I am happy to be here today in the beautiful city of Paris to meet with Minister Fabius. This visit is yet another reflection of the broadening bilateral engagement that characterizes our Strategic Partnership.

Foreign Minister Fabius and I had very cordial, comprehensive and fruitful discussions today. We reviewed our cooperation in defence, space and civil nuclear energy and counter terrorism, which are important pillars of our bilateral relations.

India and France share the same values of liberty, equality and fraternity. Our excellent bilateral relations with France are marked by mutual trust. They encompass trade, investment, defence, security, counter terrorism, space, nuclear energy, education, culture, science & technology and people to people contacts.

Above all, there is a high degree of political understanding and convergence of views. This was evident during the meeting of our Prime Minister with President Hollande on the sidelines of the G-20 Summit in Los Cabos in Mexico in June 2012 which continued the tradition of regular and close contacts. We look forward to welcoming President Hollande to India in the near future.

We extend our congratulations to the scientists of both our countries on the successful launch of the Indo-French joint scientific satellite, Megha Tropiques, in October 2011. Megha-Tropiques satellite is in good health and data from all the four scientific instruments on-board are received in India and France. Megha-Tropiques has become the first of the eight-satellite constellation for Global Precipitation Measurement (GPM) coordinated by NASA.

We look forward to the launch of Satellite for ARGOS and ALTIKA (SARAL) in the first quarter of 2013. This is another India - France joint satellite to study sea surface altitude.

In the civil nuclear field, our Government remains committed to the Jaitapur Nuclear Power Project. Both sides are committed to ensuring the highest levels of safety in the project.

Both India and France are resolutely opposed to Terrorism. We reiterated our commitment to continue to cooperate in the fight against terrorism.

Though affected by global economic slowdown, economic and commercial relations between our two countries are steadily growing in recent years. Yet there remains considerable untapped potential for further growth. We invite French investments in our infrastructure, food processing industries, hi-tech and green technologies.

We believe that an early conclusion of the Broad-based Indian-EU Trade and Investment Agreement would significantly contribute in enhancing trade between our two countries.

In the field of Science and Technology, we appreciate support of French Government to the bilateral cooperation in the field of Science & Technology, through CEFIPRA (India-France Centre for Scientific Research), which is celebrating its silver jubilee this year and serves as a special vehicle to take forward such cooperation. We have agreed that the great potential for increased S&T collaboration and CEFIPRA should be realized soon. With regard to French collaboration in IIT, Rajasthan, I am happy to note that the Letter of Intent has been signed.

I thanked Foreign Minister Fabius for the support of the Government of France for the extension project of Maison de L'Inde, which is the most sought after hostel for Indian students and research scholars. The construction on the Project has started and is expected to be completed in the next two and a half years. Under the extension project 72 new rooms would be constructed on land donated by the French Government.

We also discussed the situation in our respective regions and agreed to continue this dialogue at all levels.

I thanked Foreign Minister Fabius for the support of French Government to India's increasing role in world affairs. France has been consistent in voicing support for India's permanent membership of the UN Security Council and also India's inclusion in other international fora, including the multilateral export control regimes. We share common views on most regional and global issues.

I take this opportunity once again to extend my thanks to Minister Laurent for inviting me and my delegation to Paris for this very fruitful meeting.

Thank you

505. External Affairs Minister's interview to Le Figaro.

January 11, 2013.

("India hails the exemplary partnership with France" by : Pierre Rousselin and Alain Barluet)

Le Figaro: What is the purpose of your visit to Paris?

I am preparing for the visit of French President to India next month. It is a visit that we are awaiting with impatience, and we would like it to be very productive. We have made a list of countries that are a priority for India, and France is among those on the top of the list.

Le Figaro: Why France?

I am tempted to respond 'Why not?' Frankly, it is with France that we have accomplished the maximum progress. We have an exemplary strategic partnership. In the domain of armament, we have wished to diversify our supplies which were dependent on the Soviet Union. We have found in France an interested partner possessing the technology which we need.

Le Figaro: What is the status of the discussions on contract regarding the sale of the Rafale?

To this question, I'll say that the best French wines mature slowly. It is not like a Coca-cola that is gulped down. We have made our decision, a decision taken after long reflection, and difficult to take due to the heavy competition. We are very satisfied about it. It concerns the purchase of 126 Rafale aircrafts. The details of the contract are under discussion. The talks are advancing well and I hope that they will come to conclusion very soon.

Le Figaro: Can we expect an announcement during visit of François Hollande to India in mid February?

I cannot say if this will be ready for signature at the time of the visit. It is a contractual agreement which is not necessarily tied up with the visit of the President. Many other agreements are in the pipeline. For example the nuclear accord that has been negotiated with Areva, and which is at an advanced stage. The questions of security raised by the tsunami in Japan have to be resolved, and this has an effect on the unitary cost of the energy produced. All this is being examined on an expert level and a final accord is at hand. In the cultural domain, we have signed a letter of intention for the creation of an Institute of Technology in Rajasthan. We have also evoked the question of commercial exchanges and we consider that there is progress to be made before the Presidential visit takes place. I have therefore asked for the support of France for the conclusion of the Free Trade Agreement between India and the European Union as this will give a boost to our exchanges. As far as investments are concerned, we have asked for a close examination of the bilateral accord for dissipating the uncertainties that could be from one angle or other, an obstacle to investments. In a general manner, we share the same perception on global affairs. We have, each one of us, our own friends, but it is with France that we share the most.

Le Figaro: What have you thought of the statements of Mr. Arnaud Montebourg, Minister for Productive Reforms, implying that Indian investments were not welcome in France?

When we are addressing a national public, it could happen that the concerns of internal politics are not properly understood outside the country. This being said, I have not observed that there is in reality any opposition to Indian investments in France or to French investments in India. This is not a subject of disaccord between us.

Le Figaro: The tragic affair of this young lady raped and killed in a bus recently has revealed the precariousness of the status of women in the society, as well as the politico-legal lacunae. These inequalities and discrepancies do they not constitute an impediment to the development of an emerging country like India?

It is a tragic and sad story that has shocked even more as it took place in a neighbourhood in Delhi where the police are present, and not in a remote region. But it is not something that happens on every street of every city in the country. Any incident like this one is one too many. It is horrifying and unacceptable. But luckily, this is not an endemic situation even if the statistics concerning rape are a cause of concern. We have very strict laws but we realise that their implementation has to be improved and accelerated. We are determined to act with firmness and rapidity. But one should not think that India could be represented by this horrible incident. Some 50% of elective posts are reserved for women. They are in high positions in enterprises, banks, sports, politics and medias.

Le Figaro: Does India, as an emerging country, see Europe as a continent on the decline?

When one questions me on India, I respond that it is for us to take our destiny in hand. The world is ready to welcome India in the big league. Do we want that? I would say that Europe should also decide as to what it wants. Your contribution to all the domains is remarkable. You are going through a difficult period. It would be necessary to tighten the belt for a few months or for a few years, and be attentive towards working and stocking your revenues. We can only wish you success, as our growth depends on what happens in Europe.

506. Media Briefing by Joint Secretary (Europe West) and Indian Ambassador to France on French President's Visit.

New Delhi, February 12, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good Afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this afternoon's briefing. As you are aware, we are going to have a very important visitor in Delhi and the focus of the briefing today will be on that.

The President of France will be coming here on the 14th. For that I have here with me our Ambassador in France Mr. Rakesh Sood on my right, and Joint Secretary (Europe West) Mrs. Ruchi Ghanashyam. I will request Joint Secretary (Europe West) to make an initial statement and some opening remarks regarding the visit of the President of France. Following that the floor will be open for questions relating to this visit. After that, as usual, I will also be available to take any other questions that you would like.

If I may clarify again, we will begin with the visit of the President of France and questions and answers related to that visit and subsequent to that if you are interested in any other questions. If that is clear, let me request the Joint Secretary (Europe West) to make her opening remarks regarding the state visit of President Hollande to India.

Joint Secretary (Europe West) (Ms Ruchi Ghanashyam): Thank you so much, Akbar.

President Hollande of France is coming to India at the invitation of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. This is a state visit and it will be on 14th and 15th of February, 2013. He is accompanied by Mrs. Valerie Trierweiler, as also a high-level delegation which includes several key Ministers of his Cabinet, senior officials, business people and of course the very important media. This is his first bilateral state visit to Asia. During the course of his visit, he would be in New Delhi and in Mumbai.

The India-France relationship was upgraded to a strategic partnership in 1998. With this and the ongoing interactions and engagement that we have with France, we have a multifaceted relationship which covers areas such as defence, civil nuclear energy, space and counter terrorism.

We have very good and fruitful exchanges and cooperation going on with France in a number of areas apart from this as well.

The civil nuclear energy cooperation is an important area for both countries. We remain fully committed to our civil nuclear energy programme and also to taking the Jaitapur nuclear project forward. Discussions will take place on this between the two leaders.

On defence cooperation, Indian and French defence forces have a very good defence cooperation that is going on. Exchanges and visits to the defence establishments are carried on on a yearly basis. There have also been joint exercises between the Army, Navy and the Air Force. On MMRCA, Rafale was chosen after a rigorous, thorough and fair competition purely on merit. Negotiations are ongoing. The status of negotiations is likely to be discussed between the two leaders.

On space, we have established also very good cooperation between the two countries. The progress made is satisfactory and both countries are working towards further expanding in the coming years for mutual benefit. The Indo-French satellite Megha-Tropiques for studying tropical atmosphere was successfully launched by India's PSLV on October 12, 2011. At present the data products are distributed to the global scientific community for validation.

Satellite with ARGOS and ALtiKa (SARAL) is another India-France joint satellite to study sea surface altitude, and it is also expected to be launched soon. Both these space joint ventures are seen as a significant contribution to the global community's understanding of weather and climate change. A very important seminar was held recently on the 5th and 6th of February between the two sides, CNES of France and ISRO, in Bengaluru. This discussed the future areas of cooperation between the two countries in this very important area of our collaboration. Economic and commercial relations with France are also important and growing. We are both focused on expanding our bilateral trade and investments. This is an area where both countries want to expand and achieve faster progress. Provisional trade figure for 2011-12 was US$ 8.89 billion.

Another very important area of cooperation and collaboration between India and France is science and technology. Here the Indo-French Centre for Promotion of Advanced Research, it is called CEFIPRA for short, has established a strong partnership over the past twenty five years. It completed twenty five years last year. There are 800 PhD and post doctoral students who have benefitted from this bilateral cooperation. The collaboration has led to 1162 research publications in peer-reviewed journals; and it has generated 18 patents. So this is an important area for exchange between the French and Indian scientists.

Education is another area where we want to expand our collaboration and cooperation further, higher education in particular. Both sides feel that there is good scope for such expansion of cooperation. We do encourage having greater student exchanges between the two countries. IIT Rajasthan is one of the projects on which we are working together and making progress. So that is another important bilateral collaboration between the two countries.

Cultural exchanges and cinema this is another interesting and important area. France had organised 'Bonjour India' and India had organised 'Namaste France'. The second edition of 'Bonjour India' is being organised by the French Government in the first quarter of this year. India will also organise 'Namaste France' at a mutually convenient date in the future.

This year is also 100 years of Indian cinema during which we look forward to associating with a number of festivals in France. And it is going to be another year for promoting better understanding of India through our culture and through cinema. So these are some of the ongoing interesting and important areas of collaboration and cooperation.

In conclusion I would say that we enjoy with France a very close and special relationship. We want to extend to President Hollande a very warm welcome for his first visit to India. We have worked out a very comprehensive agenda for our discussion which will include, apart from bilateral issues, multilateral and regional issues. We consult with each other on important international issues. We do hope that President Hollande and his Delegation will have a very pleasant and enjoyable stay in India.

Official Spokesperson: Now the floor is open for any questions that you may like to ask on this visit.

Q: My question is to the Ambassador. Could you tell us something about the Jaitapur civil nuclear cooperation? What is the present status of the negotiations and when are we going to see the fruition of the agreement between India and France?

Indian Ambassador to France (Shri Rakesh Sood): I can try and explain to you the kind of discussions that we have been engaged in on Jaitapur. First of all are the discussions between Areva and NPCIL because as you know in India it is the NPCIL which is the operator and Areva is the manufacturer of the reactor. These negotiations started in 2010 in real earnest. But then because of the Fukushima disaster, the negotiations went into slow motion while the French authorities reviewed implications and lessons learnt out of Fukushima and what implications there would be for building more security, safety measures into the EPR. Once that exercise was completed, they have shared the full results because just as we have the Atomic Energy Regulatory Board, they have their own regulatory agency called the ASN. So it was a more than 1600 page long document which they shared with us. Our scientists, engineers have been through it and after that then the negotiations have resumed based on all of this together.

There are certainly issues pertaining to costs. There are issues because we have certain local expertise because we have built our own reactors though not of the same size. But as you know we have a certain experience. So while we would like to take benefit of the new technologies that are inherent in the EPR that Areva has designed, we would also like to take this opportunity to upscale our own technological capabilities in our private sector and public sector.

The French also have certain concerns regarding our Nuclear Liability Law. So, as recently as February, in the week beginning 4th of February, we had one French team which was in Mumbai for discussions regarding the liability law; and we had a second French team which was in Mumbai for discussions pertaining to how much of work can be done by the Indian private sector etc., in order to reduce costs while maintaining the same degrees of efficiency. So that is roughly where these discussions stand. It is still something which is ongoing. I do not think that we are at a stage where we can say, "Okay, all the discussions have now been concluded". All I am saying is that this is roughly the play in the negotiations and the discussions which are ongoing. But as the Joint Secretary mentioned, India is fully committed - and I think that is a statement that you have heard at the highest levels in India that we are fully committed - to developing our civilian nuclear energy potential, and certainly therefore do this project which is an extremely important part of it.

Q: This question can be to whoever chooses to answer this. Will official talks also touch upon two issues - one the turban ban in France and also on the case involving an Indian national whose child was allegedly raped by a French consular official? Does the Government believe that it is a fit case for it to take up this matter?

Joint Secretary (EW): On the turban issue, this starts from an Act of the French Government of 2004. To be precise, it is the Act of 15th March, 2004 on Conspicuous Religious Symbols in Schools and it prohibits the wearing of conspicuous religious symbols in French public schools. So this is an issue which is applied without discrimination in France. No matter which religion a person is from, they cannot display conspicuous religious symbols in public schools. But that does not apply to private schools or to universities. We have taken this up with French authorities on occasions. Most recently a French delegation had come which discussed with us this issue again. The important thing is that we are in dialogue with the French Government on this and also the French Government is in dialogue with the leaders of the local Sikh community in France. So this is a matter that is part of our ongoing discussions.

As for the case of the French national, the matter is sub judice, as you are aware. So at this stage we will have to go by whatever the law states.

Q: I have a specific question on defence cooperation. France and India are discussing joint development and production of short range, quick reaction missiles. Has any agreement been finalized?

Indian Ambassador to France: Yes, we have this cooperation project called the SRSAM or Short Range Surface to Air Missile. Both sides agreed some years ago that they would undertake joint R&D, design and so on. And I think the cooperation in design and R&D has proceeded very satisfactorily. Now will come a decision in due course about how to make this a reality. But yes, the fact that we have had these joint R&D projects with them is well known and we have been working together with them on this.

Q: We are rolling out the red carpet for the French President on Valentine's Day. What is the new spark in India-France relationship? What does the new French President bring to the table which his predecessor did not? And on trade and investment can we expect some new initiatives?

Indian Ambassador to France: As the Joint Secretary has described, what we have with France is something called strategic partnership. The term strategic partnership is not used lightly in this context because I think in all the sectors, as Ruchi has explained, in all the key sectors like defence, civil nuclear energy, space, aerospace and so on, we have significant ongoing cooperation projects with France. All these are highly sensitive sectors and that is a fact. Now in addition to that you talked of trade and investment. I think in addition to that the bilateral trade has been in my personal view, I think it should be higher. And I am quite sure that both sides will commit themselves to expanding the gamut of bilateral trade between the two countries. Ruchi mentioned a figure of close to about nine billion Euros two years ago, which I think is much less than the actual potential. The potential would be much larger.

Second is the question of French investment into India. Here I was told the French Embassy in Delhi carried out a little study because we were getting different kinds of figures. The figures which we have from the RBI which are figures pertaining to investment coming directly only from France. Those figures are roughly to the tune of about three billion Euros. However, French companies as you know, there are many global French companies and many of them root their investments into South Asia through let us say Singapore or Dubai or other centres. And then of course there are the profits generated by the companies which get redeployed into the Indian operations and so on. So if you look at that, then the actual French investment into India according to the study that the French Embassy has put out, is nearly five times as large, which would make it very significant. But there are about 800 French companies that operate in India and are supposed to employ a total of more than 200,000 people. So it is a fairly significant economic, commercial presence. Virtually all the CAC Quarante, like we have the NSE 50 or things like that, the phrase they have is CAC Quarante, which is their 40 large companies, virtually all their CAC 40 companies have significant presence here, and some have been here for more than a 100 years.

In addition I may add that Foreign Minister Fabius has recently appointed Paul Hermelin who is the CEO of one of France's biggest IT companies called Capgemini. Capgemini employs about 40,000 people in India alone, and it is not just the largest French employer in India. There are others as well. So Paul Hermelin will be accompanying the delegation. He has been appointed as a Special Envoy by the French Foreign Minister to develop economic relations, to focus on developing economic relations with India. And obviously he is a person who knows India quite well, having come to India in the early 1990s. His India operations, as I said, have now expanded to a payroll strength of 40,000. In addition we also have the CEO's forum between India and France which is intended to promote private sector to private sector cooperation. So you have a French CEO and an Indian CEO, and the French co-chair is a person by the name of Bertrand Collomb who heads a very famous large industrial group called Lafarge which has very large cement interests in India. They are one of the world's biggest cement producers. And on the Indian side the CEO is Dhruv Sahani of Triveni. They have met recently in November and they have come up with some ideas to further expand business-to-business or industry-to-industry cooperation.

Q: My question is to the Ambassador. In the case of nuclear energy and fighter planes, are you expecting some thing? What is the new development? Are there going to be some agreements or only it is being discussed?

Indian Ambassador to France: The negotiations on these matters are not conducted on the bases of time line or deadlines. In these matters many sided detailed discussions are focused. It is not the cost that remains to be discussed. There is the aspect of technology. It also concerns our ability to absorb technology. Their laws are involved. These issues are discussed in separate groups, then an overall view is taken, which naturally includes element of cost, terms of financing. These are quite complicated acquisitions, what forms of financing would be and where the financing come from. After all this it looks that the negotiations are going the right direction. It does look that negotiations are stalled, but we are convinced that these are progressing in the right direction. It is hoped that these negotiations would reach their right destination.

Q: Mr. Ambassador, you described the state of negotiations about the nuclear industry. Could you do the same about the fighter Rafale deal?

Indian Ambassador to France: I think the broad parameters you are aware that the RFP as was issued for which Rafale was then identified and the discussions have opened up with Rafale . Some aircraft, the first eighteen aircraft are supposed to come from France. After that gradually we will have greater and greater value addition being undertaken in India. By the time the last of the 126 aircraft rolls in, 80 per cent of the value addition is supposed to have been done in India. These are hugely complex pieces of equipment, so it is not just the cost, it is technology transfers. You know we have an offsets policy. How does Dassault implement the offsets policy and all the rest of it? So I think this is where the negotiations are and I think if you want detailed answers to some of this, perhaps the Ministry of Defence might be a more appropriate forum from where you could address these to the Defence Ministry. But I think according to the information that I have both from the Air Force and the Ministry of Defence, I understand that the negotiations have been proceeding smoothly and we hope that we will be able to bring them to a satisfactory conclusion.

Q: My question is to the Ambassador. In the context of JNPP you mentioned the EPR technology. But the EPR technology is both untested and unsold by France. There are already apprehensions being raised about Jaitapur going the Enron way and also whether Jaitapur is going to be a guinea pig for the French. Your take!

Indian Ambassador to France: EPR is a new technology, there is no doubt about it. There are currently three EPR reactors which are being setup - in China, in Finland and in France. All three are in the process of construction. It is not yet operational and which is one of the things that also makes EPR currently the latest, the most sophisticated technologically advanced Nuclear Power Reactor, so I do not think it is fair to say Jaitapur is a guinea pig. I think well before Jaitapur comes on stream, the three that are already under construction and in different stages of construction would have already come on stream and I think Jaitapur will probably benefit from all the lessons learnt from the other three, on which work has begun in recent years.

Q: The cultural relationship between India and France has been an ongoing process for more than fifty years when cinema has influenced Indian cinema. Truffaut and Ray you know that kind of stuff and the French run 20 cultural centres across India, which is more than anybody else I suspect. Now what is the state, one or two movies belonging to Satyajit Ray, they are misplaced or something happened, I cannot remember the details, are you aware of anything being done about that? And what does the Indian diaspora do to promote relations between the two countries because I find the French are giving awards to Shivaji Ganeshan, Satyajit Ray and to Amartya Sen tomorrow.

Indian Ambassador to France: I think that this year, as Ruchi mentioned, is 100th year of Indian cinema. And the French are also extremely excited about it. There are at least over a dozen known film festivals, beginning with Cannes which is of course the most famous and most well known which takes place in the month of May. I have had discussions with the Cannes Film Festival authorities. We started these discussions last year in May. And this year India will be the special country of honour for the Cannes Film Festival. Not just for Cannes, as I said there are about a dozen other film festivals; there are some organizers who want to do a special festival of Indian women film directors; there are others who do film festivals for short Indian films, documentaries. So they are doing a special focus section on Indian documentaries in their festival. This is the Clermont Ferrand festival. In Deauville there is another film festival; they are doing another special focus section on Indian films. We recently had a film festival in Northeastern France in a place called Vezul. There we had Indian films. And wherever we have these Indian films, there is also Indian participation by Directors, actors etc. So I think we are going to see an enormous amount of focus on films.

In addition there will be other cultural events which the different museums in France keep organizing like the Musee Guillaume. Every year they do an Indian summer which continues over a period of three, three and a half months. In Sons Pompidu we have a set of Indian events that are planned. In addition to that, as I said, in 2013 there will be a lot of focus on Indian cinema and everything that is associated with it whether it is young film makers, women film directors, new Indian cinema, classic Indian cinema etc. And all of these will find presence not just in Cannes, but in over a dozen film festivals in France.

Q: Ambassador, this cooperation, counterterrorism kind of cooperation that India has sort of started with France in Mali, is this a kind of slightly sort of moving away from the neighbourhood? Is this a new sort of phase in counterterrorism cooperation as it were of India's commitment of some amount of forces, some amount of money there and training of the Malian forces?

Indian Ambassador to France: Counterterrorism is one of the pillars of the strategic partnership between India and France along with our cooperation in space, defence and civil nuclear. When we talk of the India-France strategic partnership, we talk of four important pillars of this, as I said, civilian nuclear energy, defence, space and counterterrorism. And counterterrorism has been there for a number of years. It is not something new with Mali or any such thing. And this involves cooperation between the relevant agencies in both countries. There is a regular dialogue; there are exchanges of visits; there are exchanges of information. Certain concerns that we have, we share with them. We ask them to help us with whatever information they have. Sometimes they have better capabilities in certain sectors, and so they are open with us. Sitting in the region in which we are, naturally they have certain interests here and concerns. So they ask us in turn, share what they have, and then we see how much more we can add to their store of knowledge so that we can both develop better capabilities both collectively as well as individually to tackle the issue, the scourge of terrorism which is something which both our countries are strongly committed to fighting against.

Q: Mr. Ambassador, in terms of the relationship between India and France regarding the African continent, India goes for investments and the French goes for the antiterrorism acts but still India's interest has been trade, is there any kind of a serious discussion on this especially in Sudan, now we have involvement in Mali, then in Libya. So there is now quite a good presence of France which maybe India would like to assess the situation there.

Indian Ambassador to France: First of all, I think yes, India's economic, commercial presence in Africa is now growing, as you know, particularly after when the Prime Minister had gone and we had the India-Africa Summit. And that is exactly what the purpose of the India-Africa Summit was, to act as a catalyst to bring about greater Indian economic presence in Africa. France, as you know, as a colonial power has always had strong economic, commercial interests in Africa. So it is not as if France only has counterterrorism interests. Even today France has very significant economic and commercial interests in Africa. And I am quite sure that when President Hollande is here he would certainly take this opportunity to brief us on his assessment because, as you know, recently he paid a day-long visit to Mali and the French soldiers are still there. And he would like to brief us and we would naturally be interested in listening to him.

Another area of cooperation that we have which is also linked to this whole counterterrorism is, our people have cooperated together in combating piracy at sea. And in this also we have a strong active cooperation between Indian and French authorities.

Q: As you said, there are issues regarding cost in the negotiation for EPR supply. There are reports that the French are demanding 20 per cent over what India wants to pay for these EPRs.

Indian Ambassador to France: I do not think we are going to resolve these negotiations by discussing percentages like this here. I think we should leave it to the concerned experts on the French and Indian side to work out what is the best possible price and what is the best possible deal.

Q: A few years back some French universities and institutes began to offer overseas students the option of medium of instruction in English because they realized that language was a big barrier. Do you see an increase in the number of Indian students in universities and institutes in France now?

Indian Ambassador to France: I cannot say that there has been a very large increase but the number of Indian students going to France let us say five years ago was about 1700 a year. Today it is about 2400 a year. For Indian students, as you know, the most attractive destinations have always been English-speaking countries rather than other languages. But the French are, as you very rightly said, conscious of it particularly in some of the management schools and so on. Now they are also developing courses in English. Some of their best known management schools like HEC which is a management school, and some others on social sciences they are running bilingual programmes. So there are more and more Indian students that get attracted to Paris or to France. But I think the numbers will probably need to grow much larger as our relationship becomes deeper and wider.

Official Spokesperson: I think we have had a fairly extensive briefing on this issue and we will bring this to a close now. If you give us a minute or so I will request my colleagues to leave since they have to attend other meetings, and then I will come back in case you have anything else that you may like to ask. So just give us a break for few minutes. Thank you very much.

507. Prime Minister's Statement to the Media during the State Visit of President of France.

New Delhi, February 14, 2013.

Your Excellency, President Francois Hollande,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome President François Hollande on his State Visit to India. India is his first Asian destination for a bilateral visit. This demonstrates the importance of this relationship to our two countries.

India regards France as one of its most valued strategic partners. France has given us strong and steadfast support at difficult moments. Our relationship is defined by the breadth and diversity of our cooperation, as well as by the intensity of our dialogue. The Joint Statement that is being released today reflects the broad range of activities that is covered by our mutually beneficial engagement.

Today, President Hollande and I exchanged views on a number of bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of common interest. We reviewed progress on the Jaitapur Nuclear Power Project and reiterated our commitment to its early implementation as soon as the commercial and technical negotiations, which have made good progress, are completed.

We expressed satisfaction with the progress in our defence cooperation, which is poised to reach a qualitatively new level. Discussions on the MMRCA contract are progressing well. We have also concluded negotiations on the Short Range Surface to Air Missile, which, once approved by the Government, will be co-developed and co-produced in India. There is a welcome shift from defence trade to co-development and co-production of advanced defence items in India, which will help expand our domestic production base and strengthen the India-France strategic partnership.

We also agreed to further strengthen our counter-terrorism and intelligence cooperation.

France has been a longstanding partner in our space programme. In September 2012, I was happy to witness ISRO's 100th mission, which successfully put a French satellite in orbit. Later this month, ISRO will launch the integrated SARAL satellite carrying the ALTIKA and ARGOS payloads from the French National Space Agency.

Both President Hollande and I agreed on the need to reinvigorate our bilateral economic engagement by harnessing the enormous synergies between our two economies. We welcome the appointment of a French Special Representative for the economic relationship with India. We also look forward to the recommendations of the India-France CEOs Forum to energize our economic relations.

A Broad-based India-EU Trade and Investment Agreement, currently under negotiation, would open new opportunities for trade and investment between our two countries. I have requested President Hollande's support in ensuring an early conclusion of a balanced and mutually beneficial Agreement.

Culture is as strong a binding force as any between India and France. The second edition of "Bonjour India" is being organized currently in India. The new Cultural Exchange Programme that was signed today and the decision by French film festivals, including the Cannes festival, to celebrate the centenary of Indian cinema will further strengthen our cultural relations.

President Hollande and I also had productive discussions on regional and global issues. France and India share similar worldviews on many issues, including on the need to stabilize the global economy and combat terrorism. We also discussed the situation in Mali. As part of our support to the Malian defence forces and the African-led International Support Mission, India has announced an assistance of 1 million US dollars at the Donors Conference held recently in Addis Ababa.

I once again welcome President Hollande to India and look forward to working with him to further expand and deepen our special bilateral relationship.

Thank you

508. Joint Statement issued by India and France during the State Visit of President of France to India.

New Delhi, February 14, 2013

1. At the invitation of Prime Minister of India, the President of the French Republic paid a state visit to India on 14-15 February 2013. Dr. Manmohan Singh and Mr. Francois Hollande had detailed and useful discussions on bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest.
2. Reaffirming that, fifteen years after the launch of the Franco-Indian strategic partnership in 1998, the bilateral relationship has been steadily strengthening, widening in scope and has reached exemplary level, the Leaders agreed on a robust framework for its future development.
3. France and India have similar vision based on common shared values, relating to democracy, rule of law, civil liberties, fundamental freedoms and respect for human rights.

4. Reaffirming their independence and strategic autonomy, France and India confirmed their commitment towards a strengthened multilateralism. They seek a world at peace, in accordance with the UN Charter.
5. With the support of both Indian and French people, France and India will take their relationship to even higher heights across the board, in a long term perspective.
6. As global strategic partners, India and France consult each other on all international matters in a spirit of mutual understanding, respect, trust, and support, taking account of respective security interests.
7. France and India reaffirm the need to reform the United Nations, and, in particular, the UN Security Council so as to make it more representative. France expresses anew its support to India acceding to a permanent seat in an enlarged UNSC at the earliest. France also reiterates its support to India joining the Nuclear Suppliers Group and other export controls bodies.
8. On the 100th anniversary of the First World War in 2014, France will pay tribute to the Indian armed forces, in remembrance of their soldiers who fought and died for France's freedom.
9. The Leaders agreed to give further impetus to the Strategic Partnership;
10. In the field of defence, the Leaders reaffirmed their continued interest to enhance bilateral cooperation which is an important pillar of their strategic partnership and reflects their common determination to work for global peace and security.
11. The Leaders welcomed the ongoing exercises between their Armies (Shakti), Navies (Varuna) and Air Forces (Garuda) and confirmed their willingness to further bilateral defence cooperation, by continuing to conduct such interactions.
12. The Leaders reiterated their desire to cooperate in high technology programmes and projects in the defence sector which would include joint research and development and transfer of technology. In this connection, the Leaders noted that the projects for the Scorpene submarine and upgrade of the Mirage 2000 are moving forward and steps are being taken for early finalization of the SRSAM Project. Both sides noted the progress of ongoing negotiations on the MMRCA programme and look forward to their conclusion. The Leaders reaffirmed their interest in continuing their cooperation in combating piracy in the Gulf of Aden and other areas.

13. In space, the Leaders agreed to move forward, after the success of Megha-Tropiques satellite launch in October 2011 and the upcoming SARAL satellite launch. Both satellites contribute significantly to environmental and maritime survey purposes.
14. As next step, the Leaders acknowledged the ambitious follow-on space cooperation proposals drawn by the space agencies as an outcome of successful Science Seminar and Research and Technology Workshop held at Bangalore during February 5-6 2013.
15. In the field of energy, the Leaders expressed satisfaction in regard to ongoing collaborative projects in R&D on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and agreed to further strengthen bilateral civil nuclear scientific cooperation. Recalling the Memorandum of Understanding signed on 4 February 2009 between NPCIL and AREVA for setting up of 6 x 1650 MWe EPR units at Jaitapur, the Leaders reviewed the status in regard to the first two EPR units and noted that NPCIL and AREVA were engaged actively in techno-commercial discussions. They expressed hope for the expeditious conclusion of the negotiations. It was emphasized that the Nuclear Power Plant at Jaitapur would incorporate the highest safety standards.
16. On climate change, the Leaders agreed to remain engaged under the Durban Platform for favour an ambitious, development-oriented, inclusive response, in preparation for equitable and comprehensive outcome under the UNFCCC at COP21.

17. In the security and counter terrorism fields, close consultations and cooperation have been established. No compromise is possible with terrorists. India and France are determined to support each other when facing this scourge. Cross border terrorism needs to be addressed at the multilateral level by supporting initiatives in the framework of the UN such as the draft Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.
18. In this context, the two sides recognized that terrorism poses the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability, as well as the need for joint concerted efforts and cooperation by countries of the region to effectively counter it, including dismantling terrorist sanctuaries and safe havens, beyond Afghanistan's border, disrupting financial and tactical support being provided to terrorist groups. The Leaders expressed commitment to the key principles for a peaceful interafghan dialogue : acceptance of the Afghan Constitution, renunciation to violence and breaking links with terrorism. They expressed support for free, fair and transparent elections in 2014 and 2015. Both sides agreed that Pakistan must abide by its commitment to expeditiously bring all the perpetrators of Mumbai terror attacks to justice. Both Leaders also reiterated their strong support for ongoing efforts aimed at defeating terrorism in Mali, preserving Mali's territorial integrity, re-establishing a fully sovereign democratic government in Mali, and to contributing strongly to Mali's national reconstruction and sustainable economic development.
19. Both sides shall act with utmost dedication in the fight against the illicit traffic of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances through a specific bilateral agreement. We shall also expand our dialogue to high-tech criminality and cyber-threats.
20. The Leaders agreed to encourage closer people –to-people contact, through inter alia, easing mobility and human exchanges and promoting education, science and cultural cooperation as well as expanding trade and investment.
21. To this end, both sides have decided:

- to promote an ambitious and balanced Free Trade Agreement between India and the EU based on reciprocity and mutual benefit which will boost our bilateral economic relationship;
- to establish an annual bilateral dialogue between the two Finance Ministries on economic and financial issues;
- to foster comprehensive sustainable urban development cooperation, including infrastructure, transport, water, waste management as well as urban planning;
- to give an impetus to the cooperation on railways between Indian and French railways; a Memorandum of Understanding between Ministry of Railways and SNCF (French National Railways) has been agreed in this regard;
- to facilitate and support investments from French companies into India and Indian companies into France which contribute to growth and employment in both countries;
- to foster people mobility between the two countries. To that end, both sides noted the progress in the negotiations of a bilateral agreement on people mobility and migration, with a view to conclude them as soon as possible;
- to build up an ambitious education plan, including twining of higher education institutions, mutual recognition of degrees, research collaborations and training of teachers. A Letter of Intent and several agreements between Indian and French Universities and Institutions have been signed in this regard. We encourage greater student exchanges between both countries;
- to bolster research, technology and innovation between our research institutions, universities and business. To that end, we decided to launch the “Raman-Charpak Fellowship” which will enable exchange of doctoral students between the two countries and, in order to broaden the scope and depth of future engagements in science, technology and innovation, we have concluded several memorandum of understanding and letter of intent between Institutions. Both sides noted with satisfaction the silver jubilee celebrations of the bi-national Indo-French Centre for the Promotion of Advanced Research. It was also noted with satisfaction that France will be the partner country for the 2013 Global Technology Summit to be held in New Delhi;

- to encourage even deeper cultural links through i.e. the “Bonjour India” festival of France and the “Namaste France” festival of India at a future date and a new cultural exchanges program as well as museum and heritage cooperation. India will be the Guest Country at the “Festival de Cannes” in 2013 on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of Indian Cinema. The “Musée du Louvre” will organise an exhibition in India around 2016.

S.No	Name	French Signatory	Indian Signatory	Remarks
1.	Cultural Exchange Programme between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the French Republic for 2013-2015	Mr. Laurent Fabius, Minister for Foreign Affairs AND Ms. Aurelie Filippetti, Minister for Culture and Communication	Smt Chandresh Kumari Katoch, Minister of Culture	Both sides have agreed to: (i) Intensify cooperation in cultural and intellectual areas (ii) Foster exchanges between artists, architects, cultural stakeholders, students, teachers, researchers, sportspersons in order to encourage Indo-French Projects Encourage people-to-people contacts
2.	Letter of Intent on the Intensification of Cooperation in the Fields of Education, Higher Education and Research between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the French Republic	Ms. Genevieve Fioraso, Minister for Higher Education and Research	Shri M.M. Pallam Raju, Human Resource Development Minister	The LoI covers areas of University and Scientific Cooperation and Enhancement of Cooperation in Education including Technical and Vocational Education Training and institution of consultation mechanism.
3.	Statement of Intent for long-term cooperation in Space	Mr. Yannick d'Escatha, President, Centre National d'Études Spatiales	Shri K. Radhakrishnan, Chairman, Indian Space Research Organisation	ISRO and CNES have jointly identified the following means to pursue further cooperation including possibilities through Missions, Payloads and Applications; exchange of young Scientists and Professionals in France and in India; conducting thematic workshops etc.,

Joint Statement to follow-up and strengthen co-operation in the railway sector between the Minister of Foreign Trade and the Minister of Transportation, Sea and Fishing of the French Republic and the Minister of Railways of the Republic of India	Ms. Nicole Bricq, Minister for Foreign Trade AND Mr. Frédéric Cuvillier, Minister of Transportation, Sea and Fishing	Shri Pawan Kumar Bansal, Minister of Railways	Aims at strengthening cooperation in the field of upgradation of railway stations, high speed corridors and the modernisation of the railway network
--	---	--	---

B. Documents on Science and Technology and Education signed on the sidelines of the meeting:

1. Letter of Intent towards a Memorandum of Understanding between Delhi University and Sciences Po, Paris

The Sciences Po - Delhi University partnership aims at creating a large student (master and PhD) and scientists exchange programme opened to a large number of colleges and departments. The partnership also aims at accompanying the reform movement of Delhi University, through the creation of a credit transfer system, thus supporting Delhi University's internationalisation

2. Memorandum of Understanding on a scholarship programme involving Michelin, Ecole Centrale de Nantes and a consortium of Indian Institutions of Higher Education

The partnership between Michelin, a major investor in India, Ecole Centrale de Nantes and a consortium of Indian Institutions of higher education (IITs, Institutions of National Importance, and Central Universities) aims at funding scholarships and fellowships for students at the master's and doctorate levels to undertake a course of studies at the Ecole Centrale de Nantes

3. Memorandum of Understanding on the ERASMUS MUNDUS Program entitled "Heritage" between 8 European institutions and 7 Indian Institutions, coordinated by Ecole Centrale de Nantes and IIT Madras

The partnership between 8 European Institutions of higher learning led by Ecole Centrale de Nantes and a consortium of Indian Institutions of higher education led by IIT Madras, will allow the funding of student and scientist mobility for the next three years, through EU funds with an emphasis on engineering and scientific projects.

4. Letter of Intent towards a scholarship programme between HEC (Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales) and IIM (Indian Institute of Management) Bangalore, funded by French corporate Altran (innovation and high tech engineering consulting)

The agreement between long term partners HEC and IIM Bangalore, with the support of French corporate group Altran, aims at strengthening the ties between the two institutions by starting a "Professional Mentoring Scheme" for those students participating in their existing exchange programme.

5. MoU General Framework Agreement CNRS - Indian Institute of Science (IISc), Bangalore

Both CNRS and IISc are willing to cooperate in the fields of research, development, education, training, transfer of technology and dissemination of knowledge on long term non-commercial basis. They recognize the importance of establishing a close cooperative relationship with a view to the further development of both institutions. This agreement aims to facilitate exchange of Scientists and faculties, and new research projects.

6. MoU AREVA PhD Grant fellowship agreement with IIT Bombay

AREVA SA and Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay (IIT B) have agreed to enter into a framework agreement to collaborate for R&D projects in a variety of domains relating to AREVA's Research and Development activities. This collaboration covers mainly development of products and services in the field of nuclear fuel cycle, Nuclear reactor design and construction, Renewable energy and Energy storage for deployment and industrialisation of these technologies. AREVA will finance and support IIT B PhD students who would work on the R&D projects, through this AREVA PhD Grant fellowship agreement.

7. MoU between Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) and Embassy of France:

The MoU aims at collaboration in teaching and training in French Language.

8. Agreement of Partnership between Indian Institute of Technology Kanpur (IITK) And Ecole Centrale de Nantes (ECN), France on Academic and Research Collaboration

The Indian Institute of Technology Kanpur (IITK) and the Ecole Centrale de Nantes (ECN) are mutually interested in enlarging and broadening their cooperation and establishing collaboration in academic and research-related activities.

9. Letter of Intent on the second phase of a support fund for student and faculty mobility between ParisTech and a consortium of seven IITs

The Lol aims at exchange programme of Under Graduates and post Graduates and joint research.

10. Letter Of Intent Between St Gobain Research India And Indo-French Centre For The Promotion Of Advanced Research

The aim of the Lol is to create a new innovation programme called “sustainable habitat for hot and/or humid climates”. The main topics covered by this program will be:

- o Sensing and monitoring building and analyzing energy consumption of various buildings in various climates and characterize building energy envelop.
- o Develop Sustainable and affordable building materials solutions, including but not limited to cooling methods and lighting, with alternate and regionally available material solutions.

11. Memorandum of Understanding between Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore and CNRS (Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique)

This MOU is aimed at Cooperation between the two institutions which may be established within any field of mutual interest related to science and technology.

12. Letter of Intent between INSERM – AVIESAN (Alliance pour les sciences de la VIE et de la Santé) and Institut National du Cancer, French Republic and Max Institute of Health Education and Research, Republic of India

INCa and Max Institute of Health Education and Research desire to enhance bilateral projects on cancer research (for instance in the areas of epidemiology, biochemistry, proteomics, and genetics of cancer) and public health.

13. Letter of Intent for an Indo French Laboratory on liver diseases-Inserm and Institute for Liver and Biliary Sciences, Delhi

This Letter of Intent sets the general understanding of the two institutions to set up this Indo-French International Associated Laboratory entitled “Transcriptomics and Metabolomics for the Development of Indo-French Research on Severe Liver Diseases” during the year 2013, after completion and signature of the dedicated agreement establishing the terms and conditions of its implementation.

14. General Framework Agreement Oseo- Technology Development Board (TDB)

This Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) aims to establish a collaborative framework under which Oséo and TDB may carry out activities related to the exchanging of best practices and the setting up of coordinated measures to foster technological exchanges and innovation collaborations between companies, organizations and institutions of France and India. These activities can include, but are not limited to : Exchanges, Facilitation of relations among companies, organizations and institutions, Funding of collaborative innovation projects, Coordinated financial instruments

15. Letter of Intent between Ecole Normale Supérieure (ENS - Paris) and the Chennai Mathematical Institute, towards an exchange programme involving students, academics and researchers

- 16. Letter of Intent between Ecole Normale Supérieure (ENS - Paris) and the Delhi University, towards an exchange programme involving students, academics and researchers
- 17. Double Master's degree between Ecole des Mines de Nantes and University of Petroleum and Energy Studies (UPES)

C. Agreements signed separately during the visit:

18. Credit Facility Agreement (CFA) for the Bangalore Metro Rail Project, Phase-I, between Department of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Finance of India, and AFD, the French Development Agency.
19. MoU between the Ministry of Railways of the Republic of India and the French National Railways (SNCF) on Technical Cooperation in the field of Railway Sector

New Delhi

February 14, 2013

- 509. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the meeting between Minister of Commerce and Industry Anand Sharma and French President Hollande.

New Delhi, July 9, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma held bilateral talks with his counterpart, Ms. Nicole Bricq, the French Minister for Foreign Trade, in Paris. Shri Sharma requested the French Minister to encourage French companies to participate in key sectors in India such as infrastructure, transport, high technology and energy. The Indian Minister stressed the need for the French Government to provide strategic support to French industries interested in doing business with India while assuring that the Government of India was committed to providing a conducive and positive policy environment for foreign investments in several key sectors. Shri Sharma also stressed the need for strong French support at the political level for early conclusion of the India-EU BTIA which would contribute to growth in bilateral trade and investment. He also invited the French Minister to visit India at her earliest convenience.

Earlier yesterday, the Indian Minister inaugurated the 6th Session of the India-France CEOs Forum along with the French Minister for Economy and Finance, Mr. Pierre Moscovici. Addressing the Forum, Shri Sharma highlighted the strong growth fundamentals of India which remain rooted in deep democratic values and urged the French investors to enhance their engagement of Indian firms and investment in India to develop a win-win partnership in keeping with the elevated political relations between the two strategic partners. Shri Sharma also emphasised the need for the larger French companies to support the French SME sector in developing its presence in India.

Outlining the provisions of India's National Manufacturing Policy (NMP), the Indian Minister told the French CEOs about the opportunities of investment being created in the green field integrated and self-governing National Investment and Manufacturing Zones (NIMZs) both along and outside the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. Shri Sharma also addressed issues raised by some French CEOs, the most important being the issue of patent protection in India. He clarified that India's Intellectual Property laws were completely TRIPs compliant and India has used the TRIPs flexibility with far greater restraint than a number of other countries, including some developed countries.

On the Novartis case, Shri Sharma explained that it was ruling by the highest Court and not an executive pronouncement. The French Minister for Economy and Finance said that India's growth potential was well understood in France as was exemplified by the presence of more than 700 French companies in India. He also stated that France supported signing of the India-Europe Broad-based Investment and Trade Agreement (BTIA) in the spirit of mutual benefit.

Shri Sharma also held meetings with CEOs of French companies with a large presence in India including La Farge and Capgemini. The French CEOs apprised Shri Sharma of their future plans in India and offered suggestions to further improve the investment climate.

Shri Sharma stressed the shared global and strategic vision of India and France while thanking the French President Mr. Francois Hollande for the keen interest shown in India-France commercial relations. Shri Sharma earlier yesterday attended a reception by the French President on the occasion of the 6th Indo-French CEOs Forum meeting.

Shri Sharma met the French Foreign Minister, Mr. Laurent Fabius, where they exchanged views on a range of issues and regional and global developments which were of common interest to both the countries. They also discussed ways to capitalise on the excellent political understanding between India and France to enhance bilateral commercial and economic relations.

ITALY

510. Press statement on the Italian Marines issue.

New Delhi, March 12, 2013.

1. The Ministry of External Affairs received a note verbale from the Embassy of Italy in New Delhi late in the evening of 11 March 2013 regarding the Supreme Court decision of 18 January 2013 on the Italian Marines issue. The note verbale conveyed, inter-alia, that Italy deems that there is an existing controversy with India concerning the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Laws of the Sea of 1982 and the general principles of international law applicable to the Enrica Lexie incident. They have requested the Indian government to set up a meeting at diplomatic level in order to reach an amicable solution of the said controversy. A request had earlier been received in this regard on 6 March 2013. The Italian request of 6 March 2013 is under examination.

2. Meanwhile, by the note verbale dated 11 March 2013, Italy has informed that “since a controversy between the two States has been established, the two Italian Marines, Mr. Latorre and Mr. Girone, will not return to India on the expiration of the permission granted to them”. It may be recalled that the Supreme Court of India in its Order dated 22 February 2013, had permitted the two Marines to leave India on the express undertaking given by the Republic of Italy, and under the terms of the Order, they are required to return to India within a period of four weeks to face legal proceedings in India.
3. Government of India states firmly that it does not agree with the position conveyed by the Italian Government on the return of the two Marines to India. The Italian Ambassador was summoned by the Foreign Secretary today and Government of India's position on this matter was conveyed to him in the strongest of terms. It was conveyed to him that India expects Republic of Italy as a country that is committed to the rule of law to fulfil the sovereign undertaking given by it to the Supreme Court of India. It was only following this undertaking that the Supreme Court allowed the two Marines to travel to and remain in Italy for a period of four weeks and return to India under the care, supervision and control of the Italian Republic. It was conveyed to the Italian Ambassador that the Italian Government was obliged to ensure their return to India within the stipulated period as per the terms of the Supreme Court Order.

511. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Official Spokesperson: You may like to ask any questions, those who have not asked any questions before.

Q: Hi, I am from AFP, I would like to know about the Italian Mariners and the recent Supreme Court order. There is one thing we would like you to clarify as the Ambassador enjoys the diplomatic immunity. So, what difference does it make and can we restrict its (inaudible)

Official Spokesperson: What is your question?

Q: Because if he enjoys diplomatic immunity, how does Supreme Court's order makes sense?

Official Spokesperson: I would suggest you please read the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and indicate to me what aspect of that has been impeded. So, we have not heard from anybody else except from you that there is some element of the Vienna Convention that may have been impacted on. Unless you specify to me which aspect has been.

Q: The question our bureau has been asking

Official Spokesperson: Please tell me which aspect, let us be very specific, I have here with me the Vienna Convention.

Q: For instance, if he wants to leave tomorrow.

Official Spokesperson: For instance, I do not answer to hypothetical questions

Q: The Italian Foreign Minister has issued a statement or answered a question saying that they have solid reason to proceed in direction of international arbitration that the Indian government has been consistently and amply apprised of all its needs to know about our reasons as do many of our partners. Your reaction please.

Official Spokesperson: As far as we are concerned, you know, the first step in terms of inter-state relations or public international law is that agreements ought to be respected and we expect that Italy too respects the agreements that their Ambassador voluntarily submitted to the highest court in India. That is the issue at stake. Everything else takes secondary importance because for us agreements need to be respected or abided by and we look forward to Italy as a country with a history to ensure that agreements are abided by, agreements which they have provided to us through solemn assurances.

Q: Sir, Article 32 of the Vienna Convention says that if a host country in which a diplomat enjoys diplomatic immunity initiates legal proceedings, then he cannot claim diplomatic immunity from the conduct ...of that particular place. In this particular case, does it fall under this particular Article?

Official Spokesperson: You have quoted the article that your friend was raising and I think I am grateful to you for having responded to her question because she did not know the article. That is the answer to her question.

Q: Sir, as far as MEA is concerned...

Official Spokesperson: Please this is not as far as MEA is concerned – this is being adjudicated by the highest court of India. Please understand and I am certain, they are aware of all the legal niceties. It is not for us to decide on this. They take into cognizance every aspect of law both international and domestic and as you just explained the rationale stems from what you have explained is the basis for decision making on their part.

Q: I believe that Ambassador has been asked to reply by March 18, 2013, so will you wait for their reply or will New Delhi have a dialogue with Italy?

Official Spokesperson: As part of our ongoing efforts following what the Prime Minister has said in Parliament yesterday, we have initiated a study of our interactions with Italy. At the end of that internal process, we will take further action that is appropriate taking into account all aspects of our relationship.

Q: Kerala Government has blamed this directly to your failure. There was direction from the Supreme Court, despite this you allowed them to go and now you are unable to bring them back. Now you blame it on double game. You should not have allowed them to go. The Kerala government asks a straight question, Prime Minister is asked in the House, what will be your answer? Our two people are killed and their two persons were in our custody and you let them go, why?

Official Spokesperson: I will try and answer it in English as all of you know, I am not very fluent and cannot capture the nuances of an answer in Hindi. I can speak Hindustani. Unfortunately I cannot answer this question in Hindi since there are complications in it.

I think you have to understand that as an executive authority, we abide by the rulings of court. Our views on this matter were expressed to the court and we abided by the outcome on that. It is not in our nature to get involved in inter-ministerial or centre and state disputes because that is not the way the Ministry of External Affairs works. We represent India in its totality and therefore, we will not get involved in inter-bureaucratic disputes. So, may I request you and anybody else in future please desist from asking us inter-Ministerial questions! What you have raised is an issue which was discussed extensively in the Supreme Court. All the record is available. I would suggest that you please have a look of who took what position and satisfy yourself on that basis. But I do not think, this is neither the occasion nor am I the appropriate person to respond to intra-mural views on a matter of national importance.

Q: inaudible.

Official Spokesperson: All I said was that we have initiated a study which reviews in a comprehensive manner all aspects of the bilateral relationship and based on the outcome of that study and as the situation evolves you will see our response. The first step we have taken previously was in responding quite clearly reaffirming the views of the Supreme Court of India and assurances that were provided by the Italian Ambassador himself. If there are other further steps, these will be the outcome of what I have indicated to you, is an ongoing process.

Q: If you could just explain the technicalities. The Supreme Court's decision of asking the Ambassador not to leave the country. Now, will he be not allowed to leave the country if he wants? Will he be stopped at the airport?

Official Spokesperson: I have answered previously that we do not get into hypothetical questions. That situation has not arisen and therefore, I am not at liberty to respond to a hypothetical question which may lead to something. I have indicated to you clearly and I would reiterate that no aspect of the Vienna Convention has been impacted on. Therefore, at this stage everything else is moot. We would not like to further get into hypothetical assumptions or hypothetical situations. As and when situation develops, of course, you will be the first to know about it.

Q: You said it is not in our nature to get into inter-Ministerial. Which is the other Ministry?

Official Spokesperson: It was not a Ministry. He was mentioning about the Kerala Government. Ultimately the issue is these are between two organs of a state. We in the Ministry of External Affairs represent India as an international entity. Therefore, we will not get into disputes or differences or views. It is normal in any organization or any state that different people have different views and those views finally are reconciled and a decision is taken by those who are authorized to take that decision and in this case it is the Government of India. That Government of India was represented by a lawyer who represented several Ministries. He did not represent 'A' Ministry by itself or 'B' Ministry. Ultimately the Union of India that took that decision and I represent, as far as I am concerned, the external aspects of that decision.

Q: External Affairs Minister, Salman Khurshid said that after the notice of the Supreme Court, the Ministry will do everything possible to comply, to guarantee that notice will be respected, is it like that?

Official Spokesperson: Of course, who in the Government of India is going to say that I will not abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of India. After all the Supreme Court is the epitome of our superior judiciary. The question of anyone not abiding by it does not arise. So, I hope that is clear to you and to everybody else here. As of today, I have again said, we do not see any impact on the Vienna Convention. As regards whether somebody has to travel, there are different Ministries and different organizations of the government of India which handles these aspects and our aspects, we will handle.

Q: When is Mr. Basant Gupta expected to arrive in Rome?

Official Spokesperson: If he hasn't taken off from here how will he arrive in Rome. He is very much here in Ministry of External Affairs, I also indicated to you we are thoroughly reviewing the entire expense. A study is underway of the situation as it is today is being examined carefully.

Q: Does the diplomatic immunity cover the offences of deception and fraud and contempt of Court?

Official Spokesperson: I don't know which of those things that you listed is an offence and under what sections etc and I am not the right person to get involved in an interpretation of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code. As regards diplomatic immunity at this stage I have responded what the Supreme Court orders stems from which is that if diplomatic agents willingly submit to the jurisdiction of the court, then that jurisdiction applies and that's what he was mentioning in the article that he was referring to. As regards anything further we will take it as it happens. We will all go by, as you are aware, as a country which has signed the Vienna convention.

Q: So far any communications received by SriLankan Govt regarding the arrest of 60 fishermen today at Pachkedu?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, I have news that I can share with you and that is, it is not 60 fishermen let me try and recollect the information. They were 19 fishermen in four boats who were arrested yesterday and they were taken to Talaimannar and our Consul General in Jaffna, he is right now in Talaimannar, is trying into gain Consular access to them.

Separately, in another incident today, 34 fisherman with five trollers have been apprehended and these were apprehended, by my information, at a different place and that is Delft islands.

We are now talking to the Sri Lankan authorities on that matter. Separately, based on these two incidents the Ministry of External Affairs did summon the Sri Lankan Deputy High Commissioner today and has emphasized the following:

That they should be treated in a humane manner; The Sri Lankan authorities should exercise restraint. There should not be any violence against them and as per our understanding we hope that swiftly and expeditiously these fishermen, as there is an arrangement between Sri Lanka and India, are returned to India.

Question: You are saying that submitted the jurisdiction of the Indian court then that immunity does not stand and on the other hand you are saying that the Vienna Convention has not been impacted. So what slipped between.....(inaudible)

Official Spokesperson: There is no slip because you are not looking at the other aspects of the Vienna Convention that your other colleague has looked at. I would suggest please read the Vienna Convention, the answers are available there and that's why I am confident in saying what I am saying, the aspect that he referred to relates to jurisdiction. There are other aspects relating to enforcement etc. I would suggest that you have a look at that those executional elements. And look I am not an international public lawyer, however my idea is to try and explain to you the broad contours of the situation and that I would suggest please read those aspects of the Vienna Convention that some of your colleagues may have read and understand this.

Question: Is India satisfied with the cooperation received from the Italian authorities on the investigation into August Westland Deal?

Official Spokesperson: I do not have an update on that but we have previously said that of course we would want assistance, we would want more information, we would want as much information as possible so that we try and pursue this matter at our end. This is something which we have said previously and I don't see a change in that as yet.

Question: In Nepal the ten month long political stand off apparently seems to have ended with formation of Chief Justice led Government. So as a close neighbor and as country that has a huge interest in Nepal, how do you respond to that political development. And given the situation, the division of the political parties regarding this Chief Justice led Government, do you see possibility, prospect of election held a second time?

Official Spokesperson: Modern technology has its perils. I am waiting for a response so if you give me a minute I will walk out and come back and answer your question. There is an answer available but I am not able to access it.

Sometimes it is better to use the traditional and conventional methods.

Yes, on your question, I would like to say that the GOI welcomes the formation today of the interim election govt. led by the Chief Justice of Nepal Rt. Hon. Khil Raj Regmi. We commend the people of Nepal and the political parties representing them of finding a way out of the impasse of the past few months. The formation of the Interim Election Government in Nepal comes at a critical juncture in Nepal's quest to hold constituent assembly cum parliament elections which is essential to consolidate the democratic gains made by its people and institutionalize a strong multi party democracy in Nepal. We hope that the Interim Election Government with the support of all the political parties and the people of Nepal will move forward in the spirit of the political agreements reached with regard to the election. India stands behind the people of Nepal in their efforts to build a stable democratic and prosperous Nepal and will continue to extend all possible cooperation to the people and Government of Nepal in accordance with their aspirations and priorities and shortly we will release the statement that will be available on our website.

I think with that we will end this discussion.

512. Statement in Lok Sabha by External Affairs Minister on return of two Italian marines to India accused in the killing of two Indian fishermen.

New Delhi, March 22, 2013.

Madam Speaker,

I rise to inform the house on recent developments on the issue of return of two Italian marines to India accused in the killing of two Indian fishermen.

In response to concerns raised by the Members of the House, Hon'ble Prime Minister had made a statement on 13 March 2013 on the matter regarding the decision by Italy not to send back two Italian marines accused in the killing of two Indian fishermen. Prime Minister had stated, inter alia, that the Government has insisted that the Italian authorities respect the undertaking they have given to the Hon'ble Supreme Court and return the two accused persons to stand trial in India. The Minister for Parliamentary Affairs Shri Kamal Nath had also stated during the Zero Hour on 13 March 2013 in the Rajya Sabha that all issues raised by Members in this matter will be addressed and answered at a time and in a manner which the Chair may decide.

It would be recalled that the Supreme Court in its Order of 22 January 2013 allowed an application by the two Italian marines, Massimiliano Latorre and Salvatore Girone and permitted them to travel to Italy and to remain in the Republic of Italy for a period of four weeks. The Order, inter alia, stated that the marines shall travel to Italy, remain in Italy and return to India under the care, supervision and control of the Italian Republic. On return, they shall once again be bound by the conditions contained in the Order passé by the court on 18 January 2013. The Republic of Italy gave an undertaking to the court that the Italian marines will be kept under its constant custody, supervision and control during this period and took full responsibility for securing the return of the Italian marines to New Delhi on or before the expiry of the period permitted by the court.

Earlier the Supreme Court in its order dated 18 January 2013, in a writ petition filed by the Italian marines and the Republic of Italy raising several jurisdictional issues, had ruled, inter alia, that India has jurisdiction, the matter will be put before a Special Court to be set up by the Union of India in consultation with the Chief Justice of India to try this case and to dispose of the same in accordance with the provisions of the Maritime Zones Act, 1976, the Indian Penal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure and the provisions of UNCLOS 1982, where there is no conflict between the domestic law and UNCLOS 1982.

A communication was received by the Ministry of External Affairs from the Embassy of Italy in New Delhi late in the evening of 11 March 2013 conveying, inter alia, that Italy deems that there is an existing controversy with India concerning the applicability of the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 1982 and the general principles of international law applicable to the Enrica Lexie incident. For these reasons, it requested the Indian Government to set up a meeting at diplomatic level in order to reach an amicable solution of the said controversy, and conveyed that “since a controversy between the two States has been established, the two Italian Marines, Mr. Latorre and Mr. Girone, will not return to India on the expiration of the permission granted to them”.

On 14 March 2013, the Attorney General of India filed an Affidavit before the Hon'ble Supreme Court conveying these developments in this matter to the Hon'ble Court. The matter was heard by Hon'ble Supreme Court on 18 March 2013. The next hearing is scheduled for 2 April 2013.

Our position has been conveyed in clear terms to the Italian Government. The Supreme Court has affirmed that India has the jurisdiction to try the case even as it has given another opportunity vide its judgement of 18 January, to the petitioners to raise the issue of jurisdiction by adducing evidence before the Special Court to be set up for trial of this case. The Italian requests for diplomatic or expert level meetings to consider the issue of jurisdiction or referring the case to arbitration or any other judicial mechanism cannot be accepted. I have made it clear that the Republic of Italy is bound to honour the solemn commitment that it has made to the Supreme Court to ensure the return of the marines to India within the time period permitted by the Supreme Court.

Following this, we were informed through a diplomatic approach that the Government of Italy would be willing to send the two marines back to India as per its commitment. It sought from India clarifications regarding the conditions applicable to the marines on their return and the provisions regarding the death penalty that could be applicable in this case which was an Italian concern. Notwithstanding the pending proceedings, the Government has informed the Italian Government that the two marines will not be liable for arrest if they return within the time frame laid down by the Supreme Court of India, and shall once again be bound by the conditions contained in the order passed by the Court on 18th January 2013; and that, according to well settled Indian jurisprudence, this case would not fall in the category of matters which attract the death penalty, that is to say the rarest of rare cases. Therefore, there need not be any apprehension in this regard.

These clarifications will also be placed before the Hon'ble Supreme Court appropriately. Following the clarification, we have a confirmation that the Italian Government is arranging for the return of the two Italian marines within the time frame permitted by the Supreme Court.

I am glad that the matter has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion and the trial of the marines will now proceed as per the directions of the Supreme Court in its order of 18 January 2013.

GERMANY

513. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary on Prime Minister's visit to Germany.

New Delhi, April 8, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here today for this special briefing on the Prime Minister's forthcoming visit to Germany.

We have here with us Foreign Secretary who will make a few opening remarks and then the floor will be open for questions. Along with Foreign Secretary we also have Additional Secretary (Europe West), Ms Ruchi Ghanashyam, who will assist the Foreign Secretary. If you have any specific questions you can also direct them to her.

Now without much ado I will ask Foreign Secretary to make his opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Ranjan Mathai): Thank you.

Prime Minister will be paying a bilateral visit to Germany from 10th to 12th April to participate in the second round of Intergovernmental Consultations with Germany. He will be accompanied by a high-level delegation including Ministers and senior officials. India has this form of engagement – the Intergovernmental Consultations - only with Germany.

The first round of the Indo-German Intergovernmental Consultations took place in New Delhi on May 31, 2011. And from Germany's side, in Asia the Intergovernmental Consultation format is used with only two other countries and they are Israel and China. Germany also has such meetings with its other European partners.

Chancellor Merkel when she came to India in 2011 was accompanied by five of her key Cabinet Ministers and three Ministers of State. The idea of the Intergovernmental Consultations is for Indian and German Ministers to meet and discuss their respective areas of cooperation and thereafter to report to the two Heads of Government on the progress achieved and the plans for the future in their respective areas. In addition to the Ministers accompanying PM, the National Security Advisor who will be part of the Delegation will address security-related issues and hold a strategic dialogue. In the course of his visit, Prime Minister will also symbolically bring what is called the 'Days of India in Germany', which is a long series of events in that country, to a close.

India and Germany decided to celebrate the 60th anniversary of our diplomatic relations between the two countries, they were established in 1951, through year-long festivals in each other's countries. Chancellor Merkel did the soft launch of the 'German Year in India' on May 31st, as I said, when she was here. The 'Days of India in Germany' was launched the next year on May 11, 2012 in Hamburg when Commerce, Industry and Textiles Minister Shri Anand Sharma was present at the Hamburg port. On that day they were also celebrating the 823rd anniversary of the port itself. The 'Days of India in Germany' festival had four focus areas – Trade and Investment, Science and Technology, Education including Vocational Education, and Culture. A series of events were held all over Germany in each of these areas.

PM will also call on the President of Germany, President Gauck. Relations between India and Germany have traditionally been cordial and close. Bilateral relations were upgraded to the level of strategic partnership in May 2000 during the visit of German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer to India after an Agenda for Indo-German Partnership for the 21st Century was agreed on.

In the last two decades the economic relationship has expanded manifold. India and Germany had set a trade target of Euros 20 billion to be achieved by 2012. We came very close to this target in the last year but there has been a slowdown which had its impact and in fact in 2012 our trade contracted by around ten per cent.

Germany is also a significant investor in India. It is the eighth largest foreign direct investor in India and it is a crucial source of technology in several areas. I would say that our cooperation in the area of science and technology is one of the central pillars of our strategic partnership. There are at present more than 150 joint S&T projects and 70 direct partnerships between Indian and German universities in the field of science and technology. Cooperation in this particular field has emerged as a focus area for both our countries.

India and Germany also have an expanding relationship in the field of education, especially vocational education and training, an area in which German expertise is well recognized. The German scholarly tradition has also played a major role in introducing Indian art, culture, literature and philosophy to a wider world.

We look forward to discussions on various issues pertaining to our relationship, and we believe the second round of Intergovernmental Consultations will be another landmark in our relationship with Germany, which is growing swiftly in several important areas. Thank you.

Question: Sir, would any agreements be signed during this visit and if so what are the areas in which those agreements will be signed? Secondly, would a discussion on free trade agreement with the EU form part of the agenda? The Germans are saying they want a compromise on the issue of import duty on their luxury cars. What is the thinking in India about this?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, we have made progress in a number of areas of bilateral cooperation and we will be entering into some agreements and memoranda of understanding. The full details will be available when we complete the visit. But broadly the agreements would be in the areas of education including vocational education, science and technology, and clean energy. These will be the three areas. As far as the trade and investment agreement with the EU is concerned, we are of the view that the early conclusion of the India-EU agreement would open up new economic opportunities for both sides, and certainly that applies to the way in which we approach our economic engagement with Germany. Our negotiations have reached an advanced stage. In fact I am informed that there will be another round of negotiations in Brussels perhaps around the 15th of April, and that is when the negotiations will be taken forward. But we certainly will be discussing the matter with the German side. We expect a strong political thrust from Germany for an early conclusion of the agreement. Certainly the issue of cars is one of those which will be discussed by our side with the EU counterparts in Brussels.

Q: Is defence going to be on the agenda then? If so, what would be discussed on defence?

Foreign Secretary: In the sense that defence is part of the overall relationship. The Defence Ministers will not be participating in the IGC itself. But of course in the discussions with the Germans there would be a reference to the fact that we do have a fairly substantive defence relationship between our two countries. But formally on the agenda perhaps no, because the composition of the delegations on the two sides are focused on the issues which they will be taking up.

But broadly I would mention that Germany is a participant, we had a defence agreement with Germany, as you may recall in 2006 and since that time there is a regular system of consultations and dialogues between our two Ministries. And there is a Higher Defence Council which is headed by the Defence Secretaries of the two sides. So, that is the place where most of the discussions on defence take place. In our Joint Statement there is a reference to defence technology cooperation between the two countries.

Q: Three, four years ago I remember reading in the papers that India made an offer of five or ten billion Euros to the European Union when they were going through a financial problem. What is the status of that? Did they use it? Secondly, the last time one was in Berlin one saw lots of Indian students doing a diploma in Max Mueller Bhavan in Pune and find admission in universities in Berlin and other places. And because they get a bursary or the university administration would help them make enough money, they continue to be students for years and years. Does that still continue? Are you in a position to say something about that?

Foreign Secretary: On the second, I will say definitely not. When I come back from Germany I may be able to share my experiences with you. But I will say that the Germans have given a great deal of emphasis to cooperation in the field of education and certainly the pattern of students going for education particularly in the field of science and technology, higher technology courses, has been quite ... I am not aware of the specifics which you are referring to of their bursaries continuing indefinitely. It does not sound very much like the German pattern of keeping control over these things. But I will certainly come back with better information on this.

I believe what you are referring to was an IMF facility which our Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, during an IMF meeting had looked at. Yes, we made a commitment but that was not a specific contribution but making available a facility should it become necessary. That was I think only a year and a half ago.

Q: Will there be discussion on G-4? Taking into consideration the opposition of Italy, there shall be talks with Germany?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, the G4 proposal will be discussed. The External Affairs Minister will in fact be reaching Germany before the Intergovernmental Consultations for a separate bilateral meeting, before he joins the IGC. And certainly in that this subject will come up as to how we can jointly take forward the G4 proposal. And while considering the G4 proposal we will of course be looking at the modalities in which it can be taken forward, which means also considering ways in which we can deal with those groups within the UN system who have a different view.

Question: What is the status of our nuclear negotiations with the Germans? Is this a part of the Intergovernmental Consultations? Is the nuclear cooperation kind of thing not on the anvil?

Foreign Secretary: It is not a part. It is not being discussed.

Q: Germans are masters in heavy machinery and infrastructure building technology. Are they willing to share the expertise with us or transfer their expertise to us?

Foreign Secretary: Certainly there have been between our companies and German companies very many transfer of technology agreements over the years. We have also made presentations to the German side on investment possibilities in India including in the field of infrastructure.

Interestingly the MD of the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC) was in Germany about two or three weeks ago and he made a series of presentations on the scope and the potential of the DMIC as a good area for investment, particularly in the infrastructure industries and technology-intensive industries for Germany. Though, as you know, the DMIC is being constructed as a collaborative venture with Japan, but certainly the townships which will come up in the corridor will be areas of possibilities for cooperation with many foreign partners. And certainly Germany is one of those whom we have been targeting very specifically. I myself did a small presentation to a group of Germans here on the DMIC a year ago. And following the visit of, as I said the DMIC MD, this will be taken forward.

Certainly in the area of science and technology, one of the focus areas for our attention is high technology and bringing high technology from Germany to India. We have a Joint Working Group between the two countries on heavy industry. One of the new themes which are being talked about is electric mobility. Actually what it means is electric transport. The Germans have done a lot of advanced work on new forms of transport using electrical power transmissions. So, I think there is good potential for technology transfer from Germany.

Q: On trade, last year there was a decline in trade. The FTA with EU has been lingering. Can we expect something at bilateral level to boost the trade?

Foreign Secretary: I think in fact the trade was growing very rapidly till last year, in fact very substantially. As I said, the target of 20 billion Euro had almost been achieved. We will certainly look to bilateral elements in the trading relationship, as I said, through the technology transfers, through investments which will accelerate trade also. But the BTIA will be an additional feature to push forward our trade relationship. May be you would like to add something.

Additional Secretary (Europe West)(Ms Ruchi Ghanashyam): During the 'Days of India in Germany', a number of trade promotion events have also been held which also we hope will add to the Indo-German trade efforts.

Q: There has been some concern in India about the austerity measures that Germany is imposing or has been able to sell to the rest of the European Union because this is starting to affect our trade exports and our current account deficit. Will we be raising concerns about German macroeconomic policies and Eurozone?

Foreign Secretary: The situation in the Eurozone will certainly form part of the discussions between the Prime Minister and Chancellor Merkel. Whether it can be put specifically in those terms, I am not quite so sure. But certainly our focus in the G20 whenever we have met has been that the need of the hour is in fact to get growth back on track. And I think that would be the emphasis in our discussions including matters relating to Eurozone and macroeconomic policy.

Q: Are we on the same page in terms of how growth should be revived?

Foreign Secretary: In the G20 forum, yes, I think broadly there is agreement on the possibilities of expanding growth globally, and the countries in the Eurozone certainly have to play their own part in that.

Q:: ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: Yes, definitely Afghanistan will be featuring in the discussions. We have had interesting exchanges with Germany. As you know, Germany is a part of the ISAF and it has had a contingent in Mazar in the past. As the drawdown continues Germany like the other countries would like to ensure that the future of Afghanistan is not marked by uncertainty and instability. So, there would be a good scope for discussion on what it is we need to do politically and in the field of economic support to the Government of Afghanistan to maintain an area of stability.

Q: Germany is one of the few stable countries inside Eurozone. They are major investors abroad. But as far as investments into India are concerned, by their own admission Germans say it is not up to the mark. So, during the bilateral talks, what are the measures that both the countries could discuss or will be discussing to promote inbound investments into India?

Foreign Secretary: Certainly the Prime Minister would use the opportunity of his discussions with the German Chancellor and in the Intergovernmental Consultations to clarify the steps taken by India to improve the investment climate in our country and to emphasize that the reform process is on track and that a number of steps have been taken including setting up a Cabinet Committee on Investment. The kind of measures which the Government has already taken. I cannot second guess what the Prime Minister might say about the future - that I will be able to brief you when we come back - but certainly the very large number of steps which we have taken in the past would be clarified. And we would hope the Germans would take due note of these changes.

I may also mention that as part of the investment promotion, we have also had a series of visits abroad by the Finance Minister to a number of countries. So, this is part of an ongoing engagement with the world at large and we certainly do regard Germany - Europe as a whole but Germany specifically - as potentially a country which could invest much more heavily in India.

Q: Sir, already some apprehensions or concerns have been expressed over the proposed India-EU agreement both from some political parties as well as from a section of the industry, specifically on the dairy products. Can you assure that both the concerns are being duly addressed during the negotiations?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, absolutely. I can say that whatever are the requirements to protect India's interests, those will be taken. I am not specifically aware of the concerns you mentioned relating to dairy, but we did have a discussion regarding pharmaceuticals which had been mentioned in some press articles. We must state that the Ministry of Commerce which is leading these negotiations is fully aware of the requirements which we have under the TRIPS and that will be the basis on which we proceed.

Q: Sir, Germany appears to be keen to do something in the renewable energy sector in India and apparently some discussions are on on Green Energy Corridors in India. Could you give us some details on that?

Foreign Secretary: They have been interested in supporting the Green Energy Corridors which is a scheme to permit the transmission of power renewable energy sources through the grid so that you connect up these sources. I believe there is a figure of one billion Euros which has been committed to supporting Green Energy Corridors over a period of years. These will of course be taken up case by case by the industries concerned. But Germany, yes, is keen to support the concept of Green Energy Corridors.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: What I said is that nothing has been formally signed yet but this is the kind of discussions which have been held.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: As I mentioned, the External Affairs Minister would be there. Commerce, Industries and Textile Minister would be part of the delegation. Minister for Science and Technology Shri Jaipal Reddy, Minister for New and Renewable Energy Shri Farooq Abdullah, Minister for Human Resource Development Shri Pallam Raju will be part of the delegation.

Q: Nearly entire Europe is economically sinking except Germany. Is there any paradigm shift in our foreign strategy?
Foreign Secretary: I am not sure the whole of Europe is sinking when we had very fruitful discussions both with the President of France who certainly did not convey that his country was sinking. I think this is a matter of perception. The slowdown in growth is a matter of concern certainly. But I think it would be difficult to conclude that the whole of Europe is sinking.

Official Spokesperson: Foreign Secretary has agreed that he will answer a couple of more questions on anything else.

Q: Sir, I just wanted to know your reaction to the New York Times' story today about this secret deal between the United States and Pakistan on drone strikes, that the Pakistanis will allow these drone strikes to happen as long as they avoided the terror training camps in POK.

Foreign Secretary: We will need to see whether this report is in fact authentic.

Q: Was the Government caught unawares on this situation that there was a secret deal between the US and Pakistan? And what is the Government's prognosis on the situation?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, this is a newspaper article and it needs to be substantiated. At this stage it would be speculative for me to comment beyond that.

Q: In London there is a couple who have been wrongly accused of molesting their child and have been handed over to the Social Security Authority. And the couple wants the Indian Foreign Ministry to intervene. In fact I spoke about this to you on Saturday also. Is there any reaction to that, Sir?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think we have received anything directly from the couple but we are awaiting a report from our High Commission. We are aware of it and certainly we have seen the same reports which you have. So, we are awaiting a detailed report from our High Commission as to what exactly is the situation and what can be done.

Q: Sir, as you know there is much anxiety about the Nitaqat law which is being implemented in Saudi Arabia. Can you say at what stage are the discussions with the Saudis and whether a Ministers' team will visit Saudi?

Foreign Secretary: I think at this point the Minister for Labour under whose charge it comes in Saudi Arabia, is not in the country. He should be back perhaps in a week's time at which point we will take up a proposal for a discussion with him at Ministerial level.

Q: How do you view the evolving situation in Korean peninsula?

Foreign Secretary: We have expressed our views earlier on two occasions when a missile launch took place and when North Korea carried out a nuclear explosion, very strongly criticizing those actions and asking North Korea to ensure that it did not take steps which would create further tension and instability in that region. We are watching the situation very carefully. My colleague the Joint Secretary dealing with East Asia was in fact in North Korea, he has just come back. We will conduct a review as to what exactly is the situation and what do we need to do.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

514. Prime Minister's statement before his departure for Germany for the 2nd India-Germany Inter-Governmental Consultations.

New Delhi, April 10, 2013.

I will be visiting Germany from 10 to 12 April 2013 at the invitation of the German Chancellor, Dr. Angela Merkel, for the second round of India-Germany Inter-Governmental Consultations. This will be my third bilateral visit to Germany and our fifth bilateral summit since my first visit to Germany in 2006. I will be accompanied by Ministers of New and Renewable Energy; Science & Technology; Commerce, Industry and Textiles; External Affairs; and Human Resource Development.

The Inter-Governmental Consultations, first held in May 2011 in Delhi, provide a useful forum for discussions on the full spectrum of our relationship and have helped advance Indo-German cooperation in a broad range of areas. We attach high importance to our strategic partnership with Germany, which rests on solid foundations of shared values, centuries-old intellectual and cultural engagement, expanding opportunities for bilateral cooperation and growing convergence on international issues.

Germany is our largest economic partner in Europe and one of our key global partners for trade, investment and technology. I intend to seek greater trade and investment ties with Germany, as we continue to take steps to boost domestic investments, attract foreign investors and spur the economy back to its long term growth potential of 8%. Germany is also a key partner for us in areas like infrastructure, manufacturing, science and technology, higher education, vocational training and clean and renewable energy. We expect to sign a number of agreements and Memorandums of Understanding in these areas. I will seek Chancellor Merkel's support for an early conclusion of a balanced India-EU Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement. I will also propose that Europe keep its doors open to Indian investors and professionals.

Germany plays a key role in the global economy and, in particular, in stability and growth in the Euro Zone, which has an important bearing on the Indian economy. At a time of persisting global economic weakness and uncertainty, I look forward to discussing these issues with Chancellor Merkel. We will also discuss our shared interests in United Nations Security Council reforms and a broad range of global developments, including with respect to Afghanistan, West Asia and the Asia Pacific region.

During the visit, I will call on the President of Germany, H.E. Mr. Joachim Gauck. I will also participate in the closing ceremony of the 'Days of India in Germany,' which was organized to mark the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and Germany.

India remains committed to a close, cooperative and mutually beneficial partnership with Germany.

515. Prime Minister's remarks at the closing ceremony of the Days of India in Germany.

Berlin, April 11, 2013.

Your Excellency Foreign Minister Guido Westerwelle,
Your Excellency former President Richard von Weizsäcker,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am fully delighted to join you for the closing ceremony of the Days of India in Germany. It is a privilege to mark the end of wonderful celebration that was launched by Her Excellency Chancellor Angela Merkel in Delhi in May 2011. This series of events have been a tribute not just to sixty years of our diplomatic relations. They have also been a fitting reminder of the longstanding people-to-people relationship between the German people and the people of India.

Indeed, ladies and gentlemen, our bilateral relationship today is built on the foundations of centuries of association between our two peoples. As that great son of Germany, Prof. Max Mueller, reminded us more than a century ago, our two nations have been bound together by many strands that go deep into the recesses of our mind. We in India continue to celebrate the life and learning of Max Mueller. His expansive praise of India endeared him to the leaders of our national movement. Max Mueller once remarked : “If I were asked under what sky the human mind has most fully developed some of its choicest gifts, has most deeply pondered on the greatest problems of life, and has found solutions, I should point to India.”

In our ancient land that has rediscovered itself as a modern nation, such intellectual explorations filled us with a sense of pride. In so doing, Max Mueller contributed, like so many great scholars of his time, to a new consciousness that became the foundation of our national movement and struggle for independence.

Events such as the Days of India in Germany are, without doubt, meant to entertain. But, they are also meant to enlighten and educate. I do sincerely hope that the programmes undertaken as part of this series have served all three purposes – to entertain, educate and enlighten. I am also happy that we are marking this event in this great historic city of Berlin, a city of extraordinary history and character, of resilience and regeneration. Berlin’s transformation from a city at the edge of a great divide into one at the centre of Europe’s integration is a symbol of Germany’s international role and responsibility; of its contribution to the great European project; and of a future for Europe defined by unity, not by division.

Ladies and Gentlemen

These are difficult times, not just for Europe, but for the entire world. I am confident, however, that with national measures and collective efforts, Europe will overcome its present economic challenges. The world needs a successful, open and prosperous Europe. We in India too have a stake in Europe’s economic recovery, its growth and its role in world affairs.

The trials of the global economy have led to repercussions in India as well and our economic growth has slowed down in the past two years. In response, our government has considered several measures to revive the engines of growth. In a country of India’s size, diversity and complexity, intense debates on the policy choices we make are inevitable. But these debates have not stopped us from taking some hard decisions in the long term interest of our country and our people. In fact, we welcome the debates for the value that they add to our policies and thus make them more durable.

Looking to the future, we have set ourselves a target of over 8% annual growth for the Twelfth Five Year Plan. This is the rate of growth India recorded over the past decade and is, I believe, our potential rate of growth in the near future. We are confident that we can return to that growth path. Our economic fundamentals are strong. The spirit of adventure, enterprise and innovation in India is thriving. The opportunities for investment abound. Our government's resolve to spur investments, attract foreign investors and boost economic growth remains unwavering. Towards this end, we have sought to make India more attractive to investors both at home and abroad and German investors have a special place in our hearts.

In recent months, we have introduced strong measures to achieve fiscal consolidation and further strengthen macroeconomic stability. We have taken steps to accelerate implementation of major infrastructure projects. Our message to the world is clear: India remains open and welcoming to foreign investment. We are aiming to attract an investment of nearly one trillion dollars in infrastructure over the next five years. I hope German companies and companies from across Europe will make good use of these opportunities and help accelerate our growth process to our mutual advantage.

India's concern is not merely its rate of growth, but also the quality of that growth and living conditions of our people both in health and education. We want our growth to be inclusive and sustainable. This is not just a social and political imperative, but also a sound economic underpinning for sustained long term growth. Therefore, we have placed a special emphasis on livelihoods, food security, healthcare, education, skill development and on clean and renewable energy.

Ladies and Gentlemen

In our quest for strong and sustainable growth, Germany is one of India's most important partners. It is not merely because of German excellence in science, technology, production and organisation. It is more because we share a relationship of comfort, candour and confidence, which rests on shared values and draws upon centuries of intellectual, cultural and philosophical exchanges. In every area of our national development goals – infrastructure, manufacturing, clean energy, science and technology, higher education and skill development – I see enormous opportunities for fruitful partnerships between our two countries.

This is amply reflected in the ten agreements that have been signed today, which include collaboration on a unique and potentially transformative green energy corridor in India and a joint fund for collaboration in higher education.

India and Germany also share common aspirations for their place in a reformed United Nations Security Council. Both of us support the goal of a world without nuclear weapons. We are engaging on a Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement between India and the EU, and we consult closely in the G-20 on the directions of global economic recovery. We seek a stable and peaceful Afghanistan. We also share the goal of a stable global order, including in the rapidly transforming Asia Pacific region.

Ladies and Gentlemen

Today's is a world of inter-dependent prosperity and shared vulnerability. This is a world not of declining and rising powers, but of broadening opportunities and more widespread hope. This is an age when change is rapid, but transformation can also be quick. This is an age that calls us to connect, to engage and to embrace each other.

Ladies and Gentlemen

On his first visit to Germany in 1956, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru spoke about the hopes for his country, his confidence in Germany and his optimism about India-Germany relations. In the long distance that we have travelled since, our two countries have redeemed that vision. I am confident that in the opportunities and challenges of the 21st century, India and Germany will continue to seek new pathways to a closer partnership for our people and for the benefit of peoples of this planet.

I want to thank everyone in India and Germany, in and outside the government, who have worked hard on these celebrations and this ceremony. I am privileged to be here this evening and I have no doubt that this celebration will be a foundation for an even closer partnership between our two countries in the years to come. This is the aspiration, hope and confidence that has brought me to this historical city of Berlin.

I thank you Ladies and Gentlemen.

516. Statement by Prime Minister to the Media following the conclusion of 2nd round of India-Germany Inter-Governmental Consultations in Berlin.

Berlin, April 11, 2013.

Your Excellency Chancellor Angela Merkel,
Distinguished delegates to the Inter-Governmental Consultations,
Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media

I am delighted to be back in Berlin. I thank Chancellor Merkel for hosting this Second Round of the Inter-Governmental Consultations. She has been as gracious in her hospitality, thoughtful in her views and deeply committed to the India-Germany Strategic Partnership as I have known her to be over the past eight years.

Our relationship draws strategic strength from our shared values, sensitivity to each other's aspirations and interests, a comprehensive bilateral relationship and growing international engagement. The high level of bilateral engagement in recent years has substantially and tangibly raised the quality of our cooperation across a broad range of areas.

Economic ties have been a defining feature of our relationship. Germany is one of our largest economic partners globally. I encouraged increased German participation in India's rapid economic growth and our plans to modernize and upgrade our manufacturing and infrastructure sectors. Our Infrastructure plans entail investment of a trillion dollars in the next five years. I also sought continuing openness and support to growing Indian presence in Germany, including in the services sector. We agreed on the importance of an early conclusion of a balanced India-EU Broad Based Trade and Investment Agreement.

We look forward to expanded defence cooperation anchored in technology transfer, co-development and co-production in India. High technology commerce would benefit from further easing of German export controls for India. The agreement today on scientific collaboration on technologies for civilian security adds a new dimension to our growing security cooperation. I am very happy that, following our discussion, we have agreed to set up a High Technology Partnership Group.

Inclusive growth, empowerment of people and sustainable development are key national priorities in India. Many of the agreements signed during this visit not only support these objectives, but also reflect the extraordinary breadth and diversity of our relationship. For instance, the Joint Declaration of Intent for development of Green Energy Corridors in India could be a milestone in our shared commitment to address 21st century challenges.

We agreed that the persisting weakness in the global economy require concerted global response to stimulate recovery without adding to fiscal and financial risks. I am optimistic about European recovery and stability. I expressed our appreciation for Chancellor Merkel's leadership in dealing with the challenges in the Euro Zone. I also shared our government's resolve to restore India's own growth to our long term trend line of 7.5% to 8 %.

Chancellor Merkel and I agreed to continue with our efforts through the G-4 for the reform of the United Nations Security Council to reflect the current realities. We also emphasised the importance of sustained international support to Afghanistan through its transition to a stable, peaceful and democratic future. We called for an end to violence in Syria and a peaceful resolution of the Iranian nuclear issue. We underlined our shared interest in peace and stability in the Asia Pacific region, including on the Korean peninsula.

Our discussions today have reinforced my conviction in a strong and vibrant future for the strategic partnership between our two democracies. Germany and India are factors of stability and prosperity in two key regions of the world. I have no doubt about the bright prospects of our partnership.

Thank you

517. Joint Statement on the Further Development of the Strategic and Global Partnership between Germany and India.

Berlin, April 11, 2013.

1. During the second round of Indo-German intergovernmental consultations held today in Berlin Federal Chancellor Angela Merkel and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh discussed the state of the Strategic Partnership agreed in 2000 and reaffirmed their commitment to further enhancing cooperation over a broad spectrum. They agree to continue with the successful format of regular intergovernmental consultations chaired by heads of government and with the participation of relevant ministers as well as to add as required other formats to the existing wide range of consultation architecture instruments.
2. The Indo-German cooperation opens up excellent prospects for developing both countries to the benefit of their peoples. Germany and India share the view that new initiatives in the area of trade, bilateral investment, energy, energy security, the environment, culture, education, training, research, technology and defence can catalyse and activate the great potential of their bilateral ties.
3. The Indo-German Consultative Group provides valuable input for bilateral cooperation. Both heads of government appreciate the intensive and productive work done by its members and are pleased that the Group is to continue its activities.
4. Germany and India are determined to further expand their cooperation in higher education, research and technology – dynamic core areas of the Indo-German Partnership – and to open up new and innovative areas of cooperation. To this end, Germany and India have agreed for a new jointly funded programme entitled “Indo-German Strategic Partnerships in Higher Education” (IGSP), which aims to intensify existing partnerships between German and Indian institutions of higher education. The programme will focus on establishing joint research projects that will include joint supervision as well as student and academic exchanges in this context. The Indian side appreciates the Dr Angela Merkel scholarships for Indian law students, 50% of whose funding comes from the Jawaharlal Nehru Award prize money received by the Federal Chancellor in 2011 and 50% from the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (German Academic Exchange Service – DAAD), as well as the German Chancellor Fellowship Programme, which will offer India an additional 10 fellowships a year.

5. Both sides expressed their appreciation over the current level of engagement between India and Germany in the fields of Science and Technology. The collaboration in the areas of Advanced Material Science and High Energy Physics enabled through Indian participation in the synchrotron facility at DESY and FAIR project in Germany was a significant element of this partnership. The implementation of industrial research and development projects through the binational Indo-German Science and Technology Centre was noted as another successful instrument of cooperation between the two countries.
6. Expressing their continued commitment to intensify and further enhance the level of Science & Technology collaboration, both sides agreed to launch a new strand of cooperation on Civil Security Research covering areas of mutual interest like natural disaster management; health outbreaks; urban security and protection and rescue of people through support of joint projects.
7. Both sides noted the recent opening of the German House for Research and Innovation in New Delhi. They expect it to give their cooperation in the field of research and technology a further boost. The two countries have agreed to jointly fund the Indo-German Centre for Sustainability (IGCS) established at IIT Madras. The activities of the Centre are directed towards building resilient systems in the face of climate change as well as enhance strategic knowledge in key areas of climate change. It will conduct research, technology development, training and knowledge dissemination including social and institutional barriers that can also help towards developing policy guidelines in a set of priority areas relevant to the changing climate system. The IGCS at IIT-Madras will host visiting scientists and researchers from German universities for four years under support by the Federal Ministry of Education and Research. The research projects to be undertaken at IGCS will be funded by the Department of Science and Technology, Govt. of India.

8. Both sides are pleased with the success of their vocational training partnership under the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding signed between the two Governments on 31st May, 2011. In this context German and Indian companies are involved in developing practice-oriented training and supporting training of trainers on the basis of dual vocational training standards. The present cooperation will continue and be expanded on vocational training in key sectors such as setting up of an Advanced Training Institute as Centre of Excellence on Energy-Efficient Construction Technology and other Institutions of higher vocational learning.
9. With a view to promoting and intensifying personal contacts and intercultural skills, Germany is cooperating with India's Ministry for Human Resources Development and the Kendriya Vidyalaya Schools (KVS) to support German teaching in Indian schools under its Schools: Partners for the Future (PASCH) initiative and its "German in 1,000 Schools" programme.
10. Both sides consider the "Year of Germany" in India and the "Days of India" in Germany an unqualified success. The programmes organized in this connection have built important bridges between our societies and contributed to mutual understanding. They have also been an important catalyst in enhancing awareness of the cultural diversity, academic achievements, technological progress and economic opportunities in both countries.
11. Both sides want to follow up on the great interest generated by the travelling exhibition Urban Mela with its "CitySpaces" theme – the core focus of the "Year of Germany" in India – by launching an Indo-German urbanization forum. This would enable topics such as urban planning, architecture, mobility, transport, the supply of goods and infrastructure to be discussed in a variety of working groups.

12. Close trade and investment relations are a core dimension of our partnership and of great importance for the development of both the Indian and the German economy. Both Governments will strongly back a further intensification of Indo-German business cooperation. Both sides would encourage cooperation in the field of rare earths on mutually beneficial terms. Both Governments recognize that expanding high technology trade and cooperation is key to deepening the strategic content of their relations. Both sides agree to consult regularly on advancing this objective and to this end form a High Technology Partnership Group including both government and business.
13. The Indian Government's planned "Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor" (DMIC) offers ample scope for cooperation as well as a host of investment and business opportunities over the years ahead. During the Intergovernmental Consultations in May 2011 in New Delhi, vocational and educational training featured as an area of further co-operation between the two countries. India sought Germany's cooperation in taking up a pilot project on skill development in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. The new corridor planned between Mumbai and Bangalore likewise opens up interesting prospects for Indo-German cooperation.
14. Both sides emphasize that freedom of movement for business visitors and professionals is important for the sustained growth of trade and investment flows. Both sides agreed to work together to facilitate such movement between the two countries.
15. Germany and India recognize the important role that cooperation on electric mobility can play in reducing energy consumption, improving the environment, transforming industry and building an eco-friendly industrial society. They intend to support the sustainable and sound development of their electric vehicle production sectors by facilitating exchange and cooperation in the area of electric vehicle technologies, production and market development.

16. Both Governments recognize that there is immense potential for cooperation between small and medium-sized enterprises in Germany and India. It is these enterprises that guarantee growth, innovation and jobs. Both sides appreciate the success of the Indo-German Manager Training Programme which links SMEs from both countries thus enhancing the understanding of the respective business culture. Both sides believe that joint research and development projects involving medium-sized companies and business-oriented research establishments in both countries are of great importance. Both Governments accordingly intend to promote through their national programmes Indo-German research and development cooperation activities by companies and research establishments aimed at developing new marketable products, processes and technical services.
17. Both sides agree to further intensify their exchange of views and experiences related to natural and man-made disasters.
18. Both countries underlined the importance of enhancing cooperation in the tourism sector and noted that India and Germany have significant potential for enhancing tourism traffic between the two countries. They agreed to encourage and facilitate the visit of tourists to each other's countries. In this regard they requested tour operators, travel agents, hoteliers and airlines to participate in each other's tourism fairs and events. India proposed to hold the 7th Joint Working Group on Tourism Cooperation between India and Germany in Delhi on a mutually convenient date.
19. Both sides recognize the role that norms and standards play in opening markets and see Indo-German cooperation in this area as beneficial to both the Indian and the German economy. They plan to extend their cooperation also to the areas of conformity assessment and product safety. Both sides accordingly agree to set up a working group on quality infrastructure.

20. Germany and India have a shared interest in the creation of decent jobs offering employee rights, social security and adequate protection in case of sickness as well as appropriate incomes as per legislative enactments of each country. They both want to see fair and safe working conditions. They are keen to continue their good cooperation at G20/ASEM meetings of labour and employment ministers and support the ILO recommendations on Social Protection Floors. Both sides also agree to share their best practices in the field of corporate social responsibility.
21. Both sides commend the energy policy dialogue under way in the Indo-German Energy Forum (IGEF), which is coordinated by the Indian Ministry of Power and the Federal Ministry of Economics and Technology, as well as the opening of an IGEF Support Office in New Delhi. Under the auspices of IGEF an "Excellence Enhancement Centre" has been established for bilateral cooperation on sharing of best practices in the area of enhancing efficiency of thermal power plants. There are plans for private sector to participate to an even greater degree in the 6th Indo-German Energy Forum scheduled for the first quarter of 2014 in New Delhi. The ongoing policy dialogue between the relevant ministries will likewise be continued and expanded. This concerns in particular cooperation projects in the field of enhancing efficiency of thermal power plants, renewable energy and energy efficiency.
22. Since 2008 Germany and India have intensified their cooperation in the area of agriculture, food and consumer protection and are pursuing their dialogue in this connection in the bilateral working group. A new cooperation project is planned on plant variety protection and seed legislation by the working group to promote sustainable agriculture.
23. Germany and India note the urgent need to find effective and viable solutions to the pressing problems of climate change and its consequences for humanity. This includes mitigation and adaptation strategies designed to support the continued economic and social development in developing countries.
24. Both sides commend the ongoing cooperation between the two countries in these areas and are keen for it to continue. Both sides

- agree that issues relating to climate change protection should be discussed at the Second Indo-German Environment Forum planned for 2014 in New Delhi.
25. Germany and India look forward to continuing their successful cooperation in the Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) context. Both sides agreed that this cooperation may be enhanced to facilitate preparation of a roadmap for CDM in future and design and support for nationally appropriate mitigation actions.
 26. Germany and India reaffirm that they will continue their successful development cooperation in a spirit of partnership. Assisting projects with innovative approaches in the mutually identified priority areas of energy, environment and sustainable economic development support India's inclusive development and poverty reduction programmes. It also contributes to achieving global development and addressing climate change issues.
 27. Germany and India are committed to extending the role of renewable energy in their national energy strategy. Development of renewable energy is thus a major focus of bilateral cooperation. In this regard, the integration and evacuation of renewable energy into their respective national grids plays a pivotal role with major technological and physical challenges. To support India in addressing these challenges, the German government expresses its intention to assist the establishment of "Green Energy Corridors" in India through technical as well as financial development cooperation. They welcomed the commissioning of a solar energy project of 70 MW capacity in March 2013 at Sakri, Maharashtra in India with soft credit support from the German side.
 28. Germany and India recalled their cooperation in the UN Security Council during 2011-12 and agreed to continue to collaborate in strengthening and reform of the United Nations and the multilateral system. In this context, they reaffirmed their commitment to continue their efforts through the G-4 to reform the United Nations Security Council by expansion of both categories of its membership, and underlined their support for each other's candidature for permanent membership of an expanded Security Council.
 29. As members of United Nations Human Rights Council, Germany and India will seek to develop mutual understanding of positions and encourage initiatives so as to promote and protect human rights.

30. By collaborating on joint projects, Germany and India intend to contribute to a stable and peaceful future for Afghanistan. In this connection both sides emphasize the importance of the regional Heart of Asia process, in which India coordinates confidence-building activities in the area of investment and trade promotion, activities which Germany supports. Both sides have further agreed to hold bilateral consultations on political issues, and social and economic development including cooperation in the sphere of trade and investment and capacity-building in various (economic) sectors.
31. Germany and India express satisfaction at the deepening comprehensive bilateral relations between India and EU and recognize that both India and EU, as long-standing strategic partners, are committed to working together to reinforce the relationship in all areas.
32. The leaders underline their strong commitment to a successful outcome to the EU India negotiations for a broad based, ambitious and balanced Free Trade Agreement that will generate jobs and growth in both countries and their hope for final agreement in 2013.
33. Germany and India will seek to intensify consultations within the G20 and strengthen the G20's role as the premier forum for international economic and financial cooperation.
34. Both sides will therefore make strenuous efforts to achieve a consensus on trade facilitation by a balanced package of issues this year at the 9th WTO Ministerial Conference so as to ensure there is still a prospect of bringing the Doha Round to a conclusion.
35. Both sides agree to intensify further their exchange of views and experience on combating terrorism as well as their practical cooperation in this connection, also in the Indo-German Working Group on Counter-Terrorism as well as multilateral forums.

36. Both sides are in favour of holding regular consultations on issues relating to international cyber policy.
37. In the light of new security challenges both sides are keen to intensify their security policy dialogue and exchange of views. Both sides expressed their keenness to enhance cooperation in the defence sector through dialogue and exchanges on matters of mutual interest, including in the area of defence technology collaboration.
38. Both sides recognize the importance of an effective national export control systems conforming to the highest international standards. Both heads of government want the bilateral dialogue on export controls and international export control regimes to continue. Germany welcomes the ongoing intensified dialogue between India and the various export control regimes (NSG, MTCR, AG and WA). Both sides agree to continue working together to prepare the ground for India to accede to the export control regimes as a full member and thereby strengthen the international non-proliferation regime.
39. Germany and India reaffirm that they will work together for a world without nuclear weapons, for universal and non-discriminatory global nuclear disarmament and a reduced salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Both sides agree to cooperate in strengthening global non-proliferation efforts. They noted the contribution of initiatives such as the Hague Code of Conduct against Missile Proliferation and the Proliferation Security Initiative during the last decades and the potential for advancing them in the future. Both sides support the IAEA's Safeguards System including the Additional Protocol as the international verification norm. They participate in the discussions on a Draft International Code of Conduct on Outer Space with a view to its adoption as an agreed document of universal adherence. Both sides agree to hold regular consultations on disarmament and non-proliferation issues.
40. Both countries stress the importance of national and international efforts to reduce risks of nuclear and radiological terrorism. They reaffirm their shared commitment to promoting the full and effective implementation of the Chemical Weapons and Biological and Toxic Weapons Conventions and coordinated efforts to promote their universalization. Germany attaches high importance to the early entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty. In this context, India reiterated its commitment for its unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. Both sides express their full support for a multilateral, non-discriminatory and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices and call for the commencement of negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament.

41. Noting the recent talks in Almaty between Iran and the E 3 + 3, both sides stress the importance of a diplomatic resolution to the Iranian nuclear issue and urged Iran to fulfil all relevant international obligations and take the necessary steps to restore international confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear programme. They condemn the North Korean nuclear test conducted on 12 February as a violation of DPRK's international commitments and call upon the DPRK to respect its international obligations as set out in several United Nations Security Council resolutions in this connection and to take urgent steps to deescalate the situation.

List of documents signed on the sidelines of 2nd round of India-Germany Intergovernmental Consultations

April 11, 2013

Renewable Energy

- MOU between Solar Energy Centre and Fraunhofer Institute for cooperation and exchanges in various areas including solar photovoltaic; solar thermals systems; hydrogen and fuel cells.

Science & Technology

- Programme of Cooperation between Dept. of Biotechnology of India and Helmholtz Association in the area of development of future natural drugs.

- Supplementary MoU on Research Framework of the Indo-German Centre for Sustainability at IIT, Madras under the National Climate Action Plan.

Railways

- MoU between Deutsche Bahn and Indian Railways for cooperation in the field of freight, passenger operations, infrastructure building and management; development of modern competitive railway organization.
- MoU between DB System and Centre for Railway Information Systems for cooperation in the field of information systems related to railways.

Vocational Education & Training

- MOU between Hof University of Applied Sciences & Integrated Association of Micro, Small & Medium Enterprises of India (SPV formed by Faridabad Small Industries Association) to develop specialized vocational training course.
- MOU between Manipal University, Manipal, India & Bavarian Universities Consortium represented by Hof University of Applied Sciences of Germany to establish the Indo-Bavarian Integrated Bachelors and Masters Programme in August 2013.
- MoU between Infosys Ltd and Bertelsmann Stiftung to support Vocational Education and Training in India.
- MOU between PSG Institute of Advanced Studies & Professional Training Centres of the Bavarian Employers Association (BFZ)
- Contract agreement between Cairn India and TUV Rheinland to set up a state-of-the-art vocational education training facility in Rajasthan.

518. List of documents signed during the official visit of Prime Minister to Germany for the 2nd India-Germany Intergovernmental Consultations.

April 11, 2013.

List of documents signed during the official visit of Prime Minister to Germany for the 2nd India-Germany Intergovernmental Consultations

1. Joint Declaration of Intent between Ministry of Human Resource Development and the Federal Foreign Office of Germany regarding promotion of German as a foreign language in India
Indian: Dr. M. Mangapati Pallam Raju, Minister for Human Resource Development.

German: Ms. Cornelia Pieper, Minister of State in the German Foreign Office Cooperate in introducing B.Ed programmes for German language. Also scholarships would be awarded for Masters degree programs and for short stays in Germany with the goal of improving mutual trust and intercultural relations.

2. Intergovernmental MoU between India & Germany on Cooperation in the field of Higher Education
Indian: Dr. M. Mangapati Pallam Raju, Minister for Human Resource Development.

German: Ms. Johanna Wanka, Federal Minister of Education and Research Intends to facilitate people-to-people exchanges. This includes students, academics, and project collaborators.

3. Joint Declaration of Intent on Indo-German cooperation in the area of Civil Security Research
Indian: Shri Jaipal Reddy, Minister for Science & Technology

German: Ms. Johanna Wanka, Federal Minister of Education and Research The Indo-German research cooperation in this new area intends to fund 5 pilot projects in 2013 with the identified priorities being natural disaster management, biological risk situations, urban security, protection & rescue of people and social aspects of civil security research.

4. Joint Declaration between Department of Agriculture & Cooperation of India and the German Federal Ministry of Food, Agriculture and Consumer Protection, acting according to its mandate for the bilateral "Kooperations Program" of the German Federal Ministry of Food, Agriculture and Consumer Protection and the National Seeds Association of India and the German Association of Plant Breeders. Indian: Ambassador of India

German: Dr. Gerd Muller, Parliamentary State Secretary, Federal Ministry of Food, Agriculture and Consumer Protection. Aims at strengthening cooperation in:

- i) plant variety protection
 - ii) conservation of plant genetic resources.
 - iii) cooperation between Indian and German agricultural research institutions and seed companies.
5. Joint Declaration of Intent by the Ministry of Consumer Affairs, Food and Public Distribution of India and Federal Ministry of Economics and Technology of the Federal Republic of Germany on the Establishment of an Indo-German Working Group on Quality Infrastructure for Cooperation in Standardisation, Conformity Assessment and Product Safety. Indian: Foreign Secretary

German: Anne Ruth Herkes, State Secretary at the Federal Ministry of Economics and Technology Aims to strengthen bilateral cooperation in standardization, conformity assessment and product safety through advancing bilateral economic and technical cooperation, intensifying dialogue and promoting coordinated activities in international organizations. Also provides for establishing and Indo-German Working Group Quality Infrastructure.

6. Joint Declaration of Intent between Germany and India on Indo-German Development Cooperation regarding the Establishment of Green Energy Corridors Indian: Dr. Farooq Abdullah, Minister for New and Renewable Energy.

German: Ms. Gudrun Kopp, Parliamentary State Secretary. Aims at fostering increased use of renewable energy in India through technical and fanatical cooperation by way of integrating additional renewable energy generation capacity with the national grid. The Technical cooperation would be implemented through the German Agency for International Cooperation (GIZ) and KfW intends to provide concessional loans of up to Euro one billion over the next six years.

Berlin

April 11, 2013

519. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Labour & Employment on the meeting between Minister of State (L&E) and Federal Minister of Health of Germany.

New Delhi, April 29,, 2013.

A Bilateral Meeting was held between India and Germany here in New Delhi today to appraise the German side of the achievements in the implementation of Labour welfare measures taken by India. The Indian side was lead by Mr. K. Suresh, Minister of State for Labour & Employment while the 17 member German Delegation was headed by Mr. Daniel Bahr, Federal Minister for Health, Germany.

Welcoming the German Delegation Shri Suresh said the Government of India is conscious of the fact that true development cannot take place without inclusive growth. Development is not worth mentioning if it does not cater to the basic needs of the downtrodden and poor class.

The minister detailed about 'Unorganised Workers' Social Security Act, 2008, the Rashtriya Swasthya Bima Yojana (RSBY) and the massive programme of skilling 500 million people by 2022. He said RSBY has already reached out to more than 34.4 Million families covering about 110 Million persons. More than 5.2 Million workers have visited the hospitals and availed the hospitalization facilities under the scheme. He also placed on record the appreciation of the Government of India to Government of Germany for the technical support given under the project Indo German Social Security Programme through GIZ India in making the project a success.

The German side inquired about the framework of RSBY and its impact on the lives of workers. They were also informed of the new initiatives taken to augment the base and applicability of RSBY smart card. They also showed keen interest to foster exchange of programmes between the two countries in this regard.

The Germans were also told of the skill development measures taken by the ministry and it was said that in the last five years the number of Industrial Training Institutes have been doubled to 10000. All the Government ITIs are being upgraded under various Schemes. Under the Skill Development Initiative, 1422 short term employable courses covering 73 sectors to increase employment and employability have been developed. India and Germany are collaborating in the area of skill training.

Shri Suresh wished a fruitful visit of the German delegation and hoped of the continued cooperation between the two countries in the coming future.

520. First Meeting of India-Germany High Technology Partnership Group.

Berlin, September 10, 2013.

1. Foreign Secretary Mrs. Sujatha Singh and State Secretary in German Foreign Office Harald Braun today chaired the India-Germany High Technology Partnership Group in Berlin. The group will further deepen the bilateral relationship in high technology cooperation. During the meeting today, both sides exchanged views on strengthening trade in high technology and on issues related to export control and non-proliferation and preparations for the expanded second round, including line ministries and a high level business segment, which is to take place in New Delhi during the first semester of 2014.

2. The creation of this group goes back to the decision made by Federal Chancellor Angela Merkel and Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh during the Second Indo-German governmental consultations in April 2013 in Berlin, where both Governments agreed to expand trade and cooperation in high technology.

GEORGIA

521. India-Georgia Foreign Office Consultations. Tbilisi, July 16, 2013.

Foreign Office Consultations between India and Georgia were held on 15-16 July 2013 in Tbilisi. The Indian side was led by Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary Eurasia Division in the Ministry of External Affairs and the Georgian side was led by Ms. EkaAkobia, Director of the Department of Asia, Africa, Australia and the Pacific Rim in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Georgia. The last round of these consultations was held in March 2010 in New Delhi.

