfortunately he succumbed to his injuries. The body will be handed over to the Pakistan High Commission officials who are presently in Chandigarh along with two members of the prisoner's family. All facilities will be extended to facilitate the repatriation of the body.

In view of the recent tragic incidents that have involved the killing of two Indian prisoners in Pakistani jails, there is an urgent need to examine the recommendations that have been submitted by the India-Pakistan Joint Judicial Committee that visited Pakistani jails from April 26 to May 1, 2013. Both sides also need to take stock of the measures currently in place for ensuring safety, security and humane treatment of prisoners in each other's jails.

We would like to reiterate the offer made by us on May 3, calling for a meeting with the relevant Pakistani authorities to take immediate steps to enhance the safety, security and humane treatment of Indian prisoners in Pakistani jails.”

201. Felicitations of Prime Minister on the victory of Nawaz Sharif in Pakistan's elections.

New Delhi, May 12, 2013.

(Prime Minister extended his congratulations to Mr. Nawaz Sharif and his party for their emphatic victory in Pakistan's elections. He conveyed India's desire to work with the new government of Pakistan in charting a new course for the relationship between the two countries and invited Mr. Sharif to visit India at a mutually convenient time.)

Text of Prime Minister's congratulatory message:

"Dear Mian Saheb,

I am writing to extend to you my heartiest congratulations on your emphatic victory in the general elections in Pakistan. You have received a strong mandate to lead Pakistan towards a stable, peaceful and prosperous future. I wish you all success in meeting the hopes and expectations of your people as you prepare to assume your new responsibilities.

This historic election is also significant victory for democracy in Pakistan. The people of India have watched with admiration the people of Pakistan braving violence and strife and turning out in large numbers to affirm their democratic rights. The Pakistani people and the political parties in Pakistan deserve all credit for strengthening the framework of democracy in their country by participating in these elections despite facing enormous challenges.

The people of India also welcome your publicly articulated commitment to a relationship between India and Pakistan that is defined by peace, friendship and cooperation. I look forward to working with you and your government to chart a new course and pursue a new destiny in the relations between our countries. I would also like to extend an invitation to you to visit India at a mutually convenient time.

My wife joins me in extending to you and Begum Saheba our best wishes.

With warm regards"

202. Press Release issued by the Prime Minister's Office on the meeting of Prime Minister's Special Envoy with the Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif.

New Delhi, May 27, 2013.

As a follow up to the conversation between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Mian Nawaz Sharif, President, Pakistan Muslim League – N on 12 May 2013, Prime Minister's Special Envoy Satinder K. Lambah visited Lahore on Monday, 27 May 2013. Special Envoy Lambah conveyed to Mian Nawaz Sharif Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's greetings and good wishes for his tenure as Prime Minister of Pakistan. Mian Nawaz Sharif conveyed his deep appreciation for Prime Minister Singh's message. They took the opportunity to discuss ways to take the dialogue process forward to address all issues of concern to the two countries and to advance peace, friendship and cooperation between the two South Asian neighbours.

* Satinder Lambah was High Commissioner to Pakistan between 1992 and 1995 and his tenure partly coincided with Sharif's first term as PM (1990-93). He has been involved in back-channel talks for the last 10 years. On May 12, Prime Minister Manohan Singh had conveyed India's desire to work with Sharif to chart "a new course" in Indo-Pak relations. He had also invited Sharif to India at a mutually-convenient time.

203. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question on the Visit of Pakistan Prime Minister's Special Envoy Ambassador Shahryar Khan.

New Delhi, July 5, 2013.

"Pakistan Prime Minister's Special Envoy, Ambassador Shahryar Khan, is on a visit from 4-6 July 2013. He called on Prime Minister on 5 July at 7 RCR. The Special Envoy carried a letter from the Pakistan Prime Minister addressed to Prime Minister.

During this visit to India, Ambassador Shahryar Khan also called on External Affairs Minister and National Security Adviser to the Prime Minister and met Prime Minister's Special Envoy Shri Satinder Lambah and Foreign Secretary."

* The Special envoy arrived in New Delhi when the Defence Minister A. K. Antony was in Beijing and Pakistan's Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif too was in that city. According to media reports Mr. Khan held discussions with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, National Security Advisor Shivshankar Menon, the Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh and Dr. Singh's Special Envoy Satinder Lambah who had visited Pakistan in May. Media quoting High-level sources, said it would not be accurate to call the meetings back channel or Track Two negotiations. "It only signals reinforced engagement, consonant with the imperatives of better relations."

204. Su Moto Statement in Parliament by Defence Minister A.K. Antony on the ambush incident on the Line of Control in J&K.

New Delhi, August 6, 2013.

A patrol of Indian Army comprising of one Non Commissioned Officer and five Other Ranks was ambushed on our side of Line of Control in Punch Sector of J&K early morning on August 6, 2013. In the ensuing firefight, five Indian soldiers were martyred and one soldier was injured. The ambush was carried out by approximately 20 heavily armed terrorists along with persons dressed in Pakistan Army uniforms.

The numbers of infiltration attempts have doubled this year in comparison to the corresponding period(1 Jan- 5 Aug) of 2012. There has also been 57 Cease Fire Violations this year which is 80% more than the violations last year during the same corresponding period. The Indian Army successfully eliminated 19 hardcore terrorists in the recent months of July and August along the Line of Control and in the hinterland in J&K. The effective counter infiltration grid on the Line of Control has ensured that 17 infiltration bids were foiled this year.

* The ambush on a group of Indian soldiers in Poonch had triggered a national outrage and a demand by the opposition for the government to abandon plans for talks with Pakistan. However, there were conflicting statements on who killed the Indians, adding a worrying dimension to the debate. The press release of the Ministry of Defence from Jammu said: "A patrol of Indian Army comprising of one Non Commissioned Officer and five Other Ranks was ambushed by a Pak Border Action Team close to the Line of Control in Punch Sector of J&K early morning on 6 August 2013. In the ensuing fire fighting, five Indian soldiers were martyred. The ambush was carried out by approximately 20 heavily armed terrorists along with soldiers of Pak Army." The Pakistan army however denied the charge.

The Jammu press communiqué was issued after collecting details from the Northern Army Command which was tasked to protect entire Jammu and Kashmir. Both India and Pakistan have Border Action Teams (BAT) which function as crack special forces often used as quick reaction teams to address emergencies at the border. The two differing reports created some misunderstanding in the public mind. In Parliament, Arun Jaitley, Leader of the Opposition in the Rajya Sabha, said that by attributing the attack to men dressed in Pakistani uniforms, the Defence Minister had let Islamabad off the hook. "Isn't the Government giving Pakistan a way out" he asked the minister. Later in the day, Defence Ministry withdrew the press release that conflicted with Mr Antony's version and said that it "regretted" releasing the statement. Media quoted senior officials to suggest that it well might be a way of keeping the dialogue process on with Pakistan. It may be recalled that the killing of two soldiers and beheading of one

We strongly condemn this unprovoked incident. Government of India has lodged strong protest with Government of Pakistan through diplomatic channels. I assure the House that our Army is fully ready to take all necessary steps to uphold the sanctity of LoC. Government of India conveys its condolences to the families of the martyrs who made the supreme sacrifice in the line of duty.

on January 8, 2013 just 40 kilometres away from the present attack had led to a suspension of dialogue between the two countries. However, with a new Government under Nawaz Sharif in Pakistan, India was looking to restart the dialogue process. Meanwhile Pakistan's Deputy High Commissioner Mansoor Ahmed Khan was called in by Rudrendra Tandon, Joint Secretary heading the MEA's Pakistan desk, and handed over to him a note verbale. External affairs minister Salman Khurshid said defence minister AK Antony's statement on the killing of five Indian soldiers by Pakistani troops was a "carefully thought out statement based on facts provided by the army" and there was no attempt to "let off Pakistan". Khurshid said the statement made by Antony in parliament by the Defence Minister was not contradictory and there was no scope of controversy. "See the corrected version of the Indian Army press release and match it with what the defence minister says, it is exactly the same. I don't think the statement is contradictory," said Khurshid.

205. Second Suo Moto Statement in the Lok Sabha by Defence Minister on Unprovoked attack on our Troops on our Side of Line of Control.

New Delhi,. August 8, 2013.

The brutal and unprovoked attack on an Indian patrol on our side of Line of Control (LC) on August 6, 2013 outraged us all. When I reported the incident to the House, it was Government's obligation to report the facts as we knew them at that point of time, and my statement was based on the available information.

Since then the Chief of the Army Staff has visited the area and gone into the details of the matter. It is now clear that the specialist troops of Pakistan Army were involved in this attack when a group from the Pakistan Occupied Kashmir (PoK) side crossed the LC and killed our brave jawans. We all know that nothing happens from Pakistan side of the Line of Control without support, assistance, facilitation and often, direct involvement of the Pakistan Army.

Those in Pakistan who are responsible for this tragedy and the brutal killing of two soldiers earlier this year should not go unpunished. Pakistan should also show determined action to dismantle the terrorist networks, organizations and infrastructure and show tangible movement on bringing those responsible for the Mumbai terrorist attack in November 2008 to justice quickly.

* Earlier on the same day, Syed Akbaruddin, Spokesman of the External Affairs Ministry, called on Pakistan to abide by its Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif's "publicly-articulated commitment" to seek a relationship of peace, friendship and cooperation with India. It must not allow its territory to be used for anti-India activities. The problem was the frequent instances of "unprovoked firing" from across the border whereas India feels upholding the sanctity of the LoC was the most important confidence building measure between the two countries, Mr. Akbaruddin told newsmen at an official briefing. "For peaceful dialogue to proceed, we need an environment free of violence and terror. And certainly what has happened last week doesn't fit into that. That said there was no timeline [for holding of talks]... We are considering these things and have factored in all subsequent developments also. We will take a call in due time," he said. He added Pakistan had suggested dates for Secretary-level talks on two of the outstanding issues. These would have preceded a proposed meeting between the two Prime Ministers towards the end of next month. While India was committed to resolving all outstanding issues through dialogue, "in the current context and the events of last week, we see that the upholding of the sanctity of the LoC is vital," he said.

Naturally, this incident will have consequences on our behaviour on the Line of Control and for our relations with Pakistan. Our restraint should not be taken for granted; nor should the capacity of our Armed Forces and resolve of the Government to uphold the sanctity of the LC ever be doubted.

206. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson.

New Delhi, August 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. I must say I am delighted by the sort of response that I got for not being able to meet you last week. It indicates that you were really missing out on meeting me. So, I am grateful to you all for the heartfelt desires that you have communicated both orally and also sometimes in print. I would like to assure you that we will always be there to try and communicate with you in various ways and will try and be available at your beck and call.

That said let us come down to more rudimentary business. I have a couple of announcements to make following which I am willing to answer any questions that you may have on those announcements or on anything else that you may like to ask other than those announcements.

For the Visit of Chadian Foreign Minister Please see Document No.....

(For the announcement of the visit of Special Envoy of the President of South Sudan please see Document No.....)

Q: My question is surprisingly on Pakistan! Nawaz Sharif has apparently once again reiterated that he wants talks with India to resolve all issues. While he is saying that, we have also seen an escalation of tensions along the Line of Control and the International Border with these repeated ceasefire violations. We are saying they are doing it, they are saying we are doing it. How do we respond to that?

Official Spokesperson: I will try and respond to this multiple question by answering once.

We welcome the publicly articulated commitment by the newly elected Prime Minister of Pakistan to seek a relationship with India that is defined by peace, friendship and cooperation. For our part, India is committed to resolve all outstanding issues with Pakistan through a peaceful bilateral dialogue in an environment free from violence and terror. In the current context and the events of the last week, we see that the upholding of the sanctity of the LOC is vital. It is to us one of the most important CBMs between the two countries. For us it is vital to uphold the sanctity of the LOC.

Unprovoked incidents on the LOC naturally have consequences for bilateral relations. We expect Pakistan to abide by its publicly stated commitment not to allow its territory or territories under its control to be used for terrorism and violence against India. We also look forward to determined action being undertaken to dismantle the terrorist networks and infrastructure as well as tangible movement on bringing to justice quickly those involved in the Mumbai terrorist attacks of November 2008.

I think I have answered all the points that you raised.

Q: As regular ceasefire violations are taking place on the Line of Control, what could be the reason for that? Is this in some way connected with the retirement of Gen. Kiani? His tour of duty is about to end on 28th November 2013. Is it connected with his retirement, that the army is creating such a situation? (free translation from Hindi text)

Official Spokesperson: What is your question?

Q: What are the reasons that the number of ceasefire violation cases are increasing continuously?

Official Spokesperson: I think this question needs to be answered by those who are involved in that. We have already said that these are unprovoked violations of the Line of Control. We have already just now said that for us this is the most important CBM. Therefore, anyone who violates it, your question should be directed to them.

Q: Akbar, despite a 10 million dollar bounty on his head, Hafiz Sayeed led the Eid prayers at Gaddafi Stadium in Lahore. Have you taken up the issue with Pakistan and more importantly with Americans? Also, can you talk about the Secretary-level talks which were to be taking place towards the month end, and also Nawaz Sharif and PM meeting? Possibly, if you are indulgent.

Official Spokesperson: Since you have asked three questions, I will choose the question that I want to answer. You asked more questions than one at your own peril and I will answer them. Let me take the easiest of the questions that you have asked, the Secretary-level dialogue.

First of all, my understanding is that we did receive, perhaps last month, proposals for some Secretary-level dialogue meetings which were to be hosted by Pakistan. Since then I have just told you that for a peaceful dialogue to proceed, we need an environment free of violence and terror. And certainly what has happened last week does not fit into that. But that said, there was no timeline of the type you are mentioning about that being held definitely by the date that you indicated. We are considering these things and have factored all subsequent developments also. We will take a call on this in due time and well ahead of what is required to be responded to.

Q: I wanted to ask the Hafiz Sayeed question. Does the Ministry of External Affairs have a view on Hafiz Sayeed leading a large prayer on Eid in Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: I think our view has been articulated on several occasions. We see him as the mastermind behind Mumbai 2008. We see him as somebody who we would like to bring to justice, and we will not rest until we fulfill that. Therefore, from that follows our clear view on anything that he does. Fugitives from justice need to be brought to justice.

Q: About the MFN status, Pakistan once again refused to give it to India.

Official Spokesperson: Why do I think that this is a sort of déjà vu? We have been on this path before. I do not think you should be surprised about the situation there. And let me clarify, as far as MFN is concerned, this is a commitment for States who joined the WTO to abide by. All States who are members of the WTO are expected to abide by it. What you have asked, we have seen this before and we have gone down this path. We will continue to address this issue as and when it is required.

Q: MEA and Foreign Ministry of Pakistan were trying hard as we heard for a meeting between Nawaz Sharif and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. Do you think still that working hard is going on or there is some slackness?

Official Spokesperson: Dr. Akhilesh, you have been covering us for a long time. You also are aware that announcements of meetings take place very few days before these happen. I just announced a meeting which happened earlier this morning. Following that track record that I would like to abide by, I would counsel all of you to be patient. The days that you are mentioning are quite some distance away. Between now and then let us see what developments take place. Let us be patient rather than jump the gun on this and before we announce it draw any conclusions.

Q: Pakistan has registered its complaints with the Indian High Commission and the MEA that protests are being made outside their High Commission and there is danger outside of it. What is Indian response to that? Is it desired to call of cultural engagements between the two countries? Some cultural engagements were cancelled recently. Programmes of some Pakistani singer has recently been cancelled?

Official Spokesperson: If you permit I shall like to answer the question in English. Thanks.

There has been information conveyed by the Pakistani High Commission to us about concerns about safety and security for both the High Commission and its building as well as the PIA and its offices. We have assured them that we will take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of Pakistani personnel in their diplomatic missions as well as the premises of the PIA here and in Mumbai.

As regards your other question about cultural events, these are private choices made by private individuals and I presume that it is best that you address those questions to them.

Q: As the Madam said, the artists, Sikh groups, Hindu groups who want to come here are being denied visa and their applications are mostly rejected. Is this due to cease fire violations? Or is it the policy of the government to deny them the visa? (free translations from Hindi text)

Official Spokesperson: I think that is a valid question and I will answer on a specific issue.

When requests for visa come to us, we take a holistic view of this. We did receive requests for visas recently for zaerin to visit New Delhi for the Nizamuddin Urs. In this case we have carefully considered the issue, and as a matter of abundant precaution and caution we have advised that those zaerin defer their visit to New Delhi in the current circumstances.

Q: Circumstances like security concerns? Local security ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I think we just preceded that question with her question about safety and security of personnel and premises in New Delhi and Mumbai, and my answer to that was quite clear. When I say abundant caution and precaution in terms of safety and security, zaerin was the focus.

Q: Sir, there is a cricket team that has applied for a visa. And, as you probably know, what has happened is that the Board has said that we will follow the instructions of the MEA and the Indian Government. This is for the team that was supposed to come for the Champions League. What has the Government decided on it? Will the Government ask the Pakistani team to come or will it not allow it to come?

Official Spokesperson: It is true that we have been approached for visas for a team from Pakistan to participate in the Champions League T20 Tournament. But my understanding is that that tournament does not start for more than a month. Now that we have received this request, we will carefully examine it and consider all aspects before we take a decision. Once we take that decision, we will communicate it both to those who have requested us as well as to all of you since you are always on the ball and know information of what is happening on a minute-to-minute basis.

Q: Akbar, our High Commission officials have been summoned in Islamabad at least a couple of times in the last few days. What is the burden of their song, what are they protesting against? In our view are those protests valid? Are their contentions valid?

Official Spokesperson: I think I have answered this before you came here about safety, security, etc. I think the answers are available on the record.

Thank you very much

207. Text of the Resolution passed by the Parliament against Pakistan on LoC killings.

New Delhi, August 14, 2013.

(Indian Parliament on Wednesday took a strong stand against Pakistan and passed a resolution against it over the recent killings of Indian jawans along the LoC by Pakistani troops. In a strongly-worded resolution, India warned Pakistan that, "Our restraint should not be taken for granted nor should the capacity of our armed forces to ensure the territorial integrity of our nation." Following is the full text of the resolution)

Honourable members,

This House rejects and deplores the resolution passed by the National Assembly of Pakistan on August 13, 2013 and the provincial Assembly of Punjab, which make absolutely baseless and unfounded allegations against Indian Army and the people of India. There should be absolutely no doubt in anyone's mind including members of the Pakistan National Assembly that it was the Pakistan Army that was involved in the unprovoked attack on an Indian Army patrol on our side of the LoC, on August 6, 2013.

It is unfortunate that Pakistan chose to indulge in such unprovoked attacks at a time when efforts were being made to establish a long-lasting framework of peaceful, friendly and co-operative ties so that both countries may hence forward devote their resources and energies to the pressing task of advancing the welfare of their people.