The sides comprehensively reviewed bilateral cooperation in all sectors of mutual interest and also discussed regional and international issues. In the bilateral sphere, the Indian side held thematic dialogue with the participation of Georgian MFA representatives dealing with bilateral political, economic, cultural, consular and legal matters. The sides agreed to work towards streamlining the bilateral visa regime procedures for various categories of visas with a view to promoting business, tourism, etc. and decided to conclude bilateral agreement on visa free travel by diplomatic and official passport holders of both the countries. The Indian side handed over a packet of draft consular agreements to the Georgian side for its consideration. The sides also reviewed cooperation in international fora including the UN and multilateral organizations. H.E. Mr. David Jalagania, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs hosted a working lunch in honour of the visiting Indian delegation during which the sides have exchanged views on global and regional security issues.

During the visit, Mr. Ajay Bisaria also held meetings with H.E. Mr. Ilia Kvitaishvili, Deputy Minister of Agriculture and with H.E. Ms. Ketevan Botchorishvili, Deputy Minister in the Ministry of Economy and Sustainable Development of Georgia. During these meetings, the sides discussed prospects for cooperation, including India's investment activity in Georgia. Both sides have agreed to promote mutual investments.

Prior to these consultations on the same day, the Indian Ambassador designate to Georgia Dr. Suresh Babu handed over copies of Letter of Credence to the Deputy Foreign Minister on his concurrent accreditation to Georgia.

The Indian side expressed its gratitude to the Georgian side for the warm hospitality extended to the delegation members during their stay in Tbilisi.

The next round of Consultations will be held in New Delhi.

HUNGARY

522. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of External Affairs Minister to Hungary.

New Delhi, July 15, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming here for this interaction. As is usual I have an announcement to make. Following the announcement, if there are any questions on that I will be happy to answer, otherwise on any other thing that you would like to ask. The announcement relates to the visit of the External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, to Hungary. The External Affairs Minister is currently in Hungary for bilateral talks with his Hungarian counterpart Mr. János Martonyi. Also, he is preparing for a high-level visit from Hungary later during the course of this year. We expect the Prime Minister of Hungary to visit India before the end of this year, and the talks are related to that visit too.

As you are aware, India and Hungary have traditionally very good relations. Hungary was amongst those countries which supported India's permanent membership in an expanded Security Council. They also has been forthcoming in their support at the NSG for the waiver for the civilian nuclear agreement in 2008.

We have approximately an investment of US$ 1.5 billion in Hungary. About 8,000 Hungarians are employed in Indian companies. Also, my understanding is that while the bilateral trade is something like US$ 650 million, it is weighted in favour of India with Indian exports outweighing imports from Hungary.

As a measure of the extremely cordial relations between India and Hungary, the External Affairs Minister has also been invited in a rare and special gesture to address all their Heads of Mission who have gathered in Budapest. He will be addressing the annual conference of all Hungarian Heads of Mission in Budapest on Indian perspectives and Indian approach to foreign policy. This is a signal honour. This is the first time that a Foreign Minister from Asia is invited for this sort of an opportunity to speak to Hungarian Heads of Mission.

Apart from that, the External Affairs Minister will also be inaugurating an exhibition of Amrita Sher-Gil. Amrita Sher-Gil is the daughter of India and Hungary. One of her parents was Hungarian and the other was Indian. The External Affairs Minister looks forward to strengthening these aspects of our relationship.

I think that is all I have in terms of the announcement to make. If you have any questions on this I will answer, otherwise on anything else.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I think I mentioned to you that we expect the visit of Mr. Viktor Orbán, the Prime Minister of Hungary, later this year to India. Therefore, it is traditional for us to work towards any agreements that we have for such a visit. That said, as you are also aware, Hungary is an important member of the European Union and of course they will discuss among other things the free trade agreement discussions that are going on between India and the EU.

523. Media Statement by External Affairs Minister during his visit to Hungary.

Budapest, July 15, 2013.

Relations between India and Hungary are historic, friendly and multi-faceted. The very fact that I have been invited to address the Annual Conference of Hungarian Ambassadors speaks of the high level of mutual trust between our two countries.

This morning, I had excellent discussions with my host Dr. Janos Martonyi on all issues of bilateral, regional and international concern. We also agreed to closely coordinate our position on all regional and international issues.

The forthcoming visit of H.E. Prime Minister Viktor Orban to India in October this year is going to set a new milestone in our bilateral ties. Several new agreements are likely to be signed further strengthening our bilateral cooperation. Warm welcome awaits H.E. Prime Minister Orban in India. I will have the pleasure of calling on him tomorrow to further discuss the details of this visit.

Our economic and commercial engagement is gradually increasing with Indian investments in Hungary reaching a record level of USD 1.5 billion. Our people-to-people contacts are deep-rooted going back to several centuries. This afternoon, I am going to inaugurate an exhibition celebrating the birth centenary of Amrita Shergill, who is an important link between our two nations. Keeping these historic bonds in mind, we opened an Indian Cultural Centre in Budapest two years ago, which I believe is extremely popular.

I am confident that my visit and discussion with Dr. Janos Martonyi this morning would contribute to further deepening of our bilateral ties. I am profoundly thankful to Hungarian authorities for their generous hospitality.

524. Media Statements by Prime Ministers of India and Hungary following their delegation level talks.

New Delhi, October 17, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Viktor Orban,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Prime Minister Viktor Orban on his first ever visit to India. I appreciate his strong personal commitment to deepening the relations between our two countries, which have traditionally been very close and friendly due to the remarkable history of cultural and people-to-people ties.

Today, there is much that brings our countries together. Like India, Hungary is a thriving democracy. It is a dynamic economy at the heart of a transforming Central Europe and a member of the European Union. Indian investors are increasingly finding a home in Hungary. In our own ways, both our countries are making important contributions to security and development in Afghanistan. Hungary has also been supportive of concerted global action for combating terrorism. All this gives us reason to work closely together for strengthening our relations.

Prime Minister Orban and I had very productive discussions today in which we reviewed the entire spectrum of our relations. We agreed that we can substantially expand our economic relations by leveraging our complementary strengths, India's large and growing market and Hungary's membership of the European Union.

We welcomed the work done by the Joint Economic Committee, which met earlier this week and identified priority areas for cooperation, including information technology, pharmaceuticals, auto components, healthcare, tourism, energy, engineering goods and food processing, among others. I also sought Prime Minister Orban's support for an early conclusion of the India-EU Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement, which would enhance trade and investment flows between India and Hungary.

We have a very productive collaboration in Science & Technology, which has been benefited from the annual contribution of one million Euros each to a Joint Strategic Research Fund. Today, we agreed to enhance our annual contribution to the Fund to 2 million Euros each. This would enable us to undertake new projects involving high-end technologies.

We have also agreed to strengthen our cooperation in the area of defence technology. Hungary possesses advanced technology in niche areas of defence industry and can become a reliable partner in our efforts for defence modernization.

India appreciates Hungary's support on international issues, including our candidature for a permanent membership of the UN Security Council and the 2008 decision of the Nuclear Suppliers Group on civil nuclear cooperation with India. I have sought Prime Minister Orbán's support for India's full membership of the Nuclear Suppliers Group and other multilateral export control regimes.

As I mentioned in the beginning, India and Hungary share strong cultural bonds. Hungary has an admirable tradition of scholarship in the field of Indology. We will continue to nurture this important strand of our relationship through continued support to Indian studies through fellowships and exchanges. I am confident that the activities planned under the Cultural Exchange Programme 2013-15 would contribute to strengthening our cultural relations.

Prime Minister Orbán and I also exchanged views on a range of regional and international issues. We both recognized that terrorism and extremism pose a common threat to modern democratic societies like India and Hungary. We noted the need to create a global normative framework against terrorism and agreed to deepen our cooperation in this regard.

I look forward to working closely with Prime Minister Orbán for expanding and deepening our bilateral relations.

Thank you.

Prime Minister of Hungary (Mr. Viktor Mihály Orbán): Ladies and Gentlemen, may I just share some of my feelings I have gathered during this visit in your wonderful country.

First of all, may I just congratulate the leadership of India for providing such impressive economic results in the recent decade which, especially looking at this development from the European Union, can be classified as magnificent.

In the world which has suffered, I am speaking about the European world which is suffering, of the crisis especially in the Eurozone and around the Eurozone, fighting for even a minor economic growth generation and generating some more fresh air for our economy, it is really something promising to have a look at the Indian economy and the figures which are really convincing to all of us.

This kind of progress you have made, Your Excellency, in the recent years is clear evidence to all of us that your nation is getting more and more new global power, and in the future we have to look India from that angle and from that point of view.

May I just say thank you very much for all the dignitaries of India who were kind to accept us and to share your thoughts to us. May I just say thanks to the Indian investors as well in Hungary, especially two major companies of Indian economy, who already have signed a strategic cooperation agreement with the Hungarian Government, serving as a flagship to the Indian investors in Hungary?

May I just underline the point which was done by the Prime Minister that we Hungarians support India's ambitions of obtaining permanent membership in the United Nations Security Council. This is not just a point of the present Hungarian Government but that was earlier and that would be the future because it is not a party but it is a very much national point of view of Hungary.

Gentlemen, may I just add another point. I try to explain everywhere here in India that of course we have some difficulties inside the European Union Economic Zone but at the same time I kindly ask all of you to identify your region which is called Central Europe and which reformed itself, it is containing four or five countries with 80 million people - I am speaking about the Central European region - which has reformed deeply itself and over the crisis and has the greatest potential inside the European Union for growth. So, when you would like to take into consideration your possibilities in the European Union, some special attention should be deserved by the Central European region.

We have a cooperation of four Central European major countries, the so-called Visegrad Group - the Polish, the Czech, the Slovakian, and the Hungarian governments - and we have the regular summit of these four Prime Ministers. I have the mandate to invite the Prime Minister of India to visit one of our summits in the future. I hope that he would be in a position to accept our invitation, and I am happy to see him somewhere in Central Europe. Now I am the President of that group anyway. Now Budapest is the capital of our cooperation but it changes every year. I hope in Central Europe we have a chance soon to see each other.

One other point I would like to make, ladies and gentlemen, is the long-term foundation of our partnership because we Hungarians think that money is important, business is important, politics is good, but human relation is even more important. Therefore, the Hungarian Government do express how committed we are to have a longstanding, long-term partnership. We would like to provide a solid foundation for that. Therefore, we are offering 200 Hungarian state scholarships yearly to the Indian students to come to Hungary and build up a common trust and a better future for both the nations, for India and for Hungary.

Again thank you very much Your Excellency Prime Minister to accept us providing that excellent experience for all the Hungarian Delegation.

Thank you

525. Prime Minister's banquet speech during the State Visit of Prime Minister of Hungary.

New Delhi, October 17, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Viktor Orban,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen

It gives me immense pleasure to extend a very warm welcome to Prime Minister Orban and his delegation on their visit to our country.

Your Excellency, you happen to be in India during a season of festivals. Let me say that your presence amongst us in this festive season adds greatly to our joy. We wish you a very pleasant, productive and enjoyable stay in our country.

Your Excellency, notwithstanding the difficulties that faced you when you took over the reins of your country, you have led with great skill and resolve in guiding Hungary out of its crisis and back on to a path of growth. In doing so, you have only exemplified the spirit for which your country is well-known.

Through the last half century and more, the people of India have borne witness to the resolve of the Hungarian people. The most recent occasion was in the momentous years of 1988-89, when they succeeded in restoring democracy in Hungary and ending an era of division in Europe. We have seen with admiration and joy Hungary's rapid transformation since then.

In this, your first visit to India, and in your broader "Eastern Opening", you have demonstrated that opportunities in our integrated world are determined not by size or distance, but by imagination and initiative.

Your visit builds on the remarkable tradition of cultural ties and affinity between our people. Hungarian scholars of Indology have made invaluable contributions to Europe's rich scholarship on Indian traditions, culture and heritage. Sanskrit was introduced in a Hungarian University in 1873. Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore, who invited many Hungarian scholars to Shanti Niketan, was himself enraptured by the beauty of the waters of Lake Balaton. And, this year, we are jointly celebrating the centenary of the noted painter Amrita Sher-Gil, who was a daughter of India and Hungary.

These traditions of affection and goodwill between our people, together with our shared democratic values and the rich possibilities of our economic partnership, provide an enduring foundation for our partnership. Our relations have remained on a steady course through the tumult and change in Europe and the world. The growing presence of Indian companies in Hungary is indicative of the promise of our relationship. We also value the support we have received from Hungary in international forums. All this leads me to believe that Hungary and India can find great opportunities in each other and also be each other's bridge to Europe and Asia.

With these words, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I now request you to join me in raising a toast to:

- The good health and well being of His Excellency Prime Minister Orban;
- The progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Hungary; and
- The everlasting bonds of friendship between India and Hungary.

526. List of Documents signed during the State Visit of Hungarian Prime Minister to India.

New Delhi, October 17, 2013

List of Documents signed during the State Visit of Hungary to India, October 17, 2013

1. Letter of Intent on Indo-Hungarian Strategic Research Fund between Department of Science and Technology of the Republic of India and National Innovation Office of Hungary Smt. Preet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. Mihaly VARGA, Minister of National Economy.

Both the countries are committed to provide a total of Euros 2 Million each annually for Indo-Hungarian Strategic Research Fund for collaborative research activities, including a mix of bilateral research projects and scientific symposiums.

2. Cultural Exchange Programme Smt. Preet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. Zoltan Balog, Minister of National Resources

The CEP is for cooperation in the field of Art and Culture, conservation techniques of Museum materials, exchange of curators/ exhibit designers, scientists, conservators

3. MoU between The Ministry of Health and Family Welfare of the Republic of India and the Ministry of Human Resources of

Hungary on Cooperation in the Field of Traditional Systems of Medicine Smt. Santosh Chowdhary, Minister of State for Health and Family Welfare

Mr. Zoltan Balog, Minister of National Resources.

Aims to enhance the use of traditional system of medicine and promote mutual exchange of information and experts for training of practitioners, paramedics, scientists, teaching professionals and students in traditional medicines.

4. MoU on Air Services between Government of India and Government of Hungary Shri K. N. Srivastava Secretary, Ministry of Civil Aviation, Mr. Peter Szijjarto, Ministry of External Economic Relations And Foreign Affairs, Prime Minister's Office.

Replaces the existing Air Services Agreement signed in 1966 by an updated and modern agreement in order to meet the actual needs of the people and the future growth in civil aviation.

5. MoU between the Ministry of Defence of the Government of the Republic of India and The Ministry of Defence of Hungary concerning Cooperation in the Areas of Defensive Aspects of Microbiological and Radiological Detection And Protection Shri Avinash Chander, Scientific Advisor to Defence Minister, Mr. Zoltan Balog, Minister for National Resources.

Aims to facilitate transfer of know how, experience and technical information in the areas of biological, radiological and chemical warfare

6. MoU on Cooperation in the field of Sports between The Ministry of Youth Affairs and Sports of India and The Ministry of Human Resources of Hungary Shri Dinkar Khullar, Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, Mr. Peter Szijjarto, Ministry of External Economic Relations and Foreign Affairs, Prime Minister's Office.

Aims to encourage cooperation between sports organizations and institutions (sport clubs, sport associations, national sport federations, sports umbrella organizations, training centers, public institutions for sport science and research as well as universities) of the two countries.

- 527. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Additional Secretary (International Organizations) on the UN General Assembly Session, visit of the Foreign Minister of Latvia, External Affairs Minister's visit to Canada and Prime Minister's Special Envoy Ashwani Kumar's meetings in Tokyo in connection with the visit of Emperor of Japan.

New Delhi, Sept 18, 2013.

Please see Document No 568

MACEDONIA

- 528. Press Release of the Ministry of Finance on the signing of the Agreement for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income with Macedonia.

New Delhi, December 17, 2013.

Republic of India and Republic of Macedonia signed the new Agreement for the avoidance Of Double Taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion (DTAA) with respect to taxes on income . The Agreement was signed here today by Mr. Salman Khurshid, the Minister of External Affairs on behalf of India and Mr. Nikola Poposki, the Foreign Minister of Macedonia on behalf of the Republic of Macedonia. Once the DTAA enters into force, it will provide relief to taxpayers from double taxation and thereby, stimulate the flow of capital, technology and personnel between both the countries and will further strengthen the economic relationship between the two countries.

The Salient features of this agreement are as under:

- The agreement provides relief from double taxation to residents of India earning income in Macedonia and residents of Macedonia earning income in India.

- The agreement provides that taxation of dividend, interest and royalty in the source country will not exceed 10 %.
- The agreement provides for taxation of business income in the source country if the taxpayer has a permanent establishment there
- The agreement provides for taxation of capital gains from securities in the source country.
- The agreement has a 'limitation' of benefit article which provides that the benefit of this agreement will not be available to entity which has formed mainly to obtain benefits under this agreement.
- The agreement is based on international standard of transparency and exchange of information and provides for exchange of information (including banking information)concerning taxes.
- The agreement has a specific provision that the requested Party shall use its information-gathering measures to obtain the requested information even though that Party may not need such information for its own tax purposes.
- The agreement provides for the representatives of the competent authority of the requesting Party to enter the territory of the requested Party to interview individuals and examine records.
- The Agreement provides for mutual assistance in collection of taxes due in other country.
- This agreement is expected to boost economic relationship between India and Macedonia.

MALTA529. Press Release of the Ministry of Finance on signing an Agreement on Avoidance of double Taxation with Malta.*New Delhi, April 15, 2013.

The Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) and the Protocol between the Republic of India and Malta for the avoidance of double taxation and for the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income is in force since 8th February, 1995. Both India and Malta have renegotiated the Agreement to bring in line with international standards, change in domestic laws and changed economic scenario.

On 08th April, 2013, India and Malta had signed the new DTAA at Valetta, Malta. The Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) was signed by the Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs of India and Dr. George Vella, Foreign Minister of Malta. Once the DTAA enters into force, it will stimulate the flow of capital, technology and personnel between both the countries and will further strengthen the economic relationship. It also provides tax stability and reduces any obstacles in providing mutual cooperation between India and Malta.

NORWAY

530. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of External Affairs Minister to Norway.

New Delhi, June 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. Since we had not met for quite some time in this format I thought it would be useful to have our usual interaction. As usual, I will begin with an announcement that I have to make following which you are free to ask me questions on that first and subsequently on anything else that you would like.

This relates to the visit of the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid to Norway. Even as we speak the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid is traveling to Norway. He will be there from the 11th, that is today, till the 13th.

His visit perhaps focuses on three elements. Number one element is his bilateral meetings with his counterpart Foreign Minister Eide. Also he will meet senior officials in the Norwegian Government including Prime Minister Stoltenberg. This meeting will take place on the 13th.

Next, following our membership of the Arctic Council, Foreign Minister Eide has invited Mr. Khurshid to visit Tromso, which is the place where the Fram Centre for Environment and Climate is located as is the Secretariat of the Arctic Council. He will actually fly with Mr. Khurshid today to Tromso. Subsequently tomorrow both Mr. Khurshid and the Foreign Minister will also go to Svalbard.

Svalbard, as you are aware, is an archipelago where India's research station Himadri is located. Right now we have four scientists working at the research station. Those of you who have been following it are aware that it was initiated in 2007 and inaugurated in 2008. Subsequently we spent about three million dollars on our research activities related to that centre, and we intend to enhance this. During the next five years an amount of about 12 million dollars is expected to be spent on research through this centre.

Right now there have been about 170 Indian scientists who have written on this matter, and there are 18 Indian institutions who are focused on research related to climate through the Arctic. The idea of providing you this entire information is that we are extremely interested in the Arctic region and intend to play an active role in the Arctic Council too. That is the second area of focus of the External Affairs Minister while he is in Norway.

The third one is related to investments. As you are perhaps aware, Norway has amongst the richest Sovereign Wealth Funds. This is a government pension fund. It has about 700 billion dollar resources at its disposal. In April earlier this year we had officials from the Sovereign Wealth Fund visit India. They had discussions with our senior officials including the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission and the Finance Minister. The External Affairs Minister intends to take this discussion forward and to see how we can facilitate greater investments into India including in the infrastructure sector through the Sovereign Wealth Fund that Norway has. So, broadly these are the three major issues in the External Affairs Minister's visit to Norway.

I think with that I will stop. We could begin with questions related to the announcement and then if you have any other questions I am willing to answer them.

Q: Besides climate, what are the other areas on which this research is focusing?

Official Spokesperson: We have detailed information available, and we will pass it on to you, on various aspects of glaciology, climate change, and environment. While this research is being coordinated by one Department there are other Departments too including the Earth Sciences Department which are focused on this. I will pass that information, which is largely of scientific nature, to you at the end of this briefing if that is what you want to know.

Question: Can you brief us about India's contribution to the Seed Bank in Svalbard?

Official Spokesperson: I must confess that I am not a scientist and I am aware of only the diplomatic dimensions of this. But if you would require any further information, I would suggest that you deal with concerned Departments because these are directly handled by those Departments whether it is Science and Technology or Earth Sciences. But I would suffice it to say that our interest in Svalbard region dates back prior to Independence because the Treaty of Svalbard was signed in 1920 and we acceded to this in 1923. We are among the ten countries who have the opportunity to set up stations there, and we are amongst the limited number of countries who are original signatories to the Treaty of Svalbard. But I am afraid I do not have the details of the exact investments that we have in Svalbard.

Question: Could you explain this 1920?

Official Spokesperson: I thought the date would be as evident as possible. 1920 would mean British India. As you would perhaps recollect, even in the United Nations we are an original member prior to Independence. It was the norm then that if a Dominion was interested in any activity, it could accede to a treaty. And that was what we had done way back in 1923 as regards the Arctic Council and as regards the United Nations in 1945.

Q: Any discussion on enhanced cooperation in the oil and gas sector with Norway? Also on a related note, any discussion on India's role in the Arctic Council with Norway?

Official Spokesperson: On the oil and gas sector, yes, because we see this as a possible area of growth between India and Norway. Perhaps you are aware that Norway is the third largest exporter of oil after Saudi Arabia and Russia. Also it has expertise in deep sea oil extraction. So, there will be areas of cooperation, and with that we could learn from Norway some of the best practices that they adopt in that area.

India's role in the Arctic Council is laid down as an Observer. There are clear norms of what Observers can do. They participate in the subgroups where much of the work is done. At this stage that is what is provided for in the Arctic Council. We are grateful to Norway for having supported our membership there. But at this stage we will take it in terms of our scientific and technological interest in the Arctic region. That was the basis for our request for Observership, which we are grateful has been accepted by the Arctic Council.

Q: You mentioned that the...(Inaudible)...in April and they were interested in infrastructure.

Official Spokesperson: I think I did not say what you are saying but please go ahead.

Q: Are there any projects that have been identified as such?

Official Spokesperson: Let me tell you that officials of the Fund did come here in April. They had discussions, I said, with the Planning Commission and with the Finance Ministry. They are investing in Indian companies, several of them, but they have not yet invested in infrastructure. It is our hope that as they expand their portfolio for investment in India, even infrastructure would be one of those areas.

If there is no other question on the visit, let us move on with anything else that you would need to ask questions on. Let us go issue by issue.

PORTUGAL

531. External Affairs Minister's opening remarks at the press interaction with Minister for Foreign Affairs of Portugal Mr. Paulo Sacadura Cabral Portas.

New Delhi, March 4, 2013.

Your Excellency Paulo de Sacadura Cabral Portas,

Your Excellency Minister of State for Culture Mr. Jorge Barreto Xavier, Friends from Media,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome His Excellency Mr. Paulo de Sacadura Cabral Portas, Minister of Foreign Affairs on his first official visit to India.

Foreign Minister Portas and I have had very cordial discussions today. They were comprehensive and fruitful.

India's relations with Portugal are warm and friendly and have grown over the years. Periodic high level visits between our two countries have given a boost to our bilateral relations. India and Portugal have cooperated closely in multilateral forums on a range of global issues.

Our linkages date back to many centuries. We share commonalities of history and culture. Portugal is home to the third largest population (70,000) of Persons-of-Indian origin (PIOs) in Europe. The Indian community has been contributing to furthering of cultural ties and in forming a unique and positive bond between our two countries. We have discussed ways to further strengthen the people-to-people contacts, and noted that the signing of the Social Security Agreement between our two countries during this visit will further these contacts.

The conduct of the third Lusofonia Games in Goa towards the end of the year will, we hope, enhance the engagement of sportspersons from India and the 11 other countries who will participate in the games.

Friends,

Both India and Portugal are resolutely opposed to terrorism. We share common views on this global menace. We reiterated our commitment to continue our cooperation in the fight against terrorism.

I conveyed deep appreciation of the Government of India for the positive support extended by Portugal on the extradition of Abu Salem wanted in connection with criminal cases dating back to the Mumbai blasts of 1993.

We expressed satisfaction of the fact that the bilateral trade in 2012 has been resorted to pre-global economic crisis levels of 2008-09. We also acknowledged that our bilateral trade has considerable potential for growth and that the partnership is currently below potential. We noted with satisfaction that many companies from India and Portugal are already active in bilateral business partnerships in both countries. Indian IT companies have already set up operations in Portugal, and there are greater prospects of diversification of investments to other sectors also.

We also discussed the economic situation in the European Union and India. We expressed confidence that Europe which is one of India's largest trade partners will return to a positive growth path.

The presence of His Excellency the Minister of State for Culture with us today offered an opportunity to review the ongoing bilateral cultural ties.

We noted that the bilateral Cultural Exchange Programme (CEP) is facilitating greater exchange of cultural resources, and also agreed to put the CEP to effective use and realize its full potential.

Our discussions on the multifarious regional and global issues reiterated the fact that Portugal and India share similar worldview. We look forward to continuing our bilateral dialogue on these issues.

With these words, I once again extend a very warm welcome to Foreign Minister Paulo Portas and Minister of State for Culture Jorge Xavier, and wish them a very pleasant stay in India.

Thank you

ROMANIA

532. List of documents signed during the visit of Foreign Minister of Romania to India, March 7-8, 2013.

March 08, 2013.

List of documents signed during the visit of Foreign Minister of Romania to India, March 7-8, 2013

S.No	Name of Agreement	Signatory	Remarks
1.	Joint Statement on establishing an Extensive Partnership between India and Romania	Indian signatory: Shri Salman Khurshid, External Affairs Minister Romanian signatory: Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Titus Corlatean	The Joint Statement aims to have regular political dialogue, more frequent inter-governmental exchanges, heightened Parliamentary contacts and a more dynamic civil society interaction. It aims to further deepen political, economic and commercial ties between the two countries and enhanced cooperation in all fields including S&T, higher education and research, defence, civil nuclear energy, space and agriculture.
2.	Agreement between India and Romania for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income.	Indian signatory: Shri Salman Khurshid, External Affairs Minister Romanian signatory: Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Titus Corlatean	The DTAA between the Republic of India and Romania is in force since November 14, 1987. Both India and Romania have renegotiated the Agreement to bring in line with international standards, change in domestic laws and changed economic scenario. Once the amended Agreement enters into force, it will stimulate the flow of capital, technology and personnel from India to Romania and vice versa. It also provides tax stability and reduces any obstacles in providing mutual cooperation between India and Romania.

RUSSIA533. India - Russia Foreign Office Consultations.*Moscow, March 20, 2013.

1. Comprehensive Foreign Office Consultations between India and Russia were held in Moscow on March 19, 2013. Shri Ranjan Mathai, Foreign Secretary and H.E. Mr. Andrei I. Denisov, First Deputy Foreign Minister of the Russian Federation led delegations of senior officials for the talks.
2. The two sides reviewed the progress in bilateral relations since the last India-Russia Summit in New Delhi in December 2012. Strategic sectors of cooperation such as nuclear energy, hydrocarbons and defence were discussed, along with other issues of bilateral significance in the economic, consular, protocol and cultural areas.
3. A comprehensive exchange of views on regional and global issues also took place. Both sides discussed in detail the situation in Afghanistan, Syria, Iran and other regions. Shri Mathai and Mr. Denisov also assessed bilateral cooperation in multilateral fora including UN, SCO, BRICS and G20 - particularly the next BRICS Summit in Durban and the 2013 G20 Summit in St. Petersburg.
4. They agreed that close consultations between the two Foreign Offices on a broad range of subjects would continue through the year.

534. Press Release of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the signing of the Indo-Russian Regulation defining the Structure, Functions and Procedure of the Joint Commission.

New Delhi, April 11, 2013.

The Government of India and Government of Russian Federation have signed on April 10, 2013 in Moscow a Regulation defining the structure, functions and procedure of the Joint Commission which has been established by an Agreement signed on December 21, 2010 in New Delhi in the field of Emergency Management.

Shri Sushilkumar Shinde, Union Minister of Home Affairs and Mr. Vladimir Puchkov, Minister of the Russian Federation for Civil Defense, Emergencies and Elimination of Consequences of Natural Disasters have signed this agreement.

The agreement will enable both the countries to help each other in the field of prevention and elimination of the consequences of emergency situations. It will further strengthen the bond of friendship between the two countries and enhance the Indo-Russian Co-operation.

The Indo-Russian Commission will ensure the implementation of the Agreement which was signed on December 21, 2010 in New Delhi for catalyzing cooperation in the field of Emergency Management and contribute to the well being and safety of the people of both the countries in the event of disasters and also to exchange mutually beneficial scientific and technical information in the area of Emergency Management. The meetings of the Joint Commission will be alternatively held in India and Russia.

535. Extract from the Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson relevant to the visit of External Affairs Minister's to Moscow to attend the Inter-Sessional Meeting of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission.

New Delhi, April 23, 2013.

The second item is, following this meeting External Affairs Minister will also visit Moscow. The visit is largely focused on the inter-sessional meeting of the India-Russia Intergovernmental Commission. As you are aware, the External Affairs Minister chairs this from the Indian side and Mr. Rogozin the Deputy Premier of Russia is his counterpart chairperson from the Russian side.

They are likely to have discussions on the entire gamut of our bilateral relations in terms of trade, economic, commercial, science and technology matters, and of course cultural cooperation. Of course when the External Affairs Minister is there he will also take the opportunity to meet with other senior members of the Russian leadership including his counterpart the Foreign Minister of Russia, Mr. Lavrov.

I think I have exhausted in terms of the announcements to make. I will first take questions related to these and then I will take any other questions that you may like to ask. If you have questions related to the two announcements that I have made, we will take those first.

Q: This is about the Foreign Minister's visit to Moscow. Can you just give some details as to what kind of agreements, if any, are going to be signed? I know the IRIGC is not a platform meant for that but is there any kind of protocol or MoU or agreement? And is he meeting Putin?

Official Spokesperson: To the first question my answer is, as you are aware, the IRIGC process is a process which is annual in nature. However, you would recollect, when Mr. Rogozin was first appointed the Chair of this process from the Russian side he did come over to India and there was an inter-sessional meeting. This was sometime in the first half of last year. It was followed subsequently by a full-fledged meeting. So, with the External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid taking over the chairmanship from his predecessor, we are following the same pattern. And this is an inter-sessional meeting. We do not expect any outcomes in terms of documentation or MoUs for these meetings. However, we hope that there will be a frank exchange of views. India and Russia have been meeting at very senior levels on a regular basis and we hope that this is a continuum of such meetings.

536. External Affairs Minister's interview to Kommersant (Russian Daily Newspaper).

Moscow, April 30, 2013.

Kommersant/ by Sergei Strokan

Indian Foreign Minister Salman Khurshid has made a working visit to Moscow. The central event in the course of the visit was his meeting with Russian Deputy Prime Minister Dmitry Rogozin – co-chairman of the Intergovernmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation. On the eve of the talks Salman Khurshid, co-chairman of the Commission from the Indian side, spoke to Kommersant's correspondent, Sergei Strokan, about the future prospects of bilateral cooperation.

Mr. Minister, this is your first visit to Russia. What do you expect from the meetings in Moscow?

A deep, strong and diverse relationship has developed between Russia and India. The strategic partnership provides for the holding of annual summits, the content of which is provided by the Russian-Indian Intergovernmental Commission for Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation. In order for the relations to develop, it is necessary to carry out a huge amount of preparatory work on a full range of issues. It is this, in particular, that we intend to do in Moscow.

But recently there have arisen simultaneously in our relationship several negative elements associated with the delay in handing over the aircraft carrier Vikramaditya to the Indian side, the withdrawal of licenses from AFK "Sistema" in India, and the disagreements over nuclear cooperation in the framework of the “Kudankulam” NPP project. Can one say that the relations between the two countries do not have any problems?

There are no problems in a relationship only when nothing is happening. But as the relationship develops inevitably issues arise that require joint decisions. We have been working intensely on the issues that have been discussed in the Press over the last year and that had become a source of concern. Presently, we do not feel that there are problems that we cannot solve. We are waiting for the aircraft carrier Vikramaditya to be transferred to us. As regards the “Kudankulam” NPP, the final preparations are underway for the launch of its first power-generating unit. The second power-generating unit is 90% ready for operation. Apart from that, negotiations are being held on the construction of the third and fourth power-generating units.

In Russia today there are voices calling into question the mechanism of tenders for concluding deals in the military-technical sphere. Critics talk about their lack of transparency and elements of corruption. Is it not time to recognise that tenders in the sphere of Military-Technical Cooperation have outlived their usefulness?

In a free society there are always different opinions. Some of them are quite superficial, some are affected by distrust and cynicism, and therefore it is not worth spending too much time discussing them.

But let me answer you to the point. We in India, as we move towards a more open market economy, have acquired extensive management experience. In this process the mechanism of tenders was also established, realising the principle of free competition in obtaining government contracts.

Moreover, the fate of any one deal should always be decided within a specific context. In some cases the deals are concluded within the framework of direct intergovernmental agreements, in others – on the basis of tenders. But I do not think that any problems should arise in the case of the tenders for Russian companies in India. Many of them have participated in tenders with success.

Does it mean that intergovernmental agreements cannot replace tenders?

There are strategic spheres in which intergovernmental agreements are still important. But in open societies, such as ours, it is important that there be transparency and public scrutiny, provided for by tenders.

India has proposed that Russia take part in the implementation of the ambitious project to build the Delhi-Mumbai industrial corridor. How important are Russian investments?

The concept of the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, in the implementation of which Japan has largely been involved, presupposes the participation in it of many countries. It is impossible for a single country to realise the project by itself, therefore we have approached Russia and we hope that she will respond. After all, Russia has a lot of experience of working in India.

One of the key areas of cooperation is power engineering. India is trying to get Russia's participation in the "Sakhalin-3" project, in addition, the company ONGC Videsh Limited is interested in the development of the oil fields in Siberia. How do you envisage the prospects of such cooperation?

The details should be discussed by technical experts, but I can confirm that ONGC Videsh Limited is truly interested in working in Siberia and the Arctic. This is one of the promising areas of investment and cooperation.

In recent weeks relations between India and China have deteriorated in connection with the long-standing territorial dispute. The current situation has even been compared with the year 1962 when armed conflict broke out. How do you intend to solve the problem, considering that Beijing is taking a tough approach and does not intend to give in?

I do not think that we should talk about it in terms of "softness" or "toughness". This is a localized, specific matter that should not negatively impact on the entire complex of Indo-Chinese relations. The controversy relates to the sides' different views on the so-called Line of Actual Control. So, being aware of the enormous public attention to this issue, we should not artificially aggravate the situation. The issue must be resolved by negotiation.

Does this mean that you exclude the possibility of an armed conflict?

Absolutely.

537. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the 7th India-Russia Trade and Investment Forum on Pharma, Tourism, and Services.

New Delhi, September 22, 2013.

A high level delegation of 120 Indian business leaders led by Union Minister of Commerce and Industry, Shri Anand Sharma discussed various business opportunities with their Russian counterparts at India-Russia Trade and Investment Forum at St. Petersburg on Friday. Special focus was on the three round tables on “Pharmaceutical and Medical Industry”, “Tourism and Medical Tourism” and “Trade in goods, services and innovative products”. On his return to India yesterday, Shri Sharma said “we discussed and noted the emerging opportunities in both the countries and we are hopeful that the three Round Tables have identified in detail the specific projects where we shall be cooperating.”

At the forum Pharmaceutical sector received major attention as India is looking at the opportunities that the 2020 Pharma programme offers. Shri Sharma sought regulatory simplifications for Indian companies who not only want to have market access but also look for establishing manufacturing base in Russia. In recently concluded 19th India Russia Working Group on Trade and Economic Cooperation (IRWGTEC) meeting in Moscow Indian side had conveyed the details of barriers in the trade of pharmaceutical products to Russia. These barriers included substantial delay in all approvals and dossier evaluation due to insufficient number of competent specialists, huge number of backlog of dossiers accumulated by the Russian health authorities, lack of information about stage of approval etc. All this leads to avoidable delay in supplies, commencement of production, and launch of new product in the market. Shri Sharma said that “as Indian pharma companies are keen to establish manufacturing bases in Russia, it is imperative that Russian government should address their concerns in an expeditious manner.”

Fertilizer sector has also attracted Indian interest for setting up manufacturing in Russia. Production of Phosphate and Potash in Russia by way of JV with Indian Fertilizer entities was discussed. There exist complementarity between availability of fertilizer resources in Russia and growing fertilizer demand in India which should result in strategic partnership in this field. AKRON and ORGSINTEZ, the two Russian companies are in discussion with IFFCO as they have Potassic and Phosphatic resources. Both side discussed the need to support the proposal of M/s AKRON of Russia for setting up of facilities for production of Phosphate and Potash in Russia by way of JV with Indian Fertilizer entities. Furthermore, In January 2013, Secretary (Fertilizer) met the Russian Ministry of Industry and Trade and Russian fertilizer companies to explain new investment policy changes in urea production in India and invite them to invest in India under the new policy. A non-paper was also shared with the Russian side. During this visit Shri Sharma was informed of Russian companies expressing interest in the proposition and companies on both sides are expected to identify opportunities for investment in urea production in India.

The Forum in its 7th edition with specific purpose of 'encouraging discussion among the businesses of the two sides to increase economic engagement for common benefits' concluded that fresh initiatives need to be taken to further exploit complementarities in other sectors such as fertilizers, industrial machinery, diamonds etc. Other new areas such as automobiles, electrical equipment, chemicals, mining and processed foods need to be explored as they have immense potential in both countries. Another area identified for focused approach between India and Russia is IT Services. This conclusion is an endorsement of the sector that have been identified in Joint Understanding & Intention on Possible Plans and Priority Investment Projects for Enhancing Indo-Russian Economic & Investment Cooperation Under which a total of 15 high value, high tech projects have been selected for special attention for ministerial supervision. Some of the projects are

- The establishment of India-Russian Joint venture with "Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd." (HAL) as joint centre of development the helicopters.
- Production of Nitrogen Tetra Oxide for Space programme

- Possible future cooperation between MMTC and ALROSA for long term supply of rough diamonds
- ONGC Videsh Ltd. (OVL)'s prospects for further hydrocarbon collaboration with Russian energy companies
- Joint project of Ranbaxy Laboratories Limited (RLL) and Government of Yaroslavl region
- Participation of Russian companies in urea production in India under new investment policy.
- Plant construction for manufacturing butyl rubber with capacity of 100000 tons per year at the production site of "Reliance Industries" in Jamnagar (India).

Shri Sharma also met Mr. Alksey Ulyukaev, Minister of Economic Development and took forward the discussion that he had with Mr. Dmitry Rogozin, Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Denis Manturov, Minister of Industry and Trade a day before. This visit assumes significance as the Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh is likely to visit Russia next month.

538. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary on Prime Minister's visits to Russia and China .

New Delhi, October 19, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon.

As you are aware, today we have the Foreign Secretary here to brief you on Prime Minister's forthcoming visits to Russia and China. Along with her are the nodal officers in the Ministry who handle each of these countries. On Foreign Secretary's right is Mr. Gautam Bambawale who is Joint Secretary (East Asia) who handles China as our main contact person relating to all diplomatic efforts with China. On my left is Mr. Ajay Bisaria who is Joint Secretary (Eurasia) who is our Ministry's point person dealing with Russia, among other things.

I will request Foreign Secretary to make her opening remarks following which she will answer in a sequential manner first questions on Russia, then questions on China, and then if there is time she is willing to answer questions on anything else if any of you are interested.

I hope you all know the ground rules. Some of you may be new here. One question per person will be allowed. So, please choose your question carefully. There will not be seconds allowed for anyone. Otherwise, maybe we will have two hundred questions directed at us. We hope to have this interaction for forty minutes. I would also request you to put your mobile phones in silent mode so that they do not disrupt the proceedings.

I will now request Foreign Secretary to make her opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh will, on the first leg of his two-nation tour, be paying an Official Visit to Moscow from 20th to 22nd October, for the 14th Annual India-Russia Summit.

The practice of having an Annual Summit between India and Russia was institutionalized in 2000 with the signing of the Declaration of the Strategic Partnership between India and Russia. The annual event exemplifies the special and privileged strategic partnership between our two countries.

Our Prime Minister is no stranger to Russia. This is the tenth summit that he will attend, the fifth in Moscow. He has also been in Russia as recently as June at the G20 summit in St. Petersburg.

Russia has been a steadfast friend and partner for over six decades. It has been a source of our defence needs, space program and high technologies. It has extended friendship and support through challenging times in India's history. This partnership is today a key priority of India's foreign policy.

The relationship is supported by an elaborate, multilayered and very effective mechanism which allows us to broaden and deepen our interaction continually. In the run-up to the Summit, we have had intense exchanges. This year, External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, has visited Moscow twice. The last visit was in October 2013 for the nineteenth session of the Intergovernmental Commission which is co-chaired by Deputy Prime Minister Rogozin. EAM also had a very productive meeting with Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov.

Home Minister of India, Shri Sushil Kumar Shinde, has visited Moscow in April. Commerce and Industry Minister, Shri Anand Sharma, has visited thrice in the past year to energize trade and economic ties and business-to-business links. Our National Security Adviser too visited Russia thrice during this year, while the Russian National Security Adviser visited India in January 2013.

The Chairperson of the Russian Federation Council visited India in February 2013. In addition, we have had numerous official level engagements. For instance, we have Foreign Office Consultations with Russia on seventeen different subject areas, reflecting the convergence in our approaches on regional and global issues.

What this robust exchange indicates is a deep, rock-solid and time-tested relationship with one of our closest global partners. Today India-Russia cooperation is truly multidimensional covering the fields of defence, energy, space, high technology, trade and economy, science, culture and people-to-people exchanges.

Russia is a key partner for us in the field of defence. In recent years our military technical cooperation has evolved into joint design, development and production of defence systems such as fifth generation fighters and multirole transport aircraft. Earlier this year, we received our stealth frigate INS Trikand and we are now awaiting the commissioning of INS Vikramaditya next month. Our Armed Forces are holding the INDRA 2013 exercise in Rajasthan as we speak.

The Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant exemplifies our close cooperation in the field of nuclear energy. Unit-1 of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant has been completed and attained criticality in July this year. Unit-2 at Kudankulam should be ready in the first half of 2014. On Units 3 and 4, our companies are finalizing documents.

Last year witnessed a 24.5 per cent rise in bilateral trade, crossing US$ 11 billion in 2012 for the first time. Investment is also emerging as an important focus of our bilateral ties. Russia is an important partner in the field of hydrocarbons, and OVL is participating in two projects – as 20 per cent partner in the Sakhalin-1 project and as 100 per cent owner and operator of Imperial Energy in the Tomsk Region.

Coming back to the visit program, the Prime Minister will be arriving in Moscow on October 20th. October 21st is the main engagement day where he will meet President Putin for official talks and a working lunch. On the same day the Prime Minister will be conferred with an Honorary Doctorate by the Moscow State Institute of International Relations.

As is customary, a Joint Statement will be issued at the conclusion of the talks touching on bilateral as well as global issues. We expect a few agreements to be signed in diverse areas such as science and technology, energy efficiency and standards. Also, on the margins of the Summit we will have a meeting of the newly reconstituted CEO's Council.

Following the visit to Russia, Prime Minister will pay an official visit to Beijing from 22nd to 24th October, 2013. This is the Prime Minister's second bilateral visit to Beijing. Previously he had visited China in January 2008. Also this is the second bilateral meeting between the Prime Minister and Prime Minister Li Keqiang during the course of this year. You would recall that Prime Minister Li Keqiang was in India for a visit in May 2013. This is the first time since 1954 that the Prime Ministers of India and China will have visited each other's country in the same calendar year.

The programme for the visit is broadly that Prime Minister will reach Beijing in the evening of 22nd October, and will be received ceremonially the next morning at the Great Hall of the People by his Chinese counterpart. They will then have discussions both in limited as well as delegation-level format. Premier Li Keqiang will host a banquet lunch.

PM will also be meeting the Chairman of the National People's Congress Zhang Dejiang in the afternoon. In the evening, Prime Minister will be hosted by President Xi Jinping at a banquet dinner. On 24th October, the Prime Minister will address the Central Party School of the Communist Party of China. He will then be meeting former Prime Minister Wen Jiabao, followed by lunch. So, as you can see, he has a rather tight schedule in Beijing.

The meetings with the Chinese leadership have a broad agenda and are likely to cover all aspects of bilateral relations in addition to regional and global issues of importance.

India and China have an elaborate architecture of engagement and dialogue which covers the entire gamut of bilateral relations. Prime Minister had met President Xi Jinping on the margins of the BRICS Summit in Durban in March, 2013. Also this year itself the External Affairs Minister has met his counterpart on four occasions, in Beijing as well as on the margins of multilateral summits.

The Defence Minister visited China in July. The Special Representatives held their 16th round of talks on the boundary question in June at Beijing. The Strategic Dialogue at the level of Foreign Secretary and Chinese Vice-Minister was held in August, 2013. We have also had the first India-China Dialogue on Afghanistan, and the first India-China Dialogue on Central Asia. The intensity and breadth of the interactions is reflective of the importance that both countries place on the relationship.

Maintenance of peace, tranquility and stability on our border is an important factor in our bilateral ties, and it is expected that this would be an important aspect of the discussions as it is also the fundamental basis on which the rest of our bilateral relationship can proceed and grow.

Prime Minister has on several occasions previously emphasized that there is sufficient space in the world for both India and China to meet their developmental aspirations. Therefore, even as we pursue our economic and social goals we have expanded our bilateral ties. In particular, economic exchanges have emerged as an important underpinning of our bilateral relations.

Both India and China aim to achieve their commonly set target of US$ 100 billion in terms of bilateral trade by 2015, and are striving to ensure balance of trade flows. The possibility of Chinese investment in India through the mechanism of an industrial park is being explored. During the visit of Prime Minister to Beijing, the second meeting of the India-China CEOs Forum is also taking place, and PM and PM Li Keqiang are expected to receive the recommendations of the CEOs to expand economic linkages.

2014 is the 60th anniversary of the enunciation of Panchsheel and has been designated as the Year of India-China Friendly Exchanges. Measures relating to people-to-people exchanges during the next year are also areas where we see possibilities of greater cooperation. The first India-China Media Forum was successfully held in New Delhi, and we intend to have this as an annual feature. We are also pursuing avenues of cultural cooperation.

At the culmination of the visit a Joint Statement will be issued summarizing the major areas in our bilateral ties. It is also expected that some agreements would be signed on issues which we are currently working on and hope to conclude during the visit.

Both the visit to Russia and to China manifest the priority we place on regular high-level interactions in our engagements with these two very important countries.

Official Spokesperson: We will now open the floor for questions relating to Russia. So let us focus right now on Russia.

Q: Madam Foreign Secretary, we are keen on acquiring on lease a second nuclear submarine from Russia. What is the status? Is this deal going to be finalised during this summit? And are you going to invoke the warranty clause with respect to INS Sindhurakshak which expires in January 2014?

Official Spokesperson: Rajiv, before I give this to Foreign Secretary to respond, I would like to know which of the two questions you want answered. If you ask two questions, we will choose one. I have already said that. So, please be very clear. Just choose one question.

Q: The submarine one.

Foreign Secretary: As you are all aware, defence cooperation is an important pillar of our multifaceted, special and privileged strategic partnership based on longstanding and time-tested friendship over six decades. This cooperation is progressing ahead to mutual satisfaction, and we expect this to continue to be the case

Q: Madam, you said that Russia and India will sign an agreement on energy efficiency. I am unable to understand what this agreement is going to be. Could you please clarify this point?

Foreign Secretary: I am going to ask my Joint Secretary to elaborate.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): It is exactly what the name suggests. There is an agreement and a discussion on cooperation between the two sides in the area of energy efficiency. And that includes exchange of technologies, exchange of information, and exchange of experts to have greater effectiveness in terms of mutual cooperation. This is under discussion.

Q: Madam, my question is regarding the regional security. This is one of issues of prime importance especially post 2014. How does India assess this regional security especially in Afghanistan with the two major powers?

Foreign Secretary: As very close strategic partners, Russia and India consult each other on all issues of mutual interest. What will happen in Afghanistan, especially in the context of the drawdown of forces in 2014, is something that is of great interest to both Russia and to India, and we continue to consult very closely with each other on this subject at various levels including at my level.

Q: This is regarding the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO). Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs has said after his meeting with Mr. Khurshid that India's request to become a member of the SCO has been already processed. Is India's participation in the SCO on the agenda of this summit?

Foreign Secretary: I would not like to pre-empt what is on the agenda and what is not. We are already Observers at the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, and we will see how our participation goes in the future.

Question: Your Excellency, you told us that some negotiations will happen with regard to Units 3 and 4 of Kudankulam. Can you explain at what level these negotiations will be? Are you going to sign a contract? When should we expect the signing of this contract?

Foreign Secretary: As you are aware, an intergovernmental agreement on cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, including the nuclear power plant at Kudankulam, already exists. Contracts for specific units are concluded at the level of companies. And our companies are in discussion on Kudankulam 3 and 4. We hope to conclude specific contracts in the near future.

Q: In your opening remarks you referred to the multirole transport aircraft. And also there is a plan to coproduce passenger transport aircraft. What is the status of these two major projects between India and Russia?

Foreign Secretary: As I have indicated, defence cooperation is one of the very important aspects. You would be knowing, over the past couple of years Russia has delivered a nuclear-powered submarine, three world-class stealth frigates, Su-30MKI fighters, T90 tanks, and other equipment to our armed forces. We are making good progress on our joint development and production projects such as the fifth generation fighter aircraft and the multirole transport aircraft.

Q: About multirole transport aircraft?

Official Spokesperson: That is what she said - making good progress.

Q: Madam, the economy and trade have been an area that has been a bit of a problem in bilateral relations. Are there any new initiatives that are happening on this visit that will enhance the levels of bilateral trade?

Foreign Secretary: I do not agree that it has been an area of problems. This is one of the areas that has seen excellent progress because India-Russia trade grew from US$ 8.85 billion in 2012 to US$ 11.04. And this has represented a growth of 24.5 per cent over the past one year. If this pace is maintained, our trade would cross US$ 20 billion in 2015. So, you are aware that the global economic environment remains difficult and this has affected trade with many of our other partners. But notwithstanding this slowdown in the global economic environment, our trade with Russia has actually grown by 24.5 per cent. So, this is something that we look forward to continuing to sustain.

There are various other areas that require more focused attention. We need more active business-to-business relations. Efforts by both countries to liberalise the trade environment are on. We appreciate the fact that there is probably a need for better flow of information between our businesses about each other's capabilities, achievements and opportunities. We have suggested a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement between India and the Customs Union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia, which we hope would be initiated soon.

Mutual investment is an emerging area between companies in India and Russia in areas such as chemicals, pharmaceuticals, automobiles, telecommunications, infrastructure, fertilisers and energy, to name a few areas. So, we see this as something that is developing very well and continues to be a promising area.

Q: Madam, you are talking about cooperation with Russia in hydrocarbons. Do you expect any new agreements during the visit in this regard?

Foreign Secretary: Russia is a major energy producer while India is one of the fastest-growing energy consumers. ONGC Videsh Limited has large investments in Sakhalin-1 and Tomsk, and is considering new investment opportunities in oil and gas, in projects in Siberia, in Russia's Far East and in the Arctic Shelf with companies such as Rosneft, Gazprom and Novatech. And we are hoping to have successful conclusion of these endeavours when the time is right. So, energy cooperation whether it is nuclear energy or oil and gas sectors are an important dimension of our strategic partnership. In the oil and gas sectors, cooperation has been progressing very well. But newer areas definitely need to be explored.

We have brought to the Russian side's attention OVL's keen interest in newer projects including joint exploration of the Russian Arctic zone which is very rich in minerals. Many of these issues were discussed in the meeting of Working Group on Energy which met on the eve of the last IGC earlier this month. Being large investments and long-gestation projects, these kinds of transactions do consume time as well as a lot of effort. You may also be aware that our companies have recently signed long-term deals in supply of energy to India. Both sides are keen to continue and deepen this aspect.

Q: Madam, about Kudankulam 3 and 4, you said 'in the near future'. Does that near future include during the visit now? What about the concerns expressed by Russian companies over the liability clause in the nuclear liability Act?

Foreign Secretary: Near future means near future. Let us see, because the companies continue to be in discussion, and all these issues continue to be in technical and legal discussions. Whether they are liability issues, financial issues, insurance issues, these continue to be in discussion.

Official Spokesperson: I do not see anyone else with questions on Russia. So, we will now move to questions on the other topic, Prime Minister's visit to China.

Q: Madam, in the last visit of Li Keqiang to Delhi we were made to understand that Tibet was the issue that was raised by China to put in the Joint Statement. Are you prepared to talk anything about Tibet in this visit of the Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to China?

Foreign Secretary: India's stand on Tibet is really well-known and there has been no change in this. So, I do not see what your question specifically refers to. Let us leave it at that.

Q: We have a huge trade deficit with China - US$ 30 billion plus - and the plan is to have a US$ 100 billion thing in the next two, three years. The Chinese have problems letting us in in pharmaceuticals and several other things in which we are interested. Is this likely to be taken up when the Prime Minister goes to China? And is there any possibility of India and China conducting the bilateral trade in their respective currencies?

Foreign Secretary: You are right that the adverse trade deficit that India faces in its exchanges with China is an issue of concern which we have raised with China on several occasions at several levels. This is something that can be dealt with by enhancing Chinese direct investment into India. In fact this May, during his visit to India, you will be aware, the Chinese Premier had proposed establishing a Chinese industrial park in India where Chinese companies could cluster together; and India takes this proposal very seriously.

Right now, even as this press conference is going on, a team from China - from their Ministry of Commerce and the China Development Bank - is in India to discuss this subject with the Ministry of Commerce and Industry. We will be showing them some possible sites for an industrial park or zone. The same time is also discussing with the Department of Commerce a five-year trade development plan which will seek to ensure more balanced trade. So, it is quite possible that the two Prime Ministers will discuss these issues because this is an ongoing matter that continues to be raised from our side whenever we meet.

Q: Madam, there is an element of uncertainty between the two countries due to frequent incursions and tensions at the border. How will India address it politically? What will be our approach in Beijing?

Foreign Secretary: As you know, there exists a boundary question between India and China, and the Special Representatives of India and China are discussing and tackling this issue. They have had sixteen rounds of discussions so far. In 2005 they succeeded at arriving at the Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the Resolution of the Boundary Question. They are now discussing the framework for a resolution of the boundary question. Let us give them time to work on this issue. In the meantime, we need to see how the matter progresses.

Q: Madam, which are the cities identified for this Chinese industrial park?

Official Spokesperson: Not cities, States.

Foreign Secretary: There are several States that would like to see this investment taking place. Amongst them are: Uttar Pradesh, Karnataka, Gujarat, Andhra Pradesh and Tamil Nadu.

Q: Madam, India has always voiced concern over the Brahmaputra because China is the upper riparian country. Will the issue figure during the talks?

Foreign Secretary: As a lower riparian State on many trans-border rivers that we have with China, the Government of India has been expressing its concern on the utilisation of the waters of such rivers to the Government of China including at the highest level. We have actively engaged China on this subject. The Chinese Government has explained to us their perspective on this issue. As you are aware, we do have a mechanism with China for discussing many of these issues. It is called the Expert Level Mechanism (ELM) between the Ministries of Water Resources of the two countries. We have been receiving valuable hydrological data from China on some of our trans-border rivers. We will continue to discuss this subject with our Chinese interlocutors.

Q: We hear that a Border Defence Cooperation Agreement is going to be signed. Could you give us a few details about this agreement? I believe there are some CBMs that are being proposed. What are these CBMs likely to be?

Foreign Secretary: As I stated in my opening remarks, there are a number of agreements which we are hoping to sign in Beijing. I do not want to go into the details since these will be outcomes from the discussions that actually happen between the two Prime Ministers. But let me assure all of you that we will brief you extensively during the course of the visit including on all the agreements or documents that may be signed.

Q: Madam Foreign Secretary, Indian citizens from Arunachal Pradesh are regularly facing this problem of stapled-visa issue. Will there be any talks on the visa liberalisation issue so that it can solve this problem forever?

Foreign Secretary: I have already told you that there is a boundary question between India and China, and that we are in discussions at the level of Special Representatives on how to discuss and deal with this issue. There have been several rounds of discussions, and they have arrived at the Political Parameters and Guiding Principles. They are now discussing the framework for resolving the boundary question. Let me again reiterate that we need to give them time to work out this issue. In the meantime, I wish to reiterate the Indian position that Arunachal Pradesh is an integral and inalienable part of India.

Q: Madam, the way Pakistan and China are talking about nuclear plants, will India speak to the Chinese Premier that it could be a dangerous game?

Foreign Secretary: I am going to answer your question in Hindi =, I hope it is OK.

Q: Sure.

Foreign Secretary: This is a concern for India. However, I do not wish to prejudge what the two Prime Ministers will discuss. Let us wait for their talks to be over, and I would be happy to brief you then.

Official Spokesperson: If there are no more questions on this visit, are there any questions on anything else?

Q: Is there any word on whether or not the Prime Minister will be visiting Colombo for the CHOGM Summit?

Foreign Secretary: The Government of Sri Lanka has extended an invitation. The Government of India has not yet taken a decision. This decision will be taken closer to the date keeping in view our foreign policy priorities, our international obligations, and our national interest.

Q: Mrs. Singh, my question also pertains to Dr. Manmohan Singh attending or not attending the CHOGM Summit. Madam, how relevant is the Commonwealth? This is a larger question. If it is still relevant as an entity, surely the argument would extend that it would be important for the Indian Prime Minister to attend it rather than, as some would say, succumb to domestic coalition compulsions as the case may be and not go.

Foreign Secretary: The Commonwealth is a relevant institution. It is a relevant institution that has 53 or 54 member countries at last count. Any institution that has so many member states cannot but be relevant in terms of meeting leaders from all parts of the world and speaking to them about our mutual concerns.

Foreign policy is an extension of domestic policy. I think that is something that should never be forgotten. It is meant to protect our domestic interests. And as I said, any decision that will be taken will be taken keeping in mind our national interest, our foreign policy priorities, and our international obligations.

Q: Madam, has any country, specifically US or UK, contacted India about the seizure of MV Seamen Guard near Tuticorin and the arrest of its crew?

Foreign Secretary: The vessel in question is owned by an American firm but is flagged in Sierra Leone. The vessel was stopped by our Coast Guard in consideration of issues relating to the presence of arms, ammunition, and armed guards on board without the necessary authorisation. The crew and guards are currently cooperating with the police investigations that are ongoing in Tamil Nadu. Cases have been filed with regard to our Arms Act and the Essential Commodities Act. Basic information on this case has been shared in routine course with US Embassy representatives. We have no issue with sharing details with any diplomatic representatives, should it be required.

Q: Madam, the Jammu and Kashmir Chief Minister has asked if the issue of civilians being injured in Pakistani unprovoked firing will be taken up with Pakistan. How will India address that issue?

Foreign Secretary: The question of incidents on the Line of Control is always taken up with Pakistan. We have a regular ongoing conversation with Pakistan on this. You know that our DGMOs are in regular touch. So, if there are any casualties on our side, we do take it up.

Q: Madam Foreign Secretary, you have just returned yesterday from the Maldives where you met several leaders of multiple parties there. There are still some concerns being expressed by the Maldivian Election Commission over whether the elections will even be held tomorrow because of certain issues with the electoral rolls and so on and so forth. What was your sense based on your communication with the multiple leaders? What is our position in case the elections do not get held tomorrow?

Foreign Secretary: My visit to the Maldives was in the context of the very close relationship that exists between India and the Maldives. You are aware that relations between the two are intertwined at a variety of levels whether it is the economic level, whether it is the security level, whether it is the people-to-people level, very close and ongoing contacts. India's interest is in seeing a stable, a peaceful, and a prosperous Maldives. And to this end, we believe that a transparent, a fair, and a free, democratic, political process is exceedingly important in bringing about a stable, a prosperous, and a peaceful Maldives. We believe that the first round of the elections that has seen an 88 per cent turnout of voters indicates the high expectations of the people in Maldives in seeing the results of their vote actually being translated into reality.

In the course of my visit I met various interlocutors in the Government of Maldives as well as the political parties, and all of them were of the view that the democratic political process needed to be supported so that free and fair elections could be held. It is our hope and our expectation that this process is taken forward, that it is carried forward, and that we have the inauguration of the President taking place on the 11th of November as provided for in the Constitution of the Maldives.

Q: Madam, following Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Nawaz Sharif's meeting in the US there was a decision that the two DGMOs would meet on the LoC question. Has a timeline been set for the DGMOs' meeting at all?

Foreign Secretary: At this juncture we have no information on a date when the DGMOs will meet.

Q: Madam, this is regarding the Augusta Westland case. Middleman Ralph Haschke has been arrested in Switzerland. Have the agencies in India gotten in touch with the Ministry of External Affairs, and will the Indian Government be looking for access or extradition of Haschke?

Foreign Secretary: We are aware of the developments that have taken place. CBI's investigations are ongoing presently, and they will take decisions as required. If required to facilitate, our Mission will facilitate.

Official Spokesperson: With that we come to the end of this interaction. Thank you very much.

(the text in italics is free translation of the Hindi text)

539. Prime Minister's interview to Russian media ahead of his official visit to Russia for the India – Russia Annual Summit 2013.

New Delhi, October 19, 2013.

India has taken a position on Syria close to that of Russia. Does it mean that we can expect a greater synergy between Russia and India on major international issues, particularly on the situation in the Middle East? What steps should be taken by Moscow and Delhi in this direction?

India and Russia have traditionally shared similar perspectives on regional and global issues, which constitute an important pillar of our strategic partnership.

The conflict in Syria is not only a tragedy for the people of that country, but also threatens the stability and security of the region and can have broader economic and security consequences beyond the region. The use of chemical weapons, irrespective of who used them, highlights the dangers inherent in the conflict.

India has always held that there is no military solution to this conflict, and has consistently maintained that external military intervention will only exacerbate the conflict. We worked together with Russia on this issue when India was a member of the UN Security Council. There is an urgent need to promote a political settlement to the conflict, addressing the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian people. It is essential that the Geneva-2 Conference be convened at the earliest. I applaud the efforts of President Putin and the Russian Government in promoting a political settlement to the conflict and fully support the framework that Russia has worked out with the United States for a time-bound elimination of chemical weapons in Syria.

1. Tell us of your favourite memories from previous visits to Russia. What do you like most about the country?

I have been visiting this beautiful and historic country for several years now, and I have had the privilege of seeing a number of cities like Saint Petersburg and Yekaterinburg, in addition to Moscow. I have always admired Russia's rich heritage in culture, art and architecture. I have great respect for the genius and resilience of the Russian people. But what has struck me most has been the warmth and friendship of the Russian people towards India, which the Indian people fully reciprocate. Russia has been a longstanding and special partner of India. This relationship is unmatched in terms of understanding, trust, confidence and warmth. I value greatly my close and friendly relations with President Putin, and I look forward to my visit to the dynamic city of Moscow once again for the 2013 Annual Summit with President Putin.

2. India has expressed its wish to engage with Customs Union, created by Russia, Belarus and Kazakhstan. What are the Indian interests in Customs Union?

We value our economic cooperation with Russia, as well as with Belarus and Kazakhstan. India has signed Free Trade Agreements or Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreements with several countries, such as Thailand, Singapore, ASEAN and Japan, and we are negotiating a Broad Based Trade and Investment Agreement with the European Union. A Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement between India and the Customs Union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia will go a long way in enhancing economic relations between India and your Customs Union. Trade and investment links between India and Russia, in particular, would benefit greatly, and would complement various other measures that both countries are taking to promote two-way business linkages.

3. What are your expectations as far as the next BRICS summit is concerned? What should be done to make the structure and the mechanisms of the group more effective? What is the Indian attitude towards accepting new members to the BRICS?

President Putin has been the principal architect of the BRICS grouping. This is an important initiative in our multi-polar world. I am delighted that BRICS has become an important international forum for coordination and consultations on pressing economic and political issues of common interest. A number of new initiatives have been undertaken, including the establishment of a New Development Bank with initial subscribed capital of US$ 50 billion, and a contingency reserve arrangement of US$ 100 billion. These are significant measures to promote trade and investment in emerging markets. BRICS countries also meet on the margins of G-20 Summits to coordinate their position on issues being taken up in the Summit. Last month, on the sidelines of the G-20 Summit in St. Petersburg, we held an informal meeting of BRICS leaders.

I look forward to the next BRICS Summit in Brazil taking forward these discussions. As regards our membership, South Africa has recently become a member of BRICS, and there are currently no proposals for expanding the grouping further.

4. What is your assessment of the two major Russian-Indian projects in the field of military-technical cooperation - the 5th-generation fighter and the multi-purpose transport plane? When are the first models expected to be ready for test-flights and induction to the IAF?

We see the Fifth Generation Fight Aircraft and the Multi-Role Transport Aircraft development as two flagship projects in India – Russia military-technical cooperation. These projects symbolize the transformation of our defence cooperation from a buyer-seller relationship of the past to one that now also involves joint design, development and production of advanced defence platforms. These projects also symbolize the high degree of trust and synergy India and Russia enjoy in the defence sphere. I am happy that both projects are progressing well, and the preliminary design phase of the projects has been completed this year. Various complex and technical stages remain, including detailed design and development of prototypes, before series production can commence. We are keen that the entire process takes place as quickly as possible, so that these state-of-the-art aircraft can be inducted into the Indian Air Force.

5. Several agreements are expected to be signed during your visit to Moscow. Which of them will allow you to evaluate the visit as successful? What is the most important, so to say, “Number 1” field of modern Russian-Indian cooperation?

India and Russia enjoy a truly multi-dimensional relationship covering mutual political understanding, energy cooperation, defence ties, growing trade and investment, cultural and education linkages as well as warm friendship at the level of our people. I understand that agreements in many of these fields would be concluded during my visit to Moscow. However, it would not be appropriate to term a visit or a Summit as successful based on the signing of an agreement, or even attempt to categorize them inter-se. I believe all the documents that we sign are important and contribute to the strengthening of our special and privileged strategic partnership in various fields. What is most important is the commonality of approaches to international issues between India and Russia, and the mutual friendship and trust that we enjoy, which permits us to undertake joint cooperation ventures in all fields.

6. Last year Indian officials mentioned Russia among the countries that were supposed to be granted simplified procedure of getting a tourist visa on arrival. When can Russians expect this decision to be approved?

We are keen that Russian citizens face no impediments in their travel to India. India has already implemented a fairly liberal visa regime for Russian tourists and business travelers. In December 2010, the two countries signed an Inter-Governmental Agreement on simplification of requirements for mutual travel by certain categories of citizens of the two countries, including tourists. I am delighted that the number of tourist visas issued by us in Russia grew by 22% last year, and has increased by 55% during the first 9 months of this year. I hope this trend continues in the future. As regards the proposal of visa on arrival for Russian citizens, no decision has been taken as yet.

7. According to the Road map on nuclear cooperation signed by India and Russia several years ago both sides expressed the intention to construct up to 14-16 nuclear power reactors in India. The first one is already in the final commissioning stage at Kudankulam NPP. The second one will be completed soon. But the negotiations on commercial contracts for the Blocks 3 and 4 stalled. Are the plans for the rest 12-14 NP Blocks still valid? For four years now India has been promising to name another site for a nuclear project, apart from Kudankulam. When will it happen at last?

Civil nuclear cooperation is an important area of our bilateral partnership with Russia. We deeply appreciate Russian assistance in development of nuclear energy in India when others had shunned nuclear commerce with us. I am pleased that Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant Unit 1 achieved criticality in July this year and should begin to provide electricity to the grid soon. Kudankulam Unit 2 is in an advanced stage of construction. Indian and Russian companies have been holding negotiations on finalizing arrangements for Kudankulam units 3 and 4, and I am confident that these contracts would be finalized shortly. India remains interested in expanding nuclear power production in cooperation with Russia, and is committed to the full implementation of the Roadmap signed during the visit of President Putin to India in March 2010. We have already designated Haripur in West Bengal as an additional site to Kudankulam for constructing nuclear power plants in cooperation with Russia. We have also assured our Russian friends that an alternate site would be allocated, in case Haripur is not found feasible. I am confident that cooperation in nuclear energy production between our two countries will continue to deepen.

8. Russian-Indian trade is supposed to touch the target of $20 bln by 2015. Do you feel this plan is realistic? What should be done to overcome the existing obstacles and accelerate the growth of bilateral trade up to the existing potential? Are there any novel prospective projects that will push forward our economic cooperation, like for example the proposal of the ONGC for the construction of India-Russia oil pipeline?

India-Russia trade grew from US$ 8.85 billion in 2011 to US$11.04 billion in 2012, representing a growth of nearly 25%. If this pace is maintained, our trade could cross US$ 20 billion in 2015. While we face the challenge of a difficult global economic environment, I am optimistic about the prospects for our trade and investment relations. We are encouraging greater and more active business-to-business relations, including through the India-Russia CEO's Council and the India-Russia Trade and Investment Forum. Our Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation has placed high priority on expanding economic relations. We would like better flow of information about each other's business capabilities, achievements and opportunities. We are keen to enhance mutual investments in areas such as chemicals, pharmaceuticals, automobiles, telecommunications, infrastructure, fertilizers and energy. There is continuous effort to identify new areas of economic cooperation. The hydrocarbon sector is an area of priority. We are looking to enhancing our participation in the Russian oil and gas sector. We are examining the feasibility of a proposal for direct surface transportation of hydrocarbons from Russia to India. We have also proposed a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement between India and the Customs Union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia, which we hope would be initiated soon.

9. The intensity of the Russian-Indian cultural ties is still lagging far behind bilateral contacts in defence and other fields. Can we expect any positive breakthrough in this regard, especially to facilitate the comeback of Bollywood films to the Russian screens? Do you personally like Russian cinema and literature? Could you name your favorite Russian books and movies?

India-Russia cultural ties are based on a strong foundation of mutual understanding, respect, affinity and appreciation for each other's arts, culture, music, dance and cinema. Last December, we signed a Cultural Exchange Programme for 2013-15. Between September and December 2013, we are holding a Festival of Indian Culture in Russia, involving performances by 6 troupes in 10 cities across Russia. We have an active Jawaharlal Nehru Cultural Centre in Moscow and there are similar Russian cultural centres in India. We also hope that India movies would become more accessible in Russian theatres.

Russian literature is well-known and has been very popular in India. Russian authors such as Fyodor Dostoevsky, Lev Tolstoy, Anton Chekhov, Ivan Turgenev and Mikhail Lermontov are widely read in India. Russian movies such as "Burnt by the Sun", "Moscow Does Not Believe in Tears" and "Anna Karenina" have won acclaim in India and globally.

10. The unique family of the Roerichs is a spiritual bridge between Russia and India. Their Kullu museum is a monument of world importance. The Russians have time and again called on your government to take the IRMT under its wing. Can we expect the Central authorities to be more active in protecting the heritage of the Roerich family and taking part in the development of the Memorial Trust?

The heritage of the Roerichs in India is a valuable joint legacy and we will continue to take all necessary steps to see that it is properly cared for and developed.

540. Prime Minister's Statement to the Media following the 14th India-Russia Annual Summit.

Moscow, October 21, 2013.

Your Excellency President Vladimir Putin, Distinguished Representatives of the Media.

I am very pleased to be back here in the historic and vibrant city of Moscow for the fourteenth bilateral Annual Summit.

At the outset, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to President Putin for his contribution in giving new direction and content to India-Russia relations as also for starting this very useful practice of Annual Summits between our two countries.

The depth, diversity and dynamism of our cooperation testifies to the fact that ours is truly a Special and Privileged Strategic Partnership. We also have a high degree of convergence on global developments and we collaborate constructively in international forums.

Our discussions today were characterised by the warmth, goodwill and trust that permeate all aspects of our partnership. President Putin and I agreed that our strategic partnership remains a matter of the highest priority for our two nations, based on our shared belief in the enduring value of this relationship, both for our mutual benefit and as a factor for global peace and stability.

We expressed satisfaction with the progress in our bilateral cooperation, including in defence, energy, high-technology trade, investment, space, science, education, culture and tourism. We noted that despite the fragile global economic environment, our bilateral trade grew by nearly 25% last year to reach 11 billion US dollars. We resolved to promote investments and facilitate closer cooperation in a number of areas with great potential, such as oil and gas, energy, information technology, telecommunications, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, fertilizers, and mining. I also sought President Putin's support for the launch of negotiations on a Free Trade Agreement with the Customs Union of Russia, Kazakhstan and Belarus.

The Kudankulam nuclear power project is an important symbol of our strategic partnership. We look forward to commercial power production from Unit 1 very shortly, and the completion of work on Unit 2 next year. I conveyed to President Putin our commitment to fully implement the road map on civil nuclear cooperation that was signed during his visit to India in 2010. We have directed our officials to resolve all outstanding issues at the earliest.

Our defence cooperation continues to be strong, and we expect that Russia will remain a key defence partner for India as we move into a stage of joint design, development, and production of key defence platforms.

We exchanged views on several major regional and global issues. India welcomes the joint Russia-US framework for the elimination of Syria's chemical weapons and I thanked President Putin for his personal efforts towards securing a peaceful political settlement to the Syrian conflict. India has a direct interest in peace and stability in the entire West Asian region. We also agreed on the need for a diplomatic solution to the Iranian nuclear issue and expressed hope for progress in the ongoing discussions with Iran.

India and Russia share similar perspectives on developments in our extended neighbourhood. Terrorism, extremism and drug trafficking emanating from this area endanger security and stability in our region and beyond. We have agreed to intensify our coordination and cooperation for promoting security and development in the region. We also emphasised our shared interest in a peaceful and stable transition in Afghanistan next year.

I congratulated President Putin on the successful conduct of the St. Petersburg G-20 Summit. Our two countries will continue to work closely together at various multilateral platforms, including the BRICS, the G-20, the East Asia Summit, and the United Nations.

Our people-to-people contacts remain strong. Between September and December 2013, ten Russian cities will host a festival of Indian culture. I believe that such activities will further cement the strong ties between our people.

The extraordinary history of our relationship and the warmth and goodwill between our peoples gives me great confidence that we will successfully exploit our growing convergence of interests and expanding opportunities for cooperation and take our strategic partnership to even greater heights. I thank President Putin for a very successful Summit.

Thank You

541. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary and India's Ambassador to Russia on Prime Minister's visit to Russia.

Moscow, October 21, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends and thank you very much for being here despite all the hectic activities you had all through the day.

I have asked Foreign Secretary to give you a flavour of what has happened. You have a lot of documentation with you. So, she will just speak to you about what were the main issues, etc.

We also have with her Ambassador Ajai Malhotra in case you have anything specific on Indo-Russian bilateral relations which require some historical background information that you want. Further to his right is Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (Eurasia). So, we have here with us everybody who has worked on this for the last few months. Without much ado I will request Foreign Secretary to make her opening remarks, and then the floor is all yours.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Good evening friends. You already have a lot of documentation. So, I thought I would just give you a bit of a flavour of how the meetings went today.

As you know, first there was a speech that the Prime Minister made. He received Honourary Doctorate from the Moscow State Institute of International Relations. He was very warmly received, given standing ovation. He gave a very beautiful speech, very warm, very emotional in terms of tracing the history of relations between our two countries over the past six decades. You have seen the speech. He talks about Russia having stood by India at moments of great international challenge, when our own resources were limited and our friends were few.

I think this thread of historical continuity is something that has run through the meetings today including in the present that President Putin gave to our Prime Minister, which is a very interesting present on which I will ask the Ambassador to come in when I have finished my opening remarks.

So, after he got this Honourary Doctorate and he made this speech, we had our meeting. It was first in a restricted format where we discussed all the main issues between India and Russia; and then we had it in a delegation-level format. This went on for close to four hours. So, you can imagine it covered the entire spectrum of issues on which India and Russia have very close cooperation.

In many ways our relationship with Russia is truly a strategic partnership. It covers very critical areas. It covers critical areas of civil nuclear energy, defence, space, then you have hydrocarbons, economic and a very close identity of views, close congruence, let me use the word congruence, of views on various political issues in various regions of the world, very friendly atmosphere, very constructive.

The Prime Minister has met President Putin twice already this year. This is his 10th summit with Russia and, as I said in my earlier briefing, fifth time he has come to Moscow.

On the nuclear issue, it is our expectation that Kudankulam-1 will be connected to the grid tonight, three hundred megawatts of power. Kudankulam-2 we hope will be operational next year. On Kudankulam-3 and 4 there are legal issues and both the leaders have asked the experts to deal with these.

On defence, there is satisfaction at all that is happening. It has been a very important year, significant year. We finally have the INS Vikramaditya which has completed its sea trials. It is going to be arriving in India. And the extent of cooperation over there, as a matter of fact when we were having the briefing they said that the people who had worked on it in Russia had such a high degree of pride in the work that they had done that they were reluctant to let it go. So, that was interesting. You do not have this kind of partnership with every country. Between Russia and India it is really quite special.

You have already had delivery of one of the frigates. And then you have the fifth generation fighter aircraft, the multirole transport aircraft. And it is a relationship that is slowly but surely transforming from a buyer-seller relationship to co-design, co-development and co-production. And that is of course a very good sign, including on helicopters.

On hydrocarbons, we are cooperating in many parts of Russia. There is the OVL, Sakhalin, Arctic, there is Imperial Energy, Tomsk. We are even thinking in terms of a pipeline that will connect ultimately from Russia to India. This might well be some years in the future but still we have a vision. And I think that it is important to have something that you work towards with your trusted strategic partners. And something like this when implemented will be truly transformational.

On the economic side, you have the CEO's Council second meeting today in the morning. The CEOs also meet the Prime Minister later in the evening. You must be aware that in a very adverse economic environment when our bilateral trade with many of our key partners has gone down, with Russia it has actually increased by 25 per cent, which is saying a lot.

Tourism is up. Apparently tourist figures are going to be up by 70 per cent this year. And the CEOs who met PM were very gung-ho about potential, it is very favourable economic environment, about the prospects for investment and trade, pharmaceuticals, IT, fertilisers, medicine. So, all that is going well.

On the political front we discussed Syria. We expressed our appreciation of Russia's role, and Russia welcomed the possibility of India's participation in Geneva-2. You would have seen the Joint Statement, some very hefty paragraphs on counterterrorism. It shows you the level of trust we have in each other.

We discussed Afghanistan. We are discussing Afghanistan with them at various levels in terms of the drawdown that is going to happen in 2014 and how to prevent the effects of the terrorism from spilling over.

We cooperate very closely in multilateral fora - in the UN, G20, BRICS, SCO. All this was appreciated. And I think that President Putin and like old friends now, they have been dealing with each other for ten years, and that came through very strongly in the course of the meetings today.

That is what I have to say. Would you like to add about that interesting bit of what the President presented to the Prime Minister that goes back to the history between our two nations, about 110 years back?

Indian Ambassador to Russia (Shri Ajai Malhotra): Yes, thank you.

As the Foreign Secretary very correctly pointed out, I think that our Prime Minister and President Putin go back a long way. It is truly like two old friends meeting. I think today he made a very special gesture in giving beyond the normal protocol a gift to our Prime Minister. Even the Protocol was not aware of it. But he had personally identified and brought together these two, three little items.

First of all, one was an art work in the sense that it was an art print really of the then Tsarevich, the future Nicholas-II, when he was still the Prince. He had visited India in December 1890 - January 1891. He spent two months in India. He visited the 30 largest cities of India including Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Delhi going up to Shimla, Banaras, etc. So, there was a work of art showing him with one of the Maharajas whom he had met.

I should tell you that he was quite friendly with the Maharajas including those in the Punjab. For example, the Maharaja of Kapurthala, the Maharaja of Patiala, these were all friends with the Russian royalty. So, this was an art work showing the then Tsarevich and his visit to India.

Along with it was a map of India. The Czars in fact from the 16th century onwards were great collectors of all sorts of museum artefacts and museum material. If you go to St. Petersburg and even here you will find very fine and old collections of works from India, either ethnographic or museum material including books in Russian of people who visited India and came back. So, on the basis of the information they collected, they had a map of India. So, the other part was a map of India.

Q: How old is that map?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: It would be from, as I said, between 1891 and 1900.

And while giving it he also recalled the history. If you know, we talk of our relations starting from 1947 when we established diplomatic relations with Russia four months before India became independent, but actually the relationship goes way way back. Even in terms of diplomacy, the first Russian Consulate General opened in Bombay in the year 1900. President Putin mentioned this also. This is all very interesting because in the earlier Soviet period we used to kind of black out memory of the contacts during the Czar's period and earlier.

If I can just digress for a minute, in fact the oldest part of our relationship goes back to 1469 when the famous traveller from Tver...(Inaudible)...visited India. He came almost 30 years before Vasco da Gama came here. He wrote a book about it. That is why we know about it. There were travellers coming even earlier. Anyway, there were big communities of Indians. We had a community of 200 Indians living in Astrakhan who were there from the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries.

In addition, as an example of this, President Putin gave also a coin from the period of our Mughals because there was trade between India and the Mughals. As I said, the Indian community in Astrakhan even now is well remembered and was there for a good 300 years. There were about 200 Indian merchants there. So, these were the three of the gifts that he gave.

Foreign Secretary: I think he also talked about the Russian Consulate that was set up.

Indian Ambassador to Russia: I could give you more information but it lessens the interest.

Foreign Secretary: The Russian Consulate that was set up in Mumbai, he said that they had a little bit of trouble in setting up the Consulate, they were not getting the necessary approvals.

Indian Ambassador to Russia: To give you very briefly the background, in 1857 was what we call our First War of Independence or the British would call the Sepoy Mutiny. The first application for opening a diplomatic mission in India was made by the Russian foreign office by the Czars in 1858. And the British wanted to keep it off because they did not want this kind of contact between Russia and India. It was a great game as it is well-known. Otherwise,...(Inaudible)...read about that in history ...(Inaudible)... They tried very hard when the Tsarevich was coming saying, look, the son of the Czar is coming, he is going to go around here, you must announce to open.

But even then they did not. Then as a result of that visit in 1891, they opened it in the year 1900. Then in 1903 they moved them to Calcutta because Calcutta became the capital. Then they left them there because they moved in 1911 to Delhi. But the permission remains for them to be in Calcutta. Basically the British were trying to make it a little difficult for them because they did not want this kind of contacts. But in many senses, whether you look at academic interaction, I was telling the Foreign Secretary, in terms of universities teaching Sanskrit in the middle of the 19th century, we had three Russian universities which taught Sanskrit and had Professors of Sanskrit.

This is just to give you an idea. There are a lot of strong linkages that go back a long time ago which now are becoming a little more open and spoken about. I think President Putin's giving these gifts also was recognition of that that this is also a part of our history and we need to acknowledge it. But it was very touching that he should think of these things, that he should study it himself and give them and explain to Prime Minister personally what these gifts meant.

Official Spokesperson: The floor is now open for any questions you may have.

Q: You mentioned something about helicopters co-development. This is the first time one has heard about it. Can you elaborate on that?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: I can mention that last year in December the Sun Group had tied up with Russian Helicopters and an agreement that was signed last December for doing the spares and manufacture of both Kamov and Mi helicopters.

Q: Civil transport?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: These are civilian. Defence we are already doing. HAL was set up with Russian assistance, let us not forget that, and has been doing it for a long time. The Mi-17V-5s that we use are all really either bought from here or assembled up here. And these were the ones that really were used including just now when we had problems in Odisha and Uttarakhand. The ones that really helped us out were the Russian helicopters which were delivered against last year's contract.

Q: This is private thing?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: Yes, this is private sector.

Q: Could you tell us something, Foreign Secretary, about the discussions on Iran, what was actually said?

Foreign Secretary: We discussed the situation relating to the issue of nuclear energy, and we were both agreed that Iran has a right to civilian nuclear energy, and that whatever had to be decided really had to be decided through dialogue between all the concerned parties.

Q: While discussing the issue of combating terrorism and punishing the guilty, was there any mention of Pakistan? It concerns India most.

Foreign Secretary: We discussed issues relating to the region. In this context, yes, the issue of Pakistan did come up and the issue of terrorism did come up.

Q: Why has there been no major step forward in energy, the nuclear plant in Tamil Nadu? There is no new defence agreement. In that sense there is no new step forward, as you say. I do not want to use that word but it looks more like a very smooth, cordial but routine visit. Why is it so?

Foreign Secretary: Not at all. I would not agree with that. There has been such steady and good progression. There are many issues that are under discussion, and there are many issues that have been brought to fruition. The very fact that you have Kudankulam-1 being connected to the grid today and Kudankulam-2 due to go on stream next year, discussions ongoing, and so much that is happening in the defence field; you remember how long we have been talking about INS Vikramaditya, the very fact that it is complete Question: What about the announcement?

Foreign Secretary: These are all works in progress and I think each summit takes us a little closer and starts us off on new initiatives as well. So, this is all ongoing.

Ajai, would you like to add something to that?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: What I could add is really if you see, as Foreign Secretary has said, these are done in phases. One will come on line, you will be linked to the grid hopefully by midnight tonight, as the President said within hours. Any minute it should be happening. Two will take a little more time. You have probably till July, August next year when it would be done and then it could be linked to the grid. Three and Four are also very much on.

As you know, we have our roadmap which we agreed to in the year 2010, and that has been reaffirmed publicly by our hon. Prime Minister and by President Putin in the statements they made to the media. So, this is going on. There we are down to a word or two really and our lawyers are just trying to work it out so that we can move ahead on 3 and 4. But in any case, you have enough time. It is not as if it has to be done now because you will only start on that when you finish off number 2.

What is important to note is that we have said that we are going ahead and that that roadmap will be implemented, which means even we will be looking beyond 3 and 4. So, I think that is an important point to make, including perhaps even other sites. So, I must say at this moment nothing demands that if you have not worked it out to everyone's satisfaction. But even as we speak, discussions are going on. I think it is a question of a little bit of time.

Foreign Secretary: Let me add to that. There is an agreement between GAIL and Gazprom to supply 2.5 million tonnes of gas each year for 20 years. And this might go up, it might be one million tonnes extra also some years down the line. And the very fact that you are setting up a Joint Study Group to look at the prospects of a gas pipeline between Russia and India, these are visionary projects. So, you cannot say nothing new is going on. Something is always coming up.

Indian Ambassador to Russia: If I may supplement on oil and gas, I think oil and gas is a very important area of our cooperation. OVL's largest investments abroad are in Russia. Let us get that story right. In Salkhalin-1 2.5 billion dollars we have put in. We have invested 2.1 billion dollars in Imperial Energy, and after that another 480 million dollars. So, that makes it 2.58 billion. If you total the two together, it comes to a little over 5.1 billion dollars India has already invested in Russia.

The investment we have done in Sakhalin-1 has been a grand success. The investment we have done in Tomsk is now on the way to being one because they have changed the mineral extraction tax. They have dropped that. That earlier used to be a 24 per cent tax which has been dropped for all of Western Siberia. As a result, the type oil reserve in Tomsk is now available for proper exploitation.

And we have now identified a technology partner who will help us exploit that and I think you will find a huge...(Inaudible)... what was a situation when we just about had our head above the water would be now a situation where there would be fairly significant returns from our ownership of Imperial Energy.

I shall point out that this is the only company anywhere in the world where OVL owns 100 per cent. It has about 900 employees including about 12 Indians in the town of Tomsk. And this is the biggest investment in that area. So, these are important things. 5.1 billion dollars of Indian investment in oil and gas is up here. Let me add that we are looking for more opportunities. We are looking at Novatech, we are looking at cooperation with the Rosneft in terms of investment, and we hope one of these at least should be able to come through. Managing Director of OVL is in town and has some meetings today. I think you will hear many more indicators of a very positive nature on oil and gas cooperation in the coming months if not weeks.

Q: Madam, you mentioned that there is some 'pretty hefty paragraphs on combating terrorism'. Given the high degree of shared perceptions on drawdown in Afghanistan, probably...(Inaudible)...blow back from that. Are there any ideas about how to frame a strategy or how to share this, maybe bring in other nations in the region so that it will become an effective sort of bloc or an effective voice in ensuring that an adverse result does not an outcome does not happen in Afghanistan?

Foreign Secretary: The first step is always consultations. And this is something that we are doing with our strategic partners. It is also something that is being discussed within the framework of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. So, you discuss with each other, you discuss what your perceptions are, you discuss what the challenges are, and then we take it from there as it goes.

You cannot already begin to talk in terms of hypothetical situations even before they arise. But you are in close touch and every time that you have a chance and opportunity, you discuss and exchange ideas. For instance we are going to have on the 10th of November a RIC meeting. So, this would be one of the issues that is discussed. So, amongst all the ongoing issues, you keep having consultations. That is basically to my mind what strategic partnerships are about.

Q: My question is to the Ambassador. On Kudankulam 3 and 4 that it is down to just one or two words. I just wanted to ...

Indian Ambassador to Russia: But these are important words.

Question: Yes, obviously, you are on record. I just wanted to understand from you, do we safely conclude that India's liability law is no longer an issue with the Russians or the concerns which the Russians had on it have been adequately addressed, and what we are essentially doing are dotting the i's and crossing the t's?

Indian Ambassador to Russia: I think this can be responded to only when it is actually concluded. Before that, anything would be really guessing. Let us wait till the deal is done. We will obviously let you know and the whole world know as soon as it is done. At this moment I do not think one would be correct in saying anything more.

Q: Madam Foreign Secretary, in the Joint Statement there is a huge chunk devoted to economic cooperation and investments and so on. It is quite extensive. And also on energy cooperation, there is this talk about setting up more reactors after the 3 and 4.

Foreign Secretary: Russia is one of our most important partners in the field of civil nuclear energy. Our cooperation with Russia goes back several years. And as part of our ongoing objective of meeting a greater proportion of our energy needs from nuclear energy, Russia would be a natural partner. So, it is in that context that you really have to see it.

Q: You said that there will be more reactors after 3 and 4. When will they be done?

Foreign Secretary: Let us see. Let us get the 3 and 4 done first. Then we will have more.

Q: This is going back to 'a word or two'. The fact that we have come down to a word or two, is that a development of the last two, three days or has that been the case for a much longer period?

Foreign Secretary: These are issues that are presently under negotiation, and I suggest we leave it that and we see how it turns out.

Q: You have mentioned of information technology and security. Is it...(Inaudible)... understand that cyber security, in the Joint Statement you mentioned that it is behind combating terrorism. So, any fresh thoughts after Snowden episode out here?

Foreign Secretary: Snowden did not figure in the discussions, that much I can tell you. Cyber security is something that we are all concerned about. And it is something on which we would like to interact with our strategic partners also. So, it is in that context.

Q: You said Snowden did not figure.

Foreign Secretary: Did not. emphasise 'not'.

Q: Madam, you spoke about nuclear cooperation. Any talk about cooperation on fast breeder technology because most of these kind of reactors are megawatt plus...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: Not in the course of today.

Indian Ambassador to Russia: Not today. In fact we do have a very robust dialogue which takes place at the technical level. So, this is in the context of research and development in nuclear technology. There is an ongoing dialogue but, as Foreign Secretary said, it is not part of today's discussions.

Official Spokesperson: With that we come to the end of this event.

Thank you

542. Joint Statement on the 14th India-Russia Annual Summit: Deepening the Strategic Partnership for Global Peace and Stability.

Moscow, October 21, 2013.

1. The Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, paid an official visit to the Russian Federation on 20-22 October 2013, at the invitation of the President of the Russian Federation H.E. Mr. Vladimir V. Putin. President of the Russian Federation, H.E. Mr. Vladimir V. Putin and Prime Minister of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh held talks in Moscow.
2. The President of the Russian Federation and the Prime Minister of India welcomed the continuing momentum of high-level bilateral contacts and intense dialogues that had taken place during the year, between the National Security Councils, the Foreign Offices and the various Ministries and Departments of the two countries. They discussed priority areas of bilateral cooperation and noted common positions on current international and regional issues. Both sides stressed their continued commitment to promote and strengthen in every possible way their special and privileged strategic partnership.
3. The sides noted a number of productive visits held this year at ministerial level to promote bilateral cooperation. These included the visits to Russia of H.E. Mr S Khurshid, External Affairs Minister (in April and October, 2013), H.E. Mr S K Shinde, Home Minister (in April, 2013), H.E. Mr A Sharma, Minister of Commerce & Industry (in April, June and September, 2013), and H.E. Mr P Chidambaram, Finance Minister (in July 2013).
4. The sides welcomed the enhanced bilateral parliamentary exchanges and particularly, the visit by Chairperson of the Federation Council of the Russian Federation Ms Valentina I. Matvienko to India in February, 2013.

Promoting trade and investment ties

5. The sides expressed satisfaction at the record level of bilateral trade of over US $ 11 billion reached in 2012.

6. The sides agreed that investment collaboration was an important component of economic cooperation, which could also help in increasing bilateral investment and trade. They welcomed the identification of priority investment projects on both sides as an outcome of the first meeting of the India-Russia Working Group on Priority Investment Projects. They noted the successful outcomes of the 2nd session of India-Russia Working Group on Modernization and Industrial Cooperation held in Moscow, where both sides acknowledged their mutual desire to further strengthen bilateral cooperation in areas like civil aviation; chemical and fertilizer industry; mining; and automobiles.
7. The sides welcomed increasing business interactions, as demonstrated by the successful traditional round table "Russia-India Business Dialogue" organized in the framework of the 17th Saint Petersburg International Economic Forum on June 20, 2013, and the seventh India-Russia Forum on Trade and Investment, also held in St. Petersburg, on September 20, 2013. They also welcomed the two meetings in 2013 of the reconstituted Chief Executive Officers Council, which was working out sectors and opportunities for greater business cooperation.
8. The sides underlined the significant potential for cooperation in such sectors as oil and gas, pharmaceutical and medical industry, infrastructure, mining, automobiles, fertilizers, aviation, as well as in modernization of industrial facilities located in the two countries.
9. The sides stressed the importance of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on trade, economic, scientific, technical and cultural cooperation (IGC) functioning as a key mechanism for developing bilateral interaction in the economic and investment fields. They noted the positive outcomes of the nineteenth session of the IGC held in Moscow on October 4, 2013.
10. The sides agreed to work towards the creation of a Joint Study Group for studying the possibility of signing a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and the Customs Union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and the Russian Federation. They noted that this matter was currently under the consideration of the Eurasian Economic Commission.

Energy cooperation

11. The sides reaffirmed their commitment to implement the Agreement between the Government of the Russian Federation and the Government of the Republic of India on the Enhancement of Cooperation in Oil and Gas Sector concluded on December 21, 2010.
12. The sides noted the importance of cooperation in order to organize long-term supplies of hydrocarbons to India from Russia, conducive to strengthening India's energy security and diversification of energy exports from Russia through LNG supplies to India. The sides expressed satisfaction with the dynamic development of cooperation between JSC Gazprom and Indian companies to organize long term supplies of LNG to India from the Gazprom Group portfolio.
13. Both sides also agreed to explore the possibilities of direct transportation of hydrocarbons from Russia to India through the land route. The sides agreed to set up a Joint Study Group in this regard.
14. The Indian side expressed OVL's interest in participating along with Russian companies in exploration for hydrocarbons in the Arctic region.
15. The sides welcomed the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding on Energy Efficiency between FSBO Russian Energy Agency of the Ministry of Energy of Russia and the Bureau of Energy Efficiency of India.
16. The sides noted with satisfaction the progress in regard to the commissioning of Unit-1 of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant and agreed to take necessary steps to expedite the completion of Unit-2. The sides also agreed to expeditiously finalise the General Framework Agreement and the Techno-Commercial Offer for Units- 3 & 4 of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant. The sides reaffirmed their commitment to the Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the Russian Federation on cooperation in the construction of additional nuclear power plant units at Kudankulam site as well as in the construction of Russian designed Nuclear Power Plants at new sites in the Republic of India, concluded on December 5, 2008; the Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the Russian Federation on Cooperation in the use of Atomic Energy for Peaceful Purposes and the Road Map for the Serial Construction of the Russian designed Nuclear Power Plants in the Republic of India, concluded on March 12, 2010.

17. The sides emphasized the need to facilitate cooperation among power sector companies of both the countries for modernization of existing power plants and construction of new power plants in India.
18. The sides expressed satisfaction with the signing of the Vladivostok Ministerial Declaration and Plan of Action on Regional Cooperation for Enhanced Energy Security and the Sustainable Use of Energy in Asia and the Pacific, 2014-18.

Cooperation in Science and Technology

19. The sides noted with satisfaction progress in various on-going scientific sectors, including cooperation in Basic Sciences under DST-RFBR program and the Integrated Long-Term Program (ILTP).
20. The sides welcomed the creation of new institutional mechanisms by the Ministry of Education and Science of the Russian Federation and the Ministry of Science and Technology of India. These mechanisms would support Indo-Russian R&D projects with potential for technology development and generation of new intellectual property. These projects would be in conformity with national priorities of both countries, as identified under 12th Five Year plan of India and the Federal Targeted Programme

“Research and Development in Priority Fields of Science and Technology Complex of Russia in 2014-2020”.

Education Sector Cooperation

21. The sides agreed to expedite finalization of the intergovernmental agreements on recognition of education documents and academic degrees in the general and the medical fields of study. They noted the constructive discussion in Moscow in October 2013 on the issue of medical degrees.

Cultural Cooperation

22. Both countries, possessing a rich cultural heritage and guided by the centuries-old traditions of friendship, agreed to make extensive use of each other's culture and arts, and the mutual lively interest in these. The sides expressed satisfaction at the ongoing implementation of the Cultural Exchange Program 2013-2015 between the Ministry of Culture of the Republic of India and the Ministry of Culture of the Russian Federation, signed on December 24, 2012. They favoured further cooperation in the field of culture and the arts, including interaction between the major museums of both the countries.
23. Both sides commended the high level of goodwill and mutual appreciation of culture at the people-to people level. They welcomed the increasing people-to-people contacts between the two countries, including the flow of tourists, which increased by over 20 percent in each of the past two years.
24. The sides appreciated the organisation of the Festival of Russian Culture in India in 2012 and the ongoing Festival of Indian Culture in Russia in 2013. They also agreed to continue holding regular Russian cultural festivals in India and Indian cultural festivals in Russia.

Inter-Regional Cooperation

25. The sides recalled the Agreement for Cooperation between States and Regions of India and Russia (2000) and expressed support for enhancing exchanges between regions of both countries. The leaders also encouraged city-to-city/sister-cities cooperation with a view to promote multifaceted engagement in economy, culture, health, education and public policy at a sub-regional level between the two countries.

Exploration of Outer Space

26. The sides expressed their commitment to further cooperation in space activities of mutual interest.
27. The sides supported cooperation between Russia and India within the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and agreed to advance it in a pragmatic and steady manner. In particular, they expressed mutual interest in coordinating actions with reference to the current endeavour of the Committee to work out guidelines related to ensuring the long-term sustainability of outer space activities.

Military and Technical Cooperation

28. The sides emphasized that the traditionally close military and technical cooperation between the two countries was a crucial element of the strategic partnership and reflected the high level of trust between the two states.
29. In the context of the 13th meeting of the Russian-Indian Inter-Governmental Commission on Military-Technical Cooperation scheduled in Moscow later this year, the sides commended regular bilateral contacts and military and technical cooperation, as well as the joint INDRA exercise conducted by the Armies of the two countries in October 2013. The sides emphasised the scope for enhancing service-to-service exchanges, training cooperation and regular exercises between their armed forces.
30. The sides welcomed the delivery of the Russian-built frigate Triakand to India in 2013, licensed production of Su-30MKI aircraft and T-90S tanks in India, as well as successful completion of the trials of the aircraft carrier Vikramaditya. The sides took note of the progress made in the field of joint design, development and production of high-technology military equipment and implementation of projects such as the construction of the fifth-generation fighter aircraft, multi-role transport aircraft and BrahMos supersonic missile. The sides agreed to enhance cooperation in the fields of rocket, missile and naval technologies and weapon systems.

Coordination on International and Regional Issues

31. The sides re-affirmed their desire to build a more stable, secure and fair system of international relations based on equal partnerships between states, the rule of international law and respect for the purposes and principles of the UN Charter. They agreed to continue interaction with a view to strengthening the central role of the UN in maintaining international peace and security and ensuring steady social and economic development. The sides welcomed the scope of their cooperation within the UN and agreed to further coordinate approaches on a broad range of international and regional issues.
32. Both sides reaffirmed the need for UN Security Council reform in order to make it more representative and effective in dealing with emerging challenges. They agreed that any expansion of the Security Council should reflect contemporary realities. In this regard, the Russian Federation reiterated its strong support to India for a permanent seat in a reformed UN Security Council.

Combating Terrorism

33. The sides recalled the Moscow Declaration between the Russian Federation and the Republic of India on International Terrorism signed on 6 November 2001 and reiterated that international terrorism is a threat to peace and security and a grave violation of human rights and a crime against humanity. Both sides affirmed the need to join efforts of all states to defeat terrorism. They condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and agreed that there should be no tolerance for sheltering, arming, training, or financing of terrorists.
34. In multi-ethnic and democratic societies such as India and the Russian Federation, terrorist acts perpetrated under misleading slogans are in reality attacks on the freedom and democratic values of our societies and are aimed at undermining the territorial integrity of our nations. Such acts may have international linkages extending across and beyond the borders. States that provide aid, abetment and shelter for such terrorist activities are themselves as guilty as the actual perpetrators of terrorism.

35. Both sides reaffirmed the obligation of all states to vanquish terrorism from their territories and areas under their control. They need to irreversibly shut down terrorist networks, organizations and infrastructure, and show tangible movement in investigating and bringing quickly to justice all those responsible for acts of terrorism.
36. Both countries further agreed that there cannot be ideological, religious, political, racial, ethnic, or any other justification to acts of terrorism. Incidents such as the Mumbai Terror Attacks or Beslan terrorist attack, which resulted in the death of numerous innocent civilians cannot be justified on any grounds.
37. The sides reaffirmed the UN's central role in combating international terrorism, and expressed their intention to make an active contribution to counter terrorism under the auspices of the UN. They also called for a speedy conclusion of the negotiations on the draft UN Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. The sides also agreed to continue to address these issues in the format of the bilateral Joint Working Group on Countering International Terrorism.

International Information Security

38. The sides expressed concern at the growing threat of the use of information and communication technologies for criminal and terrorist purposes, as well as for purposes that are inconsistent with the UN Charter. In this context the sides noted the need for adoption by the international community of the universal rules, norms and principles of responsible behaviour of states in the use of Information and Communication Technologies. They agreed to deepen their bilateral consultations and cooperation on global issues related to the use of Information and Communication Technologies. They also decided to accelerate consideration of the proposed intergovernmental agreement on cooperation in the field of international information security. The sides also stressed the necessity to observe the principle of non-interference in internal affairs as well as human rights in Internet, including the right to privacy, in accordance with respective domestic legislation.

Cooperation in the field of Disarmament and Non-proliferation

39. Russia and India consider as their common task preventing proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery means. They emphasized the importance of step-by-step progress in the field of disarmament with the participation of all stakeholders to uphold international peace, security and stability.
40. The sides welcomed the bilateral consultations on Arms Control and Non-Proliferation which were held in New Delhi in May this year and gave the opportunity to exchange views on a whole range of topical issues. They agreed to strengthen multilateral export control regimes as important components of the global non-proliferation regime. Russia took into positive consideration India's interest in full membership in MTCR and Wassenaar Arrangement. The Russian side reiterated readiness to assist and promote a discussion and positive decision in the Nuclear Suppliers Group on India's full membership in the NSG, and welcomed India's intention to seek full membership. India stressed its determination to actively contribute to the international efforts aimed at strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation regime.
41. While recognizing the unalienable right of all states to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes Russia and India stressed the need for countries to comply with their respective non-proliferation obligations. The sides advocate the central role of the IAEA, and in particular its safeguards system, in the international activities aimed at the usage of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in accordance with the requirements of the respective legally-binding safeguards obligations of states and the Statute of this organization.

42. Both sides support international efforts to ensure that outer space is used for peaceful purposes. Both legal instruments and appropriate and inclusive confidence-building measures can contribute to this end.

Enhancing Security Cooperation in Asia and the Asia Pacific

43. The sides noted that the role of the Asia-Pacific region in international affairs is on the rise and supported further regional integration and cooperation for sustainable global growth.
44. The sides agreed to closely interact in order to discuss the framework principles of strengthening security cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region, based on universally accepted principles and norms of international law, openness, transparency and equality. They agreed to play an active role in multilateral fora to encourage further dialogue on equal and undiminished security and developing mutually beneficial cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region, in accordance with the agreement achieved at the East Asia Summit (EAS) held on 9-10 October 2013 in Brunei Darussalam.
45. The sides consider the EAS a key forum for strategic dialogue between leaders of member states on pressing issues as to the political and economic cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region.
46. The sides agreed that the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) contributed significantly to ensuring peace and stability, economic development and prosperity in Eurasia. The Russian Federation commended India's active participation in the SCO as an observer state and reiterated its strong support for India's bid for full membership of the SCO.
47. The sides are committed to further intensifying political interactions between China, India, and Russia. In this context, they attach great significance to the next meeting of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the three states, which is to take place this November in New Delhi. The sides also see it as essential to continue consultations concerning regional security at the level of High Representatives of China, India, and Russia.

48. The sides noted the role of Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum (APEC) as an important mechanism aimed at creating favourable conditions for trade and investment cooperation and developing regional integration in the Asia-Pacific. Russia reaffirmed that India's potential membership in APEC would facilitate further development of a dialogue on addressing key issues of regional and global trade. Russia reiterated its support towards India's accession to APEC upon achievement of consensus within APEC on expansion of its membership.
49. The sides expressed committed to further strengthening the ASEAN Regional Forum, a key tool for practical cooperation in maintaining peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region, to increasing its contribution to the global effort to combat terrorism and cross-border crime, including in the field of ICTs. The sides voiced their intention to promote further development of multilateral military cooperation in the region, to coordinate measures and provide, on a mutual basis, support within the ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting Plus (ADMM-Plus format).
50. The sides reaffirmed their commitment to further advance, in order to ensure peace, stability and prosperity in the Asia-Pacific region, cooperation and coordination within the interstate associations existing in the region, including the Asia-Europe Meeting Forum, Conference on Interaction and Confidence-Building Measures in Asia, Asia Cooperation Dialogue.

Cooperation among BRICS countries

51. India and Russia appreciated the outcome of the Fifth BRICS Summit in Durban (held on March 27, 2013). They noted the increased role which BRICS played in the efforts of the international community aimed at bringing the world economy to the path of strong, sustainable and balanced growth. India and Russia stand for strengthening of BRICS as a mechanism for a strategic and ongoing coordination of the activities undertaken by the member states on a growing range of international political and economic issues.

52. The sides confirmed their full support for the eThekweni Action Plan adopted at the BRICS Summit in 2013 and expressed determination to contribute actively to its implementation.
53. India and Russia stressed the importance of developing all aspects of multilateral cooperation within BRICS as the most solid basis for further strengthening of diverse ties among its members. The countries support the projects for establishing the BRICS Development Bank and the Contingent Reserve Arrangement among BRICS states. The Indian side agreed to consider the Russian proposal to develop a Strategy of Multilateral Economic Cooperation of BRICS member states. The sides expressed confidence that the forthcoming BRICS summit in Brazil will help strengthen the role of BRICS on the international stage.

Situation in Syria

54. The sides expressed the strong belief that the crisis in Syria should not be resolved by force, and could be settled only through political means. Both countries expressed support for the early convening of an "International Conference on Syria" (Geneva-II), to take forward the Geneva-I Communiqué adopted in June 2012, which will bring all parties to the conflict to the negotiating table. The Indian side commended Russia's role in working towards a diplomatic solution to the Syrian conflict. The Russian side stated that it would welcome India's participation in Geneva-II. Russia and India support the process of placing Syria's chemical weapons under international control and their destruction in accordance with the decision of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) of 27 September 2013 and the provisions of the Chemical Weapons Convention; the UN Security Council Resolution of 2118 is pertinent in this regard.

Stabilization of the Situation in Afghanistan

55. The sides approved the efforts made by the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan to begin an Afghan-led dialogue on reconciliation with the armed opposition forces, provided that these groups should respect the principles adopted by the international community, namely, to recognise the Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, to renounce violence and to sever ties with Al-Qaeda and other terrorist organizations. The sides considered it necessary to extend the sanctions regime introduced by the UN Security Council against the Taliban as one of the most important tools for fighting terrorism.