India is not a threat to Pakistan or the people of Pakistan. It is the terrorist groups that have been nurtured by Pakistan to target India and have become the biggest threat in the region. This House also strongly condemns the action of the Pakistan Army and reiterate once again that the entire state of Jammu and Kashmir including the territory forcibly and illegally occupied by Pakistan is an integral part of India and will always remain so.

India upholds the sanctity of the Line of Control and calls upon the government of Pakistan to abide by the ceasefire commitment of 2003 along the International Border and Line of Control both in letter and spirit. This House pays tribute to the courage and valour of the Indian armed force personnel who laid down their lives while upholding the sanctity of the Line of Control. Our restraint should not be taken for granted nor should the capacity of our armed forces to ensure the territorial integrity of our nation.

* The Resolution passed by the Pakistan National Assembly on August 13 against India read:

“This House unanimously condemns the unprovoked aggression by Indian military forces across the LoC in recent days. The House also condemns the attacks on the Pakistan High Commission and the demonstrations outside the PIA offices in New Delhi, and the efforts to prevent the Friendship Bus from proceeding to Pakistan. It deplores the unjustified public vilification of Pakistan in the Indian media.

“This house endorses the prime minister’s forceful statement urging effective steps to ensure the ceasefire on the LoC; not to allow the situation to drift and to take steps to improve atmosphere by engaging constructively with a view to building trust and confidence. This House accordingly calls upon the government to clearly convey to the government of India the necessity to respect and uphold the Ceasefire Agreement 2003 in letter and spirit.

“This House forcefully reiterates that while Pakistan is committed to working for peace with its neighbours, it remains steadfast in its resolve to fully defend its sovereignty, territorial borders and national interests.

“This House also reiterates that Pakistan shall continue to extend diplomatic, political and moral support for the just and legitimate struggle of the Kashmiri people for the realisation of their right to self-determination, as enshrined in the UN Security Council resolutions.

“This House forcefully reiterates that while Pakistan is committed to working for peace with its neighbours, it remains steadfast in its resolve to fully defend its sovereignty, territorial borders and national interests. It salutes its brave and valiant Armed Forces and assures them of its fullest support in achieving this objective.”

The resolution, moved by Science and Technology Minister Zahid Hamid, a senior leader of the ruling PML-N, endorsed Sharif’s “forceful statement” for effective steps to ensure the ceasefire on the Line of Control and to improve the atmosphere by engaging constructively to build trust and confidence.

208. Information supplied to the Rajya Sabha by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on India's trade with Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 14, 2013.

Bilateral trade between India and Pakistan is conducted mostly through Mumbai-Karachi sea route and Attari-Wagha land route. The year-wise and item-wise details of commodities of the total trade with Pakistan for last three financial years are given in Annexure.

The details of the trade in terms of value between India and Pakistan during last 3 financial years are given below:

(in US$ million)

Year	Exports	Imports	Total Trade
2010-11	2039.61	332.51	2372.12
2011-12	1541.57	401.19	1942.76
2013-13	1837.86	513.23	2351.09

Source: DGCIS, Kolkata

Incidents on the Line of Control in the past few months have not affected bilateral trade between India and Pakistan.

Bilateral trade dialogue with Pakistan was re-initiated with the 5th round of India-Pakistan Commerce Secretary level talks held at Islamabad in April 2011. This was followed by further rounds of talks held in November 2011 at Delhi and September, 2012 at Islamabad. Three Ministerial level dialogues were also held in September 2011, February 2012 and April 2012. The first ever bilateral visit of Commerce Minister of India to Pakistan was undertaken in February 2012.

Both sides have made considerable progress in improving bilateral trade ties. Pakistan has moved from a Positive List regime to a Negative List regime, which substantially increases the tradable items with India. India has similarly liberalized its earlier restrictions on inward/outward investment flows to Pakistan. Both sides also agreed on a detailed roadmap for Preferential Trading Arrangements under the SAFTA (South Asia Free Trade Area) process.

First India/Pakistan Joint Business Forum meeting was held in June 2013 in Islamabad. This forum also had very productive meeting with Pakistan Prime Minister for further improving bilateral trade ties.

209. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister on his informal meeting with Sartaj Aziz, Advisor to the Prime Minister of Pakistan on National Security and Foreign Affairs.

New Delhi, September 13, 2013.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): He will assure us of his assessment.

Q: You had an informal chat, what has been talked and what can be expected?

External Affairs Minister: We are staying together here. We had an informal chat. We were together at the same table at the dinner too, it was a good conversation. I drew his attention to the concerns in the country, about which the Prime Minister also spoke to you, when there is crisis looming on that issue, on that concern, When ever a high level discussion takes place, there is an effort for a better environment; whenever some incident takes place which creates concerns, then there is a need to correct the situation. If it works out well then the talks proceed further. If this does not happen, a lot of problem has to be faced. There is better understanding between us; our prime minister and it for them to decide, their prime minister could meet face to face. Understanding is important, only then we could proceed forward, the talks should be meaningful from both sides.

Another point has come up and we welcome that. The Bombay terror attack was a painful one, On that there should be farsighted and expeditious action, there is legal involvement too, the proceedings are on in the court; there is no prosecutor and he should be appointed, we want to know if the prosecutor has been appointed. Another point is that the court has not admitted the evidence, because cross examination of the people on our side, who are prisoners is still pending; the Judicial Commission is expected on 23rd to take the evidence. The evidence was taken last time also, and cross examination was also performed; then it can be before the court, this is a constructive step, and we welcome it. This is the way the atmosphere can be improved, a positive direction need to be given. I placed this before him.

Q: You feel that the atmosphere is becoming congenial again?

External Affairs Minister: It is not possible just to say this. What is understood is important; if they take constructive steps the atmosphere can change; and good will come out. In that atmosphere talks can move forward; With change of atmosphere I think it is not possible to take the talks further nor it is desirable.

Q: Did you also raise the issue of cross-border firing because last two, three months have been very... (Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: That is also part of the atmosphere. If there is no peace and tranquillity on the border and Line of Control, then all our efforts go waste frankly. That is the most critical confidence building and that is the most critical commitment that has been made by both countries together and both have to live up to it, which is that there must be peace on the Line of Control and peace on the border. The ceasefire is the basic fundamental ingredient of confidence between our two nations; and that ceasefire must be respected, the Line of Control must be respected.

Of course we talked about what is that can be done. I have emphasised that the mechanism in place, and there is a mechanism in place, should be used more effectively. Let us see beyond that how one can examine and how things will shape up. We still have a few days.

Q: Could you please repeat that 23rd thing in English?

External Affairs Minister: One emphasis that I think we have legitimately given to is public sentiment that expects some movement forward on issues that are very critical for us. And the Mumbai incident is, as you know, a very very very tragic and hurtful incident, and we want accountability for it. The process of accountability involves court proceedings.

We expected and hoped that the prosecutor would be soon appointed - the previous prosecutor was assassinated – and also that the evidence that was collected by the Judicial Commission can be made available to trial court. Because cross-examination had not been done, that evidence was not accepted by court. So, now a Judicial Commission will come again we have been told on the 23rd, which is the date that we had given. We welcome that and we welcome the appointment of the prosecutor. And we genuinely, honestly hope that now things can proceed faster and that we would see through court proceedings something substantive happening.

Q: Sir, if you do not mind, could you say something on Kyrgyzstan bilateral.

External Affairs Minister: Do not mind? I will be excited, I will be very happy! Thank God!

I had a very good meeting with the Foreign Minister, who I had earlier met in Almaty, and of course the Deputy Prime Minister. First Deputy Prime Minister had visited us in India and I had a good opportunity to talk to him then. He is a very very likeable person, and all of them are very positive for India. And then I had a very good meeting...(Inaudible)...

210. Prime Minister Condemns Terrorist Attack in Peshawar.
New Delhi, September 22, 2013.

The horrific suicide attack at a Church in Peshawar today is yet another deeply disturbing manifestation of the evil forces of terror. That the attack took place at a place of worship and claimed the lives of dozens of innocent worshipers makes this senseless act of violence even more tragic. Such barbaric acts are against the tenets of every religion. India condemns the terrorist attack in Peshawar in the strongest terms. We convey our deepest condolences to the families of the victims and wish speedy recovery to the injured.

* According to the media reports 70 people were killed in the terrorist attack on September 21, 2013.

211. Statement by Prime Minister condemning the terrorist attack on Hiranagar Police Station and the Army camp at Samba in Jammu and Kashmir.

New Delhi, September 26, 2013.

No words are strong enough to condemn the heinous terrorist attack on Hiranagar Police Station and the Army camp at Samba in Jammu and Kashmir this morning. I convey my heartfelt condolences to the families of the brave army and police officers, as well as the innocent civilians martyred in this cowardly attack. This is one more in a series of provocations and barbaric actions by the enemies of peace. We are firmly resolved to combat and defeat the terrorist menace that continues to receive encouragement and reinforcement from across the border. Such attacks will not deter us and will not succeed in derailing our efforts to find a resolution to all problems through a process of dialogue.

* A police station in Kathua in Jammu & Kashmir was attacked by militants dressed in Army uniform. Six policemen and one civilian were killed in this attack on Hiranagar police station in Kathua district. Militants also launched another attack on an Army camp in Samba sector and one policeman has been reported killed. These militant attacks have come barely three days ahead of the meeting between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and his Pakistani counterpart Nawaz Sharif in New York on the sidelines of the UN general assembly meet.

212. Media Briefing by National Security Advisor on Meeting between Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan.

New York, September 29, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning friends and thank you for being here this morning and for waiting for our media interaction.

I have here with me on my right the National Security Advisor Mr. Shivshankar Menon, and on his right is the Foreign Secretary of India Mrs. Sujatha Singh.

The meeting between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif has just ended and we have requested the National Security Advisor to brief you. So, I will ask the National Security Advisor to make his opening remarks.

National Security Advisor (Shri Shivshankar Menon): Thank you Akbar.

As you know, the Prime Minister and Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif met for a little over an hour just now. They reviewed the state of the relationship between India and Pakistan, and discussed what steps are necessary as we go forward.

They were both agreed that the precondition for a forward movement in the relationship, which they both desire, is really an improvement of the situation on the LOC where there have been repeated ceasefire violations and incidents. This was discussed at some length and they decided to task the DGMOs to suggest effective means to restore the ceasefire and a way forward to ensure that that remains in force and in place.

They also discussed various other aspects of the relationship. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh of course mentioned terrorism and the need for effective action on bringing the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks to book. Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif said that that was indeed Pakistan's intention, and now that the Judicial Commission has just returned to Pakistan after gathering depositions and evidence in India that there would be further progress on that.

There was also some discussion on the other aspects of the relationship, on the need to see that earlier understandings on trade, economic and other relations. But the basic understanding emerging from the meeting was that all that would be possible once we have dealt with the immediate issues and the immediate situation that we face today.

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif also mentioned other issues like Siachen and Sir Creek. All those I think are issues which are well-known.

Our overall impression from the meeting was that it was useful because it provided an occasion for high-level contact and discussion on the issues which are troubling the relationship, and this was necessary at this time. We will now see how both sides take it forward over the next few months.

I think I will stop there and maybe open this up to questions from your side.

Q: Any possibility of a concrete mechanism like a new Committee of DGMO and the Foreign Secretary or something like that?

National Security Advisor: What I said to you was the decision was to task DGMOs to come up with a clear plan to restore the ceasefire and to make sure that it is enforced and stays in place.

Q: You said that it was made clear that an end to terrorism is a prerequisite for any dialogue. What was his reaction to this requirement, did he give some suggestion to end terrorism?

National Security Advisor: I think it was clear from what I just said to you earlier that the issue of action on perpetrators of Mumbai, the issue of terrorism as a whole was mentioned. On the Pakistani's side, Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif mentioned the incidents of terrorism that Pakistan is also suffering from. But he also said that there would be action on the Mumbai cases and now that the Judicial Commission has been in India and has gathered depositions and evidence which they could use.

Q: You said the first thing that the Prime Minister agreed was to enforce ceasefire along the LOC in Kashmir. Was there any discussion towards restoring the peace process in its entirety? And was there a discussion to a commitment towards resolving the underlying cause of tension between the two nations?

National Security Advisor: My understanding is that both sides wish to see a better India-Pakistan relationship than we have today, and that in this meeting it was also clear that for both of us precondition is really to address the immediate issues that we have, which is to restore peace and tranquillity along the Line of Control. From our point of view an issue that is very important is to address the terrorism issue and we are making progress on that. Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif mentioned many issues from the Pakistani point of view as well. But I think right now our effort is focused on making it possible to move towards a broader dialogue, and that stage has not come yet.

Q: It was a good meeting from our angle. We are happy that we are going to re-establish the relations. We have shown accommodation that we are prepared to go ahead. Our President (Pakistani) want to go ahead, if you taper off your anger, show flexibility, show accommodation. The journey will restart. What would you like to say? (a question from a Pakistani journalist)

National Security Advisor: flexibility!

That is your interpretation. What I am saying to you is the sense that I came away from the meeting. I am not going to comment on what you have said.

Q: There was a lot of ice on this meeting in terms of questioning what it can achieve and whether it can take even the composite dialogue, which has been stalled for many years, forward. While you have talked about terrorism and the discussion on it, what steps do you... (Inaudible)...how Pakistan and India could really get back on track to that higher level? And is that likely at all in the next one or two years?

National Security Advisor: As I said, I think both sides want a much better relationship, and the composite dialogue was one of the means towards that. But in order to get there I think today we are at the stage where we need to address the issues that we face today. We have incidents on the Line, we have ceasefire violations, we need to deal with those. We have terrorism related issues also, we need to address those. And then we hope to move it forward. But I am not an astrologer. I cannot tell you the future whether it will happen in a year, two years or quicker. But the desire was clearly there on both sides to have a better relationship than we have it today.

Q: You described the meeting to be useful and necessary at this point. Would you say that assurances you have got Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on terrorism were satisfactory? Did they address specific Indian concerns especially with groups like the Lashkar-e-Tayyiba and Hafiz Saeed? And is there any agreement on when to meet again?

National Security Advisor: There was no decision on another meeting at this stage. As for how useful and how productive the meeting was, I think the only proof will be in the months to come.

Q: You mentioned that for talks to progress between India and Pakistan terrorism needs to be tackled first. Could you please elaborately specifically what steps bringing the culprits responsible for the Mumbai attacks, and what actions need to be taken for us to see talks progressing?

National Security Advisor: I do not think we are going to negotiate this in public through the media. I think both sides know what the issues are. We also know what we have to do, each of us. I think India and Pakistan know each other well enough that I am not going to go through giving you a list of steps that must be done, must not be done, and so on.

Q: Did Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif extend an invitation to Prime Minister Singh?

National Security Advisor: He did.

Q: When will the meeting take place?

National Security Advisor: I think he invited Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to visit Pakistan. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh also invited Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif to visit India. They both accepted the invitations. No dates have been set yet.

Q: Were there any takeaways at all? What specific takeaways for India?

National Security Advisor: I thought I have given you all the takeaways.

Q: Like what? The specifics.

National Security Advisor: A common understanding that we will address the specific issues that we have today in order to be able to move forward on the dialogue and to improve the relationship.

Q: When the Prime Minister met with US President Obama, the specific issue of the funding of the Jamaat-ud-Dawa by the Punjab Government, something Mr. Sharif's party actually runs, was brought out. Was that specific issue brought up when Prime Minister Manmohan Singh spoke to Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif?

National Security Advisor: It did come up in the course of the conversation.

Q: It is being said that in their talks, there was influence of their internal issues; particularly on the Indian prime minister; When the BJP is opposing this meeting and created difficulty for the prime minister, under these circumstances, in which the talks were held, you could perceive the influence of that from both the sides, particularly on the Indian prime minister? Did the Baluchistan problem come up for discussion, the proof of which (interference) was given at Sharm-al-Sheikh by the then prime minister

National Security Advisor: I think we are two sovereign states dealing with each other. And the principle on which we at least act is not to interfere in each other's internal affairs. We are neighbours. And as the Prime Minister has said, you can choose your friends, you cannot choose your neighbours. You have to deal with these issues that we face in the relationship, and we will continue to do so.

Balochistan was mentioned. I think Prime Minister has made it clear in the meeting and also in other contexts that there is no question of India interfering in Pakistan's internal affairs in any way. If there is any evidence of this, we have not seen it. We will be happy to look into it if it were given to us.

Q: Given all the questions that were raised over the meeting by the terrorism, Pakistan also having some reservations, both Prime Ministers said that there is going to be a movement forward with it, as you have just mentioned. But how many steps can they take? Can they take more steps than what it is now? Or can they go backwards?

National Security Advisor: As I said, my impression of the meeting was it was useful, it was constructive, but you need to deal with the issues as we face them, and we need to fix what we have right now and then move on to see. But there was clearly desire on both sides for a much better relationship. And that goal I do not think is in question. So, I am not sure that we can talk of it going backward. I think what we need to do is to do the hard work on the relationship in the next few months.

Q: Did the situation in Afghanistan figure in the dialogue? If it did, what specific issues were discussed?

National Security Advisor: Only in passing.

Q: You have mentioned the unfinished agenda of trade earlier. Was that issue taken up? Was there discussion on granting India MFN status finally which they had promised last September and moving forward on other issues of trade?

National Security Advisor: There was some discussion of the MFN issue, of the opening up of the border to increase trade. There was a roadmap which had been agreed earlier, you remember, which has been paused as it were. And there was some talk of how we could hope to move towards that. But no timetable set now.

Q: (since the answer is incomplete it is difficult to translate the answer) Mera saval yeh hai ki, aap vahan bhi rahe hain jaante hai, is dauran-e-muzakrat kisi bhi ... (Inaudible)... par Indian Prime Minister Mr. Manmohan Singh ne Pakistan ke Vazir-e-Azam Nawaz Sharif ko appreciate kiya, ... (Inaudible)... unhon ne stand diya hua hai, kyunke isi stand par, misaal joh hai Pakistan mein Vazir-e-Azam joh hai phasi ke ... (Inaudible)... pahunchaaye gaye hain yaa overthrow kiye gaye hain, kahin in muzakrat mein defense budget rejection ki baat ayi toh Prime Minister kehte rahe hain pichhle teen dinon se, Pakistani Prime Minister.

National Security Advisor: There was not any mention in this meeting of the defence budget. But it is clear that both Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif spoke of their desire for a better relationship, but they also were very conscious of the difficulties and the issues that stand in the way of realizing that. And that was discussed in some detail during the meeting.

Q: How long did the meeting take place? And Prime Minister Singh talked about the epicentre of terror in Pakistan. There are many people in Pakistan who would have serious concerns about the epicentre of terror in India. Is there any way India can address the concerns of both people of Pakistan?