56. The sides were pleased to note that there was a growing understanding in the world of the essential role played by the states neighbouring the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan as well as by the countries and organizations in the region. The sides strongly called for the development and improvement of interaction within the existing frameworks of regional cooperation, such as the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO), the Collective Security Treaty Organization (CSTO), the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) and dialogue within RIC and the Istanbul Process.
57. The sides recognized terrorism as the major threat to Afghanistan's security and stability that jeopardizes peace in the region and in the whole world. Therefore they stressed the regional aspects of terrorism and extremism, emphasizing the necessity of joint and coordinated efforts and cooperation between the states of the region, especially taking into account the expected drawdown of international forces in 2014, in order to combat terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including elimination of terrorist safe havens and cutting off financial support to terrorism.
58. The sides expressed concern about the scale of illicit drug production in Afghanistan and underlined that revenue from drug trafficking were one of the main sources of financing terrorist organizations. The sides agreed to continue taking effective measures to combat illicit drug trafficking of Afghan origin and to focus on permanent and active support for the Paris Pact initiative.

Iranian Nuclear Program

59. The sides expressed concern about the situation around Iran and its nuclear program. They confirmed their support for a comprehensive and permanent settlement of this situation, through political and diplomatic means, by establishing a dialogue. They recognize Iran's right to continue using nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in accordance with its international obligations. The sides urged Iran to comply with the provisions of the corresponding resolutions of the UN Security Council and cooperate with the IAEA.

Multilateral Economic Cooperation and Financial Reforms

60. The sides stated that there were still numerous challenges relating to the growth of the world economy. They considered it necessary to boost multilateral cooperation in order to tackle these. They attach particular importance to the G20 as the primary forum for international economic cooperation. India highly appreciated the Russian G20 Presidency as well as the outcomes of the Saint Petersburg G20 Summit. They stressed that the continuous implementation of its recommendations with respect to the decisions aimed at speeding up world economic growth, midterm fiscal consolidation, higher employment, liberalization of trade and promoting development will facilitate the solution of the key global economic issues. Russia expressed gratitude to India for the significant contribution towards success of the Saint Petersburg Summit.
61. Russia and India stressed the necessity to create a more representative and legitimate international financial architecture. They agreed that the primary task in this connection was to complete the Fifteenth General Review of IMF Quotas not later than in January 2014.
62. The two sides stressed that the G20 policy coordination process needs to pay more attention to monetary policy in the reserve country currencies in order to protect the international financial system and to prevent destabilization of financial markets.

Environment and sustainable development

63. The sides welcomed the outcome of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development “Rio+20” (held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, on June 20-22, 2012) and stated that it was necessary to work consistently to implement its decisions. They attached great importance to addressing purposefully the global climate change problem and stressed the importance of boosting international efforts aimed at drafting a new comprehensive and balanced climate change agreement by 2015.
64. The India- Russia Annual Summit was held in an atmosphere of traditional friendship and mutual understanding. The Prime Minister of the Republic of India expressed gratitude to the leaders of the Russian Federation for the hospitality and warm welcome in Moscow and invited the President of the Russian Federation to India. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

543. Address by Prime Minister at the Moscow State Institute of International Relations.*Moscow, October 21, 2013.

Acting Rector Professor Viktor Kirilov,

Distinguished Faculty Members of the Faculty

Dear Students and Guests,

I consider it a matter of great honour that the Moscow State Institute of International Relations has decided to confer an Honorary Doctorate on me. I am conscious of the rich history of this great institution and its enormous contribution to Russian and international diplomacy. Your gesture today is yet another indication of the abiding affection of the Russian people for India and the strength of relations between our two countries, which I have experienced personally in many decades of public life.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Relations between India and Russia are built on abiding links of commerce and culture, which go back many centuries. In the 20th century, which was an era of momentous change for both our countries, our political leaders, intellectuals and artists engaged with each other and influenced each other's thoughts and ideas. One only has to glance at the rich correspondence between Leo Tolstoy and Mahatma Gandhi to get a sense of how formative the thinking of Tolstoy was for Gandhiji's practice of non-violence.

Following India's independence and consistently since then, India and Russia have built a sound relationship befitting the challenges of the modern age. India has benefited enormously from Russian support in every aspect of India's national development efforts – be it the development of heavy industry, the power sector, our space programme or in meeting our defence needs. Most importantly, Russia has stood by India at moments of great international challenge, when our own resources were limited and our friends were few. Beyond all the assistance that we have received, it is this last fact that Indians will never forget. And it is for these reasons that the people of India regard Russian friendship and support as something particularly precious. It is for these same reasons, ladies and gentlemen that, over the past six decades, no country has had closer relations with India and no country inspires more admiration, trust and confidence among the people of India than Russia.

At the beginning of the last decade of the last century, both our countries went through a difficult period of political and economic change. While Russia showed great resilience and resolve in regaining its place in the world, India opened itself and became more deeply integrated with the world economy. Neither of us allowed these changes to derail the course of our relationship. Indeed, by the dawn of the new century, India and Russia had not only restored the direction and regained the momentum of their relationship, but had also given it a new character. This was in recognition of the enduring values of this relationship, which enjoys complete political consensus and enormous public goodwill and support in India.

This distinguished audience would be more than aware of the substance of the cooperation between India and Russia. Russia was the first country with which, in 2000, India signed a Declaration of Strategic Partnership and began the process of annual summits. Our defence relationship with Russia is unmatched by any other relationship. The soon to be commissioned aircraft carrier INS Vikramaditya, the nuclear submarine INS Chakra leased to us by Russia and the joint development of the fifth generation fighter aircraft and the Brahmos Cruise Missile are examples of the scale and sophistication of our collaboration.

Russia offered us partnership in nuclear energy when the world still shunned nuclear commerce with us. I take particular joy in informing this august audience that the first unit of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant, built with Russian assistance, went critical in July this year and that the second one should be commissioned early next year. The Indian oil company ONGC's largest overseas presence is in Russia. Our largest science and technology cooperation programme is also with Russia.

Even this brief overview of the fruits of our cooperation should be enough to justify fully the description of our relationship as a special and privileged strategic partnership. Observers may well ask how we can take this relationship to greater heights. I am convinced that while the strength and the intensity of our relationship will remain undiminished, it must also adapt itself to the changing times so that we can address the full range of current opportunities and challenges. I am also sure that, as in the past, we shall face these challenges together.

At the bilateral level, while Russia will remain an indispensable partner for our defence needs, our future defence partnership must be increasingly based on technology transfer, joint ventures and co-development and co-production. We also see Russia as a key partner for our energy security. We have an ambitious long-term plan of cooperation in nuclear energy. The programme of cooperation in hydrocarbons that we are drawing up will further intensify our partnership in oil and gas and renewable energy sources.

The sustained expansion of our trade and investment flows has added a new dimension to the relationship. We should harness the full potential of our two economies to impart even greater depth and dynamism to it. The unprecedented level of growth in tourism between India and Russia not only brings us economic benefits, but also deepens the contact between our peoples.

At the regional and global level, India and Russia share many equities. While both of us have developed broad-based and diversified patterns of relationships, one of the fundamental foundations of India's foreign policy is our partnership with Russia. We are both impacted by developments in our common neighbourhood, making our strategic partnership even more relevant than ever before. I see four areas as being of particular importance in this context.

Firstly, developments in Central and South-Central Asia are of relevance to the security of both Russia and India. As India revitalizes its historic links with Central Asia, we look forward to working more closely with Russia in the region. Our cooperation can play an important role in advancing peace, stability and economic development in Afghanistan. It can be equally effective in combating the shared challenges of extremism, terrorism and narco-trafficking. Coordination of our policies in this shared neighbourhood has served us both well and we should continue to pursue it more closely in the future.

Secondly, peace and stability in the Gulf and West Asia are in our shared interest. For reasons of proximity, security, energy supplies and the livelihood of more than six million Indians living in a region which is also a major destination of our exports, peace and stability in the region is particularly vital for India. We applaud President Putin's role in seeking a political settlement in Syria and welcome the framework agreement worked out by Russia and the United States for a time-bound elimination of chemical weapons in Syria. We also value the Russian contribution to efforts for a peaceful resolution of the equally important Iranian nuclear issue.

Thirdly, we regard Russia as an important partner in shaping an inclusive, cooperative and rule-based regional security architecture in the Asia Pacific region, which is the focus of India's Look East Policy.

Finally, as the world becomes increasingly multi-polar and emerging economies grow in strength, cooperation between Russia and India in multilateral forums, including the Group of 20 and BRICS, will assume greater importance. We have converging interests in non-proliferation, cyber security and space security. We also appreciate Russia's support for India's membership of international export control regimes and permanent membership of an UN Security Council.

From our perspective, a strong, secure and prosperous Russia, fulfilling its international responsibilities, is in the interest of India and the world as a whole. Equally, a strong and broad-based partnership between Russia and India will be of great benefit to our two countries and can be a force of stability and prosperity in Eurasia and beyond.

Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen,

Our shared interests, our growing opportunities for cooperation, the history of our relationship, our abiding comfort with each other and the warmth and goodwill between our people ensure that our strategic partnership will continue to grow in strength and relevance in this changing world. As I conclude, Ladies and Gentlemen let me take the opportunity to give credit where it is due and emphasize that this owes a great deal to the vision and leadership of President Vladimir Putin, whose personal commitment to the relationship has led us to seek new heights in our relations. Every visit to Russia reaffirms to me the abiding comfort and confidence that mark our relationship. Every handshake reveals the warmth of the ties between our two people. Together, they create an unmatched platform for the future. I am looking forward to my meeting with President Putin this afternoon as yet another opportunity to take our special and privileged strategic partnership to even greater heights.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Once again, I thank you and the members of this great institution for the honour you have done me today and for this, unique opportunity to share my thoughts with you.

Thank you

544. List of Bilateral Documents signed during 14th India-Russia Annual Summit.

October 21, 2013

S.No	Name of the Document	Details/Scope	Indian Signatory	Russian Signatory
1.	Treaty between the Republic of India and the Russian Federation on Transfer of Sentenced Persons	The Treaty shall facilitate the process of social rehabilitation of persons sentenced in the other country by providing them the opportunity to serve out their remaining sentences (under certain conditions) in their country of nationality. It is expected to boost consular cooperation between the two countries.	Smt. Sujatha Singh, Foreign Secretary	Mr. Alexander Kononov, Minister of Justice
2.	Memorandum of Understanding between the Bureau of Energy Efficiency of the Republic of India and Federal State Budget Organisation "Russian Energy Agency" of the Ministry of Energy of the Russian Federation in the Field of Energy Efficiency	The MoU shall enhance cooperation in the field of energy saving and energy efficiency, including through joint implementation of activities and projects by organisations/companies of both the countries. The forms of cooperation envisaged include exchange of best practices in smart grids, energy audits, energy efficient building designs, industrially efficient technologies, etc.	Shri Ajai Malhotra, Ambassador of India to Russian Federation	Mr. Kirill V. Gadzatsev, Deputy Director General, Russian Energy Agency
3.	Memorandum of Understanding in the field of Standardization and Conformity Assessment between Bureau of Indian Standards (BIS) [Republic of India] and Federal Agency on Technical Regulation and Metrology (GOST-R)	The objective of this MoU is to facilitate closer technical cooperation in the field of standardization through exchange of information, practices and expertise. It is expected to have beneficial effects for trade and commerce where standards/conformity assessments form an integral basis for transactions.	Shri Ajai Malhotra, Ambassador of India to Russian Federation	Mr. Gregory Alkin, Head, Federal Agency on Technical Regulation and Metrology (GOST-R)

4. Programme of Cooperation in the Fields of Science, Technology and Innovation between the Department of Science & Technology, Government of India and the Ministry of Education & Science, Government of Russian Federation for the period 2014-2017	The Programme aims to deepen cooperation in the field of innovation and S&T through implementation of Joint Programs and projects/exchanges involving educational, R&D and industrial institutions. The joint projects may also facilitate transfer of technology. The broad areas of cooperation include 'sunrise' sectors such as IT, nano-technology, environmental sciences and alternate energy. This Programme shall also reinforce the existing robust exchanges between the scientific institutions of the two sides.	Smt. Sujatha Singh, Foreign Secretary	Mr. Dmitry Livanov, Minister of Education and Science
5. Programme of Cooperation in the Area of Biotechnology between the Department of Biotechnology, Ministry of Science & Technology, Government of the Republic of India and the Ministry of Education and Science, Government of Russian Federation for the period 2014-2017	The Programme aims to broaden cooperation in the field of biotechnology and encourage industrial R&D & related investment flows. This is intended to be achieved through implementation of Joint Programs and projects/exchanges, etc.	Shri Ajai Malhotra, Ambassador of India to Russian Federation	Mr. Dmitry Livanov, Minister of Education and Science

545. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence regarding Commissioning of INS Vikramaditya in the Indian Navy.

New Delhi, November 16, 2013.

Marking a new high in India-Russia strategic cooperation, the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony today commissioned the completely refurbished 44,500 tonne carrier Admiral Gorshkov into the Indian Navy as INSVikramaditya at an impressive ceremony at sub zero temperature in the wind- swept Sevmash Shipyard in the beautiful city of Severodvinsk in Russia. Snow flakes kept falling as the ceremony was held.

Speaking at the event, Shri Antony said INS Vikramaditya would significantly enhance the reach and capability of the Indian Navy. He said, the country has a rich maritime history and the Indian Ocean has guided our fate over the centuries.

“India’s economic development is dependent on the seas and safeguarding the nation’s maritime interests is central to our national policy. Aircraft carriers have been part of the Indian Navy’s force structure since our independence and have effectively served the country over the past five decades or so. The induction of ‘Vikramaditya’ with its integral MiG29K fighters and Kamov-31 helicopters, not only reinforces this central policy, but also adds a new dimension to our Navy’s operational capabilities. The meaning of ‘Vikramaditya’, which literally translates into “Strong as the Sun” is complemented by the Ship’s motto –”Strike Far, Strike Sure”,hesaid.

Reflecting the mood at the ceremony, Shri Antony said, ‘the event realizes the vision of capability-based transformation of the Indian Navy that was conceived more than a decade ago’. Calling it a Red Letter Day in the history of India- Russia cooperation, Shri Antony said this relationship remains a matter of the highest priority for both nations for our mutual benefit and as a factor of global peace and stability.

“The successful culmination of Project 11430 truly symbolizes the time-tested Special and Privileged Strategic Partnership between our two great nations. The Project has propelled the strategic partnership between our nations to a new level. The relationship between our two countries based on mutual trust and belief has withstood the test of time and the result is for the entire world to see in the form of 'Vikramaditya'. As the ship sails into its home waters in the Indian Ocean Region, INS 'Vikramaditya' will be a befitting tribute to our long-standing relationship", he said.

Describing the Project 11430 as a unique one, Shri Antony said, it was a challenging task for both the Russian and the Indian sides and congratulated the entire team for converting the 'Dream Project' into a reality. "The transformation of INS 'Vikramaditya' is an engineering marvel, which has tested the professionalism, capability and perseverance of the Indian Navy and the Russian industry, especially the Sevmash Shipyard", he said and expressed confidence that all possible support would be extended by Russia to ensure that the ship serves India effectively and efficiently for the duration of its expected operational life cycle.

Speaking on the occasion, the Chief of Naval Staff Admiral DK Joshi said the INS Vikramaditya will bridge the time-gap that may come up between the INS Viraat and the Indigenously built aircraft carrier Vikrant. It will also help achieving our medium term goal of operating two aircraft carriers.

A large number of dignitaries including the Deputy Prime Minister of Russia Mr Dmitry Rogozin and Defence Minister Mr Shoigu, the Chief of Naval Staff Admiral DK Joshi, the Indian Ambassador to Russia Shri Ajay Malhotra, the Defence Secretary Shri RK Mathur, the DG Acquisition Shri SB Agnihotri were present on the occasion..

Mr Rogozin said INS Vikramaditya symbolises the close friendship between India and Russia and expressed confidence that it will grow in the coming years.

About INS Vikramaditya

INS Vikramaditya, the floating airfield has an overall length of about 284 meters and a maximum beam of about 60 meters, stretching as much as three football fields put together. Standing about 20 storeys tall from keel to the highest point, the sheer sight of this 44,500 tonne mega structure of steel is awe inspiring. The ship has a total of 22 decks.

With over 1,600 personnel on board, INS Vikramaditya is literally a 'Floating City'. With a capacity of over 8,000 tonnes of LSHSD, she is capable of operations up to a range of over 7,000 nautical miles or 13000kms.

To enable this 44,500 tonnes floating steel city to cut through the choppy seas with speeds of up to 30 knots, she is powered by 08 new generation steam boilers generating a total output power of 180,000 SHP. These boilers power four enormous propellers, each greater in diameter than twice the height of an average male. Such a four propeller - four shaft configuration is another first in the Indian Navy.

The power generation capacity onboard is about 18 megawatts enough to cater to the lighting requirement of a mini city. An extensive revamp of sensors including fitment of Long range Air Surveillance Radars, Advanced Electronic Warfare Suite makes the ship capable of maintaining a surveillance bubble of over 500 kms around the ship.

The ship has the ability to carry over 30 aircraft comprising an assortment of MiG 29K/Sea Harrier, Kamov 31, Kamov 28, Sea King, ALH-Dhruv and Chetak helicopters. The MiG 29K swing role fighter is the main offensive platform and provides a quantum jump for the Indian Navy's maritime strike capability. These fourth generation air superiority fighters provide a significant fillip for the Indian Navy with a range of over 700 nm and an array of weapons including anti-ship missiles, Beyond Visual Range air-to-air missiles, guided bombs and rockets.

The ship is equipped with state of the art launch and recovery systems along with aids to enable smooth and efficient operation of ship borne aircraft. Major systems include the LUNA Landing system for MiGs, DAPS Landing system for Sea Harriers and Flight deck lighting systems.

The heart of the operational network that infuses life into the combat systems onboard the ship is the Computer aided Action Information Organisation (CAIO) system, LESORUB-E, with the capability to gather data from ship's sensors and data links and to process, collate and assemble comprehensive tactical pictures. This state of the art system has been specifically designed keeping in mind the essential requirement on the carrier for fighter control and direction.

One of the most prominent equipment fitted on the super structure is the Resistor-E radar complex. Resistor-E is the automated system designed for providing air traffic control, approach/landing and short range navigation for ship borne aircraft. This complex along with its various sub-systems provides navigation and flight data to ship borne aircraft operating at extended ranges from the mother ship. The precision approach guidance system aids the fighters on approach to be directed down to a distance of 30 meters short of flight deck. INS Vikramaditya also boasts of a very modern communication complex, CCS MK II, to meet her external communication requirement. Installation of Link II tactical data system allows her to be fully integrated with the Indian Navy's network centric operations.

546. Press Release of the Ministry of Defence announcing the first ever India-Russia Air Force Exercises to be held in 2014.

New Delhi, November 18, 2013.

Meeting just two days after the successful commissioning of the much-awaited aircraft carrier INS Vikramaditya into the Indian Navy, India and Russia today agreed to expand the range of their strategic partnership in a significant manner at the 13th Meeting of the India – Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Military Technical Cooperation (IRIGC-MTC) which was co- chaired by the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony with his Russian counterpart Mr Sergey Shoigu in Moscow.

The meeting held in an atmosphere of cordiality and warmth, decided that the two countries will hold joint Air Force level exercise for the first time besides a joint Navy Exercise in the Peter the Great Bay in the Sea of Japan, both in 2014. It may be recalled that the Armies of the two countries had recently held Exercise Indra in Rajasthan recently and the focus was on anti-terrorism. The two Ministers agreed that there is a need for further cooperation at all levels, especially in view of the regional and global challenges and to fight the menace of terrorism jointly. Both sides reviewed the situation in West Asia, especially in Syria and the evolving paradigm in Afghanistan.

In order to give a new impetus to the relationship which has gathered momentum over the years, the two sides agreed that the time has come to expand the cooperation not only in product design and development, which has made significant progress over the years but also to involve various echelons of the Defence establishments in strategising policies and cooperation in the fast changing global security scenario.

Referring to Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft(FGFA) and Multi-role Transport Aircraft (MTA), Shri Antony said, the two projects are significant because they symbolise going-past the relationship of buyer- seller. He said both sides must give their best at all phases of the execution of these two projects- design, development and production.

Mr Shoigu assured that the Naval Aviation specialists will train Indian pilots fully for take- offs and landing on INS Vikramaditya and in all probability it will be held in Goa.

The Meeting also reviewed issues relating to T-90 tanks and SU-30 projects.

On the issue of after sales support, both sides felt that they should sign long-term maintenance support agreement.

Earlier in the morning, Shri Antony and the members of the Indian delegation drove down to Poklonnaya Gora (Bow-Down Hill) at Victory Park and laid a wreath at the World War-II Memorial. He was also presented a ceremonial guard of honour.

The Indian delegation included the Defence Secretary Shri RK Mathur, Secretary Defence Production Shri GC Pati, Indian Ambassador to Russia Shri Ajay Malhotra, Air Marshal S Sukumar, Vice Admiral NN Kumar, Lt Gen Narendra Singh and DG Acquisition Shri SB Agnihotri.

547. Message of Prime Minister to the Russian President on the terrorist attack in Volgograd.

New Delhi, December 30, 2013.

Excellency,

I am outraged and pained to learn about the dastardly terrorist attacks against civilians in the city of Volgograd. On behalf of the people and Government of India, and on my personal behalf, please accept our deepest condolences on the loss of lives and injuries in these ghastly attacks. Our prayers go out to the families of all the victims.

India strongly condemns these terrorist strikes against innocent civilians. These attacks are a grave violation of human rights and an unconscionable crime against humanity. We stand resolutely together with the people of Russia in the face of these horrible acts of terrorism.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

H.E. Mr. Vladimir V. Putin

Manmohan Singh

President of the Russian Federation, Moscow

SAN MARINO

548. Press Release of the Ministry of Finance on Tax Information Exchange Agreement signed between India and San Marino.

New Delhi, December 20, 2013.

India and San Marino signed a Tax Information Exchange Agreement (TIEA) at Rome, Italy yesterday. The Agreement has been signed on behalf of India by Mr. Basant K. Gupta, Ambassador of India to Italy with concurrent accreditation to San Marino and Ms. Daniela Rotondaro, Ambassador of San Marino to Italy on behalf of San Marino.

Salient features of the agreement with San Marino are:

- The agreement is based on international standard of transparency and exchange of information.
- The agreement provides for exchange of information that is foreseeably relevant to the administration and enforcement of the domestic tax laws.
- The agreement has a specific provision that the requested Party shall use its information-gathering measures to obtain the requested information even though that Party may not need such information for its own tax purposes.
- The agreement provides for exchange of banking and ownership information.
- The agreement provides for the representatives of the competent authority of the requesting Party to enter the territory of the requested Party to interview individuals and examine records.

- The Agreement is expected to further strengthen tax cooperation between India and San Marino.

SWITZERLAND

549. Press Release of the Ministry of Health and Family Welfare on the Indo- Swiss Bilateral Meet held at Geneva.

New Delhi, May 21, 2013.

With the aim of giving further impetus to cooperation in the field of healthcare, Union Minister of Health & Family Welfare, Shri Ghulam Nabi Azad and Minister of Health Switzerland, Mr Alain Berset held a bilateral meeting on the sidelines of World Health Assembly at Geneva yesterday.

Speaking on the occasion, Shri Azad said that friendship between India and Switzerland goes as back as Independence of India, strongly rooted as it is in shared values of multi-culturalism, democracy and rule of law. Recalling the historic ties between the two countries, Shri Azad said that a treaty of friendship between India and Switzerland was signed at New Delhi as early as 1948, soon after India's independence.

Emphasizing the special nature of relationship between the two countries, Shri Azad said that many high level visits have been exchanged in the recent past and that many bilateral institutional arrangements like Indo-Swiss Joint Commission, Swiss- India Chamber of Commerce, Indo-Swiss Joint Committee on Science & technology, etc. exist to further cement our strong relations. Shri Azad noted that in the continuum of strong Indo-Swiss bilateral cooperation, an MOU between the two countries will be inked soon to further broaden the scope of bilateral ties.

“Considerable progress has been made in this regard and an MOU in the field of health is being signed to promote bilateral cooperation between the two countries”, Shri Azad said.

The major areas of cooperation will be as under:

- i) Non-Communicable Diseases including controlling the associated risk factors of tobacco use, harmful alcohol use, unhealthy diet, etc.
- ii) Communicable Diseases and Anti- Microbial resistance
- iii) Universal Health Coverage

- iv) Maternal & Child health
- v) Sexual & Reproductive Health
- vi) Health & Medical Research
- vii) Therapeutic Products
- viii) Electronic Medical Records
- ix) Global Health Governance

Shri Azad noted that these areas are of immense significance for India, considering the enormous public health challenges that we are faced with. Highlighting the role of Indian generic Drug industry to make available affordable medicines across the world, Shri Azad exuded confidence that Switzerland will extend full support to India on global platforms in order to carry forward our pursuits of providing high quality generic medicines at affordable prices.

TURKEY

550. Media Briefing by Special Secretary (AD) on President's visit to Belgium and Turkey.

New Delhi, October 1, 2013.

Please see Document No 499

551. Interview given by President Pranab Mukherjee to CIHAN, the Turkish News Agency.

October 4, 2013.

1- FIRST VISIT AFTER 15 YEARS BY AN INDIAN PRESIDENT. GENERAL PURPOSE AND AGENDA OF THE VISIT? MEMBERS OF THE DELEGATION?

There have been many State visits between India and Turkey. Two Indian Presidents have visited Turkey and my visit will be the third one. There have been an equal number of visits from the Turkish side. President Abdullah Gul visited India in 2010 and I am now returning the visit. Our Vice President Shri Mohammad Hamid Ansari visited in October 2011 and our External Affairs Minister in July this year.

Both India and Turkey are committed to develop the partnership. My visit highlights the importance that India gives to improving our bilateral relations with Turkey. It is my hope that the visit will give an impetus to all aspects of Indo-Turkish relations and new thrust areas will be identified during my interactions and those of my delegation in Turkey.

Mr. G. K. Vasan, Minister of Shipping and a five-member multi party delegation of Members of Parliament, including Vice Chancellors of leading Indian Universities among others are to accompany me.

2- TWO EMERGING ECONOMIES, WHAT FIELDS OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ARE AIMED?

India-Turkey trade had increased steadily, reaching over US $ 7 billion in 2011, well surpassing the target set for US$ 5 billion for 2010.

Investments are increasing in both directions. More than 100 Indian companies have registered businesses in Turkey in the form of joint ventures, trade and representative offices. Indian companies have interest in infrastructure projects as well as in the automobile sector, energy and steel. The number of Turkish companies in India is also increasing, including in the Roads and Highways sector and construction of pipelines.

Institutional arrangements in terms of Joint Commission for Economic and Technical Cooperation (JCETC) and a Joint Business Council (JBC) exist between the two countries. Additional agreements for cooperation in Science and Technology and Medium Small and Micro Enterprises are expected to be concluded while I am in Turkey.

3- BOTH CULTURALLY VERY CLOSE NATIONS, WHAT SORT OF CULTURAL AND SOCIAL COOPERATION IS AIMED WITH VISIT?

India and Turkey have been closely connected by historical bonds of culture, philosophy and language since time immemorial, and this offers one of the firmest foundation on which to build the edifice of our engagement. A whole range of activities support our interaction in the cultural arena; this includes institutions for cooperation between the Turkish Radio and Television (TRT) and our state broadcasters Doordarshan and Prasar Bharti, in the field of Archives, as well as for twinning agreements between some of the historical cities of India and Turkey.

4- EDUCATION AS A FIELD OF COOPERATION? STATE SCHOLARSHIPS TO INCREASE ACADEMIC EXCHANGE?

In both our societies, youth forms an important part of our demography. Accordingly for our youth, the future global citizens of the world, it is incumbent on us to make the best possible opportunities available to them.

Education, research and innovation have been identified as priority areas and I am happy to note that the leading universities of India and Turkey will be signing five agreements for cooperation during my visit. Scholarships in professional and vocational fields are offered by the Government of India to Turkish nationals, and there already have been institutional tie-ups to take such cooperation forward.

5- TOURISM? CIVIL AVIATION'S IMPORTANCE IN TOURISM? TURKISH AIRLINES ROLE. POSSIBILITY OF INDIAN CIVIL AVIATION MINISTRY'S PERMISSION TO TURKISH AIRLINES TO INCREASE FLIGHTS.

Given our shared cultural heritage in today's modern world, connectivity becomes a sine qua non for enhanced interaction between our two countries. Not only should there be physical connectivity but also through exchanges in other fields like music, films, visual and performing arts and media, all of which are critical for increasing people to people contacts, trade and economic relations.

There has been a steady increase in tourist visiting each others' countries. There is a need to encourage such interaction. With increased people to people contacts, there would certainly be a need to increase connectivity, from both sides.

6- DEFENCE SECTOR. BOTH HAVE STRONG ARMIES IN THEIR REGIONS. HIGH LEVEL MILITARILY VISITS EXCHANGED IN LAST YEARS. ANY POSSIBLE COOPERATION OR EXERCISE TOGETHER?

Defence cooperation is indeed one of the areas in which there is potential to expand interaction with Turkey. During the visit of the Turkish PM Erdogan to India in November 2008, both Prime Ministers agreed to enhance cooperation between two defence forces through military to military contacts and training exchanges. A bilateral Defence Cooperation Agreement has been proposed to be signed, and is under consideration with the Turkish side for some time now.

7- CENTRAL ASIA AND AFGANISTAN ARE COMMON NATIONAL INTEREST FOR ENERGY CORRIDORS AND STRATEGY. ANY POSSIBLE COOPERATION ?

India believes that Afghanistan can play its historical role as the hub of inter-regional trade, stemming from the country's strategic location at the crossroads of West Asia, Central Asia and South Asia. A strong, self-sustainable and viable Afghan state in the post 2014 situation warrants developing alternate corridors of trade, transport and energy, thereby enmeshing Afghanistan in a network of mutually inclusive trade channels and assisting the transformation of Afghanistan from being an aid based economy to a trade based economy in the coming years. This, of course, is contingent upon Afghanistan having smooth transit and access to the regional markets and sea ports through its immediate neighbours.

At a multilateral level, India, Turkey and other regional countries have come together under the framework of the Istanbul process to present a new vision of cooperation and confidence building for the region, with Afghanistan at its centre and consisting of regional countries, supporting countries and international organizations. India is actively participating in all the CBMs and leads the CBM on Trade, Commerce and Investment Opportunities. India also hosted the successful “Delhi Summit on Investment in Afghanistan” last year to attract foreign investments into Afghanistan.

For stability in Afghanistan, it is essential that the international community remains engaged in Afghanistan and supports it in this process of transition and transformation. It is also essential that the root cause of problems in Afghanistan, which is terrorism emanating from beyond the borders of Afghanistan, is tackled firmly.

India and Turkey have both had extensive contacts with the Central Asian region through the ages. India and Turkey have in place a dialogue mechanism to exchange views on Central Asia. India and Turkey have a shared interest in the stability and security of Afghanistan and Central Asia. Indian companies are open to collaborating with Turkish partners on joint projects in the region. India intends to participate in energy cooperation projects, and in the development of regional transportation corridors.

8- CONSTRUCTION COMPANIES OF TURKEY SECOND LARGEST IN THE WORLD. TURKEY'S ROLE IN INDIA'S NEXT 15 YEAR INFRASTRUCTURE INVESTMENTS.

India has opened its infrastructure development needs to global companies and is seeking state of the art technologies from across the world. Anticipated requirement is of an expenditure to the tune of US$ 1 trillion over the next five years for which investment expertise and technical knowhow are welcome. India welcomes Turkish companies to participate in such projects. There have been initial breakthroughs. Turkish companies already have a presence in India, and I understand, they have participated, in collaboration with Indian companies in some sectors like our National highways, constructing a dam in Jammu & Kashmir and the cargo terminal at Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport, and vice versa, leading Indian companies have invested in infrastructure in Turkey with Istanbul airport being just one example.

9- SYRIA. AS INDIA HAS AN IMPORTANT ROLE IN UN, WHAT'S INDIA'S STAND TO BRING PEACE IN SYRIA?

The continuing violence in Syria and the humanitarian crisis arising out of it are of deep concern to us. India has consistently called upon all sides to abjure violence so that conditions can be created for an inclusive political dialogue leading to a comprehensive political solution, taking into account the legitimate aspirations of the people of Syria. India's policy on Syria has been guided by its long standing ties with the region as well as its vital economic, energy and diaspora interests.

We believe that there can be no military solution to this conflict. The reported use of chemical weapons in Syria is a matter of deep concern. India has consistently supported the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons worldwide. India has welcomed the framework agreement reached between Russia and the US on the time-bound safeguarding and destruction of Syria's chemical weapons stockpiles as well as the recent steps taken by Syria to accede to the Chemical Weapons Convention. We hope that the recent peace efforts will lead to early convening of the proposed 'International Conference on Syria' (Geneva-II), under the auspices of UN, which will bring all parties involved in the Syrian conflict to the negotiating table for peaceful resolution of the crisis.

10- What is India's approach to bilateral relations with Pakistan?

India desires peaceful, friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan, which requires an environment free from terror and violence. India is firmly resolved to combat and defeat the terrorist menace that continues to receive encouragement and reinforcement from across the border. We have consistently stressed the need for Pakistan to honour its solemn commitment of not allowing territory under its control to be used for terrorism directed against India in any manner. Pakistan must also show determined action to dismantle the terrorist networks, organizations and infrastructure operating from territories under its control.

There is expectation from the people of India that Pakistan will show tangible movement in investigating and bringing to justice quickly those Pakistanis responsible for the Mumbai terrorist attack in November 2008, including those whose trial is presently underway in Islamabad.

11- How does India plan to address the issue of Kashmir with Pakistan?

India remains committed to the resolution of all outstanding issues with Pakistan, including those pertaining to the Indian State of Jammu & Kashmir through a peaceful bilateral dialogue as mutually agreed under the Simla Agreement of 1972. For this dialogue to progress meaningfully, an environment free from cross-border terrorism and violence along the Line of Control is an essential prerequisite 552. Media interaction of President on board his flight en-route from Brussels to Istanbul.

October 05, 2013.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): Good morning friends. As is customary, the President will bring out some opening remarks first and then receive questions from all of you.

President of India (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): Friends, I have just concluded a very satisfying visit to the Kingdom of Belgium. The warmth of the reception and the meticulous attention given by the Government of Belgium to every aspect of my programme reflected the strength of our bilateral relationship with Belgium.

As a rare gesture the King received me at the airport, which is an expression of special interest in India developed over the years through his numerous visits to India. His exceptional affinity and deep knowledge about India and our culture were reflected in his address at the lunch hosted by him in my honour.

In my meeting with His Majesty King Philippe, and the Prime Minister, His Excellency Elio Di Rupo, we recognised the depth of our bilateral, political and economic relations. Both leaders emphasised the importance that Belgium attaches to its relations with India.

They reiterated their support for reform of the United Nations institutions and for India's permanent membership of the UN Security Council. Belgium has also supported our efforts for developing civil nuclear cooperation.

Our economic partnership with Belgium is of particular importance as it has emerged as India's second largest trading partner within European Union. We discussed a number of important areas of economic cooperation including some in the pipeline.

We noted our important joint efforts in development and modernisation of India's railway sector, cooperation in nuclear waste management and in science and technology.

We identified possibilities of extending the existing cooperation between port authorities of our countries to more advanced areas of port management. In this aspect we noted the commonality between the riverine ports of Antwerp and Kolkata which could be exploited through bilateral cooperation.

Belgium has expertise in some niche areas which are priority sectors for India. I asked the Belgian leaders to encourage enhanced investment in India particularly in sectors such as ports, roads, railways, clean technology, aerospace, and pharmaceuticals.

I have always placed emphasis on improving the quality of higher education in our country promoting collaborations to strengthen research infrastructure in India and to encourage innovation in our academic institutions. Belgium has world renowned academic infrastructure in higher education, especially innovation.

In the view of the benefits to India from enhanced academic cooperation, a high-level academic delegation of some of the top Indian universities accompanied me during the visit - Chairman UGC; Vice-Chancellors of Delhi University, Jawaharlal Nehru University, Hyderabad University; and Director-General for Media and Governance, Jamia Millia University. I am particularly satisfied with the conclusion of the five agreements between universities of India and Belgium and am confident that it will give an impetus to research and innovation in both the countries.

I am confident that our interactions during my visit would further enhance our bilateral engagements. Princess Astrid of Belgium will lead one of Belgium's largest economic missions to India in November this year. We greatly look forward to the visit.

It was a great pleasure to inaugurate jointly with His Majesty King Philippe the Europalia India festival which is the largest Indian cultural festival outside India in recent years. By showcasing the various forms of our art and culture over the next four months, Europalia India will enable the people of Europe glimpse into our past through our present. More importantly, it will offer a window into our future.

India, a relatively young nation of a billion plus people confidently forging into future, is striving to achieve sustainable and inclusive growth. The potential benefit of cooperation between India and Europe is tremendous and I am confident that Europalia India will unleash a necessary energy to exploit it.

During my talks with the leaders of Belgium I was assisted by Minister. Vasan, Members of Parliament who are accompanying me, and also senior officials of the Ministry and our Embassy.

Thank you.

Press Secretary to President: Questions please!

President of India: Confine your questions to the statement. If you go outside, I would not be able to...(Inaudible)...

Q: Excellency, you had extremely successful and useful discussions with the King and the Prime Minister in Brussels. What is the specific outcome of these discussions for the country, especially with regard to bringing investment from Belgium to India?

President of India: Belgium has certain specialisations. I have given some instances. And Belgium's cooperative...(Inaudible)... can be ascertained. It was one of the first countries after signing the civil nuclear cooperation agreement with USA when we had to have the waiver at Nuclear Suppliers Group, Belgium was one of the countries which extended its cooperation. Therefore, it would be very useful for us if we can build up collaboration with them in managing the nuclear waste which is a major problem to all the nuclear power countries.

Q: Sir, you spoke about the riverine port management. What would be the roadmap for the two governments now? What would be the ideal timeframe where some kind of bilateral cooperation can be achieved?

President of India: Already some steps have been taken by Shipping Minister Shri Vasan. And since last year, all officers of the Kolkata Port are being trained in Antwerp by their counterparts. So, cooperation is all being built up. The basic problem of the riverine port is siltation and how to de-silt it and how to make it operational, so that larger ships can come in.

Q: Sir, there is a lot of worry about the United States Government which is in a crisis over debt ceiling and there could be a huge spill over, many commentators have expressed it, on India and other parts of the world. Considering that you have spoken about the economic crisis and the fact that we have not fully come out of the crisis, which you said in your interview to Euronews yesterday, did you discuss with the Prime Minister about the prospect of the impact of this US crisis on Europe and on India?

President of India: Generally US economy has its influence over the world economy as it is the most powerful economy of the world. But on this particular issue the proper response should come from the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister, not from me. How they are going to handle it, what is their assessment of the situation, how far they consider gravity of the situation, it is for the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister to respond.

In general terms I can say that we would like to have economic recovery faster. But surely in a globalised economy like ours it does not depend simply on our efforts; the external environment should also be conducive.

Q: Sir, you said I should not divert from the Belgium thing but there is one question that relates to you. Back home Opposition says that the Ordinance on convicted MPs and MLAs was withdrawn because of you and not because of Rahul Gandhi.

President of India: I cannot comment on the views of the Opposition. Whoever wanted to seek appointment with me I gave them. BJP leaders met me; Aam Aadmi Party leaders met me; I received various representations; I had a discussion with the Prime Minister. And what transpired, every one of you know it. Cabinet is the mother of the Ordinance, and the Cabinet in its meeting, which took place on 2nd of October in the evening, decided to withdraw the Ordinance. So, this is the fact. In between who is responsible, how responsible, to what extent responsible, these are all speculations of individuals. I have nothing to do with it.

Q: Sir, during your visit to Belgium, was there a sense of a consciousness among the Belgian Government and the European community that India is beset by terrorism and the new thing one is talking about strengthening ties, relations. In this area, what can be the level of cooperation?

President of India: Most of the European countries and Euro itself they are signatories to the United Nations resolutions to fight against terrorism. So, there is a commonality in the ground. And in the bilateral discussions also we emphasised on it. And everybody condemns terrorism.

Q: Mr. President, a recent survey has shown that Indian universities are match to the world universities as such. So, we have had here a number of educational agreements. Do you think that will help us improve our standard and overall performance?

President of India: In various aspects that is why I brought the experts here. Otherwise also our universities are having contacts with their counterparts in the advanced countries. Therefore, these various aspects of higher education are discussed among themselves including the exchange programme to explore the possibility of e-lecturing through the technological instrumentality which is available to us and to those countries. All these aspects are being discussed. The basic approach is that there should be share of information, exchange of views in the areas of research and innovation if we want to build up the knowledge-based economy and society.

Q: Mr. President, at the farewell lunch that the King gave to you yesterday he made a reference to you as a consensus builder in India. Was he alluding to your possible role that you might to be asked upon to play in a post-election scenario in India?

President of India: Hold on! Do not bring those issues! What he talked of, I presume because I do not know what he was going to say in the luncheon meeting, perhaps what he said is about the role I played as Leader of House and as a leader of the Government in running the coalition government. So, let us confine it to that. But that chapter is over on 25th June, 2012 when I resigned from the Government, and on 25th

July when my membership of Parliament was over. Now I am the Constitutional head, and my duties are completely determined by the Constitution.

Thank you

553. President Pranab Mukherjee's acceptance speech on being conferred Honoris Causa by the University of Istanbul.

Istanbul, October 5, 2013.

Rector of Istanbul University Professor Dr Yunus Soylet, Dean faculty of Political Sciences, Professor Dr Emra Cengiz, Distinguished Guests
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Let me begin by extending to the friendly people of Turkey, warm greetings and good wishes from the people of India, the Indian Government and from my own self.

I would like to express my appreciation to the Istanbul University for honouring me today with the Doctorate, Honoris Causa, in Political Science. I am privileged to receive this honour from Istanbul University which, like the city itself, is steeped in history and has been a bridge connecting two disparate land continents and civilizations. I am indeed proud and privileged to be here.

There is a 200 strong Indian diaspora in your beautiful country, which is a vibrant community in its own right. Their ethos, experience and expertise help in cementing stronger ties of friendship, goodwill and mutual understanding between our peoples. I thank the Government, Universities, employers and people of Turkey, who have extended their hand of friendship to our diaspora here. This people-to-people link is a great asset in the building of closer bilateral relations between our two countries.

The statement read out by the Dean of Political Sciences, Professor Dr. Emra Cengiz, explained that the conferment of the Honorary Degree, Doctor of Letters, Honoris Causa, to me was on account of my achievement as someone who has spent decades in political life and contributed to governance and democracy in India. While I am humbled by this honour, this recognition, in my view, is due to the Indian nation and its people.

India is a developing economy. It has pursued a democratic model of governance to provide opportunity for the development of every individual. India's democracy is an inspiration to the forces of liberty around the world. When we started our journey of democracy in 1947, we were a new nation with a handful of challenges. We have overcome trials and tribulations and grown in strength to be a vibrant democracy today.

Our democratic foundation is built on the three pillars of Parliament, the Executive and the Judiciary. The Parliament is a sacred institution that reflects the will of the people. The Members of our Parliament are the chosen representatives of the people who carry their hopes and aspirations and resonate their grievances. The accountability of the Executive to the people for its actions is exercised through the Parliament.

We share with Turkey a deep commonality in our respective political structures. The success of our democratic institutions lies in responding to the challenges of our time and the hopes and aspirations of our people. They have to usher in the change and achieve the progress that we desire in our two countries. A key factor that can contribute to its achievement is Good Governance.

Nations are according this goal more importance than ever before because of its inseparable link to social welfare and public good. Absence of good governance has been identified as the root cause of many of the serious deficiencies in societies. It robs the citizenry of their security, and of their social and economic rights, ironically established for their welfare and collective good.

Good governance is critically dependent on the existence of some fundamental pre-requisites. At the core is the inviolable adherence to rule of law and delivery of justice. From these principles would emanate the existence of participatory decision-making structure, transparency, responsiveness, accountability, equity and inclusiveness. This would particularly imply the existence of a corruption free society and the presence of adequate avenues especially for the marginalised sections to have a definitive role in decision-making. In brief, good governance means the existence of an elaborate architecture that has the good of the people as their only foci.

Stability, growth, progress—all this could only be achieved if we set the right priorities and execute bold policy measures to achieve them. I believe good governance ought to be the essential, the most basic philosophy with the rule of law and justice being the most important tenets of good governance.

Three days ago, on 2 October, we marked the 144th birth anniversary of Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of the Indian Nation, who shaped our liberation struggle and for whom Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, the founding Father of your great nation had a special affection. We are aware that political leaders from both countries have an abiding mutual admiration and empathy as well as respect for Mahatma Gandhi. His philosophy of tolerance and self-restraint had a big impact on how India has administered itself over the past six and half decades with democratic governance. The value system propounded as part of his philosophy included sincerity of effort, honesty of purpose and sacrifice for the larger good.

As I look around the world as someone who has lived on this planet for close to eight decades and as a Gandhian, I ask myself whether the ideals of patriotism, compassion, tolerance, self-restraint, honesty, discipline and respect for women are prevalent to the extent that they should be. I have endeavoured in my private and public life to contribute to these very ideals, which I believe, are the very essence of being human.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Today, despite challenges, and occasional setbacks, India is no longer defined by her problems but by her achievements and the opportunities it offers. We have become a trillion dollar economy, the largest in Southeast Asia. We also have the largest middle class in the region. The last decade has seen India emerge as one of the fastest growing nations in the world. During this period, our economy grew annually at an average rate of 7.9 per cent. We are self-sufficient in food grains production, the largest exporter of rice and the second largest exporter of wheat. However, achieving equitable economic growth is still a challenge. So also is the complete elimination of poverty, although a declining trend in the poverty rate is clearly visible.

Rapid creation of employment opportunities is an essential aspect of good governance. It is the approximately 350 million middle-class Indian citizens that have put India on the world map over the past two decades or so. In my Address to the Indian nation on the eve of 15th August, which marked the 66th Anniversary of our Independence, I referred to the need to provide our citizens entitlements backed by legal guarantees in terms of right to employment, education, food and information. We also need to ensure that these entitlements lead to real empowerment of the people. It will be essential to develop and sustain robust delivery mechanisms to make these legislations work.

Our trajectory of high level growth will need to be sustained. Our continued success will need to be earned. In spite of our achievements during these transformational decades, there remains much work to be done. Indeed, sustaining India's transformation will require the hard work and diligence of the country's people, and particularly, good governance that its leaders have to steer. We will have to also strengthen the rule of law and good governance practices. We will have to ensure harmonious relations among our diverse ethnic and religious groups which, in a secular polity, is of supreme importance for nation building.

Friends,

We have learnt the difficult way that unless there is peace at our borders, development, and harmony cannot be achieved. India and Turkey live in extremely difficult geographies, and both of us are aware of the grave challenges to our security, internal as well as external. However, I am sure you would agree that India's commitment to peace is unflinching. We continue to sustain moderation, pluralism and tolerance in our society.

I certainly hope that with all this, in 2047—after one hundred years of independence—my vision of an India fully transformed into a democratically mature, stable and peaceful nation with freedom and opportunity for all will become a reality. It will be an India that is economically prosperous at all levels of society. In 1947, with an India coming into being after two centuries of colonial rule, many would have thought this vision as being far-fetched, but as envisioned by our national leaders, I am proud to say that today, this is a future well within our reach.

I am happy that the idea of 'India' has withstood the vicissitudes of time and presented itself as a secular, socialist, democratic republic, one that is non-aligned, non-violent and peace-loving as envisioned by the Father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi. Our friends around the world, like Turkey, have contributed to making such an idea become a reality.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

In conclusion, I am reminded of the Nobel laureate Indian poet and philosopher, Rabindranath Tagore whose work, Geetanjali, includes these lines which summarize my hopes and dreams for a successful and fully developed India ready to take its rightful place in this world:

Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high;

Where knowledge is free;

Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls;

Where words come out from the depth of truth;

Where tireless striving stretches its arms towards perfection;

Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit;

Where the mind is led forward by thee into ever-widening thought and action –

Into that heaven of freedom, my Father, let my country awake.

Thanks you

554. Speech by President Pranab Mukherjee at the State banquet hosted in his honour by the Turkish President Abdullah Gul.

Ankara, October 7, 2013.

Excellency,

During the last three days that I have been privileged to be in your beautiful and friendly country I have felt the warmth and welcome of the Turkish people. Today your amity and goodwill are manifest with this invitation to me to share a meal with you. The warmth that I have perceived in our interactions today is reflective of the potential that exists for bringing our two countries closer. I accept this as a tribute to our shared cultural, linguistic, social and civilizational experiences. For me and my delegation, it has been a privilege and pleasure to be here and to learn firsthand about Turkey, its people, its history and its grandeur. I thank you, Excellency, for having invited me for this visit.

I look forward, Excellency, to welcome you in my own country, India. I assure you that the shared similarities between our two countries - Turkey and India – in hospitality, in welcoming guests and in our cuisine which you would have experienced while you were in India 3 ½ years ago, will equally enrich your visit. Our countries share bonds that go beyond a mere sharing of cultural heritage, arts and cuisine.

As two emerging economies with congruent interests in several cross cutting areas, we should aim to reap the benefits of closer interaction. Our developing societies can engage across sectors; we are looking forward to enhancing academic exchanges and people to people contact. Being members of the G-20, we interact closely on issues affecting the global community. We are at historical cross roads; the decisions we take today will influence the future of this relationship.

Excellency, it is my ardent hope that as two independent nations we will work together to make this world a better and safer place to live in and take our bilateral relations to greater heights of cooperation and mutual understanding.

I am carrying back very fond memories of my visit to Turkey. Excellency, please join me in raising a toast for your health, and the progress and prosperity of the Turkish people. Let us rededicate ourselves to making our two countries focal points that will usher in peace and stability for our respective regions, and for the world as a whole.

555. Media briefing by President En route from Isanbul.

October 7, 2013.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): Good evening friends. The President will make the opening remarks and then take your questions.

President of India (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): Friends, I have completed a fruitful state visit to the Republic of Turkey.

It was the first visit by an Indian President in 15 years. The President and Prime Minister of Turkey expressed appreciation of the visit. I was very warmly received at all places of my visit. I am particularly grateful to the Istanbul University, which is one of the oldest universities in the world, for having conferred on me an honorary doctorate in political science. This is not just a personal honour but an honour for India and all Indians.

I visited Capadocia, one of Turkey's World Heritage Sites, and am very impressed by the natural beauty of the area as well as the range of tourist attractions in this country.

My meeting with President Gul and Prime Minister Erdogan were warm and cordial. Foreign Minister Davutoglu also called on me. I had extensive discussions on bilateral, multilateral and global issues with Turkish leaders. We agreed that there were a number of commonalities in our worldview as well as on developments in our neighbourhood.

We decided that India and Turkey should initiate comprehensive dialogue mechanisms for exchange of perspectives on all areas of our interest. This could cover our cooperation in the United Nations, G20 and other multilateral groupings as well as global issues like climate change, sustainable development, food security and energy security.

Both President Gul and Prime Minister Erdogan agreed with me that terrorism is a menace threatening the world and we need to deal with it both individually and collectively. I briefed the leaders of Turkey on our problems with terrorism, particularly cross-border terrorism. I also briefed them on initiatives that our Government has taken to promote friendly relations and peace with Pakistan.

We agreed that terrorists wreak wanton destruction and have no religion, nor friends. Prime Minister Erdogan said that Turkey would like to learn from the experiences of India in dealing with terrorism, which he said was a menace which Turkey was also experiencing.

We agreed that it was important to support democracy and development in Afghanistan. Turkey appreciated our significant role in capacity building and development projects in that country. Like India, Turkey is also involved in a range of developmental activities in Afghanistan, and Prime Minister Erdogan confirmed that it would continue to promote peace and stability in Afghanistan even after 2014. We agreed to build on this convergence of views.

We expressed satisfaction at the growth in our economic cooperation both in trade and investment. We felt, however, that there was considerable potential to further expand the cooperation. We decided to convene soon the Joint Economic Committee in New Delhi to address all aspects of our economic cooperation.

We noted the adverse Turkish balance of trade with India and agreed to work on means of addressing it, including through enhanced investments in India by Turkish companies and tourism exchanges. In this context I briefed the Turkish leadership about our ambitious plan to invest about US$ 1 trillion in infrastructure over the next five years, and invited Turkish companies which have great strength in these areas to participate in these projects. Indian and Turkish companies could also explore joint venture opportunities in third countries. IT was identified as a promising area for this.

We concluded five inter-governmental agreements during the visit, for cooperation between our national broadcaster and their Turkish counterpart on science and technology cooperation, on cooperation between our medium and small-scale industries, and exchanges between our national archives.

I briefed the Turkish leadership about India's efforts for full membership of the four export control regimes and stressed our impeccable record on non-proliferation. We agreed that Turkey and India would continue consultations and discussions on this matter.

Foreign Minister Davutoglu conveyed to me that Turkey would be supportive of India, but would need to work with other NSG members on this matter.

I had mentioned in my remarks after the visit to Belgium, my effort to promote the level of research and innovation in our academic institutions. I am happy that four prominent Indian universities concluded six memoranda of understanding with their counterparts in Turkey with a view to promoting faculty, students and research exchanges.

I extended an invitation to President Gul to visit India. While accepting it, he spoke of his respect and affection for our country. Prime Minister Erdogan also asked me to convey to our Prime Minister the pending invitation for him to visit Turkey.

I believe that in the course of my interaction with the Turkish leadership we have made progress in a number of areas. Turkey is an important country in its region and among the emerging economies in the world. There is significant potential for expanding our cooperation in all fields, and we intend to maintain a robust dialogue towards peace and across all sectors and at all levels.

Thank you.

Q: Excellency, traditionally Turkey is perceived to be closer to Pakistan. During your talks with Turkish leaders, some miracle happened. First they did not mention about Kashmir. Second they did mention about terror attacks in Pakistan. Is it your diplomatic success or really Turkey is now moving closer to India?

President of India: Every country has its own approach towards each and every other country. But this much I would like to say that I briefed them about our initiatives on Pakistan and also the requirement which has been repeatedly placed before the Pakistan leadership. I also mentioned the last meeting between the two Prime Ministers at the margin of the United Nations. But this is the situation which we shall have to recognise.

While talking on terrorism there was convergence of views, which I have mentioned in my statement, that terrorists have no religion, no country, no respect for borders. Their only aim is to continue wanton destruction of everything. And we have also recognised that this is not confined to one country or one region; it appears to be a menace to the international peace and stability.

Q: Sir, recently Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif was also in Turkey ... (Inaudible)... he expressed publicly and first time he said ... (Inaudible)... having good relations with India. He had a detailed discussion with the Turkish leadership. Now are you confident that Turkish leadership would prevail upon the Pakistan leadership so that India's concerns can be addressed?

President of India: Our effort in respect of Pakistan that it is essential that bilateral issues are to be resolved between India and Pakistan themselves within the framework of Shimla Agreement. Therefore, the question of any third country intervention on this issue does not arise. And India has never sought any foreign country's intervention in this matter (Inaudible)...

Q: Mr. President, Turkey had not been very supportive of India's bid for UN Security Council membership, and has been part of a small ginger group, which includes China and Pakistan, which opposed India's membership in UNSC. Did you after your discussions get an impression that Turkey's view might change?

President of India: Every country has its own angularity and approach towards the United Nations reform, how it should take place, when it should take place. And in the open-ended working group which is functioning from 1995 till date, almost 28 years, it has not been possible to find a common ground about the date, time, and broad contours of the reform of the United Nations. Therefore, there were no new areas to discuss except in general terms.

Q: We saw in this instance how Turkey perhaps dramatically has taken a view to strengthen ties with India during your visit. But should such an impression gain ground that our relations with Pakistan will always come up whenever we are trying to strengthen ties with various countries, what would you say? Given its relations with Pakistan, it is not satisfactory. Should that come between relations with other countries?

President of India: Our relation with other countries is not specific to any country. We do not believe that relationship between two countries, bilateral relationship ... (Inaudible)... in the context of a third country

Q: Sir, in recent times we have witnessed increasing friction among different institutions of our democracy. In the latest instance you had the Supreme Court talking about Representation of People Act and the Government trying to bring an ordinance to overturn the Supreme Court judgment. How do you look at this increasing friction among the institutions and do you think that judiciary is overstepping its jurisdiction?

President of India: Umpteen number of times I have stated that each institution should function within its limitations which have been determined by the Constitution. Every institution derives its authority from the Constitution itself. And in a living, dynamic, multiparty system, there may be occasions when various institutions act in a particular way, but we have the capacity and flexibility in the system to adjust the friction and to avoid any crisis.

Press Secretary to President:

Thank you

UKRAINE

556. Fifth Session of the India-Ukraine Inter-Governmental Commission.

New Delhi, November 13, 2013.

1. Minister of State for External Affairs, Shri E. Ahamed, chaired the Fifth Session of the India-Ukraine Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological, Industrial and Cultural Cooperation held on 13th November 2013 in New Delhi. The Fourth Session was held in Kyiv in June 2012. The Ukrainian delegation was led by Mr. Ihor Mykolayovych Prasolov, Minister of Economic Development and Trade of Ukraine. He was accompanied by a 15-member official and 12-member business delegation from Ukraine.
2. The talks were held in a friendly and constructive atmosphere. The Session reviewed the current status and future prospects of cooperation in trade and investment, heavy/light industry, fertilizers, pharmaceuticals and healthcare, mining and metallurgy, science and technology, energy (coal, nuclear), transportation, agriculture and food processing, education, culture and tourism. A Memorandum of Understanding for Cooperation in Joint Ventures and Research and Development in Pharmaceuticals and Bio-pharmaceuticals between the Ministry of Chemicals and Fertilizers, Government of India, and the State Administration of Ukraine on Medicinal Products was signed on 13th November 2013 in the presence of the two Co-Chairmen.
3. Mr. Prasolov and delegation also held a meeting with Dr. E M Sudarsana Natchiappan, Minister of State for Commerce and Industry of India. The Ukrainian Business Delegation held an interactive session with Indian business community organized by the Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FICCI).
4. In focus were issues being faced by Indian pharmaceutical companies in exporting their medicines to Ukraine and visa concerns of Indian nationals, particularly Indian businessmen.

Pharmaceuticals constitute the bulk of India's exports to Ukraine amounting to about US$ 375 million per annum. The Ukrainian side agreed to address the concerns of Indian pharmaceutical companies operating in Ukraine. Both sides also agreed to work on an agreement on simplification of visa procedures to ease movement of business people and tourists.

5. India and Ukraine agreed that there was vast untapped potential to increase trade beyond the existing level of US$ 3.2 billion. They felt that removing the temporary obstacles of visas and those facing the pharma sector would help India and Ukraine forge a truly comprehensive partnership.
6. The two sides agreed to hold the next session of the Commission in Kyiv in 2014 on mutually convenient dates.

UNITED KINGDOM

557. Media Briefing by Joint Secretary (Europe West) and Indian High Commissioner to UK.

New Delhi, February 15, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good Afternoon friends. Thank you very much for coming here on what has been a long day for many of you. We do appreciate your effort to come in at this time. The idea was to try and give you a glimpse of a forthcoming visit and that is the visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to India. I have with me here our High Commissioner Dr. Jaimini Bhagwati on my right, and on my left is Joint Secretary (Europe West) Ms Ruchi Ghanashyam who you had met only recently when we had a briefing on the visit of the President of France. So you will be having sort of two briefings from Europe of major visits.

What we will do as is usual is to have Ms. Ruchi Ghanashyam make a few opening remarks and then the floor is open for questions relating to the United Kingdom. Today we will not take any further questions on any other issues given the lateness of the hour and that we have taxed all of you to come at this stage, and you have all been very gracious to come. With those brief ground rules, let me ask Ms. Ghanashyam to speak. And as always the interaction will be limited to one question per person. Over to you Ruchi.

Joint Secretary (Europe West)(Ms Ruchi Ghanashyam): Thank you Akbar.

Once again let me also thank you for coming here at this late hour. My apologies as well for making you work so late.

His Excellency Mr. David Cameron, Prime Minister of the UK, will be paying an official visit to India from February 18 to 20, 2013 with 19th February, 2013 as the main day of engagement in New Delhi. Apart from New Delhi, he will also be visiting Mumbai. He will come with an accompanying Delegation including CEOs of leading business houses; likely to have some Vice Chancellors of some reputed universities, dignitaries and senior officials.

In New Delhi, PM Cameron will hold delegation-level talks with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the 19th of February at Hyderabad House. He will also call on Hon. President. He would be in Mumbai on 18th February the day before his visit to Delhi. There are some other elements of the programme which are evolving because we are working out the schedule and other logistics. Those are in the process.

India and UK have a vibrant economic relationship. UK continues to be among India's major trade partners particularly in Europe. The two-way merchandise trade during 2011-12 rose to US$ 16.157 billion, which is up 27 per cent from US$ 12.56 billion in 2010-11.

On the investment front, UK's total FDI in India as of October, 2012 from April 2000 was US$ 17.08 billion, constituting approximately about nine per cent of total FDI. India has continued to maintain its strong position as an investor in the UK during 2010-11. About 700 Indian companies have operations in UK with over 70 of them listed on the London Stock Exchange. The Tata Group is the largest private manufacturing sector employer in UK.

We also have a very useful and vibrant relationship in the education and research sector. A large number of Indian students visit UK to study in the many reputed universities in UK. And we value UK as a partner in this area especially in academic and research exchanges. An India Institute was launched at the University of London's Kings College on 26th January, 2012, and it is said to be a centre for global engagement with contemporary India.

We also have a growing and very useful cooperation with UK in the area of counterterrorism. And that is our joint effort to fight terrorism. The last meeting of the Joint Working Group was held recently in India on 20th November, 2012. There are also other engagements with UK in this. The first India-UK Cyber Security Dialogue was also held in London on 18th and 19th October, 2012. In the area of defence we have multifaceted cooperation with the UK.

Energy is an important area of our relationship. Oil and natural gas is one of the top sectors of FDI from UK into India. And there is considerable scope for India-UK partnership in this sector especially in non-fossil and renewable sectors. Those are also important areas that we have with UK.

We have a very useful multifaceted and vibrant relationship with the UK. UK supports India's permanent membership at the UN Security Council, and is an important interlocutor for India in the EU, G8, G20 and also in the global context. We wish Prime Minister Cameron and his delegation a very pleasant stay in India.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Before I open the floor for questions I would just like to tell you that once the programme is finalized and all elements are in place, we will issue an advisory which will indicate what is the complete nature of the programme and what are the opportunities available for the media. But that is still sometime to go, perhaps over the weekend or perhaps certainly by Sunday we should provide that. With that, we are now ready to answer any questions that you may have.

Q: Is the United Kingdom raising the issue of the Vodafone tax demand? If so, what is the stand that India is going to take given that there is a Supreme Court case on this issue?

Indian High Commissioner to UK (Dr. Jaimini Bhagwati): As you know, the Finance Minister was in the UK, and some of these issues including the Vodafone issue was raised. My understanding from what our Ministry of Finance has indicated - and it is only my understanding, so the blame is mine if I do not fully and accurately reflect what they have said - it seems that there are some discussions going on between that particular company and the relevant officials of the Ministry of Finance. And the sense I got is that it is moving in a right direction which would be acceptable to both sides.

Q: Sir, India has served a show-cause notice on Agusta Westland of the UK for cancellation of contract for the VVIP helicopters after reports of corruption that had been established by Prosecutors in Europe. Is India asking assistance from the UK in the matter of investigation of this deal? Is India asking the UK for information and assistance for probing the allegations of corruption in this deal?

High Commissioner to UK: In the recent past we have formally checked with the UK side, and as of now they have given us an interim response. So we are still waiting to further check with them if they have any information.

Q: What is the interim response, Sir?

High Commissioner to UK: The interim response very specifically is that they want to wait for the investigation in Italy to be completed and for them to know more details about the investigation in Italy before they can respond to anything that we have asked them.

Q: Do you have any idea on who the CEOs would be, how many they would be? And is the business aspect in Delhi or in Bombay?

High Commissioner to UK: The business aspect is both in Mumbai as well as over here. I may not have the full laundry list, if I may call it that, of the people. But I can assure you that these are the major companies both over here and over there. For instance from the Tata Group I believe the new Chief Mr. Cyrus Mistry may be involved. I do not want to give specific names only because, as JS (XP) mentioned, some elements of the programme are still being worked out. It might be premature; we do not want to embarrass anyone. So from their side, the British Petroleum, a large company, did a large investment here and so on. There will also be a business engagement which is, as you know, for summit-level visits, orchestrated by our leading Chambers of Industry and Commerce. So they will also put together a programme.

Q: UK recently hosted a trilateral meeting with Afghanistan and Pakistan. How do we view this trilateral? Have we had any conversation with the British Government on the details of this particular meeting?

High Commissioner to UK: I do not think today is the time when we are looking at bilateral issues to get into neighbourhood issues. But responding very specifically to your question as to whether there have been contacts after the latest trilateral meeting took place in London on the 3rd and 4th of February at the Prime Minister David Cameron's country resort called Checkers, their National Security Advisor spoke to our National Security Advisor, their Foreign Secretary that means Foreign Minister spoke to our Hon. External Affairs Minister. So they have been keeping us fully involved. And my sense is that in the discussions that will take place on the 19th this topic will figure too.

Q: Some of the UK firms are yet to be paid for the CWG dues and this issue has also been raised in the UK Parliament. Has there been any discussion that the UK has initiated afresh on these payments that are due to UK companies?

High Commissioner to UK: I must confess that in the time that I have been in UK, no formal reference has been made to us about these dues. My sense is that this is happening at a legal and at a company-to-company level. I may be wrong, but it is not through our good offices that any request has been forwarded to anyone.

Question: You have talked about defence cooperation would you please shed more light on what kind of defence cooperation is there between India and UK?

High Commissioner to UK: Sure. I am going to talk a little broadly here in the sense that we are in discussion between the relevant specialized agencies, for instance DRDO and the counterparts on the UK. Beside, we are looking at, we may not have yet arrived at, some elements of cooperation are already on. For instance in the chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear areas there may be at some point of time an understanding which would be reached within the ambit of a letter of arrangement that the DRDO has with its counterpart. Similarly in the area of submarines I believe the relevant agencies have been in touch. Now you will pardon me, but I am not an expert in some of these issues in the defence area but I just gave the two as examples.

Q: If I could just explore a bit more deeply the answer on Agusta Westland, you say that the UK has provided an interim response and that response is essentially that they await the outcome of the Italian investigation. Is India satisfied with that response? And what is the truth of the rumours or the reports of the Letters of Rogatory about to be sent?

Official Spokesperson: Let me answer the first part. Nobody is ever satisfied with an interim response. Everybody would want a full-fledged response. It is pretty obvious that we would like a full-fledged response. On the issue of Letters Rogatory, as you are aware the Letter Rogatory is a legal process which has to go through our CBI and that is the nodal point for all such matters. And also these are largely quasi-judicial processes which are initiated through investigative agencies. So, as far as we in the Ministry of External Affairs are concerned, we would only be a channel if this is triggered off. At this stage I have not heard as of today anything on that.

Q: Would you like a full response?

Official Spokesperson: Of course, everybody would like full responses from everybody who we have asked.

Q: Sir, are we looking at Britain for investment along townships along the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor? And is there any proposal for a Delhi-Bangalore corridor as well? Are we looking at something like that with British help?

Official Spokesperson: Maybe you are saying Chennai-Bangalore.

Q: Bombay-Bangalore.

High Commissioner to UK: If I may just add one more specific element, before I come to your question about Corridors, as far as India-UK defence cooperation is concerned, you may know that HAL Bangalore is currently manufacturing a HAWK Advanced Jet Trainer Aircraft under license from BAE. Now coming to your question about first Delhi-Mumbai, yes, various UK companies - and I can remember one from the top of my head, is ACON - are engaged. Your question was specifically on financing. I am not entirely sure about the financing arrangements. As you can understand in today's day, a company which is based in country X has shareholders in countries Y, Z and so on. So I am not quite sure about financing. But in terms of consultancy services, there are several British Companies which are helping out and on a commercial basis on the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. There is also a thought and at this stage I think we will just call it a thought about a Mumbai-Bangalore Economic Corridor. It is still a thought. So the two sides are thinking about it. And let us see where we get with it.

Q: How many times have you written to UK for a response on Augusta Westland and how many times have they responded?

High Commissioner to UK: As Akbar said, I do not want to get into how many times because I might get the precise time wrong. Let me just submit that yes, we have been in touch with the UK side, yes, the UK side has said that they are waiting for the investigation in Italy to be fully complete so that they know exactly what is happening. And as Akbar said, we would like to get a fuller response from all the authorities outside. Even as domestically I am sure Government is concerned and is taking the necessary action. And as he said in External Affairs Ministry and therefore in the field ... (Inaudible)... called the High Commission, we will wait for the relevant authorities in India to let us know how to take it forward.

Official Spokesperson: Just to add to it, apart from writing, we have also had a meeting on this with the concerned officials in the UK Foreign Office.

Q: In the month of?

High Commissioner to UK: I do not want to hazard a guess, because just in case. Since we have now come into February, probably in January but I cannot say immediately from the top of my head, it might have been the beginning of February or whenever it was.

Joint Secretary (EW): If I may correct..., No, it was earlier. But let us not get into that.

Official Spokesperson: Yes, we do not know the exact dates right now off hand.

Q: Is it possible to be a little more specific about what sort of information you have heard from UK Authorities? You said we have formally checked but what exactly?

High Commissioner to UK: The specific question, to my understanding, was that is there an investigation at the UK end? And their response was that they are waiting for the investigation on the Italian end to be made known.

Q: If you do not mind can you just give just sound bite on Maldives? Already you have issued a statement. So just we wanted a sound bite.

Official Spokesperson: I must confess, I can do it but I am not prepared for it right now because we have mentioned at the beginning of it that this will be restricted because of course then there are others' who have pet themes to follow up on.

Q: Is Letter Rogatory the only way to get information on issue?

Q: Sir, through what format have you really asked UK to give us a response?

Official Spokesperson: As far as what is the Letter Rogatory, this is way beyond my understanding because I am not a legal person. So please let us not get into it. I suggest that you ask the CBI, which is the nodal agency in such matters, is this the only way or there are other ways. Now as regard what way we have asked, we use diplomatic modes of communication which is Note Verbale and also follow-up meeting in the Foreign Office.

Well welcome to the Ministry of External Affairs for the first time that I have seen you here but you are welcome to ask any question.

Q: Thanks. It is not the first time but it is the first time in a while. I just wanted clarity, from the question that you would ask the UK about the Augusta Westland I just wanted to clarify, from their answer, is it clear whether or not they have started their own investigation into the issue or was the answer like we will look into this after we get the full report from Italy?

Official Spokesperson: I think it would be unfair for us to try and summarise the diplomatic nuances in the way you are trying to do that. Please bear with us, we do not have that formal request here with us, the way we thought of it and the way they responded. So it would not be proper for us to try and summarise it. Please understand that. We were focused on the bilateral relationship in its entirety here, but if you would like to add anything.

High Commissioner to UK: There is nothing further to add. Akbar has said it. Your question is very specific because it will then entail, which day did we send the Note Verbale, obviously it is difficult for us to remember the exact date; which day did they respond and so on; and what if any action has been taken by the UK side, post that communication to us. So I think it would be improper to say the least to start commenting at that level of detail.

Official Spokesperson: If there are no more questions....., then thank you very much

558. Joint Statement on the India-United Kingdom Summit 2013
- India and The UK: A stronger, wider, deeper partnership.

New Delhi, February 19, 2013.

1. India-UK Summit talks were held in New Delhi on 19 February 2013 during the official visit to India of the British Prime Minister, the Rt Hon David Cameron, MP.
2. The British Prime Minister expressed his warm appreciation for the welcome extended by the Prime Minister, Dr Manmohan Singh, and the Government and people of India to him, his Ministerial colleagues, and to his delegation, which included the largest British trade delegation ever to visit India, leaders of the UK-India CEO Forum, members of Parliament, and university Vice Chancellors. During his official engagements in New Delhi, Prime Minister Cameron also called on the President of India, Shri Pranab Mukherjee, and the UPA Chairperson Smt. Sonia Gandhi.
3. The two Prime Ministers and their colleagues reviewed the progress made since the previous Summit in 2010 on building a stronger, wider and deeper relationship across the range of India-UK interests, based on shared culture, values and strategic interests. They agreed that, while substantial progress had been made on the ambitious targets set in 2010, there was considerable potential for expanding the relationship further, in particular in the area of trade and investment, and they agreed on the importance of an approach which supported business.

Economic Growth and Cooperation

4. Trade between Britain and India has grown strongly since the last summit. In 2010 and 2011, trade grew an average of 23%. This year the economic climate has been tougher. But the leaders remain committed to working to substantially increase trade and investment between India and the UK.
5. The leaders welcomed the growth in two-way investment between India and the UK since the last Summit, which is creating jobs and growth in both countries. The UK is now the 3rd largest investor in India and India is now the 5th largest investor in the UK. The leaders welcomed major Indian investments into the UK and major UK investments into India since the last summit.
6. The leaders noted the signature, in October 2012, of an Amending Protocol of their Double Taxation Avoidance Convention (DTAC). This will provide tax stability to Indian and UK residents, and will facilitate mutual economic cooperation between the two countries. It will also stimulate the flow of investment, technology and services between India and the UK. Both countries are committed to the fight against tax evasion and avoidance and are strong proponents of transparency in tax matters.
7. The leaders met the members of the UK-India CEO forum and noted the recommendations for the further development of business partnerships, including in advance manufacturing and R&D, education and skills, healthcare, and infrastructure and energy.
8. The leaders underlined their strong commitment to a successful outcome to the EU-India negotiations for a broad based, balanced, and ambitious Free Trade Agreement that will generate jobs and growth in both countries, and their hope for political agreement in 2013.

9. The two leaders encouraged a renewed focus by the governments and businesses of both countries for further and deeper partnerships to exploit fully the potential for stronger cooperation between the two countries.
10. The leaders welcomed the development in cooperation on infrastructure since the last summit. They noted the UK's interest in cooperating with India for the development of a new Bengaluru-Mumbai Economic Corridor (BMEC). The leaders agreed to examine and evolve the modalities and content of a feasibility study of this project concept through mutual discussions and to work out a roadmap for a possible partnership in this area.
11. The leaders underlined the importance of cooperation in the field of health and welcomed the conclusion of an over-arching MOU at the government-to-government level to strengthen cooperation in this sector, and look forward to cooperation between the UK's National Institute of Clinical Excellence and the Indian Department of Health Research, and between the Medical Health Regulatory Authority and the Drug Controller General of India.
12. The leaders welcomed the proposals by UK providers to support primary healthcare training in line with the objectives of various Government of India schemes/initiatives, encouraging further initiatives to follow the new pilot in Kerala and initial scoping study in Tamil Nadu; and nursing and midwifery training in coordination with national nursing centres.
13. The leaders welcomed the rapid expansion of India-UK research and development cooperation which is helping to generate and develop high quality and high impact research partnerships leading to new knowledge creation. The co-investment made by both countries in supporting joint research activities has risen from £1m in 2009 to over £100m today. Recent additions in the collaboration agenda include advanced manufacturing, bio-energy, smart grids, energy storage, next generation wireless systems and applied mathematics.

14. The two leaders welcomed the recent understanding on a new India-UK development partnership.
15. They agreed to work together to develop the global post-2015 development agenda, which should be ambitious and practical, with the aim of eradicating poverty - wherever it exists – and ensuring adequate means of implementation for developing countries.
16. Energy security is a major issue confronting both the UK and India and the two leaders agreed to cooperate to face this common challenge. The leaders welcomed the extensive collaboration in the energy sector including on oil and gas, renewable energy, energy efficiency, the power sector, and business leadership on low carbon technologies. They welcomed the substantial British investment in India's energy sector. They also welcomed the growth in research and development partnerships on renewable energy, smart grids, forecasting and integration of renewable energy in the transmission grids, and new sources of energy and associated technologies. Both sides agreed to explore ways to deepen policy, commercial and research collaboration on energy, biofuels, and environmentally friendly technologies.
17. Both countries are net importers of energy and have strong demand for imported LNG. The two leaders agreed to work closely to address this issue through joint cooperation by forging partnerships, including commercial partnerships, to diversify LNG supply sources and to develop natural gas infrastructure in each other's countries.
18. The two leaders agreed to open a dialogue between relevant agencies working in the field of petroleum conservation in both countries in different sectors of the economy. The two countries would promote joint cooperation through activities where the exchange of knowledge, technology and experience in the field of fuel conservation could bring mutual benefit to both countries.

19. The two leaders agreed, respectively to encourage Indian Public Sector Undertakings and UK oil and gas companies to explore the possibility of upstream oil and gas sector investment in India, the UK and in third countries, with a view to sourcing hydrocarbons to meet their energy requirements. Security
20. The UK and India stand together in the fight against terrorism. The two leaders welcomed the strong cooperation they have developed in this field since 2010, and which recently contributed to ensuring a safe and successful London Olympic Games. Condemning terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, the two leaders agreed that all terrorist networks, wherever they exist, must be defeated. They called upon Pakistan to bring to justice the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attacks. The two leaders committed to work closely together to prevent terror attacks, strengthen the international counter-terrorism architecture, and exchange best practice in areas such as transport security, security of vital civil infrastructure installations, responding to terror attacks, and countering extremism. They also agreed to cooperate on joint training of their counter-terrorism forces.
21. The UK and India agreed to deepen their cooperation on cyber security, building on the comprehensive bilateral cyber dialogue held in October, 2012, and the subsequent Joint Statement on Cooperation between India and the UK on Cyber Issues. The two leaders agreed to hold the second round of dialogue at mutually convenient dates in March/April 2013. The two leaders announced a programme for the sharing of expertise on cyber security including; police training exchanges in cyber forensics; a joint workshop on cyber security research, and a cyber trade and skills event to be held in the first half of 2013. The two leaders also announced the establishment of a joint task force to exchange and share information to address malicious cyber activity originating in and affecting each other's cyber space. The two leaders welcomed the UN General Assembly Resolution on the formation of a CSTD working group on enhanced cooperation and agreed to consult each other on the discussions in the working group.

22. The two leaders expressed their commitment to working towards a world free of nuclear weapons. They agreed to hold regular consultations on disarmament and non-proliferation issues. In recognition of the threat posed by terrorists gaining access to WMD materials, India and the UK agreed to conclude a Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear Security.
23. India and the UK's civil nuclear cooperation has gone from strength to strength since the Joint Declaration in 2010. It now includes innovative nuclear research projects and the export of advanced civil nuclear technology and exchanges between scientific institutions. Both leaders expressed interest in cooperation with regard to India in the Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership. In recognition of their commitment to enhance bilateral cooperation further, both leaders agreed to begin negotiations on a civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement.
24. Prime Minister Cameron committed the UK to make available to India the cutting edge British technology, civil and military, that the UK currently shares with its top international partners, in accordance with international obligations. The leaders agreed to work actively together to achieve India's ambitions to join the major export control regimes (Nuclear Suppliers Group, Missile Technology Control Group; Australia Group; Wassenaar Arrangement).
25. The leaders noted the close and traditional interactions and exchanges between the Armed Forces of India and the UK, and welcomed initiatives being taken to enhance such exchanges to the mutual benefit of both countries. The two leaders also welcomed the regular conduct of exercises between the Armed Forces of both countries.
26. The leaders noted that, under a letter of agreement signed in September 2011, Indian and British scientists are working together to develop technologies for Defence and Security. Taking forward this engagement, the UK Defence Science and Technology Laboratory (Dstl) is paired with the India's Defence

Research and Development Organisation (DRDO). Three Collaborative Projects were initiated in 2012 and a new project has just been agreed to work together on Chemical and Biological Defence.

27. The leaders welcomed the UK and India's close engagement during India's recent tenure on the United Nations Security Council. The two sides agreed to continue this close co-operation on UNSC matters in a new bilateral, and institutionalised, format. Prime Minister Cameron reaffirmed the UK's commitment to a reformed United Nations Security Council with India as a permanent member. Both Prime Ministers called for an open, effective and efficient United Nations, and welcomed their shared commitment to working actively through the United Nations to preserve international peace and security. The leaders welcomed deeper engagement on UN peacekeeping matters, and looked forward to enhancing this further through practical and policy co-operation.
28. The two leaders welcomed increased collaboration in foreign policy. The UK and India have a shared vision for peace, stability, democracy and prosperity.
29. The two leaders also discussed a range of other international security matters of concern including the conflict in Syria and Iran's nuclear programme. The leaders reaffirmed their belief in the peaceful resolution of the Iranian nuclear issue through diplomacy and underlined the need for Iran to comply with the provisions of the relevant resolutions of the UN Security Council and to extend its full cooperation to the International Atomic Energy Agency.
30. Both Prime Ministers agreed to deepen existing India-UK strategic consultations on developments in West Asia / Middle East.
31. The two leaders welcomed the international community's continued commitment to Afghanistan in the form of development and security assistance during this period of transition and transformation. The two leaders also encouraged the international community and Afghanistan's neighbours to promote foreign investment, market access, private sector development and development of infrastructure in Afghanistan to make Afghanistan economically self-reliant.

32. The two leaders recognised that the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability is terrorism which also endangers regional and global peace and security. In this regard, they emphasized the need for joint and concerted efforts and cooperation among regional and other countries to address the challenge of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including the dismantling of terrorist sanctuaries and safe havens, as well as disrupting all financial and tactical support for terrorism.
33. The two leaders supported the efforts made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan to establish a peaceful inter-Afghan dialogue. They agreed that the process must be Afghan-led, inclusive and transparent and meet the key principles enunciated by the international community: renunciation of violence, breaking of all ties with Al-Qaeda and other terrorist organizations, and acceptance of the Afghan Constitution, including its provision for the human rights of men and women. In this context, they noted the contribution of the UN Security Council anti-terror sanctions regime.
34. The two leaders agreed upon the need to sufficiently build the capacity of the Afghan National Security Forces so that the gains made over the past few years are not diluted.
35. The two leaders agreed to establish a new Joint Working Group as a mechanism for a regular bilateral dialogue on peace, security and development in Afghanistan.
36. The two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the values and principles of the Commonwealth. Both sides agreed to work together to further strengthen the wide-ranging links that bind member states. They noted progress made in the reform and renewal of the Commonwealth. Both sides reiterated the importance of democracy and development as key pillars of the Commonwealth.

People-to-People

37. The two leaders agreed on the importance of quality education for all their citizens. The leaders noted the recognition and respect in India for the UK as a centre for excellence in education and learning. They expressed interest in further enhancing the mobility and exchange of students between India and the UK. Prime Minister Cameron reaffirmed that Britain warmly welcomes Indian students to the UK.
38. The leaders acknowledged the significance of collaboration in education and took note of the results of the recently concluded India-UK Education Forum meeting on 30 January 2013 in London. The leaders also noted that institutional links are progressing very well between the two countries under the UK-India Education and Research Initiative (UKIERI).
39. The leaders recognised the important role of the British Council in providing English language training in India. Both leaders noted the need to build capacity for the training of English language teachers in new methodologies in partnership with the State Governments and the CBSE over the next five years, in coordination with Government of India and its national agencies.
40. The leaders welcomed the British Council's programme to provide digital English language materials for use by millions of learners in India. They also welcomed the agreement between the British Council, INTEL and the State Government of Uttar Pradesh with the objective of reaching a further 4 million English learners.
41. The leaders welcomed the progress of the UK India Education and Research Initiative (UKIERI) since its inception in 2006, noting that more than 1025 partnerships had been supported in different areas, including over 380 in the second phase of UKIERI from 2011, in the four vital strands of leadership, innovation, skills and student mobility.
42. In addition to the UKIERI partnerships, the leaders welcomed the increase in direct university to university collaborations.

43. The leaders welcomed support from UKIERI and directly from business for increased work opportunities in India for British students and new graduates under the Study India Programme.
44. The two leaders welcomed that Indian Higher Education regulators will actively explore the possibility of creating an enabling environment, by introducing the necessary bridging mechanism, through which Indian nationals holding a Master's degree from an accredited and recognised British University are able to pursue higher education or gain employment in India, after completing the necessary formalities of eligibility and equivalence.
45. The leaders welcomed the partnership between the UK Open University and the Government of India, supported by the British Council and UKAID, to provide training for 1 million teachers using web-based and other innovative technology.
46. The leaders welcomed the UK-India partnership to support secondary education through the Government of India's Rashtriya Madhyamik Shiksha Abhiyan (RMSA) to universalise access to secondary education with emphasis on quality and equity. UK support will enable young people to access secondary education in India in larger numbers.
47. The leaders affirmed their support for a strong partnership in skills development and noted the opportunities in the delivery of vocational skills in all sectors to their citizens. They agreed to take this forward, including by working towards an MOU between the Ministry of Labour and Employment in India and relevant UK departments and agencies.
48. People to people links are central to the relationship between India and the UK. The two leaders reaffirmed that both countries welcome all legitimate travellers, whether students, tourists, visitors, business people or qualified workers. They underlined their commitment both to facilitate strong people-to-people exchanges and to cooperate to secure their borders and cooperate on migration issues. The two leaders agreed to continue their ongoing discussions on visa, migration and people mobility issues of concern to both sides.

49. The two leaders expressed their appreciation for the contribution of the Indian diaspora in the UK, including in Parliament, government, business, healthcare and education.
50. Cultural diplomacy between India and the UK is an important mechanism for strengthening bilateral relations, through organisations such as the Indian Council for Cultural Relations and the British Council. The two leaders welcomed in this respect; chairs established by ICCR at Edinburgh Napier University and King's College London; a partnership with the South Bank Centre for the Alchemy Festival; and partnerships with the Edinburgh Festivals.
51. The leaders welcomed the British Council's plans to deliver their 5-year arts and culture initiative – ReImagined - to build new creative connections between the peoples of the UK and India.
52. The leaders welcomed the Leadership Training Programme (LTP) for in-service museum professionals in 2012, under the landmark MOU signed in 2010 between the Ministry of Culture of the Government of India and British institutions. This has paved the way for further capacity building programmes and the exchange of best practice between the cultural institutions of both countries.

559. Prime Minister's Media Statement during the visit of Prime Minister of UK to India.

New Delhi, February 19, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Cameron,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Prime Minister David Cameron on his Official Visit to India. Prime Minister Cameron's strong personal commitment and leadership has imparted a strong momentum to the strategic partnership between India and the U.K. His first visit to India as Prime Minister in 2010, a few months after he assumed office, laid the foundation of our Enhanced Partnership for the Future, which is defined by a high level of economic and technological cooperation and close coordination on many common regional and global challenges.

This morning, Prime Minister Cameron and I reviewed the entire expanse of our bilateral relations. We expressed satisfaction with progress in our economic engagement, while stressing the need to do more to take the relationship to a new level. We discussed ways to generate higher growth in our trade. I invited increased British investments in India, including in infrastructure and energy. We have asked our officials to explore British participation in India's National Manufacturing and Investment Zones and in a possible industrial corridor in the Mumbai-Bangalore sector.

I have sought Prime Minister Cameron's support in ensuring an early conclusion of a fair, balanced and forward looking Broad-based India-EU Trade and Investment Agreement, which will open new opportunities for trade and investment between our two countries.

We discussed the prospects of enhanced cooperation in the development of the defence industrial base of India through greater emphasis on technology transfer, co-development and co-production.

I also conveyed to Prime Minister Cameron our very serious concerns regarding allegations about unethical means used in securing the 2010 contract for Agusta Westland helicopters. I told him that we have sought an explanation from the company by February 22 to examine if the contractual provisions on unethical practices and the Integrity Pact have been violated. I have sought full assistance from the U.K. in this case. Prime Minister Cameron has assured me of the cooperation of his Government in the investigations.

Education and science and technology are special areas of India-UK cooperation. I have impressed upon PM Cameron the need for a visa regime that facilitates greater movement of people between our two countries so that this cooperation can be further energized.

I thanked Prime Minister Cameron for the UK's support for India's full membership of the Nuclear Suppliers Group and other multilateral export control regimes. We have also decided to commence negotiations on a bilateral Civil Nuclear Agreement.

Prime Minister Cameron and I also had very candid and productive discussions on regional and global issues. We shared our perspectives on the security and political transition in Afghanistan. I conveyed India's enduring commitment to assist Afghanistan through the transition and beyond, by supporting its economic growth and regional economic integration and helping develop its capacity for governance, development and security in accordance with our strategic partnership agreement with Afghanistan. We also had productive discussions on other issues in our immediate neighbourhood, including Iran and West Asia. We agreed to further intensify our cooperation in combating terrorism. We have also increased our engagement on cyber security.

Prime Minister Cameron and I agreed that in keeping with our strategic relationship, it is important for our two sides to consult closely and remain sensitive to each other's interests.

Prime Minister Cameron's visit is another milestone in our bilateral relations. It has been a pleasure working with him and I look forward to continuing our mutual partnership.

Thank you

560. Prime Minister's Condolence message on the passing away of Baroness Thatcher, former British Prime Minister.

New Delhi, April 9, 2013.

"I was deeply saddened to learn of the passing away of Baroness Thatcher. On behalf of her countless admirers in India as well as the Government of India and on my own behalf, I write to convey to you our sincerest condolences.

Baroness Thatcher was a transformative figure of global standing. Her skill, character and resolve, which she brought to her job as Prime Minister, have left an indelible impression in many areas of British public life. While the United Kingdom registered important progress under her leadership, we in India also remember her for her notable contributions to strengthening India-UK relations. Our thoughts and prayers in this difficult moment are with you and the family of Baroness Thatcher. We pray for peace for the departed soul."

561. Foreign Office Consultations between India and the United Kingdom.

London, June 21, 2013.

Foreign Secretary Shri Ranjan Mathai visited London on June 19-20, 2013 for the annual India-UK Foreign Office Consultations.

On June 19, Foreign Secretary held Foreign Office Consultations (FOC) with his UK counterpart, Permanent Under Secretary Sir Simon Fraser on all aspects of India – UK relations. Discussions included a detailed follow up of the decisions reached during UK Prime Minister's visit to India in February 2013. The situation in India's neighbourhood, including Afghanistan and Pakistan, Middle-East/West Asia and East Asia was discussed. The two sides noted that frank exchange of views helped promote better understanding of each other's positions towards the shared goal of obtaining peace, security and stability in the region and beyond.

The dialogue held during Prime Minister Cameron's visit to India in February, 2013 marked an important step towards further consolidating the India - UK Strategic Partnership. It was noted that trade and investment engagement between the two countries holds considerable promise. In this context, they reviewed the progress made on major economic and commercial issues including the joint feasibility study for the Bengaluru-Mumbai Economic Corridor.

The two sides underscored the importance of their ongoing cooperation in counter-terrorism and cyber security and looked forward to the next round of senior expert level bilateral dialogues in these areas of shared concern. Recalling the understanding reached during UK Prime Minister's visit to India in February 2013, it was agreed to take forward consideration of an agreement on civil nuclear cooperation. The UK side reiterated their commitment to raising bilateral cooperation on high technologies to a new higher level and expressed support for India's membership of multilateral export control regimes. The two sides also discussed cooperation in higher education, scientific research energy and health sector. Both sides emphasised the importance of people to people contacts.

On June 20, Foreign Secretary Mathai called on National Security Adviser Sir Kim Darroch and the Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office Rt Hon Hugo Swire. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the outcome of the Foreign Office Consultations and hoped that the momentum of the multifaceted bilateral engagement would be further augmented by means of senior official level dialogues on specific mutually agreed themes in the coming months.

562. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry on the visit of Commerce Minister Anand Sharma to London.

New Delhi, June 25, 2013.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister for Commerce and Industry visited UK on 23-25 June to review bilateral trade and investment and taking part in investment promotion events. He met Dr. Vince Cable, Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills, Mr. Oliver Letwin, Minister for Government policy in Cabinet office, Mr. Gregory barker, Minister in charge for business engagement with India and First/Deputy First Minister of Northern Ireland.

In his meetings with both Dr Vince Cable and Mr Oliver Letwin , Shri Sharma expressed serious concerns over the news reports referring to a proposal to categorize India as high risk country entailing cash bonds from visa applicants. Dr Vince Cable informed the Indian Minister that he had discussed the issue with the British Home Secretary who had assured that there was proposal mooted for a pilot which has not been considered by the British Government. Shri Sharma suggested that given the strategic India–UK partnership a formal clarification to this effect would be in order to dispel any apprehension and avoid confusion.

The ministers reviewed progress on feasibility study of Bengaluru Mumbai Economic corridor, as envisaged in Joint Statement of India UK summit meeting in February 2013, and exchanged the Terms of Reference of study. Both sides agreed to establish Joint working group on the BMEC project for carrying out the co financed feasibility study and to explore the modalities technology and equity participation by UK. The British side showed keen interest in studying the financial structures being considered under the ongoing DMIC project and the governance structures for the NIMZs. This project is being projected as the cornerstone of India-UK partnership.

Shri Sharma emphasised that both sides should review the progress of work of Joint working groups under JETCO to leading to the bilateral JETCO meeting in the second half of this year. He invited UK minister to visit Central Manufacturing technology institute Bengaluru and NIMZ near Pune during the latter's visit to India.

Both sides discussed steps for early conclusion of India EU BTIA. The Indian Minister emphasised the need for pragmatism in harvesting the agreements made till now on various issues and realising the benefits of adopting incremental approach for conclusion of the agreement. He explained that the Indian offer is robust, balanced and fair and that the BTIA would be the most ambitious trade deal for both India and EU.

Shri Sharma explained the long term investment opportunities made available by National Manufacturing policy and the NIMZs being established as Greenfield, self governed Industrial townships having single window clearance and several incentives.

Shri Sharma, alongwith UK Minister Gregory Barker, addressed a gathering of 200 British and Indian CEOs in Belfast and explained the steps taken by the Indian government to further improve the investment attractiveness of the business environment. He and Lord Green UK minister for trade and investment also addressed a meeting of British businesses about the long term growth prospects of Indian economy and the bilateral business relations.

563. Official Spokesperson's response to a question on reports about UK Visa bond.

New Delhi, November 5, 2013.

In response to a question on reports about UK visa bond the Official Spokesman stated:

"We have seen the Press Release on the subject. I would like to say that soon after media's reports on the proposed visa bond scheme came to the Government's attention earlier this year, we responded promptly by raising the matter with the UK Government. Our views on the subject were conveyed to the UK Government at different levels, including by Hon'ble Commerce and Industry Minister, Shri Anand Sharma in his meetings in June 2013 during his visit to London. These were once again discussed during the India-UK Comprehensive Dialogue on Visa Related Issues held in London in July 2013.

We are happy to learn that UK Government has taken on board our concerns as well as concerns expressed by other quarters.

UK and India have a strategic partnership. People-to-people contacts provide strength and durability to our long standing warm and friendly ties with the UK.”

On August 13, the Spokesperson of the MEA answered question in this regard:

Q: Sir, what is the update on the UK visa issue, the 3,000 pound fee that they were planning to impose? Are we taking any reciprocal steps?

Official Spokesperson: My understanding of this is that when we had the last consultations with the UK, this was in the last week of July in London, this matter was raised by our delegation although we had not received any communication from the UK about what you are saying. But that said, we also had seen news reports on this matter. So, we had raised this matter with the UK delegation and articulated our concerns, if this were true.

We were told at that stage that no final decision has been taken on this matter and this is something that they are working through their internal processes. At that stage we informed them that should they intend to proceed further on this, it would be useful to have bilateral contacts at senior levels. That is my understanding of the situation. We rechecked with them following news reports after that meeting, and were told that the situation remains as it was when they communicated to us last.

* It may be recalled that in June India was put on a list of “high risk” Asian and African countries whose citizens would be required to deposit Pound 3000 cash bond when applying for a UK visa. The money was required to be forfeited if a person overstayed his visa. The move was targeted only at people from non-white Commonwealth countries as part of the British Government’s resolve to drastically cut down on immigration levels. The British Home Office said these countries posed “the most significant risk of abuse” by their citizens. The Home Secretary Theresa May said the move was part of the government’s policy to make the immigration system “more selective.” This issue was also taken up by the Minister of Commerce and Industry Anand Sharma with the British Government during his visit there in June 2013. (See Document No 562)

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-VIII

INDIA AND THE UN

564. Joint press statement on Meeting of India-U.S. Joint Working Group on UN Peacekeeping.

New Delhi, February 14, 2013.

The India-U.S. Joint Working Group on UN Peacekeeping, which was given greater impetus by the meeting between President Obama and Prime Minister Singh in November 2010, held its 10th meeting in Washington on February 13, 2013. The Indian delegation was led by Ministry of External Affairs Joint Secretary for United Nations Political Affairs Pavan Kapoor, and comprised officials from the Indian Ministries of External Affairs, Defence, and Home Affairs. The U.S. delegation was led by Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs Esther Brimmer, and comprised officials from the U.S. Departments of State and Defense.

At the meeting, India and the United States advanced a number of goals laid out in the Declaration of Principles the Joint Working Group agreed upon in 2011. The Joint Working Group also continued in-depth consultations on UN peacekeeping issues, and explored an agreement on a set of Principles of India-U.S. Cooperation in the Area of Training UN Peacekeepers and institutional arrangements between their peacekeeping institutions. Both sides welcomed the open and comprehensive nature of the discussions, and agreed the talks helped advance their shared commitment to supporting and strengthening United Nations peacekeeping operations, and their mutual interest in assuring the success of UN peacekeeping missions. Both sides agreed that the 11th meeting of the Working Group will be held in New Delhi in 2014.

565. Statement by India at the Closing Plenary of the UN Conference on Arms Trade Treaty

New York, March 28, 2013.

Mr President,

The road to this final session of the Conference has been a long one and we thank you for having guided this process all through in a skilful manner and for ensuring some improvements in the final draft as compared to the draft of July 2012 which served as the basis of our negotiations. However, in the view of the Indian delegation the final draft falls short of our expectations and a number of other key stakeholders in producing a text that is clear, balanced and implementable and able to attract universal adherence.

At the commencement of this Conference India had made clear that the ATT should make a real impact on illicit trafficking in conventional arms and their illicit use especially by terrorists and other unauthorized and unlawful non-State actors. The provisions in the final draft on terrorism and non-state actors are weak and diffused and find no mention in the specific prohibitions of the Treaty.

India has stressed consistently that the ATT should ensure a balance of obligations between exporting and importing states. India cannot accept that the Treaty be used as an instrument in the hands of exporting states to take unilateral force majeure measures against importing states parties without consequences.

The relevant provisions in the final draft do not meet our requirements. There is a fundamental imbalance in the text which is flawed as the weight of obligations is tilted against importing States. As an importing state we will take measures to ensure that the treaty does not affect the stability and predictability of defense cooperation agreements and contracts entered into by India.

India has been an active participant in these negotiations. Underlying our participation in these extended negotiations was the principle that member states have a legitimate right to self-defence and our belief that there is no conflict between the pursuit of national security objectives and the aspiration that the Arms Trade Treaty be strong, balanced and effective. This is consistent with the strong and effective national export controls that India already has in place with respect to export of defence items.

While India has negotiated in good faith and in an open and transparent manner with respect to its essential interests, the final draft has the tell tale marks of behind- the- scenes carve outs of exclusive interests of a select few countries, such as egregiously excluding non-state actors or arms transfers as gifts or loans, thus seriously diminishing the value of a multilateral Treaty negotiated in the UN. We have stressed that universal adherence to this Treaty would not be possible unless all stakeholders were on board and this includes major exporting as well as importing states.

The final draft text will be examined carefully and in detail. Our Government will undertake a thorough assessment of the ATT from our defence, security and foreign policy interests. Our participation in this session does not in any way prejudice our position on the substantive aspects of the Treaty and should not be construed as our endorsement. We would wish this to be reflected in the record of this meeting and the Conference.

566. Statement by Shri Ranjan Mathai, Foreign Secretary at the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva.

Geneva, June 18, 2013.

Mr. President, Secretary General of the Conference, Excellencies,

1. It is an honour to address the Conference on Disarmament. India has been a member of the CD since its inception. We value very much its role as the world community's single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum. The CD fulfils a unique function by bringing together all the militarily significant states. It is also a forum that brings together all states possessing nuclear weapons. If the CD did not exist there would be a need to invent one, especially if we are to make progress on the path towards global nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons - a priority enshrined by universal consensus in the Final Document of the first Special Session on Disarmament of the UN General Assembly, which in fact established this Conference.

2. The mandate of this Conference is to undertake negotiations on treaties of universal application. India supports the early commencement of substantive work in the CD. The Conference must proceed with the adoption of a Programme of Work. This body works on the principle of consensus and rightly so as matters that come up for negotiation fall in the domain of national security. But the same principle also affords member states the opportunity to protect their interests during negotiations. Therefore, it is unfortunate that this Conference has been prevented, on one unconvincing pretext or another, from commencing substantive work - in the immediate context on an FMCT or for that matter on issues that command strong support from members of this Conference, be it on Nuclear Disarmament, Negative Security Assurances or on Measures to Prevent the Weaponization of Outer Space. This Conference should be allowed to fulfil its mandate as a negotiation forum by commencing such negotiations on the basis of an early decision on its Programme of Work.
3. India has been consistent in its support for global, non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament. We associate ourselves with the statement on Nuclear Disarmament made by Zimbabwe on behalf of the G-21 last week. India's Working Paper tabled as CD 1816 in 2007 contains specific proposals, based on the key principles of the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan for achieving nuclear disarmament in a time bound manner. India is convinced that the goal of nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed multilateral framework that is global and non-discriminatory. There is need for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Progressive steps are needed for the de-legitimization of nuclear weapons paving the way for their complete elimination. For over three decades, the UNGA has voted in favour of a resolution, sponsored by India, calling on this Conference to negotiate a Convention on the Prohibition of Use of Nuclear Weapons. As a nuclear weapon state, India has a doctrine of Credible Minimum Nuclear Deterrence underlined by a No-first Use posture. We have also supported a Global No-First Use Treaty.

4. Without prejudice to the priority India attaches to nuclear disarmament, we support the negotiation in the CD of a non-discriminatory and internationally verifiable treaty banning the future production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices that meets India's national security interests. India is a nuclear weapon state and a responsible member of the world community, and would approach these negotiations as such. There is an agreed mandate for the commencement of such negotiations. We do not favour reopening this mandate. India's support for FMCT negotiations is consistent with our interest in strengthening the global non-proliferation regime; an FMCT would add a measure of strategic predictability and would be a base line for future global nuclear disarmament efforts. Therefore blocking FMCT negotiations for an open ended nuclear build up would be a matter of concern not just for India but for the international community as a whole.
5. India is a major space faring nation with wide ranging interests in Outer Space. Our growing space interests are vital to our national security interests as well. We accord priority to the issue of Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, including the safety of assets in space. The international legal framework on space security needs to be strengthened to enhance the security of space assets for all space users and to ensure the long term sustainability of Outer Space. While universal and non-discriminatory transparency and confidence-building measures can play a useful complementary role, and indeed India is participating in efforts led by, among others, the EU in this regard, they cannot substitute legally binding instruments in this field.

6. India supports international cooperative efforts that strengthen multilateral approaches and institutions in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation. For its part India has actively contributed to strengthening the disarmament and non-proliferation agenda - at the UNGA, the UNDC, and the IAEA and at the OPCW. India has stepped up its engagement with the multilateral export control regimes with a view to membership of those regimes. We support efforts of the UNSC's 1540 Committee, in particular in addressing the challenges of clandestine proliferation. India hosted a 1540 workshop on building new synergies for nuclear security in Delhi in November last year. We contributed to the success of the Nuclear Security Summit, the CCW and BWC Review Conferences last year and the CWC Review Conference in April this year.
7. I am conscious that there is impatience with the current stasis in the CD. Questioning the relevance and authority of established multilateral disarmament frameworks is misplaced when in fact the current impasse is more due to the obstacles placed in its path rather than any inherent institutional deficiencies. It is incumbent on all of us to enable the Conference to fulfill its mandate for negotiating multilateral treaties that can be implemented universally. We are convinced that the CD has the membership, the credibility and the rules of procedure to discharge its mandate as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum.
8. We were privileged to hold the Presidency of the Conference during the first session. In our view, the best way to revitalize this Conference is to allow the commencement of substantive negotiations. In this regard, we hope that our collective efforts will bear fruit in the near future. Mr. President, It has been an honour today to speak during the Presidency of Iran.

Thank you

567. Visit of Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA), to India.

New Delhi, September 4, 2013.

The Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA), Mr. Filippo Grandi visited India, 03-04 September 2013, to review the humanitarian assistance programme with top level officials in the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) led by Mr. Navtej Sarna, Additional Secretary (International Organizations). The two sides exchanged views on a wide range of issues, including the recent developments in the West Asia region. Mr. Sarna presented a cheque for US $ 1 million, as part of India's annual contribution to UNRWA, primarily for provision of food and medicines to the displaced people in the refugee camps under UNRWA's various programmes. Mr. Grandi expressed his sincere appreciation for India's consistent support to the Palestinian people.

India has traditionally provided strong political support to the Palestinian cause at the bilateral, regional and international level. Additionally, it has been contributing economic and technical assistance to the Palestinian people, both bilaterally and through UNRWA.

UNRWA provides services and assistance to more than five million Palestinian refugees in West Asia in the form of education, health care, relief, community support and emergency response in times of armed conflict.

568. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Additional Secretary (International Organizations) on the UN General Assembly Session, visit of the Foreign Minister of Latvia, External Affairs Minister's visit to Canada and Prime Minister's Special Envoy Ashwani Kumar's meetings in Tokyo in connection with the visit of Emperor of Japan.

New Delhi, Sept 18, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends. Before I begin, let me introduce some of my colleagues who have joined us today. On my right is Mr. Navtej Sarna who is Additional Secretary (International Organisations). On his right is Mr. T.S. Tirumurti who is Joint Secretary (United Nations) dealing with economic and social issues. On my left is Mr. Pavan Kapoor who is Joint Secretary (United Nations) dealing with political issues. The idea is that they will give you a sort of understanding of what the 68th session of the UN General Assembly will be.

But before that, I have a few announcements to make. I will take questions only on those announcements in the beginning. Subsequent to that there will be this briefing related to the United Nations General Assembly session. After that if any of you have questions, you are welcome to ask me on issues which are not covered either in my announcements or in their responses.

One final thing is that we will have a separate briefing on the Prime Minister's visit to the United States, and his activities in the US as well as the UNGA. That briefing will be on the 20th by the Foreign Secretary. So, I would suggest you to please keep your questions on those aspects for a later date. You can now focus on the issues that we are now touching upon.

Also, as all of you know, each one gets one chance. So, choose your questions carefully. There will not be a second round of questions because given the number of people who are here we would not be able to accommodate anybody more than once. With those preliminary remarks, let me make the announcements that I have.

The first announcement is, as those of you who are following our advisories are perhaps aware, the Foreign Minister of Latvia Mr. Edgars Rinkevics is in New Delhi. Actually this morning he signed a Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement with India. The Indian signatory was the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid.

With the signing of the Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement, India and Latvia now have the economic architecture in place for deepening and expanding their bilateral relations. We had previously signed a Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement in 2011, and this fits in with that. We hope that the present bilateral trade, which is approximately 177 million, will increase following this agreement.

My next announcement relates to the visit of External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid to Canada. The External Affairs Minister will be travelling to Canada from the 21st to the 23rd of this month. The visit is primarily for the first round of the strategic dialogue between India and Canada.

If you could recollect, when Prime Minister Harper visited India last year, in perhaps November, there was an agreement that the External Affairs Ministers will meet annually for a strategic dialogue. And this is the first round of that strategic dialogue.

This will be held between the two Foreign Ministers - External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid and his Canadian counterpart Mr. John Baird – in Toronto on the 22nd. Subsequently, External Affairs Minister will also travel to Ottawa where he will meet other senior Ministers including the Minister for Economy, the Minister for Trade, Immigration and Natural Resources. From there the External Affairs Minister is scheduled to travel to the United Nations headquarters to join in during the United Nations General Assembly.

The last announcement that I have to make is that Dr. Ashwani Kumar, who is the Special Envoy of the Prime Minister to Japan, earlier today met the Japanese Prime Minister Mr. Shinzo Abe in Tokyo. The Special Envoy is on a three-day visit to Tokyo as part of preparations for the visit of Their Majesties later this year to India. As you are aware, the Emperor and Empress of Japan are to visit India the end of November. The appointment of Mr. Kumar was to ensure that their visit is given adequate importance and focus; and he is working towards that end.

He also used the opportunity of his meeting with the Prime Minister to reiterate Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's invitation to Prime Minister Abe for the annual summit which is to be held in New Delhi. During the next two days, the Special Envoy of the Prime Minister will also meet the Foreign Minister and the Minister for Economy and Trade, who was recently in India, as you are aware. He is separately also interacting with captains of industry to promote greater economic engagement between India and Japan.

That brings me to the conclusion of my three announcements. If any of you have questions on these, I will take them now.

Q: With regard to the visit of Their Majesties' of Japan, has the itinerary been finalised yet? I see that we have Delhi and Chennai on the agenda so far. I just wanted to know if there is a visit being considered to Imphal perhaps with the relevance of the 70th anniversary of the Battle of Imphal falling next year and the great significance to the people of Japan ... (Inaudible)... maybe up to 50,000 soldiers falling fighting ... (Inaudible)... Had Mr. Kumar been speaking to his counterparts about that?

Official Spokesperson: I do not have a readout of what exactly he spoke. Because the meeting was about an hour ago, I do not have a readout of that. That said, many of your colleagues here are aware of the time that we take to announce the itinerary. And I think they are all very comfortable that we announce these specific schedules perhaps less than a week before the visit. So, we are quite some time ahead in those terms. Once we finalise those, we will certainly make it public.

Q: Do you anticipate that it will actually be considered? Given the gravity of the anniversary perhaps to both countries and the fact of different participations in the war, it will be a significant milestone for Their Majesties' visit surely.

Official Spokesperson: I am certain the Japanese side will take into account what you said and we too will take that into account. But my point is that at this stage this was the first meeting of the Special Envoy who is on a three-day visit. I do not have a readout of what exactly was covered. Should we have that, we will certainly share it with all of you.

Q: When is Mr. Shinzo Abe coming to India?

Official Spokesperson: I just mentioned that we have reiterated that invitation for an annual summit. I did not indicate that he has accepted and the dates have to be finalised. Once that is done, we will let you know. Right now the principle focus and the primary visit that we are focusing on is the first ever visit of the Emperor and Empress of Japan to India. And any visit from Japan at a senior level will only be after that. So, our primary focus is end November, early December for the visit of Emperor and Empress of Japan which we are looking forward to.

If there are no more questions on this, I will request my colleague Mr. Navtej Sarna to speak to you for a short while about the issues related to the United Nations General Assembly and then the floor will be open for questions on that. Navtej.

Additional Secretary (International Organisations) (Shri Navtej Sarna): Thanks Akbar, and good afternoon friends. Good to be here with all of you. Let me start by giving you the basic structure of the forthcoming 68th UN General Assembly Session.

The high-level segment is essentially what we are going to focus on because I think that is of primary news interest and also involves the involvement of Heads of Government, Heads of State, Foreign Ministers. The high-level segment of this year's Session is going to be from the 24th of September to the 1st of October. The General Debate carries on for three more days, to be exact from the 23rd to the 4th of October.

This year's session is going to be presided over, that is the President of the General Assembly for the next one UN-year so to speak, is going to be John Ashe, who is the former Permanent Representative of Antigua and Barbuda. So, he will be presiding over the entire session.

Those of you who have been to these sessions and covered earlier sessions would know that the Heads of State, Heads of Government speak followed by Foreign Ministers. I will leave the details of PM's visit for Foreign Secretary's briefing. He will be speaking on the 28th. The External Affairs Minister is going to be in New York for the high-level segment. He is expected to reach there late on the 23rd evening, and will take part in the high-level meetings which are there going to be held as part of the UN Session, as well as several high-level meetings which various groupings and countries organise, utilising the presence of the dignitaries from different countries in one place in New York.

Just to give you an idea of these high-level meetings both within the UN and without the UN system but which will take place in that one week and which we hope to attend at different levels, those which we can at the level of External Affairs Minister certainly so, others at the level of Foreign Secretary, and yet others at the level of various other Ministers or delegates who would be travelling there.

I think it is important to underline that this year the high-level meetings also have a kind of connection between them which comes out of the theme of this General Assembly Session. The theme is going to be "The Post 2015 Development Agenda: Setting the Stage". So, these high-level meetings are really going to be first time in a way that the entire international community is going to be focusing on the development agenda post-2015 in a concentrated, cross-cutting way. Not to say that we have not been talking about this for the last couple of years in different places, but here it will all sort of come to a head and hopefully a path forward will be charted.

So, the high-level meetings begin on 23rd September. The first one is a high-level meeting on disability on development. It is going to be followed the next day, that is on the 24th of September, by the inaugural meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development. This forum is the result of a direct decision taken in the Rio+20 Conference last year. And this is the first time that this forum is going to be meeting to see how to take this sustainable development agenda forward in keeping with the decisions that were taken at Rio+20 and thereby also imply that in keeping with the principles which are enshrined in Rio+20. This is a very very important aspect, particularly from the point of developing countries, from the point of India, that in the development process we stick to the Rio+20 political consensus and not try to chip away at it and not try to create new consensus and change the goalposts as we go along.

The third high-level meeting is going to be the special event on Millennium Development Goals. This takes place on the 25th of September. As you know, the Millennium Development Goals are supposed to come to an end 2015. Clearly much remains to be done on the MDGs. In some we have moved, not only as a country but as the world. There are many others in which we have not moved as fast as we wanted to. These are of critical importance to us, critical importance to developing countries. And we need to understand what is going to happen to them in 2015. Do we just drop them and move on or do we find a mechanism in which we are absorbed into the agenda that is worked out later? There is going to be a high-level dialogue on migration and development. Migration is another very important issue and this is going to take place on the 3rd and 4th of October. Besides that there is going to be a high-level meeting on nuclear disarmament. This is not development-related but it is a very important issue, again a very important issue for India. This will take place on the 26th of September.

There are other grouping meetings which are important. There is going to be a G77 Ministerial meeting, group of developing countries. There is going to be a NAM Ministerial meeting which again is traditionally extremely important for us. And there are going to be other smaller group meetings. There is a meeting of the BRICS Foreign Ministers. There is a meeting of the IBSA Foreign Ministers. And there is a meeting of the G4 Foreign Ministers. G4, as you know, is the group consisting of India, Japan, Germany and Brazil formed for the purpose of UN Security Council reforms.

So, these will take place all in a concentrated space of three or four days, and we will try to present India's positions at each of these meetings at the highest level possible.

The External Affairs Minister would also be having a series of bilateral meetings on the sidelines of the UNGA. This is always a very very difficult process of scheduling because we have to match schedules of various Foreign Ministers coming in and out of New York, and there are other commitments. But I think we are fairly confident that he would be having a series of very substantive meetings with Foreign Ministers. Some of those I have on my list –Foreign Minister of China, Foreign Minister of Egypt, Foreign Minister of Libya, Foreign Minister of Palestine, a meeting with the German Foreign Minister, and possibly also with the Foreign Minister of the UAE. As I said, these are always subject to last minute scheduling problems. More may happen. So, we are tying these up and I thought I should give you a heads-up that these are in a fairly advanced stage of planning, what we are looking forward to.

Besides that, of course the External Affairs Minister would be having other bilateral events in terms of bilateral US events, which we can talk about maybe later when you have the other bilateral briefing.

In any case, the 68th General Assembly Session is going to broadly follow up a number of important issues which were touched upon or we have been working upon in the previous one. Briefly to recap the 67th, it was a very important year for us, very important General Assembly Session for us not only because the General Assembly but because at least for part of the year we were still on the UN Security Council. And during our last few months, which fall into the 67th GA calendar, we did take up some very important issues which would be good to keep in mind.

We took up for instance during our Presidency in November, 2012, the whole issue of piracy which has been a very big issue for India and several other countries. And we brought it to the fore and not something which just happens off the Coast of Somalia. But we are sure that it has a number of related issues, humanitarian aspects, and political aspects. And this became the theme of a debate during our UN Security Council Presidency. We even managed to get a Presidential Statement out which set into focus several important concepts which deal with this modern-day challenge.

Also, as Chairman of the Counterterrorism Committee we brought focus on another aspect which is crucial for India's security and that is the global financing of terrorism. We did it by holding an unprecedented number of meetings of the Committees which deal with the financing aspects to bring greater and greater focus on these issues because, as you know, one of the most important things in counterterrorism is cooperation at a global scale, information sharing, and cooperation among the law enforcement and other agencies.

We also focused on UN Security Council reforms in a big way. We managed to ginger up the process, so to speak, by working with the L69, which is a group of developing countries interested in Security Council reforms, and coming up with a common text between the L69 and the C10, which is the negotiating group for the African group. And this common text showed that there was possibility of coming together of two groups which people thought were locked into different positions. And India played a critical role in that.

We kept up the G4 process. There was a G4 meeting last year at the Ministerial level. Then there was a G4 follow-up at the Director-Generals' level in Brazil in April this year, which I attended, which gave a greater impetus to what the G4 could be looking forward to do; and we hope to do that in this Ministerial meeting again.

We kept on pushing the Chairman of the Negotiating Group, Ambassador Tanin of Afghanistan to move towards a negotiating text, with limited success not because of his own desire not to do so but we were faced with a set of circumstances and political realities emanating in the previous Presidency which made it a bit difficult for him to move. But we are satisfied reasonably with the fact that the reform process we kept on the front burner, and we would continue to do so in the session to come.

We also focused on our development priorities in helping set up the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals. As you know, Rio+20 also mandated the international community to produce a set of Sustainable Development Goals. What these goals are going to be, how are they going to be negotiated, how are they going to be implemented, is all still an open question. But where it is being done is an Open Working Group. So, we pushed proactively with a set of developing countries to have this group set up, and most importantly to make sure that this Group takes decisions only by consensus. Four meetings of this group have now been held, and we have another four meetings coming up, and another five I think in the next year which will be working on these goals. This is just by way of a report card on some of the important issues that we were now finishing with this session.

The coming session, because of the high-level impetus given to development, I think is going to be very importantly focused on this 2015 Development Agenda. I have seen some material every year in the Indian press on this. I think it is something which is going to define our development paradigm in a globalised world. We cannot be following different paradigms from the rest of the world. We do get impacted. I think it is very important to focus on this and try to understand what is happening on this.

Let me very briefly tell you the process that has happened so far on this. One, I have already mentioned there is this Rio+20 process, which said make Sustainable Development Goals, have a high-level political forum. That is one aspect.

The second aspect is actually the high-level panel which was set up by the UN Secretary-General which consisted of the President of Indonesia, the Prime Minister of UK, and I think the President of Liberia. The high-level panel report was produced. Frankly speaking, we were a bit concerned that this high-level panel report should not miss out concerns of developing countries and should not miss out on our concerns. So, we very actively engaged through the year with our interlocutors on these issues, and kept underlining our concerns. To a large extent, I would say, these concerns were met. Not in whole, certainly. But we see openings there in that report in which we can now push our agenda. And this is only because of a very constant and a very persistent engagement that we kept up with our interlocutors on this.

The third activity that has been happening on this is a UNDP-sponsored process in which they have undertaken consultations I think in about 50 countries with different groups – students, labour unions, the industrial lobbies – to see what is important for that country and that is feeding into the Secretary-General's ...

All these three rivers so to speak have to come together somewhere. And where do they come together? What India wants? We want that they should come together in an intergovernmental negotiating process in which there is a level-playing ground, in which developing and developed countries can sit down together and have a genuine negotiation.

It has to be different from the MDGs. MDGs sort of came from the sky. There is a modern day Ten Commandments - you will do this, you will do this, you will do this, you will do this, you will do this. That is fine because most of the MDGs were good. The one that was really good was that the developed countries would help finance these things, and that is the one that has not been met.

But this time we want that everything that we agree to is actually negotiated. So, we are hoping that with these high-level summits, these high-level events, these various streams will come together; an intergovernmental process will be announced, and will be actually set up, start work next year, by which time we would have done some amount of preparatory work on the Sustainable Development Goals, we will have some idea what to do with the remaining aspects of the MDGs and then we would take it forward.

Which direction do we want to take it forward? We want to keep the focus on poverty eradication - poverty eradication without qualifications. We hear things like, okay we will eradicate extreme poverty, or we will eradicate poverty as long as it does not impact on environment, or we will eradicate poverty in a sustainable fashion. Now, these are all very loaded terms. In a country like India and several other countries where poverty is an everyday reality, you want poverty eradication, period. You do not want it with qualifiers. We want it with if we know it can be done with economic growth. So, poverty eradication and economic growth, these are the crucial things and means of implementation.

And it is very important that your development agenda is not only for developing countries. Your development agenda should cover all countries. Your development agenda for instance should cover consumption patterns in developed countries because consumption patterns in developed countries impact upon our environment, impact upon various other things. Your development agenda should also cover reform of the world's governing institutions, financial and political as far as we are concerned.

So, there are a huge number of priorities we have in this. Today is not the day but as we go along if any of you want to seriously pursue these aspects, we would be very happy to provide you with material or with briefings.

This is going to be a major focus for us during this. Hopefully, as the months of next year go on and we actually move through an intergovernmental process, things will begin to come together. That is one of the things which I wanted to explain at length.

I will touch upon some of the other aspects which will continue to be our focus whether in our statements, in our bilateral meetings, in our support of resolutions. UN Security Council reform is going to be really on the table again. We are going to work with the next President GA, Ambassador John Ashe, who we expect would have a more constructive role than the previous President. And we hope that the intergovernmental process which has already done nine rounds will now actually make that quality jump. He has got a sort of text in which he has put various people's positions. But what he does not have is an actual text which can be negotiated, what is called in the UN lingo a Concise Working Document (CWD). So, what we need is a CWD on the table.

We will continue to lobby with the African Group because without the 53-member African Group coming on board, you are not going to get those votes in the General Assembly for reform. And we really need to take the message of the C10 and L69 common text to the African Group back into the capitals so that they get the political support of moving towards reform.

We are going to work with CARICOM, the Caribbean countries. They have come up with a very encouraging move a few months ago in which they have said yes we must have reform. They are willing to work with the African Group, they are willing to work with L69, and they are willing to move this to negotiations.

We are going to continue to work with G4. Here I think there is a lesson to be learnt from what happened in Brazil, which we would like to take forward in India frankly, because Brazil said that this is not something which should be left to New York, or should be left to the negotiating rooms. This needs outreach. This needs people to need writing about it, people need talking about it. So, after the G4 meeting they had a seminar of about a 100 people of largely media, academics and so on. And I was amazed that it resulted in about 60, 70 articles coming out. I was also amazed at how little the public out there knew about what was going on. So, we would like to take a lesson of that. We will be working with one of our think tanks and we are going to be probably setting up something on a smaller scale. I think that is something on which we would like all of you to be involved and to be part of

The other issues which are going to be pushed, besides UN Security Council reform, are issues of ...(Inaudible)... concern to us are: peacekeeping for instance in which India continues to be a major player, as you all know. The nature of peacekeeping is changing. The nature of decision making regarding peacekeeping is causing us concern in many ways. The nature of conflicts is changing. The classical role of peacekeeping is being eroded. And the peacekeepers are being asked to do more and more under difficult conditions. We have a concern as a major troop-contributing country. We have been pushing these concerns. We will continue to highlight these in various fora.

Terrorism is going to be ongoing subject which we will be following up. And of course there is going to be focus on the disarmament aspects where we have traditional resolutions to offer. There is going to be focus, although the main focus is in Geneva but when it comes back to New York, on human rights aspects. And you already know that we have an election coming up which is going to be the Comptroller and Auditor General of India for the UN Board of Auditors in November this year.

I am just going to stop there because I can see that I put some of you to sleep. So, I will stop there and maybe the questions will help revive the audience.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you Navtej. And all of you: arise, awake and stop not! Now the floor is yours.

Q: Sir, There will be both Nawaz Sharif and Prime Minister in the General Assembly. Is there a possibility of their meeting?

Official Spokesperson: We already told you in that on the 20th September the Foreign Secretary will herself brief you and tell you about the Prime Minister's engagements. My point is very clear. We will answer about Prime Minister's engagements on the 20th. So, please be patient and give us the space and time to respond to this, and we will respond to this.

Q: What will be the thrust of Prime Minister's address to UNGA?

Additional Secretary (IO): This is going to be difficult one to answer at this stage because work is constantly going on on the Prime Minister's Address.

Q: Talking of the UN Security Council reforms, when you say we are going to continue lobbying with the African Group, would there be some outreach or bilateral meetings in New York itself since so many African Ministers and others are going to be there?

Additional Secretary (IO): The way it works is that we have had a special delegation go down to the African Union Summit earlier this year where this was a major piece of conversation and major lobbying with each of the African Heads of Delegation. That is the right place to lobby. What happens in New York is almost a very technical-level negotiation which constantly goes on between the Missions and between negotiating groups, say the L69, and this is at Ambassador level. But I get your point. It is something which we will utilize every possible opportunity even in New York when our people are there. That is because what is being seen in New York in General Assembly statements at the Head of State, Head of Government, Foreign Minister level, is that the large majority of speakers who is in favour of UN reforms. We have to note those, we have to take those, and then we have to get down to the technical level and say this is what you are pushing, your President, your Prime Minister, and this is where we need to now get our heads together. So it is a constant process, Manish.

Q: On the counterterrorism issues, there are many organizations or persons being directly named from the UN Security Council and the member states are not taking appropriate action as they are supposed to take. Is it a matter of concern? How would you focus on this in United Nations General Assembly or which forum will you raise this concern?

Additional Secretary (IO): We have been raising this when we were in the UN Security Council as Chairman of the Counterterrorism Committee. And this is something which we talk about every time we talk about terrorism that there are red lines, there are UN sanctions, and these must be respected, and these should not be allowed to be watered down from what have been accepted at an international level. We do not believe in minor distinctions on this in which people can be allowed to cross these lines depending upon political exigencies. I think this is something that we are constantly talking about. You are right, we will be talking about it in the Committees when it comes to discussing terrorism, and we will be talking about it in our general statements and our bilateral dialogues.

Q: This is regarding the same point you have raised about the global financing of terror. I think my country Syria has been inflicted by terrorists at the moment and more than 2000 dollars are being paid for each Al-Nusra recruit. So, there is a good amount of money spent. How do you think it is relevant in these talks at the UN when they interpret the law according to their own ...?

Additional Secretary (IO): I mentioned it more in a thematic context, not pertaining to one particular arena of activity. It is very important thematically to accept these concepts and to decide to work together because this is not an on-off thing that today one part of the world is in trouble so we get activated, next we keep quiet for the next five years and so on. We have to have an international comprehensive effort, which is why India has been proposing for several years a Convention on Counterterrorism at the UN. And we are trying to push it, get it off the ground, and get it negotiated, and we are faced with all sorts of technicalities which are slowing it down. So, certainly we are going to be discussing the financing aspects, the cooperation aspects in all the terrorism bodies. We are no longer on the Security Council at the moment but there will be several occasions where we can. As far as Syria is concerned, I think that is a subject of another debate; and when and how the UN comes into it is going to be something which we are going to have to see.

Q: Sir, you are saying that we want to eradicate poverty without any qualifiers. Could you please elaborate how you would sell this 'no qualifiers, no sustainability, no environment concerns' at UNGA? You know our development record so far on MDGs is very very poor even if you compare it to South Asia. So, what is going to be our explanation?

Additional Secretary (IO): I do not think that our MDG record is that poor in two or three of those very critical MDGs. Some, yes we need much more to do. What I meant when I said we want to eradicate poverty without qualifications, it does not mean that we want to do it like that on our own. But certainly we do not want the goal of poverty eradication in international dialogue to be dimmed by putting on qualifiers. People say that people are poor here because you do not take care of environment. No. I think it was said by one of our former Prime Ministers that poverty is the biggest polluter. So, it is actually the other way around. That is what I meant. Certainly we are committed to Rio, we are committed to sustainable development but we are committed to a balanced approach. The economic, the social, and the environmental pillars of sustainable development should move together. You cannot leave out one at the cost of the other. That is what I meant.

Q: This question is related to the previous one. You said a high-level panel is preparing a report and you have to see that India's major concerns are not missed out. What are these concerns which you see missing out?

Additional Secretary (IO): The high level panel has already given its report to the UN Secretary-General. Based on that, the UN Secretary-General has now given his report. So, our purpose in our conversations has been, and this is our position also, that the high-level panel report is a report which should be a good input. It should not be the end result because we have not had a chance to negotiate it. It is an input which will go into the negotiations. Concerns there were - I will give it to in a simple one-sentence form - we do not want the development agenda to be converted into a governance agenda.

The development agenda must remain a development agenda; it must retain its focus on poverty eradication and economic growth; and it should be for everybody; and it should have in itself means of sustaining the implementation. Basically like in Rio you had the two things of you need technology assistance and you need financing. How are you going to save the environment? So, you need technology sharing, you need financing, you need means of implementation. So, you cannot have governance which is global and financing which is domestic. We have to balance these. I must say that our conversations with the various interlocutors helped to introduce certain sense of balance, a little more balance in the recent report that we have seen from the UN Secretary-General. But now we would like to get it to the negotiating table and then make sure that. Not only India, there is a large majority of countries that are developing countries and they have their concerns also. Question: You spoke about a lack of implementation. Any bright ideas from our side whether it is CBDR or ...?

Additional Secretary (IO): You took the words out of my mouth. CBDR is a very important Rio+20 or in fact a Rio principle. This Common But Differentiated Responsibilities in itself builds in the two aspects that I have mentioned about technology cooperation and sharing as well as financing. So, it is very important to keep the debate on Sustainable Development Goals as well as on the broader post-2015 development agenda on the Rio+20 principles, which means essentially CBDR, but not only.

Official Spokesperson: If we have no more questions on UNGA, let us move on to other aspects.

Q: Sir, His Highness Aga Khan is here in Delhi and he is meeting many dignitaries. Can you just throw some light on the purpose and outcome of the visit?

Official Spokesperson: Dr. Suman, the visit is ongoing. So, you would appreciate that I cannot indicate about the outcome. The Aga Khan Foundation has been actively supporting a lot of activities in Delhi and outside Delhi related to restoration for example, related to poverty alleviation. The Aga Khan Foundation is an important partner, with whom we do interact on a regular basis to promote socioeconomic development. In that context he is visiting India. We will of course let you know the outcome once all his meetings are over. I hope that clarifies the situation. Right now, even as we speak, he is inaugurating part of the restoration work of the Humayun's Tomb.

Q: My question is related to the ongoing war crimes trial in Bangladesh in which several Jamaat-e-Islami leaders have been convicted - some got life term, some death sentences. However, several countries and international human rights organisations have criticised the process citing its various shortcomings and drawbacks. I just wanted to know what India's take on the issue is. Do you think it is Bangladesh's internal matter or do you have a certain opinion on that?

Official Spokesperson: I think even that statement that you said is an opinion. That said, I think we have said it previously that while this is an internal matter for Bangladesh and for the Bangladeshi people to decide on, we do understand that given the horrific crimes that were committed by those who are now being tried, we do understand and take into account the aspirations of the Bangladeshi people to try and bring a closure to this by ensuring that justice is provided. As regards what the procedural issues are, this is for the Bangladeshi people to decide and come to a decision on.

Q: Akbar, this is on Bangladesh, the question which was just asked. This relates to a more specific event. As you know, one of the convicts who was convicted in the 1971 war crimes case was given a lifer and he appealed to the Supreme Court of Bangladesh and the Supreme Court enhanced that punishment to capital punishment. As you know, these are the kind of cases which triggered the Shahbag Square demonstrations and the unrest there in the civil society. The question is, on this particular specific case do you have a reaction, does India have a take on this particular specific thing, and how does it impinge on the forthcoming elections there.

Official Spokesperson: Good try!

I think I have already responded to our generic view on the issue and on how we see it. On the specifics I responded to him by saying that we will not get into the process of this nor will we get into each and every specific case. But we have confidence in the justice system in Bangladesh and that it will deliver justice to the people of Bangladesh.

Q: Al Qaeda has given direction to its cadres not to attack Hindus and Muslims in Muslim-dominated countries. How do you see this development?

Official Spokesperson: You know our view on Al Qaeda that it is a terrorist organisation, that we are against terrorism, that we would like to see it extinguished. What it says is not a matter for us to respond to because as far as we are concerned it is evil personified.

Q: On the sidelines of UNGA, will India raise this issue with Italy of noncooperation in the Italian marines' case? Or, will you raise this matter in any form there?

Official Spokesperson: I do not think why we should raise it separately. We are in contact with the Italian Government. In fact, just today, for your information, Mr. Staffan de Mistura, who is the Special Envoy of the Italian Government, met with the External Affairs Minister. We have explained to him that this is a case which relates to legal process. We as diplomats can try and facilitate an interaction between a legal viewpoint which the Italian Government has and another legal viewpoint which our Government has. But this is ultimately a legal issue. We have suggested that we will facilitate interactions on this matter, and Mr. De Mistura, it is my understanding, has agreed to stay back, and the process is on. So, why do we need to interact somewhere else on this? We are interacting with them on a regular basis.

Q: When the matter is sub judice, how do you consider it an interactive process? How do you further engage with the Italians on this when the matter is being considered by our courts?

Official Spokesperson: That is right, the matter is sub judice. But I do not think anybody is questioning that the judiciary has to decide on this. Ultimately what they are discussing is what process to adopt. And in that there can be different opinions between different viewpoints on this. I started by saying that this is a legal process. All we as diplomats can do is to try and facilitate direct interaction or understanding of each other's legal views. If things are required, it will go to a legal process and be clarified. But if things can be worked out between the two parties who are lawyers on both the sides, perhaps we can take it forward. So, the issue is not that anybody is intervening in the legal process. The issue is only to perhaps translate what is in the legal view of a group of lawyers to another group of lawyers. That is where we are in this.

Q: On the four marines who are in Italy, India has been insisting that they be sent back to further the investigations. Staffan de Mistura today very clearly said that Italy is not going to send them back. Anything on that front? The Indian Administration and the Government has been insisting that they be sent back, but the Italian Government is only talking about the three options that they have given to India and are really not moving on at least looking at sending the four marines back.

Official Spokesperson: Geeta, as they say, half knowledge is always dangerous. You are talking of three options; there are other options also that are being considered. You will understand that this is an iterative process. I cannot get into outlining what options are there on the table, but there are several options including the three you said and others too.

Q: Recently the Foreign Secretary visited Nepal. If there is election in Nepal in November will India give actual support to the election?

Official Spokesperson: Our support to the election process in Nepal is largely logistical in nature, and we have already begun that process. That process entails provision of, for example, vehicles for the Election Commission. We provided vehicles for the Election Commission. We also are committed to a larger number of vehicles also for the security services. That is because an essential ingredient of an election process is to ensure safe and peaceful environment for the voters and in that context the Nepalese Government had requested us to provide vehicles, which we are in the process of providing additional vehicles. We have provided one set of vehicles and the rest are in the process and we hope to provide them by October.

Q: On Sushmita Banerjee case, anything on the probe that is going on? The Deputy Foreign Minister was here yesterday and he spoke to the Foreign Secretary.

Official Spokesperson: On the sad case of Dr. Sushmita Banerjee, things have evolved in the probe since we last met. While it was initially for us very distressing that an Indian woman was killed brutally, we now find that it is taking a disturbing turn. And that is that the Governor of Paktia Province has indicated to our Ambassador that those who are involved in this, based on arrests made since we last met here, seem to be what he described as Pakistani Taliban, and the indication was that they were based from areas beyond Afghanistan borders. This is extremely disturbing for us. But we have left the investigation part in the hands of the investigating authorities in whom we have full confidence. And this is what they have shared with us so far. We understand that six to seven people have been arrested. What is coming out from them is what has been shared with others too, and they have shared it with us. We will follow this case with laser-like precision because this is something extremely disturbing.Question: Can you clarify India's position on participation in Commonwealth's Heads of Government meeting slated sometime at Colombo?

Official Spokesperson: Our view has been that we will take a call on this in due course. And this has also been reflected elsewhere including by the organisers. We will take a call well in time and we will also inform you on this.

Q: Any readout on ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: This is a Ministry of Defence issue and this is your second question.

Q: What is your reaction on firing in Poonch by Pakistani side in Mendhar.

Official Spokesperson: I have always said that what happens on the border is for the sentinels of the border to respond to and they will respond. You have heard me say this several times. Nice try again!

Q: This is relating to Iran's rupee-trade agreement with India on crude oil exports. Has Iran expressed any apprehension on payment by Indian side in rupee terms? I believe there was some kind of agreement that for some imports of crude India will be able to pay 100 per cent in rupees, but they no longer want to go ahead with that.

Official Spokesperson: This is your take on it I understand.

Q: This was a report in newspapers.

Official Spokesperson: My point is that I do not know whether the Iranian Government ever told this that they were willing to take 100 per cent. My understanding is that there is a percentage agreed to between Iran and India in terms of how we will pay for crude. And that is, 45 per cent and 55 per cent. The rest is your take on it.

Thank you very much.

569. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary on Prime Minister's Visit to USA and UNGA.

New Delhi, September 20, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. As you are aware, this would be an interaction relating to the Prime Minister's visit to the United States.

We have here with us Foreign Secretary Mrs. Sujatha Singh, who will be speaking to you initially. She will make an opening statement following which she will be willing to answer any questions. These questions, as is usual, we will focus on the visit. At the end of it if there is still time, she is willing to take a few questions on other issues. But the primary focus, as usual, will be on the briefing and that is on the Prime Minister's visit to the US.

On Foreign Secretary's right is Mr. Vikram Doraiswami who is Joint Secretary (Americas), and he will assist her in case there are any detailed queries that you would like to ask.

With those introductory words I would request Foreign Secretary to make her opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Good afternoon.

As you are all aware, the Prime Minister is visiting the United States from Thursday, September 26 to Monday, September 30.

The Prime Minister will meet President Obama on September 27 at the White House in Washington DC. The meeting will be followed by a press availability and a working lunch. PM will be accompanied by the External Affairs Minister, who will join his delegation in Washington DC.

On September 27 evening, PM will reach New York. He will address the General Debate in the forenoon of September 28. PM and EAM will use the opportunity afforded by the UNGA Session to have bilateral meetings with some of their counterparts. I understand that you have been briefed by Additional Secretary Navtej Sarna about the programmes involving PM and EAM in the United Nations in New York. Therefore, I will focus my remarks on the bilateral visit to the United States.

This will be PM's third summit meeting with President Obama, following an exchange of state visits first in Washington DC in 2009, second in New Delhi in 2010. The two leaders have also met frequently on the margins of other multilateral events.

PM's visit caps a period of heightened exchanges at a high political level. It takes forward a recent momentum in bilateral exchanges of visits, including the visit of Secretary Kerry and Energy Secretary Moniz for the 4th Strategic Dialogue in June, and Vice President Biden's visit in July, as well as visits by a number of our senior Ministers including our Finance Minister, Commerce Minister, Home Minister and the Human Resources Minister, as well as Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, in the last six months. At the senior official and other levels, there have been over 55 exchanges of visits in the year so far.

This working visit between PM and President Obama is intended to signal that the relationship has reached a stage of maturity. There has been positive progress recorded in a wide array of areas, through existing mechanisms that cover over 33 separate dialogue structures.

We expect that the summit-level meeting will reaffirm political commitment to the ongoing effort on both sides to intensify our strategic partnership. It is an opportunity to underline at a high political level, the strategic vision that brings our countries closer together.

We anticipate that the meeting will focus in particular on reviewing our bilateral cooperation, touching upon the following key pillars:

1. Energy: This includes clean energy, our expanding partnership in hydrocarbons, as well as our effort to develop our partnership in peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Both sides will also review progress in implementation of the civil nuclear initiative that is a pillar of our strategic partnership.

2. Security: Continuing to deepen our defence relationship, which already includes joint military exercises, and acquisition of military hardware. We will explore ways of expanding our defence ties beyond a buyer-seller relationship to a joint partnership in design, development and production of defence material. We are also interested in intensifying cooperation between our Home Ministry and the US Department of Homeland Security to enhance capacity building including in policing of large cities, partnerships in security technologies, combating counterfeit currency, and in securing ports, airports and land border terminals.

3.Trade and Economic relations: This is a key pillar of the relationship, with a combined total of US$ 100 billion in goods and services trade. Both sides are working at a senior official level to address issues of concern on each side, in areas ranging from manufacturing, trade, investment, innovation as well as with regard to issues relating to non-immigrant visas for our highly skilled IT and ITES workers.

4.Strategic consultations: We now have wide-ranging consultations with the US on regional and global issues. This includes consultations on East Asia, Central Asia, and West Asia, as well as trilateral dialogues with Afghanistan and Japan. We look to consolidate and build upon such dialogues, including on the Indian Ocean region.

Apart from this, the President and the Prime Minister will also discuss regional and global issues, including the situation in West Asia, South Asia and also our expanding cooperation with the regional institutions in Southeast Asia.

In closing, let me add that a visit such as this is focused not merely on deliverables but also on establishing and reaffirming the strategic benefits that each side derives from this relationship.

I will be happy to take your questions now.

Q: Madam, are we going ahead with the nuclear pact between Westinghouse and NPCIL? If that pact goes through, how will it square with India's civil nuclear liability legislation?

Foreign Secretary: Discussions are ongoing between NPCIL and WEC, and it is our hope that these discussions will be closed successfully. The fact of the matter is that all contracts with foreign companies are subject to the Indian Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Act and Rules. The contracts have to be consistent with Indian law and there is no question of Indian law being violated or diluted. As a government company, NPCIL will follow government stipulations that all contracts it concludes with foreign partners will be consistent with Indian law.

Q: Madam, this is almost the last year of Prime Minister's ten-year tenure and he is going to meet President Obama. There are three issues that he has been consistently pursuing - nuclear cooperation, FDI in retail, and climate change - he has been telling him many times. Do you think that there will be any conclusive talk between President Obama and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in this visit?

Foreign Secretary: I think what we must realise is that all this is something that progresses with each meeting that takes place, with each summit that takes place, and all the meetings at official levels also that discuss these issues. You have raised three specific issues: each of them has been progressed in various ways at various points of time.

On the civil nuclear initiative, the Government is committed to taking it forward. We feel that it is essential to expanding India's energy options and to contribute to our energy security. Nuclear power is an essential element of our overall energy basket, and we are determined to take forward the civil nuclear initiative so that our country is able to benefit from the expansion of nuclear power.

On the issue of climate change, we intend to enhance our dialogue with the US on issues relating to climate change. I can tell you that the Working Group that the EAM and Secretary Kerry agreed to establish in June this year will seek to find ways of working together in a practical manner to meet a shared, overall objective of reducing the impact of climate on human activity while securing space for our developmental and economic objectives.

On FDI in retail, it is part of the ongoing liberalisation of the Indian economy and that is an ongoing task. That is an ongoing objective, and these things take time, as we all know.

Q: Madam, the American nuclear companies have raised certain queries. They have expressed doubts about Indian nuclear liability law. ...(Inaudible)... those companies agreeing to India law, India has decided to go ahead with initial works agreement. Do you think the American companies will ultimately agree to Indian law?

Foreign Secretary: I think I have already answered this question to some extent. Any company, whether it is a foreign company or whether it is a domestic company, has to follow procedures that are consistent with Indian law. All contracts have to be consistent with Indian law. There is no question of Indian law being violated or diluted. That is the bottom line.

Q: My question is about the nuclear issue but not about the liability law. It is very symbolic that Dr. Manmohan Singh will go in September to Washington and in October to Moscow. They will discuss nuclear cooperation between our countries. What is the difference between the approach of the Indian side in the activation of nuclear cooperation with old partner Russia and new partner USA? It is not about liability law but in general.

Foreign Secretary: I think you have to see that with whichever country we have cooperation in civil nuclear issues, we are basically trying to achieve the same objective. We are trying to build nuclear power plants that will contribute to our energy security, and doing it in a manner that enhances our energy security.

Q: Madam, I just want to understand, you said both leaders will discuss the concerns concerning the non-immigrant visa for highly skilled manpower. What are some of the concerns, if you can throw some light on that?

Foreign Secretary: I think the concerns are fairly well known that Indian IT companies have a certain business model and that the procedures that are presently being discussed in Congress would make it very difficult for this business model to be continued successfully. So, what we are trying to do basically is to flag our concerns in the manner in which this is going to impact on our highly-skilled non-immigrant workers. We are trying to flag the fact that some aspects of the proposed immigration reform would adversely impact visas for highly-skilled non-immigrant workers.

Q: A meeting is expected between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Mr. Nawaz Sharif ...

Official Spokesperson: We are talking of the US now. There are others who have questions.

Q: It is in that context. The US had announced a Rewards for Justice Programme on Hafiz Saeed. But there has really been no action on Hafiz Saeed who definitely seems to be one of the biggest bone of contention between India and Pakistan talks and relations. So, is that an issue that India will be flagging with the US again in some way?

Foreign Secretary: You are talking about a US programme for Hafiz Saeed. I do not see why I need to get into that at all. We have concerns relating to terrorism. We have concerns relating to terrorism which have been very explicitly stated by the Prime Minister, and we flag this to our strategic partners to tell them what our concerns are.

Q: Madam, could you elaborate on the regional security component of the discussions, particularly Afghanistan? What the key elements of those discussions will be and whether Indian ...(Inaudible)...NATO troops be discussed?

Foreign Secretary: You are right. 2014 is a very significant year as far as Afghanistan is concerned. When you are looking at the regional security situation, you are looking at a complexity of factors and different scenarios that might unfold. We continue to seek clarity on the upcoming security and political transitions with the partners with whom we are in contact in the run up to 2014 which will see the drawdown of US and other ISAF troops.

Q: Madam, when Mr. Obama came to India he told the Indian Parliament that he would love to see India as a permanent member of the Security Council. Efforts have been going on for more than twenty years now but things are not moving forward. Is the expansion of the Security Council likely to figure in the Prime Minister's talks with Mr. Obama and other people he is going to meet?

Foreign Secretary: The expansion of the UN Security Council, the permanent membership, continues to remain an important priority for India. The Prime Minister would be taking up this issue with key interlocutors, including at the UN General Assembly.

Q: Madam, I want to bring you back to the regional and global issues. You said there will be a discussion on Afghanistan in particular. There are certain issues where India has raised the concern of talking to the Taliban and their opening office in Doha, while also you have stressed on a proactive role for original players. How do you see the mechanism working with India, Iran and neighbouring country of Afghanistan, post 2014?

Foreign Secretary: The situation in Afghanistan is a fairly complex one. We believe in a process of dialogue in Afghanistan which is Afghan led, Afghan owned, and Afghan controlled. This has been our bottom line. In its process of transition - whether it is the political transition, whether it is the security transition or whether it is economic transition – we believe that the Afghan Government needs to be supported in its efforts to achieve peace and reconciliation. Whoever the players are, as long as they are willing to work within the parameters of the Afghan Constitution, need to be supported. India is doing its part in the reconstruction and economic development of Afghanistan. You are aware that we have a fairly sizeable aid programme that has managed to win hearts and goodwill in Afghanistan, in all people in Afghanistan, and we intend to continue with that and give whatever support that is within our capacity to give.

Q: Madam, the Prime Minister will be meeting President Obama ...(Inaudible)... They have a huge subsidy under the US Farm Bill. Will the Prime Minister take up this issue with Obama? Indian farmers are suffering on account of the huge subsidy given in US.

Foreign Secretary: I think that there are specific forums to take these issues forward. At this point of time it is not possible to go into great detail as to what the Prime Minister is going to take up or not take up. But our position is very clear. We have communicated the concerns that we have relating to agriculture and food security at the other fora that we have with the United States. So, the US is well aware of what our position on this is. Whether it will figure in this meeting between the Prime Minister and President Obama, I cannot foresee at this point of time.

Q: Madam, you have mentioned the second point that Prime Minister will discuss about ...(Inaudible)... policing in the large cities. Will you explain something on that?

Foreign Secretary: Whenever we talk with strategic partners on various issues of mutual interest, we like to share best practices, we like to explain a little bit about what each of us is doing and whether there is something that we can learn from each other in this process. So at a very general level, I guess that is what we will be looking at.

Q: Madam Secretary, from what you mentioned I understand there will be a discussion on cooperation on border security. Will that touch upon the issue of security on border in the northern parts of India including Ladakh?

Foreign Secretary: When we are talking about border security, we are talking about our check posts on the border. We are talking about the integrated customs check posts; we are talking about mechanisms at the border to facilitate people crossing across the border and improve services there. And this is one of the subgroups for cooperation in the Homeland Security Dialogue. It has nothing to do with the aspects that you mentioned.

Q: Madam, In the US when the Prime Minister meets Nawaz Sharif there shall be talks on three issues.

Official Spokesperson: We are still in Washington and then we shall go to New York, Please wait for a short while.

Q: Madam, there have been a number of issues you have covered. There is one other issue that I have seen quite widely reported about and that is refrigeration gases. There is a move to sign an agreement to say that India will phase out the use of certain refrigeration gases which have an impact on the climate. I know there has been some pushback and some interest groups in India are saying that this will tie India into buying patented gases from DuPont and other US companies. I am interested to know what the state of affairs is.

Foreign Secretary: I presume you are talking about HFCs. We are discussing the issue of HFCs with the United States. While discussing it, we will not only be looking at the international understandings on HFCs that we have in the context of the UNFCCC, Rio+20, and G20. But also we will discuss this bilaterally with the US in order to develop a better mutual understanding of each other's positions. You may be aware that bilateral India-US Task Force on HFCs was established in 2011. And we think it would be useful to convene a meeting of this task force to discuss all relevant issues related to HFCs in the bilateral context.

Q: This sounds like it is a work in process and not something we are going to see signed during the bilateral. Would that be a correct reading of what you just said?

Foreign Secretary: It is a work in progress. We have to see what happens.

Q: Madam, besides the IT professionals visa and this skilled or non-skilled workers visa, will they discuss about the students visa also? Nowadays there is a big problem for students also to get US visa.

Foreign Secretary: There are fora, like I said there are 33 standard dialogues between India and the United States. So, many of these issues which can be very technical in nature would be discussed at one of these groups. We have a consular dialogue and we take up these issues at the consular dialogue, probably not at the Prime Minister's level.

Q: Will the talks revolve around cyber security issues also? After the NSA's snooping, the prism and all the concerns across the world we have, will that also be part of the discussions in Washington?

Foreign Secretary: Like I said, there are several dialogues that are ongoing between India and the US. And if you waited for a summit to raise every single issue on which you want to have discussions, they you would be waiting for a very long time. So, it is already being discussed at the appropriate fora.

Q: Madam, will PM meet Mr. Nawaz Sharif? If they meet, what will we talk about? Dawood Ibrahim, etc., etc?

Foreign Secretary: The Prime Minister's programme is still in the process of being firmed up. So, I cannot really confirm to you whether he will meet Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif or not. On what he will talk about, he has to meet him first. So, let us see.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: Please see, As the prime minister said, there are certain harsh realities on the ground. The harsh reality on the ground is that we continue to face acts of terror by groups operating from Pakistan and from territories under Pakistan's control. There are also many persons indulging in hostile propaganda against India who continue to roam around freely in Pakistan. And despite repeated commitments from the highest levels in Pakistan, and very positive statements like you have said, we see very little actual progress in the efforts to bring those responsible for the Mumbai terror attacks to justice. So, these are certain harsh realities that we have to deal with. So, let us see what happens.

Q: Madam Foreign Secretary, I just wanted to crosscheck this. You mentioned that the Prime Minister's programme in New York is still not finalised. Apart from the possible meet with Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, you mentioned that he would be engaging in other bilateral meetings on the sidelines of the UNGA. Could you throw some light on who are some of the other leaders he might be meeting?

Foreign Secretary: There are certain bilateral meetings that are in the process of being firmed up. But since his entire programme is still in the process of being firmed up, I cannot confirm to you which are the specific meetings.

Q: Madam, I know you will not be confirming the bilateral meeting but Bangladesh Foreign Minister has announced yesterday that on 28th September there will be a bilateral meeting on the sidelines of the UNGA. I am not asking about the details of what the Prime Minister would say. But I have another question. Prime Minister probably will inaugurate a 400 kv power transmission line by which India would be supplying power to Bangladesh. It would be a big event for both the countries and Prime Minister would be inaugurating it perhaps. Have we invited anybody from Bangladesh or would Prime Minister be talking to Bangladesh PM on this issue?

Foreign Secretary: First let me agree with you, it is a very big event. We see this as a milestone in our cooperation with Bangladesh and there are certain discussions on as to how to commemorate this. I do not want to go into details right now. They are still being worked out.

Yes, we hope that there will be a meeting between the Prime Minister and Bangladeshi Prime Minister in New York.

Q: Madam, you met the Afghan Deputy Foreign Minister earlier this week in Delhi and we were told cryptically that events related to Afghanistan would be discussed on the margins of the UNGA. Could you elaborate on what these events concerning Afghanistan would be?

Foreign Secretary: You know that the relationship between India and Afghanistan is a very close one. Our ties go back centuries. We have close historical, civilisational ties. India is one of the closest friends that Afghanistan has. These meetings are part of an ongoing process where we touch base from time to time to discuss progress on the various projects that we have going between us, and to exchange views on what further needs to be done. So, that has to be seen in that context.

Q: Madam, since you have already said, and Dipu Moni yesterday said, that there will be a bilateral between the Prime Ministers of India and Bangladesh, could you elaborate on what kind of talks may materialise and what is the agenda between Bangladesh and India? Since Teesta agreement has not been made possible and the land boundary agreement has also not been made possible, is there anything else which can come up in this discussion?

Foreign Secretary: We have such close relations with Bangladesh that our ties span an entire gamut of issues. Despite the fact that neither the Teesta waters nor the land boundary agreement has gone through, you must know that we remain deeply committed to delivering on these agreements. So, there will be plenty to talk about whether it is our cooperation on the economic side, lines of credit, supply of power, any number of issues in keeping with the very close nature of relations between our two countries.

Q: Madam, I just wanted to know whether you could shed some light on Prime Minister's visit to Washington, whether the issue of Indian purchases of Iranian crude would come up and specifically what level of Indian purchases would be compliant with US sanctions on Iran?

Foreign Secretary: It is very difficult to say what is going to come up and what is not going to come up. They are meeting for a limited period of time and if they are going to discuss every single issue that all of you have asked me whether they will come up or not... I think that on this entire question of purchases of Iranian crude, that is something that we do with Iran. I am not sure that we would want to raise it from our side. If the United States wants to raise it, it is welcome to.

Q: Madam, Secretary (R)'s office has written a note to large parts of the Government – military, even your Joint Secretary (North) – about Ladakh-type intrusions in three places in Bhutan. Since Bhutan is a very friendly country and we also have Indian soldiers there, is there anything the Indian Government is doing about it? There has not been one report but several reports.

Foreign Secretary: Shrinjoy, I am coming back to headquarters after six years overseas and I am really surprised to be faced with a question about what Secretary (R) may or may not have written to ..

Q: A copy is with me, if you want to see.

Foreign Secretary: I do not want to see the copy because even if you showed me the copy I would not comment on internal communications between Ministries or organisations in Government of India. You should not be having that copy as a matter fact, especially if it is classified.

Q: Can I ask another question?

Foreign Secretary: No.

Official Spokesperson: You have used up your chance.

Q: Madam, recently there were news items that Iranian Oil Minister has asked Indian Ambassador that they would not be accepting entire payments in rupees, and also on the fact that they are not willing to sign the production-sharing contracts with the Indian companies, also on their stand on not selling cheap gas to India. Then we also had this tanker issue with Iran. Are we seeing a hardening stance from Iran? And what is happening on the imports side? Are we planning to maintain at the last year's level or cut them?

Foreign Secretary: We have a longstanding energy partnership with Iran which we greatly value, and it has proved to be very reliable as well. In recent months we have evolved a system of payment for crude oil imported from Iran that envisages payment of some parts of imports in Indian Rupees. That is the factual position as of date.

Q: India has started paying the entire amount in Rupees to save on the foreign exchange and the Oil Minister had also written to the Prime Minister saying that it will help in saving foreign exchange in their dialogue.

Foreign Secretary: As of now the situation is that we pay part of it in Rupees and the rest has to be decided on as to how it is to be paid because there are difficulties relating to the payment. So, let us leave it at that.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction. Thank you.

(text in italics is unofficial translation)

570. Prime Minister's statement prior to his departure for a bilateral visit to the USA and to attend the UN General Assembly Session.

New Delhi, September 25, 2013.

I leave today for Washington for a bilateral summit meeting with President Obama on 27th September. I will, thereafter, travel to New York to address the General Debate of the 68th session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Over the past decade, our relationship with the United States, which is one of our most important relationships, has transformed into a global strategic partnership.

The intensive, high-level bilateral visits over the last few months reflect the strong momentum of our engagement. We have also registered impressive progress in our cooperation across the full spectrum of the relationship.

We see the US as a long-term partner in our development efforts, and in fostering a global environment that is conducive to our growth. For India, the US remains a key source of technology, investment, innovation and resources, and one of the most important destinations for our goods and services. We have productive and deepening partnerships in trade and investment, defence, counter-terrorism, intelligence, internal security, cyber security, civil nuclear energy, environment, health, higher education, space, science and technology and culture. People-to-people contacts are a strong feature of our engagement. We have also launched development partnership in third countries.

My visit is an opportunity to review our joint efforts and chart a course for our future cooperation.

I also look forward to discussing a broad range of global and regional developments, and how we can work together to advance our shared interests.

The UN General Assembly will focus this year on the follow up to the 2012 UN Conference on Sustainable Development held in Rio de Janeiro, which marked the 20th anniversary of the Earth Summit. The General Assembly will also look at drawing up the global development agenda after 2015, which is the target date for the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) set in 2000. Despite successes on many parameters, the world as a whole is unlikely to meet the MDGs, and it is important that we sustain our efforts. I will emphasize the importance of maintaining poverty eradication and inclusive development at the core of the post-2015 development agenda. The Sustainable Development Goals that are expected to be drawn up as part of the follow-up to the Rio+20 Conference should ensure a holistic approach to sustainable development objectives, ensuring a balanced treatment of its economic, social and environmental dimensions as well as universal applicability.

The UN General Assembly will also meet at a time of enormous political upheaval, particularly in West Asia, coupled with a global economic slowdown that has now affected even the emerging economies. I will convey our strong conviction that global challenges are best addressed through multilateral approaches, with the United Nations at its centre. I will also stress the pressing need for early reform of institutions of global political and economic governance, particularly the United Nations Security Council, so that the UN can play an effective and credible role. The year 2015 will mark the 70th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, and it would be a fitting occasion to conclude the ongoing reform efforts.

During my visit to New York, I also look forward to bilateral meetings with the leaders of some of our neighbouring countries, including Bangladesh, Nepal and Pakistan.

571. Joint Press Statement on the Ministerial Meeting of the G4 Countries (Brazil, Germany, India and Japan) in the margins of the 68th Session of the UN General Assembly.

New York, September 26, 2013.

1. The Minister of External Relations of Brazil, the Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs of Germany, the Minister of External Affairs of India and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan met in New York on 26 September 2013, in the margins of the opening of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly, to exchange views on Security Council reform.
2. The Ministers underscored that, almost 70 years after the creation of the United Nations, reform of the Security Council is long overdue. They agreed that difficulties of the Security Council in dealing with international challenges, including current ones, have further highlighted the need for U.N. Security Council reform in order to better reflect geopolitical realities of the 21st century and make the Council more broadly representative, efficient and transparent and thus to further enhance its effectiveness and the legitimacy and implementation of its decisions. The Ministers recalled that almost 10 years ago, in the Outcome Document of the 2005 World Summit, international leaders committed themselves to an early reform of the Security Council. The Ministers stressed the need to intensify efforts to translate, at the latest by 2015, the existing agreement into concrete outcomes.
3. Recalling previous G4 joint statements, the Ministers reiterated their common vision of a reformed Security Council, taking into consideration the contributions made by countries to the maintenance of international peace and security and other purposes of the organisation, as well as the need for increased representation of developing countries in both categories, in order to better reflect today's geopolitical realities. The G4 countries reiterated their commitments as aspiring new permanent members of the UN Security Council, as well as their support for each other's candidatures. They also reaffirmed their view of the importance of developing countries, in particular Africa, to be represented in both the permanent and non-permanent categories of an enlarged Council. In this context, the Ministers emphasized the importance to enhance dialogue and outreach with African countries on Security Council reform and commended the initiative of the Government of Japan in having convened the first Japan-Africa Summit Meeting on U.N. Security Council Reform in June. In addition, the Ministers noted with appreciation the directive of CARICOM Heads of State and Government in February 2013 calling for 'greater urgency in achieving lasting Security Council Reform' and the initiative of CARICOM to reinvigorate the Intergovernmental Negotiation process.

4. The Ministers recognized the need for greater involvement of civil society, the media and academia on the discussions about the reform of the Security Council and in this context, they welcomed the Brazilian initiative of hosting a seminar, in April this year, to broaden the debate on the urgency and inevitability of the reform of the United Nations Security Council.
5. The Ministers also discussed the outcome of the ninth round of the intergovernmental negotiations on Security Council reform. The Ministers emphasized the important role the Chairman of the intergovernmental negotiations, H.E. Ambassador Zahir Tanin, has played in the negotiations, notably reflected in his letter dated 25 July 2012 to the President of the General Assembly, and welcomed anew his recommendations therein. In this context, the Ministers reiterated that, given the overwhelming support by member states for an expansion of the Security Council in both categories of membership, permanent and non-permanent, this should be a key parameter in the negotiation process among member states. They called for the drafting of a concise working document as the basis for further negotiations, in line with the recommendations of the Chairman.
6. The Ministers welcomed the decision by the General Assembly to immediately continue the process of intergovernmental negotiations in the informal plenary of the 68th Session, building on the progress achieved and the recommendations made by the Chairman. The Ministers underlined the need to achieve concrete progress in the 68th Session of the UN General Assembly and, in this context, expressed their commitment to continue to work in close cooperation and in a spirit of flexibility with other Member States and Groups of Member States, in particular Africa, in genuine text-based negotiations.

7. The Ministers expressed gratitude for the efforts made by the President of the 67th General Assembly, H.E. Mr. Vuk Jeremic and the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiations, H.E. Ambassador Zahir Tanin. They looked forward to working closely with H.E. Mr. John Ashe, the President of the 68th General Assembly, and the Chair of the Intergovernmental Negotiations in order to bring about the urgently needed reform of the Security Council.

Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado

Minister of External Relations of Brazil

Guido Westerwelle

Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs of Germany

Salman Khurshid

Minister of External Affairs of India

Fumio Kishida

Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan

572. Statement by the Prime Minister in the General Debate of the 68th Session of the UN General Assembly.

New York, September 28, 2013.

Let me first of all congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of the 68th session of the UN General Assembly. We wish you every success and we assure you of our fullest co-operation.

At a time when the world is facing multiple challenges, there is renewed attention on the role of the United Nations in advancing international peace, security and prosperity. However, never has scepticism about the UN's capacity to do so been higher, or the external environment less propitious for multilateralism.

Nearly seven decades of the work of the United Nations hold one simple lesson and that is this: we are most successful when we adhere to the letter and spirit of the United Nations Charter, basing our decisions on the widest possible consent and balancing equitably the needs and responsibilities of nations at different stages of development.

In these seven decades, the world has changed in fundamental ways. Asia and Africa are independent and resurgent. Countries are now not only more interdependent, but also face new and increasingly complex challenges. For multilateralism to remain relevant and effective in the future, multilateral institutions need to be reformed urgently.

The place to begin is right here.

The UN Security Council must be reformed and restructured to reflect current political realities. More developing countries should be included as both permanent and non-permanent members.

Multilateral Financial Institutions should also enable an enhanced voice for developing countries in their decision making structures.

Multilateral efforts must guide our quest for peace and security, wherever they are threatened. And the centrality and contribution of the UN system to development must be restored.

These objectives require the building of a new international consensus, suited to our time and rooted in today's realities. It is only such a plan of action that will enable the UN to meet the twin tests of legitimacy and effectiveness and efficiency.

We commend your choice for the theme of this session. Setting the stage for the post-2015 Development Agenda is especially important as we deal with a lingering global economic slowdown and continuing volatility in financial markets. These have imposed disproportionately heavy costs on developing countries and vulnerable groups within them.

Growth and inclusive development are naturally important for all our countries. They require a supportive international economic environment, enhanced investment flows, including from multilateral development banks, transfer of technology, and an open multilateral trading regime.

But the problems of over a billion people living in abject poverty around the world need to be attacked more directly. Poverty remains a major political and economic challenge and its eradication requires special attention and a new collective thrust. This priority should anchor the post-2015 Development Agenda, which should be shaped by the member states so that it enjoys the broadest possible support and acceptance.

Issues of peace, security, human rights and governance are important and need to be addressed. But we will fall short of realizing an ambitious post-2015 development agenda if we focus merely on governance issues at the cost of robust economic growth.

This agenda should not be merely about reprioritizing domestic spending, but also about fostering genuine international partnership between the developing and developed countries to bring about change. All of us need the policy space necessary to set our own domestic priorities. No one knows the condition of developing countries better than the developing countries themselves.

It is, therefore, important that the UN set clear and concise goals and provide practical and well-defined means of implementation, including adequate flow of resources and transfer of technology, taking the views of developing countries fully into account.

A meaningful post-2015 agenda must place equally high priority on food and nutrition, health, education, infrastructure, water, sanitation, energy and discrimination against women. Especially critical is women's equal access to economic opportunities, and that they do not become victims of violence or targets of prejudice.

In India, we have sought to promote inclusive development in multiple ways. Legislation has broadened access to education and secured rural livelihoods. We are now building the world's largest programme for food security. Digital technology is being harnessed to improve the delivery of public services and benefits to the people.

India is proud of its partnerships with developing countries. Using modest resources, we have built strong ties with Africa and the Least Developed Countries. We are committed to building 100 institutions in Africa, have offered capacity building support including thousands of scholarships, and made available concessional assistance of over 9.5 billion US dollars. India and Africa are engaging through the India-Africa Forum Summit process. We also look forward to participating actively in the 3rd Conference on the Small Island Developing States in Samoa in 2014 and contributing to its outcome.

Climate change is one of the defining challenges of our times. We must summon the necessary political will for crafting a robust global response to climate change on the basis of equity and the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

We are deeply concerned about the future of West Asia, a region with which India shares deep bonds of history, and one that is critical for our energy security as well as the livelihoods of nearly seven million Indians who work and live in the region.

The increasingly lethal conflict in Syria is not only a tragedy for the people of Syria, but also threatens stability and security in the region and beyond. It has been made worse by the use of chemical weapons. The use of chemical weapons, whosoever may have deployed them, must be condemned in the strongest terms. India supports strongly the elimination of chemical weapons material and equipment in Syria.

There is no military solution to this conflict. We must intensify efforts to end the conflict and seek a political settlement. It is essential that the Geneva-2 conference be convened at the earliest.

We are encouraged that direct talks have resumed between Israel and Palestine. India supports an early realisation of a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine, with East Jerusalem as its capital, living within secure and recognised borders side-by-side and at peace with Israel. We also remain committed to the Palestinian quest for full membership of the UN.

In our own region, Afghanistan prepares for a historic political, security and economic transition. The international community must support the people of Afghanistan through this transition and beyond in combating terrorism, preserving the progress of the past decade and creating a stable, united and prosperous Afghanistan.

Terrorism remains a grave threat to security and stability everywhere and extracts a heavy toll of innocent lives around the world. From Africa to Asia, we have seen several manifestations of this menace in the last few days alone. State-sponsored cross-border terrorism is of particular concern to India, also on account of the fact that the epicentre of terrorism in our region is located in our neighbourhood in Pakistan.

Speaking from this podium yesterday, Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif of Pakistan spoke of making a new beginning. I reciprocate his sentiments and am looking forward to meeting him tomorrow. India is committed sincerely to resolving all issues with Pakistan, including the issue of Jammu and Kashmir, through bilateral dialogue on the basis of the Shimla Agreement. However, for progress to be made, it is imperative that the territory of Pakistan and the areas under its control are not utilized for aiding and abetting terrorism directed against India. It is equally important that the terrorist machinery that draws its sustenance from Pakistan be shut down. There must be a clear understanding of the fact that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and that there can never, ever, be a compromise with the unity and territorial integrity of India.

We need to renew our commitment, especially here at the UN, for concerted, cohesive and continuing global action against terrorism. There can be no tolerance for states sheltering, arming, training or financing terrorists. Nor can they absolve themselves of the responsibility to prevent their territories from being used to launch acts of terrorism.

The increasingly complex challenges to international peace and security require a new international consensus to be built, whether it is in cyber security, non proliferation or terrorism. This year, 25 years after Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi put forward a comprehensive Action Plan for a Nuclear Weapon-free and Non-violent World Order, we must strengthen efforts against nuclear proliferation and pursue time-bound, universal, non-discriminatory, phased and verifiable nuclear disarmament. We must also guard against terrorists and non-state actors gaining access to sensitive materials and technologies.

Two years from now, the United Nations will be seventy years old. Every new state that was born during this period took its place in this Assembly not just with pride but also with hope. 2015 will be a moment to celebrate our successes and to ensure that the UN is ready for this century by completing the much needed reforms of the United Nations and its Security Council, by developing an ambitious and balanced post-2015 Development Agenda and by demonstrating our capacity to cooperate effectively for durable peace and security in this world.

573. Statement by Ambassador D.B. Venkatesh Varma, Permanent Representative of India to the Conference on Disarmament , at 2013 Meeting of States Parties to the Biological Weapons Convention,
Geneva, December 9, 2013.

Madam Chair,

Let me join other colleagues in congratulating you on the assumption of the chair of the BWC Meeting of States Parties for 2013. I am sure that with your vast experience on BWC issues and your diplomatic skills, you would be able to lead this meeting to a successful conclusion. You could be assured of India's full support in the discharge of your responsibilities. I also congratulate the two Vice Chairs on assuming their posts.

India associates itself with the statement made by the Islamic Republic of Iran on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement. As the world mourns the passing of President Nelson Mandela, a strong advocate of world peace and reconciliation, we convey our deepest condolences to the delegation of South Africa.

Madam Chair,

India attaches high importance to the BWC as the first disarmament treaty banning an entire class of weapons of mass destruction. Through this instrument, 170 States Parties to the treaty have pledged never to “develop, produce, stockpile or otherwise acquire or retain” biological weapons and have committed not to use in any way and under any circumstances biological agents or toxins not consistent with prophylactic, protective or other peaceful purposes. These important commitments have been reiterated by the successive Review Conferences including the 7th Review Conference in 2011.

India remains committed to improving the effectiveness of the BWC and strengthening its implementation and universalization. We believe this is necessary in view of the new challenges to international peace and security emanating from proliferation trends, including the threat posed by terrorists or other non-state actors seeking access to biological agents or toxins for terrorist purposes. It is the responsibility of States Parties to ensure that their commitments and obligations under the Convention are fully and effectively implemented. We believe that only a multilaterally agreed mechanism for verification of compliance can provide the assurance of observance of compliance obligations by States Parties and act as a deterrence against non-compliance.

Madam Chair,

We have made a good start to the new inter-sessional process with extensive discussions on the three standing agenda items and the biennial item during the meetings held under your and Algeria's leadership in the past two years. India has contributed to the success of the Meeting of Experts held in August 2013. We hope that sustained progress on these discussions will be possible during the rest of the inter-sessional period, in keeping with the letter and spirit of the decisions of the 7th Review Conference. We would like to reiterate that the mandate of the current inter-sessional process is to promote common understanding and effective action on the issues on its agenda; any decisions with regard to the operation of the Convention should be taken by the next Review Conference by consensus. Let me now briefly state India's broad position on the issues to be covered in this meeting.

India believes that the standing agenda item on review of S&T developments is important for States Parties to keep pace with the rapid developments in biological science and technology which might impact the implementation of the Convention. It is important that these discussions cover all ongoing high-risk dual use research. For example, it is important to review all ramifications of the recent advancements in scientific understanding related to H5N1, H7N1, H7N9, MERS as well as other BSL 3&4 pathogens. The measures taken to mitigate biological risks should be proportional to the assessed risk and not hamper legitimate peaceful activities including international cooperation. Further, peaceful activities such as vaccine development, which are important for developing countries for meeting their public health needs, should not be unnecessarily highlighted as posing a risk for uses contrary to the provisions of the Convention. India looks forward to continuing discussions on Codes of Conduct and education and awareness raising in order to address issues related to biorisk management. India would also be willing to make a contribution to the discussion on exploring the best way of conducting S&T review under the Convention in the run up to the next Review Conference, recalling the Working Paper submitted by India at the last Review Conference.

India continues to attach high importance to the full and effective implementation of Article X of the Convention. We believe that the measures suggested by the Non-Aligned Movement in its Working Paper submitted at the Meeting of Experts this year should be given due consideration. While legitimate peaceful uses should not be hampered, India is not in favour of unregulated transfers. In this context, we believe that strengthened implementation of Article III would ensure that the cooperation envisaged under Article X is not abused. At the same time it is important that factors like lack of technical capability in developing countries are not used to hamper international cooperation, such as by denying new and advanced technology to developing countries. We look forward to the ISU's report on the operation of the database established in pursuance of the decision of the 7th Review Conference.

The standing agenda item on national implementation provides a ready platform for States Parties to share and learn from their national experiences in the implementation of the Convention. We have always emphasized the responsibility of States Parties to fully implement their obligations under the Convention and adopt requisite national measures to this end. India has a broad based regulatory framework to prevent the misuse of biological science and technology, including effective export controls matching the highest international standards. We also support assistance to States Parties for strengthening their national systems for bio-safety and bio-security.

On the biennial item regarding CBMs we wish to underline that the effort should be to look at ways and means to increase the number of States Parties making CBMs submissions. Our delegation will be open to looking at constructive suggestions in this regard that could be included in this meeting's report since this is the last year of consideration of this agenda item. We would like to stress that CBMs are an important transparency measures to enhance trust in implementation of the Convention, but CBMs or voluntary measures for demonstrating national implementation cannot be an alternative to an effective multilaterally agreed mechanism for verification of compliance. Only such a mechanism can provide the assurance of observance of compliance obligations by States Parties and act as a deterrence against non-compliance. India is in the process of finalizing its CBMs submission for 2013 which will be submitted to the ISU shortly.

Madam Chair,

Before concluding, let me place on record our appreciation for your efforts in undertaking wide consultations with various Groups and delegations in preparation of this meeting. We also welcome your efforts for greater involvement of all States Parties in our meetings as well as on universalization of the Convention. We welcome the accession of Cameroon, Nauru, Guyana and Malawi to the Convention in 2013. We also convey our appreciation to the ISU for its efforts in support of our common objectives.

Thank you

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-IX

INDIA AT THE UN:

- (i) Security Council
- (ii) General Assembly

(i) Security Council

574. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri Permanent Representative, at the open debate on UN Peacekeeping: A Multidimensional Approach at the UNSC.

New York, January 21, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset let me thank you for organizing this debate on the important subject of peacekeeping and its crucial role in building peace in post-conflict situations.

India is proud to have been associated with UN peacekeeping from its very inception. As a country that has contributed more than 100,000 peacekeepers to virtually every United Nations peacekeeping operation in the past six decades, we have an abiding interest in UN Peacekeeping. During our Presidency of the Security Council in August 2011, we had also organized a debate on UN Peacekeeping. Even today India is one of the largest contributors to major Peacekeeping missions, and we remain committed to this global enterprise.

I also wish to convey our deep appreciations to the Secretary General for his presence today and his useful briefing on the subject.

Peacekeeping has been a critical activity of the UN in maintaining international peace and security. Its collaborative character infuses it with a unique legitimacy that defines its strength.

The core values of UN peacekeeping explain its enduring relevance. Principles of consent, impartiality, and non-use of force except in self-defence and in defence of the mandate have all outlived the many transitions that peacekeeping has witnessed from truce-supervision missions of yesteryears to multi-dimensional mandates of today.

Today's debate on the multidimensional nature of peacekeeping underscores the evolutionary nature of peacekeeping in ample measure.

Mr. President,

Peacekeeping often gets deliberated as a standalone exercise rather than as a contributory endeavour that imparts strength to the larger peace enterprise. This reflects the substance of its currency. In order for peace to be sustainable, enduring and lasting it is imperative that all components of the comprehensive peace enterprise contribute in achieving peace.

In this regard, I would like to draw the Security Council's attention to the Presidential Statement (S/PRST/2011/17) issued in August 2011 that called for meaningful engagements with the TCCs, integration of field expertise and experiences in peacebuilding strategies, and in the drafting of mission mandates.

The nature of mandates will continue to shape the practice of peacekeeping. My delegation has often spoken strongly, in favour of a tiered and inclusive mandate-making process to ensure that mandates are updated, flexible, and in tune with the ground realities. In-depth consultations with troop and police contributing countries should be an integral part of the mandate generation process. A fair assessment of mandates with corresponding resources will inject a sense of realism into expectations with respect to mission objectives and achievements.

Unfortunately, resource allocation has failed to keep pace with the mandate expansion, and peacekeeping missions are called upon to do more and more with less and less. This has added to operational challenges faced by peacekeepers and missions are overstretched due to shortage of personnel and equipment. Resources accorded need to be commensurate with the mandates and efficiency measures should not compromise operational necessities.

A reference has been made to UNMOGIP. Suffice to point out that UNMOGIP's role has been overtaken by the Simla Agreement of 1972 between India and Pakistan, signed by the Heads of the two governments and ratified by their respective parliaments. In times of austerity, we need to address the question whether the resources being spent on UNMOGIP would not be better utilized elsewhere.

Mr. President,

Peacekeeping and peacebuilding are two sides of the same coin. Critical peacebuilding tasks such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR), security sector reform (SSR), rule of law, basic governance, institution building, and support to the democratic processes are all premised on peacekeepers proactive involvement. Our strategies and approaches, therefore, should be geared to capitalize on these strengths. UN Peacekeeping, in-fact, makes all of this affordable at a fraction of the cost involved in similar endeavours elsewhere.

Two- thirds of UN's field presence comprises of uniformed personnel. They respond to a complex set of challenges in a holistic manner. In this context we should synergize the keeping-of-peace and the building-of-peace. Their mutual- complementarities should be harmonized rather than being zoned as the civilian versus military.

Functional necessities should guide us in developing programmatic contents and budgetary outlines. The propensity to create new structures, mechanisms, and positions that only add additional bureaucratic layers need to be discouraged in the current context.

Partnership is peacekeeping's central pillar. All stakeholders of the process have a duty to enhance dialogue and mutual understandings. The triangular cooperation framework, in this regard, offers a viable site to engender and consolidate this partnership.

The representative character of peacekeeping and its reform process is the key to its across the board acceptability. It is imperative that the work on this reform process is not the prerogative of a few but is representative across the board.

Finally, Mr. President, my delegation is happy that a resolution has been adopted today that will strengthen the peacekeeping framework.

I Thank You, Mr. President.

575. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative in the Security Council Open Debate on “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian Question.

New York, January 23, 2013.

Mr. President,

1. At the outset, please allow me to express our appreciation to you Mr. President, for convening this quarterly open debate on “the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question”. I would like to thank Special Coordinator Robert Serry for his comprehensive briefing on recent developments in the Middle East, particularly on the Palestinian question. I would like to join others to welcome the participation of Foreign Minister of the Observer State of Palestine, H. E. Dr. Riad Al Malki in today’s debate and thank him for his statement. I also would like to thank the Permanent Representative of Israel for his statement.
2. Mr. President, amidst unprecedented transformation of the Arab World, the continuing stalemate in the Middle East Peace Process, is clearly not in the interest of the region. There have been no direct talks between Israel and Palestine, for more than two years. Efforts of the international community including those of the Quartet towards resumption of direct talks between Israel and Palestine have yielded no results.
3. Against this backdrop, the overwhelming vote in the General Assembly on November 29 last year, upgrading the status of Palestine to a non-member state is a positive development. It is a decisive achievement for Palestine in the history of its long and arduous struggle to reach its final goal of an independent and viable Palestinian State. India, which has always played a proactive role in garnering support for the Palestinian cause in multilateral fora, co-sponsored this resolution. India will continue to support Palestine’s bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations.

4. Mr. President, developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territories since the historic vote in the General Assembly have been most unhelpful for the Palestinian cause. The intensification of settlement activities by Israel, despite widespread international condemnation, in the West Bank and East Jerusalem are creating new realities on the ground, thereby threatening the very premise of a two-state solution. We join others in urging Israel to end the settlement activity in order for the Palestinian side to come to the negotiating table.
5. Mr. President, settlements, roadblocks and the related infrastructure of occupation continue to cause severe hardships to the Palestinian population. These are also adversely affecting the normal functioning of Palestinian state institutions. The Palestinian Authority is facing a severe financial crisis. The financial crisis could erode the significant progress made in building Palestinian state institutions, if immediate attention is not given to the issue. There is an urgent need to support the Palestinian Authority to meet its budgetary shortfalls.
6. The blockade of Gaza is in its sixth year. It is affecting essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. While Israel has taken several measures to allow flow of essential goods into Gaza, these cannot be a substitute for lifting the blockade. Recent hostilities in Gaza are again a stark reminder to the international community of the dangers, that continuing stalemate in the Peace Process can bring about. We hope both parties will continue to uphold the ceasefire agreement and implement its provisions in good faith.
7. The recent rapprochement between various Palestinian factions is indeed welcome. We hope that efforts towards promotion of reconciliation will bear fruit soon, leading to the formation a Unity Government, holding of elections, reunification of Palestinian state institutions, and measures for reconstruction and development of Palestinian society.
8. Mr. President, India has a long history of solidarity with the Palestinian people. India was the first non-Arab State to recognize the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people in 1975 and in 1988 became one of the first countries to recognize the State of Palestine.

9. India has also extended material assistance to the Palestinian Authority since its establishment and has been a partner in the socio-economic development of Palestine in its quest for a life of dignity and self-reliance. Our assistance has been for humanitarian relief, development projects, establishment of educational and training facilities, budgetary support etc. This year, India has pledged an amount of US$ 10 million as budgetary support to Palestine. India also contributes US$ 1 million annually to United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). Following the three MoU's signed during the visit of President Abbas to India in September 2012, India is in the process of implementing projects in the fields of Information & Communication Technology, Vocational Training and Construction of Schools. In addition, India is implementing development projects in Palestine with Brazil and South Africa as partners in IBSA.
10. India supports a negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its Capital, side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in various United Nations Security Council Resolutions and the Quartet Road Map. Let me also state here that progress on Lebanese and Syrian track remains critical for lasting peace in the region. We remain hopeful that environment conducive for direct talks can be achieved in the near future. India stands ready to play its part in our collective endeavours to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East.
11. Lastly, Mr. President, we remain seriously concerned at the deteriorating security situation and continuing violence in Syria. We strongly condemn all violence and violations of human rights irrespective of who their perpetrators are. We also condemn in the strongest terms the terrorist acts that have been and continue to be committed in Syria. We urge all the parties to stop violence and engage in an inclusive national dialogue in order to resolve the conflict through peaceful means based on the internationally approved political and legal basis including the UN Security Council resolutions 2042 and 2043 and the Joint Communique of the Geneva Action Group.

I thank you

576. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR HARDEEP SINGH PURI, PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE , AT THE OPEN DEBATE
ON PROTECTION OF CIVILIANS IN ARMED CONFLICT AT THE UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL.

New York, February 12, 2013.

At the outset, I would like to thank you, Mr. President, for organizing today's open debate on the Protection of Civilians in armed conflict. I would also like to thank the Secretary General for his incisive briefing earlier in the day and the High Commissioner for Human Rights Ms. Navanethem Pillay, and Director for International Law and Cooperation of the ICRC Mr. Philip Spoerri for their briefings.

Mr. President,

The Right to Life is one of the fundamental rights enshrined in the constitutions of a vast number of UN member-states, including my own. It is, in fact, the foundation of any social order. Unfortunately, situations of armed conflict continue to wreak havoc and put lives of innocent civilians at risk.

At the same time, Mr. President, the instances where civilians are at the greatest risk today do not involve nation-states, but non-state actors and belligerents who are not necessarily combatants under international humanitarian law. This makes the task of the international community and this Council, in particular, so much more difficult as it needs to act within established principles of international law.

Mr. President,

Civilians have always suffered the most in conflicts. Notwithstanding the development of International Humanitarian Law and UN Security Council mandates, civilians continue to suffer even today. Even more unfortunate is the fact that civilians or non-belligerents suffer a disproportionate share of the casualties as compared to belligerents. It is they who bear the brunt of violence in conflict and post-conflict situations.

Protecting civilians encompasses tasks that are both preventive and remedial. Conduct of warring factions towards civilians, challenges of impunity, weak or absent state authority, political will of the international community, and lack of the means necessary to reverse the spiral of violence together make this task that much more difficult.

India, a partner of UN peacekeeping from its very inception, has contributed through ideas and resources to global efforts towards protecting civilians. Our soldiers have been at the forefront in translating Security Council mandates into actions in challenging circumstances. Our troops and police personnel have always upheld the mandates and protected civilians. Our peacekeeping experience brings to the table, a quantum of experience in actually protecting civilians in peacekeeping missions that is unique in its relevance and in its variety and depth.

Mr. President,

UN peacekeepers have been playing a key role in protection of civilians from the scourge of war. But we must not lose sight of the fact that the protection of civilians is, first and foremost, a national responsibility and requires institutions and conditions in which the institutions can function. Peacekeepers, in spite of their best efforts, cannot possibly “protect everyone from everything.” To do that, it is necessary to strengthen the capacities of the States and their national institutions to enable them to fulfill their responsibility to protect their populations.

Since 1999, the Security Council has provided for protection of civilians in the mandates for peacekeeping Missions. However, mere addition of words and sentences to the mandates alone will not enable peacekeepers to fulfill protection mandates.

Protecting populations is a resource intensive enterprise. It needs sufficient personnel, proper equipment and suitable capacities. Political will of the international community and its ability to provide adequate resources is critical to the success of Missions in fulfilling their protection mandates. Civilians are protected best in an eco-system of peace where all its elements work and contribute in tandem. Security Council's efforts should therefore address multiple dimensions of a conflict in a comprehensive and proportionate manner.

Protection of civilians needs to respect the fundamentals of the UN Charter and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Member States. We must also be clear that the United Nations has a mandate to intervene only in situations where there is a threat to international peace and security.

We firmly believe in accountability of those who mandate. Their responsibility does not end with the generation of mandates. They should be held accountable if unachievable mandates are generated for political expediency or if adequate resources are not made available. It is equally important that the principles of protecting civilians must be applied in a uniform manner by all parties to a conflict.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to stress that Council's responsibility to protect civilians does not end with a military or police response. Civilians require humanitarian wherewithal for survival. In this process multiple stakeholders should be involved, not just the military. An engagement between warring factions in a conflict situation in a nationally owned and inclusive political process is of paramount importance. This inclusive approach to national reconciliation, anchored in state sovereignty, is the only way to move forward to ensure the protection of civilians in an effective, pragmatic, and enduring manner.

Thank you, Mr. President.

577. Extempore remarks by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative at the Arria Formula Meeting of the UNSC on “The Security Dimensions of Climate Change”.

New York, February 15, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you very much for giving me the floor. Given the shortage of time, I will be brief.

At the very outset, let me say that climate change is one of the most serious challenges confronting us today. My country, perhaps more than anyone else, is subject to its vagaries, and is one of the most vulnerable.

We, therefore, call for concerted and very strong action of by the global community in cooperation and collaboration with each other. These actions need to be based on the principles of common but differentiated responsibility and equity. Developed countries must own their historical responsibility and undertake real and significant emission cuts, and provide finance and technological support, especially to the most vulnerable countries, the small island developing states and the least Developed Countries.

We recognize that the sea level rises pose an existential threat to the small Island Developing States and coastal societies. We are particularly aware of the gravity of the situation given the number of islands, over a thousand, which are there within the territories of India.

Having said this, Mr. Chairman, I want to strongly align myself with the Statement delivered by the Permanent Representative of Fiji on behalf of the G-77 and reiterate what has been said by the G-77 on several occasions. The issue of climate change rests squarely in the UN FCCC and the UN General Assembly.

The UN charter provides for clear division of functions between the General Assembly and the Security Council. These must be fully respected.

We, therefore, want to reiterate what has been made clear many a time that by merely adding the words security dimension, it does not become a matter fit for discussing in the Security Council.

Mr. Chairman, in 2007 your country (UK) organized a thematic debate on climate change in the Security Council. In 2011 my colleague from Germany organized a thematic debate there.

I very much thank H.E. the Ambassador of Pakistan which is a strong and founding member of the G-77, for having ensured that this time it was only an Arria formula meeting.

Thank you very much.

578. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Acting Permanent Representative, Debate on “situation in Afghanistan” at the UN Security Council.

New York, March 19, 2013.

Mr. President, I join others in thanking you for scheduling today’s debate on the situation in Afghanistan in the context of the renewal of UNAMA’s mandate and would like to congratulate you for assuming the Presidency of the Security Council for this month. I would also like to thank the UN Secretary General for his briefing and thank Ambassador Zahir Tanin, Permanent Representative of Afghanistan for his statement.

Mr. President,

Looking ahead at the timelines for ISAF withdrawal and elections in Afghanistan, it is important that the commitments flowing from the major international conferences in Bonn, Chicago and Tokyo and at the regional level in Istanbul and Kabul for peace, security and development in Afghanistan, are implemented in word and deed. These are also essential for creating an enabling environment towards Afghanistan’s fiscal sustainability and self-reliance.

It is particularly worrying that the overall security situation remains volatile in the country amidst the ongoing simultaneous security, political and economic transitions. Even after over a decade of ISAF's presence and concerted efforts of the international community, Afghanistan continues to face an existential threat from terrorism. We are yet to isolate and root out the syndicate of terrorism, which includes elements of Al Qaeda, Taliban, LeT and other terrorist and extremist groups that operate with impunity from safe havens across Afghanistan's borders. Indeed, as NATO draws down from Afghanistan claiming 'Mission nearly Accomplished', judging by the latest acts of terrorism and violence, there is no sign a similar 'drawdown' on the part of terrorist outfits across the border.

Whatever happens in Afghanistan has and will continue to affect security in our region and the world. We have not forgotten the terrorist havens that wreaked havoc as Afghanistan descended into chaos in the 1990s. And obviously, we do not want that to happen again. The UNSG report rightly notes that Afghanistan will only be able to achieve the stability, growth and prosperity that its people aspire to, and deserve, if there is peace.

As Afghanistan looks forward to holding Presidential and Provincial elections in April, 2014, we need to bear in mind that short-sighted approaches and quick-fixes guided by political expediency could be a recipe for unmitigated disaster. It is, thus, imperative that any political settlement must be driven by Afghans so that it is acceptable to all sections of Afghan society and does not jeopardize the hard won gains of the last 10 years. A single-minded focus on the elections and constitutionalism would vindicate the 2004 Constitution, the most widely debated with the maximum consensus to date, consolidate democracy, institutionalize elections, and provide the legitimacy and political and moral strength to the Islamic Republic to negotiate with the Taliban and advocates of an Islamic Emirate, and the international community, from a position of strength, and guarantee the post-2001 gains for new and older generations of Afghans.

It is for this reason also that the internationally-accepted red lines must be respected in whatever reconciliation models are being considered. So also, actions in support of the political transition should not undermine Afghan institutions of governance. We all need a credible government after 2014 as well.

But most of all, we are yet to see any evidence that supports the notion of a dividing line separating Al Qaeda from other terrorist and extremist groups, or indeed, that these groups and those who support them have either had an epiphany or made a strategic reassessment of their objectives. To us, it makes little sense to draw lines of distinction that most of these groups or their sponsors are themselves not prepared to do, either in word or deed.

Mr. President

India remains engaged with like-minded countries having the shared goal of peace, security and development in Afghanistan. In pursuit of this, India has held a dialogue with the US and Afghanistan in New Delhi and China and Russia in Moscow last month.

We firmly believe that Afghan ownership and leadership is critical for cementing the foundations of lasting peace and stability in the country. The Afghan people should be able to choose their destiny in an environment free from coercion and outside interference. Security is the key ingredient for accelerated socio-economic development, which could also be a catalyst in strengthening the voices of moderation and tolerance in the Afghan society. India has taken a number of initiatives in this regard.

The Delhi Investment Summit of June, 2012 last year was an important endeavour in focussing regional and international attention towards investments in Afghanistan and their potential in providing economic development and stability to Afghanistan during the transition period.

India has also taken initiatives to promote bilateral trade and investment in Afghanistan by measures like the elimination of base line customs duties on virtually all imports from Afghanistan and the investment in Hajigak iron ore reserves.

Enhanced regional cooperation and regional integration are imperative for bringing in much needed foreign investments in Afghanistan, ensuring its economic viability and spurring economic growth. Conscious of this imperative need, India has taken the lead in the commercial Confidence Building Measures under the Istanbul process. Within South Asia, SAARC remains an important vehicle for strengthening regional cooperation.

Afghanistan is strategically located as a land bridge linking South Asia with Central Asia and the Middle East and an important conduit in tapping into vast energy resources of Central Asia. Projects like TAPI gas pipeline would benefit all of us and have the potential to usher in rapid transformation in our region.

Mr. President,

Afghanistan and India are natural strategic partners by virtue of geography and a common vision of peace and cooperation in the region. India remains committed to support Afghanistan during the crucial period of transition till end 2014 and thereafter. The implementation of the Strategic Partnership Agreement of October, 2011 between our two countries has already been set in motion with the convening of the first meeting of the Partnership Council last year.

India is assisting as best as it can in Afghanistan's reconstruction and development. India has pledged up to $ 2 billion in development and humanitarian assistance. The projects under consideration are in line with the projects suggested under the National Priority Programmes of the Government of Afghanistan. The pace and nature of the utilization of the present and future Indian assistance is being determined by the preference, comfort level and absorptive capacity of the Afghan government.

Afghanistan needs assistance and support to build its capacity to help it overcome the toll that three decades of externally-inflicted conflict have imposed on it. India has been assisting Afghanistan to rebuild the foundations of its society through scholarships for its young and training programmes that seek to help its democratic institutions brace for the multiplicity of challenges that it faces.

Mr. President,

India remains unwavering in its commitment to assisting the people of Afghanistan in their endeavour to build a peaceful, stable, democratic and prosperous nation.

As we approach critical timelines for transition in near future, the international community must continue to work with renewed vigour and unity of purpose towards strengthening efforts of the Afghan government in seeking solutions that are inclusive and led by the Afghan people themselves.

We believe that the UN has a central role to play in coordination of international assistance. There is no substitute for the coordinating role of the UN in the reconstruction of Afghanistan. We appreciate the leadership of SRSG Ján Kubiš and the good work done by UNAMA. It must continue to work in close consultation with the Afghan government.

Thank you

579. STATEMENT BY MR. AMIT KUMAR, COUNSELLOR
DURING THE OPEN DEBATE UNDER THE AGENDA ITEM
- WOMEN AND PEACE AND SECURITY AT THE UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL.

New York, APRIL 17, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President,

At the outset, I would like to thank the UN Secretary General and the SRSG Zainab Hawa Bangura and the civil society representative Ms. Saran Keita Diakité for their detailed briefing.

Mr. President,

Women bear a disproportionate brunt of the armed conflict, even though they are in most cases not directly engaged in combat.

The adoption of UNSCR 1325 provides the framework for women to play an important role in resolution of armed conflicts through participation in peace building processes and post-conflict reconstruction efforts.

Mr. President,

Allow me to make a few comments on this important issue. First of all, the need for greater coherence between DPKO and UN Women can hardly be overemphasised. This is necessary not only for operational effectiveness but also for optimal utilisation of resources.

There is need to avoid making standardised prescriptions when dealing with situations of armed conflict. The specific causes and characteristics of each armed conflict vary. So will possible approaches and solutions. The UN peace keeping and political missions should be provided the necessary flexibility to deal with specific situations.

It is also important to recognise that some structural changes can take place only in the mid to long-term. These include encouragement and consolidation of democratic ideals and practices, and effective improvements in the socio-economic conditions.

The task of capacity building and strengthening government institutions, including in the area of security and justice, is therefore extremely critical for sustainable peace. UN support and guidance are crucial but ownership by the State concerned is equally important for institutions to be sustained.

We support UN efforts to deploy greater number of women protection advisors and gender advisors in its Missions. The mandate provided by UNSC on Women Peace and Security also necessarily requires more resources for effective sustained results.

Mr. President,

Promotion and protection of the human rights of women and girls in armed conflict continue to pose a pressing challenge. There should be zero tolerance for gender-based violence and sexual violence. All cases of gender-based violence must be promptly investigated and their perpetrators prosecuted.

We would, however, urge caution in drawing generalized linkages between sexual violence and issues such as exploitation of mineral resources, internal displacement and so on, based on specific country experiences, as the report of the Secretary General contained in document S/2013/149 suggests. It is pertinent to mention here that the report itself points to the presence of armed conflict as the consistent backdrop in all these situations.

It is also critical that the mandate provided by the Security Council should be observed and the report remain focused on the situations of armed conflict on Council's agenda. The so-called 'situations of concern' are not part of this mandate.

Mr. President,

While UN peacekeeping missions have provided critical support for gender-related issues in countries emerging from armed conflict, we agree with the Report that it is also important to pay adequate attention to SSR and DDR processes to avoid risk of relapse.

We agree with those who call for increased deployment of female military and police personnel in United Nations peacekeeping operations, and for appropriate training to enable UN peacekeepers to effectively discharge their responsibilities.

India stands ready to make available more female formed units at the disposal of the DPKO for deployment as required.

Mr. President,

In conclusion, let me reaffirm India's commitment to positively contribute to UN efforts in the area of women and peace and security.

I thank you

580. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative in the Security Council Open Debate on “The situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian Question”.

New York, April 24, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President,

Let me begin by congratulating you on your Presidency of the Security Council for the month of April. I also would like to express our appreciation for convening this quarterly open debate, which will allow the Council to take stock of recent developments in the Middle East, including the State of Palestine. I would like to thank Under Secretary General Jeffrey Feltman for his comprehensive briefing.

2. Mr. President, the Middle East Peace Process is passing through its most difficult phase in recent times. For more than two years, the parties have not held any official meeting. Efforts of the international community, including that of the Quartet, have failed to make any impact on the ground. In the West Bank and East Jerusalem, intensification of settlement activities is fast eroding the very foundation of a two-state solution. The plight of ordinary Palestinians is worsening everyday due to roadblocks and related infrastructure of occupation that put restrictions on the free movement of persons and goods.
3. The blockade of Gaza has also continued causing a great deal of hardships to Palestinians. The plight of Palestinian prisoners in Israeli jails requires immediate attention. Meanwhile, the Palestinian Authority is facing one of the worst financial crises that threaten to erode the progress made in building Palestinian state institutions. If the present situation persists, the international community will risk a serious destabilization in the region. It is therefore imperative that efforts aimed at breaking the deadlock and resumption of peace process are reinvigorated.
4. Mr. President, any political process in order to be meaningful must put an end to Israeli settlement activities. Continuing settlement activities are a violation of international law and harmful to the peace process. We join others in urging Israel to stop settlement activities in order for the Palestinian side to come to the negotiating table.

5. Mr. President, we have noted that Israel has recently taken some measures to allow flow of essential goods into Gaza. Still the continuing blockade remains in force, and is adversely affecting essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. We continue to call for complete lifting of the blockade. The parties should also fully implement the provisions of the ceasefire agreement reached in November 2012.
6. Mr. President, the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee in its recent meeting in Brussels last month underscored the urgent need of closing the Palestinian Government's financing gap, estimated at $1.2 billion for the current year. In this context, it is important that international community continues to support financial needs of the Palestinian authority.
7. Mr. President, since the time of Mahatma Gandhi, India's support for the Palestinian cause has been strong and unwavering. India was the first non-Arab country to recognize the State of Palestine in 1988. Since then, India's bonds of friendship with the Palestinian people have been strengthened and reinvigorated by regular interactions. As a member of this Council during 2011-12, India supported Palestine's bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations. Continuing this support, India co-sponsored the General Assembly resolution in November 2012 that upgraded the status of Palestine to a non-member Observer state. India has consistently supported a negotiated solution to the Israeli-Palestinian issue, resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its capital, side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in various United Nations Security Council Resolutions and the Quartet Road Map.

8. India has also partnered Palestine in socio-economic development and extended material assistance to the Palestinian Authority. As in previous years, India pledged an amount of US $ 10 million in 2012 as budgetary support to Palestine. India also contributes US$ 1 million annually to UNRWA. India is in the process of implementing projects, bilaterally and through IBSA fund, including in the fields of information and communication technology, vocational training and construction of schools.
9. In conclusion, Mr. President, let me express our deep concern at the deterioration of the situation in Syria. We believe that the Joint Communiqué of the Action Group, adopted in June 2012, provides a good basis for resolution of the Syrian crisis. A Syrian-led political process that meets the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society can alone resolve the crisis, and must be seriously pursued by all parties concerned.

I thank you

581. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India at the Debate of the United Nations Security Council on the Agenda Item
“Children and Armed Conflict”.

New York, June 17, 2013.

At the outset, I thank you, Mr. President, for organizing this debate on the issue of:

Children and Armed Conflict.

I would like to thank Ms. Leila Zerrougui SRSG for Children and Armed Conflict and other briefers today for their statements.

Mr. President,

During the past twelve years, subsequent to the adoption of resolution 1379 in 2001, the issue of Children and Armed Conflict has been a regular item on the Security Council's agenda. A great deal of progress has been made to implement the provisions of these resolutions. However, a lot more remains to be done, especially as the nature of armed conflict threatening the maintenance of international peace and security has metamorphosed significantly during the past decade. This is evident from the Secretary General's reports on this subject, and the comments made by several delegations during our debate today.

Mr. President,

India has been a strong supporter of peacekeeping operations mandated by the Security Council. Over 160,000 Indian troops have served so far under the Blue Flag in all corners of the globe. The experience that we have acquired during the course of this service makes us acutely conscious that adequate resources are still not being made available to fulfil the mandate of UN Security Council Resolutions on this subject. Specifically, we call for more Child Protection Advisors to be deployed in peacekeeping operations.

During these operations, especially in recent times, UN peacekeepers from India have also come across the outrageous practice of children being used as combatants in armed conflicts, notably by so-called militia groups. There is need for the Security Council to examine the implications of this phenomenon on the Council's mandates for peacekeeping operations.

MrPresident,

In the wider framework of the subject of our debate today, we would encourage the SRSG to continue to work with national authorities in developing capacities to deal with children in armed conflict. Support for efforts by national authorities to ensure accountability should be a key focus area. The monitoring and reporting mechanism of the UN envisages involvement and close cooperation with the country concerned for its effective functioning, and can play a useful role in this regard.

It is also important that UN access to non-State armed groups is carried under the cooperation framework between the UN and the concerned government.

It is imperative in this regard that action-plans signed between the concerned governments and the United Nations are implemented rigorously.

The United Nations' Disarmament, Demobilization, and Rehabilitation (DDR) and the Security Sector Reform (SSR) programmes, inter alia, must focus on guaranteeing the safe return of these children and their reintegration into society.

We believe that the UN Peacekeeping Fund (PBF) can be used to formulate projects to focus on reintegration of children affected by armed conflict.

Mr. President,

There is one issue regarding the report of the Secretary General placed before us today on which my delegation would like to join others before me in expressing concern.

OP16 of resolution 1379 requested the Secretary General to report on situations that are on the Security Council's agenda or that may be brought to the attention of the Security Council by the Secretary General, in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter, which specifically limit such issues to those that, in his opinion, threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

All subsequent resolutions, which draw upon OP16 of 1379, have reiterated this framework for the Secretary General's report. However, we note with concern that despite this clearly spelt out mandate, the report of the Secretary General has included issues which cannot be considered a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security as laid down in Article 99 of the Charter.

In our view, by going beyond the mandate, the Secretary General's report also contains the potential of diverting our already scarce resources in dealing with the issue of children and armed conflict to areas beyond the parameters of UN Security Council resolutions on the subject.

We request the Council to take note of this concern while considering the report.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me reiterate India's strong support for the objectives set out in Security Council resolutions on the issue of children and armed conflict, and our continued commitment to help achieve these objectives.

I thank you

582. Statement by Amb. M.S. Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to the UN at the Security Council Open Debate on "Maintenance of international peace and security: conflict prevention and natural resources".

New York, June 19, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President.

At the outset, I would like to thank you for convening today's open debate on this important issue of "Conflict Prevention and Natural Resources". I would also like to thank your delegation for preparing a concept paper on the topic under discussion. I also take this opportunity to thank Secretary General Ban Ki-moon for his statement earlier in the day.

Mr. President,

The intrinsic link between effective management of natural resources and development is a time tested reality. Conflict, indeed, holds back development. It is a fact that in several countries on the agenda of the Security Council, including those in Africa, control over natural resources and their exploitation are serious exacerbating factors fanning conflict and also remain major impediment to post- conflict nation building.

If one peeps into history of these conflicts, both control and exploitation of natural resources have been driven largely by factors outside the control of the affected countries. Outside interference for control and exploitation of natural resources when combined with political objectives and ethnic rivalries has been a particularly combustive mix for conflicts.

This has caused several countries in Africa to remain mired in conflicts for decades. It is therefore necessary to tackle the issue holistically.

Mr. President,

It is imperative that we fully respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all UN member-states, including when this Council considers situations on its agenda. The international community, including this Council, must respect the states' right to control and manage their affairs, including natural resources. There must be no attempt to be prescriptive about control, management and use of natural resources by the states concerned.

Even while some countries in Africa are in conflict related to natural resources, we must note that the continent has been the second fastest growing region in the world in the past decade. During the first decade of the current millennium, six of the 10 fastest growing economies were from Africa. The collective African GDP is expected to grow to US $ 2.6 trillion by 2025. Clearly, with the increased assistance of the international community, conflict affected countries in Africa can achieve faster progress.

In this regard, it is important for the international community, particularly the United Nations, to play a seminal role in capacity building of the concerned member- states. Conflict-affected countries do need assistance to fulfill their international commitments and strengthen their internal institutions, including those dealing with security and border control.

The role of the international community, including the relevant UN agencies, should be to enhance development partnership with the countries in conflict situation. This should include higher allocations of financial, technical and human resources by donors and UN agencies and must be aligned with national priorities of the countries concerned.

Mr. President,

We commend the efforts and commitment of the relevant UN agencies in developing capacities of countries in conflict and post conflict situations. We hope that their commitment to capacity building of States, including in control and management of natural resources, will be matched by adequate resources and support will be provided based on request of national government and on mutual agreement.

Before I end, Mr. President, let me state that there has been a concerted push to bring several normative issues into the Council's agenda under the pretext of their affecting international peace and security. This needs to be avoided for the effective functioning of the UN system. The Charter provides clear division of responsibilities between the General Assembly, the Security Council, ECOSOC, and other specialized bodies created by the member-states. All UN bodies, including this Council, must respect this division of roles and responsibilities.

Thank you

583. Statement by Amb. Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to the UN at the Security Council Debate on UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan.

New York, June 20, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President,

Let me begin with thanking you for scheduling today's debate on the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA). I thank Ambassador Zahir Tanin, Permanent Representative of Afghanistan for his statement. We also thank the UN Secretary General for his latest report and are appreciative of the briefing by Mr. Jan Kubis, UNSG's Special Representative for Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

The security situation in Afghanistan remains fragile as demonstrated by a number of high profile terrorist attacks over the last two months. We condemn these attacks in the strongest possible terms and convey our condolences to the Government and people of Afghanistan.

The sharp increase in the variety, spread and intensity of attacks by the Taliban and their backers shows that the ANSF continues to require substantial assistance from the international community in addressing the security and terrorist challenge faced by Afghanistan. Concerted action is needed to isolate and root out the syndicate of terrorism, which includes elements of the Taliban, Al-Qaida, Lashkar-e-Taiba and other terrorist and extremist groups. It is, therefore, important that the transition plan is based on the ground situation rather than a pre-determined timeframe.

The efforts of the international community in Afghanistan should remain focused on security, development, governance, and regional and international cooperation which is aligned with the overall objective of the Afghan government. This alone will enable the Afghan government to eventually assume full responsibility and take charge of Afghanistan's destiny without outside interference.

We welcome that the third Ministerial Conference of the Istanbul Process held in Almaty in April 2013 renewed the international community's commitment to these objectives. India was represented by the External Affairs Minister H.E. Salman Khurshid, who endorsed India's support for the Implementation Plan. India also fully supports the "Heart of Asia" process, which offers an invaluable opportunity to evolve a joint approach on issues of mutual concern through its pillar of political consultations. The process also offers us the opportunity to fulfill the promise of regional cooperation that was identified at Istanbul, Kabul and Delhi and further elaborated in the deliberations in the Implementation plan of the Trade, Commerce and Investment Opportunities CBM that India is leading.

Mr. President,

Afghanistan is a traditional friend and partner of India. The two countries have had a long shared history going back over millennia. The two countries are natural strategic partners by virtue of geography and a common vision of peace and cooperation in the region. Accordingly, India has taken a number of initiatives in pursuance of our Strategic Partnership Agreement with Afghanistan.

India's commitment to partner with Afghanistan as it takes charge of its destiny was reiterated during the visit of President Karzai to India in May 2013. During the visit, both sides reviewed the status of ongoing Indian-assisted development projects in and for Afghanistan, which amount to more than US$ 2.5 billion. We have also pledged continued development support for Afghanistan post 2014 under the Tokyo Mutual Accountability Framework.

Turning to the regional aspect, Mr. President, Afghanistan's stability and economic development depend a lot on its neighbours and the region as a whole. We must expand, rather than hinder, trade, transit and transport ties, including overland transit and trade. That is the best way of bringing the regional dimension into play in a positive manner. Growing economic inter-dependence will also help in weaning disaffected youth away from insurgency and militancy and in creating a zone of co-prosperity in the region. We support the wishes of the Government of Afghanistan to take the lead in this direction.

Mr. President,

The holding of presidential and provincial council elections, currently scheduled for 5 April 2014, will be an important step forward in strengthening the democratic framework in Afghanistan. It is also important that the ongoing transition must remain Afghan-led and Afghan-owned, must be multi-faceted and should ensure the protection and promotion of the human rights of all Afghans, and lead to the strengthening of the Afghan state and its institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me state that in the arduous journey for lasting peace, prosperity and stability in Afghanistan, the Afghan government needs a long-term commitment of the international community to confront the challenges that lie ahead. We appreciate the good work done by UNAMA in this regard. India will continue to stand by Afghanistan as a historically close and friendly neighbour through the ongoing transitions.

Thank you

584. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India to the UN at the UN Security Council Open Debate on “Sexual Violence in Conflict” under Agenda Item on “Women and Peace and Security”.

New York, June 24, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President.

At the outset, I would like to thank you for organizing this important open debate on Sexual Violence in Conflict in the broader context of the discourse on Women, Peace and Security.

I would also like to thank the Secretary-General, Ms Zainab Hawa Bangura, SRSG on Sexual Violence in Conflict, Ms. Angelina Jolie, Special Envoy of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and civil society representative Ms. Jane Adong Agywar from NGO Women's Initiatives for Gender Justice, for their remarks.

The resolution of conflict situations requires the adoption of a sustainable, holistic approach to conflict resolution and the overall reconstruction of impacted societies. In our view, gender equality and women's empowerment are integral to the pursuit of this objective. The participation of women in peace processes and post-conflict reconstruction efforts are imperative to lay the foundation for durable peace. Economic recovery, social cohesion and political legitimacy cannot be achieved without the active engagement of women.

Thirteen years ago, UNSCR 1325 highlighted the disproportionate impact of armed conflict on women and children and the need for effective institutional arrangements to guarantee their protection and full participation of women in peace processes. That resolution also contained several detailed recommendations on how to deal with various aspects of this issue.

As reports made to the Security Council since UNSCR 1325 was passed show, we have not made enough progress on implementing its recommendations. Take, for example, the peacekeeping operations mandated by the United Nations Security Council. As one of the major contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations for over six decades, Indian peacekeepers serving under the Blue Flag have also had to deal with this pernicious problem under challenging circumstances. We are of the view, based on our experience on the ground, that the Security Council must make available the resources that are required to implement the expanded scope of peacekeeping mandates. Specifically, we require greater commitment to the deployment of women's protection advisers in peacekeeping operations.

Mr. President,

The Security Council had called in UNSCR 1325 for greater participation of women in the field-based operations of the United Nations in terms of deployment of police personnel. We are proud of the fact that India was the first member state of the United Nations to successfully deploy an all-women police force as part of the United Nations peacekeeping operations in Liberia, where sexual violence had been one of the hallmarks of the conflict. Apart from the effectiveness of this force, which has been acknowledged by many, we believe that the functioning of such an all-women force has also sent a strong deterrent message to those who indulge in the egregious crime of sexual violence in conflict. By deploying women to deal with conflict situations, we have demonstrated that we can push forward the goal of empowering women to deal with the crime of sexual violence in armed conflicts, and play a major role in post-conflict reconstruction of traumatized societies. We hope that this example will encourage others to follow suit.

Mr. President,

India has drawn the attention of the Security Council in earlier debates to the impact of so-called militia groups on the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations. As the reports made to the Council since the adoption of UNSCR 1325 show, this impact has been felt especially in crimes of sexual violence in conflict situations where peacekeeping mandates are in force.

It is in this context that we take the view that national governments have the primary responsibility for prosecuting and deterring such crimes in conflict situations on their territories, even if these are alleged to have been committed by so-called militia groups. We believe that national governments should be assisted by the United Nations in augmenting their capacities to deal with this issue. This would play a vital role for ensuring better governance, and the stabilization of post-conflict situations. The UN should focus its efforts in this area.

Mr. President,

We would like to reiterate our principled position that debates such as this in the Security Council should focus on issues related to the mandate specifically given by the Council. We would urge caution in going beyond such mandates in reports submitted to the Council, which can only serve to dilute the focus of the Council and which contain the potential to divert much-needed resources away from the task at hand. It is critical therefore that such reports remain focused on the situations of armed conflict that are on the agenda of the Council, and not stray into so-called "situations of concern" on the basis of sweeping generalizations.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to once again reaffirm India's commitment to positively contribute to our collective efforts to tackle the crime of sexual violence in situations of armed conflict, in the overall framework of the work of the United Nations on the prevention and resolution of conflicts, and peace building.

I thank you

585. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, in the Security Council Open Debate on Protection of Civilians: Protection of Journalists in Conflict Situations.

New York, July 17, 2013.

Madam President,

I would like to thank you for organizing this debate on Protection of Journalists in Conflict Situations under the theme of Protection of Civilians. I would also like to thank you for the concept paper on the subject. We have benefitted greatly from the briefings today by the distinguished Deputy Secretary General and other briefers.

Madam President,

Before making our observations on this subject, we would reiterate India's consistent view that protection of journalists in all situations is the foremost responsibility of every state.

In India, Articles 19 and 21 of the Constitution guarantee the right to life, personal liberty, freedom of speech and expression. Such constitutional rights are of fundamental importance in any democratic society. Journalists play a crucial role in ensuring that citizens exercise these rights in reality. As the world's most populous democracy, India is committed to the protection of these rights for all its citizens, including journalists.

Our ingrained awareness of these rights is an integral part of our participation in the peacekeeping operations of the United Nations, where India has been the largest contributor. Indian UN peacekeepers have helped restore peace and security in conflict situations around the globe and thereby facilitated the creation of a conducive environment for the exercise of the right to freedom of speech and expression.

Madam President,

Since 1950, India has adhered to and fully supported the Geneva Conventions. We also recall this Council's demand in Resolution 1738 that all parties to an armed conflict comply fully with the obligations applicable to them under international law related to the protection of civilians in armed conflict, including journalists, media professionals and associated personnel. Such compliance is necessary not only for access to information, but also for resolution of conflict situations and for post-conflict peacebuilding.

Madam President,

While discussing best practices for protecting journalists in conflict situations, we would recommend certain basic precautions. These recommendations are meant to put in context issues of access and security in conflict situations. First and foremost, journalists should function within the relevant domestic laws of the countries concerned, so that they have full recourse to the protection afforded by such laws to them. Second, their access to conflict zones should be in a legal manner. Third, they should maintain strict neutrality and impartiality and not become a party to the conflict. By following such precautions, it will become easier for States to protect journalists, facilitate their professional work, and ensure that journalists become a catalyst for conflict resolution and peacebuilding.

On their part, national governments must come together and pledge to provide protection to journalists in conflict situations, especially where their whereabouts and coordinates have been provided in advance.

Madam President,

We have witnessed the tremendous dynamism and professionalism of journalists in reporting from conflict situations. Many journalists, including women, have performed their professional duty at grave personal risk. The protection that these journalists have received from responsive mechanisms, established by states under the rule of law, demonstrates the need to support the further development of such mechanisms. The efforts of the Council and of the international community require to be directed at assisting national authorities in augmenting such mechanisms, and in generating greater awareness of these issues. This is the most sustainable method for sovereign governments to discharge their responsibility to protect journalists in conflict situations.

Thank you

586. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, at the UN Security Council Open Debate on Situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian Question.

New York, July 23, 2013.

Thank you, Madam President,

Let me begin by expressing our appreciation of the US delegation for convening this quarterly open debate, which will allow the Council to take stock of recent developments in the Middle East, including the State of Palestine. I would like to thank Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process Robert Serry for his comprehensive briefing.

Madam President,

2. We welcome US efforts, including the visits of Secretary of State John Kerry, to re-engage Israel and Palestine in direct talks. We hope that the recent announcement of the two sides to re-start direct talks after perhaps one of the longest period of stalemate since the signing of the Oslo Accords will lead to concrete results.
3. In this context, it is necessary to address the issue of Israeli settlement activities, which have continued unabated and remain a serious obstacle. These activities are not only illegal, but also pose a serious threat to the two-state solution. We join others in urging Israel to stop settlement activities.
4. The blockade of Gaza is also continuing and adversely affecting essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. While we appreciate measures taken by Israel to allow flow of essential goods into Gaza, these measures cannot be a substitute for lifting the blockade.
5. The Palestinian Authority continues to face one of the worst financial crises that threaten to erode the progress made in building Palestinian state institutions. It is important that international community continue to support financial needs of the Palestine authority.