National Security Advisor: I certainly have not heard of any of such concern. If somebody has any evidence, we will be happy to look at it. I have said this before. But there is no proof. There is absolutely no proof of any export of terror from India. I wish I could say the same in reverse.

Q: You said in your opening statement, you talked about the cross-border violations, You said that DGMO level talks would be strengthened. I would like to know,inaudible.....
Inaudible)... the tension in relations has been caused by the LoC violations, were the Indian soldiers killed?. Defence Minister referred to the role of the Pakistan army, Did the PM said like this? Has the Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif accepted it? Did he assured of some additional steps or some other action?

National Security Advisor: I think I started the briefing by saying exactly that that was discussed, that both sides agreed that they need to deal with that issue first, that peace and tranquility on the LOC is a precondition for further movement in the relationship. Both agreed on this and both have tasked the DGMOs to do so, to restore the ceasefire and to prevent incidents and to suggest how we do that.

Q: Is there any timeline set for the two DGMOs to come out with suggestions for effective measures?

National Security Advisor: No. But we would like it as soon as possible.

Q: before this dialogue, Nawaz Sharif has said that there can be talks, What is Indian reaction? Would he accept it as a new beginning?

National Security Advisor: I think the meeting itself, as I described the results to you, shows that we have had a high level exchange. We have actually achieved a new stage. We now have some understanding of how we can move forward. And I think that in itself is an advance on where we were one-and-a-half hours ago.

Q: Do you see Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif as a good partner to work with for peace?

National Security Advisor: As I said, both sides wanted a much better relationship and I am not going to get into characterising the Prime Minister of a neighbouring country.

Q: There is agreement or there is only offer of meeting between the DGMOs? Nawaz Sharif had offered UN investigation on the attacks on the LoC, the violations by India on Paksitan territory. Inaudible.....

National Security Advisor: As I said, we need to find a way to prevent incidents. There is no question that today we have these incidents happening, we have ceasefire violations. Let them come up with a way of stopping this. Let both the DGMOs meet and find a way of doing this.

Q: Following up with what Ashish just asked you, did you all come away with the impression that Nawaz Sharif, the Prime Minister of Pakistan, actually has control over his army?

National Security Advisor: I... (Inaudible)... with Pakistan, as I said to another question, about their internal affairs. We do not interfere in their internal affairs.

As... (Inaudible)... said, there is no awkward questions, there would not be awkward answers. And you are not going to get one back.

Q: Both countries have signed... (Inaudible)... in December. People-to-people contacts are really important to bring the two countries together. Did they discuss an open-visa regime?

National Security Advisor: I think we have liberalised the visa regime within the last six months actually. In fact we have taken steps and both sides have done some things unilaterally and some things I think we have agreed between ourselves. But today that did not come up.

Q: Do you think that this particular meeting was very heavily influenced by the act of Mr. Rahul Gandhi trailing upon that Ordinance and plus the international election campaign of both the parties in India and due to that Pakistan has been made a punching bag of all these extremist statements?

National Security Advisor: Short answer: No.

Question: You are witness to the fact that the our Prime Minister had been talking to Pakistan Prime Minister for many years; My question is: is this meeting different from other meetings? Do you have hope that something will come out of this meeting?

National Security Advisor: I think each such meeting is different. It is not only because the context is different but because the state of the relationship is different. Each one of these meetings that we have seen, and you have been at many of these, I think in each of them it is different. Today's meeting dealt with the situation that we face today in the relationship and the condition of the relationship as it is today. The common factor of course is that the idea is to get out of the unsatisfactory relationship that we have and to try and find a way forward. That is true of all meetings. But what exactly we agree on, what we do, how it works out, has bearing from meeting to meeting. Today I think we have naturally to deal with the overwhelming issue of what is happening on the Line of Control, on issues like terrorism. Pakistan raised some of their issues. I think but we have dealt with the immediate task of actually getting these up and going. That is what we are concentrating on.

Q: In the Indo-US joint statement there was a mention of dismantling terror infrastructure in Pakistan. Did you get any assurances in terms of a timeline or a roadmap how Mr. Nawaz Sharif plans to do that?

National Security Advisor: In a one-hour meeting!

Q: I am just wondering, so close to the elections can this Indian Government deliver something or is it... (Inaudible)...practical for both sides to actually wait until the elections to see how to go forward?

* Media analysing the meeting said the outcome of the meeting, which had been in the works for several weeks, was surely a modest one. But Indian officials said it was also realistic, noting that the increasingly brittle situation on the LoC had become a source of enormous concern. Speaking on background, a senior Indian official told The Hindu that the proposal to have the DGMOs sort out violations of LoC came about after India rejected several ideas floated by the Pakistani side, including one to have the two foreign secretaries meet and another involving "neutral" monitoring by a third party such as the UN. Other issues also arose, such as trade, Siachen and Sir Creek. But both leaders agreed that progress would be possible only if the immediate problem along the LoC was sorted out. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, who met Nawaz Sharif here despite strong criticism from opposition back home, wants to "trust" the new Pakistan Prime Minister and give him a chance to "walk the talk" on stopping ceasefire violations and terror activities against India. Stating this, External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid underlined that while "seeking to trust" Mr. Sharif, India will "verify" the actions on the ground before taking any step further on resuming the stalled dialogue process. In an interview to PTI here, Mr. Khurshid said the "bacteria" of anti-India terrorism rooted in Pakistan must be eliminated whether "it is state-sponsored, state-controlled,

National Security Advisor: I do not think that is really a factor. When Prime Minister Vajpayee went to Islamabad for instance, it was how many months before an election? It was three months before an election and less than a month before the campaign started. I do not think that is a factor. The fact is that we are neighbours; that is not going to change. We have a relationship: that is not going to change. And that is something we have to deal with. So, I think we have dealt with it in good times and bad, and we will go on doing that. So, we will make the effort certainly.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

state-mandated or state-encouraged" and should not be allowed to grow and destroy the "sapling" of "creative constructive relationship." "Our Prime Minister wants to give him (Sharif) a chance, wants to trust him. But as he (Singh) has said we have to verify," said Mr. Khurshid while defending Singh's meeting with Mr. Sharif despite opposition BJP contending that it was not the right time as Pakistan was engaging in ceasefire violations. Noting that Mr. Sharif has taken over as Prime Minister of Pakistan recently, he said there is a "reasonable element of hope that this discussion will not go waste and it will lead to some improvement and something concrete in the future." At the hour-long meeting with Sharif on Sunday on the sidelines of UNGA, Mr. Singh made it clear that ending ceasefire violations on the Line of Control in Jammu and Kashmir is a precondition for resumption of bilateral dialogue. Mr. Khurshid, who was part of the Indian delegation, said Mr. Singh had "free, frank and friendly discussion" with Sharif and flagged every issue of concern, including Mumbai attack, Jamaat-ud-Dawa and its chief Hafiz Saeed, and LoC firing during the meeting.

Despite these talks and DGMO meetings, a month later on October 29 Defence Minister A.K. Antony voiced "serious concern" over an "unusual increase" in ceasefire violations on the border with Pakistan, which he said cannot take place without the "tacit support" of the Pakistani establishment. Addressing reporters on the sidelines of an event, Mr. Antony said. "The ceasefire violations are still continuing, but this year there is unusual developments taking place ... unusual sudden series of ceasefire violations on the International Border, which is more a matter of concern... And I am confident our security forces are capable of meeting any challenges and are handling the situation very efficiently," the defence minister said in an answer to a question. He also said that India has repeatedly said that it wants to improve relations with Pakistan. "And if (Pakistan) is serious about improving relations, how can the infiltrations and ceasefire violations increase?" he asked.

213. Official Spokesperson's response to Pakistan Foreign Office Statement that Pakistan requires evidence in 26/11 case.

New Delhi, October 26, 2013.

Responding to Pakistan Foreign Office statement that Pakistan requires evidence in 26/11 case, the Official Spokesperson said:

“The entire planning of the dastardly Mumbai terrorist attack was hatched in Pakistan, the training of the terrorists who launched that attack was undertaken in Pakistan, the financing of the conspiracy was in Pakistan. It therefore follows that 99% of the evidence will be available in Pakistan. It is incumbent on the authorities there to present that evidence in order to bring to book the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks.

On our part, we have fully cooperated with the Judicial Commission which visited India in end Sept 2013 and all information that they wanted was handed over to the Pakistani High Commission in New Delhi on 14-15th October. It now devolves on Pakistani authorities to ensure that justice is done in the Mumbai attack case in accordance with their own assurances.”

214. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting of External Affairs Minister with Foreign Affairs and National Security Adviser of Pakistan Mr. Sartaj Aziz on the sidelines of ASEM Foreign Ministers' Meeting.

Delhi-NCR, November 12, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening friends and thank you very much for being here. I will try and give you a flavour of the External Affairs Minister's last bilateral engagement on the margins of the ASEM with Mr. Sartaj Aziz, the Foreign Affairs and National Security Adviser to the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

As you are aware, External Affairs Minister had a series of bilateral engagements on the margins and this was his 20th meeting in the last two and a half days. Given that it was on the margins of the ASEM, it started with a sort of a review of what both of them felt regarding the outcomes of the ASEM meeting and subsequently, it went into bilateral issues.

It was for approximately 30 minutes and the principal focus of that meeting was to try and take on from where the last diplomatic engagement between India and Pakistan ended and that was the two Prime Ministers meeting in New York and the agreement between the two Prime Ministers that the pre condition for movement forward between India and Pakistan would be peace and tranquillity on the line of control. And therefore, there was a discussion on that matter and both agreed that it was important that the DGMOs should meet at an early date because that is what can take this further.