Madam President,

6. As a member of this Council during 2011-12, India supported Palestine's bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations. Continuing this support, India co-sponsored the General Assembly resolution in November 2012 that upgraded the status of Palestine to a non-member Observer State.
7. India continues to partner with the Palestinian Authority in its socio-economic development, including through the provision of direct budgetary grant, training programmes and IBSA projects.
8. India also continues its consistent support for a negotiated solution to the Israeli- Palestinian issue, resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its capital, side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in various United Nations Resolutions, the Arab Peace Initiative and the Quartet Road Map. We call on the international community to redouble its efforts for an early resolution of this conflict.
9. Before I conclude, Madam President, let me express our deep concern at the deterioration of the situation in Syria. We look forward to an early holding of the Geneva-2 Conference which should help commence a Syrian-led inclusive political dialogue that resolves the current crisis and meets the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society. Any further militarization will only exacerbate the conflict and must be avoided by all parties concerned, internal as well as external.

I thank you

587. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, Open Debate on “Cooperation between the United Nations and regional and sub-regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security” at the United Nations Security Council.

New York, August 6, 2013.

Thank you, Madam President.

Let me begin by congratulating you on presiding over this high-level meeting of the Security Council. Cooperation between the United Nations and regional and sub-regional organizations in maintaining international peace and security is an important and topical issue. We commend the concept note prepared by the delegation of Argentina on the subject.

2. India supports the role of regional and sub-regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as their cooperation with the United Nations under Chapter VIII of the UN Charter. Article 54 of the Charter enjoins upon these organizations to keep the Security Council fully informed of their activities for maintenance of international peace and security. We, therefore, welcome the participation of, and briefings by, representatives of various regional organizations in this meeting today.
3. Madam President, The Charter provides a broad framework for the UN's cooperation with the regional organizations, while clearly underscoring the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security.
4. It is important to underline here that cooperation of the United Nations, particularly of this Council, with regional organizations should be in full compliance with all other provisions of the UN Charter. The principles of national sovereignty, political independence, unity and territorial integrity must be respected. It is important that peculiarities of each situation are kept in mind.

Also, cooperation with one regional organization should not come at the cost of another.

5. We believe that the objective of peaceful resolution of conflicts should imbue the actions of the United Nations, in general, and of the Security Council, in particular. It is important that member-states guide all UN activities, including its cooperation with regional organizations.
6. While acting under Chapter VIII of the UN Charter, regional and sub-regional organizations should make every effort to assist their member-states to achieve pacific settlement of disputes, in cooperation with the UN, as appropriate. Such cooperation should encompass all relevant issues related to international peace and security, including the fight against terrorism.
7. Madam President, as many as two-thirds of the active items on the Security Council's agenda concern Africa. About three-fourth of the Council's time is spent on African issues. It would, therefore, be no exaggeration to say that the success of this Council's cooperation with regional organizations will be determined in significant measure by its cooperation with the African Union. In this connection, it is important for the Council to listen to Africa and its organizations so that the Council's activities are not only based on Africa's needs but also complement the efforts of African countries and organizations.
8. We think that such an important partnership should be based on long-term strategic and operational perspectives taking into consideration the complementarity of strengths of the UN and the African Union. Our focus should be on capacity-building of the African Union's peace and security architecture so that the AU becomes a more effective and capable partner of the UN system.
9. In conclusion, Madam President, we reiterate that there is a pressing need for further strengthening the existing capacity of the UN system to help regional and sub- regional organizations in order to significantly ensure the maintenance of international peace and security.

I thank you

588. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji
Permanent Representative, in the Security Council Open Debate on “Protection of Civilians in armed conflict”.

New York, August 19, 2013.

Madam President,

Let me begin by thanking you and your delegation for organizing today's debate on the important issue of Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict. We thank all the distinguished briefers for this debate today for their valuable inputs.

2. It bears recalling that the Security Council has been considering protection of civilians as a thematic subject since 1999. This has also become a key focus in many resolutions, including those that are country- specific and relate to UN peacekeeping missions. However, the sad fact remains that civilians continue to suffer disproportionately during armed conflicts.
3. We, therefore, hope, Madam President, that today's debate and the comprehensive concept note prepared by your delegation will contribute to the evolving discourse on strengthening protection of civilians in armed conflict.

Madam President,

4. India has consistently supported full compliance with applicable international humanitarian laws by all parties to an armed conflict.

5. We believe that a critical requirement in this context relates to the capacities of national institutions in situations of armed conflict and the need to strengthen these. Obviously, capacity building of key national institutions, including in security and justice sectors, requires to be adequately resourced.
6. It is important that the international community, including the UN, step up to the plate and partner with national authorities to build and strengthen the capacity of State organs.
7. Today, as we mark the World Humanitarian Day, we must emphasize that an adequate resourcing is also an imperative for UN peacekeeping missions that are now also being charged with mandates of protection of civilians. We must hold accountable those who target UN peacekeepers who themselves are responsible for protecting civilians in their theatre of operation.
8. Moreover, efforts at peace building should be initiated right at the beginning and the cause of the armed conflict addressed through national reconciliation and inclusive political processes giving all sections of society a stake in peaceful co-existence.

Madam President,

9. The need to ensure humanitarian access for populations affected by armed conflict cannot be overstated and States must endeavor to facilitate the same.
10. However, humanitarian actors must also ensure that their activities do not provide legitimacy or operational space for terrorist or armed groups.
11. Terrorists and illegal armed groups that often bear the primary responsibility for such attacks against civilians should be held accountable for such attacks.

Madam President,

12. Security Council action must be based on full respect for the UN Charter, including sovereignty and integrity of the Member States.

13. In so far as issues of impunity are concerned, we believe that a lasting solution is not in the creation of more international or regional institutions, but in building national institutions through capacity building efforts so that they can function consistent with the rule of law.
14. In conclusion, Madam President, I would like to reiterate our consistent view that protection of civilians is primarily a national responsibility that becomes even more important in an armed conflict. It is our belief that contribution to national capacity building rather than intervention mechanisms should be the priority of the Security Council.

I thank you

589. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, Debate on UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan at the United Nations Security Council.

New York, September 19, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset let me thank you for organizing today's debate on the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA). I thank Ambassador Zahir Tanin, Permanent Representative of Afghanistan for his statement. We thank the UN Secretary General and SRSG Jan Kubis for their inputs.

Mr. President,

Afghanistan is going through critical security, political and economic transitions. We commend the efforts being made by the Afghan Government in ensuring completion of all technical preparations to hold a successful Presidential election. A peaceful and free election process that elects an Afghan President acceptable to the people of Afghanistan remains the key.

The Presidential elections in 2014 will be yet another significant step towards the political reconstruction effort in Afghanistan which must always remain Afghan-led and Afghan-owned. This will be the 3rd democratic election in Afghanistan, a significant achievement for Afghanistan, and a sign of maturity of its new political system. The international community must strongly support the Afghan authorities' preparations in this endeavour, and at the same time strongly oppose any outside effort to derail the process.

Mr. President,

The security situation in Afghanistan is fragile not due to the weakness or inabilities of the valiant Afghan Security forces, but due to the continued threat of terrorist and extremist groups to Afghanistan's security. This was demonstrated most recently by the condemnable attack on the Indian Consulate in Jalalabad on 3rd August which led to injuries to several Afghan security personnel guarding the Consulate and the killing of several innocent Afghan citizens, including 10 children. India does not have an "exit policy" in Afghanistan and will not be deterred by such attacks. We do not see this attack as only aimed against India, but also against the efforts of the Afghan people to overcome the tragic consequences of the last several decades of war and conflict. The Secretary General's report speaks about 3500 Afghan servicemen being killed and wounded in action in the second quarter of 2013. We salute the valor of ANSF personnel who have made the supreme sacrifice for the objectives and values enshrined in the Afghan constitution. The recent merciless killing of Sayed Kamala Sushmita Banerjee - a woman medical worker of Indian origin who was married to an Afghan national - reflects the intolerance of those who oppose Afghanistan's socio-economic development as also the challenge that lies ahead in Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

Many of the terrorist attacks in Afghanistan have been coordinated by the Taliban along with the Al Qaida and their affiliates. These definitely are pointers that we must be continuously watchful of the designs of these terrorist organizations. The Al Qaida and Taliban Sanction Committees must remain proactive and attentive in their listing and delisting process of individuals and entities for targeted measures. The international community should continue to back the efforts of the Afghans in addressing the security and terrorist challenges faced by them. Concerted action is also needed to isolate and root out the syndicate of terrorism, which includes elements of the Taliban, Al-Qaida, Lashkar-e-Taiba and other terrorist and extremist groups. It is, therefore, important that the transition plan takes into account the threats posed by these terrorist organizations and factors in the security situation on the ground.

Mr. President,

The international community must re-assess the role it wishes to play in Afghanistan's internal political process, which brings me to the issue of the renewed mandate we should confer upon the UNAMA.

Over the last decade UNAMA has performed a vital political, humanitarian and development role in Afghanistan along with other agencies of the UN system. With the 3rd democratic elections underway, the political reconstruction effort in Afghanistan has reached a level of maturity. We should, therefore, define UNAMA's political mandate to ensure that it keeps its focus on supporting the institutions of politics rather than the political process itself, which must be left to Afghanistan's own leaders.

At the same time the new mandate for UNAMA must step-up its humanitarian and developmental role through better delivery of assistance in Afghanistan, since the UN is uniquely placed with access to the remotest and most isolated communities in the country. When basic services like health, education, nutrition are provided on a regular basis to all Afghans, we would have created a vital 'space' for the new Afghan political system to mature and take deep roots in Afghan society. This development and humanitarian assistance must also be consistent with the ongoing efforts to develop the capacities of the Afghan public administration to deliver such services on its own. Wherever and to the maximum extent possible, the delivery of the humanitarian and development services must be through Afghan state institutions - because it is not capacity 'substitution' but 'capacity building' that we are seeking to achieve in Afghanistan.

Mr. President

The experience of the last decade also shows that the UN Mission in Afghanistan, like some other missions, has also been plagued by problems of coherence in performing its mandated activities. This has inevitably led to a duplication of resources, and a higher cost of programs. The renewed mandate of the UNAMA should also address this issue.

In conclusion, Mr. President, 2014 would be an important watershed for Afghanistan. The international community's support for Afghanistan would be critical in this transition. We appreciate the good work being done by UNAMA in often trying conditions and assure you that India will continue to stand by Afghanistan during this period of transition and thereafter.

Thank you

590. STATEMENT BY MR. M. KRISHNASSWAMY, MEMBER OF PARLAIMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, DURING THE OPEN DEBATE ON 'WOMEN AND PEACE AND SECURITY' AT THE UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL.

New York, October 18, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset, I would like to thank you for organizing this Open Debate on the agenda item "Women and Peace and Security".

I would also like to thank the UN Secretary General, Executive Director of UN Women and other briefers for their detailed remarks.

Mr. President,

The resolution of armed conflict situations requires a sustainable holistic approach to conflict resolution and the overall reconstruction of impacted societies. The participation of women in peace processes and post-conflict reconstruction efforts is necessary to lay the foundation for durable peace. The UNSCR 1325 and its successor Council resolutions have provided a framework for effective institutional arrangements. As the Secretary General's report points out – significant progress has been achieved but much more needs to be done.

Mr. President,

India is one of the leading contributors to UN peacekeeping operations with over 160,000 peacekeepers under the blue flag during the past six decades, our peacekeepers have an exemplary record. They have also dealt with this problem under challenging circumstances. Based on our experience, we believe that the Security Council must make available the resources that are required to implement the expanded scope of peacekeeping mandates. India was the first Member State to successfully deploy an all-women police force as part of the United Nations peacekeeping operations. By deploying women to deal with conflict situations, including women peacekeepers as well as women protection advisors, we have demonstrated that we can assist in empowering women to deal with the crime of sexual violence in armed conflict and play a major role in post-conflict reconstruction of traumatized societies. We hope that more Member States will contribute greater number of women military and police personnel for UN peacekeeping operations.

Mr. President,

We have taken note of the indicators proposed in the Secretary General's report. Indicators can serve as a useful reference in assessing situations and in guiding UN action as affected countries move from conflict situation to conflict resolution and peacebuilding to post-conflict reconstruction phase.

At the same time, we must not lose sight of the difficulties in ascertaining credible and verifiable information from armed conflict zones. We believe, therefore, that it will be useful to have wider discussions before adoption of these indicators and to refine them including based on feedback from the ground to ensure their relevance and efficacy.

Mr. President,

It is our firm view that capacity building should be a key focus of UN efforts as affected countries emerge from armed conflict situations. If we wish to see sustainable peace and stability, then state institutions, including in the area of security, rule of law and justice, need to be augmented and strengthened. The national governments have the primary responsibility for prosecuting and deterring violence against women including sexual violence.

States need to take ownership as they embark on the difficult process of rebuilding their societies and countries including consolidation of democratic ideals and practices, and effective improvements in the socio-economic conditions. It is important to recognize here that some structural changes can take place only in the mid to long term. The UN and the international community must step up and sustain their support to the affected States in this critical endeavor.

Mr. President,

We would like to reiterate our principled position that the Security Council should focus on issues related to the mandate specifically given by the Council. We would urge caution in going beyond mandates in reports submitted to the Council. It will be useful to remind ourselves here that the women and peace and security agenda evolved from the imperative to address the disproportionate impact of armed conflict on women including the abhorrent practice of sexual violence against women as an instrument of war.

One recommendation in the current report is to incorporate the Women and Peace and Security agenda in other thematic areas such as countering terrorism, trans-national organized crime, etc. This is clearly a mandate overreach; it has also implications for division of work and responsibilities between the UNSC and the UNGA. But the real danger at its core is the potential to dilute significant UN work being done both in the area of women and peace and security, and other areas such as tackling terrorism.

Mr. President,

In conclusion, let me reaffirm India's commitment to positively contribute to consolidation of UN efforts in the area of women and peace and security.

I thank you

591. Statement by Mrs. Preet Kaur Minister of State for External Affairs, Debate on the “Situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian Question” in the UN Security Council.

New York, October 22, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for giving me the floor.

At the outset let me express our appreciation to you for convening this quarterly open debate, which allows the Council to take stock of recent developments in the Middle East, including the State of Palestine. I would also like to thank Under Secretary General for Political Affairs Mr. Jeffery Feltman, for his comprehensive briefing.

Mr. President,

2. Resolution of the Palestinian question remains an urgent and key issue for the international community. It is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. Given the evolving situation in the Middle East region and its inherent fragility and unpredictability, it is necessary that there is no more delay in the resolution of the Palestinian question.
3. We are encouraged by the ongoing direct talks between Israel and Palestine facilitated by the US. We hope that the direct talks which have resumed after one of the longest period of stalemate since the signing of the Oslo Accords will lead to concrete results within the time frame of nine months envisaged by the US Secretary of State, Mr John Kerry.
4. In this context, it is necessary to address the issue of Israeli settlement activities, which are continuing unabated. These activities are not only illegal, but also pose a serious threat to the two-state solution. We join others in urging Israel to stop settlement activities.
5. The blockade of Gaza has had serious consequences for the lives of Palestinians. It has adversely affected essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. We continue to hold that it is necessary for Israel to lift the blockade on Gaza and allow normal and unrestricted movement of persons and goods within Palestine.

Mr. President,

6. India remains steadfast in its support for a negotiated solution to the Israeli Palestinian issue resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its Capital, side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap, various UN resolutions and the Arab Peace Initiative.
7. Given the financial difficulties that the Palestinian Authority continues to face, India remains committed to support the Palestinian Authority bilaterally as well as through IBSA Fund. Bilaterally, we continue to partner with the Palestinian Authority by providing developmental support and assistance through direct budgetary support, contributions to UNRWA, training, etc. Through IBSA Fund, we will continue to undertake capacity building and infrastructure projects that are prioritized by the Palestinian Authority.
8. As demonstrated over the past six decades, including during its memberships in the UN Security Council, India also stands ready to support all measures that the Palestinian leadership may take towards political resolution of the Final Status issues.

Mr. President,

9. Before I conclude, I would like to express our deep concern at the situation in Syria. While we welcome the adoption of Security Council resolution 2118 on the elimination of the Syrian chemical weapons programme as well as the Presidential Statement on the humanitarian situation in Syria, we are concerned at the continuing violence and worsening humanitarian situation.
10. We have long held that there is no military solution to this conflict. We continue to think that an inclusive political dialogue to resolve the crisis should remain the focus of the United Nations, including this Council. We look forward to an early holding of the Geneva-2 Conference, which should help commence a Syrian-led inclusive political dialogue that resolves the current crisis and meets the legitimate aspirations of all sections of Syrian society.

I thank you

592. Statement by Dr. Ahwani Kumar Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian delegation on the Open Debate on Security Council Working Method.

New York, October 29, 2013.

Mr. President,

Let me at the outset, thank you for convening this open debate on Working Methods of the Security Council. I also thank your delegation for authoring the concept note which gives a perspective on the various issues being discussed under the broad rubric of the working methods. I would also like to put on record our deep appreciation of Ambassador María Cristina Perceval's stewardship of the Informal Working Group on Documentation and Procedural Questions during the year 2013.

Mr. President,

In the 2005 World Summit Outcome Document, Heads of States and Governments supported early reform of the Security Council and recommended that the Council continue to adapt its working methods to the exigencies and imperatives of a vastly altered global order. It is a matter of regret that so far very little has been done to achieve either of these mandates.

Mr. President,

As the primary organ of the UN system for maintenance of international peace and security, working methods of the Council are of interest to the entire international community. As the concept note has rightly mentioned, issues of transparency, interaction with non-members of the Council, Troop and Police Contributing Countries and relevant United Nation bodies are important for the overall efficiency of the Council and need to be addressed urgently.

Mr. President,

I would like to briefly share India's perspective on how the Security Council could improve upon its performance. Let me start with a quote from the famous writer-poet Victor Marie Hugo, who said, "There is nothing stronger than an idea whose time has come". Reform of the Security Council in tune with the contemporary realities is an idea whose time has come. The permanent members of the Security Council must recognize, not only individually but also collectively, that the Council must be reformed to make it reflect the contemporary realities of the international system.

It is self-evident that the expansion of the Security Council reflecting the contemporary geopolitical realities would improve its representative character and grant greater legitimacy and credibility to its decisions.

Also, the improvement of Security Council's working methods would enhance the Council's effectiveness and efficiency. We strongly believe that real improvements in the working methods need change in both the process and approach, which require reform of the composition of the Council.

Mr. President,

The most important change required in the working methods is to make them transparent and inclusive. The Security Council needs to increase access to documentation and information and curb the tendency to hold closed meetings having no records. What is worse is the practice of taking decisions among the P-5 to the exclusion of other Council members as was seen just last month on an important issue of international peace and security.

Mr. President,

During the last few years, my delegation has strongly supported efforts in the Informal Working Group aimed at improvements in the Council's working methods. Some specific suggestions include the following:

One, the Council should amend its procedures so that items do not remain on its agenda permanently.

Two, the reporting cycle should be practical and result-oriented so that issues do not come for consideration just as a matter of routine, putting pressure on the limited time Council has at its disposal.

Three, Articles 31 and 32 of the Charter must be fully implemented, by consulting with non-Security Council members on a regular basis, especially members with a special interest in the substantive matter under consideration by the Council. There is a need to strengthen the trend of meeting more often in public, including through holding public briefings and debates.

Four, 'penholders' should allow greater and systematic participation of elected members as 'co-penholders'.

Five, non-members should be given systematic access to subsidiary bodies of the UNSC, including the right to participate.

Six, participation of Troop and Police Contributing Countries in decision making concerning peacekeeping operations must cover the establishment, conduct, review and termination of peacekeeping operations, including the extension and change of mandates, as well as for specific operational issues.

Seven, there is a need to ensure more informative annual SC reporting to the GA.

Eight, the Council should concentrate its time and efforts on dealing with issues concerning its primary responsibility concerning international peace and security as mandated by the UN Charter, rather than encroaching upon the mandate of the General Assembly and other UN organs.

Nine, before mandating measures under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council should first make serious efforts for pacific settlements of disputes through measures under Chapter VI.

Mr. President

In conclusion, let me reiterate India's considered view that genuine reform in the working methods of the Security Council requires a comprehensive reform in the membership of the Council, with expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories, and not only improvement in its working procedures. This is essential both for the credibility and continued confidence of the international community in this institution. It is our sincere expectation that these ideas will be pursued by Council members so that views expressed by the wider UN member-states find resonance in the Council's work and working methods.

Thank you

593. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative on United Nations Security Council debate on "Situation in Afghanistan".

New York, December 17, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset, let me thank you for organizing this debate on the 'Situation in Afghanistan'. I avail this opportunity to thank Ambassador Zahir Tanin for his statement. We also thank UNSRSG Jan Kubis for his inputs.

Mr. President,

Let me begin by expressing our concern with the attacks in Afghanistan's Uruzgan province on 26 November and in the Faryab province on 27 November, which resulted in the death of nine development workers. We are pained that this attack has brought the number of attacks against humanitarian personnel, facilities and assets in Afghanistan to 237 so far this year. All this points to the fact that the main threat to security in Afghanistan is terrorism being perpetrated by those who do not want to see a strong stable prosperous Afghanistan.

We note that progress has been made in the finalization of the candidates for the Presidential and the provincial elections due in 2014. This is a significant step during a period of Afghanistan's transition which encompasses security, political and economic dimensions. I would like to reiterate that the key to successful elections in 2014 is a process whose outcome is acceptable to the people of Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

The events preceding the Presidential elections are extremely important as they would bring to the political discourse issues which are close to the heart of Afghan people. This would impact on the political reconstruction effort in Afghanistan which must always remain Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and 'Afghan-Controlled'. At this juncture, the support of the international community for the Afghan authorities' electoral preparations is critical. We must also be vigilant towards any efforts to derail the process and this would certainly include strengthening the security apparatus.

Mr. President,

The security situation in Afghanistan remains under threat from terrorism. The report of the Secretary General mentions that during the first ten months of 2013, there were 7,394 civilian casualties - a 13 per cent rise compared to the same period in 2012. Three-quarters of these casualties were attributed to attacks by anti-Government elements. It is also noteworthy that the use of improvised explosive devices, including in complex and suicide attacks, accounted for 49 per cent of these casualties and remains the biggest threat to civilians. There are forces active to derail the process of reconstruction. Here, I would like to reiterate that India would be undeterred by these cowardly acts of violence. We do not have an "exit policy" in Afghanistan and I would like to emphasize our commitment to stand by the Afghan people and their servicemen who have shown exemplary courage in protecting the Afghan people.

Mr. President,

The internal security situation has been hostage to the terrorist attacks originating from beyond Afghanistan's border by groups closely allied to the Al Qaida and their affiliates. We would like to reinforce that we must be continuously watchful of the designs of these terrorist organizations. In this regard, concerted action is also needed to isolate and root out the syndicate of terrorism, which includes elements of the Taliban, Al-Qaida, Lashkar-e-Taiba and other terrorist and extremist groups. In order to have a smooth transition security plan, It is therefore extremely important that the drawdown of troops and its implication on the security arrangements is carefully assessed and appropriate measures need to be taken to ensure the safety of the Afghan people. I note that the Secretary General has mentioned the twelfth annual trilateral meeting of Foreign Ministers of Russia, India and China on 10 November 2013 which emphasized the need for continuing international support to and greater regional integration with Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

We also note the recent announcement of record levels of poppy cultivation and opium production. The Secretary General's report rightly mentions that it is a critical hazard to the security, well-being and development of Afghanistan and the wider region. This aspect must not be neglected.

Mr. President,

In view to the efforts of the international community to have an Afghan-led process of transition, the time has come for the international community to re-assess the role it wishes to play. I would suggest that we need to discuss the issue of mandate of UNAMA. Afghanistan has reached a considerable level of political maturity with the ongoing political reconstruction efforts. There is no doubt that UNAMA has played an exceptional role over the last decade in the political, humanitarian and development spheres in Afghanistan along with other agencies of the UN system. However, I would like to mention that in view of the maturity of the process in Afghanistan, the international community may wish to define UNAMA's political mandate in light of the changed circumstances. The new mandate of UNAMA should help to keep its focus on supporting the political institutions rather than attempting to influence the political process itself, which must be left entirely to Afghanistan's own leaders.

Mr. President,

Talking of UNAMA's role, we also believe that UNAMA must step-up its humanitarian and developmental role through better delivery of assistance in Afghanistan, since the UN is uniquely placed with access to the remotest and most isolated communities in the country. We must also not forget that it is not capacity 'substitution' but 'capacity building' that we are seeking to achieve in Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

The future role of UNAMA needs to be discussed so that it plays an effective role keeping in mind the overall objective of the transition process. In doing so we must take into account problems of coherence, the duplication of efforts and the resulting higher cost of programs.

Mr. President,

In conclusion, I would like to say that as we enter a new year, we should be hopeful that Afghanistan would be taking definite strides towards a new era of development and progress. India sincerely believes that the huge efforts of the Afghan people and the international community that has gone into the process of transition would provide a solid basis for a stable future. We would like to assure that India will stand by the people of Afghanistan in all its endeavours. We reiterate our support to the efforts of the international community leading towards a peaceful, prosperous and stable Afghanistan.

Thank you

(ii) General Assembly

594. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative at the First Regular Session of Executive Board of UN Women.

New York, January 23, 2013.

Mr. President,

Permit me at the outset to congratulate you on your election as President of the Bureau. On behalf of more than 500 million Indian women (and equal number of men), I wish you all success and hope that you would successfully navigate the Board, in pursuing its goals on gender equality and empowerment of women.

My felicitations to the Executive Director and Under Secretary-General, Madam Michelle Bachelet for her statement and our complements for an extremely insightful and detailed report on the operational activities of UN Women, which has been placed for consideration by the Board.

Mr. President,

As we begin the third operational year of UN Women, I would like to recall the goals that we set out in the Strategic Plan when we had just embarked on our first steps, after creation of this entity. We had then called for it, to be 'ambitious, achievable and results oriented'. Today, at the beginning of the third operational year of UN Women, my delegation is happy to note the significant milestones that UN Women has achieved under the dynamic leadership of Madam Bachelet, in such a short span of time.

I am particularly pleased to learn from the operational activities report that UN Women has made strengthening and expanding 'partnerships', its key edifice, while pursuing and implementing its mandate, especially by forging active partnerships with civil society stakeholders, NGOs, academia, media and the business community. We are also happy to learn the unique manner in which social media has been used as part of globally driven communications strategy to achieve an audience of 40 million, through social media alone!

Mr. President,

Section IV- D, of the Report on Operational Activities, focusses on the theme of ending violence against women and chronicles UN Women's efforts in achieving the same. I choose to begin my first submission on that theme today, because it is of particular interest to my delegation, and finds resonance, especially in the aftermath of the horrific rape incident that was witnessed in my capital on 16 December 2012.

Representing a country which is home to more than 500 million women, let me first place on record Mr. President, that for me and for my Government, even one incident of violence against any woman or any girl, is an incident too many, and simply unacceptable.

The edifice of the Indian society is premised on the all embracing power of the Indian woman - which in our ancient thought and religious belief, bestows her the power to create, nurture and transform. She is not only worshipped as 'Durga' the goddess of creation, but also as 'Saraswati' - the inspiration for all music, poetry, science and learning.

It is therefore absolutely reprehensible that such an horrific tragedy happened on Indian soil. While it would remain a blot on the strong feminist credentials of the Indian societal fabric, the incident indeed shook the whole conscience of our nation at its very roots.

Let me assure you, Mr. President, that the Government of India will ensure that the culprits are brought to speedy justice, and the sternest possible message sent out by giving them the punishment they deserve. The Government of India shares the collective anguish of all Indians, on this most horrific incident, and today's report of Justice J S Verma's Committee has suggested ways to initiate a series of steps to ensure that such crimes do not happen again.

We believe in the dictum that: "No country can achieve its full potential without adequately developing the capabilities of its women." And that is why women in India have always played a pivotal role in shaping our national discourse and policy making. Economic empowerment of Indian women at the grass roots level, especially through the Self-Help Groups has been a hall mark of India 's success story. Out of the six million self help groups in India, more than 80% (about 4.8 million) are women's groups, which have provided microfinance, employment and livelihood, and have made a defining change in the lives of millions of Indian women at the village level.

Mr. President, allow me to flag two more issues of particular relevance to our discourse on operational activities for UN Women:

After intense deliberations, member states were able to adopt in the 67th UNGA, the QCPR resolution, which set out the overall policy direction for UN's development operational activities for the next four years. Within the same, we have been able to ensure a very strong focus on keeping gender equality and women's empowerment as the cornerstone of all development activities, and that UNWOMEN should take the lead in ensuring accountability of the UN system when it comes to delivering on these variables, especially, in terms of results and impact.

We would therefore call upon UNWOMEN to make full use of the empowering mandate given by the QCPR Resolution to make operational activities of the UN development system truly transformative for women and girls everywhere .

As we plan for our activities for the next four years, we must also try to work out modalities whereby the 'actionables' on gender equality and women's empowerment as flowing from the QCPR, are implemented through programmes and projects of UN Women, as well as other funds and programmes. We must also work out means to dovetail these into those country programmes, whose periods are synchronous with the time frame of the QCPR resolution.

Secondly, while there is growing recognition that investing in gender equality and empowerment of women is critical to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, given the current financial environment, work on gender equality and empowerment of women does remain chronically underfunded. We hope that the comprehensive resource mobilisation strategy of UN Women, would certainly widen the donor base in order to secure the resources required by UN Women in meeting its global commitments.

Even the QCPR resolution has endorsed the imperativeness of a critical mass of core resources to be made available. Being a recently created entity, this is more than critical for UN Women, as it would enable you to strengthen your programmes on the ground and implement the Strategic Plan. In this regard, there is a need for donors to increase their contribution to core resources by giving UN Women the foremost priority for enhanced funding, till it secures a firm footing of its resource pool.

Being fully cognizant of this funding requirement, just last week we moved beyond what you called 'love and fresh air' and contributed our third installment of US$ one million to UN Women's core resources, taking our total contribution to US$ 3 million so far, since its inception. It is but a small part of Government of India's firm commitment of five million US dollars to provide core predictable funding to UN Women. If we have to ensure that UN Women stands for action, the donor community must make generous contributions to UN Women. We will continue to provide full political and financial support to UN Women and call on others to do likewise.

Given that South South cooperation and development of national capacities is a key component of the UN Women's implementation strategy, we are particularly pleased to learn about the success of the 'South Asian first ever virtual knowledge hub' for elected women's representatives, that Madam Bachelet launched in Jaipur, during her visit in October last year to India, which has been an epitome of success at empowering women at grassroots democracy.

Let me conclude, Mr. President, by reaffirming India's steadfast commitment to all round social, economic and political empowerment of our women, whatever effort and resources, the task might take. We assure you that India will always be willing to walk the extra mile, in having the goals outlined in the Strategic Plan implemented at the earliest.

Thank You

595. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative at UNDP Segment of the First Regular Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS.

New York, January 28, 2013.

Mr. President, Permit me at the outset to congratulate you on your election as President of the Bureau. I wish you all success in navigating the Board in implementing its agenda, in what promises to be an eventful year.

We would also like to place on record our appreciation to the outgoing Bureau, which was so ably presided over by Ambassador Martin Grunditz, Permanent Representative of Sweden, and his commendable role in guiding the work of the Board last year. My felicitations are also due to the Administrator Madam Helen Clark for her insightful statement and well crafted report on the implementation of the UNDP gender equality strategy.

Mr. President, 2012 was marked by major developments across the globe and several key conferences that not only provided an opportunity for stock-taking, but also served as useful reminders to the international community on the pressing challenges that remain to be addressed on the global development agenda. Rio plus 20 outlined the imperative of poverty eradication as the greatest global challenge, and laid down the roadmap for the "future we want ". We must therefore ensure that effective implementation mechanisms and the means that developing countries need to achieve the same, are followed up, and provided for, by the multilateral system.

As a country that has one of the longest relationships with UNDP and is the biggest contributor to its core budget among developing countries, we have an abiding interest in UNDP's success and its efforts in the global development agenda. I would therefore, Mr. President, submit the following for your consideration:

One, we had been saying all along, that for the UN development system to be successful globally, it needs to be firmly rooted in its core focus area, which has primarily to be development related ONLY, and that the 'D' in UNDP should stand for decimating poverty. With the adoption of the QCPR Resolution by the 67th UNGA, this has been made even more abundantly clear. For the first time ever, in such a resolution, you have a section dedicated exclusively to Poverty Eradication, in which you have been given the mandate by 193 member states to "assign the highest priority to poverty eradication" which has been reaffirmed in the same resolution as the "greatest global challenge".

I would like to quote OP 70 of the QCPR resolution: "eradication of poverty through the development of national capacities in developing countries should continue to be the core focus area for the United Nations development system and that ALL its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective "

I hope that given this very specific mandate outlined by the QCPR, which also happened to be a long standing and considered conviction of my delegation, you would now try to place poverty eradication at the heart of UNDP's operational activities for development, as its primary objective.

Mr. President, incidentally, we now also have before us the findings of the evaluation report on UNDP's contribution to poverty reduction, whose findings need to be taken seriously. We hope that in the crafting of the next strategic plan, the specific message from this report would be addressed as well.

Second, as you prepare your next strategic plan for the period 2014 - 2017, it is absolutely imperative that all the "actionables" that the UN Development System and its agencies have been called upon by member states to pursue by the QCPR, are not just incorporated but also implemented as part of the strategic plan being so developed. It would also be prudent to dovetail these actionables into those UNDP country programmes, which are synchronous with the time period of the QCPR.

Third, an agenda item being discussed in this Board Session within the purview of programming arrangements is the establishment of the Contingency Fund, with a proposed allocation of USD 46.8 million dollars. Mr. President, we would like to submit that member states need to be assured of the following before you decide to establish the Fund:

Is there a specific need which has arisen in 2013, which necessitates the creation of this Fund? Should it be given a 7% allocation just because another sister agency made a decision in 1997 to do so? Why should money from an already shrinking resource pool for programming activities of member states, be kept aside, when the same precedent to which its existence is being borrowed from, illustrates that last year more than 80% has gone unutilised? These are some questions that do merit some answers, before we proceed to establishing, what we feel is a misnomer in the name of a Contingency Fund.

Fourth and finally, Mr. President, even though South South Cooperation is being singled out as a new buzzword in the evolving narrative of the developmental discourse, much more remains to be done to give it the 'muscle' it needs from the UN system. We believe, the first thing to do is to let it proceed and grow on the basis of its unique characteristics of national ownership and mutually agreed terms. Looking at South-South cooperation as either permitting a dilution or substituting for North-South aid would only serve to shackle it to the detriment of developing countries.

Along with Brazil and South Africa, we have partnered in the IBSA Trust Fund Initiative, which has been a flagship project under the overall canvas of South South cooperation. We have already concluded several key developmental projects including rural electrification through solar energy systems in Guinea Bissau, improving the health infrastructure services for Children in Cambodia, rehabilitation of health centers and water desalination projects in Cape Verde, capacity building projects in Sierra Leone, besides several others in Palestine, Burundi and Lao PDR. As Chair of the IBSA Trust Fund last year, we explored ways to further strengthen our engagement with the UNDP through innovative partnership mechanisms that facilitate development solutions for other developing countries, particularly the LDCs. We are particularly thankful to the UN Office for South South Cooperation for the excellent support we have received and hope that it would be given the resources it needs to pursue its mandate.

To conclude, Mr. President, this Board Session, given its agenda, is an important and timely opportunity not just for stock taking but also to constructively contribute to UN's development agenda. Our suggestions have been made in this spirit and I hope will find resonance in the larger UNDP community.

For us, UNDP has and will remain the force multiplier arm of the UN, which will continue to foster national and local capacities and promote national ownership by building socio-economic resilience in the most vulnerable developing countries. We reaffirm our steadfast commitment and support to UNDP, and India is willing to walk the extra mile in helping you, achieve your mandate of poverty eradication.

I thank you

596. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative, at UNDP Segment discussing Evaluation Report on UNDP contribution to Poverty Reduction at UNDP Segment of the First Regular Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS.

New York, January 30, 2013.

Mr. President, I would like to complement the UNDP Evaluation Office for an excellent report on evaluation of UNDP contribution to Poverty Reduction. Our felicitations also to UNDP for having requested this exercise, on a very critical and pertinent theme, which has not just found resonance in the deliberations of this Board, but has also received considerable attention within the QCPR Resolution.

Mr. President, we firmly believe that course correction is always a welcome exercise and any endeavour, which is based on facts and rationale, that have a sound evidence base, in this regard, is never too late ! More so, when we are tackling what has been termed as the "greatest global challenge" of poverty eradication. That is precisely why the findings of the Evaluation Report on UNDP's contributions are welcome and must find reflection in the Strategic Plan for 2014-2017.

I would therefore ONLY submit, the course corrections that the Evaluation Report has pointed that UNDP needs to make, so that we are able to put focus on what we need to do, rather than just delve on what we have already done. So these are what in my delegation's view are the most pertinent for UNDP in terms of course correction :

One, finding number 8, of the Evaluation Report clearly points out and I quote : "Even when UNDP undertakes activities with an explicit poverty orientation, the approach often lacks a pro-poor bias and tends to rely instead on the trickle-down process. i.e., the idea that the benefits of any general development activities would somehow trickle down to the poor - and must incorporate specific measures so as to impart a pro-poor bias in the policy framework. However, the present evaluation finds that when it comes to specific projects designed to support poverty reduction, the general tendency is to rely on the trickle-down process instead of making conscious attempts to introduce pro-poor elements in the project design. " We do need to factor this and correct it at the earliest

Second, Conclusion 2, of the Evaluation Report points out, quote: "UNDP activities at the country level are often disconnected with overriding commitment to poverty reduction established and are not always consistently designed around an explicit bias towards the poor. While Poverty reduction remains the core focus area of UNDP and the principal objective of its work, by the time it gets to the country level, the focus on poverty reduction often becomes diluted. So even though the overriding UNDP priority is poverty reduction, a large part of the activities it undertakes at the country level and the manner in which it undertakes them does not conform to this priority. Many of its activities have only remote connections with poverty, if at all. Examples include border management, helping to write reports on the country's compliance with multilateral environmental agreements, advising on arcane aspects of trade promotion, and so on."

Mr. President, these are the areas of concern that the report has identified and raised some very pertinent questions, that we do need to consider and factor in, as we plan our course correction for the future.

In fact Para 38 of the report, states and I again quote : "Even the activities undertaken within the poverty portfolio do not always have an adequate propoor bias. This is especially true of the projects related to international trade and private sector development. An agency that has explicitly declared poverty reduction as its overriding priority, UNDP should not be satisfied with the gains that are possible through the trickle-down process. Its priority demands that it should seek to maximize the gains for the poor by explicitly trying to impart a distinct pro-poor bias to whatever it does and that all programmes and projects give specific consideration to their effects on the poor."

Mr. President, let me submit that we have also noted the response of the Management to the findings of the evaluation report, and find that the response summarises the crux of the matter in a sub- heading titled "targeted versus holistic" debate. The broad argument in the response being that since 'non poverty streams of work also have very powerful impact of poverty reduction', the direct targeting with a pro-poor policy approach may not be the best way around! Our submission to this element of management's response is as follows :

First, allow me to begin with a purely illustrative example which would hopefully help understand the point we are trying to make, if you have a situation, when a person who has been deprived of drinking water for four - five days, is thirsty and on the verge of collapse, not just because he cannot afford it but he doesn't even have access to it, would we be offering him, immediately the first source of water available nearest, or would we be looking at exploring options on whether to give him mineral or sparkle water ?

Today, we have more than 1.3 billion people still living below the poverty line of $1.25 a day. It would therefore be much better in the immediate run for all of us to first focus, on getting them out of their misery by investing in informed choices that they need the most and have an immediate impact, which can only be done through pro-poor policies like supporting job creation, investing in education, health, vocational training and other social enablers. This is NOT at all to belittle or say that 'holistic approaches' doesn't work, but simply to submit that we do need to get our priorities right.

And our second submission in response to the Management Report, is that this is also the mandate 193 member states have given to UNDP in Para 73 of QCPR and called upon UNDP to focus on capacity building, employment generation, education, vocational training, rural development, and the mobilization of all possible resources among others which aim at achieving poverty eradication"

To conclude, Mr. President, we all know that all human endeavour including that of the development arm of UN System is indeed directed, in some way or the other, in achieving poverty reduction. We all appreciate that and acknowledge the same.

But given the complexity of the mounting challenge, it would be better to focus our collective energies through policies that bear dividend in the immediate run, for the sheer enormity of numbers we are grappling with, who are still stuck in abysmal levels of poverty, is still more than one sixth of humanity. This is what the Evaluation Report submits and we would like this very course correction to be incorporated at the earliest.

I thank you, Mr. President.

597. Extempore Remarks by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at Joint Meeting of Executive Boards of UNDP UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS, UNICEF, UN Women and WFP on operationalising the decisions of the QCPR.

New York, February 4, 2013.

Mr. President,

I want to thank you very much for convening this joint meeting of all of the Executive Boards on the extremely pertinent question of how to operationalise the decisions of the QCPR Resolution.

Mr. President, I must say I am extremely honoured to be speaking in the room today with all the Executive Directors here, present, and to me this is a major sign of their personal involvement and of course, that of their agencies and I am very appreciative of that. Let me also say that I come from a country which has been a strong member of the family of development cooperation of the United Nations across the board.

In every single one of the agencies which we see represented there, the funds and programmes we see represented here, we have been both beneficiaries and have been participants. We have contributed and we benefited a lot from the work they have done over years in my country. Indeed some of the largest programmes are held there (I see Mr. Lake of UNICEF looking at me, and Sir I acknowledge that fact and I'm very happy about it and I say that for everyone) UNDP, UNFPA and indeed all of them WFP you yourself are partners in that.

We have also been doing our part in the UN's development cooperation efforts. We are among the largest contributors from the developing nations to the core resources of the funds and programmes. And we will continue to be strong in our partnership and in both working with the funds and programmes as well as taking advantage of the expertise, the skills, etc. that they bring. We are very happy to do that.

Mr. President, you have called this meeting basically to seek views on a specific question : the question regarding the prioritization of how the QCPR resolution should be implemented. And I think this is a particularly important meeting, a meeting where all 193 member states have come together so that we can now try to give a policy direction of how do we implement what we have all agreed to, unanimously, and by bringing all of us on board on a common purpose and theme.

I am also very happy that a background paper was put together and that the background paper has outlined a large number of themes, etc. which are extremely important including transition, funding, implementation of Delivering As One, results focus, RBM, strengthening the RC system, and several others. And I want to say that we are very supportive of all of these and the way they are evolving. After all much of the guidance has to be related to the actual working of the funds and programmes. That is particularly important. We have certainly to look at the minutiae of how things are done and we are supportive of that.

Mr. President, I am really wanting to speak here about something that I think is extremely important, and which needs to be the overall guiding principle and guiding direction of what we do. And its not the first time that India is making this point, many other delegations have also said so, and that is to draw your attention to OP 71 of the QCPR resolution and let me quote ""Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations development system including funds and programmes and specialized agencies as per their mandate to assign the highest priority to poverty eradication and that efforts in this area should be scaled-up to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger"

There is also OP 70 of the QCPR resolution which states: "eradication of poverty through the development of national capacities in developing countries should continue to be the core focus area for the United Nations development system and that ALL its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective"

Mr. President why am I making this effort?

I am making this effort because I somehow get the feeling by looking at the various papers and participating in discussions, and we are participants in all of them, that while this is what the member states have desired, this is what has been adopted in the General Assembly, and more so in the Rio Declaration, where poverty has been identified as the greatest global challenge, I find that in the detailed documents which get produced much is said about the minutae actions etc, of various sides, but this particular theme is not addressed upfront and as the main highest priority and as the core objective.

Mr. President let us try and understand what exactly we are talking about and why am I trying to stress this.

Even today Mr. President, there are 1.3 billion people living below the poverty line of a $1.25. We have done well in the course of our pursuing the MDG programmes. We have made tremendous efforts and we have had success but I think we have a long way to go. And I don't think the time is right for us not to have a single minded focus on what is the absolute critical thing for everybody on this earth : to have a minimum standard of life and a minimum quality of a decent life assured to them.

This in my opinion is the single biggest challenge that we face, recognized by the world, and should be the guiding lode-star and indeed the chief point and focus of our policy direction. Naturally, we need to work on this in terms of job creation, building productive capacities, supporting capacity development and investing in education, health, vocational training, social enablers, targeted pro--poor policies, and many many in fact all UN agencies funds and programmes have been working in this particular area. Poverty eradication continues to remain, and should continue to remain to be the highest priority as noted in the QCPR resolution and in fact the core guiding principle and the policies and programmes, etc. need to be targeted in that direction.

Mr. President, I want to thank you very much for giving me this opportunity.

Thank you

598. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the First Regular Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNICEF.

New York, February 5, 2013.

Mr. President,

Permit me at the outset to congratulate you on your election as President of the Bureau. I wish you all success in navigating the Board in implementing its agenda, in what promises to be an eventful year.

We would also like to place on record our appreciation to the outgoing Bureau, which was so ably presided over by Ambassador John Ashe for his commendable role in guiding the work of the Board last year. My felicitations to the Executive Director Mr. Anthony Lake, his insightful statement and well crafted report on the TCPR of operational activities, for transmission to the ECOSOC.

Mr. President, 2012 was the year, when we successfully completed the second running year in which no fresh case of polio was reported in India and WHO declared that polio was no longer an epidemic in India. This is a major achievement, and a fascinating story to narrate:

The oral polio vaccine was introduced in India in 1978, a year before this neck of the woods (USA) was declared polio free! Till 1988, there were about 350,000 child deaths due to polio globally, and within India by 2009, we were able to bring it down to 741 cases. In 2010, it dropped to 42 and by 2011, only one, and last two years NONE. Today, officially 71% of children in India are immunized against polio, with 98% of children in the highest-risk areas having been immunized. And all this was possible, by the determined efforts our Health Ministry and the MoWCD, who through the National Polio Surveillance Project, and with support from UNICEF and WHO made it a sustained and unending mission. And today, from being the world's largest victims of polio, we have transformed ourselves to a polio free nation and become one of the world's largest donors to the global polio eradication campaign.

We have therefore in UNICEF, a trusted and reliable partner, who we are sure, would continue to place children at the heart of achieving the 'future we want', as we agreed to in Rio. As a country that has one of the longest relationships with UNICEF and with home to the largest number of children in the world, we have an abiding interest in UNICEF's success and its efforts in ending preventing all preventable child deaths. In June last year, we partnered with UNICEF, and the US and Ethiopian Governments to successfully launch the 'Child Survival: Call to Action' event which had one ambitious yet achievable goal: to end preventable child deaths. We have since then left no effort unspared in reaching the most disadvantaged and hardest to reach children, in pursuit of this exercise.

Mr. President, having flagged our success stories with UNICEF< let me also submit a few points for your consideration in view of the MTSP (Medium Term Strategic Plan) that UNICEF is embarking upon:

One, we welcome the strong focus on promoting greater equity in the development process by investing in the health, education and protection of the most disadvantaged and excluded children. These investments are critical in breaking the intergenerational transmission of poverty and help in creating more stable societies and promote sustained economic growth.

Two, within the context of the MTSP, all the "actionables" that the UN Development System and its agencies have been called upon by member states to pursue by the QCPR Resolution, may not just be incorporated but also implemented as part of the MTSP being so developed. It would also be prudent to dovetail these actionables into those UNICEF country programmes, which are synchronous with the time period of the QCPR.

Three, another welcome development that we see, is the emphasis on 'partnerships' across the board, and with all stakeholders. This is a positive tidings and a force multiplier in the development domain. Your partnership with the World Bank, a theme that you elaborated in the first session today, has resulted in concrete success through the Global Polio Eradication Initiative, the School Fee Abolition Initiative, Sanitation and Water for All (SWA) as well as the WASH initiative. In all of these, you deserve, our compliments and more power to your elbows.

Four, an area that we would like you to focus further upon is what we discussed yesterday, on leveraging South South cooperation for the larger benefit of children in the developing world. Even though South South Cooperation is being singled out as a new buzzword in the evolving narrative of the developmental discourse, much more remains to be done to give it the 'muscle' it needs from the UN system. Countries of the South, including India, have several ongoing initiatives including our joint initiative with Brazil and South Africa, under the IBSA Trust Fund, and we have already implemented some extremely critical projects with special focus for children using this TF. These include a construction of a Hospital for Children with special needs in Cambodia, delivery of safe drinking water in Cape Verde and construction of a football stadium in Ramallah. We therefore, hope that you would continue to partner with countries of the South in complementing them achieve their goals, especially in those projects which have an explicit 'children friendly' focus.

Fifth, we have also noted with deep concern the issue of decline in thematic funding of the UNICEF that has been flagged in your report to the ECOSOC. As members of the Executive Board, we pledged US $900,000 last year, and would be committing another similar amount at the pledging conference on Thursday. We hope that a comprehensive resource mobilisation strategy that addresses this decline in thematic fund, and enables UNICEF to use programme resources more flexibly and responsively would soon be worked out.

To conclude Mr. President, the Executive Board Meeting is very timely and important as it provides an opportunity to reaffirm our collective commitment to fulfill the hopes and aspirations of children all over the world.

As home to one fifth of the children in the world, we are steadfastly committed to ensuring protective and nurturing environments for children to reach their full potential. We would like to once again express our sincere appreciation for UNICEF's efforts in fulfilling our common vision of an early realisation of children friendly environments universally.

I thank you, Mr. President.

599. Statement by Mr. Prakash Gupta, First Secretary, on Agenda Item 13 during Pledging Segment at the First Regular Session 2013 of the UNICEF Executive Board.

New York, February 7, 2013.

Mr. President,

India's close and productive association with UNICEF dates back to the agency's inception and is based on our strong and abiding faith in the relevance of UNICEF's message and mandate.

As home to one fifth of the children in the world, India is steadfastly committed to the cause of ensuring the basic needs of children in India and beyond, and helping create protective and nurturing environments for children to reach their full potential.

Mr. President,

As outlined in our Statement at the Plenary Session of the First Regular Session, 2012 was the second year running, when we reported no new cases of polio, and WHO declared that polio was no longer an epidemic in India, which was a significant milestone in our polio eradication effort. We are also pleased to report the universalisation of Integrated Child Development Services Scheme, the launching of the Integrated Child Protection Scheme and further expansion of flagship programmes like National Rural Health Mission and Sarva Siksha Abhiyan.

The Government of India and the UNICEF country programme of cooperation is one of the largest and most diverse UNICEF supported country programmes globally In this regard, I wish to inform the Board that the Government of India has already pledged US $900,000 to UNICEF for the year 2013. The announcement to this effect was made by India at the 2012 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held on 14th November, last year.

To conclude, we would like to once again express our sincere appreciation for UNICEF's efforts in fulfilling our common vision, for an early realisation of children friendly environments universally.

Thank you, Mr. President.

600. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the global launch of the International Year of Quinoa- 2013 at the UNGA.

New York, February 20, 2013.

Mr. President,

Secretary General of the United Nations, Excellencies and distinguished delegates.

India is privileged to be participating in this global launch of the International Year of Quinoa 2013.

We are equally privileged and honoured by the presence amongst us of H.E. Mr. Evo Morales Ayma, President of Bolivia, who has been the guiding spirit behind this initiative.

We also deeply value the presence of H.E Ms. Nadine Heredia de Humala, First Lady of Peru, H.E. Rafael Orbegoso Foreign Minister of Peru, H.E. Ms Silvana Vallejo, Vice Minister of Rural Development of Ecuador and H.E. Mr. Jose Graziano da Silva, Director General of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations.

The distinguished gathering here today is testimony to the global recognition of Quinoa, its growing popularity across continents, and its potential and possibilities for the future.

Mr. President,

In 2011, this august Assembly adopted a resolution to celebrate 2013 as the International Year of Quinoa. My delegation lent its full support to this initiative. And today, as we gather here to celebrate Quinoa "the golden grain of the Andes", let us remind ourselves of its unique qualities, as a food source, as a cultural value and as a versatile agricultural practice. In today's climate-vulnerable world, where we are constantly challenged by our quest for food security, quinoa offers a sustainable, healthy and nutritive dietary option.

It is the only plant food that contains all essential amino acids, vitamins and trace elements, and at the same time is gluten free. Its exceptionally high amino acid content enriches it with unique therapeutic properties, qualities that make it a superior nutritional option over other grains that form part of our daily food habit.

As a rich source of protein, it holds immense nutritional and health value for populations in developing countries, especially those who depend on legumes for their daily protein intake. And with more than a billion people worldwide suffering from malnutrition, almost all in developing countries, what more affordable way can we have than to promote protein and vitamin rich Quinoa to tackle the challenge.

Mr. President,

Quinoa is a highly adaptive crop which can grow in variable agro-climatic zones. In its home in the Andean region, there are more than 3000 genetically diverse varieties of Quinoa grown in the coast, in the alluvial plains, in the valleys and in the higher reaches of the mountains.

Today, Quinoa's agronomic versatility has allowed it to travel far and wide. Farms in Asia, Europe and Africa are experimenting with Quinoa production, and these efforts have met with appreciable success.

In my own country, Quinoa cultivation is under trial in the Himalayan region and in the plains of North India. AMARANTH, a crop also native to the Americas with similar properties as the Quinoa, which grows widely in India, makes the trials more than promising.

With low input cost, Quinoa production is highly cost effective. As such its potential to tackle hunger, disease and poverty and to meet the Millennium Development Goals in an affordable manner is truly immense. We look forward to the initiatives of the FAO to promote and popularize quinoa, especially in those parts of the world, where we are still a long way behind in providing the basic needs of people.

Given its environmental adaptability, and our need to identify crops that can best adjust to Climate Change impacts, Quinoa offers several possibilities for adaptation strategies, and can contribute to food and nutrition security in both developed and developing countries.

We must bring greater use of science and technology to promote and propagate Quinoa, and at the same time be willing to share its fruits for greater public good. We fully appreciate the work being done by the FAO on this score and pledge India's committed support to its initiatives.

Mr. President,

Feeding our people and providing them with sustenance is a challenge that we, in developing countries, grapple with daily.

My Government's commitment to providing food security to every citizen of India remains resolute and unflinching. We are in the process of considering a food security bill that would guarantee subsidized grains to more than 600 million people in India, with special provisions for women and children.

To many of us here, the success of Quinoa symbolizes our collective hope that we pin in sustainably harnessing our biodiversity resources for meeting the needs of our present and future generations. It equally reinforces our faith in traditional knowledge and practices, as we look around our daily lives for sustainable solutions.

In October last year, India successfully hosted the Conference of Parties of the Convention on Biological Diversity. At the meeting, we pledged to delve deep into our forests and our wild fields and in our countless but constrained biotic species to find new solutions for food security and sustaining livelihoods. We hope our efforts to promote Quinoa will go a long way in this common endeavour.

Mr. President,

Quinoa is more than a crop. It represents the celebrated spirit of the Andean civilizations and its proud people, people who have preserved their traditional knowledge and practices and taught us to how to live in harmony with nature.

For centuries and over countless generations, they have preserved their wisdom and bequeathed to us their richness, colour and diversity of life. In today's world, as we strive to balance growth with social equity and environmental sustainability, they are our guiding lights.

President Morales, the Andes, the Andean people and the indigenous civilizations of the New World hold special place in our hearts in India. Over centuries of intermingling, our two lands have exchanged ideas, values, flora and fauna. While you added potato, tomato, maize, papaya and more to our cuisine, we gave you coconut, sugarcane and mango. And now you give us and the world quinoa !

Mr. President,

We deeply appreciate and support the plans drawn by FAO to promote Quinoa as part of the International Year programme, and hope these efforts would continue much beyond. We wish President Morales and Madam Nadine Heredia every success as Special Ambassadors to FAO for the International Year of Quinoa, as they take this initiative forward.

India remains committed to working with the global community to make the International Year of Quinoa a success.

I Thank You

601. Intervention by Smt. Krishna Tirath, Minister for Women and Child Development, India during the High Level Round Table at the 57th Session of the Commission of Status of Women.

New York, March 4, 2013.

Madam Chair,

Thank you for giving me the floor. The priority theme of this year's CSW session namely 'elimination and prevention of all forms of violence against women and girls' is very relevant given that this scourge remains pervasive despite repeated reaffirmations, globally and at national levels, to combat it.

Madam Chair,

As recent events of horrific violence against women in India and other parts of the world indicate, it is often not the lack of legislative framework that hampers our efforts, but rather its effective implementation. We of course need to strengthen legislative and policy framework as well.

The widespread nature of this problem is a manifestation of unequal power structures among men and women, and of how women's role is perceived. We need to ensure that the stigmatization of victims, the trivialization of the crime and impunity of perpetrators are all ended.

We must also work towards empowerment of women, politically, economically and socially. We must debate relevance of deeply held beliefs and social attitudes and modify them so that they are not a hindrance to social advancement and economic progress.

Madam Chair,

The Government of India has recently taken a number of steps. It has set up fast track courts to try cases pertaining to violence against women. It promulgated an ordinance in February 2013 which broadened the definition of sexual assault and harassment, and violent behavior and provided for greater accountability of public officials. The Parliament also adopted a law in February to combat sexual harassment of women in the workplace. These measures complement existing legislative framework that address the issue of trafficking; sexual offences against children; and domestic violence. The government is developing protocols for police, medical functionaries, and other service providers to improve coordination of its response to victims of violence.

Madam Chair,

Efforts to combat violence against women and promoting gender equality and women's empowerment are integral to our pursuit of building vibrant inclusive societies. In conclusion, let me reaffirm our full commitment to eliminating the scourge of violence against women and girls. We firmly support the efforts of the United Nations, in particular UN Women in this regard.

I thank you, Madam Chair.

602. STATEMENT BY MRS. KRISHNA TIRATH, MINISTER FOR WOMEN & CHILD DEVELOPMENT DURING THE GENERAL DISCUSSION AT THE 57TH SESSION OF THE COMMISSION OF STATUS OF WOMEN.

NEW YORK, MARCH 5, 2013.

Madam Chair,

At the outset, let me state that we look forward to working with you and the Bureau for a successful CSW Session. I also thank the Secretary General for his reports.

Madam Chair,

Violence against women and girls must be unequivocally condemned and tackled. We need to ensure that the stigmatization of victims, the trivialization of the crime and impunity of perpetrators are all stopped.

We must also resolutely combat discriminatory practices and prejudices, and firmly oppose any attempts to rationalize such practices on the basis of tradition or custom.

As recent events of horrific violence against women in India and other parts of the world indicate, it is not the lack of normative framework or basis that is impeding our efforts, but rather its effective implementation. These gaps must be identified and plugged.

Madam Chair,

The Government of India has taken a number of steps recently. It has set up fast track courts to try cases pertaining to violence against women. The report of the government established committee headed by the former Chief Justice of India Mr. J.S.Verma is very comprehensive and recommends a range of measures.

Based on these recommendations, the Government promulgated an ordinance in February 2013 amending the criminal law in India. It significantly broadens the definition of sexual assault and harassment, includes new types of violent behavior such as voyeurism, stalking, etc, and aims for greater accountability of public officials.

The Parliament also adopted the 'Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Bill, 2013 in February this year covering women employed in both public and private sectors. The Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act came into force in November, 2012.

The Government has recently announced budgetary allocation worth US$ 200 million for a dedicated fund to implement measures to ensure dignity and safety of women.

Madam Chair,

The Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act 2005 addresses the issue of both marital and familial abuse. It recognises that violence can take various forms, including physical, economic, social and psychological. There is also a comprehensive legislative and policy framework to address the problem of trafficking of women and girls.

Women victims of domestic violence are supported through shelter, medical help, legal aid, compensation, maintenance orders, temporary custody of children as also vocational training as required. For better coordinated response, the government is developing protocols for police and investigating agencies, medical functionaries, lawyers, and other service providers.

The government is introducing "One Stop Crisis Centre for Women" in 100 identified critical districts during the course of this year with the aim to provide integrated services required by women subjected to violence.

Madam Chair,

The pervasiveness of violence against women is a reflection of unequal power structures among men and women, and how women's role is perceived by the society. It is, therefore, equally important to work towards empowerment of women, politically, economically and socially.

An empowered woman is more likely to participate in decision making in the family and beyond. Thus, both combating violence against women and ensuring gender equality and women's empowerment, which are mutually reinforcing processes, lie at the heart of our pursuit to building inclusive societies.

We also need to debate deeply held beliefs and social attitudes, not with a view to dismiss them but to modify them as required to facilitate social advancement and economic progress.

Awareness generation and sensitization programmes are an integral part of government's efforts to combat violence against women. We see civil society as valued partners in this endeavour.

A recent initiative of Ahimsa (peace) messengers has been introduced to mobilize communities at grassroots level as change agents to combat violence against women in both public and private spaces. Another scheme Saksham is being formulated aiming at holistic development of adolescent boys to make them self-reliant, gender-sensitive and aware citizens.

Madam Chair,

In 1992, India provided for 33% reservation to women in rural and local government bodies launching the mass political mobilization of women unprecedented globally given its scale. Today, close to 1.5 million elected women representatives are working in these bodies contributing to tangible progress in bridging the gender-divide in decision making and at the social level.

India's five-year development plans have recognized the importance of women both as contributors and agents of change. Gender is a cross-cutting theme in all development plans, particularly in areas of education, health and skills-training.

A number of schemes are already in place for socio-economic empowerment of women. The government has proposed to set-up India's first all Women's Bank to assist women entrepreneurs and has allocated US$ 200 million as initial capital. Another US$ 40 million has been recently earmarked for empowerment of vulnerable women.

Madam Chair,

In conclusion, let me reaffirm our full commitment to advancing the goal of gender equality and empowerment of women globally and to eliminating the scourge of violence against women and girls. We firmly support the efforts of the United Nations, in particular UN Women in this regard.

I thank you, Madam Chair.

603. STATEMENT BY MR. ALOK A. DIMRI, COUNSELLOR, ON AGEBND A ITEM 146 - ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY ASPECTS OF FINANCING UNPKOs AT THE 5TH COMMITTEE FORMAL MEETING AT ITS FIRST RESUMED SESSION ON THE SENIOR ADVISORY GROUP (SAG) ON TROOP COST.

NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Let me at the outset welcome you and all the delegates to the first resumed session of the 5th Committee. My delegation aligns itself with the Statement delivered by the Permanent Representative of Fiji on behalf of the G-77. Our thanks to USG Haq & Chairman ACABQ for presenting respective reports to the Committee.

Mr. Chairman,

Let me also recall that our deliberations during the fall session were comprehensive and intense. However, the Committee could not reach consensus on a few agenda items that remain outstanding. We are hopeful, under your able guidance, we will be able to surmount those barriers this time. Our gratitude is also to those who continue to volunteer to steer the 5th Committee process despite stretched hours in a spirit of collegiality and inter-governmental settings. They deserve all our respect.

Mr. Chairman,

The recommendations of Secretary General's Senior Advisory Group's (SAG) on troop cost are before the Committee now for its consideration. SAG was set up on the basis of General Assembly's Resolution 65/289 following a protracted engagement on this matter. SAG's mandate and composition were well spelt out in its founding resolution. My country was a member of this group alongwith other troop contributing countries besides others who represented financial contributors, regional representatives, and persons of eminence selected by the Secretary General. This group was ably supported by the Secretariat staff to whom we owe our thanks.

Mr. Chairman,

UN has dealt with troop-cost reimbursement rates for decades now. This engagement is characterized by phases ranging from informal-methods prior to 1973, proactive engagements thereafter till 1991, deliberative phase that lasted from 1991 to 2001, and a passive phase thereafter. SAG happens to be the singular lone attempt to address this issue in a focused manner.

Mr. Chairman,

The group's recommendations present an opportunity to resolve this long-pending issue. The option to postpone it further is simply not available to us. Moreover, it is imperative that we make every effort to consolidate this partnership that underpins peacekeeping. All peacekeeping stakeholders today have a duty and responsibility to preserve this vital instrumentality by rising above national concerns alone the way peacekeepers have done for decades beyond their national call for duty.

Mr. Chairman,

SAG's recommendations were agreed by consensus and these are presented to us for adoption today. The challenge this Committee is faced today is financial and more. Its resolution will necessitate political will and an express commitment to UN peacekeeping.

Lastly, Mr Chairman, as a member of the Senior Advisory Group and a longstanding TCC let me assure you of my delegation's commitment in this matter.

Thank You

604. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Acting Permanent Representative, On behalf of the Asia-Pacific troika of India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka at the First Meeting of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, at the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, March 14, 2013

Mr. Co-Chair,

I have the honour to speak on behalf of our Asia-Pacific troika consisting of India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka.

We associate ourselves with the statement delivered by Fiji on behalf of the G-77. The Group played a key role in engraving the concept of SDGs in the Rio+20 negotiations, and has a great responsibility in completing this task.

At the RIO+20 Summit, we pledged ourselves to strive for a better future for our peoples, a future that would give them hope and succour, ownership and pride. In doing so, we agreed to work on a set of sustainable development goals. We are happy that we have started on that road today, and are hopeful that we would accomplish the task at hand in an inclusive and equitable manner. We assure you of our troika's full support as you take this process forward.

Mr. Co-Chair,

We have taken some time in getting this group up and running, but in the process we have ensured that all voices have been heard, patiently and intently. Inclusivity has its own time-line and we must respect it.

As we get down to frame our sustainable development goals, we must bear in mind that sustainable development and its long held principles belong to one symbiotic whole. At Rio+20, the international community unequivocally reaffirmed its commitment to the RIO principles, in particular the principle of Common But Differentiated Responsibilities in pursuing global action on sustainable development. We must respect this reaffirmation in letter and spirit. These goals, universal in nature, can only be meaningful if differentiation is appropriately embedded in them.

It is unreasonable to craft sustainable development goals without paying due regard to the responsibility of those who rushed towards development without much regard for the needs of the global environment.

Of equal significance is the need to address unsustainable consumption and production patterns and lifestyles of people in developed countries, and answers to these persisting challenges remain seminal to crafting a truly universal sustainable development agenda.

Universality of the SDGs mean that developed countries must also have a meaningful and comprehensive set of action points as part of these goals.

Mr. Co-Chair,

Our sustainability agenda must ensure economic prosperity, social cohesion and environmental protection in an integrated manner and in a manner that we place equal emphasis on each of the three pillars of sustainable development.

In line with such an understanding, we would propose that we work first on a set of stand-alone economic, social and environmental goals as part of the SDG menu, before we delve into their inter-linkages.

As stated in para 247 of the RIO+20 outcome document, we must work to fashion a limited number of goals that are aspirational in nature, simple to comprehend, concise and easy to implement and precise to communicate.

At the centre of our efforts and objectives must be the overriding priority of poverty eradication, recognized as the greatest global challenge at RIO+20. These goals must enhance the option of livelihoods and inclusive growth. Meeting our water, food and energy needs, imparting access to health and education to those still lagging behind, strengthening gender equality, youth empowerment, creating opportunities for the burgeoning youth population, and protecting our habitat and ecology are certain issues that appear to us being central.

Our pressing sustainable development challenges remain closely interlinked and intertwined. Food security, for example, cannot be solved only by addressing the fragilities in agricultural practices, it is much more dependent on macro-economic issues of agricultural subsidies, rules of multilateral trade and capacities of countries to absorb external shocks. We have to be mindful how to address these inter-linkages in a coherent manner.

Mr. Co-Chair,

Means of Implementation remains key to our efforts. Each SDG must be accompanied by dedicated means of implementation. They cannot be targets that countries would have to meet through their own resources.

Mobilization of international resources including ODA, transfer of technology and capacity building support is critical to the success of our work.

We agree that ODA alone may not be sufficient to meet our objectives. It is therefore critical that we put in place a global economic environment, including restructuring of the global financial infrastructure that is conducive to development, one that provides adequate policy space for developing countries to combine the benefits of economic growth, social equity and environmental opportunity.

In this regard, ensuring financial stability, meaningful and effective market access for developing countries, early conclusion of the DOHA Round, agreement on a debt settlement mechanism and greater say for developing countries in global governance structures remain fundamental and critical.

All these issues must be made an integral part of the global partnership supporting the SDGs. The global financial institutions must reflect increased flexibility towards developing countries.

South-South cooperation must also contribute, in keeping with its values and principles, but it cannot be a substitute for North-South Cooperation.

Mr. Co-Chair,

Behind all this is the need to coordinate the work of this Open Working Group and other parallel global efforts on the post-2015 development agenda. Our wish is to collectively fast track all these activities through effective institutional reforms in the UN system. Some of the agreed reforms must be absolutely creative if we are serious on our expectations.

Equity and fairness lies at the heart of crafting a set of sustainable development goals for the benefit of our peoples. The future we want must be a future for all. The principles underpinning the SDGs should receive our highest priority and attention as we start our work ahead.

I thank you

605. Statement by Ambassador Sujata Mehta, Permanent Representative to the Conference on Disarmament, Geneva at the Arms Trade Treaty Conference.

New York, March 18, 2013.

Allow me to begin by congratulating you on your well-deserved appointment as the President of this Conference. We assure you of our full cooperation in the discharge of your important responsibility. Conscious of your call for us to eschew general statements, I wish to confine my statement to highlighting India's approach on some key aspects of the proposed Arms Trade Treaty.

Mr. President, we have agreed to work on the basis of the July 26 text even though like many others we believe that it is not a basis for a decision on a treaty. There is still considerable distance to cover before we reach that goal. We hope we will have both the time and the environment to give the negotiating text the serious attention it deserves and reach a positive outcome by consensus. In this regard, we wish to acknowledge your efforts to consult widely. Given the complexities of the issues involved and the need to bring on board all stakeholders it is important that we proceed in a manner that promotes the prospects of a treaty that is practical and implementable and is able to attract universal adherence.

In our view, it is important that some critical deficiencies in the current draft are addressed during the negotiations. I will spell out two of the more important ones.

The ATT should make a real impact on illicit trafficking in conventional arms and their illicit use especially by terrorists and other unauthorized and unlawful non-State actors. Without such provisions, the ATT would in fact lower the bar on obligations of all states not to support terrorists and/or terrorists acts enshrined in various UNSC resolutions and anti-terrorism Conventions. We cannot allow such a loop hole in the ATT.

While the ATT should ensure a balance of obligations between exporting and importing states, the current draft tends to tilt the balance further away from importing countries. The ATT should not be an instrument in the hands of exporting states to take unilateral force majeure measures against importing states parties without consequences. Such a loop hole in the Treaty would have the affect of strengthening the hands of a few exporting states at the expense of the legitimate defense and national security interests of a large number of importing states parties. To correct the imbalance, rights of importing states should be elaborated and further strengthened. Any other outcome would not only be not acceptable to a large number of countries, but also underline the irony of a multilateral process involving all UN members if in the end it is sought to be used for the benefit of a few.

India remains committed to engaging actively and constructively for a balanced and implementable ATT, which recognizes that arms trade as a legitimate activity for defense, national security and foreign policy interests and in which national implementation and domestic jurisdiction are fully respected. We have a strong stake in such an outcome as one of the largest importers, as a State whose security interests have been affected by illicit transfers of weapons and as a State that has always exercised the highest degree of responsibility in conventional arms transfers. We look forward to working with all delegations to enhance the prospects for a viable and effective treaty of universal acceptance involving all the main producers, recipients and users of conventional weapons.

605-A. Extempore Remarks made by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Acting Permanent Representative at the Annual Retreat of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation (UNOSSC).

New York, March 20, 2013.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for giving me the floor.

Assistant Secretary General, Mr. Olav Kjørven, thank you very much for informing us that the UN system is having truly global conversations (on the post 2015 development agenda). We are in the 68th session of the UNGA and it's high time, we have such conversations on such extremely pertinent issues.

I see this wonderful report (UNDP HDR 2013) - 'The Rise of South'. I feel very good, I come from the South. But it feels like the South has arrived, everything is there and it is time now for the South to take care of South. That's not certainly the case and the facts do not absolve the North from its responsibilities. That is what we need to understand. South-South Cooperation is growing but it must be very clearly understood that this is neither a substitute nor it any way absolves the commitments of the North.

I want to make couple of other big points.

What did Rio say? Rio+20 recognized poverty as the greatest global challenge. It agreed to formulate sustainable development goals but it first recognized poverty as the greatest global challenge. In-fact, just a few months back, the United Nations adopted the QCPR resolution and again acknowledged that fact (poverty eradication as the overriding priority).

Why? You know, what are the MDGs? MDGs were least common agreement among the haves of the world, of what could be done for development at the turn of the Millennium. Today, just a few years before the target date for MDGs, one billion people are still living in abject poverty.

That is why the world is telling you, the MDG's agenda is absolutely important. What do they mean by that? They mean a very simple thing. They mean that the underlying factor continues to remain that each individual must have that minimum fundamental requirement of food, water, health, education. And, whether we like it or not, the best determinant of all these is money and it therefore imperative that salience of per capita income should continue to be the highest (in any measure of development).

In this age of globalization, cell phones are reaching more and more people. In fact, I am told the cell phone companies in Somalia are the best corporate entities there and so is the case in Afghanistan etc. Technology has made many things happen. In several parts of my country, Africa and so many other parts of the world, even the poorest of poor see opportunities. Thank God for that. They can't be cut off from having aspirations and seeing what the others are doing.

Which are the countries with high achievements on MDGs. These are countries that adopted (MDGs) because they fitted with their national priorities. East Asia, China being the leading example, my country and several parts of Africa have done well. Have you seen the latest figures on African growth, which are positive and bode well. There are opportunities for greater and better cooperation at different levels. This is excellent.

I was delighted to see that in the latest HDI ranking, the highest ranking developing country is Brunei at no. 30, and the next is Qatar. If we go down the list, most of the top developing countries are OPEC members. While oil wealth does not mean that their development challenges are overcome, but they now have the necessary means to overcome development challenges and that's critically important.

Equity is often spoken about at such debates. I come from world's largest democracy. Our governments must promote equity. Many of my colleagues sitting here from the developing countries well recognize India's efforts on inclusive growth. If today, every single country wants to invest in China, India, Brazil or all over Africa, it is because they see market opportunities there because of this effort on equity and the huge market that comes from the vast millions.

However, let us be very clear that equity also has some other dimensions to it.

There is equity among people, among people within the country, that's what really government should do and deliver on. The world can help, provide ideas, paradigms and ways do it and enabling environment certainly. But equity among governments is equally, if not more important.

The Secretary General met the G-77 few days back, on 12th of March. Addressing him, the Ambassador of Argentina pointed out that countries which are classified as Middle Income Countries still continue to need various means of aid assistance etc. And, she pointed to the growth in inequity between countries which has taken place as part of globalization and how important it is to address that.

Mr. Chairman,

If the South has risen, surely, isn't it time, that we should give the South greater say in global governance? Shouldn't the institutions be reformed? Did you know this entire report (The Rise of the South) has hardly to say anything about this? No, I am not criticizing the report, that is different matter altogether. I am very proud of this report because this helps me to stand everywhere and say that the UN has also recognized that we have also arrived. It is not only Goldman Sach who said so, some time back.

Issues today are not about responsible sovereignty. Does any developing country get up at the UN and say that I have come here to see that my domestic law shall be adopted in international arena and that should be the world's way of doing things. None of us from developing countries say that. We accept multilateralism for what exactly it is. It is developed world's way of doing things. But we are there to try and see how we can work with world at large but at least please understand our need for policy space.

So when you mentioned Mr. Assistant Secretary General that you have consulted 'global citizenry', I am glad you also noted the responsibility of governments. That is the key and the most important element. It is governments that have to deliver. And, multilateralism owes to governments to ensure that there is an enabling environment. This requires real voice and participation of developing countries.

Now let me turn to South-South Cooperation.

South-South Cooperation has grown tremendously over last many years and it has grown because the ability of countries of the South has grown. India earlier focused a lot on capacity building i.e. offered training, scholarships etc. Now we have certain capabilities and we are able to do projects, investments, undertake infrastructure developments and able to help in social areas development etc. We do this with the conscious effort that we are sharing what we have got, recognizing fully that we are no where meeting even our own demands. We do it because of our solidarity. We do it because we also perceive that if our neighbours, friends do well, at the end of day we all benefit as result of it. Therefore, it will continue to grow.

What is important to do internationally, is what our colleagues from Brazil said about an hour ago. There has to be good and clear recognition from where South-South Cooperation comes from, what are its paradigms. These need to be encouraged and sent forward. Straight jacketing it will only weaken it and not even add complementary action to North-South Cooperation.

If South-South Cooperation growing, it is not only because more countries in the South are in a position to provide certain amounts of assistance etc. It is also because the partners are willing to be work in the area of national priorities. Traditional donors first want detailed portfolios to be filed!

This has also affected the World Bank. How many of you are aware, that the Bank has a shrinking loan portfolio? It is shrinking simply because the whole business, what began in 1950s as IBRD's priority of re-building Europe, moved to growth and infrastructure development in developing countries through means of concessional loans, but that does not find favour with the developed countries any more.

Let us remember that the Bank is all about loans. If it does not give loans, it wouldn't make a profit.

A grant giving agency is something else; it can't be the World Bank. The Bank is not a government department; it is not structured like that.

At United Nations excellent work done by us on South-South cooperation is captured in the 'Nairobi Declaration'. Let's give it strength and put it squarely in post 2015 development agenda. Let's leverage it for benefit of all.

I also want to say few words about Triangular Cooperation.

We have an IBSA Trust Fund run by UNDP. It is a modest thing, India, Brazil and South Africa, the partner countries contribute US $ 1 million annually each. We have put in about US $ 20 million over last many years. We have projects all over the world. We are extremely happy to see these kinds of things to grow. We will do what we can.

But we need to learn some lessons too.

Everybody talks about Triangular Cooperation. Yes, this is one kind of Triangular Cooperation i.e. cooperation between India, Brazil and South Africa with another country in the South. This is not like what triangular cooperation is made out to be, i.e. India Brazil and South Africa on one side, UNDP or a developed country as another partner.

But be that as it may, in the IBSA TF we have actually seen that a project is taking place at country 'X' (developing country) and it is financed by IBSA but tenders for project procurement are floated only in Western Europe! These are some startling facts and you may be wondering! It is not odd ball incident but is the result of UNDP norms. Why?

It is because the paradigm of thinking is basically along North- South corridor. That is fine, and may remain so but the same paradigm can't be shifted and applied on South- South Cooperation. It is different paradigm and we have to similarly nurture it in parallel with N-S cooperation. This is a must to grow S-S cooperation. I will stop here.

Thank you

606. Remarks by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Acting Permanent Representative, at the Opening Session of Conference on the theme "Right to Work" on the occasion of World Down Syndrome Day at United Nations.

New York, March 21, 2013.

Madam Chair (Ms Daniela Bas, Director, Division for Social Policy and Development, UN-DESA),

As I walked into the room today, I saw a room full of persons challenged by Down Syndrome and activists. To my mind the efforts of Down Syndrome International to organize events at the UN on the occasion of World Down Syndrome day is very good as it gives an opportunity to raise global awareness about Down Syndrome. So I congratulate Down Syndrome International for their efforts.

I have heard with great interest what Ambassador Quinlan (Permanent Representative of Australia) has just said and I agree with him so much. The issue that I see is for Governments to create enabling environments through legislation etc. so that people who are challenged by disabilities are able to live as normal a life as possible. It is also critical that we tackle societal prejudices and biases. Economic analysis that people working with disabilities would add hugely to GDP are at the end of the day big motivators for pushing society and employers. and society would be a big gainer.

Madam Chair,

I believe that the World Down Syndrome Day marks an important step forward in raising public awareness on the issue of Down syndrome, which is not a disease but a genetic disorder afflicting 1 in 800 to 1000 people globally.

India was happy to co-sponsor the UNGA resolution establishing this day and reaffirms the rights of all persons with Down Syndrome to the same fundamental freedoms and human rights that all persons are entitled to enjoy, including the right to work.

We recognize that persons with disabilities are a valuable human resource. It is our Government's endeavour to create an enabling environment that provides them with equal opportunities, protection of their rights and full participation, including education and employment.

India was one of the first signatories to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. Steps have been taken to ensure that legislation and programmes reflect our commitment to the Convention.

The Government of India works with civil society organizations to address the challenges faced by people with Down Syndrome.

Madam Chairperson,

I am very happy to note that the 12th World Down Syndrome Congress will be held in India in 2015.

I must particularly recognize the efforts of Dr. Surekha Ramachandran, President of the Down Syndrome Association of India, who is also the Board Member of the Down Syndrome International.

She has relentlessly worked to raise public awareness and to understand, support and improve the quality of life of children with Down syndrome.

I am confident that the discussions today will contribute to a better understanding of the challenges before us.

Thank you

607. Remarks by Amb. Manjeev Singh Puri, Acting Permanent Representative, at the High Level Interactive Dialogue of the UNGA on water cooperation, World Water Day.

New York, March 22, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for giving me the floor.

Let me begin by congratulating everybody on World Water Day. This year also happens to be the International Year of Water, and therefore our deliberations today are even more meaningful.

We are very honored by the presence of the Prime Minister of Tajikistan in the session, and would like to thank his delegation for their leadership on water issues at the UN.

Mr. Chairman,

Water plays a seminal role in development. And this can hardly be overemphasized. Agriculture and our food security depend on water, and so do our livelihoods, our health, our biodiversity and our ecosystems.

Water availability and distribution is challenged by the lack of development, limitations of geography, growing demand, pollution of water bodies, recurrent floods and droughts and environmental stress. Climate Change impacts are also likely to add a great deal more of further variability and water stress.

Water conservation, rain-water harvesting, reducing waste and recycling water have yielded synergistic results globally, both in urban and rural settings and we need build on them.

It is of course very urgent that in dealing with water issues, the sustainable use of water and reducing its wastage is addressed in the entire process of unsustainable consumption and production patterns of people living in the developed countries.

Mr. Chairman,

Given the paucity of time, let me make a few brief remarks on the priority area which is the provision of safe drinking water and basic sanitation.

At the RIO+20 Summit, we agreed on a water agenda underlining its critical importance for sanitation and integrating the three dimensions of sustainable development. We also reaffirmed our commitments to MDG 7 of halving by 2015 the proportion of people without access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation.

But as we gear ourselves for an inclusive Post 2015 agenda, it is time for us to raise our ambition and make safe drinking water and basic sanitation available not just to 50% of the people, but for one and all, and that really should be our priority.

Mr. Chairman,

I heard the panelists and would like to say that while the issues of peace, security and stability are certainly very important, as they are important enablers, the priority remains and should remain that of providing safe drinking water and basic sanitation to everyone across the world.

Mr. Chairman,

Let me make a few remarks about my country. With 17% of the world population, we have only 4 % of the world's renewable water resources, and we face a huge challenge.

We have been pursuing Integrated Water Resources Management to deal with water availability, distribution and conservation. Large parts of our country are also prone to floods and droughts. Our integrated river basin development and planning has been a key feature of our efforts. We have undertaken dedicated National Missions for cleaning our rivers to enhance their resource value and ecological sustenance.

As part of our National Action Plan on Climate Change, we have launched a National Water Mission which aims at conserving water, minimizing wastage, ensuring more equitable distribution and management of water resources and to optimizing water use efficiency by 20%.

Our water planning efforts has been enriched by multi-stakeholder participation. Grassroots action involving the local community has given us valuable learning experience, especially in using traditional water conservation methods.

Mr. Chairman,

Water management is also a scientific effort. It involves mapping of water resources, collecting hydrological data, monitoring seasonal variability of water and assessing the impact of climate change. The lack of adequate trained personnel for scientific planning, utilizing modern techniques and analytical capabilities incorporating information technology constrain many developing countries. These imperatives must also be addressed.

I thank you

608. Statement by Ambassador Sujata Mehta, Permanent Representative of India to the Conference on Disarmament at the 2013 Substantive Session of United Nations Disarmament Commission.

New York , April 1, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Please accept our felicitations on your election as Chairman of this year's UNDC meetings. I would also like to congratulate other members of the bureau on their elections. Let me assure you of the full support of my delegation in the discharge of your responsibilities. I would also like to place on record our appreciation for the work done by the UNDC Chair of last year as also the Chairs of the two Working Groups.

India associates itself with the statement made by Indonesia on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement.

Mr. Chairman,

India attaches high importance to the UNDC which is the deliberative leg of the triad of disarmament machinery put in place by the First Special Session of General Assembly on Disarmament. The Commission plays a unique role as the only body with universal membership for in-depth deliberations on relevant disarmament issues. We cannot over emphasise the role of this body at a time when both the disarmament agenda and the disarmament machinery face numerous challenges.

The UNDC offers an opportunity for Member States to collectively make progress on important disarmament issues by infusing coherence and consensus in disarmament debate which is extremely important if we are to address security challenges of our times. While we share the disappointment at the UNDC not being able to adopt substantive recommendations for more than a decade, we continue to have belief in the inherent value of this forum. It is up to us Member States to realise the value of UNDC by giving importance to its work and showing greater political commitment on disarmament issues.

Mr. Chairman,

The General Assembly in its resolution 52/492 of 1998 had decided that nuclear disarmament will constitute one of the agenda items of UNDC every year. However, it was only after considerable deliberations last year that the Commission was able to adopt its agenda for the 2012-14 cycle of its meetings, with nuclear disarmament as one of the agenda items. Nonetheless, we now have two agenda items for this cycle on which a large measure of ground has already been covered in previous years. We believe that elements on which substantial agreement was reached among Member States in the past should be preserved.

At this stage, we would like to share some thoughts on the two issues on our agenda. We will further elaborate our positions in the meetings of the two Working Groups in the coming three weeks. We attach high importance to the agenda item "Recommendations for achieving the objective of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons". The complete elimination of nuclear weapons is a long cherished goal of the international community. The UN General Assembly in its very first resolution, adopted unanimously in 1946, sought the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction. The final document of SSOD-I adopted by consensus by the international community, also accorded the highest priority to nuclear disarmament.

India attaches the highest priority to global, non-discriminatory verifiable nuclear disarmament, a principle which has strong and consistent domestic support in our country. India is convinced that the goal of nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed multilateral framework that is global and non-discriminatory. There is need for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines.

In the current international climate there is greater support for progressive steps for delegitimization of nuclear weapons. Measures to reduce nuclear danger arising from accidental or unauthorised use of nuclear weapons are pertinent in this regard. India's resolutions in the First

Committee give expression to some of these ideas and have found support from a large number of States. Our Working Paper tabled in the UNDC in April 2007, which was developed in the spirit of the 1988 Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan, also suggested specific measures, including a Global No First Use Agreement and a Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons.

We believe that the UNDC must send a strong signal of the international community's resolve for achieving the goal of global, non-discriminatory and verifiable nuclear disarmament. Member States should use this forum to intensify dialogue in this regard. We can demonstrate our commitment by adopting consensus recommendations on the objective of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

As regards the second agenda item "Practical CBMs in the field of conventional weapons", let me state that India supports practical CBMs initiatives whether unilateral, bilateral, regional or global. We believe that CBMs can build trust and confidence and enhance transparency to minimize misunderstandings and misperceptions thereby promoting a suitable environment of peace and security among States. India has initiated several CBMs with the countries in our neighbourhood.

We believe that the initiation of a confidence building process must be decided upon by States freely and in the exercise of their sovereignty. Confidence building must be a step-by-step process and should evolve at a pace comfortable to all participating states. CBMs in specific regions should fully take into account the political, military and other conditions prevailing in the region. CBMs in a regional context should be adopted on the initiation and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned. In elaborating practical CBMs in the field of conventional weapons, we should take advantage of the guidelines on CBMs endorsed by the UNGA at its 41st session on the recommendation of the UNDC.

We believe that significant amount of work needs to be accomplished on this agenda item in our meetings this year and the next. The discussions last year were sketchy perhaps in anticipation of the results of the ATT negotiations as well as the Review Conference of the UNPOA on SALW. We also believe that discussions on CBMs in the field of conventional weapons should not become a tool for pursuing political agendas or for promoting instruments that do not enjoy universal support.

Mr. Chairman,

Being the second year of this cycle of UNDC meetings, this year is crucial for us to be able to adopt substantive recommendations at the conclusion of the cycle next year. Since we have only two items on our agenda, unlike three in the past cycle, there is a possibility for in-depth exchange of views on all aspects related to these agenda items this year. We are therefore hopeful of good progress in our work.

Thank you

609. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the Meeting of the Ad-Hoc Committee (Measures to eliminate international terrorism) for elaboration of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

New York, April 8, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

We are delighted to see you guiding the proceedings of the meeting of this Ad-Hoc Committee, which has an important mandate for the elaboration of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism (CCIT). We are highly appreciative of your continuing untiring efforts towards this task.

Mr. Chairman,

Terrorism poses a continuing serious threat to the international community. Every now and then, one or the other country, developed or developing, rich or poor, is brutally targeted by the terrorists.

Mr. Chairman,

Allow me to draw the attention of the Ad-Hoc Committee toward the operational paragraph 2 of the General Assembly resolution 51/210 by which the Committee was established. It states that "criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstance unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other nature that may be invoked to justify them. In that spirit, India condemns terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and reiterates that no cause or grievance could justify the acts of terrorism.

Mr. Chairman,

Tackling terrorism requires a holistic approach and collective action. On the legal front, we need to expand the scope of legal instruments to bring the perpetrators of terrorist acts to justice.

The Ad-Hoc Committee, pursuant to the General Assembly mandate, and after having successfully elaborated the Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombing and the Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism has before it, in an incremental approach, the task for developing a comprehensive legal framework to deal with the acts of terrorism.

Mr. Chairman,

In this task, we have already reached an advanced stage. The Ad-Hoc Committee has been able, under your leadership, to produce a draft text of the CCIT as a result of extensive negotiations.

Allow me Mr. Chairman to recognize the sincere efforts and hard work of the Coordinator Ms. Maria Telalian, who after considering several proposals was able to produce a compromise text in 2007 on conflicting issues. In view of my delegation the 2007 package presents a viable and, delicately balanced text. We reiterate our support to the proposal of the Coordinator and that we should not revisit the already agreed articles of the draft CCIT.

Mr. Chairman,

We are convinced that the draft CCIT would fill the legal lacunae and would further strengthen the international legal framework to counter terrorism and would thus contribute to the implementation of the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy.

We fully believe in your leadership which makes us to look forward that a text of the convention could be finalized.

Mr. Chairman,

Regarding the question of convening a high-level conference under the auspices of the United Nations, we reiterate our position that any such conference would be ideal after the adoption of the CCIT. We are convinced that it would provide an opportunity for stocktaking, including identifying needs and available resources for assistance in the implementation of the convention.

I thank you Mr. Chairman.

610. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, Debate on "The Role of International Criminal Justice in Reconciliation" at the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, April 10, 2013.

Mr. President

At the outset, I would like to thank you for convening this interactive thematic debate on the role of international criminal justice in reconciliation.

Mr. President,

Peace and justice are intertwined. There is no peace without justice and there is no justice without peace. A coherent application of the rule of law at all levels of governance is a precondition of avoiding conflicts and ensuring peace and justice. This applies to both international and national affairs.

As such, publicly vindicating human rights norms and punishing those who are guilty helps to prevent future atrocities in conflict and post-conflict situations. Individual accountability for massive crimes should not only be seen as an essential part of preventive strategy but also help arrest the culture of impunity.

Mr. President,

India believes that accountability, as an essential element of international criminal justice system, does not only reflect a desire for justice but also meet the important objective of reconciliation as part of post-conflict peace building.

India also firmly believes that international efforts to address the issues of serious crimes of international concern and impunity should be anchored in the UN Charter and international law.

Mr. President,

It is also necessary that the international justice system be supplemented by substantial post-conflict economic assistance and social rehabilitation. Reconciliation carries with it not only an element of justice for victims by bringing perpetrators of atrocities to book but also promotion of peaceful co-existence; focusing on developmental needs and the democratic principles; and settling the disputes through peaceful means.

A synergy of these measures alone will help avoid emergence of conflict situations and commission of mass crimes, as well as establish sustainable peace, security and stability in post-conflict situations. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that sufficient resources are made available for building institutions and state structures. Resources for the work of the international justice system alone will not suffice.

Mr. President,

Since the rule of law serves as a key element in the conflict prevention and peacekeeping as well as conflict resolution and peacebuilding, India has always supported international cooperation for the development and codification of international criminal law and to strengthen the rule of law as a whole.

India has also been a supporter of international cooperation to suppress and deter heinous crimes of international concern through the relevant judicial instruments.

At the same time, Mr. President, India firmly believes that we need to strengthen the rule of law at the international level by avoiding selectivity, partiality, and double standards as well as by freeing the international criminal justice institutions from the clutches of political considerations.

The system of accountability has not only to operate but also seen to be operating uniformly. Any selective application will ruin the credibility of the international criminal justice system and force people to view it as an instrument to meet the political objectives of the powerful states.

Moreover, Mr. President, we need to ensure that international criminal justice does not become what one author has said "the attractive spectacle of courtroom drama, which pits darkness against forces of light and reduces the world to a manageable narrative".

Mr. President,

It is also necessary to underscore that long-term peace and reconciliation can take place not through international mechanisms but through building national institutions by means of capacity building efforts. Domestic reform constituencies must be fostered in an effort to build the capacity of national justice systems and to reinforce the rule of law.

These measures alone will ensure that the world community is able to meet the challenges that face us today, including accountability, reconciliation, and resolution of conflict situations as well as post-conflict peacebuilding.

I thank you

611. Extempore Remarks by Ambassador Manjeev S. Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative at the UNGA thematic debate on "The UN and Global Economic Governance".

New York, April 15, 2013.

Madam moderator,

Thank you for giving me the floor. Given the paucity of time, I shall be brief.

Your panel has followed the briefing by the G-20 Sherpa. First of all let me say that all the statements that I have heard here have found that the G-20 did something good; that the G-20 was of help; that the G-20 has a role; and that the UN and the G-20 are learning how to work together. I find this very heartening to hear. And I, as a member of both the G-20 and the G-77, believe collaboration and trying to do things together is certainly the order of the day.

Madam Moderator,

Our topic today for discussion, you know, is the United Nations and Global Economic Governance. Many have spoken about several of the issues which bedevil global economic governance. Let me turn to something which, at least I have not heard anyone else here speak about, which is about the structures of global economic governance and the need to reform them.

Everybody has spoken of the need to adjust global governance to contemporary realities. People have pointed out to shifting GDP balance and new economic realities. We need to adjust to these.

I want to draw the attention of all my distinguished colleagues who are assembled here to some very basic issues. The United Nations and its entire system came about as a result of three United Nations conferences in 1944-45: one in San Francisco as a result of which was born the UNO, the second one in Bretton Woods - the UN Monetary and Financial Conference from which the BWIs came into being, and there was a third one, which people have forgotten about, that is the conference at Havana that ended up with a kind of broken leg, so we could only have the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. We did not go any further. It took many many years, indeed decades, before my dear colleague here Mr. Harsha Singh could become the Deputy Director General of the WTO.

And what else did we do? In 1954, ECOSOC had 27 members. In 1963 when the membership of the United Nations doubled to about a hundred odd, we doubled ECOSOC membership to 54. But where are we today? At 54. Well, even that may have been all right. But who are these 54? The membership is heavily skewed in favour of those who were around in 1963 and continues to be skewed in favour of the developed countries. This continues to be the most bedeviling factor in global governance as such, not just in global economic governance.

At the International Financial Institutions we have started making some kind of movement, courtesy the G-20. Some quota movements have taken place. But here at the United Nations, we really need to have some movement on this. We need to start reflecting contemporary realities.

And to all those who are sitting there, let me point out, following the big financial meltdown of 2008, the Doha Financing for Development conference tried to make a beginning on this. We did have some language which would allow for some kind of action at the UN. But when it came to June 2009 conference (UN Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and its impact on Development), I do not know what happened. Perhaps the green shoots of recovery were becoming visible that all of us decided to let a dampener be put on it, and that process I do not know where it is going at the moment, whether at all there are any facilitators or anything is happening.

Madam Moderator,

I do not want to take up more of your time. But somebody mentioned governance deficit. This is the absolute key issue. This is what we need to address. We need to address structural reform issues and once we start getting them right, I am sure, we shall have the necessary tools and the necessary stakeholders with this particular system to ensure that we will be in a position to address the challenges, which will keep coming up. The United Nations certainly has the most important role in ensuring that there is equitable handling of global issues as such, including global economic governance.

I thank you very much Madam Moderator.

612. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, at the Ninth Round of Intergovernmental Negotiations on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and other matters related to the Council.

New York, April 16, 2013.

Mr. Chair,

Thank you for giving me the floor.

We are grateful to you for your decision to convene the 9th round of Inter Governmental negotiations on Security Council reform today.

Having presented my credentials to the Secretary-General earlier today, I could not have asked for a better 'debut' statement at the United Nations than this!

Reform of institutions of global governance, including the UN Security Council, and ensuring that they reflect contemporary reality, has been a matter of foremost importance to my country.

At the outset, I would like to align myself with the G4 statement, delivered by the distinguished PR of Germany, Ambassador Peter Wittig, and with the statement made by Ambassador Camillo Gonsalves, my distinguished colleague from St. Vincent and the Grenadines and the Spokesperson of the L69 Group.

Mr. Chair,

Victor Hugo, had once said and I quote "You can resist an invading army, but you cannot resist an idea whose time has come".

It was in 1963, half a century ago, that the last expansion took place to enlarge the membership of the UN Security Council from 11 to 15. That was a modest increase of four in the non permanent category only. Since then membership of the United Nations has increased from 113 to 193. Mr. Chairman, 80 more countries have joined the United Nations, but the composition of its premier body, mandated to maintain international peace and security, has not undergone even the slightest change. This is an unnatural situation of stagnation in a dynamic and rapidly changing international environment.

We are also faced with a truly bizarre situation, when nearly 80 percent of the work of the Security Council is focussed on the continent of Africa, and yet, the Council has never had, even one permanent member from any of the 53 states of the African continent.

I have cited these examples only to illustrate that the argument for reforms is more compelling than ever before. It appears to be just a matter of time, when the body may either have to willingly embrace change, or be made to accept change as a 'fait accompli'.

Mr. Chair,

Over eight rounds of these negotiations, you have heard clearly the national positions of participating delegations. By now you must also have a fair sense yourself of what the vast majority has been imploring you to achieve, which is to help expand and reform the Council. In your assessment of 25 July 2012 you had acknowledged the strong support for expansion in both categories of membership of the reformed Council.

I would therefore like to submit the following points for your consideration to enable you take this 9th round of our IGN process forward:

The first is to move from words to action, from a mere repetition of old stated positions to achieving tangible progress. In this, we believe that your proposal contained in your letter of 25 July 2012 to produce a 'concise working document' would help kick start real negotiations and is most urgently needed. My delegation would like to support you in this endeavour and we do hope that such a document would be truly reflective of the discussions so far.

We appreciate your efforts in producing the latest compilation of the updated Rev3 text and the 'user friendly guide' along with it. This user friendly guide should help guide us, under your leadership, to at-least remove several redundant positions, as well as those that evidently command minimal support, so that we can move to real negotiations.

Secondly, we would like to hear from you, on how you plan to proceed from here to initiate real negotiations on the substantive proposals on the table. A sharing of your timeline for producing that 'concise working document' and the next steps would be particularly important.

Thirdly, we must avoid falling into long periods of 'stasis and inertia'. Given that World Leaders mandated us at 2005 World Summit to achieve an 'early' reform of the Security Council, it is imperative that the IGN take place at a 'pace and frequency' that befits the subject matter it deliberates. It would be desirable to demonstrate the result of our work before the 70th anniversary Summit of the United Nations.

A concise working document with set negotiation timelines would help ensure that the IGN moves into an outcome oriented mode

Mr. Chair,

You are also aware that the constituency for reforms is only increasing by the day. The L69 and the African group have converged.

You have also received an extremely constructive and forward looking draft resolution from our colleagues in the CARICOM, which best epitomises the 'comprehensive approach' to seeking early reforms.

We member states, who are positively committed to seeking early reforms of the Security Council look to you as a repository of the collective investment of all our endeavours since we embarked upon this IGN roadmap in the 63rd UNGA in 2009.

We once again compliment you for inviting us today to suggest options for the way forward, and you will always have our unstinted support.

Mr. Chair, the initiative is now in your hands to lead us forward in this collective quest of ours.

Thank You

613. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)- Session on Poverty Eradication.

New York, April 19, 2013.

Mr. Co-chair,

The Open Working Group on SDGs is an important process, and I am delighted to be contributing to its deliberations. India associates itself with the statement delivered by the G-77.

In the decades after RIO '92 when we embarked on the path of sustainable development, we have created more wealth than in the entire human history preceding it put together. And yet, in spite of the progress made through the MDG commitment, the world continues to have more than 1.3 billion people living on less than 1.25 dollar a day. Of these, the region where I come from, South Asia is home to the largest number of global poor.

1 out of every 6 people in this planet, a decade into the 21st century, continue to live a life of extreme poverty, hunger and desperation.

The story of poverty and the imperative for growth cannot be more compelling!

It was to capture this sense of urgency that the RIO +20 Summit identified poverty eradication to be greatest global challenge. Such categorical recognition by our leaders, perhaps for the first time in the sustainable development discourse, and in a manner way stronger than the pronouncements in the First and Second UN Decades for Eradication of Poverty, rightfully deserves our highest attention.

As we sit down to frame the Sustainable Development Goals, let there be no doubt in our minds, and in our efforts, that poverty eradication constitutes the biggest challenge to our sustainability agenda.

We take much satisfaction in the fact that the RIO understanding on poverty has been fully recognized and the UN development system called upon to give the highest priority to achieving poverty eradication in the recently adopted QCPR (Quadrennial Comprehensive Policy Review) resolution. And it must now guide us in our work on the SDGs.

Mr. Co-chair,

We recognize that addressing poverty eradication is a multi-dimensional effort. However, the priority must be income generation and employment for the poor.

We also fully appreciate the need for sustainability. Our approach in this endeavour needs to address unsustainable consumption and production patterns in the developed countries and bring to bear responsibility on them to lead responsible lifestyles.

Mr. Co-chair,

We in India have followed a multi-pronged strategy to combat poverty based on faster and inclusive growth. Our average growth rate of 7.9 % in the last five years coupled with targeted poverty alleviation programmes have allowed us to pull millions out of poverty. As per our estimates, from a figure of 48% in 1990, we would be bringing extreme poverty levels down to 26 % by the end of 2015.

Economic growth is fundamental to pursue inclusive policies to eradicate poverty, and we must clearly recognize this imperative. Growth allows greater access to income and employment opportunities by the poor and boosts domestic revenues to undertake targeted interventions. There can be no development without growth and the Post- 2015 development agenda should recognize this fundamental premise if it has to succeed.

On poverty eradication, certainly there is no one-size-fits-all approach. But global development experience, and own experience, reveal that with majority of the poor people in developing countries living in rural areas, we would perhaps do well to stress on agriculture development as an effective poverty reduction tool. Another area of primacy must be to promote small and medium enterprises which generate job-rich growth.

Mr. Co-chair,

Our key proposals on how to deal with poverty in the context of SDGs, both as goals and in the narrative, are as follows:

1. Our overarching objective must be to end poverty. We have to be more ambitious than the MDGs which talked of just extreme poverty. Our initial target may be on extreme poverty, with the question of larger poverty being addressed through strong cross-cutting action on meeting basic needs.
2. We should have a stand-alone goal on poverty as in the MDGs, and at the same time address multi-dimensional nature of poverty through cross-cutting themes.
3. Action on Poverty must not be contextualized or linked with other challenges. It must receive undiluted attention and focus. Its synergies with other issues should be captured in the cross-cutting themes.
4. While talking of strategies on poverty eradication, primacy must be given to faster and inclusive growth, access to income and employment opportunities, skill development, capacity building, targeted interventions and investment in physical and social infrastructure. There must be specific focus on investment and growth in agriculture and rural development sectors.
5. There is a strong co-relation between energy access and poverty, and we must clearly bring out the primacy to address lack of energy access through all sources of energy.
6. There is symbiotic relationship between the twin challenges of inequality and poverty. Without raising the standards of poor people and meeting their basic needs, we can hardly deal with inequality in an effective manner.
7. We must provide enough flexibility in our framework for countries to tailor their needs and priorities according to their circumstances.
8. Finally Mr. Co-Chair, we are firmly of the view that the SDGs should be universally applicable. It is therefore appropriate, even necessary, that when we talk of poverty issues as an SDG which applies primarily to developing countries, we need to balance it out through another SDG which would apply to the developed countries and contribute directly to addressing the overall objective of poverty eradication, i.e. changing the unsustainable patterns of consumption and production.

I thank you

614. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the 35th Session of the Committee on Information.

New York, April 23, 2013.

Madam Chair,

At the outset, on behalf of India, I would like to congratulate Ambassador Lyutha Sultan Al-Mughairy on her election as Chair of the Committee, as also the other members of the Bureau on their election. I wish you all the best of success and assure you of my country's full co-operation during the ongoing session of the Committee.

India also welcomes the appointment of Mr. Peter Launsky-Tieffenthal of Austria as the new Under Secretary General for Communication and Public Information. We are happy that he has served in India, and are confident that his creativity and experience would add to the DPI's ability to effectively communicate the ideas and activities of the United Nations. We wish him success in his new assignment, and also assure him of India's full co-operation.

We also welcome the reports of the Secretary-General on activities of the UNDPPI in the areas of strategic communications, news service and outreach services, which enable us to have a better perspective of DPI's efforts to fulfill its mandate, despite challenges emanating from limited availability of resources.

Madam Chair,

India associates itself with the statement made by the Chair of the G-77 and China. We would also like to make the following observations on the activities of the DPI, in our national capacity.

We commend the DPI's Outreach Services Division for its consistent effort to expand partnership with the global academic community, through its Academic Impact initiative. This excellent initiative, aimed at strengthening collaboration between the United Nations and institutions of higher education, has grown 850-member strong in a short period of less than three years. We are pleased to mention that a number of Indian Universities are members of this initiative.

Under this initiative, member institutions have organized a range of activities on diverse global issues, ranging from the changing nature of conflict in the 21st century, to human rights, faith, dialogue and integration. We are happy to mention that on November 26 last year, our Mission associated itself with the Initiative in organizing an event under the "Unlearning Intolerance" seminar series. This event, coinciding with India's Presidency of the UN Security Council, and the 800th anniversary of the great Indian Sufi Saint Khwaja Moinuddin Chisti, included a panel discussion on "Faith, Dialogue and Integration", and a musical concert on the theme of "Love Towards All, Malice Towards None". The musical event brought together three genres of music, including the soulful Sufi music presented by the Shahi Qawwals from the Holy Shrine of Ajmer Sharif.

Madam Chair,

We welcome the appointment by the Secretary General of the Youth Envoy, under the Outreach Division of DPI. We hope that this will help enhance DPI's engagement with one of the key constituencies of the United Nations.

While highlighting the role of the Committee in examining its activities and giving policy directions to the DPI, we would like to emphasize the close partnership between member states and the DPI, with each supplementing the role of the other. There is a need for both to work closely together, to continually improve upon the content of the information being disseminated, and to ensure its effective delivery to potential users across the world.

Madam Chair,

We also reiterate the need for DPI to keep both the inter-state and intra-state digital divide in mind, and use the widest possible spectrum of media channels, ranging from digital social media channels to the traditional means of communication, like radio and print. We would also like to emphasize that dissemination of the information should be done in a democratic manner, giving equal importance to all the available channels of communication, including radio and print.

Madam Chair,

The network of UN Information Centers are the real interface between the United Nations and the people at the grassroots, given their ability to interact with local communities and communicate with them in their own language. We commend the work of UNIC New Delhi for producing its newsletter in the Indian languages, and collaborating with local NGOs, educational institutions and cultural centers in organizing its "Peace to Non-violence" campaign. We also emphasize the need for DPI to work closely with host countries to further strengthen these information outposts. We would also support adequate budgetary resources being made available to Information Centers, particularly in developing countries.

Madam Chair,

We support the DPI in its efforts to highlight the question of Palestine. We appreciate the annual training program for Palestinian journalists hosted by the Department, and its undertaking of a variety of activities in commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, through UNICs around the world, including in New Delhi. We hope that such efforts would help create world opinion in favor of a peaceful settlement of this issue, and restore peace in the Middle- East.

The DPI should continue to work closely with the DPKO, DFS and DPA in its efforts to highlight the work performed by UN peacekeepers, often under extremely demanding circumstances. However rather than responding to particular situations or incidents, these efforts should continue throughout the year.

Disseminating accurate, impartial and timely information on the UN work is one of the important tasks of the DPI. The summaries of various important meetings at the UN released by DPI are critical sources of information for the world at large and even for member-states. It is therefore necessary that the information be factual, not judgmental. Let us remember that DPI officers are not journalists, but information officers. For example, the fact of the Security Council not adopting a decision cannot be called a failure as is often mentioned by the DPI in its summary of Council meetings.

Madam Chair,

We would like to conclude by assuring India's full support to the DPI as it endeavors to project the work of the UN, and to you as you guide the work of this Committee.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

615. STATEMENT BY MR. DEVESH UTTAM, FIRST SECRETARY, ON 'ROLE AND AUTHORITY OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY' AT THE MEETING OF THE AD HOC WORKING GROUP OF THE REVITALIZATION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

New York, APRIL 29, 2013.