In addition, there were also discussions about other issues that we have raised on the agenda and these relate to the Mumbai trial.

Following this meeting Mr. Aziz also has another meeting planned and we will now take it from there based on the outcomes of what the two Ministers discuss of what would be the next steps. The DGMOs are in touch and we hope that they will take this process forward based on mutual discussions between the two country's DGMOs.

I will open the floor if you would like to ask any questions.

Q: You mentioned that other meetings are planned, Mr. Aziz's. What meetings are you referring to?

Answer: I don't know whether I used the word plural. I think he is right now also having a meeting with his counterpart, the National Security Adviser, because Mr. Aziz handles both Foreign Affairs and National Security.

Q: Will he also have a meeting with Prime Minister later.

Answer: I am not aware of that.

Q: Is there any date for the DGMOs to meet.

Answer: What was discussed was ultimately the DGMOs report to the Army Chiefs and it's for them to workout that, whenever they talk. They need to try and workout what would be the modalities of meeting at an early date.

Q: Sir, you said, you have reiterated that peace and tranquillity on the LOC is the precondition for the forward movement yet for the last 10 days there has been no firing on the line of control. Is this a positive thing that India would have considered?

Answer: The understanding is that the 2003 ceasefire should hold and that peace and tranquillity on the line of control is one of the most important CBMs both for India and for Pakistan. And if that holds, and the DGMOs concur with that and they meet and confirm that we will proceed further.

Q: Sorry to ask the same question again, was there any reason given in the conversation about why it's been six weeks since the Prime Ministers actually said that DGMOs should meet. Why is it necessary for the Foreign Ministers to meet six weeks later and repeat that. Is there any reason for the non movement on that.

Answer: You know what happens on the border is best articulated by the sentinels of the border. They are in touch and I would suggest that this issue is posed to them. What I can articulate for you is what was discussed at the diplomatic level.

Q: What exactly did they discuss about the Mumbai trials?

Answer: Well, our view has been and we have indicated previously and this the External Affairs Minister did articulate again that as far as we were concerned, all the evidence that was required by the Judicial Commission was provided including transcripts etc., and this was acknowledged by the Pakistani side that they had received everything that they had asked for from us and now they are proceeding with the trial.

Question: Was the issue of Hafiz Saed and his speeches being raised by India.

Answer: Well this was half an hour meeting and all the list of issues on the agenda between India and Pakistan could be listed but the possibilities of discussing every issue may not arise and so we focused on those issues which followed from the last bilateral dialogue with Pakistan or subsequent developments like we have provided the information relating to the Mumbai trials and the transcripts etc. So these were the primary areas of focus.

Q: Sir, did the External Affairs Minister raise the issue of the Pakistan China Economic Corridor from Xinjiang to Gwadar because it runs through the POK.

Answer: Srinjoy, our position on this is well articulated. We have reiterated this on several times. We have raised it with both the parties previously and the last time I recollect raising with the Chinese was during the visit of Premier Li Keqiang to India. Our position is that the entire area of Jammu and Kashmir is Indian territory and therefore we hold a view on that which is well known and articulated very well previously.

Q: Did Mr. Khurshid raise this Hurriyat leaders meeting with Mr. Sartar Aziz.

Answer: Yes, he did raise this issue with his Pakistani counterpart and you have yourself heard what his views are on this and has himself provided the situational and contextual basis on this. He articulated a similar approach during his discussions with his Pakistani counterpart.

Thank you very much

215. Official Spokesperson's response to a question on Resolutions adopted during the 40th Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers of OIC.

New Delhi, December 13, 2013.

In response to a question on Resolutions adopted during the 40th Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers of Organization of the Islamic Cooperation (OIC) held in Conakry, Republic of Guinea from December 9-11, 2013, the Official Spokesperson said:

"We note with regret that the Organization of the Islamic Cooperation (OIC) has once again made factually incorrect and misleading references to matters internal to India, including the Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir, which is an integral part of India. We reject all such references/resolutions. The OIC has no locus standi on matters concerning the internal affairs of India or the recent incidents on the LoC".

216. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry on the meeting of Commerce Minister Anand Sharma with the Chief Minister of Punjab (Pakistan) Shahbaz Sharif.

New Delhi, December 13, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma today met Mr. Shahbaz Sharif, Chief Minister of Punjab Province of Pakistan who was accompanied by Pakistan's Minister of State for Commerce, Textile and Privatization Mr. Khurram Dastgir Khan, Mr. Salman Bashir, High Commissioner of Pakistan to India and Pakistani businessman Mr. Mian Muhammad Mansha along with other senior officials from Pakistan.

Shri Sharma conveyed to the Pakistan side that India stands committed to the roadmap for bilateral trade normalization as was worked out in September 2012 between Commerce Secretaries of India and Pakistan. Essentially this involves Pakistan side removing its restrictions on trade by the land route (Attari, Wagah ICP), as also imparting full non-discriminatory trade access by removing its balance 1209 tariff lines of its current negative list of items importable from India. On the basis of these agreed steps to be taken, Shri Sharma reiterated that India would give enhanced preferential trade access to Pakistan by bringing down its SAFTA sensitive list from 614 tariff lines to 100 tariff lines. The Pakistan side would also in a phased manner over five years be reducing its SAFTA sensitive list for India to 100 tariff lines.

It was also agreed that with the growing volume of trade by the land route the working hours at Attari/ Wagah can be further enhanced and even contemplated for 24/7 operating conditions, the details of which would need to be discussed at an appropriate time between the Commerce Secretaries of both countries.

Shri Sharma offered that to debottleneck congestion at Attari / Wagah, containerized traffic could be accepted with appropriate security arrangements at customs bonded warehouses at Amritsar on the Indian side and Lahore on the Pakistan side. This suggestion was welcomed by both Mr. Sharif and Mr. Dastgir.

217. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Sri Lankan Minister of External Affairs.

New Delhi, January 22, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon ladies and gentlemen of the media. I welcome you to this event. As usual we will begin with opening remarks by the two Ministers. I request the hon'ble External Affairs Minister of India Shri Salman Khurshid to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Hon'ble Prof. G.L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka, friends from the media:

I have just concluded very useful and productive discussions with the Hon. Minister on the entire gamut of our bilateral relations. Prof. Peiris and I have also co-chaired the eighth session of the Joint Commission Meeting.

We have noted that bilateral cooperation during the past three years has seen significant expansion covering all areas of mutual interest. The signing today of two agreements relating to Combating International Terrorism and Illicit Drug Trafficking and Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement, has further strengthened the framework of our close cooperation.

During the Joint Commission, we comprehensively reviewed bilateral relations, including trade, investment and services, development cooperation, science and technology, power, agriculture, health, people-to-people contacts, connectivity, tourism, culture and education. We have noted with satisfaction that India is Sri Lanka's largest trade partner and Sri Lanka is India's largest trade partner in South Asia. India is the largest foreign direct investor in Sri Lanka, and also contributes to the largest number of tourist arrivals in Sri Lanka. Sri Lankans also make up a significant proportion of tourists and pilgrims visiting India every year.

Given the vast untapped potential, we have stressed the need for intensive consultations towards a comprehensive framework for economic cooperation and building of a special economic partnership.

We are working on setting up of a Special Economic Zone in Trincomalee and a pharmaceutical and a textiles cluster elsewhere in Sri Lanka.

I have conveyed India's readiness to support Sri Lanka's endeavor in capacity building in science and technology, agriculture, ICT, education and health sectors. We agreed to enhance cooperation in the energy sector. We are already discussing finalization of major mutually beneficial projects in power and oil and gas Sectors. We look forward to enhanced cooperation in new and renewable energy, civil nuclear energy and space technology in the future.

India and Sri Lanka enjoy a growing defence relationship built on extensive training and Service-to-Service linkages. We have today reviewed our mutual strategic interests, in view of the commonality of concerns, including with respect to the safety and security of sea lanes of communication. We agreed to promote dialogue on security and defence issues of relevance in bilateral as well as in regional context. We noted that successful exposition of the sacred Kapilavastu relics and the celebration of 150 years of Guru Rabindranath Tagore's anniversary in Sri Lanka have both significantly enriched our bilateral cultural relations.

The Joint Commission Meeting agreed on the need to extend humane treatment and abjure violence against fishermen of our two countries. We welcomed the decisions of two meetings of Joint Working Group on Fishing held in 2011 and 2012, and also the outcomes of meetings between representatives of fishermen's associations, and the work towards concluding an MoU on Development and Cooperation in the Field of Fisheries. The need for both sides to adhere to Practical Arrangements on Fishing of 2008, which had helped to decrease incidents on the International Maritime Boundary Line, has been duly noted. Both sides have placed great emphasis on the safety of fishermen and the need to continue to ensure that violence is not resorted to under any circumstances.

I have conveyed India's commitment to the reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) in Sri Lanka. We have made good progress in implementing comprehensive bilateral agenda set out by our Prime Minister and the President of Sri Lanka in June 2010. Projects of bilateral development assistance have progressed well, including construction of 50,000 houses for IDPs, with the fullest cooperation of the Government of Sri Lanka. Our livelihood generation and reconstruction efforts in the Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka have had a positive impact on the ground.

In my separate discussions with the Foreign Minister, I have referred to the need for continued dialogue between the Government of Sri Lanka and the representatives of the Sri Lankan Tamil community, with a view towards ensuring a future for the Tamil community that is marked by equality, dignity, justice and self-respect, all of which are respected by Sri Lanka. We hope that there will be early progress on a meaningful devolution building upon the 13th Amendment and leading to national reconciliation.