Mr. Chair,

Thank you for convening this meeting to discuss the "Role and Authority of the General Assembly", as well as its relationship with other principal organs of the United Nations and other Groups outside the United Nations.

I would also like to align with the statement made by the distinguished representative from Algeria on behalf of the Non-Aligned Group.

Mr. Chair,

We sincerely appreciate your hard work and that of the Secretariat for issuing an updated inventory/chart of resolutions on revitalization pursuant to resolution 66/294. However, a close look into this chart reveals that much remains to be done to enhance the role and effectiveness of this august body.

We need to change it from a mere talk shop to a place where transnational issues that impact each and every one of us are addressed swiftly and truly global effective solutions prescribed.

India has consistently held the view that the General Assembly can be revitalized only when its position as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations is respected in letter and in spirit.

The Assembly should take the lead in setting the global agenda and restoring the centrality of the United Nations in formulating multilateral approaches to resolving transnational issues. In particular, revitalization must restore the primacy of the UN in development matters.

As the United Nations chief deliberative, legislative, policy-making and representative body, it also needs to reinvent itself to contemporary realities.

Mr. Chair,

Over the years, it has been amply demonstrated that the prerogatives and authority of the General Assembly have been undermined by the Security Council.

It is critical that a relationship of respect for the respective mandates between the General Assembly and the Security Council are maintained in the spirit of the Charter.

The Council, in particular, should stop its frequent attempts to redefine its scope of competence through wider and permissive interpretations of what constitutes a threat to international peace and security and including issues that clearly fall within the purview of the General Assembly or the ECOSOC.

Moreover, it is imperative that the General Assembly exercises its judgment in the matter of the appointment of the Secretary General, rather than merely rubber stamping proposals by the Security Council while ensuring that the appointment process does not become a divisive issue between the Assembly and the Council.

In so far as the General Assembly itself is concerned, member states should engage in substantive deliberations in the six main committees instead of rushing to the plenary and or calling for votes without real negotiations in the Committees.

Mr. Chair,

In conclusion, please be assured of my delegation's constructive support and steadfast commitment in your efforts to achieve the common goal of ours to revitalize the General Assembly.

Thank You

616. Extempore Remarks by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative at the General Assembly Consultative Workshops on "Development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies in developing countries".

New York, May 1, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I want to thank UNDESA for convening this workshop. In my understanding, the answer to the larger challenges of sustainability that we face today lies in technology and we need to work and collaborate to harness it.

I am a bit disappointed to see that the attendance in all the sessions since yesterday has been rather low. To be relevant to the discourse and developments on technology, we at the United Nations must do our best to lead the conversation and I would urge you to try and do your best to enhance the participation of Member States and other stakeholders in the upcoming workshops at the end of this month.

The Secretary General has made a very good recommendation on operationalising a Technology Facilitation Mechanism by 2013 and we fully support it. We should constitute an inter-governmental preparatory working group to work out its institutional details.

I want to inject energy here among all of us in the United Nations to lead the conversation on technology for sustainable development. Without harnessing technology, we cannot make progress on improving the lives of our people and take urgent action on climate change and sustainable development.

Mr. Chairman,

The second thing I want highlight is that small fixes have generally small benefits. Let me be very clear about this. You know, every one of us here is carrying a smart phone or a similar device and this technology today has spread all over the world. There is no country in the world today which is not connected through mobile telephony or internet. The internet today is making its presence felt in every nook and corner of the world. Globalization has become the order of the day. These changes have happened not because of small ideas but through big transformational changes achieved through technology. I am not saying that local action and small scale changes are any less important. But we really need to look at big fixes because the challenges before us are gigantic. This demands strong collaborative action.

And globalization is demanding collaboration. Globalization has given us a lot of benefits but in terms of tackling the negatives of it, we need to do a great deal in science and technology. And I have little doubt in my mind that much of this effort, the push, shove and heave, has to be made in the leading developed countries where innovation is not just incubated but taken forward. All the major changes in our lives have occurred out here, in the developed world. And we need to find ways and means of getting them everywhere.

Yesterday we talked about agriculture and how we achieved food sufficiency. You know if this idea of green revolution had not been spread through investment and scientific collaboration by the world's most industrialized and developed countries, so many of our countries would have been basket cases. This, fortunately, is not the case because appropriate technologies were developed here and shared with everyone.

The last presentation talked about HIV Aids. When the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) were being evolved, there must have been something special about HIV that it is among the few specific things that finds mention in the MDGs. Today we have been able to contain it. I am not saying we have been able to get rid of it. But how did we contain it? Yes, the lead was taken by the developed countries. And I am not going into IPR and related issues. But let's look at what the Clinton Foundation did for example. They did wonders in getting the solutions to the people through innovative approaches including financing.

I therefore again stress the argument of collaboration. We have to have big ticket things done which can only take place in most advanced economies where funds are available to undertake scientific research and innovation. Once innovations and technologies are evolved or developed, they will reach everyone in the world.

Our first step, therefore, should be to develop solutions and then to find ways and means to make them available to everyone. Of course, we say that innovation must be rewarded; innovation must be encouraged but at the same time we must balance it with global public good. And we are ready to collaborate in scientific research and development, as are other developing countries. These are the kind of thoughts I want to leave with you.

I want to once again thank you for having convened this workshop and I want to assure you of my delegation's strong support on the issue of technology collaboration. The recommendation made in the SG's report has our full support and we will do what we can for our big call for collaboration. I think people want to shy away from collaboration and that is not something that I would like to see.

Thank you very much.

617. Statement by Mr. Devesh Uttam, First Secretary at the Meeting of the Ad hoc Working Group on the Revitalization of the General Assembly.

New York, 10 May 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for convening this meeting to discuss the "role and responsibility of the General Assembly in the selection and appointment of the Secretary General and other Executive Heads of the United Nations System".

At the outset, we would like to align with the statement made by the distinguished Permanent Representative of Algeria on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement.

Mr. Chair,

We have been discussing the revitalization of the General Assembly for last two decades without any substantive outcome. There have been some improvements but major progress still eludes us. It's high time that the General Assembly claim its rightful position as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations both in letter and in spirit.

The Assembly should take the lead in setting the global agenda and restoring the centrality of the United Nations in formulating multilateral approaches to resolving transnational issues.

Mr. Chair,

The selection process of the Secretary General is far too important to be left entirely to the Security Council. The General Assembly must have a greater say in it. The Secretary- General's election should not be limited to merely "consulting closely with other Security Council members to reach agreement on a candidate" followed by approval by acclamation by the General Assembly. At the same time, it should not be allowed to become a divisive issue between the two principal organs.

General Assembly Resolution 11 (1) of 1st February 1946 which lays out the "terms of appointment of the Secretary General" belongs to the past.

In any case, the practice established by GA Resolution 11 (1) can be modified to allow for the Council to send a panel of names that the Assembly could choose from as against a single nomination. Additionally, if the member-states attach high importance to the role and responsibilities of the Assembly, we see no reason why the matter should not be "decided by a two-third majority" in terms of Article 18(3) as against the one with a simple majority requirement in Resolution 11 (1).

We could also identify objective criteria for the candidatures, including commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter, extensive leadership, administrative and diplomatic experience with due regard being given to regional rotation and gender equality. Equally useful and practical would be to encourage formal presentation of candidatures in a manner that allows sufficient time for interaction with member-states, and also requires candidates to present their views to all member-states of the General Assembly.

Moreover, the General Assembly resolutions 51/241 of 22nd August 1997 and 60/286 of 9th October 2006 which outline in detail proposals on improving the process of selection and appointment of the Secretary General must be fully and faithfully implemented.

Mr. Chair,

Let me briefly touch on the matter of selection of other Executive Heads in the UN system organizations. Our position flows from the clear guidelines in the Charter.

The Charter provisions clearly reflect the desire of the UN membership to have an international civil service which displays the highest standards of professionalism, neutrality and integrity and which is accountable to the General Assembly. In addition, we would welcome closer consideration of procedures for selecting, appointing and confirming the heads of the major Specialized Agencies, Funds and Programmes with a view to ensuring transparency, legitimacy and balanced representation.

In conclusion, we would like to re-emphasize the need for greater transparency, inclusiveness in the selection of the Secretary General and stress on implementation of relevant GA resolutions without further delay.

Thank You

618. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji,
Permanent Representative at High Level Meeting of the UN General Assembly on the Appraisal of the Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons.

Ney York, May 14, 2013.

Mr. President,

I thank you for organizing this important meeting. I also thank the UN Secretary General, the President of the General Assembly, the Executive Director of UNODC and other speakers for their important contributions on the subject of combating trafficking in persons.

Mr. President,

The United Nations has articulated a clear vision on this subject by launching the Global Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons in August 2010.

The Plan mandated the international community to address the problem of human trafficking in a holistic and comprehensive manner. This has to be implemented through integrated, balanced, coherent, result-oriented and people-centric policies.

The 4 Ps, of Preventing, Protecting, Prosecuting and Partnership, is a new clarion call in this fight, which needs to be adhered to and implemented.

The new element of Partnership is crucial. It recognizes effective partnerships with civil society, NGOs and private sector as an integral part of this fight.

The Global Report on Trafficking in Persons 2012 brought out by the UNODC is the first such attempt to present a global overview of trends and challenges in trafficking of persons.

Notwithstanding the information gaps that still persist, the findings of the report are a grim reminder of the growing global scale of trafficking of persons, and of the complexities involved in dealing with this issue.

According to the report, women and children remain particularly vulnerable to trafficking, especially with respect to trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour.

While over 130 countries have criminalized trafficking, progress in conviction remains limited.

These findings underline the basic fact that while national efforts to eliminate trafficking are essential, it is also critical to have greater cohesion in the international community's efforts to prevent, prosecute and punish those involved in trafficking in persons, especially through organized crime. Capacity building, as the report notes, is a significant challenge to be addressed.

Mr. President,

India is firmly committed towards a world free of human trafficking. We live in one of the most densely populated regions of the world. India has ratified the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, in May 2011. Our commitment is reflected in various national laws and policies.

At the level of policy implementation, we have developed strategies which are holistic, participative and inclusive and are not restricted to direct intervention against trafficking alone. We are adopting a victim-centric approach to these issues.

Anti-Trafficking Nodal Cells have been set up both at the Central and the provincial levels. We are working with the UNODC for strengthening law enforcement responses in India against trafficking in persons.

A comprehensive scheme for prevention of trafficking, rescue, rehabilitation, reintegration and repatriation of the victims of commercial sexual exploitation is already in place.

India also seeks to eradicate trafficking through empowering the vulnerable sections of our society, who are its potential victims. This is also one of the core objectives of this Global Plan.

Mr. President,

The international community, including the UN, must contribute and help States that seek financial and technical assistance in their efforts at capacity building and in putting in place appropriate administrative and legal frameworks. These are institutional reforms which are imperative to combat this challenge.

The UNODC has an important role to play in enhancing training and capacity building to strengthen law enforcement responses.

We are concerned that despite deeper international cooperation, the growing global trend of trafficking in persons has not been arrested. We need to redouble our efforts to fighting this scourge. India stands ready to work with the international community in this regard.

Thank you, Mr. President.

619. India's explanation of vote delivered by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative at the United Nations General Assembly - Resolution on Syria.

New York, May 15, 2013.

Mr. President,

India remains deeply concerned at the unabated violence in Syria and the suffering it continues to cause to the Syrian people. The military approach pursued by various sides to the conflict has undermined the efforts for a political solution to the crisis. Violence has assumed a serious sectarian nature, and terrorist groups, including al Qaida, have entrenched themselves. All these developments will have long-term repercussions for national, regional and international peace and security. Reports on the alleged use of chemical weapons are also deeply worrying.

2. We strongly condemn all violence in Syria as well as all violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, irrespective of who their perpetrators are. We condemn all attacks directed at women and children, civilians, UN peacekeepers and public institutions and infrastructure. We also condemn in the strongest terms possible all terrorist acts that have been and continue to be committed in Syria.
3. We are particularly concerned that UN peacekeepers have been repeatedly targeted by rebel groups and taken hostage, including on two occasions in the recent past. This is completely unacceptable. It is imperative that the sanctity of United Nations peacekeepers be respected by all sides. A clear signal must be sent by the United Nations that such acts will not be tolerated and will attract the full weight of the international community against the perpetrators.
4. Since the beginning of the crisis in Syria, India has consistently called on all parties to abjure violence, dissociate themselves from terrorist groups, and pursue a peaceful and inclusive political process to address the grievances of all sections of Syrian society. We have also contributed to mitigate the humanitarian impact of the crisis by providing assistance worth US$ 2.5 million.
5. We believe that the Joint Communiqué of the Geneva Group adopted in June 2012 provides a good basis for resolution of the Syrian crisis through a Syrian-led political process that respects Syria's independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty, involves all sections of Syrian society and meets their legitimate aspirations. The task of the international community, anchored in the United Nations, is to assist the Syrian parties in this process, without pre-judging its outcome. Also, it is important that further militarization of the conflict, including support for terrorist and armed groups, ceases forthwith.
6. These are the principles that have guided our consideration of the draft that the Assembly has just voted upon. Whether a group, any group, is the legitimate representative of the Syrian people or not can only be determined by the Syrian people, not this Assembly. Therefore certain provisions of this resolution can be interpreted as effecting regime change by sleight of hand. This is a dangerous precedent which we cannot acquiesce in. We would once again reiterate our position that the leadership of Syria is a matter for Syrians to decide themselves.

7. As we have said earlier, unilateral action of any kind will not resolve the crisis. It will only exacerbate the problem and cause greater instability and violence even beyond Syria's borders. We think that following the settlement of the conflict, Syrians themselves should establish accountability for crimes committed by Syria. This cannot be done by outsiders. We also believe that promotion of political dialogue requires engagement with all parties concerned, and calls for boycott of the government and support of the opposition will not help. Due to these shortcomings, Mr. President, we have abstained on the resolution.
8. India remains committed to support the efforts of the United Nations, including Joint Special Representative Lakdhar Brahimi, to resolve the Syrian crisis expeditiously through inclusive political dialogue among Syrian parties. We also welcome the recent decision by the Russian Federation and the United States to convene a meeting of the Action Group with the Syrian parties, and hope that all sides will engage seriously, realistically and unconditionally to resolve the crisis in the interests of the Syrian people, the region and the larger international community.

I thank you

620. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, at the International Day of Vesak celebrations in the United Nations.

New York, May 24, 2013.

Venerable Monks,

Excellencies, Friends from near and far,

I am honoured and delighted to be with you today on this very auspicious day of Vesak. As co sponsors to this noble initiative, we salute the efforts of all Member States in getting us together this evening, in particular, my sincerest appreciation to the Permanent Mission of Sri Lanka for coordinating this year's event and making it happen.

Venerable Monks, Excellencies and Friends,

Representing a country which has been the cradle of Buddhism since its advent, for us in India, the International day of Vesak, continues to be an occasion to reaffirm and strengthen the cultural and civilizational ties that bind the nations of our region. Buddhism has played a major role in our composite culture and pluralism.

In a strife torn world, as the one we live in today, the preachings of Buddha : " Buddham Sharanam Gacchami " - I take refuge in the Buddha, and by doing that, I take refuge in myself and in the innate goodness of all human beings, is indeed, the only comforting solace available to us all, at least in the spiritual realm. For if it were not, the essential kernel of Lord Buddha's message would not have continued to reverberate two and a half millennia after the attainment of enlightenment, as we so witness at this altar of multilateralism today.

What can be more inspirational for practitioners of multilateral diplomacy like us, than to seek recourse to the Middle Path, a concept preached 2500 years ago, and perhaps most relevant in the trying times we are faced with today. To avoid extremes of any kind, to neither champion violence nor to sit in passive isolation, but to seek harmony, strike the right balance and continue the eternal pursuit of truth and knowledge.

In today's world, Buddha's teachings therefore, stand out as an ideal amalgam and intellectual guide for conducting a dialogue among civilizations, which is a much needed pre-requisite for peace in our times. It is, in this context, that we look to the continued revitalization of the principles and purposes of the United Nations, from a source that is tried, tested and true.

It is in the simplicity of Buddha's message wherein lies the reason for its spread and success. It is based, in the first instance, on a clinical appreciation of the world we live in. which is indeed far from perfect.

Einstein had said and I quote: "If there is any religion that could cope with modern scientific needs, it has to be Buddhism". No wonder, Buddha underscored that the best way to pay homage to him was not by offering flowers, incense and light, but by truly and sincerely striving to follow his teachings. That is how we are expected to celebrate Vesak, let us join hands to use this opportunity to reiterate our determination to lead noble lives, to practise loving kindness and to bring peace and harmony to humanity by eliminating the "I" or "self" for the larger collective good.

I thank you all.

621. Remarks by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India to UN at Commemoration Event of Centenary Year of Nobel Prize Award for Literature to Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore.

New York, May 30, 2013.

We are privileged to gather here in the United Nations today to commemorate the centenary of the award of the Nobel Prize for Literature to Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore.

I would like to especially thank my old friend and colleague Ramu Damodaran of the Department for Public Information of the United Nations for making this event happen.

In the United Nations, we have always benefited from the personal interaction that takes place in various parts of this multilateral institution.

Such interaction between representatives of different cultures is central to our common pursuit of peace and security, of socio-economic development, and of the common threads that bind us and our cultures together.

Today, it would be appropriate to recall one such dynamic interaction between cultures, which catalyzed the publication of the Gitanjali in 1912, and led to the award of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1913 to Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore.

Sir William Rothenstein, (1872-1945), was a prominent British artist and professor and Principal of the Royal College of Art in London. He founded the India Society on 13 January, 1910 in order to encourage an appreciation of Indian fine art. Rothenstein travelled to India that year, visiting various cities before reaching Calcutta. At Calcutta, he was met by an artist of the Bengal School, Abanindranath Tagore, along with his brother Goganendranath. The two brothers took Rothenstein to their family home, Jorasanko.

It was at Jorasanko, in February 1911, that Rothenstein first met Abanindranath's uncle, Rabindranath Tagore. Rothenstein was deeply impressed by Rabindranath, whom he described as "one of the most remarkable men of this time".

The meeting between the Indian poet and the British artist was to prove significant in propagating the appeal and creativity of Indian nationalist thought in the West. Rabindranath visited England between 1912 and 1913. On board the ship, he took up the poems of his Gitanjali, filling up a notebook with translations of the collection from the original Bengali into English. Soon after his arrival on June 16, 1912 Tagore sought out Rothenstein, who took the notebook of English-language translations of poems from Tagore and had copies typed.

On July 7, 1912 Rothenstein arranged for the poems to be read at his rented house in Hampstead by the poet W.B. Yeats. On November 1, 1912 the India Society published a limited edition of Gitanjali: Song Offerings. Of the 750 copies, 500 were for its members and 250 for general sale. The volume contained English translations of 103 poems, with an introduction by Yeats and a pencil-sketch of Tagore by Rothenstein.

Tagore dedicated the publication to Rothenstein. Gitanjali won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1913. Looking at Rabindranath Tagore's many achievements, we marvel at his flair for expressing a strong sense of national pride, tinged with deep spiritualism. His poems Jana Gana Mana and Amar Sonar Bangla are fittingly the National Anthems of India and Bangladesh. Rabindranath, however, did not confine himself within "narrow domestic walls". He prayed that his "heaven of freedom" would be found in a "world that has not been broken up into fragments", in one of his most well-known poems.

Tagore was a quintessential "Renaissance Man". He was a painter, dramatist, musician, novelist, essayist as well as India's national poet. He had a profound awareness of mankind's common destiny, which he experienced during his travels to more than 30 countries on five continents between 1912 and 1933.

By hosting this function today, the United Nations underscores the continuing relevance of Tagore's humanistic and holistic vision for all of us even a hundred years after he was awarded the Nobel Prize.

Thank you

622. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India at the Intersessional Meeting of the 17th High Level Committee on South South Cooperation.

New York, June 4, 2013.

Thank You Mr. President for giving me the floor and for convening this meeting to discuss the Report of the Joint Inspection Unit which conducted a system wide review of the existing UN institutional arrangements in support of South South Cooperation. I am also happy to note that in the Report of the Secretary General on the same subject, of the three funds outlined as supporting South South Cooperation, the IBSA Fund figures prominently. It is an initiative which we along with our partners from Brazil and South Africa to further strengthen the narrative of South South cooperation in the developing world. We are most grateful and express our thanks to the excellent team in the UN Office for South South Cooperation, who are our partners in managing the IBSA Fund.

Before I begin my remarks, I would align myself with the statement delivered by the distinguished representative of Fiji, on behalf of the G77.

Mr. President, it does not reflect well on us collectively to have not been able to initiate substantive forward movement on some of the key recommendations of the JIU report since it came out in March 2011. More than two years have passed, and we are still discussing the text of the JIU report. Perhaps its time, that we now actually begin on a forward path and initiate actions based on the key recommendations outlined in the JIU report.

Second, since the last session of the High Level Committee in May last year, for all practical purposes the only thing that has changed in this 'high focus' area of South South Cooperation, has been only in the name of the sole entity mandated within the UNDS to manage South South Cooperation. But as we all know, that by merely calling a pumpkin as apple wont make it any sweeter, we need to now look at giving more resources to this entity, which could be both financial and human, to make this now renamed UN office for South South Cooperation, act in a manner that does justice to the principles of South South Cooperation.

It is in this context, that I would like to draw specific reference to recommendation 9 of the JIU report, which calls upon governing bodies of UN organisations to apportion NOT less than 0.5 per cent - of core budget resources for the promotion of South South Cooperation, in consultation with programme countries.

Incidentally, UNDP's own Evaluation of its contribution to SSC has also come up with a similar recommendation in Para 95 of DP/2013/31, which calls upon UNDP to consider increasing funding and resource allocation to support SSC.

So I guess we have enough of what is called 'evidence base' from the UN system to move beyond the lip service, which we witnessed in HDR reports 'as rise of the Global South' to actually put their monies where it matters the most, in helping the UNDS assist SSC more tangibly and in a meaningful manner.

Mr. President, I would also like to flag that as countries from the South, we do not need to loose our way by getting lost in this 'definitional debate' on South South OR in the operational guidelines for South South.

We know for sure where we are coming from, and will continue to pursue the cause of South South cooperation irrespective of the support from the multilateral system. We know that for us, our definitive framework lies in the Nairobi Outcome Document and the Buenos Aires Declaration. No non UN process can or will replace this reality. It is therefore important to focus on the future than to waste our collective energies over infructuous debates on seeking to reinvent the wheel by defining SSC once again.

Before I conclude, Mr. President, let me also bring to your attention, that along with UN DESA & RIS, our Ministry of External Affairs organised a two day conference on 15-16 April 2013, on South South Cooperation in New Delhi, in which several of our fellow developing countries from the South were represented, and together we reaffirmed our principles of SSC as a partnership in solidarity, based on national ownership and in line with national priorities of our partners. It also underscored the clear understanding that South-South cooperation can supplement North-South Cooperation but cannot substitute or dilute the obligation and quantum of North-South aid flows. The Conference also recommended the need to strengthen systematic collection and analysis of evidence, strengthening evaluation of South South programmes, strengthening multilateral and regional support and establishing platforms to discuss issues of common concern and interest. These would be further discussed and carried forward at a DG's level meeting on 7 June in Addis Ababa.

As partners in this discourse that we have practiced since our independence, India stands committed to championing the agenda for SSC.

I thank you Mr. President.

623. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to UN, during UNDP Segment discussing Evaluation Reports on UNDP contribution to South South Cooperation and UNDP's Evaluation of Strategic Plan 2008- 2013 at the Annual Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA/ UNOPS.

New York, June 7, 2013.

Mr. President, I would like to complement the UNDP Evaluation Office for excellent reports on evaluation of UNDP contribution to South South Cooperation and on its Previous Strategic Plan, as contained in (DP/2013/17 and DP/2013/31). These two evaluations are in particular, most welcome for they could not be more timely and pertinent, as they are coming right when we are working towards crafting the new Strategic Plan for UNDP. But before I begin, allow me to align myself with the statement delivered by Fiji, on behalf of the G-77.

Mr. President, our intervention today in the Evaluation Section, perhaps flows from what Hugh White had said and I quote: "When you make a mistake, don't look back at it long. Take the reason of the thing into your mind and then look forward. Mistakes are lessons of wisdom. The past cannot be changed. The future is yet in your hands, and your success lies in not repeating that same mistake again"

To us therefore, Evaluations, are an excellent means of 'course corrections' and a means to factor the lessons learnt, which need to be included in our plans for the future. The Evaluation Report on UNDP's contribution to South South Cooperation has made some interesting observations:

Course Correction One, Conclusion 4 states that 'there is no clear evidence of the long term sustainability of South South initiatives supported by UNDP, and the wider replication of their benefits is uneven.' It goes on to say "this is a clear area for improvement, where much attention needs to be paid to the follow up effects of SS knowledge exchange initiatives, either in direct implementation or in the policy arena'.

We hope that this would be addressed in the Section on SS cooperation in the new draft Strategic Plan.

Course Correction Two: Para 26- of the Report states "there is a gap between how SSC is promoted and advocated for at higher levels of organization, and its practical and functional integration into programming." It goes on to say in Para 29: "UNDP's operational guidance and mechanisms to support SSC at regional and country levels were NOT in place" We hope that this would be addressed. "

Course Correction Three: Recommendation 5 - UNDP should clarify its FINANCIAL commitment with regard to its support to SSC. It explicitly calls upon the EB of UNDP to consider increasing its financial commitment to SSC.

While the course corrections on SS enumerated in the Evaluation Report are many, I have chosen to focus on three most easily doable ones and hope that these would merit attention of the UNDP SP team.

I would now like to move to the Second but equally important Evaluation of the Strategic Plan of 2008-2013.

Recommendation 3 of the Report states "the new SP should emphasise the priority of support at the country level, and explicitly recognize that no matter how good the work is at the centre, it is at the country level where the difference is being made" Mr. President, to us this a very key recommendation that must find place in the new strategic plan under consideration, for it is in improving the lives of people at the country level, where the development system must continue to focus on.

Finding 6 of the Report states: "Programmes are seldom designed with sustainability in mind. The UNDP funding model also adds to the sustainability challenge." It goes on to state" the likelihood of the sustainability of the outcomes to which UNDP is contributing is poor"

Mr. President, we have also seen examples from recent field visits of the Executive Boards in Myanmar, where community level projects were abandoned midway because of lack of inbuilt sustainability in the projects, several needy lost jobs. We hope that as we go forward this critical aspect of 'sustainability', especially in community level projects would be factored.

Mr. President, we firmly believe that course correction is always a welcome exercise and any endeavour, which is based on facts and rationale, that have a sound evidence base, in this regard, is never too late ! We had also made a similar intervention requesting UNDP to take into the findings of its own Evaluation Report on Poverty Reduction at the last Board in February. It had also made some extremely pertinent recommendations on tackling what has been termed as the "greatest global challenge" of poverty eradication in the development debate.

We hope that all these would be taken onboard and would find reflection in the Strategic Plan for 2014 - 2017.

I thank you Mr. President.

624. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent representative of India to UN at UNDP Segment of the Annual Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNDP/ UNFPA/UNOPS.

New York, June 10, 2013.

Mr. President, thank you for giving me the floor. My felicitations to Administrator Helen Clark for her an extremely insightful statement and well crafted Annual Report on the prev'ous Strategic Plan. We would also like to place on record our appreciation to the outgoing ASG of the Asia Pacific Bureau, my dear friend and colleague, Mr. Ajay Chhibber, for having so ably spearheaded the excellent work that UNDP has being doing in India and the South Asian region.

Mr. President, before I begin, allow me to align myself with the statement delivered by the distinguished representative of Fiji, on behalf of the G-77. It is perhaps for the first time that the entire group of developing countries have transcended the regional groupings format in an Executive Board context, and come together to advise UNDP to stay focussed on its overriding objective: the greatest global challenge of poverty eradication. It is indeed a welcome development and merits due consideration.

Representing a country that has one of the longest relationships with UNDP and is the biggest contributor to its core budget among developing countries, we have an abiding interest in UNDP's success and its efforts in how it decides its future in the next Strategic Plan. I would therefore, Mr. President, submit the following for your consideration:

One, in the recently adopted QCPR Resolution, 193 member states affirmed their resolve to "assign the highest priority to poverty eradication" and that "it should continue to be the core focus area for the United Nations development system and that all its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective"

We therefore welcome the amended vision statement of the new Strategic Plan, which aims to achieve both poverty eradication and inclusive growth. We do hope that when it comes to implementing this vision, the primary focus of the UNDP would be on eliminating extreme poverty, which is an essential prerequisite for inclusive growth.

Two, we also welcome the delinking of the recently coined concept of "Sustainable Human Development" from the Vision Statement, which has been labeled as a one stop panacea for achieving both these stated goals. Mr. President, we believe that Para - 73 of the QCPR Resolution provided good guidance on the way forward to tackling the challenge of poverty eradication, and hope that it would be factored in the new Strategic Plan.

Three, it is also important that the 'outcomes' and 'areas of work' identified in the Strategic Plan are commensurate with the NEW goals that UNDP has set for itself. UNDP's Board Decision of 1996, 96/29, which is now being cited by UNDP as a frame of reference, made Sustainable Human Development - a goal to be achieved. In this proposed Strategic Plan, it has however, become a 'means' to achieve an entirely different set of goals! We would therefore seek greater definitional clarity from UNDP on this concept, and how this would lead to a change in terms of how its programmes are implemented on the ground in programming countries. We do hope that if SHD is indeed to be made the 'lens' of achieving ALL its goals, then it would certainly include what member states have unanimously agreed to in Para 73 of the QCPR.

Four, for our delegation, Evaluation Reports are an important instrument for course correction, and their findings, conclusions and recommendations must therefore find reflection in the future plans for UNDP. We made an intervention in the Evaluation Segment on Friday outlining our concerns and do believe, that from the perspective of the next Strategic Plan, the Evaluation Reports on UNDP's contribution to Poverty Reduction (DP/2013/31) and South South Cooperation (DP/2013/3) are extremely important frames of reference. It appears that the present draft has not taken note of its key recommendations.

Five, the draft SP (DP/2013/12) has placed the very critical theme of South South Cooperation, at the extreme end under the last subheading. We hope that it would be eventually given a placement commensurate to the importance UNDP places on the subject. More importantly, the outcomes and areas of work proposed in the new SP would make some mention of how it intends to mainstream SSC initiatives in its programming activities.

Six, while we note the efforts made by UNDP to align the new Strategic Plan with the QCPR, we believe that there is a lot that still needs to be done, especially with regards to approaches to tackle the stated goal of poverty eradication. We would therefore request UNDP to continue to further align the draft Strategic Plan with all the "actionables" that the UN Development System and its agencies have been called upon by member states to pursue in the QCPR.

To conclude, Mr. President, let me submit that this Board Session, given its agenda, is an important and timely opportunity not just for stock taking but also to constructively contribute to the future of UN's development agenda. Our suggestions today have been made in this spirit and I hope will find resonance, not just within the larger UNDP community but also feed into the post 2015 development agenda.

The father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi had once said and I quote: "The difference between what we do and what we are capable of doing would suffice to solve most of the world's problem" For us, UNDP's capabilities are immense and enormous. If tapped to the fullest, you will be the force multiplier arm of the UN development system, which can indeed decimate poverty from the face of this planet.

Please rest assured of our steadfast commitment to UNDP, in walking the extra mile together in this common pursuit.

I thank you Mr. President.

625. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji
Permanent Representative of India to the UN on Agenda
Item 11: "Implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS" at the UNGA.

New York, June 10, 2013.

Mr. President,

We take note of the Report of the Secretary General on Accelerating the AIDS response: achieving the targets of 2011 Political Declaration as contained in document A/67/822 of 3 April 2013. At the outset, we would like to express our support for the draft decision submitted by the Hon'ble President of the General Assembly, dated 29 May 2013.

Mr. President,

It is heartening to note that the international cooperative effort to respond to the challenge posed by the spread of AIDS has achieved significant success. As the Report of the Secretary General points out, this has been due in equal measure to extraordinary scientific breakthroughs, concerted global action, and bold progress by individual countries. The special role of antiretroviral treatment in achieving the objectives of prevention of AIDS cannot be understated.

Mr. President,

In India, in terms of prevalence, adult HIV rate is close to 0.3 per cent. However, in absolute terms, our HIV positive population is around 3 million. The primary objective of our national programme to combat HIV/AIDS is to halt and reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS epidemic by 2015.

The main features of our National AIDS Programme are to scale up efforts of targeted interventions for high risk groups, strategizing comprehensive information, education and communication packages for specific segments and scaling up of the service delivery component.

We recognize that the fight against HIV and AIDS have socio-economic and development dimensions, in addition to the public health aspect. Our endeavor is to fully mainstream HIV/AIDS prevention, care and treatment in all our schemes and activities. We have involved the corporate sector, NGOs and other stakeholders as partners towards this end.

The need for an integrated approach that includes effective prevention strategies and access to low cost affordable treatment for all cannot be over-emphasized for the effective containment of the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

Mr. President,

There is need for continuing cooperation and coordination at international level to fight this challenge. One of the major obstacles in the achievement of universal treatment is the high cost of anti-retroviral drugs.

The Indian pharmaceutical industry has been plugging this critical gap by reducing the costs of these life saving drugs by producing high quality affordable drugs for use in India and also in other developing countries.

The availability of second generation anti-retroviral drugs will not have any meaningful impact if low cost generic products are not available in the market. It is pertinent to note here that only 4 per cent of persons receiving treatment have access to these second generation medicines.

India is currently meeting around 80 per cent of global anti-retroviral drug demand. India is committed to use all flexibilities under the Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement of the World Trade Organization to ensure availability of affordable and quality medicine to all people living with HIV.

We strongly believe that the work which has been done by all of us in this field has significantly contributed towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals in this sector. In order to ensure that our effort is sustainable, we would need to focus on resource mobilization and the transfer of technologies and knowledge. The role to be played by industrially advanced countries and civil society in the context of the work being done by the United Nations and its partners is of immense importance in this context. We believe that the targets and commitments contained in the 2011 Political Declaration can only be fully met if resource mobilization is identified as a priority by us. The narrow considerations of commerce and profitability should not be allowed to affect issues of life and death, which is what our fight against the spread of AIDS is all about. India stands ready to play a role in this context.

As the Secretary General's Report states, "the concept of shared responsibility and global solidarity must be advanced" and the funding gap must be closed so that we ensure a more strategic focus in our activity to eliminate HIV and AIDS.

Thank you, Mr. President.

626. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji
Permanent Representative of India to the UN on Agenda
Item 11: "Implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS" at the UNGA.

New York, June 10, 2013.

Mr. President,

We take note of the Report of the Secretary General on Accelerating the AIDS response: achieving the targets of 2011 Political Declaration as contained in document A/67/822 of 3 April 2013. At the outset, we would like to express our support for the draft decision submitted by the Hon'ble President of the General Assembly, dated 29 May 2013.

Mr. President,

It is heartening to note that the international cooperative effort to respond to the challenge posed by the spread of AIDS has achieved significant success. As the Report of the Secretary General points out, this has been due in equal measure to extraordinary scientific breakthroughs, concerted global action, and bold progress by individual countries. The special role of antiretroviral treatment in achieving the objectives of prevention of AIDS cannot be understated.

Mr. President,

In India, in terms of prevalence, adult HIV rate is close to 0.3 per cent. However, in absolute terms, our HIV positive population is around 3 million. The primary objective of our national programme to combat HIV/AIDS is to halt and reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS epidemic by 2015.

The main features of our National AIDS Programme are to scale up efforts of targeted interventions for high risk groups, strategizing comprehensive information, education and communication packages for specific segments and scaling up of the service delivery component.

We recognize that the fight against HIV and AIDS have socio-economic and development dimensions, in addition to the public health aspect. Our endeavor is to fully mainstream HIV/AIDS prevention, care and treatment in all our schemes and activities. We have involved the corporate sector, NGOs and other stakeholders as partners towards this end.

The need for an integrated approach that includes effective prevention strategies and access to low cost affordable treatment for all cannot be over-emphasized for the effective containment of the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

Mr. President,

There is need for continuing cooperation and coordination at international level to fight this challenge. One of the major obstacles in the achievement of universal treatment is the high cost of anti-retroviral drugs.

The Indian pharmaceutical industry has been plugging this critical gap by reducing the costs of these life saving drugs by producing high quality affordable drugs for use in India and also in other developing countries.

The availability of second generation anti-retroviral drugs will not have any meaningful impact if low cost generic products are not available in the market. It is pertinent to note here that only 4 per cent of persons receiving treatment have access to these second generation medicines.

India is currently meeting around 80 per cent of global anti-retroviral drug demand. India is committed to use all flexibilities under the Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement of the World Trade Organization to ensure availability of affordable and quality medicine to all people living with HIV.

We strongly believe that the work which has been done by all of us in this field has significantly contributed towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals in this sector. In order to ensure that our effort is sustainable, we would need to focus on resource mobilization and the transfer of technologies and knowledge. The role to be played by industrially advanced countries and civil society in the context of the work being done by the United Nations and its partners is of immense importance in this context. We believe that the targets and commitments contained in the 2011 Political Declaration can only be fully met if resource mobilization is identified as a priority by us. The narrow considerations of commerce and profitability should not be allowed to affect issues of life and death, which is what our fight against the spread of AIDS is all about. India stands ready to play a role in this context.

As the Secretary General's Report states, "the concept of shared responsibility and global solidarity must be advanced" and the funding gap must be closed so that we ensure a more strategic focus in our activity to eliminate HIV and AIDS.

Thank you, Mr. President.

627. Statement by India on behalf of the Asia-Pacific Troika of India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka at the Fourth Meeting of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals [Discussion on: Health and population dynamics, Employment and decent work for all, social protection, youth and education].

New York, June 17, 2013.

Mr. Co-Chair, distinguished delegates,

I have the honor to speak on behalf of our troika consisting of India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka.

We endorse the statement made by Fiji on behalf of the G-77 & China. I am thankful for the spirited statement made just now by the young delegate of Netherland. She made some very important points particularly with reference to youth issues. Representing a young country, I cannot but wholeheartedly agree with the importance of adequately focusing on youth. I also agree with her remarks on promoting inter-generational equity, but would like to add that we must equally focus on intra-generational equity. I also thank the Government of Sri Lanka for taking the initiative in hosting the World Youth Conference in Colombo next year.

Mr. Co-Chair,

The issues being addressed in today's meeting are of core interest to developing countries. Several of these are also part of what constitutes the unfinished agenda of the MDGs. As such, it is important to take them on board the post-2015 development agenda, so that the remarkable progress made under the MDGs can be continued apace. There should not be any slackening of efforts to address these core human development challenges, both before and after 2015.

As we are addressing various important issues in this 4th meeting of this Working Group, we propose to share some of our key priorities in this opening statement and look forward to participating in an interactive debate which is to follow in the next 2 days.

First and foremost, ensuring full and productive employment for all should be a fundamental focus of the SDGs. And for this to happen, we have to undertake growth promoting policies. With the demographic dividend of the developing countries, creation of decent employment for all is the only way to promote rapid economic growth and social inclusion. This challenge was duly recognized in Rio+20 which noted the 'importance of job creation by investing in and developing sound, effective and efficient economic and social infrastructure and productive capacities for sustainable development and sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth'. Investments in skill-based training, vocational education and promotion of business opportunities are key ingredients for employment generation. Career guidance during the final stages of school education is instrumental in creating a responsive workforce. Providing more opportunities and financing for self-employment enable meeting the growing demand for formal employment.

Second, despite the impressive progress made in the past decades, education outcomes continue to be a key priority for developing countries. Universal access to education is the key, both at the primary and secondary levels. Along with access, quality of education and learning outcomes also need attention. Skill development through technical and vocational training is necessary for diversifying economies and creating productive employment for all. Use of ICT for education can be a force-multiplier for enhancing the effectiveness of interventions in education. On the other hand, we must have appropriate indicators to assess the impact of school education, higher education and vocational training, for successful development of an SDG around this theme. An SDG approach should benchmark these qualitative factors and in addition target closing the gap between formal and informal education systems enabled through nationally determined social safety nets.

Third, the youth constitute the most valuable human resource in any country, the building blocks of development. This is particularly true of the developing countries where are experiencing a 'youth bulge'. We owe it to the youth to create meaningful opportunities for education, skills development and employment so that they have the wherewithal to fashion their own destiny. Accordingly, investment on children aiming at productive and disciplined youth is a more proactive approach. Our focus on youth in the post-2015 development agenda must be anchored in such policy interventions. Next year's World Conference on Youth in Sri Lanka will provide opportunities for all stakeholders to actively engage in mainstreaming youth in global development agenda. We also welcome the UN Secretary-General's appointment of a Special Envoy on Youth as well as the establishment of an Inter Agency Network of all key UN agencies working on youth matters.

Fourth, health indicators account for 3 of the 8 MDGs. The fact that many of them will not be achieved till 2015 should not deter us from making this a key pillar of the new development framework. At Rio+20, we recognized the importance of universal health coverage. This remains the key challenge for developing countries. We must pay particular attention to women's health as a priority. Prevention of diseases such as HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis, influenza, polio and other communicable diseases remain serious global concerns and redoubling of efforts is required to tackle these threats. At the same time, we are witnessing a gradual increase in burden of non-communicable diseases. As such, we should also focus on non-communicable diseases such as diabetes, heart diseases and also the neglected tropical diseases. We commend the efforts of UNICEF and WHO, especially awareness campaigns for preventive healthcare. One thing we must not forget is the need to accommodate indigenous healthcare practices, which are readily available in many developing countries.

Fifth, on population dynamics, as confirmed by Rio+20, we need to have a positive agenda that focuses on forward-looking planning so that we can seize the opportunities and address the challenges associated with demographic change, including migration. The role of education and ensuring full and productive employment for all cannot also be overemphasized in this context. Equally relevant is the need for flexible migration policies to address population dynamics and movement of people.

And, finally Mr. Co-Chair, while the challenges we are discussing today relate to fundamental human development for which national policy action is no doubt the key, we must not forget the crucial importance of international factors and cooperation in assisting developing countries to address these issues. Enhanced trade opportunities, market access, enhanced investments, access to medicines including through flexibilities in the TRIPS, and flexible migration policies are extremely important and relevant in addressing these challenges. Such linkages must be meaningfully woven into the SDGs framework. We must also remember that entrenched trade barriers, however explained will be an impediment to the realization of MDGs and future SDGs

I thank you Mr. Co-Chair.

628. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to UN, at the Annual Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNICEF.

New York on June 18, 2013.

Mr. President, my felicitations to the Executive Director Mr. Anthony Lake for an extremely informative statement and I would also complement UNICEF for an insightful report on the progress and achievements against the Medium Term Strategic Plan (MTSP). The Executive Board Meeting is very timely and important as it provides an opportunity to reaffirm our collective commitment to fulfill the hopes and aspirations of children all over the world.

The UNICEF Strategic Plan draft has set out an extremely laudable goal: "Advancing the rights of every child, especially the most disadvantaged". It is indeed a very noble goal to set and we are encouraged by Mr. Anthony Lake's emphasis on reaching every last child, no matter where she or he lives. It is perhaps this kind of passion and zeal that is the real hallmark of UNICEF in pursuing the cause for ensuring a much better world for our children.

Mr. President, we are also confident that as UNICEF embarks upon the finalization of its Strategic Plan, it would take into account the recommendations made by the QCPR for the UN Development System. Members states had invested considerable time and energy in ensuring that the QCPR provided the framework for the post 2015 goals as a means to develop a legacy for the UNDS, which will benefit future generations and in particular our children.

Investments in children's health and education are key imperatives for all developing countries. It is in this context that we hope that as the next UNICEF Strategic Plan takes shape, there would be no dilution of resources committed to these two key stand alone goals. A strong focus on promoting greater equity in the development process by investing in the health, education and protection of the most disadvantaged and excluded children is of utmost importance. These investments are critical in breaking the intergenerational transmission of poverty and help in creating more stable societies and promote sustained economic growth.

Another area that we would like you to focus further upon is on leveraging South South cooperation for the larger benefit of children in the developing world. Even though South South Cooperation has often been singled out as a new buzzword in the evolving narrative of the developmental discourse, much more remains to be done to give it the 'muscle' it needs from the UN system. The so called 'rise of the global south' is not matched by the development indicators mapped against the South in the Human Development Report.

Countries of the South, including India, have several ongoing initiatives including our joint initiative with Brazil and South Africa, under the IBSA Trust Fund, and we have already implemented some extremely critical projects with special focus for children using this Fund. We very recently inaugurated a Hospital for Children with special needs in Cambodia and hope that UNICEF would continue to partner with countries of the South in complementing them achieve their goals, especially in those projects which have an explicit 'children friendly' focus.

Earlier this year in February in Chennai, the Government of India along with UNICEF, hosted the three day Call for Action on Child Survival and Development which reaffirmed the promise towards further reducing Under Five Mortality Rate in India. We also arrived at a set of agreed actions that will sustain the momentum and fast track our journey towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals related to maternal and child mortality. We are also looking forward to the hosting the 2nd High Level Meeting on South South Cooperation for Child rights in Asia and the Pacific in New Delhi later in October this year.

It is pertinent to point out Mr. President, that the rate of decline of Under5 mortality rate was faster in India than the global average and the narrowing of the rural - urban gap in child mortality is reflective of Government of India's continued commitment to serve children by establishing 'a culture of care' -from addressing the health of mothers to infants to children to adolescents.

We have therefore in UNICEF, a trusted and reliable partner, who we are sure, would continue to place children at the heart of achieving the 'future we want', as we agreed to in Rio. As a country that has one of the longest relationships with UNICEF and with home to the largest number of children in the world, we have an abiding interest in UNICEF's success and its efforts in ending preventing all preventable child deaths.

As home to one fifth of the children in the world, we are steadfastly committed to ensuring protective and nurturing environments for children to reach their full potential. We would like to once again express our sincere appreciation for UNICEF's efforts in fulfilling our common vision of an early realisation of children friendly environments universally. I thank you, Mr. President.

629. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to the UN at the annual session of Executive Board of UN Women.

New York, June 25, 2013.

Mr. President, my felicitations to the Acting Head of UN Women Madam Lakshmi Puri for an extremely informative statement and I would also complement UN Women for an insightful report on the progress made on the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women Strategic Plan 2011 - 2013, which has been placed for consideration before the Board.

Mr. President, before I delve into the substance of my remarks, let me place on record my delegation's sincerest appreciation for the dynamic leadership provided by the former ED of UN Women, Madam Michel Bachelet in the nearly three years, she spent guiding this entity from nascence to its fruition, as we see today. Her innings will be long remembered for giving not just direction and support but for having achieved significant milestones in a very short tenure.

When we embarked upon the Strategic Plan of UN Women in June 2010, we had called for it, to be 'ambitious, achievable and results oriented'. Today, in the third operational year of UN Women, my delegation is happy to note that UN Women has been able to significantly influence policy narratives across the globe in areas ranging from political participation and leadership, economic empowerment, ending violence against women and gender equality.

However, we still have a long way to go in our common pursuit for ensuring women's economic empowerment. Mr. President, even today women bear a disproportionate burden of the world's poverty and constitute nearly 70% of the world's poor and despite estimates that they perform approximately 66% of the world's work and produce approximately 50% of the food, they only earn 10% of the income and own only 1% of the property. Promoting the empowerment of women must therefore be a key economic development imperative.

Mr. President, representing a country which is home to more than 500 million women, let me submit, that women's economic and political empowerment has been the cornerstone of our policy making, all along. More so, when 69% of our total women population (nearly 405 million women) reside in the rural areas alone. It is in this context, that contribution of rural women to our GDP growth and their central role in poverty reduction has been a key guiding factor in the framing of our national policies.

Economic empowerment of Indian women at the grass roots level, especially through 4.8 million women led Self-Help Groups (SHG's) has been a hall mark of India's success story. Covering over 97 million beneficiaries, these have provided microfinance, employment and livelihood, and have made a defining change in the lives of millions of Indian women at the village level.

I am also pleased to inform you that India has the highest numbers globally, of political empowerment of women at the local level. We have nearly 1.5 million elected women representatives at the local grassroots level, an all time record anywhere, which epitomises the scale at which the landscape of political empowerment of women in India is rapidly changing.

Mr. President, allow me to flag a couple of key issues on the main agenda of the Annual session of the Executive Board and on the next Strategic Plan for UN Women 2014 - 2017.

First, we welcome the consultative and interactive nature of the process that has been followed so far by taking into account views of member states in crafting the Strategic Plan. It has an extremely laudable and ambitious vision statement, which my delegation fully endorses: "Making this Century for Women and Gender Equality" and I wish you all success in making it a reality. We hope that as you move further forward on the Strategic Plan, the recommendations of the QCPR on Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment would be factored in the Strategic Plan and it would be QCPR consistent, and,

Second, work on gender equality and empowerment of women continues to remain chronically underfunded. If we have to ensure that UN Women stands for action, the donor community must move beyond the political rhetoric of just stated commitments, and transform them into the much needed monetary support for the organization. A fact pointed out in Para-24 of ED's report states that OECD-DAC aid commitments for gender equality fell by 19 percent from US$25.3 billion in 2009-2010 to $20.5 billion per year in 2010-2011. We hope that this would be addressed sooner than later, and tomorrow's pledging event would witness a correction in this trend.

We also appreciate the financials outlined in the draft of the integrated budget 2014 - 2015, and fully endorse the way forward as proposed by the President earlier today.

Let me conclude Mr. President, by quoting Margaret Thatcher, when she said: " In politics if you want anything SAID ask a man. If you want anything DONE, ask a woman".

We believe that in UN Women, you have the where withal to have 'anything done' for the cause of women globally.

We reaffirm India's steadfast commitment to the all round social, economic and political empowerment of our women, whatever effort and resources, the task might take. We assure you that India will always be willing to walk the extra mile, as UN Women embarks upon this journey.

Let me also re-iterate that as part of our stated commitment of five million US dollars to UN Women's core predictable funding, India has already contributed three million US dollars to UN Women, so far and we will continue to provide full political and financial support to UN Women and call on others to do likewise.

Thank You

630. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India to the United Nations at the Ninth Round of Intergovernmental Negotiations on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the United Nations Security Council and other matters related to the Council in New York.

New York, June 27, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for giving me the floor. At the outset, I would like to align myself with the G4 statement, delivered by Ambassador Luiz Alberto Machado, the Permanent Representative of Brazil, as well as with the statement made by Ambassador Camillo Gonsalves, the Permanent Representative of St. Vincent and the Grenadines, on behalf of the L69 Group.

The position of India on the issue of reform of institutions of global governance, including the UN Security Council, in order to ensure that they reflect contemporary reality has been a matter of foremost importance to my country. It was in this spirit that India joined the unanimous consensus of the landmark Outcome Document adopted by our Heads of State and Government at the 60th anniversary of the United Nations in 2005. We have participated constructively in the nine rounds of intergovernmental negotiations held so far on the issue of "an early reform of the Security Council", as instructed by our leaders in paragraph 153 of that Document.

It is therefore a matter of deep concern to us that despite the urgency expressed more than eight years ago, we have not been able to make concrete progress towards the objective set out for us in the Outcome Document. In our view, we need to address two major issues which are contributing to the current delay on this issue.

The first is a procedural issue. Despite the enthusiastic participation of member states of the United Nations during the nine rounds of inter-governmental negotiations on Security Council reform held so far, the momentum of our discussion has been stymied by the inexplicable slowdown of the process of our meetings. Indeed, this must be one of the rare Sessions of the General Assembly in which we have been allowed to participate in only one meeting during the previous nine months on such an important issue. We therefore call on you, Mr President, to find a way to get these negotiations back on track, by empowering Ambassador Tanin, the distinguished Chairman of the Inter-Governmental Negotiations, in whom we have the fullest confidence, to convene more meetings before the end of the 67th Session of the General Assembly.

The second issue is substantive. Here again, we are surprised that despite the fact that all of us in this forum have been given the opportunity to express our positions on such an important issue, we are still awaiting a concise working document containing these views. Member states have supported expansion in both categories of membership of the Security Council. We therefore call on you, Mr President, to authorize the Chairman of the Inter-Governmental Negotiations to circulate such a concise working document without delay so that we can engage in text-based negotiations on such an expansion of the Security Council.

Having made these two points, Mr President, allow me to convey three observations which will help you to catalyze our work. Firstly, it should be recalled that we were requested by our leaders to conduct a review of the reforms of the Security Council mandated by them by the end of 2005 itself. Of course, we have missed this deadline by a considerable length of time. However, now that our organization is beginning to prepare to celebrate the 70th anniversary of the United Nations two years from now, the 2015 Summit should be taken as an outer deadline for the results of our work in this group to be reported to our leaders. Indeed, this would be only logical in terms of their expectations set out in the 2005 Outcome Document!

The second observation, Mr. President, is that the world around us is changing very rapidly. In the most important area of the maintenance of international peace and security, which is the "primary responsibility" of the Security Council, the international community is facing challenges which could not have been foreseen when the United Nations was founded in 1945. These changes, caused by diverse factors, require us to address the issue of reform of the Security Council in a responsible, constructive manner. While acting under the provisions of the UN Charter in the 21st century, the reformed Security Council has to become, in the words of our Heads of State and Government, "more broadly representative, efficient and transparent" in order to "enhance its effectiveness and the legitimacy and implementation of its decisions".

Thirdly, Mr. President, we recognize that as members of the United Nations, which is the bedrock of the international legal system, we are constantly interacting on the basis of a delicate balance of rights and obligations. In a narrow sense, what we are advocating today is the give and take of text-based negotiations with regard to achieving such a balance in the reformed Security Council. In a broader sense, we have to be conscious of the fact that such a reformed Security Council is the arch-stone of a strengthened United Nations system, which is essential to implement the ambitious agenda of our organization in all areas of human endeavor, the so-called "global governance" agenda. In keeping with this sense of balance, we cannot applaud the progress made by us since 2005 in areas such as human rights, peace building, the democracy fund and women's empowerment, while making no progress at all on the mandated "early" reform of the Security Council. Potentially, we fear that this lack of balance in implementing the vision of the 2005 Summit will jeopardize our aspirations for the 2015 Summit, and dilute the effectiveness of the United Nations itself.

It is our hope that, by recognizing the political implications of this issue, you will use our meeting today to propel us into a result-oriented process. This would be a befitting "legacy" to the United Nations!

Mr President, as has been very succinctly said by a well-known member of the National Speakers Association of the United States: "The bad news is time flies. The good news is you're the pilot."

631. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative of India to the UN, New York at the High Level Segment of the ECOSOC.

Geneva, July 1-4, 2013.

Mr. President,

It gives me great pleasure to address this High Level Segment of the ECOSOC on a topic that goes at the heart of our efforts to build a better future for all. Science, technology, innovation and culture are critical enablers of development whose full potential must be harnessed if we are to realize our collective ambition under the Millennium Development Goals.

In this context, we thank the Secretary General for his report on this issue presented to the Council. The Secretary General has rightly pointed out that overcoming twenty-first century challenges such as poverty, inequality and environmental degradation will require drawing on a range of innovations from science, technology and culture.

Mr. President,

Science, technology and innovation hold the veritable key to the sustainability conundrum facing the world today. They are also key to the eradication of poverty and achievement of other human development goals under the MDGs. We must seek rapid advances in science & technology but more importantly, we must also seek to share the fruits of such advances widely if we are to make progress towards eradicating poverty and ensuring the sustainability of our future development. It is imperative that the IPR regime balance rewards for innovation with the common good of humankind and be development oriented.

Access to technology is central to the efforts of the developing countries to accelerate progress towards achieving the MDGs, address climate change and achieve sustainable development. It is also central to address the critical challenge of energy poverty which many developing countries face today. The link between energy poverty, income poverty, malnutrition and low health indicators is well documented and this empirical overlap is evident in the global achievement map on MDGs.

Mr. President,

As we seek to accelerate our efforts towards achieving the MDGs before 2015 and set our sights on a transformative global development framework for the post-2015 period, we need a transformative shift in the way we have been looking at technology issues so far.

The international system must enhance global collaboration on science and technology. We have seen how collaboration in technology has produced revolutionary impact within a short span of time. Today, we boast of 5 billion mobile phone users worldwide and over 2 billion internet users and this number is growing exponentially. This success of ICT and mobile technologies has been possible because of collaboration. Mobile technology was developed and applied in the North but soon thereafter spread all over the South due to advances in mass production techniques and uniquely innovative business practices in many developing countries spurring growth and bringing about transformative change in our societies.

Mr. President,

As we deliberate on the post-2015 development agenda, we must also carefully reflect on the global mechanisms to facilitate rapid development, transfer and diffusion of technologies. The Secretary General in his report on options for a facilitation mechanism that promotes the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies has proposed the creation of a global Technology Facilitation Mechanism under the aegis of the UN. We fully endorse this idea which would catalyze our efforts, enhance synergies and bring about much needed coherence in several ongoing international initiatives on technology issues.

Mr. President,

We concur with the Secretary General's report that a culture-sensitive approach is needed for the success of development initiatives. Coming from India which has been a cradle of human civilization and a melting pot of multiple cultures living in harmony with each other, a culture-sensitive approach is one that embraces differences, celebrates diversity and promotes mutual respect. Only such an inclusive approach to culture can enable us to pursue collective objectives such as MDGs in a spirit of solidarity.

A culture centric approach is also necessary for building a sustainable future for all. If we are to collectively achieve the overarching objective of sustainable development, the world will also have to embrace a culture of frugality. This idea has been a part and parcel of Indian ethos and culture. Unfortunately, the current consumption patterns in the industrialized world are not only unsustainable but also inequitable and we must find new pathways for transition to a culture of frugal living, less wastage and equitable sharing of resources.

In conclusion Mr. President, as we redouble our efforts for eradication of poverty and achievement of MDGs by 2015, we must commit ourselves not only to fully utilizing the potential of science, technology, innovation and culture but also to crafting facilitative processes to foster better collaboration for finding collective solutions to the problems we face. India with its human resource and scientific capacity is more than willing to be a partner in this collaboration.

Thank you

632. Statement by Mr. Awanish Kumar Awasthi, Joint Secretary, Department of Disability Affairs, Ministry of Social Justice & Empowerment, Government of India, During the Sixth Session of the Conference of the State Parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

New York, July 17, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for chairing these discussions at the Sixth Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. I am confident that these discussions will contribute to a better understanding of the challenges before us.

The theme of "Ensuring adequate standard of living: empowerment and participation of persons with disabilities within the framework of the CRPD" is particularly relevant.

An estimated 15% of the world's population is disabled and an estimated 80% of those 1 billion people live in the developing world. This group can make a significant contribution to development and the progress of society. Their potential has, however, seldom been met due to existing barriers. It is our obligation to remove those barriers and empower them.

A High Level Meeting of the UN General Assembly on Disability and Development is scheduled for 23 September 2013. India is looking forward to this high level meeting which provides an important opportunity to reaffirm our global commitment and to shape the agenda on disability issues in the coming years.

Mr. President,

India became a signatory to the United Nations Convention on Rights of Persons with Disabilities in March 2007 and the Convention was subsequently ratified in October 2007.

The Government of India had recognized very early the need for specific policy intervention to support persons with disabilities. In fact, the Indian Constitution stipulates the State to ensure equality, freedom, justice and dignity of all individuals, which implies an inclusive society for all, including the Persons with Disabilities who constitute 2.13% of the total population of our country, which comes to 21.9 million persons. Article 41 of the Constitution, which is particularly relevant with regard to persons with disabilities, mandates the State to , within the limits of its economic capacity and development, make effective provision for securing the right to work, to education and to public assistance in cases of unemployment, old age, sickness and disablement.

Mr. President,

Our legislative framework is anchored in the Persons with Disabilities (Equal Opportunities, Protection of Rights & Full Participation) Act passed in the year 1995. The Act recognized that persons with disabilities are a valuable human resource and seeks to create an enabling environment that provides them with equal opportunities, protection of their rights and full participation in society, including in areas of education and employment. The Department of Disability Affairs under the nodal Ministry of Social Justice & Empowerment works with several Ministries to coordinate and implement programmes and schemes in the areas of health, education and employment.

Mr. President,

Another Law - the National Trust for Welfare of Persons with Autism, Cerebral Palsy, Mental Retardation and Multiple Disability Act was passed in 1999. This Act laid out provisions for legal guardianship of the four categories of the persons. In addition, the Rehabilitation Council of India Act, 1992 has been enacted to deal with the development of manpower for providing rehabilitation services to the persons with disabilities.

Mr. President,

The Government of India has already enacted several general laws incorporating, inter-alia, a disability perspective. Some of these are:

- * The National Disaster Management Act (NDMA), 2005,
- * The Right of Children to Free and Compulsory Education Act (RCFCE), 2009, and
- * Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act, 2010.

The National Building Code India 2005 incorporates detailed provisions for construction of buildings and makes accessible design an inherent part of all plans.

Mr. President,

In order to execute the policy and to ensure persons with disabilities of equal opportunities, protection of rights and assured participation of the disabled in the social processes, India has in place a mechanism for coordinated action among all stakeholders through Central Coordination Committee of the Department of Disability Affairs, Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment. Combined efforts have succeeded in developing an extensive infrastructure in the form of various National, Regional and District level Institutes and Rehabilitation Centres to develop manpower by providing courses/ trainings in different areas to cater to the needs of persons with Disabilities. The Government has established seven National Institutes (NIs) dealing with different types of disabilities and eight Composite Regional Centers (CRCs) to promote research and conduct training for delivery of services to persons with disability.

Mr. President,

The Government of India, in 2009, issued guidelines to make all government websites in accessible format as per Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG) of W3C. The websites of several Ministries including that of Ministry of Social Justice & Empowerment, are now in accessible format.

With a view to further improve implementation of government policies and fulfillment of its responsibilities towards the persons with disabilities, the Government created a separate Department of Disability in May, 2012. The Government of India has 9 existing schemes and 19 new schemes which are being implemented in the XII Five Year Plan of the country for empowerment of persons with disabilities and the financial allocation for the schemes has been doubled as compared to the XI Five Year Plan period.

Mr. President,

Empowerment of persons with disabilities is an inter-disciplinary process, covering various aspects namely, prevention, early detection, intervention, education, vocational training, rehabilitation and social integration, etc. Apart from resources, it requires dedicated efforts of persons and institutions involved in the process of empowerment. In order to recognize their effort and encourage others to strive to achieve excellence in this field, national awards are being presented to encourage outstanding achievement in the disability sector.

Mr. President,

Besides this, India is a signatory to the Declaration on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asia Pacific Region and to the Biwako Millennium Framework for action towards an inclusive, barrier-free and rights-based society.

Further, in order to harmonize the Persons with Disabilities (Equal Opportunities, Protection of Rights and Full Participation) Act, 1995 with the provisions of UNCRPD, the Act has been reviewed and a new Bill namely the Draft Rights of Persons with Disability Bill is being finalized for enactment. The new Act would replace the old Act and would serve the Person with Disabilities in larger perspective. The Bill envisages a right based approach to cater to the emerging challenges for empowerment of Persons with Disabilities and also to meet the obligations under UNCRPD.

Mr. President,

Govt. of India remains committed to building an enabling environment so that all persons with disabilities are able to enjoy their rights and realize their full potential. I would like to add that India's initial Country report with reference to the obligations under UNCRPD is being finalized and will be submitted to the UN Committee shortly.

Thank you

633. STATEMENT BY MR. DEVESH UTTAM, FIRST SECRETARY, AT THE FOURTH WORKING SESSION OF THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL OPEN-ENDED WORKING GROUP ON AGE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 12, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for chairing the fourth session of the open-ended Working Group on Ageing. We are confident that under your guidance, we will make progress in our deliberations.

Mr. Chairman,

We recognize that population ageing is one of the most significant demographic changes in the 21st century. Increased longevity is a direct consequence of unprecedented advances in technology and medicine as well as steadily improving socio-economic conditions particularly in terms of food availability, better nutrition, improved access to better health-care and safer working conditions.

At the same time, shift in economic structures has led to significant work-related migration and changes in family structure towards more nuclear families. In this backdrop, an ageing population poses fresh challenges to policy makers. India is home to over 100 million old persons and this population segment is expected to increase faster than the average population rate. It is estimated that at its current rate, India's elderly population will double in 20 years.

Mr. Chairman,

It is evident that old persons are vulnerable in several respects on account of their age, even when they may be financially independent. Physical infirmity leads to dependence in various forms on others - be it family members or care givers. The challenge for policy makers is to ensure that older persons live a life of dignity and fulfillment through provision of appropriate policy and legal framework.

Equally, however, there is a need to acknowledge the social dimension of the issue and the need for immediate and extended families and the community to step in. It is an issue of inter-generational social compact.

Just as parents provide for their children, the children need to take care of and support their parents when they grow old. It is simply inconceivable that the government can alone address this issue if the families and communities do not play their part.

Mr. Chairman,

In India, the government has adopted a multi-stakeholder approach in addressing issues related to the ageing population. The government, through its various schemes, has collaborated with other partners such as NGOs, local bodies and the community in ensuring that the elderly not only live longer but also lead a secure, dignified and productive life. The National Policy on Older Persons addresses the requirements of financial security, health care and nutrition, shelter and appropriate financial incentives and discounts to senior citizens. This policy is presently being reviewed in consultation with all stakeholders to plug gaps and improve policy implementation.

The Maintenance and Welfare of Parents and Senior Citizens Act 2007 provides for the protection of life and property of senior citizens, better medical facilities and setting up of old age homes in every district. Pension schemes, free legal aid services and insurance coverage schemes are also available to assist senior citizens.

The National Programme for Health Care of Elderly provides for improved health services by setting up geriatric units around the country as well as special clinics for the elderly in government run hospitals.

Grant-in-aid schemes are in place to provide financial assistance to establish and maintain old age homes, recreation centers, mobile medicare units, help lines, physiotherapy centers and mental healthcare facilities.

Several facilities are also available to the elderly including subsidized travel on public transportation, prioritization of their legal cases, higher rates of interest on savings, reduced banking charges, tax rebates, etc.

Mr. Chairman,

India is a signatory to the Madrid International Plan on Ageing. We will actively participate in the discussions of the working group and at the UN on this important issue.

In conclusion, let me reaffirm India's full commitment to safeguard the dignity and well-being of the elderly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

634. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at UNDP Segment of the Second Regular Session 2013 of the Executive Board of UNDP/ UNFPA/UNOPS.

New York, September 9, 2013.

Mr. President, thank you for giving me the floor. My felicitations to Administrator Helen Clark for her an extremely insightful statement and to the UNDP Strategic Plan Team for having followed an extremely consultative and participatory process in the production of this Strategic Plan, which will guide your work for the next four years.

We would also like to take this opportunity to welcome the new ASG of the Asia Pacific Bureau, Mr. Xu Haoliang, and hope he would ably spearhead the excellent work that UNDP has been doing in India and the South Asian region.

Mr. President, before I begin, allow me to align myself with the statement delivered by the distinguished representative of Fiji, on behalf of the G-77.

The meeting of this Executive Board comes at a very critical point, In eighteen months, the post-2015 development agenda, one of the United Nations' most ambitious projects, would be launched. And as the PGA elect, Ambassador John Ashe said the other day : "If we are to rise to the task, the General Assembly must be equally as bold, ambitious and collaborative."

Representing a country that has one of the longest relationships with UNDP and is the biggest contributor to its core budget among developing countries, we have an abiding interest in UNDP's success and its efforts in how it implements its next Strategic Plan. I would therefore, Mr. President, submit the following for your consideration :

One, we welcome the vision statement of the Strategic Plan, which sets the goal reasonably well placed : achieving poverty eradication and inclusive growth. To our delegation these two have to be the fundamental bedrock of the post 2015 development agenda. This vision also flows well from the mandate given by QCPR Resolution, to "assign THE highest priority to poverty eradication" and that "it should continue to be the core focus area for the United Nations development system and that ALL its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective"

Two, we do believe that there is a certain degree of disconnect between the areas of work envisaged in the Strategic Plan and how they contribute to achieving its stated vision. We therefore would request UNDP to further focus its areas of work, towards explicitly achieving this Vision more meaningfully and follow the guidance provided the QCPR Resolution on tackling the challenge of poverty eradication

Three, while we welcome the significant amount of rewording and repositioning done to the narrative of South South cooperation in the text of the Strategic Plan, we would continue to urge UNDP to move beyond the lip service that has been traditionally meted out to such an important subject. Words must translate into action, and developing countries which are pursuing projects of South South cooperation, wherever they so need help from the multilateral system, if UNDP's resources so permit, you should be willing to step in and assist them. We also hope that in future when UNDP is implementing projects of South South cooperation, sustainability would be factored in, as was pointed out in your Evaluation Report.

Four, we continue to request UNDP to build greater definitional clarity in the recently coined concept of "Sustainable Human Development" and its usage in the Strategic Plan as being the one stop panacea for achieving its the goals. If SHD is indeed to be made the 'lens' of achieving 'ALL' its goals, by UNDP, then we do hope it would mean what 193 member states agreed to in QCPR on capacity building, employment generation, vocational training, rural development and the mobilisation of all possible resources at achieving poverty eradication.

Five, we also hope that whenever next UNDP does the midterm review of this Strategic Plan, it would also report on the implementation of the course corrections pointed out in the Evaluation Reports on Poverty Reduction and South South cooperation. These Reports serves as important frames of reference and must not be lost sight of in our future course of action.

To conclude, Mr. President, let me submit that this Board Session, given its agenda, is an important and timely opportunity not just for stock taking but also to constructively contribute to the future of UN's development agenda. Our suggestions today have been made in this spirit and I hope will find resonance, not just within the larger UNDP community but also feed into the post 2015 development agenda. The next four years over which the Strategic Plan of UNDP will be implemented will be an litmus test, given the trying times amidst evolving economic crises that confronts most developing countries today.

As the largest development arm of the UN system, if UNDP indeed taps its abilities to the fullest, in pursuit of achieving the vision of this Strategic Plan, we are confident that you would indeed reduce poverty significantly if not fully, from the face of this planet.

It has been said and I quote: "It would be nice if the poor were to get even half of the money that is spent on studying them", and perhaps now is the time to move from words to action and tangibly tackling this challenge.

Please rest assured of our steadfast commitment to UNDP, in walking the extra mile together in this common pursuit.

I thank you Mr. President.

635. Statement by Ambassador Manjeev Singh Puri, Deputy Permanent Representative, at the informal Interactive Dialogue on the Report of the Secretary-General on the Responsibility to Protect: State Responsibility and Prevention.

New York, September 11, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for convening this interactive dialogue on the "Responsibility to Protect: State responsibility and prevention". I am confident that today's deliberations would significantly contribute towards exchanging views on measures that can be taken by Member States on this issue.

Mr. President,

It is important to recall that the 2005 World Summit outcome document had clearly recognized that it was the responsibility of each State to protect its populations from the four crimes, namely genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity, and to prevent the occurrence thereof. The key to R2P must be prevention.

Mr. President,

We would emphasize three issues regarding R2P:

First, the R2P must remain confined to the four crimes identified by our leaders. We have the Geneva Conventions which provide the bulwark of international humanitarian law. The creation of the Human Rights Council provides the international community with a specialized mechanism to monitor and take appropriate action on human rights violations. Also, a more interactive peer review process in the Human Rights Council has the potential to flag problem areas which may need concerted action by the states concerned with support of the international community, if required and as appropriate.

Second, the default response of the international community cannot be coercive measures, including under Chapter VII of the Charter. R2P cannot be code for military intervention.

Third, R2P must not become a tool in the hands of the powerful to pressurize weaker states, and bring about regime change. Resort to Chapter VII, particularly Articles 41 and 42, may be taken only after serious and genuine efforts at the pacific settlement as set out in the UN Charter have failed. Even while applying Chapter VII, the use of force should be considered as a measure of last resort. Any action involving R2P must be taken under the auspices of the UN and not outside the UN framework.

Mr. President,

We believe that actions under R2P should be based on impartiality, neutrality and proportionality. In conflict situations, there must be push for early political engagement with the parties concerned. Response of the international community must be necessarily calibrated and must stress, at all times, dialogue and peaceful resolution. Moreover, there have to be inbuilt mechanisms for monitoring and reporting measures taken by the Member-States as well as course correction depending on how the situation concerned evolves on the ground. In this context, responsibility while protecting (RwP), as proposed by Brazil, is equally important. If R2P is to regain the respect of the international community, it has to be anchored in the concept of RwP.

Mr. President,

The United Nations and its Member States, and regional or sub-regional organizations must be there to offer assistance, as required by the State, including capacity building, to strengthen such policies and programmes, which must be nationally owned.

The spread of education, economic growth, equal opportunities, social coherence, gender equality, religious tolerance, and adherence to the rule of law nationally and internationally are factors that can contribute to help prevent crimes.

Mr. President,

Finally, I would like to emphasize that the effectiveness of the implementation of R2P is linked to the balanced and impartial discharge of their responsibilities and obligations by Member States under the UN Charter. The reform of the United Nations governance system in tune with the contemporary realities will go a long way in ensuring this changed dynamics which is critical for the successful implementation of R2P.

I thank you

636. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR MANJEEV SINGH PURI, DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, AT THE
SECOND REGULAR SESSION OF EXECUTIVE BOARD OF UN WOMEN.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 16, 2013.

Mr. President, on behalf of the Government of India, let me begin conveying our sincerest felicitations and congratulations to H.E. Ms. Phumzile Mlambo-Ngcuk on her appointment as Head of UN Women. Madam, you bring renewed momentum and vitality to this high office and as a developing country with historical ties to South Africa, even predating our independence, we take great pride and delight in your appointment.

You made a very pertinent observation in the morning session in your address: 'sustainable development will not be really possible if half of humanity is left behind' and we join you in echoing this noble sentiment. As founding members of its Executive Board, and that having had a bit to do with your organization's creation, India will always be willing to walk the extra mile in supporting you in your endeavours to promote gender equality and women's empowerment across the globe.

Allow me to delve into the substance of our remarks on the main agenda item for consideration before this Board, i.e. the Strategic Plan for UN Women for 2014-2017.

When we embarked upon the Strategic Plan of UN Women in June 2010, we had called for it, to be 'ambitious, achievable and results oriented'. Today, in the third operational year of UN Women, my delegation is happy to note that UN Women has been able to significantly influence policy narratives across the globe in areas ranging from political participation and leadership, economic empowerment, ending violence against women and gender equality.

UN Women's journey in a short span of three years has been exemplary and has achieved significant milestones to its credit. So, when we embark on the Strategic Plan for the next four years, we are extremely heartened by your resolve right upfront in the Strategic Plan to make "this THE century for women and gender equality".

We would also complement you for the extremely consultative and participatory process that has been followed by your team in the drafting and finalisation of this Strategic Plan, especially in incorporating the feedback received from Member States and bringing about amendments to focus on poverty eradication and having included gender perspectives in the post 2015 development agenda.

Two, we also welcome the significant emphasis placed in the Strategic Plan on attempting to incorporate the mandates of the QCPR Resolution on gender equality and women's empowerment. Advancing women's rights and their political empowerment was a key facet of the QCPR and we are happy to note its continued reaffirmation in the new Strategic Plan of UN Women.

Mr. President, representing a country which is home to more than 500 million women, I am also pleased to inform you that India has the highest numbers globally, of political empowerment of women at the local level. We have nearly 1.5 million elected women representatives at the local grassroots level, an all time record anywhere, which epitomises the scale at which the landscape of political empowerment of women in India is rapidly changing.

Another theme, that I would like to flag today and which resonates with a pivotal thrust of the Strategic Plan has been on 'ending violence against women'. In this regard, following last week's court verdict against perpetrators of such horrific crimes, we also noticed the recent call by UN Women to Government of India "to do everything in its power to ensure speedy justice for survivors of violence".

Mr. President, let me first place on record, that for me and for my Government, even one incident of violence against any woman or any girl, is an incident too many, and simply unacceptable.

The edifice of the Indian society is premised on the all embracing power of the Indian woman - which in our ancient thought and religious belief, bestows her the power to create, nurture and transform. She is not only worshipped as 'Durga' the goddess of creation, but also as 'Saraswati' - the inspiration for all music, poetry, science and learning.

While the December incident indeed shook the whole conscience of our nation at its very roots, the Government of India has since ensured that the culprits have been brought to speedy justice and the sternest punishment delivered. We have also since enacted a series of laws to ensure that such crimes do not happen again, and the people of India stand together firmly in this resolve.

We still have a long way to go in our common pursuit for ensuring women's economic empowerment as women bear a disproportionate burden of the world's poverty and constitute nearly 70% of the world's poor. Despite estimates that they perform approximately 66% of the world's work and produce approximately 50% of the food, they only earn 10% of the income and own only 1% of the property. Promoting the empowerment of women must also be therefore a key economic development imperative of the post 2015 development agenda.

Also, work on gender equality and empowerment of women continues to remain chronically underfunded. If we have to ensure that UN Women stands for action, the donor community must move beyond the political rhetoric of just stated commitments, and transform them into the much needed monetary support for the organization.

Let me also re-iterate that as the largest contributor to UN Women's core predictable funding from the developing world, India has already contributed three million US dollars out of its committed five million to UN Women so far, and we will continue to provide full political and financial support to UN Women and call on others to do likewise.

We reaffirm India's steadfast commitment to the all round social, economic and political empowerment of our women, whatever effort and resources, the task might take. We assure you that India will always be willing to walk the extra mile, as UN Women embarks upon this journey.

I thank you Mr. President.

637. STATEMENT BY MS. KUMARI SELJA, MINISTER OF SOCIAL JUSTICE & EMPOWERMENT AT THE HIGH LEVEL MEETING OF THE UNGA ON THE REALIZATION OF THE MDGs AND OTHER INTERNATIONALLY AGREED DEVELOPMENT GOALS FOR PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES WITH THE OVERARCHING THEME 'THE WAY FORWARD: A DISABILITY-INCLUSIVE DEVELOPMENT AGENDA TOWARDS 2015 AND BEYOND.'

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 23, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, let me express my deep sense of shock at the brutal terror attack in Nairobi on 21st September. India strongly condemns this heinous attack which has claimed many innocent lives including that of Indians. India also condemns in strongest terms the attack on the church in Peshawar. These senseless acts of violence are a stark reminder that the persisting menace of terrorism remains a threat that requires a concerted and sustained response from the global community.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for chairing these discussions. This meeting provides an important opportunity to reaffirm our global commitment and to shape the discourse on disability issues in the emerging post-2015 development agenda.

India signed and ratified the United Nations Convention on Rights of Persons with Disabilities in 2007.

India is also a signatory to regional frameworks such as the Declaration on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asia Pacific Region and to the Biwako Millennium Framework.

Mr. Chairman,

An estimated 15% of the world's population is disabled and 80% of these over 1 billion people live in the developing world. This group can make a significant contribution to development. It is imperative that we dismantle existing barriers and empower the persons with disabilities.

We must identify measures to strengthen the normative framework to advance the inclusion of persons with disabilities including through incorporation of their perspectives in formulation of development policies and enhancing their accessibility to education, healthcare and employment.

We must also find ways to strengthen international cooperation through exchange of good practices, capacity building and provision of technical assistance.

Mr. Chairman,

India's legislative framework is anchored in the Persons with Disabilities (Equal Opportunities, Protection of Rights & Full Participation) Act 1995 that recognizes persons with disabilities as a valuable human resource and aims to create an enabling environment to empower them.

There are separate laws dealing with the issue of training of manpower for providing rehabilitation services to the persons with disabilities and providing for legal guardianship for four categories of disabled persons.

India is currently in the process of reviewing and harmonising our legal framework with the provisions of UNCRPD.

Mr. Chairman,

In addition, several laws incorporate a disability perspective. These include the National Disaster Management Act 2005; the Right of Children to Free and Compulsory Education Act 2009; and the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act 2010.

The National Building Code 2005 stipulates norms for accessibility in construction of buildings. There are government guidelines to ensure that public places and transportation are gradually made barrier free. The websites of several federal Ministries are now in accessible format as per Web Content Accessibility Guidelines of W3C.

Mr. Chairman,

The Government established a Department of Disability Affairs under the nodal Ministry of Social Justice & Empowerment in May 2012 to further improve the implementation of government policies and schemes for persons with disabilities.

The budget for these schemes has been doubled in the current Five Year Plan period compared to the previous plan period. Three percent of government employment is reserved for persons with disabilities.

An extensive network of national, regional and district level institutes and rehabilitation centres has been set up to promote research on disability issues and to train manpower to meet the needs of persons with disabilities.

We see private sector and civil society as valued partners in our endeavor to empower persons with disabilities. The government has instituted national awards to recognize exemplary contribution in this area.

Mr. Chairman,

In conclusion, let me reaffirm India's firm commitment nationally and at the global level to building an enabling and inclusive environment so that all persons with disabilities are able to enjoy their rights and realize their full potential in society.

Thank you

638. STATEMENT BY MR. SALMAN KURSHID, MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, AT THE INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE HIGH LEVEL POLITICAL FORUM (HLPF).

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 24, 2013.

Madam President,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am deeply honored to be present at this inaugural meeting of the High Level Political Forum today.

Madam President,

The creation of the High Level Political Forum was one of the key decisions of the Rio+20 Conference. We are happy that we have created a universal and inclusive process to deliberate on issues in which we all have a stake.

Madam President,

Let me assure you of India's strong commitment to sustainable development. We need sustainable development to lift millions of our people out of poverty and for them to have a better quality of life. In fact, sustainability has been mainstreamed as one of the primary goals of our 12th five year plan.

Sustainable Development must be pursued with a balanced and holistic emphasis on all its three dimensions, economic, social and environmental.

Madam President,

The High Level Political Forum must be a forum for action-oriented collaboration. It must give special attention to the needs and priorities of the developing countries, while ensuring that their developmental policy space is fully preserved.

It must emphasize sharing of best practices and experiences, mobilization of international resources, transfer of technology and capacity building support in order to mainstream sustainable development at all levels.

Madam President,

At Rio+20, world leaders agreed that poverty is not only the greatest global challenge but also an indispensable requirement for sustainable development. The central focus of the Post-2015 Development Agenda must therefore be on ending poverty and hunger once and for all.

In crafting the Post-2015 Development Agenda, we must ensure that it is based on the Rio principles including that of common but differentiated responsibilities, which were reaffirmed at Rio+20.

The Post-2015 Development Agenda must carry forward and complete the unfinished business of the MDGs.

It should also prioritize other core issues such as ensuring food security and universal access to modern energy services, full and productive employment for our youth, managing urbanization, creation of infrastructure, rationalizing consumption patterns and reducing the wastage of food in developed countries.

More importantly, the Post-2015 Development Agenda must succeed in crafting a transformative and meaningful global partnership to provide enhanced means of implementation to developing countries.

The early fulfillment by developed countries of their commitment of 0.7% of GNI as ODA should be the starting point of this important endeavour. We must also craft a truly supportive international system including for trade and finance to assist national efforts.

We must also aim at a genuine reform of the institutions of global economic governance to give real voice and effective participation to developing countries.

Madam President,

Let me take this opportunity to highlight an area that I consider extremely important for sustainable development - correcting the gross disparity and imbalance in the global consumption of natural resources.

The report of the Secretary General's High Level Panel on Post-2015 Development Agenda has drawn our attention to a startling fact. That the over 1 billion poorest people on this planet account for a mere 1% of total global consumption while the billion richest consume over two-thirds of it.

This stark imbalance must change if we are serious in our quest for the sustainability of our planet.

The international effort to achieve sustainable development must be premised on an equitable sharing of the planet's resources. This is not just an economic or environmental necessity; it is also a moral and ethical imperative.

We must promote not just inter-generational but also intra-generational equity to achieve sustainable development.

In conclusion Madam President, we are confident that this newly created body would prove to be a worthy platform for action-oriented, inclusive dialogue to assist us in mainstreaming sustainable development and realizing our collective vision of Rio+20.

I thank you

639. Statement by H.E. Mrs. Suiatha Singh, Foreign Secretary Ministry of External Affairs, at the Special Event to follow-up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

New York, September 25, 2013.

Co-Chairs,

Excellencies.

Distinguished Delegates,

It is my distinct honor to participate in this Special Event to follow-up efforts for the achievement of MDGs.

As we near the date for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals in 2015, our foremost priority must to accelerate our efforts so that the gaps in our achievement can be filled.

Discussions on a global development agenda for the Post-2015 period have also begun. We are happy that today we have decided to launch a process of intergovernmental negotiations to arrive at the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Co-Chairs,

Our global record in the achievement of the MDGs is a mixed one. Over the past two decades, we have made substantial gains in eradicating poverty to which efforts of India have contributed in a significant manner. However, while we may have met the target, we are still far from overcoming the greatest global challenge of poverty.

A decade into the 21st century, 1 out every 6 people in this planet continues to live a life of extreme poverty, hunger and desperation. Progress on other goals and targets in the MDGs has been equally uneven across regions and sectors and, in some cases, far from being achieved by 2015.

It is evident that we need to sustain the momentum for realizing the MDGs beyond 2015 and make them an integral part of the post-2015 development agenda.

As far as social indicators go, the more we run the more we seem to be stay in the same place, due to the sheer pressure on the meager resources of the developing countries. The fact that, after several decades, only three countries have graduated out of the list of Least Developed Countries is a testimony to how much more needs to be done.

We need to make a serious dent in the MDGs before we can make any meaningful progress on the post-2015 development agenda.

The core human development objectives encapsulated in the MDGs - eradication of poverty and hunger, education, health, sanitation, infant and maternal health, gender equality, environmental sustainability - must continue to receive our highest priority. We owe ourselves and our future generations no less!

However, as we deliberate on the Post-2015 Development Agenda, we also need to be cognizant of the pitfalls of the MDGs.

For one, however noble the intentions, the MDGs did not emerge out of an intergovernmental negotiation process. They were focused only on developing countries, while the developed countries had, at best, undefined obligations to facilitate their achievement. While the goals to be reached were identified, the Global Partnership to provide the support to achieve the MDGs, remained weak. Domestic resources became the vehicle rather than genuine international collaboration.

The gap in commitments and disbursement of Official Development Assistance reached US$ 167 billion in 2011 and further widened in 2012. Aid to the Least Developed Countries, who most need assistance, has also dipped in real terms. Developed countries must urgently fulfill their long made commitment of 0.7% of GNP as ODA.

South-South Cooperation has significantly complemented global resources in recent years, but it is not a substitute for the North-South aid. To focus excessively on South-South cooperation would be to transfer the burden on large developing countries what the developed countries should legitimately do.

We must ensure that the new global partnership for the Post-2015 Development Agenda is a strengthened and meaningful one, to provide adequate and enhanced means of implementation to the developing countries.

Structural reforms of the institutions of global economic governance in order to give real voice and participation to developing countries must be a part of the new global partnership of the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

The new global partnership cannot be about shifting burdens to large developing countries.

Co-Chairs,

In the Post-2015 Development Agenda, the emphasis has to be on the word 'development'. Therefore, it must first and foremost, promote rapid and sustained economic growth in developing countries. Growth is fundamental to pursue inclusive policies to eradicate poverty, and we must clearly recognize this imperative.

The Post-2015 Development Agenda must be based on the outcome of the Rio+20 Conference, which contains the high level political consensus of the international community on all issues related to sustainable development. It must also fully respect the Rio principles in particular the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

A universal Post-2015 Development Agenda demands meaningful and comprehensive set of action points for developed countries as well. The agenda must put greater focus on changing unsustainable consumption and production patterns and curbing food waste with developed countries taking the lead.

The new agenda must enable us to integrate the three dimensions of sustainable development in a balanced manner at all levels.

Co-Chairs,

We have only one world and the agenda that we are forging is an unprecedented opportunity. Let us redouble our commitment to the achievement of the MDGs, learn from the experience of the past and ensure that we forge a development agenda which is transformational rather than transactional in nature and one that enables genuine international collaboration to create a better future for our world and our people.

I thank you

640. Statement by Mr. Pavan Kapoor, Joint Secretary, at the Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Friends of the UN Secretary-General on Myanmar.

New York, September 26, 2013.

I would like to thank the UN Secretary-General for convening this high-level meeting of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General on Myanmar. I would also like to thank Ambassador Vijay Nambiar, Special Advisor on Myanmar for his briefing. We are also very pleased to see the Myanmar Minister for Immigration and Population here and welcome him warmly.

2. Myanmar is an important neighbour of India. We have always believed that peace and stability both on our border with Myanmar and within Myanmar are crucial for us. There are historical linkages between India and Myanmar with special ties of culture, language, trade and tradition. India's close and multifaceted relationship with Myanmar has been further strengthened through exchange of visits at the highest level. The landmark State visit of the Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh to Myanmar in May 2012, the first visit by an Indian Prime Minister after a gap of 25 years, was a major milestone in bilateral relations.
3. Our PM reiterated India's readiness to extend all necessary assistance in accelerating Myanmar's democratic transition and developing the capacity of democratic institutions such as the Parliament, National Human Rights Commission and the media. As a part of ongoing capacity building programme, the Prime Minister announced that the training slots for Myanmar nationals would be doubled from existing 250 to 500 per annum.
4. As a close and friendly neighbour, India remains committed to extending all possible assistance and are appreciative of the measures taken by the Government of Myanmar towards greater democratisation and national reconciliation. The ongoing efforts of the government at political, economic and social reforms, including negotiation of preliminary peace agreements with several ethnic groups as well as dialogue with various democratic political parties, including the National League for Democracy led by DawAung San SuuKyi (ASSK), are significant steps in this direction. The smooth and peaceful conduct of bye-elections of last year represents a major milestone in Myanmar's transition towards multiparty democracy.
5. We have noted the developments in the Rakhine State and hard from the Minister what efforts the Government is making to deal with the situation. We understand that the situation is currently under control and that relief and rehabilitation measures, including under UN auspices, are underway to provide for those affected.

We have extended humanitarian assistance worth US$ 1.2 million to Government of Myanmar as part of our support for the relief, rehabilitation and community building measures being undertaken in the affected areas.

6. India has consistently emphasized the need for the international community to step up engagement with the Government of Myanmar in order to encourage the advancement of national reconciliation as well as socio-economic development. The Government of Myanmar has made significant progress towards greater democratization. The Myanmar leadership, particularly President U TheinSein, has shown considerable vision and courage in ushering in the positive changes in the country. We have noted the message of tolerance, mutual respect and religious freedom made by President TheinSein in the wake of communal clashes in Myanmar. In the message, Myanmar President reiterated his Government's commitment to respect and protect the right of all citizens to worship any religion freely, which conveys a willingness on the part of the present Government to seek a resolution to the issue in line with the international humanitarian regulations. The review or phasing out of sanctions by countries imposing such sanctions against Myanmar is a positive step.
7. We urge that the UN agencies and international financial institutions must be fully enabled at the earliest to carry out the entire gamut of their developmental work in the country. We would also urge the member countries to agree to the discontinuation of resolution on human rights situation in Myanmar. This would convey the world community's strong support and encouragement for the reform measures that are already underway in Myanmar.
8. India supports the SG's proposal for change in nomenclature of this Group stands ready to continue to play a constructive role in the process of consultations with other like-minded countries on the issue.

641. Statement by the Minister for External Affairs H.E MR. Salman Khurshid, Minister of External Affairs, at the High Level Meeting of the General Assembly on Nuclear Disarmament.

New York, September 26, 2013.

His Excellency, President of the General Assembly,
His Excellency the Secretary General of the United Nations, Distinguished colleagues, ladies and gentlemen

It is an honour to address this high level gathering on Nuclear Disarmament. We associate ourselves with the statement made by the NAM.

Mr. President, from the days of our freedom struggle, we have been consistent in our support for the global elimination of all weapons of mass destruction. Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of our nation, was moved by the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki but remained unshaken in his belief in non-violence. He wrote that he regarded the employment of the atom bomb for the wholesale destruction of men, women and children as the most diabolical use of science. More than six decades later, it remains our collective challenge to craft a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order.

India remains convinced that its security would be strengthened in a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order. This conviction is based both on principle as well as pragmatism. We believe that the goal of nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed multilateral framework that is global and non-discriminatory. There is need for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Progressive steps are needed for the de-legitimization of nuclear weapons paving the way for their complete elimination.

In 1988, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi presented to the UN General a comprehensive Action Plan for a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order, which if implemented would have rid the world of nuclear weapons by 2008. India's subsequent proposals in the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament are testimony to our consistent support for nuclear disarmament based on the key principles of the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan for achieving nuclear disarmament in a time bound manner.

As a responsible nuclear power, we have a credible minimum deterrence policy and a posture of no-first use. We refuse to participate in an arms race, including a nuclear arms race. We are prepared to negotiate a global No-First-Use treaty and our proposal for a Convention banning the use of nuclear weapons remains on the table. As we see no contradiction between nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, we are also committed to working with the international community to advance our common objectives of non-proliferation, including through strong export controls and membership of the multilateral export regimes.

Mr. President, the Non-Aligned Movement, of which India is a proud founding member, has proposed today the early commencement of negotiations in the CD on nuclear disarmament. We support this call. Without prejudice to the priority we attach to nuclear disarmament, we also support the negotiation in the CD of a nondiscriminatory and internationally verifiable treaty banning the future production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices that meets India's national security interests. It should be our collective endeavor to return the CD, which remains the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, to substantive work as early as possible.

Mr. President, this meeting is proof that the international community remains concerned about the catastrophic consequences of nuclear war and the lack of progress in moving toward global nuclear disarmament. In recent years, many initiatives both official and non-governmental have been launched in order to make the vision of a nuclear weapon free world a reality. Simultaneously, there has been a welcome and well-deserved focus on preventing access by non-state actors, in particular terrorists, to weapons of mass destruction and related materials. The recent use of chemical weapons in Syria point to an urgent need for the international community to strengthen restraints on use of weapons of mass destruction and in particular preventing their access to non state actors and terrorists. We hope that our discussions today would galvanize political will and help channel our collective efforts towards the noble goal of ridding the world of nuclear weapons and all other weapons of mass destruction. To that end, Mr. President, we pledge to you our full support and cooperation.

I thank you

642. STATEMENT BY H.E. MR SALMAN KURSHID, MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, AT THE 37TH ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS GROUP OF 77 AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 26,2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Allow me to begin by thanking you for your esteemed leadership of the Group of 77 this year. I must underline the sterling role played by your Permanent Representative Ambassador Peter Thompson and his staff here in New York in assisting member states and guiding the discussions of the Group.

Let me also take this opportunity to extend a very warm welcome to Republic of Kirbati as the newest member of the G-77 family.

Mr. Chairman,

The founding principles of the Group of 77 of equity, solidarity and unity are rooted in our collective aspiration to help our people achieve a life of dignity and respect.

Today, with the global economy in turmoil and growth prospects in developing countries under unprecedented stress, our quest for poverty eradication and inclusive development is facing challenges. These are further compounded by sustained food and energy crises.

Under these trying times, we must undertake growth promoting policies to boost demand and create jobs for our youth. The Group must also work to bring growth back at the centre stage of the international discourse.

We must bring to bear our considerable collective strength to ensure a fair and sustainable multilateral trading system under the WTO and a development oriented outcome of the Doha round.

The Group must also continue its leadership in ensuring meaningful progress in the reform of the institutions of global economic governance in order to give real voice and participation to developing countries.

Mr. Chairman,

The target date for MDGs is drawing near. We are simultaneously engaged in the follow-up to the important decisions taken in Rio+20 last year. We are also commencing the global discussion on the Post- 2015 Development Agenda.

Taken together, these three processes are of crucial importance for the Group. The Group must lead in all these processes to ensure they have a strong imprint of our core principles.

While we have made enormous progress in our achievement of the MDGs, the objectives of the Millennium agenda have not been met.

The Group must ensure that no effort is spared for the achievement of the MDGs in the remaining period till 2015. There must be no slackening at this stage and international support to developing countries at this crucial stage must be enhanced.

In the follow-up to the Rio+20 conference, the foremost priority of the Group must be to ensure that the high level mandate of the Rio+20 Conference is fully respected, in both letter and spirit.

Mr. Chairman,

It is of utmost importance that the Post-2015 Development Agenda is negotiated intergovernmentally.

The Post-2015 Development Agenda must be rooted in the central priority of poverty eradication, identified as the greatest global challenge by our leaders in Rio+20. It should also carry forward the unfinished agenda of the MDGs.

The Post-2015 Development Agenda must be based on the outcome of the Rio+20 Conference and fully respect the Rio principles in particular the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

We must emphasize that the Post-2015 Development Agenda is an agenda for development. It must therefore promote rapid, sustained and inclusive growth in developing countries and must prioritize core issues central to developing countries such as food security, access to energy, skill development, full and productive employment and creation of infrastructure.

If we are to succeed in our collective efforts as part of the Post-2015 Development Agenda, we must ensure that the global partnership does not remain mere rhetoric. A weak global partnership remained the major weakness of the MDGs and we must ensure that a strengthened and meaningful global partnership underpins the Post- 2015 Development Agenda.

The commitments of developed countries, for ODA, market access and technology transfer, must be met. Developed countries need to take urgent actions to promote the flow of capital to developing countries, eliminate protectionist barriers to trade and foster a supportive IPR regime. The urgent need for a technology facilitation mechanism that promotes the development, deployment, dissemination and transfer of technologies to developing countries cannot be overemphasized. In this context, we welcome the recommendation of the UN Secretary General for the establishment of a 'Technology Facilitation Mechanism'.

A transformed global partnership cannot be about recognizing new actors and dilution of agreed principles and commitments. South- South Cooperation has contributed significantly in recent years and it must be given space to grow as per its own principles, not as a substitute but a complement to North-South Cooperation.

Mr. Chairman,

Climate Change continues to present a severe threat to our developmental prospects and in some cases even our survival. G77 has been a pillar of the climate change negotiations under the UNFCCC. We must remain united in our pursuit of a comprehensive, balanced and equitable outcome in accordance with the principles and provisions of the Convention, in particular the principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities.

In order to support the urgent adaptation efforts of the developing countries, it is important for us to ensure that the mechanisms already created under the UNFCCC, in particular the Green Climate Fund and the Technology Mechanism deliver timely and tangible results.

Mr. Chairman,

India is deeply sensitive to the interests of the LDCs, LLDCs, SIDS and the African countries as part of the G77 family. It is important that their special needs continue to receive the highest priority of the Group.

We look forward to an ambitious outcome to the Third International Conference on SIDS in Samoa in 2014 which should galvanize political will and redouble international efforts to enhance the support of the international community to the SIDS.

As a mark of our abiding commitment to the sustainable development of the SIDS and in the spirit of South-South solidarity, India has contributed a sum of US$ 250,000/- for the organization of the Third SIDS Conference.

We also look forward to working closely with all our LLDCs partners for an ambitious, comprehensive and balanced outcome to the 10- year review conference of the Almaty Programme of Action (APoA) for LLDCs in 2014. India has decided to contribute a sum of US$ 100,000 for the organization of the LLDC review Conference next year.

Before concluding Mr. Chairman, allow me to reiterate India's strong and abiding commitment to the G77 and solidarity with all its members. You can count on India's steadfast support to your endeavors in the coming year to strengthen the unity of the Group and give a voice to its priorities.

I thank you

643. Intervention made by Shri Navtej Sarna.AS (IO) at the Ministerial Meeting of the NAM Committee on Palestine.

New York, September 26. 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Distinguished members of the Committee,

Allow me at the outset. Mr. Chairman. to thank you for organizing this meeting.

2. NAM has a long history of solidarity with the Palestinian people. India as the founding member of the Movement has always supported the cause of the Palestinian people. Our support for their just cause is time tested and a cornerstone of India's foreign policy. India continues to remain steadfast and unwavering in its commitment to the cause for a sovereign. independent. viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its Capital. side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap. various UN resolutions and the Arab Peace Initiative.
3. As a member of the Security Council during 2011-12. India not only supported Palestine's bid for full membership of the United Nations, it co-sponsored the General Assembly resolution in November 2012 that upgraded the status of Palestine to a non-member Observer State. India will continue its full support for Palestine to be come a Member-State of the United Nations.

Mr. Chairman,

4. The biggest obstacle to the realization of an independent. sovereign Palestinian state is Israeli settlement activity. This activity is mortally undermining the premise of a two-state solution. India. therefore. opposes Israeli settlement policy. voted in favour of the draft resolution in the Security Council in February 2011 and continues to call for total cessation of all settlement activities.

5. The blockade of Gaza has had serious consequences for the lives of Palestinians. It has adversely affected essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. We continue to hold that it is necessary for Israel to lift the blockade on Gaza and allow normal and unrestricted movement of persons and goods within Palestine.
6. We are also alarmed at the continuing violence and disproportionate and excessive use of force by the Israeli authorities. We deplore these measures and the loss of lives and property that they cause in the occupied Palestinian territories.

Mr. Chairman,

7. Given the evolving situation in the region and its inherent fragility and unpredictability, it is necessary that there is no more delay in the resolution of the Palestinian question. We are encouraged by the resumption of direct talks between Israel and Palestine (facilitated by US efforts). We hope that the direct talks after perhaps one of the longest period of stalemate since the signing of the Oslo Accords will lead to concrete results.
8. India stands ready to support all measures that the Palestinian leadership will take towards political resolution of the Final Status issues so that an independent, sovereign Palestinian State comes into being.
9. Meanwhile, we will continue to provide developmental support and assistance to the Palestinian Authority through direct budgetary support, contributions to UNRWA and bilateral capacity building and infrastructure projects as well as through IBSA fund.
10. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we think NAM has an important role to play in supporting the Palestinian leadership in their efforts towards realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian People. As our Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said during the last NAM Summit in Tehran, "we should renew our pledge to support an early resolution of the Palestinian question, so that the long suffering people of Palestine can live in peace and dignity in a state of their own."

11. We are hopeful that today's meeting will send a strong signal to all concerned of our collective support for the Palestinian people and their leadership in their endeavours to resolve this long-standing question.

I thank you

644. Statement of the Prime Minister of India in the General Debate of the 68th Session of the UN General Assembly.

New York, September 28, 2013.

Your Excellency, President of the General Assembly, Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Let me first of all congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of the 68th session of the UN General Assembly. We wish you every success and assure you of our fullest co-operation.

Mr. President,

At a time when the world is facing multiple challenges, there is renewed attention on the role of the United Nations in advancing international peace, security and prosperity. However, never has scepticism about the UN' s capacity to do so been higher, or the external environment less propitious for multilateralism.

Nearly seven decades of the work of the United Nations hold one simple lesson and that is this: we are most successful when we adhere to the letter and spirit of the United Nations Charter, basing our decisions on the widest possible consent and balancing equitably the needs and responsibilities of nations at different stages of development.

In these seven decades, the world has changed in fundamental ways. Asia and Africa are independent and resurgent. Countries are now not only more interdependent, but also face new and increasingly complex challenges. For multilateralism to remain relevant and effective in the future, multilateral institutions need to be reformed.

The UN Security Council must be reformed and restructured to reflect current political realities. More developing countries should be included as both permanent and non-permanent members.

Multilateral Financial Institutions should also enable an enhanced voice for developing countries in their decision making structures.

Multilateral efforts must guide our quest for peace and security, wherever they are threatened. And the centrality and contribution of the UN system to development must be restored.

These objectives require the building of a new international consensus, suited to our time and rooted in today's realities. It is only such a plan of action that will enable the UN to meet the twin tests of legitimacy and efficacy.

Mr. President,

We commend your choice for the theme of this session. Setting the stage for the post-2015 Development Agenda is especially important as we deal with a lingering global economic slowdown and continuing volatility in financial markets. These have imposed disproportionately heavy costs on developing countries and vulnerable groups within them.

Growth and inclusive development are naturally important for all our countries. They require a supportive international economic environment, enhanced investment flows, including from multilateral development banks, transfer of technology, and an open multilateral trading regime.

But the problems of over a billion people living in abject poverty around the world need to be attacked more directly. Poverty remains a major political and economic challenge and its eradication requires special attention and a new thrust. This priority should anchor the post-2015

Development Agenda, which should be shaped by the member states so that it enjoys the broadest possible support and acceptance.

Mr. President,

Issues of peace, security, human rights and governance are important and need to be addressed. But we will fall short of realizing an ambitious post-2015 development agenda if we focus merely on governance issues at the cost of robust economic growth.

This agenda should not be merely about reprioritizing domestic spending, but also about fostering genuine international partnership between the developing and developed countries to bring about change. All of us need the policy space necessary to set our own domestic priorities. No one knows the condition of developing countries better than the developing countries themselves.

It is, therefore, important that the UN set clear and concise goals and provide practical and well-defined means of implementation, including adequate flow of resources and transfer of technology, taking the views of developing countries fully into account.

A meaningful post-2015 agenda must place equally high priority on food and nutrition, health, education, infrastructure, water, sanitation, energy and discrimination against women. Especially critical is women's equal access to economic opportunities, and that they do not become victims of violence or targets of prejudice.

In India, we promote inclusive development in multiple ways. Legislation has broadened access to education and secured rural livelihoods. We are now building the world's largest programme for food security. Digital technology is being harnessed to improve the delivery of public services and benefits to the people.

Mr. President,

India is proud of its partnerships with developing countries. Using modest resources, we have built strong ties with Africa and the Least Developed Countries. We are committed to building 100 institutions in Africa, have offered capacity building support including thousands of scholarships, and made available concessional assistance of over 9.5 billion US dollars. India and Africa are engaging through the India-Africa Forum Summit process. We also look forward to participating actively in the 3rd Conference on the Small Island Developing States in Samoa in 2014 and contributing to its outcome.

Mr. President,

Climate change is one of the defining challenges of our times. We must summon the necessary political will for crafting a robust global response to climate change on the basis of equity and the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

Mr. President,

We are deeply concerned about the future of West Asia, a region with which India shares deep bonds of history, and one that is critical for our energy security as well as the livelihoods of nearly seven million Indians who work and live in the region.

The increasingly lethal conflict in Syria is not only a tragedy for the people of Syria, but also threatens stability and security in the region and beyond. It has been made worse by the use of chemical weapons. The use of chemical weapons, whosoever may have deployed them, must be condemned in the strongest terms. India supports strongly the elimination of chemical weapons material and equipment in Syria.

There is no military solution to this conflict. We must intensify efforts to end the conflict and seek a political settlement. It is essential that the Geneva-2 conference be convened at the earliest.

Mr. President,

We are encouraged that direct talks have resumed between Israel and Palestine. India supports an early realisation of a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine, with East Jerusalem as its capital, living within secure and recognised borders side-by-side and at peace with Israel. We also remain committed to the Palestinian quest for full membership of the UN. In our own region, Afghanistan prepares for a historic political, security and economic transition. The international community must support the people of Afghanistan through this transition and beyond in combating terrorism, preserving the progress of the past decade and creating a stable, united and prosperous Afghanistan.

Mr. President,

Terrorism remains a grave threat to security and stability everywhere and extracts a heavy toll of innocent lives around the world. From Africa to Asia, we have seen several manifestations of this menace in the last few days alone. State-sponsored cross-border terrorism is of particular concern to India, also on account of the fact that the epicentre of terrorism in our region is located in our neighbourhood in Pakistan.

Speaking from this podium yesterday, Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif of Pakistan spoke of making a new beginning. I reciprocate his sentiments and am looking forward to meeting him tomorrow. India is committed sincerely to resolving all issues with Pakistan, including the issue of Jammu and Kashmir, through bilateral dialogue on the basis of the Simla Agreement. However, for progress to be made, it is imperative that the territory of Pakistan and the areas under its control are not utilized for aiding and abetting terrorism directed against India. It is equally important that the terrorist machinery that draws its sustenance from Pakistan be shut down. There must be a clear understanding of the fact Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and that there can never, ever, be a compromise with the unity and territorial integrity of India.

Mr. President,

We need to renew our commitment, especially here at the UN, for concerted, cohesive and continuing global action against terrorism. There can be no tolerance for states sheltering, arming, training or financing terrorists. Nor can they absolve themselves of the responsibility to prevent their territories from being used to launch acts of terrorism.

Mr. President,

The increasingly complex challenges to international peace and security require a new international consensus to be built, whether it is in cyber security, non proliferation or terrorism. This year, 25 years after Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi put forward a comprehensive Action Plan for a Nuclear Weapon-free and Non-violent World Order, we must strengthen efforts against nuclear proliferation and pursue time-bound, universal, non-discriminatory, phased and verifiable nuclear disarmament. We must also guard against terrorists and non-state actors gaining access to sensitive materials and technologies.

Mr. President,

Two years from now, the United Nations will be seventy years old. Every new state that was born during this period took its place in this Assembly not just with pride but also with hope. 2015 will be a moment to celebrate our successes and to ensure that the UN is -ready for this century by completing the much needed reforms of the United Nations and its Security Council, by developing an ambitious and balanced post-2015 Development Agenda and by demonstrating our capacity to cooperate effectively for durable peace and security in this world.

Thank you

645. Statement by Ambassador Navtej Sarna, Additional Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, on the 12th Annual Meeting of Foreign Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries [LLDCs] at 68th Session of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, September 30, 2013.

Mr. Chair,

Excellencies,

Distinguished Delegates,

It is an honor for me to participate in the 12th Annual Meeting of Foreign Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries today.

India is deeply sensitive to the significant geographical difficulties faced by landlocked developing countries that place them at a distinct disadvantage as far as international trade and economic linkages are concerned and pose severe challenges to their efforts for achieving sustainable development.

The Almaty Programme of Action has led to encouraging results. It has led to an increased global awareness to the special circumstances and needs of the LLDCs and the need for sustained international support to address these needs.

It is important that the international community continues and strengthens its support to the LLDCs in the coming decade. The objective of our efforts in the coming decade should be to promote greater structural transformation in the LLDCs, create infrastructure and build strong productive capacities in order to improve trade performance and enhance their integration with the world economy.

An effective solution to the problems faced by the LLDCs must also address the constraints and challenges faced by the transit developing countries that neighbour landlocked developing countries.

We are happy that South-South Cooperation has meaningfully supplemented international efforts for supporting the LLDCs. The report of the Secretary General has pointed out that corporations from the South, in particular from India and China accounted for 41% of FDI inflows into LLDCs in 2011 and that Southern providers accounted for 47% of official infrastructure financing in sub-Saharan Africa from 2001 to 2008. At the same time, it is a matter of concern that ODA flows to LLDCs fell by 3.3% in 2011.

India has special bilateral cooperation agreements with its landlocked neighbours for easy transit of their goods through India. We accord the highest priority to further strengthening our ties with these countries to support their economic development.

India will continue to contribute enhanced economic and technical support to the development efforts of the LLDCs as part of South-South cooperation.

We look forward to working closely with all our LLDCs partners for an ambitious, comprehensive and balanced outcome to the 10-year review conference on LLDCs next year.

Before concluding Mr. Chair, I am happy to announce that Government of India has decided to contribute a sum of US$ 100,000/- for the organization of the 10-year review conference on LLDCs next year.

I thank you

646. Remarks by Ambassador Asoke K Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India to UN at Special Event to Commemorate "International Day of Non Violence".

New York, October 2, 2013.

Excellencies & Distinguished Guests,

On behalf of the Permanent Mission of India, I would like to welcome all of you for joining us today at this annual event to commemorate the International Day of Non Violence, here at the United Nations.

Before we begin, allow me to welcome the dignitaries on the dias today. We are privileged to have amidst us, the Secretary General of the United Nations, His Excellency Mr. Ban Ki-moon, our Chief Guest who would be delivering the key note address

We are honoured to have, His Excellency Ambassador John Ashe, President of the United Nations General Assembly; thank you Mr President, for joining us and for agreeing to deliver the Presidential Address

And we have my dear colleague the Permanent Representative of South Africa, Ambassador Kingsley Mamabolo, who is in many ways a co-sponsor of this event, given the fact that Mahatma Gandhi spent his formative years as a political activist using the tools of non-violence in South Africa before returning to India to lead the Indian freedom struggle.

We are also honoured to have amongst us today one of India's greatest artists, and perhaps, the world's greatest exponents of the Sarod, Ustad Amjad Ali Khan and his sons Aman and Ayaan. We will be privileged to listen to a special recital by them to mark this day, during the latter half of our function.

I would like to share with you that we have received a special message on this occasion from Mrs Tara Gandhi Bhattacharjee, the granddaughter of Mahatma Gandhi, who has asked that we spend a moment to introspect on the message of non-violence spread by the Mahatma on the occasion of the United Nations Day of Non-Violence. May I request you to observe a minute's silence for introspection?

Thank you.

To set our gathering in context, we would like to invite you watch a short film chronicling the defining time lines in the life of Mahatma Gandhi. Can we have the AV please ?

Honourable President of the General Assembly, distinguished Secretary General, and friends,

You will recall that it was on 27 June 2007, at its 103rd plenary meeting during the 61st session of the UNGA, under Agenda Item 44, that the General Assembly acted on India's proposal to adopt Resolution 61/271. This declared October 2, the birth date of Mahatma Gandhi, as the "International Day of Non Violence" to be commemorated annually at the United Nations.

Since then, eminent persons have participated in this event, including the Chairperson of the ruling United Progressive Alliance from India, Mrs Sonia Gandhi who was here for our inaugural event, and the Foreign Minister of India last year. In 2009, the UN Postal Administration issued a commemorative stamp on Mahatma Gandhi.

Since the genesis of our event is Resolution 61/271, we would like to recall that the International Day of Non-Violence is celebrated, and I quote :

"bearing in mind that non violence, tolerance, full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, democracy, development, mutual understanding and respect for diversity are interlinked and mutually reinforcing, Reaffirming the universal relevance of the principle of non violence, and desiring to secure a culture of peace, tolerance, understanding and non violence".

On this occasion, we would like to recall the singular contribution made to the cause of world peace and development by the philosophy of non-violence. Indeed, since it promotes dialogue and understanding, non-violence has established itself as a major instrument of policy, whether it be to address and resolve armed conflict, or to provide the framework for growth and development, or indeed to form the glue which binds humanity together, regardless of our many diversities. I would dare suggest, in the presence of this distinguished audience, that the path of non-violence and dialogue is the surest path to sustainable peace, sustainable development and indeed, sustainable reforms. It is through such an approach that we would be best equipped to deal with the challenges of change, whether political, social, economic or environmental, and find solutions on the basis of the strength of dialogue. The dynamism and vibrancy of the societies in which Mahatma Gandhi, Martin Luther King and Nelson Mandela have lived and worked is proof, if indeed such proof were required, of this.

Allow me to invite our Chief Guest, H.E. Mr. Ban Ki-moon, Secretary General of the United Nations, to deliver the key note address. Excellency, you have the floor, please.

647. Statement by His Excellency Mr. Asoke Mukerji, Permanent Representative, on Second High level Dialogue on International Migration and Development.

New York, October 4, 2013.

Your Excellency Madam President,
Excellencies, Distinguished Delegates,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the very outset, let me convey on behalf of India our deep condolences at the tragic loss of life of migrants off the shore of Lampedusa in Italy.

I am honored to participate in this discussion on the important issue of international migration and its linkages with development under the auspices of the UN General Assembly.

This issue was last discussed at the UN General Assembly seven years ago. Since then, we have not made much progress in advancing the global discourse on international migration in the context of the global economy and development. We hope that this Dialogue will help us move forward towards that objective.

We live in a world that has been reshaped by the forces of globalization. This globalized world is critically dependent on the unimpeded and accelerated flow and exchange of not only trade, capital and technology, but also information and ideas. Most importantly, the spirit of globalization rests on the mobility and flow of human resources, of people. It is important that international migration be a part of the global economic discourse and development paradigm.

Madam President,

India is one of the leading countries of origin, destination and transit for international migration. Over centuries, our people have travelled to distant corners of the globe in a spirit of cooperation and friendship and in the process have made enormous contributions to the receiving societies.

Today, over 25 million people of Indian origin live overseas and have made us proud of their contributions in countries where they live and work. This includes several million workers who often toil in trying circumstances and contribute the bulk of the remittances received by India.

Many of our professional and business people have sterling achievements of a global order to their credit. They have also been a major source of strength for us, building bridges with India and contributing to our economic development. We celebrate their achievements every year with a "Pravasi Bharatiya Divas" - the Day of the Overseas Indian.

On the other hand, our composite culture, which prides itself on its diversity, has attracted millions to its fold as well.

India favours a holistic approach to international migration. An approach premised on the developmental paradigm of migration that is sensitive to the national circumstances of countries of origin, transit and destination, and one that seeks to maximize the mutually beneficial nature of international migration while reducing its negative effects.

It is this spirit that has underpinned India's engagement with the Global Forum for Migration and Development (GFMD) which has emerged as a useful platform to discuss the opportunities and challenges of international migration.

Madam President,

Developed countries need to acknowledge that they have gained from the process of international migration, and acknowledge the significant contribution of international migration to their economic development.

Migration has contributed and continues to contribute to the augmentation of their capacities and intellectual and institutional resource base. It has helped countries of destination meet their shortfalls in labour market and skilled manpower supply. Many developed economies have greatly benefitted from the talent of migrants, including in academia, business, research and innovation.

Migrations flows not only occur from South to North or from South to South, but also from North to North. Our approaches to deal with these migration patterns must be uniform and consistent, while acknowledging that policies and solutions to dealing with international migration will differ according to the different national circumstances of countries. This is especially true of developing countries that are both countries of origin and countries of destination for migrants.

Greater openness and political willingness is, therefore, needed in developed countries for allowing freer movement of people across their national boundaries. We must also ensure that migrants are provided opportunities to harness their full potential. This would not only bring benefits to the migrants but also to the destination countries.

Madam President,

Coming from India, which received nearly US$ 70 billion worth of remittances in 2012, I am well aware that remittance from international migrants contributes to development in the countries of origin. These are often critical for livelihood of families of migrant workers. Studies point to a tenfold increase in migrant remittances to developing countries between 1990 and 2008.

Remittances, however, are not a substitute to ODA or other forms of development financing, as is often suggested. They represent the sheer dint of hard work and efforts of migrants in the countries of their destination. International commitments on ODA and development financing cannot be diluted on this account.

We need to provide greater policy support at the international level to the issue of short term migration, in particular on issues related to portability of pensions and social security contributions.

We must also focus our attention on the temporary movement of natural persons to supply services i.e. Mode 4 movement under GATS, which is in response to specific skill shortages and thus provides direct benefits to the destination economies. It is a matter of grave concern that instead of facilitating such movements, governments in some major economies have recently imposed greater restrictions by way of steep hike in visa fees, and quotas.

There is an urgent need for liberalization and simplification of procedures which govern Mode 4 movement.

Madam President,

It is important that the global discourse on migration does not blur the distinction between regular and irregular migration of people. The latter is a cause for concern as it often has serious socio-political and security implications.

Strengthened international cooperation is required to combat irregular migration as well as to combat people smuggling and trafficking in persons.

Greater international cooperation is required to support and supplement national efforts in addressing the challenges associated with international migration including the issues of brain-drain and capacity building in the South.

Madam President,

Our endeavour should be to realize a humane, orderly and mutually beneficial process of migration for both developed as well as developing countries.

A clear recognition that international migration is a win-win opportunity in an increasingly interconnected world must underpin our approaches to deal with it. We look forward to participating in our ongoing discussion on this issue in the future.

I thank you

648. STATEMENT BY MR. M. KRISHNASSWAMY, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 27 'SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT' AT THE THIRD COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 7, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, I would like to congratulate you and other members of the Bureau on your election and for chairing this important Committee. I assure you of my delegation's full support and cooperation in the deliberations and work of this Committee.

Mr. Chairman,

The 1995 World Summit for Social Development was a significant milestone that recognized the need for fostering international cooperation in promoting social development. It identified three priority areas: poverty eradication; creation of employment opportunities and decent jobs; and fostering just, social and stable societies.

While progress has been recorded in all three major pillars of Social Development, many challenges remain to be overcome.

As the Secretary General's report points out, in the aftermath of recent global financial and economic crisis, widening inequality, high and volatile food and fuel prices and environmental risks, have all been frustrating efforts to promote social development aimed at enhancing the well-being and quality of life of people.

Mr. Chairman,

With over a billion people living in extreme poverty and hunger, we cannot afford but to make inclusive growth our priority. It is, therefore, of utmost importance that we collectively undertake growth stimulating policies to boost demand and create jobs.

At the Rio+20 Summit, the international community renewed its commitment to sustainable development, recognizing poverty to be the greatest global challenge. The post-2015 development agenda must continue to prioritize the eradication of poverty as its central objective.

Mr. Chairman,

In India, the key focus of the Government is to not only have sustainable economic growth but also an inclusive and equitable growth to benefit all sections of the society.

The Government has adopted a multi-pronged approach involving introduction of specific and targeted policies as well as institutional changes to improve delivery of services. We are scaling up domestic investment in several areas such as education, health, affordable housing etc.

Investments in skill-based training, vocational education and promotion of business opportunities are key ingredients for employment generation. We have also initiated steps to build linkages between the education system and our economic needs.

Inclusiveness and empowerment of people is also dependent on accessibility of information about their rights and entitlements made available by law and policy. The government has taken steps to address this aspect.

To illustrate the multi-dimensional nature of our interventions, let me briefly describe one programme - the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme. It is the world's largest cash for work programme, covering 53 million lower income rural households and providing them 100 days of employment annually. Fifty percent work is reserved for women; there is also reservation for disabled persons. This programme has helped break down social inequalities, empower rural people, build up rural infrastructure and revive economic growth.

Mr. Chairman,

The youth are the building blocks of future development. Our effort is to provide them meaningful opportunities for education, health and skills development so that they are fully equipped to chart out their destiny.

The Constitution guarantees universal compulsory education as a fundamental right for every child in the age group 6-14. The enactment of the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act in 2009 provided a momentum to our efforts to address issues of equity and elimination of barriers in accessing education.

Initiatives in the field of education has led to India attaining nearly full enrolment in primary grades of schooling for both boys and girls and narrowing of gender gaps in middle and higher education.

Similarly, the Government's flagship National Rural Health Mission and other innovative health interventions have led to increased life expectancy, increased rates of immunization of children, and substantial decline in infant and maternal mortality rates.

The Government has also recently enacted a comprehensive Food Security Act that covers around 2/3rd of our population and provides for an entitled quantity of food grains per month per individual.

Mr. Chairman,

The government has taken several measures to ensure that persons with disabilities and older persons lead a secure, dignified and productive life.

Our focus is to advance the inclusion of the persons with disabilities by enhancing their accessibility to education, healthcare and employment. Our efforts are underpinned by a comprehensive legal framework.

India is home to over 100 million old persons. The government has put in place appropriate policy and legal framework to address the requirements of financial security, health care and nutrition, shelter and appropriate financial incentives and discounts to senior citizens.

Mr. Chairman,

Inclusive social development is critically dependent on national policy action. States need to scale up mobilization of domestic resources through government reforms, prudent management of resources including natural resources, more effective taxation policies and growth in the job market.

There is, however, need to recognize that the domestic financing gap cannot be plugged through national efforts alone. This needs to be complemented by official development assistance which continues to fall significantly below commitments made by developed countries.

We must also not forget the crucial importance of international cooperation in realizing our goals on social development. Enhanced trade opportunities and market access, more investments, and flexible migration policies are all extremely important and relevant in addressing these challenges.

Mr. Chairman,

The goals that we set for ourselves in 1995 remain far from being realized. Let us redouble our collective efforts to ensure that economic and social development does not remain an aspiration for many, and that we translate this aspiration into a global reality.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

649. Statement by Mr. Arun Jaitley, Member of Parliament, & Member of the Indian Delegation, at Sixth High Level Dialogue on Financing for Development, at the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

NEW YORK, October 7, 2013.

Madam President,

It is my distinct honor to participate in this sixth High Level Dialogue on Financing for Development.

We welcome the opportunity offered by this High Level Dialogue to review the status of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development.

Coming as it does at a time when the international community is giving the final push to efforts for achieving the Millennium Development Goals and simultaneously commencing deliberations for the Post-2015 Development Agenda, this dialogue is indeed very timely.

At the outset, let me associate with the statement made by the distinguished Ambassador of Fiji on behalf of the Group of 77.

Madam President,

Poverty eradication and sustained and inclusive economic growth are the central and overarching priorities of developing countries. Poverty eradication is an indispensable requirement for sustainable development and inclusive economic growth is a sine qua non for eradicating poverty and providing a better quality of life to our people. It is imperative that these priorities of the developing countries are supported by the international community through enhanced financial and technological assistance and through a supportive and fair international economic system.

Madam President,

While we have made significant advances in reducing poverty and achieving human development over the past decade, the progress in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) has been uneven and many of the goals will not be met by 2015.

A key reason for our collective failure to achieve the MDGs has been the shortfall in development financing. The global partnership to provide the support to achieve the MDGs has failed to deliver.

Madam President,

The report of the Secretary General on the follow-up and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and Doha Declaration presents a sobering picture.

The multiple global crises of the past several years have had a deleterious impact on the ability of developing countries to mobilize finance for their development aspirations. Their capacities have been further eroded by the widening gap in aid delivery and reversal of capital flows.

The gap in commitments and disbursement of Official Development Assistance reached US$ 167 billion in 2011 and further widened in 2012. Aid to the Least Developed Countries, who most need assistance, has also dipped in real terms.

It is a matter of serious concern that just as the world commits to accelerating progress towards the MDGs by 2015 and elaborating an ambitious Post-2015 Development Agenda, the prospects for ODA point to a stagnation in the medium term.

At the same time, there appears no light at the end of the tunnel as far as the Doha Development Round of WTO is concerned. The stunted market access for developing countries is exacerbated by rising protectionist tendencies in the developed countries and falling levels of FDI.

Madam President,

It is evident that if we are to succeed in crafting a transformative development agenda for the post-2015 period, we must craft a strengthened global partnership for provision of adequate and enhanced means of implementation to the developing countries as part of it.

The urgent fulfilment by developed countries of their commitment of 0.7% of GNI as ODA should be a starting point of a renewed and strengthened global partnership for the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

The reform of the institutions of global economic governance to give real voice and participation to developing countries must also figure high as part of the new global partnership.

Madam President,

South-South cooperation has increasingly complemented global development cooperation in recent years, even as large developing countries themselves face increased developmental challenges of their own. However, unlike North-South aid, South-South cooperation is a voluntary partnership guided by its own principles. It must therefore remain free from externally imposed norms drawn from North-South assistance. It can neither be a substitute for North-South aid nor can it be used as a pretext to dilute existing aid commitments.

Madam President,

The need for a supportive international economic environment, enhanced investment flows, a supportive multilateral trade regime and a strengthened framework for transfer of technology has never been greater to foster and sustain economic growth and job creation in developing countries.

The Financing for Development Process is a key pillar of the global development agenda. Its fundamental creed of ensuring enhanced and predictable financial resource flows to assist developing countries in pursuing their development priorities, is in fact all the more relevant today and will remain so in the post-2015 period.

It is imperative that we must ensure the full and urgent implementation of the commitments enshrined in the Financing for Development process.

I thank you

650. STATEMENT BY SHRI ARUN JAITLEY, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT && MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 110 "MEASURES TO ELIMINATE INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 8, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, I congratulate you for your election as the Chairperson of the Sixth Committee. I also congratulate other members of the Bureau on their election. I assure you of full cooperation and support of the Indian delegation during the proceedings of the Committee.

I would also like to thank the Secretary-General for his report A/68/180 dated 23 July 2013 entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

Mr. Chairman,

The international community is continuously facing a grave challenge from terrorism. It is a scourge that undermines peace, democracy and freedom. It endangers the foundation of democratic societies. Terrorists are waging an asymmetric warfare against the international community, and are a major most threat to the international peace and security.

India holds the firm view that no cause whatsoever or grievance could justify terrorism. India condemns terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, including the State-sponsored cross-border terrorism, and reiterates the call for the adoption of a holistic approach that ensures zero-tolerance towards terrorism.

Mr. Chairman,

India strongly supports all efforts, especially within the purview of the United Nations that strengthen international and regional cooperation in the fight against terrorism. The success in the fight against terrorism goes hand-in-hand with progress in strengthening counter-terrorism cooperation and exchange of information at the international, regional and sub-regional level. India has been in the forefront of global counter-terrorism efforts and is part of all major global initiatives against international terrorism, including the Financial Action Task Force (FATF).

Mr. Chairman,

The Global Counter Terrorism Strategy is a unique and universally agreed strategic framework to counter terrorism. The setting up of the Counter Terrorism Implementation Task Force (CTITF) in 2010 has provided an institutional framework to support the implementation of the Strategy as well as the harmonization of an integrated counter-terrorism approach within the UN system.

An effective and balanced implementation of the Strategy requires greater international and regional cooperation. In this context, we also count on the UN Counter Terrorism Center established within the CTITF Office, to supplement these efforts.

Mr. Chairman,

We strongly favour the strengthening of the normative framework at the United Nations to effectively deal with the scourge of terrorism. We continue to stress the need for expanding the scope of the legal instruments and the enforcement efforts to destroy safe havens for terrorists, their financial flows and support networks and to bring the terrorists to justice.

In this context, we attach significance to the work undertaken by the Ad-hoc Committee towards negotiations of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism (CCIT). In our view, the 2007 package submitted by the Coordinator of the Ad-hoc Committee presents a viable and, delicately balanced text of the Convention. At its 16th session in April this year, the Ad-hoc Committee has recommended for the establishment of a working group of the Sixth Committee during the 69th UNGA session, with a view to finalizing the process on the draft Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. We reiterate our support to the Coordinator's text and are hopeful that all States, considering the seriousness of the threat of the menace of terrorism and the importance of the measures to deal therewith, will consider according their acceptance to the text of the draft Convention.

Mr. Chairman,

We believe that in addition to the law enforcement measures, the preventive aspect is equally important. Focus on development, education, social integration, tolerance, rule of law and respect for human rights are the integral components of such an approach.

Mr. Chairman,

My own country, India, has faced the scourge of terrorism for over two-and-a-half decades. Indeed, our entire region, has been wracked by the activities of the biggest terrorist actors in the world, be they Al-Qaida, elements of Taliban or Lashkar-e-Taiba, Jamat-ud Daawa and others. Terrorism, extremism and radicalization continue to pose a serious challenge to peace, progress and prosperity in the region.

Within the framework of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC), we have the SAARC Regional Convention on Suppression of Terrorism of 1987, and its Additional Protocol of 2004 on the financing of terrorism, and the SAARC Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters of 2008. India is working with fellow SAARC nations to strengthen counter-terrorism cooperation.

Mr. Chairman,

The Government of India has taken important steps towards strengthening its strategic, legal and operational framework in the fight against terrorism. India is a party to 13 international counter-terrorism conventions and protocols.

Among the national legislations, the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act incorporates provisions dealing with all aspects of terrorism including conspiracy and incitement to terrorism. The Act criminalizes the raising of funds for terrorist activities, holding of proceeds of terrorism, harboring of terrorists, unauthorized possession or use of any bomb, dynamite or hazardous explosive substance or other lethal weapons.

The Weapons of Mass Destruction (Prevention) Act, 2005 provides detailed measures preventing the falling of weapons of mass destruction or dual use materials in the hands of terrorists and non-state actors.

The Foreign Contribution (Regulation) Act, 2010 seeks to further streamline monitoring of all foreign contributions received by non-governmental organizations and religious, educational and charitable organizations.

India has concluded more than forty bilateral treaties on extradition and mutual legal assistance in criminal matters.

Mr. Chairman,

As part of operational counter-terrorism framework, the National Investigation Agency is mandated to investigate and prosecute offences affecting the sovereignty, security and integrity of India, friendly relations with foreign States and offences under Acts enacted to implement international treaties, and resolutions of the United Nations and other international organizations. A National Intelligence Grid (NATGRID), linking data bases for constructing actionable intelligence to combat terrorism and internal security threats, has also been set up. The Financial Intelligence Unit-India (FIU-IND) has launched the Project FINnet (Financial Intelligence Network) with the objective to adopt best practices and appropriate technology to collect, analyze and disseminate valuable financial information for combating money laundering and related crimes.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the fight against terrorism has to be unrelenting and fought across all fronts. The international community cannot afford selective approaches in dealing with terrorist groups or in dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism. We must step up our collective efforts with real cooperation among member states to confront the scourge of terrorism squarely and decisively. Terrorism is a Frankenstein monster. Resort to the use of terrorism as an instrument of State Policy is short-sighted. Indeed, those who have taken recourse to it have invariably themselves suffered immensely from it proving the age old dictum that those who play with the sword, shall also perish by it.

Thank you

651. STATEMENT BY MR. M. KRISHNASSWAMY, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 108 - 'CRIME PREVENTION & CRIMINAL JUSTICE & ITEM 109: 'INTERNATIONAL DRUG CONTROL' AT THE THIRD COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 9, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, let me thank the Secretary General for all his reports under these agenda items and the Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) for his statement.

Mr. Chairman,

The World Drug Report 2013 points that the manufacture and use of substances that are under control remain largely stable compared with 2009. While the international mechanisms have not been able to reduce the drugs problem, it has ensured that it does not escalate.

The forthcoming high-level review of the progress made in the implementation by Member States of the Political Declaration and Plan of Action in March 2014 will provide an important opportunity to examine the challenges that exist in the implementation of the international drug control system¹, as also the challenges posed by the fast evolving nature of new psychoactive substances (NPS) and synthetic drugs.

The scale of problem involving greater use of NPS and synthetic drugs is demonstrated by the fact that such NPS now number over 350, much more than the 234 substances under control.

It is satisfying to note that UNODC and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs have begun international consultations to address this new challenge. India has already notified one such NPS - 'Ketamine' subjecting it to stringent control measures.

Mr. Chairman,

Another major challenge is use of synthetic drugs, which are chemically synthesized using certain precursor chemicals. Since precursor chemicals have valid industrial, scientific and medicinal uses, it is important that we control them in a manner, which limits their diversion and abuse but not affect their legitimate uses.

India supports the United Nations mechanisms for control of precursor chemicals such as the 'PEN-online' system developed by the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) for notifying countries in advance before precursor chemicals are exported.

The current International Drug Control system is rooted in the three United Nations Conventions namely the UN Single Convention on Narcotics Drugs 1961, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances, 1971 and the UN Convention against illicit trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, 1988.

In March this year, India has notified a new regulation for control of large number of precursor chemicals including ephedrine and pseudoephedrine used for manufacture of synthetic drugs like Amphetamine Type Stimulants (ATS) - a controlled substance.

India strongly supports the Paris Pact initiative of UNODC and is contributing US $ 200,000 to the Phase 4 of this Initiative.

Drug trafficking is one of the most severe challenges that confront us today. That money from drug trafficking finances other forms of criminal activity, including terrorism and transnational organized crime, is well documented.

Mr. Chairman,

Terrorism remains a grave threat to security and stability everywhere and extracts a heavy toll of innocent lives around the world. It endangers the very foundations of all free democratic societies.

From Africa to Asia, we have seen several manifestations of this menace in the last few days alone. State-sponsored cross-border terrorism is of particular concern to India.

We need to renew our commitment, especially here at the UN, for concerted, cohesive and continuing global action that ensures zero-tolerance towards terrorism. We need to remove the moral and legal ambiguities that allow terrorists to gain succor and even legitimacy.

There can be no tolerance for States sheltering, arming, training or financing terrorists. Nor can they absolve themselves of the responsibility to prevent their territories from being used to launch acts of terrorism.

Globalization and significant advances in information and communication technology provide a platform for terrorists to operate across continents on a real time basis. This has to be met with a global response.

It is high time that the international community demonstrates the necessary political will to conclude the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism to strengthen the normative framework against the increasingly sophisticated and globalized terrorist challenge.

Mr. Chairman,

Transnational organized crimes continue to adversely impact many parts of the world threatening the rule of law and hindering economic development.

India is a State Party to the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its Protocols, and to the UN Convention against Corruption.

India has enacted strong domestic legislation and entered into bilateral agreements to prevent money laundering, and counter terrorism and organized crime. India is also a member of the Financial Action Task Force.

India is deeply concerned at the growing scale worldwide of trafficking of persons. The 2010 UN Global Plan of Action (GPA) against Trafficking in Persons provides a holistic and comprehensive framework to intensify our efforts to tackle this menace.

We are also concerned about the new emerging areas such as cyber-crime, economic fraud, education related fraud and identity thefts, and their links with other criminal and terrorist activities.

Mr. Chairman,

India is of the view that ever-evolving cybercrime poses a new global challenge which calls for more effective global responses. National capacity-building and international cooperation need to be further strengthened.

The comprehensive study on cybercrime prepared by the UNODC under auspices of the expert group examining the options to strengthen existing and to propose new national and international legal or other responses to cybercrime is a useful input in our deliberations.

While India welcomes the progress made in promoting greater international cooperation and coordination among law enforcement and criminal justice institutions in combating transnational crimes in recent years, more needs to be done.

We also need to place greater emphasis on capacity building and technical assistance, especially in dealing with new and emerging forms of crime. We strongly advocate the centrality of crime prevention and the criminal justice system to the rule of law and support the UN efforts in this regard.

Mr. Chairman,

In conclusion, I would reiterate our strong support and commitment to working with the international community through various regional, international and UN mechanisms towards a world free of illicit drugs, money laundering, trafficking in persons, illegal arms transaction, transnational organized crime and terrorism.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

652. STATEMENT BY MR. S.C. MISRA, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 85: "THE RULE OF LAW AT THE NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL LEVELS" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 9, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I congratulate you on your assuming the chairmanship of the Sixth Committee of the United Nations General Assembly. I also congratulate the other members of the Bureau on their election.

Mr. Chairman

The agenda item "Rule of Law at the National and International Levels" has been on the agenda of the United Nations General Assembly since its sixty-first session. The principal objective for inclusion of this agenda item remained to strengthen the United Nations attention to the rule of law at all levels.

The last General Assembly session has been remarkable, in which the United Nations hosted a High-Level-Meeting on the Rule of Law at the National and International Levels. The Heads of States and Governments adopted a Declaration on the Rule of Law as an outcome document.

Mr. Chairman

The outcome document takes stock of the contemporary political, social and economic conditions and stresses upon the implementation of the rule of law principles, in order to achieve the objective of the maintenance of international peace and security, peaceful co-existence, gender justice and development.

The Outcome Document stresses the importance of continuing efforts to reform the Security Council. We consider it essential to reform the Security Council at the earliest possible to make the body broadly representative, efficient and transparent.

The Outcome document reaffirms the duty of all States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means.

Mr. Chairman

We thank the UN Secretary-General for his report A/68/213 entitled "Strengthening and coordinating United Nations rule of law activities". The report throws light on the key achievements and challenges in the rule of law at the national and international levels over the past year, and also reflects on the activities carried out further to the Declaration of last year's high-level meeting.

We agree with the notion in paragraph 36 of the report that the laws must be publically promulgated, equally enforced and independently adjudicated and should be consistent with the international human rights standards.

It is important to note that the law making activity at the national level is exclusively the domain of the national legislature. The rule of law is a fundamental concept to be fully observed in the law making and in the implementation thereof; however, there is no established definition of the term "Rule of law".

Mr. Chairman

According to the General Assembly Resolution 67/ 97, the focus of our debate in this session is on the sub-topic of "The rule of law and the peaceful settlement of international disputes".

It is our considered view that settling international disputes by peaceful means should have the highest priority to achieve the goal of the maintenance of international peace and security. Article 33 of the UN Charter deserves special mention in this regard, which obliges the States to settle their disputes by peaceful means including by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

The independent judiciary; efficient and transparent judicial system; and equal access to justice by all are a must to promote the rule of law.

Mr. Chairman

The judicial settlement is an important mechanism available to the Member States for the peaceful settlement of their disputes. The International Court of Justice has a prominent role in the peaceful settlement of disputes.

The ICJ has proved remarkably efficient in fulfilling the task of peaceful resolution of disputes and has acquired a well deserved reputation as an impartial institution with the highest legal standards, in accordance with its mandate under the UN Charter. The Court has contributed significantly towards settling legal disputes between Sovereign States, thus promoting the rule of law in international relations.

Also, Mr. Chairman, we recognize the significant role of the Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA) in the peaceful settlement of disputes, which provides services for the resolution of disputes involving various combinations of States, state entities, intergovernmental organizations, and private parties.

Mr. Chairman

India is a strong supporter of respect for sovereignty, integrity and political independence of States. We believe in avoiding any unauthorized intervention in a State's internal affairs or use of force in any conflict or post-conflict situation. Adherence to the rule of law principles and enhanced cooperation among Member States in this direction at all levels could ensure the non-use of force in international relations and the peaceful resolution of international disputes.

I thank you Mr. Chairman.

653. Statement by Ambassador D.B. Venkatesh Varma, Permanent Representative of India to the Conference of Disarmament, Geneva at the General Debate of the First Committee of 68th United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 9, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset allow me to congratulate you on your election as the Chairman of the First Committee of the 68th UN General Assembly and assure you of our full cooperation. We associate ourselves with the statement made by Indonesia on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement.

Mr. Chairman,

This year we meet against the back drop of a complex international situation and the difficulties being faced in fashioning multilaterally agreed and effective responses to the multifarious challenges to international peace and security. The First Committee can play a substantive role in bringing purpose and direction to our efforts as we seek to build international consensus to meet these challenges.

Mr Chairman,

India has been unwavering in its support for universal and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and other WMDs. Our policy is consistent with the highest priority to the goal of nuclear disarmament enshrined in the Final Document of the First Special Session of UN General Assembly on Disarmament and the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan of 1988 for a Nuclear Weapon Free and Non-violent World Order. Speaking at the 68th session of the UNGA, on 28th September 2013, Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh voiced India's support for time bound, universal, non-discriminatory, phased and verifiable nuclear disarmament. India remains convinced that its security would be strengthened in a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order. This conviction is based both on principle and pragmatism.

Mr. Chairman,

India firmly believes that the goal of nuclear disarmament can be achieved by a step-by-step process underwritten by universal commitment and an agreed multilateral framework that is global and non-discriminatory. There is need for a meaningful dialogue among States possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. India's resolutions in the First Committee give expression to some of these ideas and have found support from a large number of States as steps for the progressive de-legitimization of nuclear weapons. Our Working Paper submitted to the UN General Assembly in 2006 also outlined a number of specific steps in this regard. India welcomes the high level political commitment shown by UN Members to nuclear disarmament at the High Level Meeting held on September 26, which was addressed by Shri Salman Khurshid, India's Minister for External Affairs. India supports the proposed NAM resolution on follow up to the High Level Meeting on Nuclear Disarmament.

As a responsible nuclear power India has adopted the policy of credible minimum deterrence and a posture of no-first-use and non-use against non-nuclear weapon States and is prepared to convert these undertakings into multilateral legal arrangements. Our proposal for a Convention banning the use of nuclear weapons remains on the table. India remains committed to maintaining a unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. Without prejudice to the priority attached to nuclear disarmament, India is ready to negotiate a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices on the basis of the Shannon mandate. As the single multilateral disarmament negotiating body of the international community the CD is the appropriate forum for undertaking FMCT negotiations. India is a nuclear weapon State and will approach these negotiations as such. India would be willing to join an FMCT that meets our national security interests.

India is committed to working with the international community to advance our common objectives of non-proliferation, including through strong export controls and membership of multilateral export control regimes and strengthening the implementation of UNSCR 1540. India does not see a contradiction between nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation as these are mutually reinforcing. India has contributed actively to the Nuclear Security Summit process. India also contributed to the success of the July 2013 IAEA Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Security. We fully share global concerns on nuclear terrorism and clandestine proliferation, which continue to pose serious threats to international security. It is important to maintain public confidence in the viability of nuclear power as a safe and secure energy source through enhanced international standards on nuclear safety and security.

India attaches high importance to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the Biological Weapons Convention. These two treaties are examples of non-discriminatory treaties in the field of disarmament which could effectively lead to a total elimination of specific type of weapons of mass destruction. India completed the destruction of its chemical weapons stockpiles in 2009 as per its obligations and within the stipulated time frame under the CWC. The recent events in Syria show the importance of the complete destruction and elimination of all chemical weapons stockpiles in the world as soon as possible and that terrorists and non state actors must be prevented from gaining access to these weapons. The use of chemical weapons anywhere and by anyone must be condemned and the international norm against the use of chemical weapons must not be breached. India supports the ongoing efforts of the OPCW for the expedited destruction and elimination of chemical weapon stockpiles in Syria.

India continues to contribute effectively to the BWC discussions in the new inter-sessional period 2012-16. The vitality of this Convention is important for enabling State Parties to face the security challenges, including the threat of bio-terrorism, posed by the rapid pace of developments in biological sciences and technology in the 21st century.

We support continuing international efforts to strengthen the international legal framework to ensure the safety and security of space assets and to prevent the weaponization of outer space. While universal and non-discriminatory transparency and confidence building measures can play a useful complementary role, they cannot substitute legally binding instruments in this field. It is also important that all the major space-faring nations are involved in any multilateral endeavour related to prevention of arms race in outer space in order to enhance the possibility of universal acceptance of its outcome.

India participated actively in the negotiations for the Arms Trade Treaty in the expectation that such a treaty would make a real impact on illicit trafficking in conventional arms and their illicit use especially by terrorists and other unauthorized and unlawful non-state actors. During the ATT negotiations India consistently stressed that the treaty should ensure a balance of obligations between exporting and importing States. However, the finalized treaty text did not meet our requirements on these counts. We are undertaking a full and thorough assessment of the ATT from the perspective of our defence, security and foreign policy interests.

We made positive contribution to the work of the GGE which reviewed the operation of the UN Register of Conventional Arms this year. We look forward to the Biennial Meeting of States of the UN Programme of Action on Small Arms and Light Weapons to be held next year. We remain strongly committed to the CCW process in strengthening the rules and principles of international humanitarian law.

India will make detailed statements on some of these issues during the thematic debate, including on the UN disarmament machinery.

Mr. Chairman,

Lastly, I would like to mention that as in the past years India would present three resolutions at this First Committee namely, Convention on the Prohibition of Use of Nuclear Weapons, Reducing Nuclear Danger and Measures to Prevent Terrorists from Acquiring Weapons of Mass Destruction. India seeks the support of all members for these resolutions.

Thank you

654. Statement by Mr, Satish Chandra Misra, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation on Agenda Item 111 Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the Organization at the 68th Session of the United Nations General ,Assembly.

New York, October 9, 2013.

Mr. President,

I am privileged to address the UN General Assembly today. Let me congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the Presidency of the 68th session of the UN General Assembly.

I thank the Secretary General for a compressive annual report on the Work of the Organization. It covers a wide spectrum of issues that inform the activities of the United Nations. It also underscores the global and interconnected nature of the challenges we face, as well as highlights the unfinished agenda of development and reform. It is important that the socio-political challenges in the West Asian region are addressed in an inclusive and peaceful manner.

Mr. President,

With less than 850 days remaining for their fulfillment, we need to accord the highest priority to the achievement of Millennium Development Goals (MDGs).

Substantial progress has been made in reducing poverty, yet our gains and progress has been uneven and short on expectations. Secretary General's report points out that almost one billion people will still live in extreme poverty in 2015.

Eradication of poverty therefore must remain the core overarching objective of the Post-2015 Development Agenda, including under the SDGs.

The quest for sustainability will ring hollow as long as there exists deep-imbances in the consumption of natural resources and carbon-intensive lifestyles in the developed world. The fact still remains that the richest billion people consume two-thirds of earth's resources whereas the bottom billion a meager 1%. On climate change, India remains fully committed to crafting an ambitious, balanced, and comprehensive outcome to negotiations in accordance with the principles and provisions of the UNFCCC.

As we embark on a process of framing Sustainable Development Goals, crucial issues such as that of resource mobilization, be it ODA, technology transfer, trade or FDI, must find appropriate priority and be enshrined in the principles of Common but Differentiated Responsibilities (CBDR) and equity. In so far as our development partnership initiatives go, we are resolved to carry forward and expand our multi-faceted and vibrant cooperation with Africa, including through the framework of the India-Africa Forum Summit.

Similarly, we will continue to build on our commitments for enhanced cooperation with the Least Developed Countries, the Landlocked Developing Countries, and the Small Island Developing States within the overall rubric of South-South Cooperation.

Mr. President,

Terrorism remains a grave threat to security and stability everywhere and extracts a heavy toll of innocent lives around the world. From Africa to Asia we have seen several manifestations of this menace. The international community has long acknowledged the ever present and pervasive threat posed by terrorism. No country, city or region is immune from this global scourge.

And yet, regretfully, we have failed ourselves by continuing to procrastinate on concluding the Comprehensive Convention against International Terrorism. It is time that member-states summoned the necessary political will to agree on the CCIT as a sound legal-framework for the fight against terrorism. We need concerted global action. Such action should be predicated on 'zero tolerance' towards terrorism and aimed at systematically dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism.

Mr. President,

India has a proud association with UN peacekeeping since its very inception. Over 150,000 of our uniformed-personnel have participated in this flagship endeavour of the United Nations.

As peacekeeping moves forward, we must remain mindful of the challenges of operating in increasingly complex environments. Not only should the mandates be realistic but their framing should be inclusive of all stakeholders in a meaningful manner. Ambitious mandates require matching resources. We also need to be mindful of peacekeepers' safety while crafting these mandates.

It is also imperative that those who threaten and attack UN peacekeepers are held accountable. Cases where UN peacekeepers have laid down their lives due to attacks by militias and non state actors must be thoroughly investigated and perpetrators of such acts brought to justice expeditiously.

Mr. President,

We note with appreciation the initiatives to modernize and reform the Secretariat, including through large-scale business transformation projects such as the new enterprise resource planning system (Umoja), International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS), Managed Mobility of Secretariat Staff, and the Capital Master Plan. While each involves considerable investment, we see them as important drivers in modernising the UN.

However, it is our deep-rooted conviction that the relevance of the United Nations ultimately hinges on more fundamental reform of its governance architecture that is frozen in another era that perpetuates the rights of the haves of the mid-1940s. It is only through such governance reform that the UN can truly invigorate action on issues of pressing global concern, be it issues of peace and security, climate change, development, or human rights.

Let me therefore conclude, Mr. President, by raising something that inexplicably does not find even mention in the Secretary-General's report.

That is, the important issue of Security Council reform where inter-governmental negotiations have not seen much progress inspite of a clear affirmation by an overwhelming majority of the member-states for expansion in both the permanent and non-permanent categories.

We need to build on this by immediately commencing real negotiations based on a negotiation text, as is the case in all UN processes. It is imperative that this process is imparted a sense of urgency and momentum by pressing for a 'result based timeline' to achieve early reforms of the Security Council.

The year 2015, which would be the 70th anniversary of the United Nations, as well as 10 years following the Millennium Summit Declaration, in which our Heads of State and Government mandated us to achieve early reforms of the Security Council, will be an important occasion therefore to deliver some concrete results and an expanded Security Council reflecting contemporary realities. I thank you, Mr. President.

655. Statement by Mr. E. Ahamed, Minister of State for External Affairs at the General Debate of the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 10, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, let me congratulate you and the members of the Bureau on assuming the leadership of the Second Committee.

India associates itself with the statement delivered by the distinguished Ambassador of Fiji on behalf of the Group of 77.

Mr. Chairman,

The Second Committee's mandate includes a host of important development issues which are of core concern to the developing countries.

In the coming year, owing to the convergence of three historic processes - the final push for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), follow-up to the Rio+20 Conference and the Post-2015 Development Agenda - the work of the Second Committee assumes added significance.

This is a time of abiding challenges that we must confront, but also a time of key opportunities to strengthen development cooperation that we must seize.

Mr. Chairman,

We welcome the Declaration of the Special Event to follow-up efforts to achieve MDGs. This should now guide our efforts as we give the final push to our efforts to achieve the MDGs and take the first steps towards the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

At Rio+20, world leaders had categorically reaffirmed the Rio principles in particular the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

The similar reaffirmation of these principles in the Declaration of the MDG Special Event must now leave no doubt as to their continued relevance and central role in the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Mr. Chairman,

In its deliberations, the Second Committee must place paramount importance to advancing international collaboration for eradication of poverty and achieving sustained inclusive economic growth. These two imperatives must remain at the centre of global development cooperation discourse for the post-2015 period as well.

Building on the progress made in reducing poverty under the MDGs, we must now make an ambitious push to eradicate extreme poverty by 2030.

It is absolutely critical that the core human development objectives enshrined in the MDGs are carried over into the post-2015 period as well.

We must place high priority on promoting women's access to economic opportunities which is a key driver of inclusive development.

Rapid, sustained and inclusive economic growth is the only way for developing countries to lift their populations out of poverty, drive gains in human development and maintain peace and stability.

We must pursue growth promoting policies and a development-oriented outcome of the Doha round of negotiations at the WTO.

Through our deliberations, we must promote greater mobilization of resources and generate investments for building productive capacities in the developing countries.

At the same time, we must take meaningful steps to reform the institutions of global economic governance to give real voice and participation to developing countries.

Mr. Chairman,

As we evaluate the progress made in achieving the MDGs, it is clear that one of the key reasons for our mixed record has been the failure of the global partnership to support the efforts of the most vulnerable developing countries.

It is a matter of serious concern that even as we are giving the final push to our efforts for the achievement of MDGs and prepare an ambitious template for the Post-2015 Development Agenda, global aid levels have fallen for two consecutive years.

The imperative of a supportive international economic environment, enhanced aid and investment flows, a supportive multilateral trade regime and a strengthened framework for transfer of technology must anchor the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

A transformative agenda for the Post-2015 period requires a transformative shift in which we have been looking for solutions so far. Business as usual will not be sufficient.

An ambitious Post-2015 Development Agenda must be matched by an equally ambitious and meaningful global partnership.

Mr. Chairman,

Sustainability is a key element in current global discussions.

India is fully committed to sustainable development. In fact, sustainability has been mainstreamed as one of the primary objectives of India's 12th five year plan.

However, our efforts to mainstream sustainability will remain hollow unless we are able to confront the issues of inequity in consumption of global resources and reducing the unsustainable ecological footprints of the developed countries.

The burden of sustainability cannot be placed on the poor. Livelihood concerns of the developing world cannot be compromised for lifestyle interests of others.

Mr. Chairman,

The Second Committee must continue to give a strong focus to the special needs and interests to the most vulnerable groups of countries, in particular the Least Developed Countries, the Land-locked Developing Countries and the Small Island Developing States.

We look forward to ambitious and comprehensive outcomes to the 10-year review conferences for SIDS and LLDCs respectively, which are to be held in 2014.

In the spirit of South-South solidarity and in line with our long standing partnerships with them, India has made financial contributions for the success of these important conferences.

Before concluding Mr. Chairman, let me once again assure you of India's full support to your endeavours for fashioning an action-oriented and development focussed agenda of the Second Committee in the coming year.

I thank you

656. Statement by Mr. Aran Jaitley, Member of Parliament & the Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 131 - Financial Reports & Reports of the Board of Auditors at the 5th Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 11, 2013.

Mr. Chairman, Thank you for giving me the floor.

At the outset, I would like to congratulate you on your election to the Chairmanship of the 5th Committee and to the members of the bureau.

Mr. Chairman,

The Board of Auditors constitutes the core of UN's oversight mechanism. Its observations and recommendations play an important role in UN's financial and administrative management.

My delegation wishes to commend Board for its high-quality reports that continue to guide the work of this Committee and that of the General Assembly in administrative and financial matters.

I would, therefore, like to thank the Chairman and the other members of the Board of Auditors for their reports. I am also appreciative of Mr. Carlos Ruiz, Chairman of the ACABQ.

Mr. Chairman, Major management reform initiatives are currently under implementation in the United Nations in the fields of information technology, accounting, human resource, field support, and capital master plan. These are resource intensive projects.

We are happy that preliminary phases of UMOJA have been launched and that the IPSAS implementation is on course. We have also noted improvements in UMOJA's project governance.

We now look forward to elucidation of the end-state visions and the road map for the implementation. In this regard, we would like to underscore the need for better and expeditious follow-up action on Board's recommendations. There is much scope to improve the synergy between various oversight bodies in the UN system in an effective manner.

The success of these initiatives will depend not only on their timely implementation, but also on their sound financial management and delivery of all intended benefits. Needless to say, the case for sound oversight has never been as pertinent as today.

Mr. Chairman,

As the Leader of the Opposition in my Parliament, I can affirm the critical importance of strong audit institutions for ensuring public accountability.

Indeed, the competence of our Audit Office is playing a stellar role in consolidating the democratic fabric of our constitutional order by ensuring accountability and oversight in public finances.

Mr. Chairman,

The agenda for the upcoming session is substantial. We are going to deliberate the programme budget for the biennium 2014-15, second performance report, special political missions, and the mobility framework besides the ongoing management-reform projects. Most importantly, revised appropriations for the 2012-13 biennium will be before the Committee for its decision.

Mr. Chairman,

Most of the recent budgets have been characterized by low-level initial appropriations that are supplemented at the revised appropriation stage.

There is a fundamental disconnect between the creation of mandates and our aspiration to freeze budget-levels well ahead in time.

Mali, Syria, and Great Lakes all testify to the reality that the prediction in budgetary matters is as difficult as the prediction of crisis itself if not more.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

657. Statement by Mr. E. Ahamed, Minister of State of External Affairs General Debate - Agenda Item 28 "Advancement of Women" in the Third Committee, 68th United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 11, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, please allow me to thank the Secretary General for all his reports under this agenda item.

Empowering women politically, economically, educationally and socially has been a major objective of the Government of India to contribute to our national pursuit of inclusive development.

Our Government's efforts are directed not only at adopting appropriate legislative and policy framework for advancement of women but also at raising social awareness of the issue of gender equality and women empowerment to fight deep-rooted social prejudices and stereotypes.

Mr. Chairman,

We are proud of the fact that India gave women equal voting rights more than 60 years ago at the time of our independence.

In 1992, India provided for 33% reservation to women in rural and local government bodies launching the mass political mobilization of women unprecedented globally given its scale.

The Parliament raised the percentage of women to 50% in local bodies in 2009. Today, close to 1.5 million elected women representatives are working in these bodies contributing to tangible progress in bridging the gender-divide in decision making and at the social level.

Mr. Chairman,

India's five-year development plans have recognized the importance of women both as contributors and agents of change. Gender is a cross cutting theme in all our development plans.

Since 2005, the Gender Budget Statement has been introduced in the annual Union Budget to reflect budgetary allocations for programmes that benefit women.

There is also a Joint Parliamentary Committee on Empowerment of Women to ensure that legislations passed by Parliament are gender sensitive.

Mr. Chairman,

Education is perhaps the single most important instrument for social and economic transformation. The 2011 census indicates a positive increase of 11.8 % in literacy rate amongst women.

This is a consequence of constant efforts of the Government in ensuring access to education by adopting innovative schemes such as Sarva Shiksha Abhiyaan (or Education for all), Mid-Day Meals and the National Literacy Mission.

The enactment of the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act in 2009 provided a momentum to our efforts to address issues of equity and elimination of barriers in accessing education.

With nearly universal enrollment for primary education, our current focus is on the expansion of secondary education and its accessibility to girls, and skill development for improved employability.

Health is another vital component in empowering women. The National Rural Health Mission launched in 2005 provides healthcare to all villages, with particular focus on maternal and children's health programmes.

Under this programme, Accredited Social Health Activists (ASHA), who are trained health volunteers, provide a link between health centres and villages to ensure easy access to universal immunization, care of the new born, improved nutrition levels and healthcare for women.

These health interventions have led to increased life expectancy, increased rates of immunization of children, and substantial decline in infant and maternal mortality rates.

Mr. Chairman,

There are several schemes in place for socio-economic empowerment of women. The Government has proposed to set up India's first all-Women's Bank to assist women entrepreneurs and has allocated US$ 200 million as initial capital.

To help rural women leverage their strength, increase bargaining power and enhance capacities and skills through joint action, the Government has encouraged the Self-Help Groups (SHG) - a movement that started as people's initiative. There are around 6 million SHGs of which 80% (4.8 million) are women's groups, covering almost 100 million beneficiaries.

The Government measures for SHGs, rural women and women entrepreneurs include easy access to credit, provision of loans at lower interest rates and support to enhancing women's rights to land ownership and providing infrastructure support for women farmers.

At least 50% of the work is reserved for women in the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme, which responds to the needs of 53 million poor rural households by ensuring them 100 days employment per year. The scheme mandates equal pay for men and women.

Mr. Chairman,

To ensure real empowerment of women, it is equally important to firmly address the problem of exploitation and violence against women.

Violence against women and girls must be unequivocally condemned and tackled. We need to ensure that the stigmatization of victims, the trivialization of the crime and impunity of perpetrators are all stopped.

The Government has taken a number of steps to strengthen and expand the legislative framework in this area. It has set up fast track courts to try cases pertaining to violence against women.

The amendments to the criminal law, which were carried out earlier this year, significantly broaden the definition of sexual assault and harassment, and aims for greater accountability of public officials.

The 'Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Act was adopted in February 2013 covering women employed in both public and private sectors. The Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act came into force in November, 2012.

Mr. Chairman,

The Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act 2005 addresses the issue of both marital and familial abuse. It recognises that violence can take various forms, including physical, economic, social and psychological.

There is also a comprehensive legislative and policy framework to address the problem of trafficking of women and girls. The 2010 UN Global Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons provides a holistic and comprehensive framework to intensify international efforts to tackle this menace.

The Government is introducing "One Stop Crisis Centre for Women" in 100 identified critical districts during the course of this year with the aim to provide integrated services required by women subjected to violence.

Mr Chairman,

Gender equality and the empowerment of women remains the key focus area of social development and distributive justice globally. India is fully committed to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and its Platform of Action.

Let me reaffirm our full commitment to advancing the goal of gender equality and empowerment of women globally and to eliminating the scourge of violence against women and girls. We firmly support the efforts of the United Nations, in particular UN Women in this regard.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

658. STATEMENT BY MR. E. AHAMED, MINISTER OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, AT THE JOINT DEBATE ON THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA [AGENDA ITEM 73] THE INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL FOR THE FORMER YUGOSLAVIA [AGENDA ITEM 74]; AND INTERNATIONAL RESIDUAL MECHANISM FOR CRIMINAL TRIBUNALS [AGENDA ITEM 132]. AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 14, 2013.

Mr. President,

Please allow me to begin by congratulating you on your assuming the Presidency of the 68th session of the United Nations General Assembly and reiterate the assurance of the full cooperation and support of the Indian delegation in the proceedings of the General Assembly session.

Mr. President,

I thank the Presidents of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR), the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY), and the International Residual Mechanism for these Tribunals for their reports, and record our appreciation for their work.

We commend the efforts of the two Prosecutors for having undertaken outreach initiatives, including training, aimed at strengthening the capacity of the national systems to handle the referred cases effectively.

Mr. President,

We are glad to note that both the branches of the Mechanism have, by now, become operational, the one for the ICTR in Arusha, Tanzania, by commencing its functioning on 1 July 2012; and the other for the ICTY in the Hague, Netherlands that was launched recently on 1 July 2013. This would ensure the smooth transition of their pending work to the respective Residual Mechanism.

Mr. President,

The establishment of the Mechanism, by the Security Council, vide resolution 1966 of 22 December 2010, is a key step of the Completion Strategy of the two Criminal Tribunals. The Mechanism is mandated to perform a number of essential functions previously carried out by the two Tribunals, including securing the arrest, transfer and prosecution of the fugitives still at large.

It is worth mentioning that the Arusha Branch of the Mechanism has, in the past one year, conducted a number of judicial activities and performed functions ranging from the protection of witnesses to responding to requests for assistance from national jurisdictions. We are confident that the Mechanism will successfully build upon the work of its predecessors with perfection in accordance with its mandate and will thus complete the pending judicial work efficiently in a timely manner without compromising fair trial rights. The efforts towards the relocation of persons acquitted by the Tribunals and those convicted persons who have completed their sentences and have been released are significant from the humanitarian and reconciliation angles and should be accorded priority.

Mr. President,

The international community had set up international criminal courts and tribunals to achieve the objective of punishing the guilty and ending impunity.

However, trials through the international courts do not always have the desired impact on the affected communities by helping in healing and reconciliation. When such trials are conducted by foreign judicial systems or Tribunals, with little or no connection to the perpetrators, victims, or offenses, they are invariably decoupled from the political, social and economic context of the affected country and its people.

Despite the important role which has been played by international criminal tribunals towards accountability and ending impunity, strengthening of national judicial systems to prosecute serious crimes remains crucial as States have the primary responsibility to prosecute serious crimes committed in their territory or by their nationals. Therefore creating effective national legal and judicial institutions that uphold the rule of law is essential and it is imperative for the international community to continue to promote strengthening of national criminal justice systems by building capacities of national investigating, prosecuting and judicial agencies.

In this regard, the referral of six cases by the ICTR to the Rwandan authorities for trial holds significance.

Mr. President,

The international criminal justice is also criticized for its selectivity. In order to ensure the credibility of the system, selective and discriminatory approaches should be shunned and the role of political organizations be minimized for consistent application of the law.

Thank you

659. STATEMENT BY MR. M. KRISHNASSWAMY, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, AT THE GENERAL DEBATE UNDER AGENDA ITEM 24 (A) & (B) ON OPERATIONAL ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPMENT COVERING QCPR AND SOUTH SOUTH COOPERATION IN THE 2ND COMMITTEE DURING THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 14, 2013.

Mr. President, thank you for giving me the floor.

India aligns itself with the statement delivered by the distinguished representative of Fiji, on behalf of the G-77.

While we welcome the significant strides made by UN Development system in recent years, the real focus for all of us now, is on, how well the UN Development System delivers on the mandate given to it by the Quadrennial Comprehensive Policy Resolution (QCPR).

As we follow up on implementation of the QCPR and its recommendations, my delegation would like to submit the following:

First, for UN development system to be successful globally it needs to be firmly rooted in its core focus area, which primarily has to be development related only. Poverty eradication still remains the over-riding priority for developing countries and the greatest global challenge.

With the adoption of the QCPR Resolution, this was made even more abundantly clear. For the first time ever in such a resolution, we had a section dedicated exclusively to Poverty Eradication, in which the UN Development System has been called upon by 193 member states to "assign the highest priority to poverty eradication".

Let me quote OP 70 of the QCPR resolution: "eradication of poverty through the development of national capacities in developing countries should continue to be the core focus area for the United Nations development system and that ALL its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective"

To my delegation, this is the defining mandate from the QCPR, and the true test of operational activities segment lies in ensuring that effective implementation mechanisms that developing countries need to achieve the same, are followed up, and provided for by the UN Development system.

Second, developing countries have their own set of 'needs' and different 'context' based requirements, which the UN development system must find ways to respond to. The operational activities of the UN system must therefore have the ability to respond and adapt to the evolving environment and expectations of individual countries.

Third, financing for development is increasingly coming under acute pressure. The present global economic slowdown has adversely impacted plans of national governments in developing countries to even consider scaling up developmental financing.

The requirement of enhanced ODA is all the more critical now, when developing countries are faced with curtailed capital flows, economic slowdown and increased programming requirements. These needs must be met by efforts to increase ODA, promote investment and trade by facilitating transfer of and access to advanced technologies for developing countries.

Fourth, there is a 'negative impact of policy conditionality' that is tied into donor driven aid arrangements when planning for development activities. The UN operational activities for development should feed into national development plans and steer clear of conditionality. The fundamental principles of national ownership and adherence to national development priorities must be the pivots around which UN development activities are implemented.

Fifth, though 'South South Cooperation' continues to be the buzzword in the narrative of the developmental discourse, much more remains to be done to scale it beyond the 'lip service' it has received so far from the UN development system.

Titling Human Development Reports as 'the Rise of the Global South' with falling human development indicators would continue to be misnomers, if they are falsely premised on economic indicators alone! The real rise of the South for any Human Development Report needs to matched by a commensurate rise in human development indicators, in which considerable investment is still expected from the multilateral system.

The paradigm construct of South-South cooperation requires that developing countries have the policy space for their own development. Given the vast difference in development levels between countries of the North and those from the South, it is important that development projects under South-South Cooperation are not strait-jacketed in terms of rigid rules and regulations or policy prescriptions. Flexibility and adaptability is the key to the success of South-South Cooperation. These must not be compromised.

India's approach to South-South Cooperation has been to share our experience and knowledge in a spirit of solidarity with countries from the South. A key facet of our joint initiative has been along with Brazil and South Africa: the IBSA Fund. We are extremely pleased that our partners in this, are the UN Office for South South Cooperation. We do hope that it would be given the resources it needs to assist developing countries in implementing projects of South South Cooperation.

Sixth, strengthening institutional capacity building in developing countries has to be a key focus area of any operational activity for the development agenda. It is a strategic choice that should be made and sustained by all stakeholders. Many countries could do more if additional finance and technology were available. Unfortunately, there is little evidence of support from the industrialised countries in these areas.

Mr. President, as we move further forward in crafting the post 2015 development agenda, the real task before us, is to give practical shape and meaning to the guidance provided by the QCPR and ensuring its effective implementation.

I thank you Mr. President.

660. Statement by Mr. Arun Jaitley, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 55 - Question Relating to Information at the Special Political Decolonization [Fourth] Committee of the 68 th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 16, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, on behalf of India, I would like to congratulate Ambassador Carlos Garcia Gonzalez of El Salvador on his election as Chairman of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee to the 68th General Assembly, as also the other members of the Bureau on their election. I wish you all the best of success and assure you of my country's continued co-operation and support. I would also like to congratulate the former Chairman, the Permanent Representative of Gabon, Ambassador Noel Nelson Messone, for doing an admirable job in conducting this committee during the 67th session of the General Assembly.

We also welcome the report of the Secretary-General on Questions Relating to Information (A/68/315), which provides an update on the activities of the Department of Public Information (DPI) in the areas of strategic communication services, news services and outreach services, and enables us to have a better understanding of DPI's efforts to fulfill its mandate, despite challenges emanating from limited availability of resources. We also welcome the report of the Committee on Information contained in document A/68/21.

India aligns itself with the statement made by Fiji on behalf of the Group of 77 and China.

Mr. Chairman,

We underline the central role played by the DPI in promoting and advancing the work of the United Nations, and taking the issues of global importance, such as the internationally agreed upon development goals, to the larger world audience. We also take note of the DPI's efforts to highlight the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and promote consultations on the post-2015 development agenda, and the various events held by it in this regard.

The role played by the UN Information Centers (UNICs) is also noteworthy. The UNICs act as an important interface between the UN and local communities, and by improving awareness about the work of the United Nations, help enhance its public image. We are happy to note that these information outposts have played an important role in giving due publicity to the MDG Report 2013, and have also promoted local, national and sub-regional consultations on the post-2015 development agenda. We are of the view that the UNICs, particularly in the developing countries, should be strengthened through provision of adequate budgetary support, and urge the DPI to work in close cooperation with the host countries in these efforts.

It is important to raise local content and local involvement in the production of DPI's publicity material. The UNICs, which have the capacity to work in local languages, can significantly contribute in this regard. This will also enable local talent to be involved in the work of the United Nations. We also urge DPI to encourage the UNICs to deepen their collaboration with local communities, in order to take the UN agenda to the grass root level.

We particularly commend the work of the UN Information Centre in New Delhi, which organized a well-received commemorative event in cooperation with UN-Women in April this year, and subsequently in July, also organized the national launch of the MDG Report 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

The academic community can play a crucial role in promoting the UN agenda. It is, therefore important for the DPI to continue expanding its partnership with institutions of higher learning under its Academic Impact initiative. We note with satisfaction that more than one thousand colleges and universities from over 120 countries have enrolled themselves as members of this initiative. We are happy that a large number of universities in India have also joined this initiative, and have committed to carry out activities aimed at promoting the UN mandate.

India has always been supportive of the Academic Impact initiative, and has been collaborating with the DPI in organizing events to promote intercultural dialogue and understanding, under the "unlearning intolerance" series. We are pleased to mention that on May 30, 2013, the Indian Mission joined the DPI and the Permanent Mission of Bangladesh to organize an event to mark the 100th anniversary of the award of the Noble Prize for Literature to poet Rabindranath Tagore.

Mr. Chairman,

As highlighted by the Secretary General in his report on 'Questions Relating to Information', the DPI has, in conjunction with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the Department of Field Support (DFS), been organizing activities on the United Nations Peacekeeping Missions in Africa. We appreciate these efforts, and hope that the DPI will continue to work more closely with the DPKO and DFS to highlight the work of the UN Peacekeepers, their success stories as well as the exceptional work being done by them, that often goes unnoticed.

Mr. Chairman,

We support the efforts towards multilingualism by the DPI, which enables the UN to disseminate information not only in its official languages, but also in other languages. We are happy to note that the DPI is now producing media content in several other languages, including some Indian ones. These efforts need to be further intensified and widened, so as to reach a larger audience.

Mr. Chairman,

As indicated by the Secretary General in his report, there are an ever growing number of people becoming aware of the working of the United Nations, through modern communication networks and social media platforms. We welcome the use of the widest possible range of technologies, including the new information and communication technologies based on the internet, in the work of the DPI. However, we would like to underline that many countries in the developing world are still far behind in technological terms, and therefore it is essential that media products of the DPI are disseminated through the widest possible spectrum of media tools, including the traditional media. Use of widely used media tools like radio and print continues to be of importance to reach out to people in the developing countries.

Mr. Chairman,

Let me conclude by conveying India's good wishes to the DPI, and our continued support to its efforts to project the great work being done by the United Nations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

661. STATEMENT BY DR. VISHNU DUTT SHARMA, COUNSELLOR ON AGENDA ITEM 78 - "CRIMINAL ACCOUNTABILITY OF UNITED NATIONS OFFICIALS AND EXPERTS ON MISSION" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF
THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 16, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

The instances of crimes being committed by the United Nations officials and experts on mission are a matter of grave concern to the international community. We condemn all kind of crimes committed by them. This has adverse impact over the image, credibility and integrity of the Organization.

Mr. Chairman,

We welcome the Report of the Secretary General A/68/173 on "Criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission, submitted pursuant to the General Assembly resolution 67/88.

The Report outlines the information received from member States on their national laws establishing jurisdiction over crimes, committed by their nationals while serving as United Nations officials or experts on mission. It also provides information on cooperation among States and with the United Nations in the investigation and prosecution of such crimes; and on the activities within the UN Secretariat towards disciplining the officials and assisting the States to help prevent and stop such crimes.

Mr. Chairman,

According to paragraph 18 of the Secretary-General's report, during the past one year, cases of nine UN officials were referred to the States of their nationalities for investigation and prosecution. We are fully confident that the concerned States will conduct thorough investigations and prosecution and if found guilty, will punish the officials involved.

We note with appreciation the information in paragraph 27 of the report that the awareness-raising activities continue to emphasize the obligations of all United Nations personnel to observe the laws of the host country, and the consequences of failing to do so.

Mr. Chairman,

The General Assembly resolution 67/88 strongly urges all States to consider establishing jurisdiction over crimes committed by their nationals while serving as United Nations officials or experts on mission, at least where the conduct of the person amounts to a crime both in the host country and the country of his nationality as well. Implementation of this element would help fill the jurisdictional gap in respect of member States that do not assert extra-territorial jurisdiction over crimes committed abroad by their nationals.

Mr. Chairman,

As informed earlier, the Indian Penal Code extends to extra-territorial offences committed by Indian nationals. Accordingly, the offences committed by Indian officials or experts on mission while serving abroad, are subject to the jurisdiction of the Indian courts and are punishable under the Indian law.

The Indian law has provisions for assistance in criminal matters, which enables to seek from and extend to a foreign State, assistance in criminal cases. These provisions are part of the Code of Criminal Procedure of India.

Mr. Chairman,

The Indian Extradition Act, 1962 deals with extradition of fugitive criminals and the related issues. The Act allows for extradition in respect of extraditable offences in terms of an extradition treaty with another State.

The Act also allows consideration of an international convention as the legal basis for considering an extradition request in the absence of a bilateral treaty.

India has concluded more than forty bilateral treaties on extradition and mutual assistance in criminal matters. Where there is no bilateral treaty, the Government of India can provide assistance on a reciprocal and case by case basis, in accordance with the provisions of the applicable national laws.

Mr. Chairman,

We reiterate our view that dealing with the wrongdoings of UN officials or experts on mission, does not require the development of an international convention. What, in our view, is required is that the member States ensure that their laws provide for jurisdiction and have adequate provisions for prosecuting any such conduct of their nationals serving as UN officials or experts on mission abroad, and that their laws have provisions for international assistance for the investigation and prosecution of the crimes committed.

Mr. Chairman,

India ascribes to the zero tolerance policy and considers it extremely important that violation of any national or international law by the UN officials and experts on mission is properly investigated and prosecuted. The UN officials and experts should act and perform their duties in a manner consistent with the UN Charter that promotes the image, credibility and integrity of the Organization.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

662. Statement by Mr. M. Krishnasswamy, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, On Agenda Item 18: "Follow-Up to and Implementation of the Outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference" & Agenda Item 17 (b): "International Financial System and Development" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 16, 2013.

Madam Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Madam Chairperson,

We have just concluded the sixth high level dialogue under the auspices of the General Assembly on the follow-up to the Financing for Development process.

In the high level dialogue, the developing countries spoke with one voice on the importance of the timely and effective follow-up to the implementation of the commitments enshrined in the Financing for Development process. They also expressed their continued concern with the lack of progress in advancing discussions on a followup FFD Conference. This conference must be held before the end of 2015 to meaningfully contribute to the discussions on a Post-2015 Development Agenda.

In the context of this debate, I would like to highlight seven points:

First, the ambition of the post-2015 development agenda would need to be matched by the ambition of the global partnership to support it.

At present, our collective ambition to craft a transformative agenda for the Post-2015 period does not seem to be matched by our commitment for mobilizing enhanced resources and for an enabling global environment conducive for this agenda.

Second, the agenda that we are crafting for the 'Future we Want' is a broader integrated agenda which will require an integrated financing strategy with additional, predictable and stable flows of resources.

The work of the Intergovernmental Expert Committee on Sustainable Development Financing must be seen as a contribution to the wider FFD process for a coherent financing strategy for the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Third, ODA will continue to play a central role in the post-2015 period. It is particularly important for the poorest and the most vulnerable countries. Estimates suggest that ODA accounts for over half of all external financing available to the LDCs to close their savings gap. In our view therefore, past ODA commitments must not only be met, but also scaled up in the post-2015 period.

Fourth, in the current economic scenario, issues of technology transfer, market access, capacity building and debt sustainability remain as relevant as ever. We must build on the template of MDG-8, even as we take steps to scale up commitments, enhance effectiveness and address systemic issues.

Early completion of the Doha development round of WTO and elimination of trade distorting measures including agricultural subsidies in developed countries remain equally critical.

Fifth, a renewed global partnership must address systemic issues including reform of the institutions of global economic governance and the international financial architecture.

Better regulation of speculative financial flows, improving exchange-rate management, preventing global imbalances and promoting policy coordination must be prioritized.

We need reform of the global financial institutions to give real voice and participation to developing countries.

Sixth, given the enhanced needs, it is clear that we would have to mobilize all sources of finance including innovative ones. We would also need to leverage private capital through innovative public-private partnerships. However, the key principle for this should be additionality not substitution.

Seventh, the enhanced role of South-South cooperation is based on the pre-requisite that developing countries have the policy space for their own development. We need to recognize that South-South Cooperation is in the nature of a voluntary partnership. It is free from conditionalities, recipient driven and characterized by sharing of developmental experience.

It is important that South-South Cooperation is not strait-jacketed in terms of rigid rules or policy prescriptions derived from North-South Aid. The inherent flexibility and adaptability of South-South Cooperation must not be compromised.

At the same time, even as remittance to developing countries has increased substantially in recent years, it cannot be seen anything more than household income. It cannot be passed off as another source of financing for development or as a substitute to ODA.

Finally Madam Chairperson,

In the post-2015 period, development cooperation would have to involve more than merely providing development finance. We must make a genuine effort to create a global system conducive to development itself.

We must ensure an ambitious, scaled-up and comprehensive financing framework for the Post-2015 Development Agenda based on the principles and commitments enshrined in the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration.

I thank you

663. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR MANJEEV SINGH PURI, DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, ON AGENDA
ITEM 86 "THE SCOPE AND APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSAL JURISDICTION" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 17, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I thank the Secretary-General for his reports A/68/113 on 'The scope and application of the principle of universal jurisdiction', which provides information about the laws and practice of certain States concerning the universal jurisdiction.

My delegation aligns with the statement made by the distinguished representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), and offers the following comments in the national capacity.

Mr. Chairman,

India holds the firm view that those who commit crimes must be brought to justice and punished. A criminal should not go scot free because of procedural technicalities including the lack of jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman,

Exercise of jurisdiction is a unique legal subject in itself. The term "jurisdiction" connotes the power or the right of a State, which in legal parlance refers to two aspects: first, the rule-making; and second, the rule-enforcing. The widely recognized bases for the exercise of jurisdiction include: Territoriality, which is based on the place of the commission of offence; Nationality, which is based on the nationality of the accused. Some States recognise the nationality of victim also, as basis for exercising jurisdiction; and Protective principle, which is based on the national interests affected. The common feature of these jurisdictional theories is some connection between the State asserting jurisdiction and the offence.

Mr. Chairman,

Under the present agenda item, we are however deliberating upon a different type of jurisdictional basis, namely the universality theory.

A State invoking the universal jurisdiction claims to exercise jurisdiction over an offender, irrespective of his or her nationality or the place of commission of the offence, and without any link between that State and the offender.

It assumes that each State has an interest in exercising jurisdiction to prosecute offences which all nations have condemned. The rationale for such jurisdiction is the nature of certain offences, which affect the interests of all States, even when they are unrelated to the State assuming jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman,

Under general international law, piracy on the high seas is the only one such crime, over which claims of universal jurisdiction is undisputed. We consider that the principle of universal jurisdiction in relation to piracy has been codified in the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea, 1982.

In respect of certain serious crimes like genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and torture, etc., international treaties have provided basis for the exercise of universal jurisdiction. This is applicable between the States parties to those treaties. They include, among others, the Four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Apartheid Convention.

Mr. Chairman,

The question that arises is whether the jurisdiction provided for specific serious international crimes under certain treaties could be converted into a commonly exercisable jurisdiction, irrespective of the fact whether or not the other State or States are a party to those treaties.

Several issues remained unanswered, including those related to the basis of extending and exercising such jurisdiction, the relationship with the laws relating to immunity, pardoning and amnesty, and harmonization with domestic laws.

Mr. Chairman,

Several treaties oblige the States parties either to try a criminal or handover for trial to a party willing to do so. This is the obligation of aut dedere, aut judicare ("either extradite or prosecute"). This widely recognised principle, including by the International Court of Justice in its decision of 20 July 2012 in the Belgium Vs Senegal case, should not be confused with or short circuited by the universal jurisdiction.

I thank you Mr. Chairman.

664. Statement by Mr. M. Krishnasswamy, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 23: "Eradication of Poverty - Implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008-2017)" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 17, 2013.

Madam Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Madam Chairperson,

With less than 850 days to go before the target date for the Millennium Development Goals, we can draw much satisfaction from the substantial progress we have made in reducing global rates of poverty. Efforts of India have contributed to this global effort in a significant manner. The world, however, continues to have more than 1.3 billion people living in conditions of abject deprivation. At current rates, over than 970 million people will still be in poverty in 2015.

A decade into the 21st century, one out of every six people in this planet continues to live a life of extreme poverty, hunger and desperation. The story of poverty and the imperative for growth cannot be more compelling.

Madam Chairperson, I would like to highlight six key themes for this debate:

First, as India's Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh emphasized in his address to the 68th UN General Assembly, poverty eradication requires special attention and a new thrust. Ending poverty once and for all is within reach. Our collective political will to do so must not slacken.

It is therefore important that the imperative of poverty eradication anchors the Post- 2015 Development Agenda as the foremost global priority and its central and overarching objective.

Second, what the experience of the last decade has taught us is that the prerequisite for poverty eradication is rapid, sustained and inclusive economic growth. This is needed to enable developing countries generate additional revenues and resources. This helps them in enhancing investments in infrastructure and job creation and pursuing social inclusion programmes.

We must therefore bear in mind that in the Post-2015 Development Agenda, the emphasis has to be on the word 'development'. It must first and foremost, promote rapid and sustained economic growth in developing countries.

Third, along with policies to promote inclusive growth, also needed are targeted interventions and programmes to promote education, fight hunger and malnutrition, promote maternal and infant health and gender empowerment.

Creation of infrastructure, productive and full employment, universal energy access, agricultural growth and rural development are equally critical.

Fourth, taking the lead given by our leaders in Rio+20, the General Assembly last year called upon the UN development system to give the highest priority to achieving poverty eradication through the development of national capacities in developing countries. UN System must now follow this clear direction in both letter and spirit and assign the highest priority to this core objective in its policies and programmes.

Fifth, a supportive and enabling international environment is crucial in our collective fight against poverty. We must pursue growth and demand promoting policies at the global level and seek to create a supportive and fair international economic structure. This structure should be conducive to development. It should respect the policy space that each country requires to formulate and implement its own pro-poor and inclusive development strategies.

Madam Chairperson,

A key reason for our failure to meet many of the MDGs is the weakness and the lack of full implementation of the global partnership under MDG-8.

We hope the support of our development partners in implementing the second UN decade to eradicate poverty is backed up by greater enthusiasm to fulfill their long made commitments on issues like ODA, debt relief, technology transfer, market access, multilateral trade etc.

Sixth, we would do well to recognize that it is technology that lies at the intersection of the two imperatives of poverty eradication and sustainable development. We must promote greater collaboration in environmentally friendly technologies and more importantly we must ensure that the fruits of such collaboration are shared more widely.

This would enable developing countries to eradicate poverty and leapfrog into higher stages of development without incurring the environmental costs that traditional development models have entailed.

Madam Chairperson,

Mid-way into the second UN decade to eradicate poverty, let us redouble our commitment and efforts to forge a genuine global partnership to end poverty and hunger forever.

I thank you

665. Statement by Mr. M. Krishnasswamy, Member of Parliament and Member of the Indian delegation on Agenda Item 65 - 'Promotion and Protection of the Rights of Children' at the Third Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 17, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, I would like to thank the Secretary-General and his Special Representatives for their reports under this agenda item.

Mr. Chairman,

The Indian Constitution has several provisions providing for protection, development and welfare of children.

A National Charter for children was adopted in 2004. A detailed Plan of Action was drawn up in 2005 focusing on four broad areas: child survival, child development, child protection and child participation.

Mr. Chairman,

Early childhood is the most crucial phase. This is when the foundations for physical, psychological, social and intellectual development are laid. The Integrated Child Development Services (ICDS), the flagship programme of the Government benefits 78 million children below the age of 6 in the area of nutrition, health and education.

ICDS also covers these children with immunization, regular health check-ups and referral services as required as well as provides pre-school non-formal education to 37 million children in the age group of 3-6 years. The Scheme is being universalised.

ICDS and other programmes such as Universal Immunisation Programme, Integrated Management of Neonatal Childhood Illnesses, Total Sanitation Campaign, and the Reproductive and Child Health Programme have led to significant decline in infant mortality rates.

I am also happy to state here that India manufactures 40% of vaccines used in universal immunization programs across the world, protecting small babies and little children from disease and death.

Mr. Chairman,

The Indian Constitution provides for free and compulsory education for children up to the age of 14 years. The enactment of the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act in 2009 provided a momentum to our efforts to address issues of equity and elimination of barriers in accessing education.

With nearly universal enrollment for primary education, our current focus is on the expansion of secondary education and its accessibility to girls, and skill development for improved employability.

As part of a public-private partnership, private schools reserve 25% of seats for children from economically weaker sections of society with budgetary support from the government.

Mr. Chairman,

The girl child is one of the most vulnerable members of any society. Targeted interventions for the girl child have led to almost full enrolment in primary grades of schooling and narrowing of gender gaps in middle and higher education. The government has also undertaken legislative and policy measures to ban sex selective abortion and child marriage.

India observes January 24 as "National Girl Child Day". The occasion is used to generate awareness about their tremendous potential as well as to highlight the challenges faced by them.

Mr. Chairman,

Ending exploitation and violence against children is fundamental to ensuring a healthy future for every child. The National Commission for Protection of Child Rights was set up in 2007.

The eradication of child labour is a priority for the Government of India. We are strictly enforcing the ban on the employment of children under 14 years of age.

To strengthen implementation of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000, the government launched the Integrated Child Protection Scheme in 2009 to cover offences against children which are not presently addressed in the law, and to increase the safety net for the protection of children.

The Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act came into force in November, 2012. There is also a comprehensive legislative and policy framework to address the problem of trafficking of women and children.

Mr. Chairman,

The child is an instrumental stakeholder in the social contract. We have an obligation to provide a safe and enabling environment for their development. I would also like to point out that civil society in India is an integral and active partner in this endeavor.

Let me reaffirm our commitment to national and international efforts on the promotion and protection of the rights of our children.

I thank you

666. Statement by Ambassador DB Venkatesh Varma. Permanent Representative of India to Conference on Disarmament on Thematic Debate on Nuclear Weapons at the First Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 18, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

India associates itself with the statement made by the Islamic Republic of Iran on behalf of the Nonaligned Movement on 17 Oct 2013. India's External Affairs Minister participated in the HLM on Nuclear Disarmament on 26th September and we support the follow up resolution proposed by NAM contained in document L6.

Mr. Chairman,

India's Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru was among the first world leaders to champion the cause of nuclear disarmament. In 1988, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi proposed an Action Plan for a Nuclear-Weapons-Free and Nonviolent World Order to attain the goal of nuclear disarmament in a time-bound, universal, non-discriminatory, phased and verifiable manner. We remain committed to the objective of that Plan and the realization of its vision of ushering in a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order.

While addressing the UN Special Session on Nuclear Disarmament, the catastrophic consequences of the use of nuclear weapons to humanity was foremost in Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's mind. He said "We cannot accept the logic that a few nations have the right to pursue their security by threatening the survival of mankind. It is not only those who live by the nuclear sword who, by design or default, shall one day perish by it. All humanity will perish."

Even though nuclear weapons are now an integral part of India's security policy as part of our credible minimum deterrence, our support for global, non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament has not diminished. As Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh stated in the Indian parliament in 2007 "the possession of nuclear weapons only increases our sense of global responsibility and does not diminish it."

We believe that nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed global and non-discriminatory multilateral framework. We have called for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Steps for the progressive delegitimization of nuclear weapons are essential to the goal of their complete elimination.

In a working paper submitted to the UNGA in 2006, India suggested a number of measures, including reaffirmation of the unequivocal commitment by all nuclear weapon states to the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons, measures to reduce nuclear dangers arising from accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons, increasing restraints on the use of nuclear weapons, de-alerting of nuclear weapons and specific legal measures such as a Global No First Use Agreement, Convention on the Prohibition on the Use of Nuclear Weapons leading finally to a Nuclear Weapons Convention for the global non-discriminatory and verifiable elimination of nuclear with a specific timeframe.

India supports efforts aimed at building awareness and political will to move in a step-by-step manner towards the goal of nuclear disarmament: from reducing nuclear risks and the role of nuclear weapons in security doctrines, restraints on use leading thereafter to a universal, non-discriminatory Convention on prohibition and elimination of nuclear weapons. In taking this process forward we stress the need for dialogue. India participated in the Oslo Meeting and believes that further discussion on the humanitarian impact of nuclear weapons should be conducted in an inclusive manner with the participation of all states. In terms of substance, it should do no harm to the non-proliferation regime or the goal of a nuclear weapon free world. In terms of process, it should do no harm to the established disarmament machinery.

Mr. Chairman,

Without prejudice to the priority we give to nuclear disarmament, we support the negotiation in the Conference on Disarmament of a multilateral, non-discriminatory and internationally verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices that meets India's national security interests. We remain committed to maintaining a unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. India supports the CD as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum. Even though we abstained on the resolution establishing an Open Ended Working Group on Nuclear Disarmament, we participated actively in its meetings and India's proposals are reflected among the various proposals in the report of the Group.

Mr. Chairman,

India is committed to working with the international community to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, including through strong national export controls and membership of the multilateral export control regimes. All states should fully and effectively implement the obligations arising from the agreements or treaties to which they are parties. India's position on the NPT is well-known and needs no reiteration. There is no question of India joining the NPT as a non-nuclear weapon state. At the same time, India would make its contribution to the strengthening of the global non-proliferation regime.

Mr. Chairman,

India's resolutions in the First Committee give expression to our desire to work with other member states of the United Nations to achieve the goal of nuclear disarmament.

We are introducing on behalf of the sponsors a draft resolution on "Reducing Nuclear Danger" contained in document L20. The resolution highlights the need for a review of nuclear doctrines and immediate steps to reduce the risk of unintentional or accidental use of nuclear weapons, including through de-alerting and de-targeting of nuclear weapons. It is a matter of satisfaction that the issues raised by this long-standing resolution are finding greater resonance and recognition in the international community.

Further, we have the honour to present on behalf of the sponsors a draft resolution on a Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons contained in L21. This traditional text reflects our belief that a multilateral, universal and legally binding instrument prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons will contribute to the process of the step-by-step delegitimization of nuclear weapons and create a favourable climate for negotiations on an agreement on the prohibition of nuclear weapons.

We would like to highlight that first introduced in 1982 this is one of the long standing resolutions in the First Committee and has consistently received majority support. We would like to convey our appreciation for this support and to those countries which have co-sponsored this resolution which is only gaining in significance with the passage of time. However, a sizeable minority of member states - some of them nuclear weapon states, some with nuclear weapons stationed on their soil and others with alliance partnerships underwritten by policies of first use of nuclear weapons have voted against this resolution. We regret further that a few states that do not belong to such partnerships and in fact today are in the forefront of current efforts to highlight the humanitarian impact of use of nuclear weapons, for reasons that are difficult to understand, have also voted against this resolution. We appeal to these states to review their position and bring their voting on this resolution at par with their public support for addressing the humanitarian impact of use of nuclear weapons. We also would like to invite NGOs and civil society to take another look at this resolution in the context of the current discussions on the humanitarian impact of nuclear weapons.

As in previous years, India will be tabling draft resolution entitled "Measures to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction" contained in document L23. We would like to convey our appreciation to the membership of this Committee for the consensus support extended to this resolution and to the large number of co-sponsors who have joined us in highlighting the importance of this resolution which gives expression to the deep concerns of the international community with respect to the risks posed by terrorists gaining access to WMDs and sensitive materials and technologies. We hope that the First Committee will adopt this resolution by consensus.

Thank you

667. Statement by Mr. Vipul, Counsellor, PMI to CD, Geneva during the First Committee Thematic Debate on UN Disarmament Machinery.

New York, October 21, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

India attaches high importance to the UN disarmament machinery established in its present form by the First Special Session of the General Assembly devoted to Disarmament, SSOD-I. The triad of disarmament machinery comprising of the First Committee, UN Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament is the mechanism by which the international community gives expression and coherence to its efforts in the area of disarmament and international security. In recent years the disarmament machinery has faced several challenges to its integrity. We believe that there is a need to recommit ourselves to the machinery even while considering ways to improve its work efficiency.

India associates itself with the statement delivered by Indonesia on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement.

Mr. Chairman,

The UN, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament. The First Committee is the embodiment of the faith of the international community in the benefit of collective action and multilateral approaches on disarmament and international security issues. It provides countries with diverse perspectives an opportunity to voice their views on disarmament and international security issues and submit resolutions on issues of priority to them. We are open to suggestions to strengthen the work of the First Committee. We appreciate the observations of the High Representative regarding some such aspects in her statements to this Committee in the past two weeks.

The UN Disarmament Commission is the only universal forum that provides for in-depth consideration of specific disarmament issues and can help in building greater understanding and consensus on issues on the international disarmament agenda. The Commission has produced several important sets of guidelines and recommendations for the General Assembly in the past. However, in its current cycle the Commission struggled to achieve consensus even on its agenda items in 2012. Despite the fact that the General Assembly has decided that nuclear disarmament should remain one of the agenda items for the Commission's meetings, in the current cycle the relevant agenda item could only be agreed to after long deliberations. We believe that if Member States show commitment to the Disarmament Commission, all aspects of nuclear disarmament can be discussed in the Commission, in an inclusive manner. We hope that the UNDC will be able to achieve a substantive result in 2014, the last year of the current cycle.

Mr. Chairman,

India had the privilege of holding the Presidency of the Conference on Disarmament during the first part of 2013 session. As the President of the Conference we exerted all possible efforts to enable the CD to commence substantive work. As the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum the CD continues to bear a heavy responsibility to make progress in the international disarmament agenda. We believe that the CD continues to have the mandate, the membership, the credibility and the rules of procedure to discharge its responsibility. Since the decisions of the CD impact national security, it is logical that it conducts its work and adopts its decisions by consensus. We believe that proposals which question the viability or relevance of the CD or even suggest unrealistic alternatives need to be viewed with utmost caution.

India remains committed to efforts, consistent with CD's rules of procedure, aimed at the CD reaching consensus on its Programme of Work to commence early substantive work. India did not stand in the way of the adoption of the CD's decision CD/1956/Rev.1 to establish an Informal Working Group on Programme of Work. However, it would be perverse if the CD were to become a platform for reopening longstanding consensus agreements and for endless procedural debates, which would take it further away from the prospect of early negotiations. In our understanding the Informal Working Group does not take away anything from the responsibility of the CD President under the rules of procedure to draw up the CD's Programme of Work and present it to the CD for consideration and adoption.

Mr. Chairman,

The UN Secretariat, in particular the ODA, has an important responsibility in assisting States in pursuing the multilateral disarmament agenda. We believe that the ODA should be strengthened to facilitate the implementation of permanent treaty bodies under the UN such as the BWC and CCW. There is also a need to ensure greater coherence between disarmament work in New York and Geneva, such as on small arms and light weapons. It is equally important that the integrity of the CD Secretariat in Geneva is maintained.

The issue of membership of various Group of Governmental Experts constituted by Secretary General has been raised by several delegations this year. India, a major space faring nation, was excluded from the GGE on TCBMs in Outer Space despite having key capabilities and interest in this area. India could have enriched the work of the GGE. We hope that this matter will receive due attention of the Secretariat.

Two related bodies of the UN disarmament machinery which have received much attention this year are UNIDIR and Secretary General's Advisory Board. Both these bodies find their origins in SSOD-I and in their own right play a role in shaping the multilateral disarmament agenda and discharging the important and impartial research function mentioned in SSOD-I. We believe that UNIDIR's autonomy and impartiality should be upheld so that it can fulfill its role of providing in-depth and long term research on disarmament issues, in particular nuclear disarmament. The Secretary General's Advisory Board should be made more representative so that it can reflect the broadest range of perspectives. It should take an inclusive and forward looking approach to global disarmament issues.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to underline that the UN disarmament machinery cannot be looked at in isolation from the urgent need for revitalization and reform of the UN and its principal organs, the General Assembly and the Security Council, to bring them in line with contemporary realities. India would continue to work towards strengthening multilateralism and UN's role in accordance with its Charter.

Thank you

668. Statement by Ambassador D.B Venkatesh Varma, Permanent Representative of India to Conference on Disarmament on Thematic Debate on Nuclear Weapons at the First Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 21, 2013.

Mr. Chairman.

India associates itself with the statement made by the Islamic Republic of Iran on behalf of the Nonaligned Movement on 17 Oct 2013. India's External Affairs Minister participated in the HLM on Nuclear Disarmament on 26th September and we support the follow up resolution proposed by NAM contained in document L6.

Mr. Chairman.

India's Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru was among the first world leaders to champion the cause of nuclear disarmament. In 1988, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi proposed an Action Plan for a Nuclear-Weapons-Free and Nonviolent World Order to attain the goal of nuclear disarmament in a time-bound, universal, non-discriminatory, phased and verifiable manner. We remain committed to the objective of that Plan and the realization of its vision of ushering in a nuclear weapon free and non-violent world order.

While addressing the UN Special Session on Nuclear Disarmament, the catastrophic consequences of the use of nuclear weapons to humanity was foremost in Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's mind. He said "We cannot accept the logic that a few nations have the right to pursue their security by threatening the survival of mankind. It is not only those who live by the nuclear sword who, by design or default, shall one day perish by it. All humanity will perish."

Even though nuclear weapons are now an integral part of India's security policy as part of our credible minimum deterrence, our support for global, non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament has not diminished. As Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh stated in the Indian parliament in 2007 "the possession of nuclear weapons only increases our sense of global responsibility and does not diminish it."

We believe that nuclear disarmament can be achieved through a step-by-step process underwritten by a universal commitment and an agreed global and non-discriminatory multilateral framework. We have called for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons to build trust and confidence and for reducing the salience of nuclear weapons in international affairs and security doctrines. Steps for the progressive de-legitimization of nuclear weapons are essential to the goal of their complete elimination.

In a working paper submitted to the UNGA in 2006, India suggested a number of measures, including reaffirmation of the unequivocal commitment by all nuclear weapon states to the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons, measures to reduce nuclear dangers arising from accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons, increasing restraints on the use of nuclear weapons, de-alerting of nuclear weapons and specific legal measures such as a Global No First Use Agreement, Convention on the Prohibition on the Use of Nuclear Weapons leading finally to a Nuclear Weapons Convention for the global non-discriminatory and verifiable elimination of nuclear weapons with a specific timeframe.

India supports efforts aimed at building awareness and political will to move in a step-by-step manner towards the goal of nuclear disarmament: from reducing nuclear risks and the role of nuclear weapons in security doctrines, restraints on use leading thereafter to a universal, non-discriminatory Convention on prohibition and elimination of nuclear weapons. In taking this process forward we stress the need for dialogue. India participated in the Oslo Meeting and believes that further discussion on the humanitarian impact of nuclear weapons should be conducted in an inclusive manner with the participation of all states. In terms of substance, it should do no harm to the non-proliferation regime or the goal of a nuclear weapon free world. In terms of process, it should do no harm to the established disarmament machinery.

Mr. Chairman,

Without prejudice to the priority we give to nuclear disarmament, we support the negotiation in the Conference on Disarmament of a multilateral, non-discriminatory and internationally verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices that meets India's national security interests. We remain committed to maintaining a unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. India supports the CD as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum. Even though we abstained on the resolution establishing an Open Ended Working Group on Nuclear Disarmament, we participated actively in its meetings and India's proposals are reflected among the various proposals in the report of the Group.

Mr. Chairman,

India is committed to working with the international community to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, including through strong national export controls and membership of the multilateral export control regimes. All states should fully and effectively implement the obligations arising from the agreements or treaties to which they are parties. India's position on the NPT is well-known and needs no reiteration. There is no question of India joining the NPT as a non-nuclear weapon state. At the same time, India would make its contribution to the strengthening of the global non-proliferation regime.

Mr. Chairman,

India's resolutions in the First Committee give expression to our desire to work with other member states of the United Nations to achieve the goal of nuclear disarmament.

We are introducing on behalf of the sponsors a draft resolution on "Reducing Nuclear Danger" contained in document L20. The resolution highlights the need for a review of nuclear doctrines and immediate steps to reduce the risk of unintentional or accidental use of nuclear weapons, including through de-alerting and de-targeting of nuclear weapons. It is a matter of satisfaction that the issues raised by this long-standing resolution are finding greater resonance and recognition in the international community.

Further, we have the honour to present on behalf of the sponsors a draft resolution on a Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons contained in L21. This traditional text reflects our belief that a multilateral, universal and legally binding instrument prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons will contribute to the process of the step-by-step de-legitimization of nuclear weapons and create a favourable climate for negotiations on an agreement on the prohibition of nuclear weapons.

We would like to highlight that first introduced in 1982 this is one of the long standing resolutions in the First Committee and has consistently received majority support. We would like to convey our appreciation for this support and to those countries which have co-sponsored this resolution which is only gaining in significance with the passage of time. However, a sizeable minority of member states - some of them nuclear weapon states, some with nuclear weapons stationed on their soil and others with alliance partnerships underwritten by policies of first use of nuclear weapons have voted against this resolution. We regret further that a few states that do not belong to such partnerships and in fact today are in the forefront of current efforts to highlight the humanitarian impact of use of nuclear weapons, for reasons that are difficult to understand, have also voted against this resolution. We appeal to these states to review their position and bring their voting on this resolution at par with their public support for addressing the humanitarian impact of use of nuclear weapons. We also would like to invite NGOs and civil society to take another look at this resolution in the context of the current discussions on the humanitarian impact of nuclear weapons.

As in previous years, India will be tabling draft resolution entitled "Measures to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction" contained in document L23. We would like to convey our appreciation to the membership of this Committee for the consensus support extended to this resolution and to the large number of co-sponsors who have joined us in highlighting the importance of this resolution which gives expression to the deep concerns of the international community with respect to the risks posed by terrorists gaining access to WMDs and sensitive materials and technologies. We hope that the First Committee will adopt this resolution by consensus.

Thank you

668-A. STATEMENT BY DR. ASHWANI KUMAR, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 120 - 'FOLLOW-UP TO THE COMMEMORATION OF THE TWO-HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ABOLITION OF THE TRANSATLANTIC SLAVE TRADE - AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 21, 2013.

Mr. President,

I would like to welcome the Secretary General's report on the 'Program of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery' and for his Status Report on the UN Trust Fund for Partnerships for the Permanent Memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade.

Mr. President,

Transatlantic slave trade is one of the most abhorrent chapters in the history of mankind. It ravaged the African and the Caribbean nations to satisfy the rapacious economic greed and exploitation of the colonizers. The lingering consequences of its brutality and human suffering are visible even today.

We must all take initiatives to ensure that future generations do not forget the grief and tragedy borne by the countless nameless victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade. It is equally imperative that the international community takes upon itself the commitment that such crimes against humanity never recur.

Education has a critical role in creating awareness amongst present and future generations, about the history, causes and impact of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade. A better understanding of history provides a valuable perspective in confronting current challenges.

Mr. President,

India welcomes the various outreach activities and programmes organized by the Department of Public Information to commemorate the

"International Day of Remembrance" at the UN as well as in other countries through its network of UN information centres and partner organizations in March 2013.

We stress the need for regular and adequate financial allocation to the Department of Public Information in organising these events.

We also welcome the initiatives undertaken by States in reaffirming their commitment to implement paragraphs 101 and 102 of the Durban Declaration aimed at countering the legacy of slavery and honoring the memory of the victims of slavery and the slave trade.

Mr. President,

The construction of a Permanent Memorial will be a fitting tribute by the United Nations to the millions of victims of the transatlantic slave trade. We are pleased to note that the international design competition to finalize the memorial design has been concluded and that the UN Secretary General and the President of the General Assembly unveiled the winning design in September this year.

With a contribution of US $ 260,000/-, India is the lead contributor to the "United Nations Trust Fund for Partnerships - Permanent Memorial" for receiving contributions to erect the Permanent Memorial. The Trust Fund has, however, so far received only close to US $ 1.4 million against the anticipated expenditure of US $ 4.5 million for the construction of the Memorial. We, therefore, strongly urge all countries, and in particular those who derived material gains from the transatlantic trade, to contribute generously to the Fund to show their earnest acceptance that wrongs were committed and that there is a sense of repentance.

Mr. President,

As we recall the struggle, the degradation and the deaths of the victims of the transatlantic slave trade, we hope that the Permanent Memorial can be constructed at an early date. It will be a small commemoration for the struggle of the victims who suffered silently with no hope for freedom before they disappeared into the night.

We have a chance to pay our humble tribute to the victims, who suffered this disgrace by generously contributing to the Trust Fund.

This, Mr. President, is the least we can do.

Thank you

669. STATEMENT BY MR. AVINASH PANDE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION ON AGENDA ITEM - 77, "RESPONSIBILITY OF STATES FOR INTERNATIONALLY WRONGFUL ACTS" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 21, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Allow me to begin by extending to you my hearty felicitations on your election as Chairman of the Sixth Committee. My felicitations are also due to other members of the Bureau.

Mr. Chairman,

The Draft Articles on "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts" were adopted by the International Law Commission at its fifty-third session in 2001. The ILC submitted the Draft Article to the General Assembly, with the recommendation for taking note thereof; and further recommended for the possibility of convening an international conference to examine the Draft Articles, with a view to conclude a convention on this topic.

Pursuant to the consideration of draft articles in the Sixth Committee and its recommendations, the General Assembly took note of Draft Articles in its resolution 56/83 of 12 December 2001.

Mr. Chair. These would come into play only in case an internationally wrongful act as defined by a primary rule is committed. In this connection we may note that international law is still striving to achieve the type of universality that is essential in different fields.

The international structure is still in the making and we cannot rush ahead of institutional developments and the development of the international legal system, without risking counterproductive effects.

Mr. Chairman,

Given this background, we are of the view that, at this stage, it will be prudent to maintain the careful balance in the text of Draft Articles that the ILC struggled for more than forty years to achieve.

We are happy to note the reception of the ILC's Draft Articles on State responsibility into international law, through State practice, scholarly writings, decisions of courts, tribunals and other bodies.

Thank you

670. Statement by Mrs. Rajani Patil, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, On Agenda Item 22: "Groups of countries in special situations: Follow-up to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries; Comprehensive 10-year Review Conference on the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action" at the Second Committee 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

NEW YORK, October 21, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Mr. Chairperson,

The Least Developed Countries (LDCs) and the Landlocked Developing Countries (LLDCs) face unique developmental challenges and need the sustained support of the international community.

In the interconnected world of today, it is important that we approach the issues of LDCs and LLDCs through the lens of solidarity and as a vision of our common destiny. Their development is the common development of all.

Unless we are able to ensure rapid, sustained and inclusive development in the LDCs and LLDCs, we can hardly expect to make any headway in achieving the internationally agreed development goals including the MDGs.

It is equally important that the concerns and priorities of the LDCs and LLDCs are given priority in our deliberations for a Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Mr. Chairperson,

Unfortunately, the first year of implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action has witnessed a deceleration of growth rates in the LDCs. Structural transformation has not taken hold in most LDCs. Share of manufacturing in their GDP remains low and lack of energy access remains a critical weakness.

Mr. Chairperson,

ODA accounts for over half of all external financing available to the LDCs to close their savings gap.

Unfortunately, ODA levels have now fallen for two consecutive years. ODA flows to LDCs have declined even more drastically. This is a matter of serious concern.

Mobilization of resources for development in LDCs must receive our highest attention. Past ODA commitments for LDCs must be met urgently.

ODA commitments to LDCs need to be further scaled up in the post-2015 period so that the ambitious target of half of LDCs graduating by 2020 can be realized.

We must work for the early conclusion of the Doha Round to create more space for the LDCs in global trade. We must also prioritize technology transfer, enhanced market access, debt relief, creation of infrastructure and building of productive capacity in the LDCs to promote structural transformation of their economies.

Mr. Chairperson,

India remains fully committed to timely and effective implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action (IPoA). India has offered One Billion Dollars worth of Lines of Credit to the LDCs. We have also contributed Five Million US Dollars for the follow-up of the Istanbul Programme.

We are confident that these measures will assist the LDCs in meeting the objectives of the Istanbul Programme of Action.

Mr. Chairperson,

India is deeply sensitive to the significant geographical difficulties faced by Landlocked Developing Countries that place them at a distinct disadvantage as far as international trade and economic linkages are concerned.

The Almaty Programme of Action has led to encouraging results.

It is important that the international community continues and strengthens its support to the LLDCs in the coming decade.

The objective of our efforts in the coming decade should be to promote greater structural transformation in the LLDCs, create infrastructure and build strong productive capacities in order to improve trade performance and enhance their integration with the world economy.

An effective solution to the problems faced by the LLDCs must also address the constraints and challenges faced by the transit developing countries that neighbour them.

India has special bilateral cooperation agreements with its landlocked neighbours for easy transit of their goods through India. We accord the highest priority to further strengthening our ties with these countries to support their economic development.

Mr. Chairperson,

We are happy that South-South Cooperation has meaningfully supplemented international efforts for supporting the LDCs and LLDCs.

The report of the Secretary General has pointed out that corporations from the South, in particular from India and China accounted for 41% of FDI inflows into LLDCs in 2011 and that Southern providers accounted for 47% of official infrastructure financing in sub-Saharan Africa from 2001 to 2008.

Large developing countries have emerged as important trade partners for LDCs and LLDCs. In fact, over 50% of the exports of LDCs now go to developing economies.

India has already extended duty free tariff preference scheme to all the LDCs.

India will continue to contribute enhanced economic and technical support to the development efforts of the LDCs and LLDCs as part of South-South cooperation.

Yet, efforts of countries like India through South-South Cooperation can only complement the provision of resources from our developed partners, which needs to be scaled up urgently.

Mr. Chairperson,

We look forward to working closely with all our LLDCs partners for an ambitious, comprehensive and balanced outcome to the 10-year review conference on LLDCs in year 2014.

In the spirit of our long standing solidarity and partnership with them, India has made a financial contribution of One Hundred Thousand US Dollars for the organization of the Conference on LLDC.

In conclusion Mr. Chairperson,

Let me reiterate the high level political commitment of India to work closely in partnership with our LDCs and LLDCs partners to assist them in their efforts to pursue rapid, sustained and inclusive economic growth, eradicate poverty and mainstream sustainable development.

I thank you

671. STATEMENT BY DR. VISHNU DUTT SHARMA, COUNSELLOR, ON AGENDA ITEM 87: "THE LAW OF TRANSBOUNDARY AQUIFERS" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 22, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Aquifers are life-supporting groundwater resources for the mankind. Proper management and proper utilization of aquifers assumes significance in view of the increasing demand for freshwater around the world.

Mr. Chairman,

The draft articles on the trans-boundary aquifers contain a number of useful provisions such as on the utilization, cooperation, and on the protection, preservation and management of aquifer system.

It is worth mentioning that draft article 3 recognizes the sovereignty of an aquifer State over the portion of trans-boundary aquifers or aquifer system located within its territory.

Mr. Chairman,

At the 66th session, this delegation pointed out the lack of adequate scientific knowledge in the field of management and protection of aquifers, highlighting the need for further study. We also stressed for further scientific and technical assistance to States in understanding the complex issues associated with the management and protection of aquifer system.

Our position has been that time is not ripe to develop a legally binding instrument, such as a convention on the basis of draft articles and that they could serve as a useful guide for States in concluding their bilateral or regional arrangements on this subject.

Mr. Chairman,

We appreciate the efforts of the delegation of Japan in introducing the draft resolution, this time, with a view to consider the draft articles as guiding principles for bilateral or regional agreements and arrangements for the proper management of trans-boundary aquifers.

The draft resolution encourages the International Hydrological Programme of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to continue offering further scientific and technical assistance to States. We look forward for discussion on the draft resolution.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we note the fact that conferring the status of guiding principles to the draft articles would be non-binding in nature and the draft articles would be available, in their present form with other instruments and State practices, to States for taking into account and their suitable use in concluding bilateral and regional arrangements on this subject.

Thank you

672. Statement by Mrs. Rajani Patil, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 69: "Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (A) Implementation of Human Rights Instruments, (D) Comprehensive Implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action" at the Third Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 22, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I would like to thank the UN Secretary-General for his reports as well as the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteurs for their reports under this agenda item relating to 'protection and promotion of human rights'.

Mr. Chairman,

Human rights are at the core of any free democratic society. They form an important institutional pillar of the United Nations. The promotion and protection of human rights within the United Nations was put on a firm footing with the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) in 1948. Since then, we have come a long way in our collective endeavour to promote and protect human rights.

This year marks the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. We attach great importance to the work undertaken by the OHCHR and encourage it to continue to carry out its mandate in an objective and non-selective manner.

The OHCHR has the responsibility to demonstrate that it is independent and impartial by being open, fair, transparent and accountable to all stakeholders. It is important to maintain the representative character and financial independence of this office. It remains a matter of concern that only one-third of OHCHR funding comes from the regular budget, whereas two-third of the funding comes from voluntary contributions.

Mr. Chairman,

The Human Rights Council is an important body that the international community has carefully constructed to strengthen the protection of human rights globally. We must consciously ensure that Council continues to function in a nonselective, non-politicized and transparent manner. We believe that we can advance our common cause only through dialogue and cooperation.

The mechanism of the Universal Periodic Review has emerged as an extremely useful mechanism for the Human Rights Council and the international community to engage in an open discussion on human rights in member countries. This unique Member-State driven process of peer review, enriched by contributions from the civil society, has been a successful collaborative and constructive endeavour.

The human rights treaty bodies play an important role in assessing the implementation of the treaty obligations by the State parties. We support the ongoing intergovernmental process that aims to make the human rights treaty body system more coherent, coordinated and effective. We are thankful to the co-facilitators of the process as well as OHCHR and civil society for their contributions. We remain committed to actively supporting a consensus outcome of this process.

Mr. Chairman,

As we commemorate the 20th anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action this year, we would like to recall that the Vienna Declaration had reaffirmed the Right to Development as a universal and inalienable right, as well as an integral part of fundamental rights.

At RIO+20, the international community renewed its commitment to sustainable development, recognizing poverty eradication to be the greatest global challenge.

While States have the primary responsibility to promote the Right to Development, one cannot disregard the imperative of international cooperation, which is essential for the purpose of creating a supporting environment for the genuine realization of the Right to Development.

Mr. Chairman,

We are yet to realize the objective of a global culture of human rights, which can serve as a unifying force rather than a divisive force. A major challenge is to determine the most effective approach for promotion and protection of human rights, especially in instances of gross and systematic violations of human rights. Such violations anywhere in the world must certainly be addressed by the international community promptly, impartially, collectively and effectively with the objective to encourage concerned member States to undertake necessary measures to address the human rights situation.

Mr. Chairman,

As a State Party to the principal covenants on human rights, and of practically all other major human rights instruments, India is committed to the promotion and protection of human rights of its citizens.

The State policy is underpinned by our democratic, pluralistic and secular polity, an independent and impartial judiciary, a vibrant civil society, a free media and independent national human rights institution.

Let me highlight some important measures undertaken by us in this area. The Right to Information Act 2005 has empowered the ordinary citizens through access to information on government action leading to a more transparent and accountable governance.

The government has enacted several landmark legislations guaranteeing basic rights in the areas of work and employment, education and food security. These include the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act of 2005, the Right to Education Act of 2009 and most recently, the National Food Security Act of 2013.

The innovative mechanism of public interest litigations crafted by the judiciary ensured that even the most vulnerable sections of society, who may not be able to approach courts otherwise, can seek justice via a public-spirited person or organization. This mechanism has been extremely effective in providing remedies to vulnerable groups.