I am confident that given our geographical proximity and millennial links, a much closer and more comprehensive relationship beckons us. The visit of Minister Peiris and our discussions today have opened avenues for taking full and further advantage of opportunities that are open to us.

Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: I request the External Affairs Minister of Sri Lanka to make his opening remarks.

Sri Lankan Minister of External Affairs (Prof. G.L. Peiris): Your Excellency Salman Khurshid, Minister of External Affairs of India, and friends from the media:

As my distinguished colleague told you, we had some very productive and constructive discussions. We concluded the Eighth Joint Commission between India and Sri Lanka. It is taking place at a particularly propitious moment marking the end of one era in Sri Lanka and the commencement of a very exciting but challenging period in our country's history. We leave behind us the pain and the conflict of a 30-year conflict. And President Mahinda Rajapaksa and his government are today engaged in the endeavour to revive the country's economy and move the island forward in a variety of sectors.

What strikes me about the deliberations that we have just concluded is the depth and the range of the relationship between our two countries. The agreed minutes demonstrate beyond any shadow of doubt that the relationship touches every sector of public policy. The main areas were identified by His Excellency Salman Khurshid. I would be content to say that this is an appropriate moment to stand back to take stock of the situation and to explore practical ways and means of elevating the already robust relationship to a new and a higher plane. And I would say that that is exactly what we have been able to accomplish in these discussions.

We have identified for ourselves where more intense collaboration would yield results which are beneficial to both countries at this moment. And, there are many things that strike me as significant. One of these is the fact that this is no longer a one-way relationship. Take for example the very significant contribution that the private sector of Sri Lanka is making to the development of the economy of India. We are partners and participants in that process. And I would say that the quality of this relationship makes one thing very clear. Whatever problems, issues may arise from time to time, and that is inevitable in any bilateral relationship, the tremendous reservoir of goodwill and understanding that exists between our two countries makes it possible for us through dialogue and discussion to arrive at acceptable and pragmatic solutions to the challenges that we face.

This has no doubt facilitated certain other elements of the relationship one of which is that it is no longer confined to government-to-government relations. One of the strongest components of this relationship I would say is the vigorous people-to-people relations. This was nowhere demonstrated more clearly than by the enthusiasm with which, as His Excellency the Minister of External Affairs of India indicated, the people of Sri Lanka, no fewer than three million people in our country, had the opportunity of venerating the sacred Kapilavastu relics. In fact, Excellency, as you would recall, we had to make a special request to the Prime Minister of India through your High Commissioner His Excellency Ashok Kantha to have the period extended by one week, which the Government of India graciously acceded to. Apart from that, I think about 200,000 pilgrims from Sri Lanka visit Bodh Gaya, Sanchi, Saranath. So, people-to-people contact is definitely a strong, durable mainstay of our relationship. That is one of the bonds that unite us.

So, there is every reason for optimism and confidence with regard to the future of this relationship. What we have concluded today is a significant milestone in that relationship. It is a constantly continuing and evolving relationship. And I do not have a shadow of doubt that it will go from strength to strength in the months and years to come.

I thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: The two External Affairs Ministers have agreed to take a few questions.

Q: My question is to both the Ministers, first to Mr. Peiris. What is the Sri Lankan Government's current stand on the 13th Amendment and devolution of powers given that certain Ministers of the Sri Lankan Government have made remarks suggesting that the 13th Amendment should be repealed?

My question to Mr. Khurshid is, is India satisfied with the pace and progress of devolution of powers in Sri Lanka?

Sri Lankan Minister of External Affairs: The 13th Amendment is an integral part of the country's Constitution. In recent times we have had the expression of different views with regard to the future of the 13th Amendment by people in the Government. We have had a variety of opinions, not just one opinion. One view has been that it should be done away with. At the other end of the spectrum, there are other members of the Government who have suggested that far from repealing the 13th Amendment, we should strengthen it. That point of view has also been expressed. And there is a middle view that the 13th Amendment is defective in the sense that it has shortcomings, which is not surprising, and that those deficiencies need to be addressed and the content of the 13th Amendment improved. So, that has been a third school of thought.

Now this is to be expected because you are aware that the Government of Sri Lanka is a coalition government. It consists of different strands of thought, different perceptions, insights, all of which is very healthy in a vibrant democracy. So, there is encouragement for the expression of different points of view. And that is what you have been reading about in the media in recent weeks. So, it is for the Government of Sri Lanka to take into account all these expressions of opinion and to arrive at decisions with regard to future course of action. But what you have been reading about are not decisions, but simply expressions of opinion by various political parties, various segments of the Government. I would regard that as something promising and encouraging - the free expression of different points of view with regard to a matter that is of fundamental importance to public policy in Sri Lanka.

External Affairs Minister: Thank you for your question. Frankly, my reply will just flow from His Excellency the Foreign Minister's explanation about the context in which we must see this. Sri Lanka has been through an extremely painful experience. And to reconstruct and rehabilitate all your citizens after such a painful experience is obviously a very challenging task. We have discussed the contours of the efforts that are being made. Many of those efforts have borne fruit, are productive. Many more of course are in the pipeline, in the process. And a lot more needs to be done. I think at best we can as friends provide our understanding and our perception of how things are going and be willing to help in every which way.

I do believe that ultimately it is the elected government that decides what it can manage at what speed and in what direction. I think the broad contours of what we discussed, there is no reason for us to express any dissatisfaction. Obviously it is an enormous challenge, it is a difficult challenge. It has to be met consistently step-by-step and steadily. I would imagine that we would want to see reconciliation and reconstruction continue unabated. And that is the impression and those are the details that have been conveyed to us. And we wish Sri Lanka well. Our best wishes are with them for completion of what is essentially a very very difficult task.

Q: This is for the visiting Sri Lankan Foreign Minister. Sir, could you explain the rationale behind increasing duty on Indian automobile exports, especially as sections of Indian industry feel that this is a political decision which has been taken to increase imports from our immediate northern neighbor?

Sri Lankan External Affairs Minister: No, no, I can tell you categorically that that is not the case. It is not a political decision nor is it discriminatory in any sense whatsoever. It is based on a purely objective criterion – engine capacity. Engine capacity is not a political criterion. It is something objective and ascertainable. So, there has been some misunderstanding on this matter. But that assumption on which the question is based, I can assure you, is not correct.

India is a very strong trading partner of Sri Lanka. Look at the volumes of trade today which, as I said, have grown seven-folds since the FTA was entered into. Whether it is investment or trade or tourism, it is a very strong relationship which we are seeking to nurture and develop. So, it is certainly not the intention of the Government of Sri Lanka to do something to inhibit. On the contrary, the intention is very much to expand and to strengthen. So, that is not correct. It is a criterion based on engine capacity applicable across the board, no matter what the source or the origin of the vehicle. It is in no sense a discriminatory decision intended to have a political impact.

Q: Your Excellency, my question is to G.L. Peiris. Why Indian fishermen are being tortured quite often by the Sri Lankan forces? What steps are you taking?

Sri Lankan External Affairs Minister: On this matter, very clear instructions have been given by the Government of Sri Lanka to the Sri Lankan Navy – no violence - and those instructions are being scrupulously observed. It is a human problem which requires a response founded upon humanitarian values which both Governments subscribe to without reservation.

But I must also point out that the numbers of fishing boats coming into these waters are very large from South India. And that has an impact on the livelihoods of the Tamil fishermen living in the North who are trying to rebuild their lives after, as his Excellency pointed out, a very painful period during which their livelihoods were totally destroyed, and they are trying to pick up the pieces and move forward. So, in that situation I think it is important to take some measures in a suitable way to address this problem. We have been talking to the Government of India about it and Government of India has been forthcoming, responsive.

I think the method that we have chosen to begin these discussions at the level of the fishermen societies, their voluntary societies, their communities, as a starting point, a point of departure, that I think is a very practical way of addressing that problem. It is something that has a great deal to commend it. And starting from that point onwards we are confident that we have to move these discussions forward and arrive at solutions which are mutually satisfying.

Q: Question for EAM. How valid is the Pakistani assertion that UN troops be used in Jammu and Kashmir? Why do you think is Pakistan doing this? Is this a way of denying the Simla Agreement?

External Affairs Minister: I think we did hear some statements about giving access to third parties in this affair, but I think we moved away from that. In recent days there is a clear reaffirmation of a bilateral process. I think that the contacts between the DGMOs on both sides have indicated that the bilateral process remains in a sustained and steady manner still available and effective. We have not heard anything more about statements that obviously were not acceptable to us. We do reiterate our position that these are bilateral issues and they should be settled bilaterally. We have a history of being able to work bilaterally and we would want to maintain that and contain this matter within the bilateral purview.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

218. External Affairs Minister's remarks to media at the 8th Session of India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission Meeting.
New Delhi, January 22, 2013.

Hon'ble Prof. G.L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka,
Friends from the Media,

I have just concluded very useful and productive discussions with Minister Prof. Peiris on the entire gamut of bilateral relations. Prof. Peiris and I have also co-Chaired the 8th session of the Joint Commission Meeting.

We have noted that bilateral cooperation during the past three years has seen significant expansion covering all areas of mutual interest. The signing today of two Agreements relating to Combating International Terrorism and Illicit Drug Trafficking.

During the Joint Commission, we comprehensively reviewed bilateral relations, including trade, investment and services, development cooperation, science and technology, power, agriculture, health, people-to-people contacts, connectivity, tourism, culture and education.

India is the largest foreign direct investor in Sri Lanka, and also contributes to the largest number of tourist arrivals in Sri Lanka. Sri Lankans also make up a significant proportion of tourists and pilgrims visiting India.

Given the vast untapped potential, we have stressed the need for intensive consultations towards a more comprehensive framework for economic cooperation and building of a special economic partnership. We are working on setting up of a Special Economic Zone in Trincomalee and a pharmaceutical and a textiles cluster elsewhere in Sri Lanka.

I have conveyed India's readiness to support Sri Lanka's endeavor in capacity building in Science & Technology, Agriculture, ICT, education and health sector. We agreed to enhance cooperation in the energy sector. We are already discussing finalization of major mutually beneficial projects in power and oil & gas Sectors. We look forward to enhanced cooperation in new and renewable energy, civil nuclear energy and space technology in future.

India and Sri Lanka enjoy a growing defence relationship built on extensive training and Service-to-Service linkages. We have today reviewed our mutual strategic interests, in view of the commonality of concerns, including with respect to the safety and security of sea lanes of communication. We agreed to promote dialogue on security and defence issues of relevance in bilateral as well as in regional context.

We noted that the successful exposition of the sacred Kapilavastu relics and the celebrations of 150 years of Guru Rabindranath Tagore's anniversary in Sri Lanka have significantly enriched our bilateral cultural relations.

The JCM agreed on the need to extend humane treatment and abjure violence against fishermen of our two countries. We welcomed the decisions of two meetings of Joint Working Group on Fishing held in 2011 and 2012, and also the outcomes of meetings between representatives of Fishermen's Associations, and the work towards concluding a MoU on Development and Cooperation in the Field of Fisheries.

The need for both sides to adhere to the Practical Arrangements on Fishing of 2008, which had helped to decrease incidents on the International Maritime Boundary Line, has been duly noted. Both sides have placed great emphasis on the safety of our fishermen and the need to continue to ensure that violence is not resorted to under any circumstances.

I have conveyed India's commitment to the reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) in Sri Lanka. We have made good progress in implementing comprehensive bilateral agenda set out by our Prime Minister and the President of Sri Lanka in June 2010. Projects of bilateral development assistance have progressed well, including construction of 50,000 houses for IDPs, with the fullest cooperation of the Government of Sri Lanka. Our livelihood generation and reconstruction efforts in the Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka have had a positive impact on the ground.

In my separate discussions with Foreign Minister Peiris, I have referred to the need for continued dialogue between the Government of Sri Lanka and the representatives of the Sri Lankan Tamil community, with a view towards ensuring a future for the Tamil community that is marked by equality, dignity, justice and self-respect all of which are respected by Sri Lanka. We hope that there will be early progress on meaningful devolution building upon the 13th Amendment and leading to national reconciliation.

I am confident that given our geographical proximity and millennial links, a much closer and more comprehensive relationship beckons us. The visit of Minister Peiris and our discussions today have opened avenues for taking full and further advantage of the opportunities open before us.

Thank you

220. Statement in Rajya Sabha by External Affairs Minister, in response to Calling Attention Notice tabled by Dr. V. Maitreyan, MP, Rajya Sabha and others regarding "Plight of Tamils in Sri Lanka".

New Delhi, February 27, 2013.

1. I rise to respond to the House on the Calling Attention Notice regarding the "Plight of Tamils in Sri Lanka".
2. At the outset, I would like to reiterate to this august House that the Government fully shares the sentiments of the Hon'ble Members of Parliament regarding the welfare of the Sri Lankan Tamil community.
3. Since the end of the conflict in Sri Lanka in May 2009, which left around 3,00,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) living in camps in Northern Sri Lanka and general devastation of infrastructure, the focus and highest and most immediate priority for the Government of India has been on the welfare and well being of the Tamils citizens of Sri Lanka, their relief and rehabilitation and the reconstruction of infrastructure in the affected areas.

4. As the Hon'ble Members of the Parliament are aware, the Prime Minister announced in June 2009 a grant of Rs. 500 crores for relief, rehabilitation and resettlement work in Sri Lanka. Since then, the Government has expended Rs. 68.96 crores in the financial year 2009-10, Rs. 93.86 crores in 2010-11 and Rs 181.94 crores in 2011-12. In the Current Financial Year (2012-13), an amount of Rs. 290 crores has been allocated for this purpose.
5. The initial phase of Indian assistance involved massive humanitarian relief efforts for IDPs in the Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka. This included the dispatch of 2.5 lakh family relief packs; deployment of an emergency field hospital; dispatch of consignments of medicines; gifting of more than 10,400 metric tons of shelter material and 4 lakh cement bags; deployment of de-mining teams in Northern Sri Lanka; and holding of artificial limb fitment camps in Jaffna and Vavuniya in Northern Sri Lanka. I am happy to convey to the House that according to information available to us, all the 3,00,000 IDPs have been resettled and the last IDP camp, Menik Farms, was formally closed in September last year. It is important that IDPs be allowed to return to their original homes.
6. Subsequently, the Government took up various projects for the rehabilitation of IDPs and reconstruction of the Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka. To revive the agricultural activities in Northern Sri Lanka, India gifted 95,000 agricultural starter packs, seeds and 500 tractors for the use of IDPs. Government gifted 55 buses to Northern, Eastern and Central Provinces of Sri Lanka. Projects related to the development of rail and port infrastructure, connectivity and transportation, education, public health, housing, vocational training and economic revival were taken up.

7. The project for the construction of 50,000 houses in Sri Lanka, mainly for IDPs, was announced in June 2010. This is one of the largest grant assistance projects implemented by the Government outside India. I am happy to inform this August House that the Pilot Project for the construction of 1000 houses that started in April 2011 was completed in August 2012. It may be noted that these houses were required to be constructed in largely inaccessible areas in the aftermath of a violent conflict. In many cases, the sites had to be freed of mines and other unexploded ordinance. An MoU on the modalities for the remaining 49,000 houses (based on Cabinet approval accorded in December 2011) was signed in January 2012. The project was launched on the ground on 2nd October 2012, and since then 8039 beneficiaries under the 'owner driven model' have already received the first installment of payments. The reconstruction/repair of 4000 out of the 6000 houses under the "Agency Driven' Model' has been initiated. The phase of remaining 2,000 houses under "Agency-Driven" model in Northern and Eastern Provinces is to be implemented during 2013-14.
8. In addition, the Government has extended a Line of Credit of about US $ 800 million for the restoration of Northern Railway Lines. Projects in this regard are progressing as per schedule and expected to be completed by December 2013. India is also assisting in the rehabilitation of the Kanakesanthurai (KKS) harbour, restoration of Duraiappa stadium and construction of a Cultural Centre at Jaffna. Two vocational training centres at Batticaloa and Nuwara Eliya have already been established with Indian assistance.
9. It may kindly be recalled that a 12-member Joint Parliamentary delegation, led by the Hon'ble Leader of the Opposition in the Lok Sabha, visited Sri Lanka from 16-21 April 2012. The delegation had an extensive programme involving visits to different parts of Sri Lanka, including Vavuniya, Mullaitivu, Jaffna, Kankesanthurai, Kalutara and Batticaloa, where projects are being implemented under Government of India assistance. At their request, the delegation also visited the camp for Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) at the Menik Farms where they interacted with IDPs and the local administration. They were also able to discuss the resettlement and rehabilitation of IDPs and efforts towards national reconciliation and political devolution in Sri Lanka at meetings with the President and Ministers of the Sri Lankan Government. During the visit, houses for IDPs, built with Indian assistance, were handed over to the beneficiaries. The delegation also gifted bicycles and participated in formal ceremonies for the handing over of hospitals, schools and vocational training centres rehabilitated under Government of India assistance.

10. I would like to underline that our constructive engagement with the Government of Sri Lanka and considerable assistance programme has contributed to the reconstruction and development of the Tamil areas of Sri Lanka.

Hon'ble Chairman,

11. Regarding the issue of a political solution in Sri Lanka, Government is of the view that the end of the conflict in Sri Lanka provided a unique opportunity to pursue a lasting political settlement within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, acceptable to all communities in Sri Lanka, including Tamils. It has to, however, be kept in mind that this is a long standing issue and that Sri Lanka is going through its internal processes. The sooner Sri Lanka can come to a political arrangement within which all the communities feel comfortable, and which works for all of them, the better. Government will do whatever it can to support this process.
12. Our emphasis, in this context, has been to persuade the Sri Lankan Government to take forward the process of broader dialogue with all parties, including the Tamil National Alliance, and show concrete movement towards a meaningful devolution of powers, including the implementation of the 13th Amendment and beyond. India has conveyed to Sri Lanka on a number of occasions the urgent and imperative need for expeditious steps towards genuine national reconciliation, including investigations into allegation of human rights violations, restoration of normalcy in affected areas, reduction of 'high security zones', accountability for the list of missing persons and the redress of humanitarian concerns of affected families.

13. During discussions at the United Nations Human Rights Commission (UNHRC) in Geneva in November, 2012, the Government called upon Sri Lanka to fulfill its commitments made to the international community during the UPR 2008 and on subsequent occasions for the implementation of the 13th Amendment and building upon it so as to achieve a meaningful devolution package; urged expeditious action to take forward the political process for early political settlement; urged that elections to the Northern Provincial Council be held as early as feasible; called for effective and time bound implementation of the constructive recommendations contained in the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission (LLRC) report; and for independent and credible investigations to be conducted in respect of allegations of Human Rights violations and incidents involving loss of civilian life brought out in the LLRC Report.