Mr. Chairman,

In conclusion, we are confident that India's focus on fundamental human rights nationally as well as our active participation and contribution to human rights related issues, both in UN and other fora, would make the world a better place to live in.

673. Statement by Dr. Ashwani Kumar, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 16: "Information and Communications Technologies for Development" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 22, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Mr. Chairperson,

Information and Communication Technologies are critical enablers of development. They themselves present enormous growth potential and can contribute to economic growth and employment generation.

These technologies act as force-multipliers, thereby stimulating the development of diverse sectors of the economy.

Information and Communication Technologies are particularly important in reducing transaction costs, improving and expanding service delivery, promoting access to information and knowledge in remote and rural areas, reducing intermediaries in delivery chains and enhancing government accountability and democratic participation.

We see the rapid deployment and up-scaling of Information and Communications Technologies as a real and profound opportunity to fast-track development.

Mr. Chairperson,

The growth of Information and Communications Technologies over the past decade has exceeded all expectations.

A decade ago, the idea that a person living in a remote village in India, for example could actually follow this debate in real time would have seemed a distant dream.

This dream is indeed true today and in fact anyone can actually watch me making this statement live on his mobile device!

This is nothing short of revolutionary.

Today more than six billion people worldwide have access to mobile phones and over a third of the world's population uses the internet.

What's more, the the share of smart phones with the ability of deliver more data and information is rapidly increasing and more and more people have access to broadband services.

Information and Communications Technologies can enable developing countries to enhance capacities and maximize limited resources in order to leapfrog traditional development patterns. By doing so, they can make meaningful and rapid headway for achieving inclusive and sustainable development.

ICT also is a critical enabler of better and more responsive governance, improved service delivery, enhanced transparency and promotion of social and economic empowerment of all our people.

Unleashing and tapping the enormous developmental potential of internet and mobile telephony is a real opportunity. We must make full use of it.

Mr. Chairperson,

India today boasts of over 700 million mobile phones. We also have the largest number of internet users after the United States and China.

Many of our major socio-economic programmes are delivered on IP based networks, and government and private sector networks are intimately interconnected.

India has actively utilized Information and Communication Technologies for inclusive development.

Our ambitious National e-Governance Plan has brought the government closer to the people. It has promoted greater openness and transparency and in the process has empowered the common people.

Information Technology has been combined with satellite based communication technology to reach rural areas through initiatives like tele-education and tele-medicine.

The initiative of Government of India to provide Unique Identification to all Indian citizens has borne fruit. More than 520 million Indians are now enrolled - making this possibly the world's largest ID scheme. The first major target of 600 million is likely to be exceeded by mid-2014.

Mr. Chairperson,

As a multi-cultural, multi-ethnic and democratic society, India is fully committed to the free growth of the internet.

We believe in the true spirit of the vision outlined in the Tunis Agenda, which reiterated the need for multilateral, transparent and democratic international management of the Internet with the full involvement of governments, the private sector, civil society and international organizations.

As the experience of our Government has demonstrated, we can significantly accelerate the process of development by applying ICTs in a well-coordinated manner.

India attaches great importance to the use of cyber space and ICTs as a major vehicle for achieving the goals of sustainable development.

We believe that the governance of cyber space which is based on the values of democracy, pluralism, inclusion, openness and transparency should also be similarly inclusive, democratic, participatory, multilateral and transparent in nature.

Operationalizing the Tunis mandate in this regard should not be viewed as an attempt by governments to 'take over' or to 'regulate' the internet.

If cyber space is a global commons, it cannot be managed only as private property. Its governance and architecture should reflect this fact as also respect for basic human rights including the inalienable human right of privacy.

Global internet governance can only be functional, effective and credible if all its stake-holders including those in developing countries, contribute to, and are consulted in, the process.

Enhanced cooperation on optimizing public policies on the use of cyberspace for development, therefore, should be a common goal for us in the United Nations.

The 10th anniversary of the World Summit on Information Society (WSIS), due in 2015, will be an opportunity for all of us to assess how cyber space and its related technologies can be optimally used for development.

Mr. Chairperson,

It is important that these issues are discussed openly.

India, I can assure you, remains committed to cooperate with all our partners in developing policies through the United Nations to support the use of cyber space and ICTs for sustainable and inclusive development.

I thank you

674. STATEMENT BY MR. MOHAMMED ADEEB, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM - 83 "CONSIDERATION OF PREVENTION OF TRANSBOUNDARY HARM FROM HAZARDOUS ACTIVITIES AND ALLOCATION OF LOSS IN THE CASE OF SUCH HARM" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 22, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, I would like to congratulate you on your assuming the Chairmanship of the Sixth Committee of the United Nations General Assembly. My congratulations are also due to the other Bureau members.

Mr. Chairman,

The present agenda item, under consideration of the Sixth Committee, is comprised of two important documents of vital interest for the international community, namely: the Draft Articles on prevention of transboundary harm from hazardous activities; and the Draft Principles on the allocation of loss in the case of trans-boundary harm arising out of hazardous activities.

The Draft Articles and the Draft Principles were adopted by the International Law Commission (ILC) at its fifty-third session in 2001 and at its fifty-eighth session in 2006 respectively, and submitted to the General Assembly.

Regarding the Draft Articles, the ILC recommended to the General Assembly for the elaboration of a convention on the basis thereof. With regard to the Draft Principles, the ILC recommended to the Assembly to endorse the Draft Principles by a resolution and urge States to take national and international action to implement them.

Mr. Chairman,

Once again, we take this opportunity to acknowledge the excellent work done by the ILC on the Draft Articles, and the Draft Principles; and once again we express our deep appreciation for Dr. P.S. Rao of India, the Special Rapporteur for both these topics, while also recognizing the contribution of the other two Special Rapporteurs for these topics.

Mr. Chairman,

We thank the Secretary-General for his reports on this agenda item, containing compilation of decisions of international courts, tribunals and other bodies referring to these Draft Articles and Draft Principles; and containing comments and information received from Governments concerning these documents.

Mr. Chairman,

The Draft Articles are a valuable contribution of the ILC toward the progressive development of international law. We believe that they are supplementary to the customary law reflected in the judicial decisions dealing with the principle of trans-boundary harm and ensuing damage from hazardous activities.

We reiterate our view that the Draft Articles are dealt in a general manner, providing enough flexibility to States to fashion specific liability regimes for particular sectors of activities under their jurisdiction.

It is our belief that the thrust of the prevention aspect, in the Draft Articles, could be seen in the broader context of the right to development and the obligation to promote, preserve and protect the environment.

Mr. Chairman,

Concerning the Draft Principles, we agree with the basic purpose thereof and support the fundamental premise that in situations involving harm arising out of hazardous activities, the liability rests with the operator and where appropriate extends to the other persons or entities also.

Regarding the "response measures", we recognize that obligations to notify as well as consultation to mitigate the effects of transboundary harm are recognized in a number of international instruments governing hazardous activities. At the same time, we also believe that competent authorities of a State shall have the power, under domestic laws, to require response measures from the operator towards mitigation/elimination of the damage. Any residual response measure from the State should be supplementary to the operator's liability, based on the capacity of the State to undertake such measures.

Mr. Chairman,

We, as stated earlier, have a concern on an expanded definition of "damage" which, under the Draft Principle 2(a), includes: loss of life or personal injury, loss of or damage to property; loss or damage by impairment of the environment; costs of reasonable measures of reinstatement of the property; and costs of reasonable response measures.

A traditional civil liability regime as the one in my country provides for a definition of damage that includes loss of life, property and loss caused on account of "actual damage" to the environment. We believe that cost of response measures or reinstatement of the environment on account of "impairment of the environment" will have adverse impact on the developmental efforts of States. Therefore, in our view the draft principles should be complementary in nature without prejudice to the regime on state responsibility under international law.

Mr. Chairman,

The Draft Articles and the Draft Principles are a major step forward toward regulating the transboundary impact of hazardous activities. These documents, in our view, are set to serve as a useful guide to States in their efforts to adopt legislative, regulatory and administrative measures, incorporating relevant principles in their domestic laws and policies.

I Thank you Mr. Chairman.

- 675. Statement by Mrs. Shruti Choudhry, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, On Agenda Item 21: "Globalization and interdependence: (a) Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence (d) Culture and development" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 23, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Mr. Chairperson,

Globalization and its effective management for the greater good is an issue that lies at the heart of multilateral cooperation under the United Nations and also the evolving discourse on a Post-2015 Development Agenda.

In this context, I would like to focus on six key themes.

First, globalization is the defining reality of our times and its essential creed is that today all of us share a common destiny.

Globalization has brought unprecedented mobility of goods, services, capital, labour, technology and ideas. In doing so, it has created growth and wealth. It has fostered greater trade and interdependence. It has brought people together.

No individual or nation can remain unaffected by changes occurring in other parts of the world. We live in a world where we act together, succeed together and even fail together.

Second, we must also recognize and confront the risks and challenges that globalization has brought.

Till a few years ago the world had taken for granted the benefits of globalization and global interdependence. Today we are faced with the negative dimensions of those very phenomena.

The benefits of globalization have not been equitably shared, while its costs are unevenly distributed.

While it has created wealth and opportunities, it has also brought in a high degree of instability and insecurity in its wake.

A clear manifestation of the negative effects of globalization was the global financial and economic crisis, worsened by the crises of food and energy prices. It is the developing countries that became the worst victims of these crises even though they were the least responsible for them.

The increasing interdependence in the world as a result of the processes of globalization has also meant that national policies can no longer be formulated or implemented in isolation from international environment.

Third, the key to manage globalization and make it a force for inclusive development and common good is to strengthen multilateralism through open, democratic and participatory global governance structures. Unfortunately, global governance has not kept pace with the rapid changes of the past many decades.

A key reason for this is the abiding 'democratic deficit' in institutions of multilateral decision making. For multilateralism to remain relevant and effective in managing the forces of globalization, multilateral institutions need to be reformed urgently. This needs to be done both in the United Nations as well as in multilateral financial institutions. We must enable an enhanced voice for developing countries in decision making structures of the global economic governance.

Fourth, a key aspect of globalization is the management of the global commons.

We strongly believe that our collective effort for the management of the global commons must equitably balance the needs and responsibilities of nations at different stages of development.

The present stark imbalance in the consumption of natural and atmospheric resources does not lend credibility to our efforts to mainstream sustainability and address global challenges such as climate change.

Above all therefore, our commitment to the management of global commons must be premised on an equitable sharing of resources.

Fifth, an abiding feature of globalization is the phenomenon of international migration. The spirit of globalization rests on the mobility and flow of human resources.

We need to craft a humane, orderly and mutually beneficial process of migration which maximizes its win-win opportunity for both developing as well as developed countries and reduces its negative dimensions.

Sixth, managing globalization so that it benefits everyone would be a central challenge of the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

It is therefore important that this agenda remains focused on the promotion of sustained and inclusive economic growth with eradication of poverty as the central and overarching objective.

It should carry forward the human development imperatives enshrined in the MDGs, fully respect the Rio principles and prioritize enhanced mobilization of resources as part of a renewed global partnership for development.

In order to harness the positive forces of globalization, the Post-2015 Development Agenda must be anchored in the imperative of creating a supportive international economic environment, enhanced aid and investment flows, a supportive multilateral trade regime and a strengthened framework for transfer of technology.

Mr. Chairperson,

Allow me to also address the important issue of 'Culture and Development'.

We fully support the notion that a culture-sensitive approach is needed for the success of development initiatives.

Coming from India I believe that a culture-sensitive approach is one that embraces differences, celebrates diversity and promotes mutual respect. Only such an inclusive approach can enable us to pursue collective global objectives in a spirit of solidarity.

Let me also add that certain cultural precepts can add value to our global efforts at promoting sustainable development.

If we are to collectively achieve sustainable development, the world will have to embrace a 'culture of frugality'. The culture of harmony with nature, of taking from the Earth and the atmosphere only so much as one puts back into them. This idea has been a part and parcel of Indian ethos and culture.

We must find new pathways for transition to a culture of frugal living, less wastage and equitable sharing of resources.

I thank you

676. Statement by Mrs. Shruti Choudhry, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 17 (a): "Macroeconomic Policy Questions: International Trade and Development" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 24, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

We thank the Secretary General and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) for the comprehensive report on the subject of International Trade and Development.

Mr. Chairperson,

International trade has long been recognized as an engine for development and a vital tool to provide long-term sustainable growth.

The international community has also reaffirmed its commitment to a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization as a means for stimulating economic growth and development worldwide.

India firmly believes that trade and investment, and an open, rules-based, transparent and non-discriminatory WTO-based trading system can play an important role in restoring global growth.

These imperatives will also have to anchor our approach under the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

We need to accelerate and strengthen our efforts for ensuring that international trade plays an enabling role for restoring global growth and assisting developing countries in eradicating poverty and promoting all-round development.

Mr. Chairperson,

The report of the Secretary General notes that after expanding strongly by 6.9% in 2011, global trade volume decelerated sharply to only 2.7% in 2012. This sharp deceleration of global trade is a matter of concern.

The continued fragility of global economic recovery and the weak demand in developed countries continues to hobble robust growth in international trade.

Growth in large developing countries has also slowed down. Unemployment remains high and food and energy price volatility has not been contained.

In this scenario, it is important that we undertake growth promoting policies to boost demand and create jobs.

Mr. Chairperson,

India firmly believes in the centrality of the multilateral trading system and is convinced that strengthening the WTO is critical for anchoring expectations about the continued commitment to an open world economy.

We need to urgently summon the necessary political will and international action for reinvigorating the Doha Development round in the WTO. This was the first round of trade negotiations that was explicitly called a development round and presents a valuable opportunity to make international trade a genuine vehicle for growth and development.

With the upcoming 9th Ministerial Meeting of the WTO in Bali, it is imperative that we get back to the negotiating table with the will to reach an outcome that is fair, balanced and equitable, with development at its core.

Mr. Chairperson,

To act as an engine of development, the international trade framework should work towards removing barriers that prevent developing countries from fully participating in global trade. Eschewing protectionism and enhancing market access for developing countries are critical in this regard.

Removal of trade distorting subsidies in developed countries particularly in the agricultural sector is equally crucial.

In this context, we note the decision of the G-20 to extend their standstill commitment on protectionist measures until the end of 2016. This however, must be part of a commitment to take credible steps to show progress on the Doha Round.

Mr. Chairperson,

We look forward to a positive outcome of the WTO Ministerial Meeting in Bali in the hope that it will encourage all countries to move ahead quickly on a fair, equitable and development-oriented outcome of the Doha round.

I thank you

677. STATEMENT BY MR AVINASH PANDE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 50 - INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION IN THE PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE, AT THE SPECIAL POLITICAL & DECOLONIZATION [FOURTH] COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 24, 2013.

Mr. Chairman

At the outset, on behalf of India, I would like to congratulate Ambassador Carlos Garcia Gonzalez of El Salvador on his election as Chairman of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee to the 68th General Assembly, as also the other members of the Bureau on their election. I wish you all the best of success and assure you of my country's continued co-operation and support. I would also like to congratulate the former Chairman, the Permanent Representative of Gabon, Ambassador Noel Nelson Messone, for doing an admirable job in conducting this committee during the 67th session of the General Assembly.

The Indian delegation believes that UNCOPUOS continues to be the unique platform for international space cooperation and utilization of outer space for peaceful purposes, under the mandate of the General Assembly. The Indian delegation also expresses its satisfaction over deliberations at the 56th session of UNCOPUOS, under the chairmanship of Mr. Yasushi Horikawa of Japan, and the work carried out by the two sub-committees of UNCOPUOS.

Mr. Chairman

While acknowledging the significant achievements of various member states in space endeavours during the last one year, the Indian delegation desires to brief the Committee on the significant achievements made by India in the field of space, since the last session.

On February 25, 2013, the Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle (PSLV-C20), on its twenty second successive successful flight, placed the satellite with Argos and Altika (SARAL), an Indo-French joint mission, in polar orbit, and also placed six other satellites belonging to Austria, Canada, Denmark and United Kingdom in their intended orbits. SARAL carries a radar altimeter (Ka band Altimeter - ALTIKA) to study sea surface altitude and a data collection platform (ARGOS) for collecting data from ocean buoys and weather data centers. Data is currently being received by both France and India and after the validation phase, the products will be made available globally.

On July 01, 2013, PSLV-C22 precisely placed the first satellite of India's Regional navigational satellite system constellation, IRNSS-1A into its intended orbit. IRNSS-1A is the first of the seven-satellite constellation designed for providing position, navigation and timing services over the Indian region.

India's weather satellite, INSAT 3D carrying advanced weather monitoring payloads, was successfully launched by Arianespace from Kourou, French Guiana on July 25, 2013. Arianespace has also launched India's advanced communication satellite GSAT-7 on August 30, 2013.

The Indian Space Research Organization, ISRO is undertaking a "Mars Orbiter Mission", as the first step by India towards exploring the planet Mars. The primary technological objective of this mission is to design and realize a spacecraft with a capability to reach Mars, and to orbit around Mars. The Mars Orbiter Mission is scheduled for launch during October-November 2013 from Sriharikota using PSLV, and would be captured around Planet Mars in September 2014.

India's geosynchronous satellite launch vehicle GSLV-Mk II, with Indian cryogenic stage, carrying GSAT-14 satellite, is also scheduled for launch this year. India is also getting ready to launch the first Indian space based observatory for multi-wavelength observations of the celestial bodies and cosmic sources, named ASTROSAT.

Mr. Chairman

The Indian space programme continues to integrate the advances in space technology and applications with its national developmental goals. India places considerable importance on International Cooperation for peaceful use of outer space. Currently, formal instruments of cooperation are in place with 33 countries and three international organisations. India provides near real-time global wind vector data derived from OCEANSAT-2 satellite to the scientific community globally, under an arrangement with EUMETSAT.

Under India-ASEAN cooperation, it is proposed to establish a station in one of the ASEAN member countries to receive, process and use data from Indian satellites for a variety of applications, including disaster management support. A network of weather stations is also being established in SAARC countries to support severe thunderstorm predictions.

India continues to provide expertise and services for supporting the developing countries in the application of space technology through capacity building. The Center for Space Science and Technology Education for Asia and the Pacific Region, affiliated to the UN and operating from India, has so far benefited more than 1200 scholars from 53 countries.

India is an active member of the Committee for Earth Observation Systems (CEOS) and hosted the 26th plenary meeting of CEOS in Bangalore, in October 2012, with the participation of more than 30 space agencies and affiliated organizations.

Mr. Chairman

In conclusion, the Indian delegation greatly acknowledges the potential of space technology and the efforts of UNCOPUOS to maintain outer space for peaceful purposes.

Thank you Mr. Chairman

678. Statement by Hon'ble Ms. Preeti Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs at the Joint debate in UNGA under Agenda item 63(a) and (b) and 13 on New Partnership for Africa's Development and International Support; Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa; Reports of the Secretary General ((A/68/222 AND A/68/220-S/2013/475); AND 2001 - 2010 DECADE TO ROLL BACK MALARIA IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES, PARTICULARLY IN AFRICA.

New York, October 25, 2013.

Your Excellency, President of the General Assembly,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Let me first of all congratulate H.E. Mr. John Ashe, on his election to the presidency of the 68th session of the UN General Assembly. We wish him every success and assure him of our fullest co-operation.

I am honoured to address today's Joint Debate on the New Partnership for Africa's Development and the promotion of peace and development in Africa, including in its efforts to fight malaria.

Allow me to also convey our sincerest appreciation to the Secretary General for his timely and extremely informative report on the agenda items under discussion today.

Epitomising the spirit of Pan Africanism, the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), with its strong emphasis on infrastructure, agriculture and governance, is indeed firmly on course in realising the vision of an integrated, prosperous and peaceful African continent.

Madam President,

India applauds the progress achieved by Africa in the implementation of NEPAD priorities over the last ten years through multi sectoral initiatives in agriculture, infrastructure, health, education, science, information technology and environment. However, despite these positive strides, serious challenges remain to be addressed before the African continent can achieve all round development and prosperity. Extreme poverty, hunger, lack of adequate nutrition, conflicts and other malaises continue to shackle the tremendous potential of the African people.

It is therefore important to acknowledge that addressing Africa's development needs and challenges requires an unwavering commitment backed by resolute action, not only from within Africa, but equally important, from outside the continent.

As has been pointed in Secretary General's report, total ODA to Africa has further declined from $ 133.7 billion in 2011 to $ 125.9 billion in 2012.

The report also points out that despite a strong average growth of 6.6% in 2012, it has not been inclusive or sustainable. Persistently high unemployment threatens to undermine the recent gains made towards social development and derail the progress towards achievement of the MDGs.

It is therefore imperative that the international community remains resolute in its support for Africa through sustained cooperation including transfer of technology, resources and an enabling international environment and immediately address this gaping gap between promise and delivery on pledged commitments.

In these times of political uncertainty and economic meltdown, it is more incumbent than ever for the continent's development partners to stay the course and help African countries achieve their developmental goals.

Madam President,

The India-Africa partnership is based on firm historical foundations, which over the decades, has grown into one of the most productive and durable partnerships. For the people of India, Africa is the land of awakening of the Father of the Nation, Mahatma Gandhi and our ties continue to be rooted in our history of solidarity against colonialism and apartheid.

Our engagement with Africa has come a long way since then and today we have built a new template for partnership in the form of the India-Africa Forum Summit. This partnership is based on mutual respect, guided by the vision and priorities of our African brothers and sisters. India and Africa are committed to pursue the ideals of democratic governance in multicultural linguistic societies and inclusive development for the benefit of their peoples. India and African Union launched a Plan of Action of Enhanced Framework of Cooperation on 6th September 2013 in New Delhi.

India is committed to assist Africa including in human resources and institutional capacity building, education, science & technology, agricultural productivity and food security, industrial growth, including small & medium enterprises, health sector, infrastructure and ICT.

These activities are being implemented directly with Member States in close consultation with Regional Economic Communities, African Union Commission and NEPAD Agency. India is also extending concession finance to develop social and economic infrastructure. Over the last decade, 170 Lines of Credit for an amount of US$ 9.7 billion have been allocated, of which US$ 5.8 billion was allocated for African countries.

There has been a spectacular increase in India-Africa trade over the last two decades. India-Africa trade has grown from a small US $ 967 million in 1991 to over US $ 70 billion in 2012. The target of US $ 90 billion has been set for 2015. There is significant scope in enhancing and diversifying it with coordinated and sustained efforts.

India also actively supports African initiatives for peace and security in the continent. In the pursuit of this commitment, more than 6,500 Indian soldiers support UN Peacekeeping Operations in various parts of Africa.

There is a lot that we can learn from each other's development experiences. We have redirected our age-old bonds of friendship to respond to the contemporary aspirations of our peoples and build a partnership which is increasingly being cited as the 'beacon of South South cooperation'.

The IBSA Fund, which recently celebrated a Special Event on the occasion of International Day of South South Cooperation here at the UN in New York on 12 September, has already completed several successful projects in Burundi, Cape Verde, Guinea Bissau and Sierra Leone for strengthening of infrastructure and capacity building.

Madam President,

Our partnership with Africa has the potential to strengthen global governance systems and democratise multilateral institutions. It is indeed an irony and a continuing question on the credibility of the Security Council's representativeness to not have the whole continent of Africa represented in the permanent category of membership, inspite of nearly 75 percent of its work being focussed on Africa alone!

We along with our African friends, continue to impress upon the need for urgent reforms of the Security Council and addressing historical injustices by making it reflective of contemporary realities.

The year 2015, which marks the 70th anniversary for the United Nations and 10 years following the 2005 World Summit mandate by our Heads of States and Governments to achieve early reforms, would be a befitting occasion to deliver concrete outcomes on our pledged commitment to reforming institutions of global governance.

I thank you Madam President.

679. Statement by Dr. Ashwani Kumar, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation. during the Thematic Debate on Other Weapons Mass Destruction at the First Committee of 68th United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 25,2013.

Mr. Chairman,

India attaches high importance to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the Biological Weapons Convention. These are examples of non-discriminatory treaties in the field of disarmament which could effectively lead to the total elimination of biological and chemical weapons of mass destruction. These treaties are indeed historic in the sweep of their vision and the unity of purpose that has inspired them.

India associates itself with the statement delivered by Indonesia on behalf of the Non- Aligned Movement.

Recent events in Syria have demonstrated the importance of complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons stockpiles in the world as soon as possible and the need to ensure that terrorists and non-state actors are prevented from acquiring access to these weapons. The use of chemical weapons anywhere and by anyone must be condemned and the international norm against the use of chemical weapons must be rigorously enforced. India supports the ongoing efforts of the OPCW for the expedited destruction and elimination of chemical weapons stockpiles in Syria.

India served as the Chair of the Executive Council leading up to the Third Review Conference and welcomes the adoption of the Final Report of the Conference by consensus. We welcome the clear expression of the international community's conviction in the Review Conference document that the CWC has reinforced its role as the international norm against chemical weapons and has made a major contribution to international peace and security by seeking a total exclusion of the possibility of use of chemical weapons. The Review Conference also expressed the determination that the destruction of all categories of chemical weapons shall be completed in the shortest possible time in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

India reaffirms that disarmament is a primary goal of the Chemical Weapons Convention and should remain our priority till the complete destruction of all chemical weapons is achieved. India completed the destruction of its chemical weapons stockpiles in 2009 as per its obligations and within the stipulated time frame under the CWC. We believe that the possessor States should fulfil their obligations within the shortest possible time. Universality is also fundamental to the success of the Convention. Full, effective and non-discriminatory implementation of Article XI is essential for the realisation of the object and purpose of the Convention.

With its large and growing chemical industry, India has the second largest number of declared facilities. Our filing of chemical industry declarations has been exemplary indeed. India receives one of the largest number of inspections from OPCW and we have ensured a flawless track record of verification inspections. At the same time, we believe that the OPCW needs to evolve transparent and objective criteria and modalities for inspections. The provisions of the Convention should be implemented in a manner that does not hinder legitimate activities, especially in countries like India with a large and growing chemical industry.

We join other delegations in conveying our felicitations to the OPCW on being awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Mr. Chairman,

India is committed to improving the effectiveness of the BWC and strengthening its implementation and universalization. We believe this is necessary in view of the new challenges to international peace and security emanating from proliferation trends, including the threat posed by terrorists and other non-State actors seeking access to biological agents for terrorist activities. We welcome the accession of Cameroon, Nauru, Guyana and Malawi to the BWC this year.

One critical area in which the BWC is focused inadequate is an effective mechanism for verification of compliance. In a multilateral treaty such as the BWC, verification of compliance is critically important for States Parties to be collectively assured that the provisions of the Convention are being implemented by all States Parties. Only a multilaterally agreed mechanism for verification of compliance can provide the assurance of observance of compliance obligations by States Parties and act as a deterrence against non-compliance.

The Seventh Review Conference mandated the current inter-sessional programme to consider three standing agenda items and two items on a biennial basis. We appreciate the chairmanship of Algeria in 2012 and Hungary in 2013 for providing a purposive initiative to the inter-sessional meetings.

India believes that it is critical for the success of the BWC that commitments and obligations under the Convention are fully and effectively implemented. India has a broad based regulatory framework to prevent the misuse of biological science and technology. We believe that CBMs are an important transparency measure to enhance trust in implementation of the Convention, but cannot substitute a multilaterally agreed mechanism for verification of compliance. In this regard, the decisions taken by the 7th Review Conference should be respected so as not to upset the balance in priorities of States Parties.

Mr. Chairman,

One of the issues that concerns both the BWC and the CWC and to which India attaches due importance is that of export controls. India has strong and law-based national export controls which fulfil all our obligations under these Conventions as well as commitments under UNSCR 1540. India filed its report on UNSCR 1540 in November 2004 and has submitted periodic updates the last being in 2013. India has actively engaged with the Australia Group and other export control regimes with a view to seeking full membership of these organizations. India is committed to maintain the highest international standards with reference to control of chemical, biological and toxin items.

Thank you

680. Statement by Mr. Avinash Pande, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation on Agenda Item 49-Effects of Atomic Radiation at the Special Political and Decolonization [Fourth] Committee of the 68th Session of the UNGA.

New York, October 25, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

On behalf of India, I would like to once again congratulate you on your election as Chairman of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee to the 68th General Assembly. I wish you all the best of success, and assure you of my country's continued co-operation and support.

Mr. Chairman,

I would also like to compliment the Scientific Committee on its detailed assessment of the levels and effects of radiation exposure after the accident at the Fukushima Daichi Nuclear Power Plants in 2011. The Committee was ably assisted by experts from several Member States, and was provided voluminous critical data by the Government of Japan, TEPCO, other authenticated Japanese sources and international organizations. It is reassuring to note that in the assessment of the Committee, there was no significant adverse health effect observable in the exposed population so far.

The biological and health effects of this accident will be monitored for several decades to come. A Fukushima Health Management Survey has been initiated to monitor long-term health effects. India would urge the Committee to undertake periodic analyses of the emerging data.

While present estimates indicate that exposure of marine and terrestrial nonhuman biota was, in general, too low for acute effects to be observed, caution needs to be exercised. In the aftermath of a calamity of this proportion, it is only to be expected that certain shades of opinion would paint a gloomy picture of the consequences. However the world will have to depend on the non-partisan and scientifically sound assessments of UNSCEAR for a non-judgmental view. We would also like to stress that the Committee's projections of the risk of any health effect like cancer, based on use of certain models and data on collective dose, should not be wrongly interpreted to derive the number of likely deaths. There is need for utmost restraint in this regard.

Mr. Chairman,

India commends the large-scale evacuation and other preventive as well as recovery and remedial measures taken by the Government of Japan, which ensured considerable reduction in the radiation dose received by the people.

Mr. Chairman,

India also congratulates the Scientific Committee for completing its evaluation of radiation exposure of children. It is an unfortunate fact that only in a few countries, is reliable data maintained on exposure of children and the population in general during various medical, diagnostic and therapeutic procedures. Notwithstanding this limitation, the analysis carried out by the Committee is revealing. While the Committee has concluded that for a given dose, children are generally at greater risk of tumor induction than adults, when examined by tumor types, it is seen that 25% of children are clearly more radio-sensitive, 15% have the same radio-sensitivity and 10% appear to be less sensitive than adults. However, in the case of the remaining nearly 50%, there is weak or no relationship between radiation exposure and age at exposure. For deterministic effects after high acute or fractionated exposure, the differences between a child and adult are complex. There are some instances of more, same and lower sensitivity of children vis-a-vis adults, for different deterministic effects. There is no evidence of increase in hereditary effects such as chromosomal instability, DNA mutation and congenital malformations in offspring of parents exposed to radiation, including high level natural radiation. India is happy to state that this inference is also strongly supported by the data published by Indian researchers based on the study of several thousand newborn children in the high level natural radiation area off the Kerala coast.

Mr. Chairman,

India would like to urge early publication of two very important scientific annexes that were finalized by the Committee in the 59th session, namely the "Ability to attribute risk and effects to ionizing radiation" and "Uncertainties in the risk estimates for cancer due to exposure to ionizing radiation". These are of considerable interest from the social, economic and legal points of view, as they may impact the liability of an agency that provides services involving use of ionizing radiation or generation of nuclear energy.

India notes with satisfaction the progress made in the development of several other scientific documents undertaken by the Committee. Of special interest to India is the one on "Epidemiology of low-dose-rate exposures of the public to natural and artificial environmental sources of radiation". In this context, India suggests evaluation of all available data on different biological end points, including cancer.

Mr. Chairman,

India would like to emphasize that international regulatory agencies use the risk assessments by UNSCEAR for arriving at the dose limits of radiation exposure, for the protection of occupational radiation workers and the general public. These limits are several fold lower than the doses that have actually been shown to cause significant harm. Of late there have been concerns about the public perception of these limits. In particular, these concerns get reflected in reservations with respect to recovery management in the case of radioactive contamination. People are concerned about the continuing exposure situation that would be created. Results of studies on biological and health effects in populations exposed to chronic high level natural radiation as carried out in India and China, would reflect such a situation of continued exposure. Yet, they do not indicate any significant health detriment.

As regards Medical Radiation Exposure, India offers its full cooperation to facilitate the collection of relevant information. The Global Survey to be undertaken by the Committee is an essential but very challenging and difficult task, considering the ground realities in several countries.

Mr. Chairman,

The Committee's new strategy of bringing out its reports with scientific annexes in a shorter time than the earlier cycle of 5-6 years, is yielding commendable results. Its efforts to address emergent issues on priority, should be appreciated and supported by UNEP, with adequate resources as and when necessary.

I would like to conclude by reiterating that as a founder member of UNSCEAR, India is proud to be associated with its deliberations.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

681. Statement by Dr. Ashwani Kumar, Member of Parliament and Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item No. 134 "Proposed Programme Budget: Biennium 2014-15" at the Fifth Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 28, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

It is an honour to have the President of the General Assembly, and the Secretary-General among us today for the presentation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2014-15

I wish to thank the Secretary-General for the presentation of the budget for the next biennium. I thank the ACABQ Chair for introducing their relevant reports.

My delegation aligns itself with the statement delivered by the distinguished permanent representative of Fiji on behalf of the Group of 77 and China.

Mr. Chairman,

The biennium budget reflects the priorities of United Nations and the willingness of the international community to make necessary resources available to achieve them. The budget document is a link between our ambitions and the actions we are ready to undertake.

It is our firm belief that under your able guidance the committee will successfully deliberate Secretary-General's proposed programme budget amounting to 5.4 billion USD. We also hope it will lead to a balanced allocation of resources across the key priorities of the organization in the fields of peace, security, and development.

Important subjects pertaining to staff-mobility, special political missions, and numerous ongoing reform initiatives are also before the committee at this session.

Mr. Chairman,

More importantly, the committee will also have to carry the burden of the past- indecisions that can no longer be deferred anymore. Recosting decision to the tune of USD 170 million remains outstanding before the Committee. Unresolved staff- compensation issue is likewise a carryover from the past sessions.

Mr. Chairman,

Although the budgetary allocations to the Special Political Missions have increased steadily through the last decade, the regular budget has maintained a zero-growth in real terms for the last few bienniums. Investments on ICT, renovation and reconstruction have also been substantial.

The widening-gap between the initial appropriations and the revised estimates is a pointer to the infirmities of the budgetary process we have adopted.

Our ability to address unforeseen expenditures also continues to be ad-hoc and, therefore, is unsustainable from a budgetary perspective.

Expectations that additional expenditures will always be absorbed within the existing resources are ill-founded and must not define the process of budgetary formulation.

Mr. Chairman,

Last few bienniums were heavily focused on reforms & renovations. Much of the expenditures therefore went to headquarter-based structures and processes. The member states' meager resources should go to the poor and the deprived and not for the creation of hardware and assets at the headquarters.

It is our sincere hope that we can now re-focus our attention to the core priorities in the field of development, peace and security, all the more when budgetary resources have streamed thin.

Mr. Chairman,

In this regard, we are deeply anguished to note secretary-general's proposed reduction of posts under the developmental pillar. This will further aggravate the neglect of the developmental needs of the poor citizenry of the world.

Mr. Chairman,

Ballooning extra-budgetary contributions defy the belief that the prevailing fiscal- climate has adversely impacted member-states ability to contribute to the regular budget. Moreover, an excessive shift towards voluntary contributions pre-empts a judicious and consultative allocation of resources.

We believe that the regular budget is not to cater to the administrative expenses of the organization alone, with extra-budgetary contributions taking over the programmatic component.

Mr. Chairman,

The paramount need today is to anchor the budgetary process once again in the democratic ethos and to dedicate it visibly to vindicating the role of this organization as custodian of global peace and well-being of the disadvantaged.

Mr. Chairman,

Secretariat staff are the drivers and carriers of our mandates. Their ability is our capacity. Our workforce must be true to the global character of the organization. A restricted catchment of workforce will continue to throw up challenges that the proposed mobility-framework seeks to address. It is our sincere hope that the Secretary General's proposals will contribute to correcting the geographic imbalance in the composition of the present secretariat.

Mr. Chairman,

The special political missions are now a prominent tool in the domain of peace and security. From a mere 200 million USD, the SPM today require an estimated 1.2 billion USD. The arrangements for their backstopping and funding have generated much debate in the past sessions. Streamlining of their budgetary and associated processes will render them nimble and cost-effective.

Mr. Chairman,

Programme delivery is the sole yardstick for the success of the budgetary process. Our sights must therefore be firmly focused accordingly. Efficiency gains & cuts suggested at the headquarters are essentially management practices that can in no way substitute the field-based assessment of mandate implementation.

Faced with mounting challenges to global peace & security, our ability to make a difference in people's lives is directly proportionate to our willingness to spare resources and to use them judiciously. An aspiration, therefore, to freeze budget-levels artificially ahead in time will end up exposing its limitations as the biennium unfolds.

Mr. Chairman,

Expensive reform initiatives have been undertaken in recent bienniums. ICT project UMOJA alone cost us USD 360 million. The cost of secretariat renovation amounted to USD 2 billion. The logistical and support arm of peacekeeping stands relocated today in far-off lands away from the member states, thus enhancing the cost of arbitrage many times. Cost overruns, project-governance, hidden-costs, and implementation-delays have been some of the routine features the member-states had to grapple with during the past sessions

The case for strict monitoring and greater transparency has, therefore, never been this strong. Our experiences must be built into the lessons we learn. The ambition for transformation must not risk derailment on account of lack of administrative and management oversights.

Mr. Chairman,

Concern for the well-being of the poor and the under-privileged must be the first charge on the resources of the organization while we adopt corporate efficiencies and standards at the headquarters. Our housekeeping expenses must necessarily be moderated so that we are not found wanting in the discharge of our primary responsibility.

Mr. Chairman,

India believes that an overly cost-conscious approach, dominated by few big donors hurts the deliberative space so far as the programmatic elements of the mandates are concerned. It also weakens the collaborative character that defines the United Nations.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman,

This process is not about the aspirations, resources, and mandates alone. It is also about the manner in which we deliberate together to make it work. Imbalances, therefore, impart strength neither to the process nor to its outcome. This session must make manifest and eloquently visible our collective response to faithfully vindicate the trust reposed in this organization for ensuring distributive and inter-generational equities in the cause of global peace and inclusive development.

I thank you Mr. Chairman.

682. statement by Mr. Mohammed Adeeb, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 40: "Necessity Of Ending The Economic, Commercial And Financial Blockade Against Cuba" at the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, October 29, 2013.

Mr. President,

I am honored to make a statement on this important agenda item.

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77 and also the statement made by the distinguished representative of Iran on behalf of NAM.

Mr. President,

This is the twenty-second year in succession that this Assembly is deliberating the decades old economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed on Cuba.

In all these years, this Assembly has repeatedly rejected the imposition of laws and regulations with extra-territorial impact and all other forms of coercive economic measures that hurt the progress and prosperity of the people the world over.

This august Assembly has also called upon all States to respect their obligations under the United Nations Charter and international law, as well as repeal and invalidate laws and measures that have "extra-territorial effects" on the sovereignty of other States and affect the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation.

Despite the repeated calls of the General Assembly, its resolutions remain unimplemented in contravention of world opinion.

Such disregard of the collective will of the international community expressed through the United Nations undermines the credibility of this institution and weakens multilateralism.

Mr. President,

India strongly supports the categorical rejection by the international community of domestic laws with extra-territorial impact.

Mr. President,

The embargo on Cuba has resulted in immense suffering for the Cuban people. This embargo is a violation of the right of a sovereign state to development and to enjoy the freedom of trade, economy and navigation.

The embargo has denied a life of dignity to the people of Cuba and has severely undermined the progress of the country.

The adverse impact of the embargo has been made worse by the global economic and financial crisis, as well as by the rise in global food and energy prices. The embargo has denied Cuban economy access to market, investment, technology, which is needed for rapid and inclusive development.

Since it is denied access to major markets with which it shares its geography, Cuba has had to pay enormous extra cost for sourcing products, technology and services from third countries located thousands of kilometers away as well as finding markets for its products.

The extra-territorial application of the embargo has discouraged investment, technology transfer and sale and other forms of business collaborations between Cuba and third countries.

Mr. President,

The United Nations Economic Commission for the Latin America and the Caribbean has noted that the embargo limits key policy options for the Cuban government and its efforts for updating the economic model of the country are hampered by the embargo.

The Food and Agriculture Organization has pointed out that the embargo has very negative implications for Cuba's balance of trade and foreign exchange earnings, as well as for the country's supply of food and agriculture products as well as a direct effect on the food security of the vulnerable segments of the population.

The office of the Resident Coordinator of the United Nations System in Cuba has further brought to our attention the fact that the embargo has a pervasive impact on the social, economic and environmental dimensions of human development in Cuba, affecting the most vulnerable socioeconomic groups of the Cuban population in particular.

These instances are clear evidence of the immense suffering caused to the Cuban people due to the embargo.

Mr. President,

We believe that differences among countries should be solved through dialogue and negotiation, in a spirit of mutual respect, respect for each other's independence and sovereignty, and non-interference in the other's internal affairs. It is of utmost importance that the spirit of multilateralism embodied by the UN is respected.

Mr. President,

Before concluding, permit me to reiterate India's opposition to unilateral measures by countries, which impinge on the sovereignty of another country, including attempts to extend the application of a country's laws extraterritorially to other sovereign nations.

India joins other nations in calling for an immediate end to the embargo against Cuba. India supports the resolution moved by Cuba.

I thank you

683. Statement by Mrs. Shruti Choudhry, Member of Parliament & Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item 25: "Agriculture development, Food Security and Nutrition" at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York , October 29, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

Thank you for giving me the floor.

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of the Group of 77.

Mr. Chairperson,

The subject at hand today - that of food security - is at the heart of human development and the most pressing issue on the global sustainable development agenda.

We must spare no effort to achieve the MDG target of halving the proportion of people suffering from hunger by 2015. We must also ensure that food security and nutrition remain at the centre of the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Mr. Chairperson,

India feeds seventeen percent of the world's population on less than five percent of the world's water and three percent of its arable land.

Over a period of time, India has taken several measures to increase agricultural output and promote food security.

The National Food Security Mission launched in the year 2007 has yielded positive results.

India's total food grain production in 2011-12 reached a record 259 million tons.

The Food Security Law that we have passed recently is the largest such effort of its kind in the world aimed at ensuring food security for our people. This law will benefit 75 percent of our rural population and half of our urban population.

Mr. Chairperson,

In the context of this debate, I would like to highlight some key issues.

First, food security - especially access to food - is directly linked with income poverty. While addressing food security, we must be cognizant of and maintain this link with poverty eradication.

At the same time, ensuring global progress towards food security and nutrition requires action along multiple dimensions. These include food availability, access, price stability, consumption and utilization and health and sanitation.

Second, while focusing on food security, we must also focus on the problem of under-nourishment and malnutrition, which is akin to a silent epidemic in many developing countries.

An estimated 26 % of the world's children are stunted and 2 billion suffer from one or more micro-nutrient deficiencies. This is a challenge that requires a focused policy response.

Third, food security cannot be ensured by national action alone. In today's interconnected world, there is an important role of international systemic and structural factors which need to be looked into. Meaningfully addressing food price volatility and its structural and root causes, including speculative practices in the commodity markets needs to be prioritized.

Fourth, we cannot achieve food security and agricultural livelihood security in developing countries if we do not urgently address the issue of revamping the distorted global rules of agricultural subsidies.

These rules have allowed OECD countries on the one hand to increase their subsidies to US$ 415 billion in 2012 while at the same time constraining the developing countries to benchmark the current administered prices offered to their poor farmers against an antiquated reference price based on the 1986-88 period, as a measure of subsidy.

It is important that global policy in this regard must be able to differentiate the bona fide efforts of developing countries aimed at providing basic food and nutrition to their people.

The argument that somehow subsidies are good for the rich but bad for the poor is untenable and unacceptable. We cannot have multilateral trade rules that favour the rich countries but punish the developing countries on the same issue.

It is time that we address this historical bias by ensuring that the vast millions of low income and resource poor farmers in developing countries continue to receive the necessary support and price guarantees for tilling their land and providing adequate food for the poor consumers. It is time that the right to food is recognized as a basic human right and developing countries are encouraged to devise programmes that meet this basic need.

Fifth, the central role of technology must be noted. The Green Revolution which enabled many developing countries to augment food production and become self-sufficient was a result of international collaboration on agriculture research. We need to be able to replicate this model of multi-stakeholder research to invest in agriculture technology and spread the fruits of such collaboration widely. Flexibility in global IPR regimes will have to play a catalytic role in this process.

Sixth, crafting a purposeful global response to tackling the unacceptably high levels of food waste is critical if not central to addressing food security. 1.3 billion tons of food produced is wasted every year, amounting to over one-third of all food produced. Most of this wastage happens in the developed countries due to unsustainable and wasteful consumption patterns. FAO estimates that per capita food waste by consumers in the developed countries works out to over 100 kilograms per year.

The scale of this problem can be gauged from the fact that wastage of food at consumer level alone in industrialized countries is nearly as much as the total food production in sub-Saharan Africa.

It is important to focus on greater efforts at awareness creation and attitudinal change in the developed world which will enable us save huge amounts of food.

There is unacceptably high level of post-harvest losses in the developing countries as well. However, this is more a function of poor infrastructure and lack of advanced technologies for production, post-harvest processing, packaging and transportation. This problem needs to be addressed by means of enhanced investments in rural infrastructure and transportation and storage facilities as well as better access to technologies - for production and post-harvest processing.

Finally Mr. Chairperson,

Gender equality and women's empowerment, their social inclusion and equal access of women to economic opportunities and resources is a key determinant for food security. We must ensure that our approaches for food security fully take into account this gender perspective.

I thank you

684. Statement by Mr. Vipul, Counsellor, Permanent Mission of India to CD Thematic debate on "Other Disarmament Measures and International Security" at 68th Session of the First Committee.

New York, October 30, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

India associates itself with the statement made by Indonesia on behalf of NAM during this thematic debate.

India has the honour to introduce the draft decision L.22 which proposes the inclusion of the item entitled "Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament" in the provisional agenda for the sixty-ninth General Assembly.

Mr. Chairman,

It is clear that scientific and technological progress is critical for any society for economic and social development and needs to be maintained and encouraged. The developing countries are especially dependent on access to scientific developments and new technologies for developmental purposes and for active participation in global trade. We therefore believe that international cooperation in peaceful uses of science and technology should be promoted through all means, including technology transfer, sharing of information and exchange of equipment and materials.

At the same time, we recognize that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications. The military applications of scientific and technological developments can contribute significantly to the improvement and upgrading of weapons systems, including WMDs, as well to inventing entirely new weapon systems. For instance, the international community has expressed concerns about the misuse of information and communications technologies for criminal or hostile purposes as well as the development of Lethal Autonomous Robots. We believe that there is a need to closely follow scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on the security environment and disarmament, particularly when they give rise to proliferation concerns.

While progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be encouraged, it is also important that international transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications are effectively regulated, keeping in mind legitimate defense requirements of all States. National regulations and export controls of appropriate standards in this field should be strengthened and effectively implemented. Relevant international agreements in this field should be implemented in a manner designed to avoid hampering the economic or technological development of state parties to those agreements.

For all the above reasons, the Role of Science & Technology in the context of international security and disarmament is an important and dynamic subject that affects the interests of all states. There is thus need for dialogue among Member States to find a viable forward looking approach taking into account current trends and possible future directions. We therefore hope that as in the past years the First Committee will endorse the draft decision L.22 tabled by India.

685. Statement by Mrs. Pratibha Parkar, Counsellor, PMI to UN, during the thematic debate on Conventional Weapons, at 68th Session of UNGA. First Committee.

New York, October 30, 2013,

Mr. Chairman,

India shares concerns about the challenges posed by conventional weapons, including small arms and light weapons, to international peace and security. We attach importance to measures aimed at conventional arms control to address these challenges and to make progress on the goal of general and complete disarmament. Such measures need to be taken in a fair and balanced manner so as not to hamper the legitimate defence requirements of Member States. They should specifically aim at countering the illicit trade in conventional weapons and banning their transfers to terrorists and non-State actors.

Mr. Chairman,

The United Nations has had a measure of success in dealing with the threat posed by illicit trade in small arms and light weapons. The UN Programme of Action outlines a realistic and comprehensive approach to address the problem at national, regional and global levels. The full and effective implementation of the UNPOA and the International Tracing Instrument is a priority for India, especially as a means for combating terrorism and transnational crime which has adversely affected our national security.

We welcome the successful conclusion of the Second Review Conference of the UNPOA with the adoption of the outcome document by consensus. We note with satisfaction that the Review Conference reaffirmed the key commitments of States under the UNPOA. It is important to maintain consensus in the UNPOA process in the coming years while making further progress on both the political and technical aspects of its implementation. In this context, we look forward to the Fifth BMS to be held next year. We support and congratulate Amb. Zahir Tanin of Afghanistan for being designated as the Chair of the meeting. It is important that the Agenda for the meeting be decided early to enable Member States to undertake thorough preparations for the meeting.

India is privileged to be a party to the entire CCW package and attaches importance to the spirit of the CCW which aims to strike a balance between addressing humanitarian concerns arising from the use of certain conventional weapons and the military necessity of such weapons. It remains the only forum of a universal character that brings together all the main users and producers of certain conventional weapons, thus ensuring that the instruments which emerge have greater prospect of making a meaningful impact on the ground. India remains committed to the CCW process in progressively strengthening the role and principles of international humanitarian law.

India supports the vision of a world free of the threat of landmines and is committed to the eventual elimination of anti-personnel landmines. We support the approach enshrined in Amended Protocol II of the CCW which addresses the legitimate defence requirements of States with long borders. India has discontinued the production of non-detectable antipersonnel landmines and observes a moratorium on their transfer. We are also contributing to international demining and rehabilitation efforts. Amended Protocol II also serves as perhaps the only UN framework which addresses the issue of Improvised Explosive Devices or IEDs which is today the weapon of choice for terrorists and NSAs. India participates in the Ottawa Convention meetings as an Observer.

India has shouldered various responsibilities in relation to CCW's Protocol V on Explosive Remnants of War, including on the development of Generic Electronic Template and national reporting. In recent months the issue of Lethal Autonomous Robots (LARs) has engaged the attention of the international community. There is a need to enhance the understanding of the international community about the possible humanitarian impact of the development and use of such weapons.

India supports the two major instruments promoting transparency in armaments, viz. the UN Register on Conventional Arms and the UN Report on Military Expenditures. India has regularly submitted national reports to the UN Register on the export and import of conventional arms, including the latest covering the period 2011 and 2012. India has also contributed to the three-yearly review of the Register including in 2013. India supports efforts for further improving the Register along with efforts towards universalizing participation in it. We also contributed to the work of the GGE on the UN Report on Military Expenditures in 2011 and have submitted our national reports for this instrument.

India participated actively in the Diplomatic Conferences to negotiate an Arms Trade Treaty in the expectation that such a treaty would make a real impact on illicit trafficking in conventional arms and their illicit use especially by terrorists and other unauthorized and unlawful non-state actors. During the ATT negotiations India consistently stressed that the treaty should ensure a balance of obligations between exporting and importing States. However, the finalized treaty text did not meet our requirements on these counts. India is undertaking a full and thorough assessment of the ATT from the perspective of our defence, security and foreign policy interests.

Thank you

686. STATEMENT BY DR. NEERU CHADHA, JOINT SECRETARY, ON AGENDA ITEM 81 "REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION ON THE WORK OF ITS SIXTY-FIFTH SESSION- Part-1" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 30, 2013.

Mr. C.actice in relation to the interpretation of treaties"; and "Immunity of State officials from foreign criminal jurisdiction".

We express our appreciation to the Special Rapporteur Prof. George Nolte for presentation of his first report on the topic "Subsequent agreements and subsequent practice in relation to the interpretation of treaties". The Rapporteur has extensively analyzed articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna convention on the Law of Treaties.

Mr. Chairman,

We agree with the observation that the rules contained in articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention reflect the customary international law. The subsequent practice is an authentic means of interpretation that can be taken into account while interpreting the terms used in and the provisions of the treaty, but cannot be taken as conclusive or legally binding unless the parties agree.

There is a clear distinction between a subsequent agreement and a subsequent practice. We agree with the Commission that "subsequent agreement between the parties regarding the interpretation of the treaty or the application of its provisions" ipso facto has the effect of constituting an authentic interpretation of the treaty, whereas a "subsequent practice" only has this effect if it "shows the common understanding of the parties as to the meaning of the terms". The subsequent practice can only be taken into account as a means of interpretation, if it establishes an agreement between the parties. The basic determining factor whether or not a subsequent agreement or practice has acquired the status as a means of interpretation of a treaty is the acceptance thereof by all parties to the treaty.

Similarly, the evolutive interpretation of a treaty cannot be merely a matter of the presumption of the intent of parties, particularly in regard to treaties that lay down specific rights for each Party and where such an interpretation can alter the core rights of a party. Therefore we are of the view that nature of the Treaty may be relevant for determining whether more or less weight should be given to certain means of interpretation.

Mr. Chairman,

Turning to the topic of "Immunity of State officials from foreign criminal jurisdiction", we appreciate the efforts of the Special Rapporteur Ms. Concepcion Escobar Hernandez and congratulate her for the second report on this topic, wherein six draft articles were elaborated, which were redrafted in three draft articles by the Drafting Committee and consequently provisionally adopted by the Commission with commentary.

We agree with the understanding of the Commission reflected in paragraph 10 of the commentary to paragraph 2 of draft article 1 that the rules regulating the immunity from foreign criminal jurisdiction of persons connected with activities in specific fields of international relations are the treaty-based and custom-based "special rules". The Commission has decided not to include an explicit reference to international conventions and instruments. However, we are of the view that making reference to the regimes under which the special rules fall, would provide greater clarity in understanding the nature and scope of the immunity.

Mr. Chairman,

Regarding the immunity ratione personae, It is universally accepted that the Heads of State, Heads of Government and the Foreign Ministers, the so called Troika, are entitled to the immunity from criminal jurisdiction of foreign States by virtue of their representational capacity for the State abroad and functional necessity.

We consider that, were the same criteria applied, a few other high ranking Officials especially, Ministers of Defence and Ministers of International Trade could also be considered as the State Officials deserving immunity from the criminal jurisdiction of foreign States. We request the Special Rapporteur to consider and analyze the views of States in this regard and come up with appropriate propositions.

Mr. Chairman,

We welcome the decision of the Commission to include in its programme of work the topics "Protection of the environment in relation to armed conflict" and "Protection of atmosphere" and appointment of Ms. Marie G. Jacobsson and Mr. Shinya Murase, respectively, as the Special Rapporteurs for the topics. We consider these topics timely and look forward to the reports of the Special Rapporteurs.

We acknowledge the cautious approach of the Commission, with regard to the topic of "Protection of atmosphere", especially as to what issues should not be dealt with under this topic and agree that the outcome of the work on this topic should be the draft guidelines rather than developing a convention.

We also note the Commission's decision to include the topic "Crimes against humanity" in its long-term programme of work. We note with interest the written proposal made on the topic by Mr. Sean D. Murphy. As a preliminary comment, we would like to stress on a thorough examination on the need to undertake work on this topic, in view of the existing international instruments including the Statute of the International Criminal Court that already includes crimes against humanity.

Mr. Chairman,

Finally, in conclusion, we would like to congratulate the Commission and others for successfully holding the 49th Session of the International Law Seminar pursuant to the General Assembly resolution 67/92. India was one of the voluntary contributors to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Law Seminar. We agree with the Commission that these annual Seminars indeed make valuable contribution in allowing successive generations of young international lawyers to familiarise themselves with the work of the Commission and many international organizations based in Geneva. We also look forward to the holding of 50th anniversary of the International Law Seminar.

Thank You

687. Statement by Mr. Mohammed Adeb, Hon'ble Member of Parliament and Member of the Indian Delegation, on Agenda Item No. 53 "Comprehensive Review of the Whole Question of Peacekeeping Operations in all their Aspects" at the Fourth Committee General Debate of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York , October 30, 2013.

Madam Chairperson,

At the outset let me thank you and the USG DPKO Mr. Herve Ladsous and USG DFS Madam Ameerah Haq for their useful briefings the other day. It is my honour to speak today at the peacekeeping general debate of the 68th UNGA. My delegation aligns itself with the statement delivered by the distinguished representative of Egypt on behalf of NAM.

India is proud to have been associated with UN Peacekeeping from its very inception. Having contributed over 150,000 peacekeepers to virtually every peacekeeping mission, India has an abiding interest in UN peacekeeping. India is one of its largest contributors today and we remain committed to this global enterprise.

Peacekeeping has been a critical tool of the United Nation in maintaining international peace and security. Its collaborative character infuses it with a unique legitimacy that defines its strength.

The core values of UN peacekeeping explain its enduring relevance. Principles of consent, impartiality, and non-use of force except in self-defence and in defence of the mandate have outlived many transitions that peacekeeping has witnessed from truce-supervision missions of yesteryears to multi-dimensional mandates of today.

Madam Chairperson, Peacekeeping is often evaluated as a stand alone exercise rather than a part of an overarching peace process. While this reflects its usefulness, lasting peace always accompanies the success of the overall political process.

Peacekeeping's agenda today is generated mostly outside the General Assembly. Major peacekeeping policy initiatives get on-boarded outside the C34. This encourages a reliance on factors outside the confines of the General Assembly. Moreover, this allows ourselves to be judged by those who do not even take part in peacekeeping. Over a period of time this has distorted peacekeeping's policy universe.

Peacekeeping mandates continue to be the preserve of a privileged few. These are generated in isolation from the personnel responsible for their field implementation. Moreover, they accord primacy to material over men.

In-depth consultations with troop and police contributing countries should be an integral part of the mandate generation process. A fair assessment of mandates with corresponding resources will inject a sense of realism into expectations with respect to mission objectives and achievements.

The working methods that were meant to smoothen C34's functioning ended rusting it up. The substantive core of C34's functioning stands damaged today on account of a mere technical detail. Revival of C34 is necessary to restore its democratic underpinnings. Under no circumstances can peacekeeping be allowed to be run as an executive affair.

C34's dormancy will hurt triangular partnership between the member states, Security Council, and the secretariat. A healthy C34 is necessary for the consolidation of this relationship.

Sadly, countries that have dispatched hundreds of thousands of men in service of UN peacekeeping, continue to be at the periphery including in the headquarter departments.

We welcome the assurance by USG DFS at the adoption of peacekeeping budgets this year to undertake corrective measures to improve representation of troop and police contributing countries in headquarter departments.

It is our firm belief that the welfare and safety of soldiers must be dealt with in a responsible manner. Indifference to personnel matters such as troop-cost results in a disconnect between the field and the headquarter.

Secretary General's Special Advisory Group was set up to resolve this longstanding grievance of the field personnel. Its outcome, therefore, must remain true to this objective.

Unfortunately, resource allocation too has failed to keep pace with expansion in the mandates. Peacekeeping missions are called upon to do more and more with less and less. This has added to operational challenges faced by peacekeepers and missions are overstretched due to shortage of personnel and equipment.

Madam Chairperson,

Peacekeeping and peacebuilding are two sides of same coin. Critical peacebuilding tasks are all premised on peacekeepers proactive involvement. Our strategies and approaches, therefore, should be geared to capitalize on these strengths.

Two-thirds of UN's field presence comprises of uniformed personnel. They respond to a complex set of challenges in a holistic manner. We should, therefore, synergize the keeping-of-peace and the building-of-peace. Their mutual complementariness should be harmonized rather than being zoned as civilian versus military.

In this regard, we keenly look forward to the long-awaited materialization of the civilian capacity review process. This process should be firmly placed in the member state domain in its intergovernmental context.

UN peacekeepers are keeping peace today in most dangerous and challenging terrains and circumstances. Attacks on peacekeepers by armed militia groups have increased exponentially. United Nations must undertake manifest action against the perpetrators of such violence and bring them to justice.

Madam Chairperson,

The representative character of peacekeeping and its reform is the key to its across the board acceptability. It is imperative that the work on this reform process is not the prerogative of a few but is representative across the board.

I thank you Madam Chairperson

688. STATEMENT BY MRS. RAJANI PATIL, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM: 72 "REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE" AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 31, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset, I would like to thank Judge Peter Tomka, President of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), for his comprehensive report, covering the judicial activities of the Court over the last year. I also thank him and the Vice-President Bernardo Sepulveda-Amor for guiding the work of the Court.

Mr. President,

The Court, as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, is entrusted with the task of peaceful resolution of disputes between the States, which is fundamental for fulfillment of one of the purposes of the United Nations, namely the maintenance of international peace and security.

We acknowledge the fact that the Court has fulfilled that task admirably since its establishment, and has acquired a well deserved reputation as an impartial institution maintaining the highest legal standards in accordance with its mandate under the Charter of the United Nations, of which the Statute of the Court is an integral part.

Mr. President,

One of the primary goals of the United Nations, as stated in the Preamble to the UN Charter, is to establish conditions under which justice and respect for international obligations can be maintained. The ICJ, as the only Court with general international law jurisdiction, is uniquely placed to fulfill that role.

Mr. President,

The report of the Court, contained in document A/68/4, illustrates the importance that States attach and the confidence that the States repose in the Court, as is clearly evidenced through the number, nature and the variety of cases the Court deals with, and through the ability of the Court in so dealing with the complex aspects of public international law.

Mr. President,

The judgments delivered by the ICJ have played an important role in the interpretation and clarification of the rules of international law, as well as, in the progressive development and codification of international law. In the performance of its judicial functions, the Court has remained highly sensitive to political realities and sentiments of States, while acting in accordance with the provisions of the UN Charter, its own Statute and other applicable rules of international law.

During the 2012/2013 judicial year, the Court delivered two judgments; held public hearings in four cases; and also handed down six orders. The number of contentious cases presently on the Court's docket stands at 10. Among the cases before the Court, five are from Latin American States, two from Europe, one each from the African and Asian States, while one is of inter-continental character, which shows the universality of the Court.

Mr. President,

The cases before the Court involve a wide variety of subject matters, such as territorial and maritime disputes, environmental damage and conservation of living resources, violation of territorial integrity, violation of international humanitarian law and human rights, genocide, interpretation and application of international conventions and treaties, and interpretation of the Court's judgments.

Mr. President,

The Court's second function, of providing advisory opinion on legal questions referred to it by organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, further adds to its important role of clarifying key international legal issues. The report of the Court rightly points out that "everything the Court does is aimed at promoting the rule of law", in particular through its judgments and the advisory opinions.

Mr. President,

It is worth mentioning that the Court ensures the greatest possible global awareness of its decisions through its publications, multimedia offerings and the website, which now features the Court's entire jurisprudence, as well as, that of its predecessor - the Permanent Court of International Justice. These sources provide useful information for States wishing to submit a potential dispute to the Court.

Mr. President,

We are glad to note that the three posts sought by the Court in different service categories, have been filled pursuant to the approval of the General Assembly, which would help strengthen the Court's security related aspects and will expedite the publication of Court's work. It is also a matter of satisfaction that the Great Hall of Justice has been refurbished with modern equipments, in which the public hearings are held.

Finally, Mr. President, India wishes to reaffirm its strong support to the Court and acknowledges the importance that the international community attaches to the work of the Court.

Thank you

689. STATEMENT BY DR. NEERU CHADHA, JOINT SECRETARY, ON AGENDA ITEM 81 "REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION ON THE WORK OF ITS SIXTY-FIFTH SESSION- Part-2" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 1, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

"Reservations to Treaties" is a topic which the Commission has been discussing since 1995. We congratulate the Special Rapporteur, Prof. Alain Pellet and the Commission, for the adoption by the Commission of the "Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties", along with commentaries. Prof. Pellet submitted a total of 17 reports, beginning with his first report on the topic in 1995. The "Guide to Practice" is very detailed and nuanced work, which tries to cover all possible situations relating to reservation to treaties, and is based on an in-depth and exhaustive analysis of State practice and case law.

It contains very useful material and doctrinal discussion and valuable examples by way of elucidation of the guidelines and is sure to be an invaluable tool for government legal advisers as well as practitioners in resolving problems posed by reservations to treaties and interpretative declarations.

Mr. Chairman,

In addition to the Guide to Practice, the Commission has also adopted an annex on the "reservations dialogue" as well as a recommendation on "mechanisms of assistance in relation to reservations".

The Commission has set out nine 'conclusions' in the annex on the 'reservations dialogue', and recommended that - The General Assembly call upon States and international organizations, as well as monitoring bodies, to initiate and pursue such a reservations dialogue in a pragmatic and transparent manner. We support this proposal.

As regards the proposal for a Reservation Assistance Mechanism, We are willing to take this recommendation forward and are of the view that the suggestion to create a small group of experts within the Sixth Committee is worth further examination. This group could make recommendations to States in order to settle differences of view concerning reservations' and provide States with 'technical assistance in formulating reservations or objections to reservations as suggested by the Special Rapporteur. However, we do not see that any compulsory procedure in this regard would be acceptable to States.

As regards the Observatories, different regional mechanisms like CAHDI have been suggested as templates, this need to be more fully examined and further discussed within the Sixth Committee to see whether it can be replicated within the UN which is a much bigger body.

Mr. Chairman,

In spite of the legal acumen of the Special Rapporteur and rich material he brought into play, the process of drafting the guidelines has not been an easy one. Nevertheless, the end product is not only the result of a careful examination of the various views and nuances involved but also the product of general consensus within the Commission. Accordingly, we accept these guidelines as a useful contribution to the process of international law-making. These guidelines are likely to give rise to fewer problems from a policy and political angle as they are not intended to revise the regime of reservations contained in the Vienna Convention on Law of Treaties.

Mr. Chairman,

We congratulate and thank the Special Rapporteur once again for an excellent job done and are sure that the legal offices of foreign ministries, in their practice, would heavily draw on these guidelines to find answers to many difficult substantive and procedural issues concerning reservations to treaties and interpretative declarations.

Thank you

690. STATEMENT BY MR. P. RAJEEVE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION ON, AGENDA ITEM 81 "REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION ON THE WORK OF ITS SIXTY-FIFTH SESSION- Part 3" AT THE SIXTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 4, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I thank the Chairman of the International Law Commission for the presentation of his report concerning the third cluster of topics.

Mr. Chairman,

We congratulate the Special Rapporteur Mr. Eduardo Valencia-Ospina for submitting sixth report on the topic "Protection of persons in the event of disasters". It deals with the prevention aspects, in particular, those relating to: prevention as a principle of international law, and international cooperation. The report has also provided an over-view of national policies and legislations on the preventive aspect. The Special Rapporteur has elaborated draft article 5 ter (Cooperation for disaster risk reduction); and draft article 16 (Duty to reduce the risk of disasters). We note with appreciation that the Commission has adopted the commentaries to all draft articles adopted so far.

Mr. Chairman,

We have made comments on other draft articles in previous sessions, and so would restrict our comments on the new draft articles 5 ter and 16, relating mainly to the duty and cooperation towards the risk reduction. In this regard, we welcome the Special Rapporteur's shift from response-centric model to focus also on prevention and preparedness.

We also note with interest that the Commission had relied upon variety of sources of law in order to identify the duty to reduce the risk of disasters, including international agreements and instruments (such as the 2005 Hyogo Framework for Action), regional and national laws on prevention, preparation and mitigation, which also includes India's Disaster Management Act, 2005.

Mr. Chairman,

Draft Article 16 obliges each State to take measures, including laws and regulations to prevent, mitigate and prepare for disasters. The scope of the topic will thus comprise not only the disaster phase but also the pre and post disaster phases. However, it is unclear whether the same would also be applicable to industrial disaster situations.

As a State's undertaking of rights and obligations during pre-disaster phase is largely linked with that State's economical development, technical know-how and human resources, we would stress for a balance to ensure that the interests of developing States are not affected by the rights and obligations under this draft article. Similarly, 'the principle of common but differentiated responsibility' envisaged under environmental law for developing States need to be considered and respected while determining the characteristics with regard to 'due diligence'.

Mr. Chairman,

We welcome the elaboration of draft article 5 ter, which envisages extending the cooperation for taking measures intended to reduce the risk of disasters. We agree with the approach of the Commission reflected in paragraph 3 of the commentary to draft article 5 ter regarding the flexibility as to the location of this draft article or combining together the draft articles dealing with the aspects of cooperation.

Mr. Chairman,

Turning to the topic, "Formation and evidence of customary international law", we thank the Secretariat for a very useful Memorandum identifying the previous work of the Commission relevant to the topic. We complement the Special Rapporteur Sir Michael Wood for his excellent first report and appreciate the rich debate within the Commission.

We agree that the purpose of the work on the topic should be to provide practical assistance to the practitioners of international law as well as to the judges and lawyers in the domestic jurisdictions, who might not be well-versed with public international law, but called upon to examine and decide on matters involving international law aspects. This purpose would be better served if, as agreed in the Commission, the outcome of the work would be in the form of non-prescriptive "conclusions" and commentary that would provide guidance to States.

Mr. Chairman,

We share the view that the substance of the rules of customary international law would not fall within the scope of the topic. We agree that "jus cogens" would not also fall within the scope of the topic, as the peculiarity of non-derogation distinguishes it from the customary international law rules.

Mr. Chairman,

We think as appropriate the change of the title of the topic to "Identification of customary international law", and that this study would also include the dynamic process of formation, with special focus on the objective evidence of the rules of customary international law. The existence and formation of regional customary international law should also be studied. While the dynamic relationship between customary international law and treaties would form part of the study of the topic, we look forward to the study of the relationship between customary international law and other sources of international law, especially, the general international law.

Mr. Chairman,

India would like to see that both elements the State practice and opinio juris are given equal importance in the study. The practice of States from all regions should be taken into account. In this regard, the developing States, which do not publish digests of their practice should be encouraged and assisted to submit their State practice including their statements at international and regional fora, and the case-law, etc. At the same time, we urge the Commission to exercise utmost caution in taking into account the arguments and positions advanced by the States before international adjudicative bodies and, should not be detached from or devoid of the context in which they were made.

Mr. Chairman,

We welcome and appreciate the first report of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Juan Manuel Gomez-Robledo on the topic "Provisional application of treaties" and also welcome the comprehensive Memorandum of the Secretariat on the topic.

Since the provisional application is a sort of formal application, it would be relevant if the study addresses various legal implications of provisional application and relations between the State parties to it, including the extent of international responsibility incurred by a State vis-a-vis other State parties for violation of an obligation under a provisionally applied treaty.

We agree with the idea that the present study should be in the form of guidelines with commentaries for the guidance of States.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

691. STATEMENT BY MR. MD. NADIMUL HAQUE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 19 - SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT AT THE SECOND COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 4, 2013.

Mr. Chairperson,

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Mr. Chairperson,

I come from a region that is home to the largest mangrove forests of the world. The SUNDARBANS in my home state of West Bengal in the east of India is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. It is a reservoir of biodiversity and the home of the Royal Bengal Tiger.

Conserving the Sundarbans is a key priority of the Indian government. We are promoting sustainable tourism in the region which could help raise revenues and promote employment while fully protecting this unique ecosystem.

Mr. Chairperson,

Global cooperation on sustainable development is today at an important cross-road.

In the coming two years, negotiating a set of Sustainable Development Goals, elaborating a strategy for financing sustainable development and arriving at a post- 2015 development agenda will be the key preoccupation of this body. India looks forward to participate constructively in this endeavor.

Mr. Chairperson,

Adherence to the mandate of Rio+20 and respect for Rio principles, in particular the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, must underpin our efforts across all these tasks. Integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development in a balanced manner is equally important.

Often the discourse on sustainable development remains confined to minimizing environmental impacts of development. While this is no doubt extremely important, the wider need, especially for developing countries, is to ensure that their development itself can be sustained in all its dimensions.

We must therefore ensure that the post-2015 development agenda remains an agenda for development.

An ambitious agenda for the post-2015 period cannot be merely about policy prescriptions for developing countries, nor should it be about reprioritizing domestic spending.

We must craft a truly supportive international system and a genuine international compact between developed and developing countries to bring about change.

Addressing issues of inequity in consumption of global resources and correcting the unsustainable consumption patterns in developed countries must remain our central priorities.

Mr. Chairperson,

Sustainable development is as much about how to develop as much about how not to develop. Achieving sustainable development involves avoiding choices that were made by many countries in their race for unsustainable development.

This however is easier said than done. In spite of the immense progress in technology and despite their command of considerable financial resources, even the most advanced economies have not been able to truly decouple economic growth with carbon emissions. This shows the enormity of the challenge we face.

For developing countries, poverty eradication and rapid economic growth are the primary and overriding objectives. These are also indispensable for them to achieve sustainable development.

Mr. Chairperson,

Technology is the golden key that unlocks the nexus between poverty eradication and sustainable development.

We must therefore promote greater collaboration in environmentally friendly technologies and more importantly we must ensure that the fruits of such collaboration are shared more widely.

This would enable developing countries eradicate poverty and leapfrog into higher stages of development without incurring the environmental costs that traditional development models have entailed.

Often the call for technology collaboration is portrayed to imply a demand to do away the Intellectual Property Rights.

What is required however is to create a technology regime which balances the need to reward the innovators while ensuring affordable and wide dissemination of the technologies for public good.

Mr. Chairperson,

The proposal for a Technology Facilitation Mechanism proposed by the Secretary General and supported overwhelmingly by member states must be made operational as early as possible.

Mr. Chairperson,

On climate change, India remains fully committed to crafting an ambitious, balanced and comprehensive outcome to negotiations in accordance with the principles and provisions of the UNFCCC. India is engaged constructively in the negotiations under the Adhoc Working Group on Durban Platform.

However, we are concerned with an egregious tendency to incorrectly characterize the nature of the agreement that we are supposed to reach under the Durban Platform in 2015.

Certain expressions such as achieving a 'truly universal' and 'legally binding' agreement by 2015 used in many reports including some UN reports create the incorrect impression that the existing international regime on climate change is not universal or legally binding.

We must recognize that the UNFCCC and its Kyoto Protocol are both universal and legally binding instruments on climate change. The remit of the Durban Platform is to further enhance the implementation of the Convention in order to reach its ultimate objective, and not to reinterpret or renegotiate it.

Our attempts to craft an ambitious and comprehensive outcome of the Durban Platform can only succeed if it respects the balance of responsibilities and capabilities enshrined in the Convention principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities.

India firmly believes that the early and meaningful operationalization of the finance and technology mechanisms under the Climate Change Convention must be a central priority in the run-up to 2015.

Mr. Chairperson,

Let me conclude by recalling what the great Bengali poet Rabindranath Tagore said. He said "Let your life dance lightly on the edges of Time, like dew on the tip of a leaf".

We need to take inspiration from these words. The need of the hour is to craft sustainable pathways to living that can enrich our lives without leaving a heavy footprint on nature.

I thank you

692. STATEMENT BY MR. SHATRUGHAN SINHA, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION ON THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE IAEA FOR THE YEAR 2012 AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 5, 2013.

Mr. President,

My delegation thanks the Director General, IAEA for preparing the Annual Report for the year 2012, as contained in document [88]: note by the SG A/68/324.

Mr. President,

The increasing global demand for energy, as well as concerns about climate change, volatile fossil fuel prices and the security of energy supplies remain essential factors in deciding an energy mix for any country. Nuclear power remains an important option not only for countries with existing nuclear programmes, but also for developing countries with growing energy requirements. Since last year two important meetings were held related to nuclear energy, namely, the Fukushima Ministerial Conference in Japan during December 15-17, 2012, and the IAEA International Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Power in the 21st Century in the Russian Federation during June 27-29, 2013. Both these meetings have underscored the role that nuclear energy continues to play in the energy mix of various countries for achieving energy security and sustainable development goals in the 21st century for their respective populations. We note that the Agency projections indicate significant growth in the use of nuclear energy worldwide between 17 and 94% by 2030 .

Mr. President,

The Fukushima accident elicited a global response towards enhancing nuclear safety with Member States reassessing the safety of existing nuclear power plants. While the results of these reassessments would be further refined as necessary, in the light of new information that might emerge in the future, we note with satisfaction that the world nuclear community made noteworthy progress in strengthening nuclear safety in 2012. An overwhelming majority of Member States with operating nuclear power plants have undertaken and essentially completed comprehensive safety reassessments and many have introduced additional safety measures including mitigation of station blackouts and construction of higher protective walls. It is a matter of satisfaction that safety performance indicator data on the 437 operating nuclear power plants showed that the operational safety level remained high.

India is committed to implement the highest standards for the safety of Indian nuclear power plants and the associated fuel cycle facilities. India will continue to participate and assist the IAEA Secretariat in its endeavor to enhance nuclear safety through the cluster of measures it has formulated in the IAEA Action Plan on Nuclear Safety.

We feel that the IAEA should take all necessary measures to allay misapprehensions in the public and Member States about the safety of nuclear power plants taking into account the current advances in relevant design and technology areas. In this connection we wish to acknowledge the visit of DG, IAEA to India in March 2013 where he appreciated the safety upgrades implemented in the Tarapur 1 & 2 reactors. We would also like to encourage the IAEA to make concerted efforts for free flow of latest information, technology and equipment pertaining to nuclear safety among the Member States.

Mr. President,

The nuclear power programme in India is oriented towards maximising the energy potential of available Uranium resources and the utilisation of its large Thorium reserve. We believe that available global uranium resources cannot sustain the projected expansion of nuclear power in the coming decades, without adopting the closed fuel cycle approach and subsequent adoption of thorium fuel cycle.

With its excellent physical and nuclear properties Thorium is widely and rightly viewed as the 'fuel of the future'. India continues to carry forward intense development of Thorium fuel cycle based technologies for demonstration in its AHWR programme. It is heartening to note that one of the Panel Sessions at the IAEA International Ministerial Conference on Nuclear Power in the 21st Century held at St. Petersburg was devoted to the topic 'Drivers for deployment of sustainable and innovative technology', in which we shared our rich experience in the development and implementation of Thorium utilisation programme. Thorium-based fuel cycles and technologies present opportunities for enhanced passive safety features, utilisation of the larger natural resources of Thorium, and inherent proliferation resistance. International collaboration under the IAEA would help provide a much wider resource base for future nuclear technology development in this direction.

Mr. President,

India is committed to harness the benefits of nuclear energy for electricity production while according the highest priority to nuclear safety and security. India will need to rapidly raise the energy production to meet its growing energy requirements to achieve its developmental goals.

The energy resources at our disposal make it imperative for us to consider all energy options. Presently, there are 21 NPP units in operation in India. Construction of four units of 700 MWe PHWRs is under progress, at the Kakrapar and Rawatbhata sites.

India has setup two VVER based NPPs (2X1000 MWe), at Kudankulam (KKNPP- 1&2) in Tamilnadu, with the co-operation of Russian Federation. The first unit achieved criticality on 13th July, this year and subsequently synchronized to the grid on October 22, 2013. The power will be further raised to 1000 MWe in stages. With the addition of KKNPP Unit#1 of 1000 MWe capacity, Nuclear Power contribution in the Country will increase to about 5800 MWe.

India is also setting-up 500 MWe; Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor at Kalpakkam. Major equipment such as main vessel and safety vessel, primary-secondary sodium heat exchangers, steam generators, other reactor auxiliaries have been erected. Construction is expected to be completed this year.

The Agency performed its first OSART mission to India for Rajasthan Atomic Power Station (RAPS)-3&4 in November 2012. The mission was performed using the revised scope and modules updated from the lessons learnt from Fukushima nuclear accident. The mission recognized the strong safety culture present at the nuclear power plant and many good practices. The follow up mission has also been invited which will take place in early 2014. The preparation and planning for inviting IAEA's Integrated Regulatory Review Service (IRRS) for peer review of our regulatory system is also in progress and India will approach the Agency with a request to undertake this mission.

Mr. President,

India has been associated with International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles (INPRO) since its inception and has contributed to its progress. INPRO supports Member States in developing and deploying sustainable nuclear energy systems. We believe that this programme has a great potential towards making nuclear energy accessible in a safe and sustainable manner, particularly to new entrants embarking on this path. In 2012, three States joined INPRO: Malaysia, Romania and Vietnam. We welcome the new members into the fold of INPRO. The IAEA, through INPRO, should continue to play a central role in the area of development of innovative technology for safe utilisation of nuclear power.

We fully support other activities of the IAEA undertaken to stimulate innovation in nuclear power through Technical Working Groups for different reactor technologies, small and medium sized reactors and for non-electric applications. The coordinated research projects organized by the IAEA provide an excellent forum for understanding and development of technology.

Mr. President,

Nuclear Energy has a crucial role to play in achieving the objectives of India's sustainable economic growth. At the same time India is extensively engaged in development of nuclear technologies in diverse fields extending beyond nuclear power. This includes isotope applications for improved crop varieties, crop protection and post-harvest technologies, radio-isotope applications for diagnostic and therapeutic uses in health care and, technologies for safe drinking water, industry, etc.

India attaches great importance to the IAEA's work in the fields of nuclear science. We contribute to these activities through participation in the Technical Meetings and coordinated Research Projects and also support the IAEA's programme in nuclear fusion.

The Agency's programme and achievements in relation to nuclear applications in food and agriculture, human health and nutrition, water resources management, protection of the environment and industry make a valuable contribution to meeting the needs of the developing countries. India is highly appreciative of the IAEA's efforts in cancer management, and in particular the Programme on Action for Cancer Therapy (PACT). India would continue to support agency activities in these areas, including by offering service of experts and training fellows in reputable institutions in the country.

Mr. President,

There is widespread recognition that the threat of nuclear terrorism is one of the pressing challenges facing the international community. Responsible national action and effective international cooperation are therefore required for strengthening nuclear security to prevent vulnerable nuclear material falling into hands of non-state actors.

India has consistently supported IAEA's important role in facilitating national efforts to strengthen nuclear security and in fostering effective international cooperation. At the Nuclear Security Summit held in Seoul in April 2012, India reaffirmed its commitment to supporting IAEA activities in the area of nuclear security and announced a contribution of US $ 1 million to the IAEA's Nuclear Security Fund. We have fulfilled our commitment. A collaboration arrangement has been signed with the Secretariat and is being implemented. India is a member of DG's Advisory Group on Nuclear Security and the Nuclear Security Guidance Committee and contributes in the development of these documents

India commends IAEA Director General for organizing the International Conference on Nuclear Security: Enhancing Global Efforts. Our delegation to the conference was led by our Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office.

Mr. President,

Universal adherence to the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials (CPPNM) and early entry into force of its 2005 Amendment would go a long way in strengthening global efforts in the area of nuclear security. India is party to the CPPNM and is amongst the countries which have ratified the 2005 amendment to the Convention.

We appreciate the Agency's efforts to bring the amendment into force and note the increase in the number of states adhering to the amendment. We encourage the Agency to continue its efforts to promote early entry into force of the amendment. We appreciate Agency's efforts in improving the understanding of member states about Illicit Trafficking Database (ITDB) and to encourage them to join the programme.

Mr. President,

With these comments, we take note of the IAEA's Annual Report for 2012. India supports the work of IAEA and has cosponsored the draft resolution on the Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

693. STATEMENT BY MRS. RAJKUMARI RATNA SINGH, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM-11 - SPORTS FOR PEACE AND DEVELOPMENT: BUILDING A PEACEFUL AND BETTER WORLD THROUGH SPORT AND THE OLYMPIC IDEAL AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 6, 2013.

Mr. President,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I feel honored and privileged to participate in this debate today, under agenda item-11 entitled "Building a Peaceful and Better World through Sport and the Olympic ideal".

Mr. President,

India welcomes the resolution adopted by the 67th General Assembly proclaiming April 06 as the International Day of Sport for Development and Peace. We hope that observance of the day will help spread awareness about the importance of sport as a tool for development and peace. We are also happy to be a co-sponsor of the resolution entitled "Building a Peaceful and Better World through Sport and the Olympic ideal", to be moved in the ongoing session of the General Assembly.

We also welcome the deliberations at the third International Forum on Sport for Peace and Development, organized at the UN Headquarters in New York in June this year, jointly by the UN Office on Sport for Development and Peace (UNOSDP) and the International Olympic Committee (IOC). We are confident that collaboration between the United Nations and the IOC will lead to integration of sport in all areas of development and peace, and help achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MGDs).

Mr. President,

Ever since the dawn of human civilization, the intrinsic linkage between sports and games, and the human pursuit of excellence, has been recognized. This pursuit of excellence through sport reached its epitome in the ancient Greek civilization, which was the progenitor of the modern Olympic movement.

In India too, sports and physical activities have been an integral part of our civilization, through the practice of yoga and its highly evolved system of physical, mental and spiritual regimen. Yoga, as a form of physical and mental exercise, is now popular across the world. In addition, India also has a range of highly developed indigenous games and martial arts.

After India attained independence in 1947, the integration of physical education and sports with formal education was emphasized in the First Five Year Plan. Subsequently, a separate department for sports was set up in 1982, and a National Sports Policy was announced in 1984. The Sports Authority of India (SAI) was also established in 1984, for the effective and optimum utilization of various sports facilities, and all matters pertaining to sports promotion and sports management.

India has encouraged the autonomous functioning of national sports federations, and we are proud to mention that the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) is one of the most resourceful autonomous sports bodies in the world. All sections of our society, including the media and corporate sector, are actively involved in the promotion of sports.

Mr. President,

Sport is the most effective tool to help achieve the development objectives in the areas of health, education, and child development. It helps generate public awareness and inspires broad and inclusive action in support of the developmental agenda. It is heartening to note that sport has been recognized as one of the tools to address developmental challenges.

We appreciate the work of the UN Office on Sport for Development and Peace (UNOSPD), and the Special Advisor of the UN Secretary General on Sport for Development and Peace, for bringing the worlds of sport and development closer together. Efforts should continue to focus on sport for development, and to make it firmly rooted in the UN system.

Associating sporting personalities with the UN, with the objective of creating public awareness about education, health and development issues, and promoting tolerance, understanding and peace within and between communities and cultures, is praiseworthy. I would like to mention here that Indian sportsmen have also been associated with different UN entities, and while Indian tennis star Vijay Amritraj was a UN Messenger of Peace, cricketer Sachin Tendulkar is a Goodwill Ambassador of the UN Environment Program.

Mr. President,

India welcomes the work of the International Olympic Committee and the International Paralympics Committee in promoting and strengthening a culture of peace, based on the spirit of the Olympic Truce. I assure them of India's full cooperation and support in their efforts to use sport as a tool to promote peace, dialogue and reconciliation.

India also cherishes and celebrates the noble ideals and values of the Olympic movement, and stands committed to furthering international fraternity, friendship, goodwill and unity. We believe that there is no better medium than sport to inculcate and foster the values of respect, diversity, and tolerance across communities, civilizations and cultures.

Thank you, Mr. President.

694. STATEMENT BY MR ARVIND KUIMAR SINGH, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 62 - "REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES, QUESTIONS RELATING TO REFUGEES, RETURNEES AND DISPLACED PERSONS AND HUMANITARIAN QUESTIONS" AT THE THIRD COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 6, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

My delegation would like to thank the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for his report, as well as his presentation before this Committee.

His report highlights the central challenges being faced by the UNHCR and the organization's efforts to address them. We acknowledge the commitment of the High Commissioner and his staff in their tireless efforts to implement the core agenda of UNHCR - that of protection of refugees in the most trying and difficult circumstances. We also pay tribute to UNHCR staff, who lost their lives in the line of duty.

Mr. Chairman,

Over the past one year, we have witnessed significant deterioration of crisis situations in many countries. As the High Commissioner's report mentions, more than 1.1 million people fled their countries of origin. A large number of these people are hosted by developing countries who continue to meet their humanitarian obligations, often risking their delicate economies.

In our common pursuit to find more durable solutions, it is important to develop a better understanding of the underlying reasons that would help formulate more comprehensive policies for early return and reintegration of refugees into their home country.

Mr. Chairman,

My delegation shares the High Commissioner's concern regarding the situation of protracted refugees. While we address emerging crises situations, it is important not to lose sight of the protracted refugee situations. There is an imperative to create conditions for voluntary repatriation, which is the most durable solution to such problem.

While we recognize the political complexities that limit the implementation of voluntary return in many cases, bilateral and regional dialogues amongst countries involved is necessary to reassure the refugees of safe and stable return to their countries of origin. To this end, developing countries of origin should also be assisted to create economic opportunities for returning refugees.

Mr. Chairman,

It is a well recognized fact that the challenges posed by internal displacement is well beyond the capacity of any single organization to handle. It was reassuring to note in the report on Strategic Review of UNHCR that primary responsibility for internally displaced lies with States. The UNHCR's involvement, therefore, can only complement the efforts of national authorities and cannot substitute them.

We would, once again, underline that UNHCR's involvement in IDPs should only be with the concurrence of national authorities. Further, such involvement should be based on due consideration of its mandate, modality of intervention, availability of resources and careful examination of all implications before mainstreaming such activities.

Mr. Chairman,

In our discourse, we need to guard against the intersection of the two constituencies of migrants and refugees. The concerns about one should not be transposed on the other.

International migration needs to be promoted in a regular non-discriminatory and orderly manner as migrants add value in economic terms both to the destination as well as sending States.

UNHCR must, therefore, develop capacities to maintain a clear distinction between refugees and economic migrants so as to better address the protection needs of the former.

Mr. Chairman,

We have also taken note of the first written report of the Independent Audit and Oversight Committee (IAOC) 2012-2013. The report has recommended the creation of two operational units - (i) an internal audit unit, and (ii) an investigating unit. We see merit in establishing a unified internal oversight service with distinct audit and investigation components.

We thank the External Auditors for their incisive observations on various financial and other related aspects of UNHCR activities. We are confident that UNHCR will closely implement various recommendations, and where there are constraints in implementing any recommendation, it should be brought to the attention of members.

Mr. Chairman,

India's record in dealing with refugees has been no less than exemplary. India stands steadfast in its commitment to provide humanitarianism assistance to them. We continue to host a large number of refugees and our programmes for them are managed entirely from within our own resources. Our protection regime is based on the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Indian Constitution and other relevant legal provisions. We have clearly demonstrated our abiding commitment to the principles of protection and non-refoulement.

The decision to grant all UNHCR mandate refugees in urban areas the opportunity to apply for long stay visas of a one year renewable duration augments the protection space considerably. These long stay visas allow refugees to work in the private sector and enrol in any academic institutions. India continues to refine its administrative mechanisms for providing greater hospitality to refugees during their stay in the country.

Mr. Chairman,

India remains firmly committed to working in concert with the UNHCR and the international community to address the international protection agenda for refugees in a spirit of solidarity and find comprehensive practical solutions.

Thank you

695. STATEMENT BY MR. VIJAY INDER SINGLA, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF INDIAN DELEGATION ON AGENDA ITEM 51-"UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST (UNRWA)" AT THE FOURTH COMMITTEE OF THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 7, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

At the outset, I would like to express the Indian delegation's appreciation for the work of the Commissioner General, Mr. Filippo Grandi and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA). We would like to thank the Commissioner General for his informative and detailed briefing to the Committee on the activities of UNRWA. We also thank the UNRWA Advisory Commission and the members of the working group on Financing of UNRWA, for their efforts in support of the Agency.

Mr. Chairman,

The situation in the Middle East region continues to remain fragile and unpredictable with the unprecedented transformation in several countries in the recent years and the ongoing conflict in Syria. Regrettably the long standing Palestinian question and the related Arab-Israeli issues have also largely remained unaddressed and unresolved. Further, the armed conflict in Syria has also seriously impacted the situation of Palestinian refugees.

In this context, the role of UNRWA in providing critical assistance to the Palestinian refugees assumes greater significance. The Agency today is a symbol of the international community's commitment to the well-being of the Palestinian refugees until a just and durable settlement of the issue is achieved. India commends UNRWA for its exemplary work, carried out under extremely difficult circumstances for the nearly 5 million Palestinian refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, Syria and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. We also take this opportunity to commend the cooperation of host countries to UNRWA's work.

We are happy to note that despite the many challenges it faces, UNRWA remains committed to building the human development of the refugees and improving their lives, while further improving service delivery and cost-effectiveness. Notable in particular is the significant progress achieved in 2012 and 2013 in operationalizing far-reaching reforms in the Agency's education and health programmes and in extending urgent assistance to 278,000 Palestine refugees affected by the conflict in Syria. We once again commend and encourage UNRWA to continue its valuable activities and work.

Mr. Chairman,

I would like to take this opportunity to place on record India's consistent support for the Palestinian cause.

We remain firm in our support for a negotiated solution to the Israeli Palestinian issue resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united state of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital, living within secure and recognized borders, side by side and at peace with Israel. We will also continue to support Palestine's bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations.

Bilaterally, India is committed to support the development and nation-building efforts of Palestine and has been providing development support to the Palestinian Authority. During the last three years alone, India has contributed US$ 10 million annually as untied budgetary support to the Palestinian Authority. During the visit of President Mahmoud Abbas to India in September 2012, Government of India announced a contribution of US Dollar 10 million to Palestine's budget to help address its financial requirements. The first tranche of US $ 1 million was released during the visit of India's Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. E. Ahamed to Ramallah in July 2013. We are also offering 100 slots to the Palestinian Authority for capacity building and human resource development under our technical and economic cooperation programme.

From the financial year 2009-10, we enhanced our annual contribution to UNRWA to US$ 1 million, in addition to a special contribution of US $ 1 million to UNRWA in response to a flash appeal in 2010. India's contribution of US $ 1 million for the current year was presented to the Commissioner-General of UNRWA during his visit to India in September 2013. This will be primarily used for provision of food and medicines to the displaced people in the refugee camps under UNRWA's various programmes. Also through the IBSA [India-Brazil-South Africa] Fund we will continue to undertake capacity building and infrastructure projects that are prioritized by the Palestinian Authority as we had done in the past.

Mr. Chairperson,

The report under this agenda item, clearly illustrates the severe challenges UNRWA continues to face.

The immediate challenge before UNRWA that needs to be addressed is the crisis of chronic underfunding. Shortage of funds adversely impacts the quality and maintenance of the existing level of services.

We support the efforts of UNRWA to enlarge the donor base. In spite of the current difficult global economic condition, it is important that the international community continues to show commitment to the cause of Palestine.

Mr. Chairman,

The continuing blockade of Gaza is causing severe hardship to the population. While there has been improvement in restrictions on West Bank and movement of humanitarian supplies and construction material into Gaza, approval of UNRWA projects, restrictions due to the separation barrier, closures, and curfews in the Palestinian territories is causing severe hardships to the affected population. The restrictions on freedom of movement of UNRWA staff members continue to hinder the work of UNRWA.

We join others in calling upon Israel to lift the blockade and allow the resumption of normal socio-economic activities in Gaza and facilitate free movement of UNRWA staff.

Mr. Chairman,

As I have stated earlier India has been steadfast in its support for the Palestinian cause from the beginning. As demonstrated over the past six decades, including during its memberships in the UN Security Council, India supports all efforts towards political resolution of the Palestinian Question.

We are encouraged in this regard by the resumed and ongoing direct talks between Israel and Palestine facilitated by the US. We hope that the direct talks will lead to concrete results within the envisaged time frame and a just and durable solution to the conflict will be arrived eventually.

Until then, Mr. Chairman, it is imperative upon all of us member states to fully support UNRWA, as the primary source of humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian refugees.

Thank You Mr. Chairman.

696. STATEMENT BY H.E. AMBASSADOR MANJEEV SINGH PURI, Cd'A AND ACTING PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE OF INDIA TO THE UNITED NATIONS ON AGENDA ITEM: 123: 'QUESTION OF EQUITABLE REPRESENTATION ON AND INCREASE IN THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL AND OTHER MATTERS RELATED TO THE COUNCIL' AT THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 7, 2013.

Congratulations to you on your Presidency and you have the fullest support of my delegation in assisting you in all your endeavours in this session of the GA.

We also welcome the reappointment of Ambassador Zahir Tanin as Chair of the Intergovernmental Negotiations, which is a most positive development and brings the much needed institutional continuity to this debate.

But before I delve into the substance of my remarks, allow me to first align myself with the statement delivered by the distinguished Permanent Representative Japan on behalf of the G4, as well as with the distinguished Permanent Representative of St. Kitts and Nevis, on behalf of the Group of L.69.

I would also like to lend my fullest support to the statement delivered by the distinguished Permanent Representative of Guyana, on behalf of the CARICOM.

Mr. President, having closely followed this debate over reforms of the Security Council over the last four years in New York, as well from nearly a decade before that, I would like to submit a few 'myth busters' to set the record straight on some of the key issues that have been raised recently.

First, we have been engaged in nine rounds of Intergovernmental Negotiations since 2009, with having to conduct negotiations in the air, literally! It would be the only instance of its kind perhaps, when negotiations in a multilateral setting have been conducted so far without any text, which goes against the very logic of multilateral diplomacy, and should have started off in the first instance, on the basis of a text.

So, anyone who says that we cannot move to text based negotiations, to me is a nay sayer to any forward movement. For if we dont negotiate on the basis of a text, then on what basis do we conduct negotiations?

The Chair of the IGN having presided over eight rounds spread over five years, having heard loud and clear, views of all interest groups and each member state, came to this very conclusion in his letter of 25 July 2012 and recommended that he, like in all other UN processes, be authorised to produce, what he called a Concise Working Document to enable the process to move towards real give and take negotiations. This was also a plea that had the largest support from the floor of the last meeting of the IGN conducted on 27 June earlier this year.

However, we subsequently learnt that a select handful group of nay sayers, protested to the PGA against the role of the Chair and his recommendations, inspite of these recommendations being recognised in the rollover decision on this subject by the GA

Subsequently, to tide over this concern, when the President of the General Assembly formed an Advisory Group to himself, to assist him in providing an input to become the basis for the IGN, the same group of naysayers are now questioning the authority of the PGA to do so! It is indeed an outright absurdity, you simply can't have your cake and eat it too!

Mr. President, it is our delegation's firm belief that having been unanimously elected by this very august assembly, you have the full authority to choose who you want as advisors, what and how to be advised and what to make of that advice.

We welcome your initiative and hope that input of the Advisory Group, would help us move forward on the basis of the PGA's text.

I also would like to solicit the understanding of all member states to not necessarily see 'text based negotiations' as inimical to diluting any position of any Group, or as being the final word, for as and when that input is presented by the PGA to the IGN, each and every member state will have the full authority to propose additions, deletions or amendments, and build upon the PGA's initiative. But to not let even an input emerge and cast aspersions on the role of the PGA does not reflect well on all of us.

A second myth that I would like to touch upon today is the often called need for 'complete consensus' by the same set of naysayers as being the ONLY way forward.

Mr. President, on a matter as complex and pressing as UNSC reforms, as and when it happens, we all know that it will have to be eventually tested from the floor of the General Assembly through a vote. That is what the UN Charter prescribes.

We also agree and acknowledge that we are not there yet, but to insist that no forward movement can take place till we have 'complete consensus' is only tantamount to delaying any kind of progress.

Time and again, repeated articulations from all the major stakeholders have proved from the floor of the IGN, as well as the General Assembly, that an overwhelming majority supports expansion in both categories of membership.

This is also an observation made by the Chair of the IGN, having heard statements from member states over the last five years. We therefore hope that the Advisory Group would factor this in their input under consideration.

The third misplaced myth, that I would like to touch upon, is the perceived apprehension that through this process of the IGN, some countries would make it to the expanded setting, while others would not.

Mr. President, we are presently in a process that does not decide or indicate, which countries would be members of the expanded setting. We are only attempting to negotiate through the IGN, the broad parameters of what the expanded UNSC would like, and provide workable options on each of the five key issues identified in GA Decision 62/557.

We have a mandate from our Heads of State in 2005 through the Millenium Summit, which we need to fulfill. If we let the small yet vocal minority of 'counter aspirants to the aspirants' even scuttle this process forward, then we are failing in our obligation to deliver on that commitment. Which brings me to my final submission Mr. President.

The exercise of UNSC reforms cannot be seen to be going on till the cows come home. Recent developments around the world have increasingly put to question not just the representativeness but also the credibility of the UN Security Council is at stake. And the clarion call for change is only growing louder by the day.

All these are important tidings which cannot be ignored in our collective quest to achieve UNSC reforms. We need to have a results based time line and the year 2015, which will be the 70 th Anniversary of the United Nations, as well as 10 years following the 2005 World Summit when all our Heads of States/Governments mandated us to achieve early reforms of the Security Council, will be an important occassion to deliver 'concrete outcomes' on this most pressing subject.

We hope that we can collectively work together in a constructive and forward looking manner, not just on the process but as well as on the substance, in the interim, so as to deliver on this long due mandate.

Your initiative and personal commitment is most appreciated and in your success lies our collective endeavor.

I thank you Mr. President.

697. STATEMENT BY MR. ANTO ANTONY, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT & MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, JOINT DEBATE ON AGENDA ITEM 9: REPORT OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL; ITEM 14: INTEGRATED AND COORDINATED IMPLEMENTATION OF AND FOLLOW-UP TO THE OUTCOMES OF THE MAJOR UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCES AND SUMMITS IN THE ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND RELATED FIELDS AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 11, 2013.

Mr. President,

It is my distinct honor to make a statement in this important Joint Debate.

The United Nations embodies humankind's faith in multilateralism to solve global problems. Over the decades, it has rendered great service to humanity.

India associates itself with the statement made by the distinguished representative of Fiji on behalf of G-77.

Mr. President,

India attaches great importance to the work of the Economic and Social Council.

The Council has an acknowledged role as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development.

Mr. President,

Global cooperation on sustainable development is today at an important cross-road. The work on accelerating the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), negotiating a set of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), formulating a strategy for financing sustainable development and arriving at a post-2015 development agenda will be the key priorities of the international community over the next two years.

ECOSOC has an important role to play in this endeavor.

Mr. President,

The vision for a strengthened ECOSOC has been realized through the General Assembly resolution 68/1 adopted in September this year.

We deeply appreciate the efforts of the Permanent Representatives of Guyana and Belgium for leading an inclusive process of consultations towards this resolution.

We believe that the strengthened structure of the ECOSOC will assist it in better discharging its role as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development.

Mr. President,

The High Level Political Forum that we have just created must be seen as a forum for action-oriented collaboration.

The Forum should address sustainable development challenges from the prism of poverty eradication as its overarching objective.

Mr. President,

The Council and the Forum together will play a key role in the articulation of global priorities for the post-2015 period.

India believes that poverty eradication must be pursued with renewed vigour and determination. Other human development imperatives enshrined in the MDGs remain equally important and must be carried forward.

Only economic growth can ensure eradication of poverty. To achieve this, we must strengthen the partnership between developed and developing countries and make it more meaningful and genuine.

The post-2015 development agenda must remain an agenda for development. Its focal point must be the distribution of resources and wealth more equitably among the nations and within them.

It must also promote an international system conducive to development.

Mr. President,

India has followed a path of inclusive growth with the aim of making all sections of the society stakeholders in the development of the country.

Robust economic growth over the past decade supported by proactive and targeted interventions by the Government have enabled us to move millions of our people out of poverty.

We have taken several path-breaking and unique initiatives.

The Food Security Law enacted recently will ensure food security for the Indian people. We have enacted a law that ensures at least a hundred days of work for the rural poor of India.

We have also enacted a law for Right to Education for ensuring universal access to quality education to our people.

The Right to Information has empowered the people by enhancing openness and transparency in governance.

Empowerment of women has been promoted through reservation of seats in local bodies. We have strengthened the law dealing with offences against women for ensuring better safety and security for women.

We have also made use of Information and Communications technology for inclusive development. The initiative of Government of India to provide Unique Identification to all Indian citizens is perhaps the world's largest ID scheme. More than 520 million Indians are already enrolled.

Sustainable development is one of the primary goals of our 12th five year plan. We have been fortunate to have leaders who have deeply recognized the need for harmony with nature. In fact, our Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi was the only head of government to attend the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment way back in 1972.

Mr. President,

India's development experience has shown that human development indicators can be improved even with low per capita incomes. Kerala, the state where I come from, has managed to reduce infant mortality rates to levels not achieved by many rich countries. We have created a program call 'Zero Landless Project' by which all families in the state are provided with land to build a house of their own. We have taken pioneering initiatives in public health, making available generic medicines and cutting-edge treatments and surgeries at affordable rates. The mass contact programme of the state government has been recognized by the United Nations.

Mr. President,

India is fully committed to playing a constructive role to fashion an ambitious, equitable and comprehensive post-2015 development agenda.

We believe that with our collaborative efforts and collective will, we can create a better world for ourselves and our future generations.

In this quest, we must take inspiration from the words of the Father of the Indian nation Mahatma Gandhi.

He said: "Whenever you are in doubt...recall the face of the poorest and weakest person you may have seen and ask yourself if the step you contemplate is going to be of any use to her...will she gain anything by it? Will it restore to her a control over her own life and destiny? Then you will find your doubts melt away".

I thank you Mr. President.

698. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR MANJEEV SINGH PURI,
DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, AT THE 2013
UNITED NATIONS PLEDGING CONFERENCE FOR DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 11, 2013.

Mr. President,

At the outset, allow me to extend our sincere felicitations to you on your election as Chair of the 2013 United Nations Pledging Conference. We wish you all success and hope that under your stewardship the Pledging Conference would achieve even greater results.

Mr. President

Both at the Rio+20 Summit , as well as in the recently adopted QCPR resolution on operational activities for development, we had collectively recognised eradication of poverty as the greatest global challenge and urged the UN Development System that all its programmes and projects must focus on addressing this very challenge as their underlying objective.

In pursuit of this objective, any stasis in resource mobilisation or a decline in funding to the development activities of the UN poses a threat to the viability of operational activities and severely circumscribes its ability to work at the country level.

As a developing country, while India has its own plate full of developmental challenges to be addressed, even then, we have always attempted to contribute to increasing the availability of core resources for development activities of the United Nations system.

In keeping with this long-standing tradition, I now have the honour to announce India's pledges of contributions for operational activities of development for the year 2014.

This list is not exhaustive and we shall be undertaking further commitments to other entities in due course of time.

1. United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)
USD 4,500,000
2. United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) USD 900,000
3. United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) USD 500,000
4. United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)
USD 100,000
5. World Food Programme (WFP) (Biennium 2013-2014)
USD 1,920,000
6. UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) USD 1,000,000

7. United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC)
USD 100,000
8. United Nations Commission on Human Settlements (UNCHS)
Programme USD 100,000
9. Voluntary Fund for Technical Co-operation USD 100,000
10. Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery
USD 25,000
11. Voluntary Trust Fund for Victims of Torture USD 25,000
12. UN Volunteers USD 15,000
13. UNCPCJF USD 3,000

In addition, we also have a standing 5 year commitment of USD 5 million towards UN Women, of which, USD 3 million has already been contributed so far.

I thank you, Mr. President.

699. Statement by Mr. Md. Nadimul Haque, Member of Parliament and Member of the Indian Delegation on Agenda Item 141: "UN Common System" at the Fifth Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, November 13, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for giving me the floor.

I am honoured to speak at the 5th Committee today on the important agenda item of UN Common System.

The UN staff is instrumental in realizing the high-ideals envisioned in its founding documents. Common-system matters therefore, are critical to the implementation of the mandates we generate in the United Nations.

Mr. Chairman,

United Nations embodies mankind's unrelenting faith in the power of multilateralism. This hallowed institution was founded on the ashes of war and has played a pivotal role in keeping world peace since.

Speaking in the UN, I am reminded of the words of the great Indian poet Sahir Ludhianvi, who said: "Jang mashriq mein ho ya maghrib mein, Nasl-e-Adam ka khoon hai aakhir; Is liye aye shareef insaanon, jang talti rahi to behtar hai; Aur hum sabhi ke aangan mein, Shama jalti rahe to behtar hai"

"War, whether it's in the East or the west, it spills the same blood - that of humankind. Therefore, the more we can avoid war the better, the longer we can ensure the light of peace in our homes the better"

Mr. Chairman,

I wish to thank Mr. Kingston Rhodes, Chairman of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and his team for the report contained in document A/68/30. I also wish to thank the ACABQ Chair and the Director of the Programme Planning and Budget Division for the relevant reports.

My delegation would also like to record our appreciation of the ICSC for its commendable work in fulfilling its responsibility as mandated by the General Assembly.

Mr. Chairman,

Commission's work has led to significant HR reforms in the past in harmonizing service- conditions of the staff across the organization. It has also played a significant role in institutionalizing the complex processes of determining base-floor salary, margin-management, and post-adjustment indexation.

ICSC has played an important role in ensuring that the organization continues to attract the best and competitive talent for its workforce and in guaranteeing them remunerative service conditions.

Commission's ongoing comprehensive review of the compensation package for professional and higher staff will, therefore, shape the quality of the organization's workforce in times ahead. We sincerely hope it also adds much needed diversity to the staff-composition both in terms of geography and gender.

Mr. Chairman,

Holding our decisions in abeyance on common-system matters through repeated deferrals in the past has distorted General Assembly's consideration of this important agenda item. Post-related re-costing continues to bedevil the entire budgetary process. The margin-levels are likewise fast approaching the limits of acceptable thresholds.

Given the pay-freeze in the comparator federal civil-service and the uncertainty in this regard beyond December 2013, it is imperative that the measures are put in place to maintain the margins at the desirable level of 115.

My delegation also believes that the post-adjustment system should be allowed to function normally in accordance with the methodology that was agreed by the General Assembly.

Mr. Chairman,

It is imperative that adequate resources are made available to ensure implementation of the ICSC recommendations on UN Common System.

A number of high-level posts have been created in the organization, faster than anytime in the past. It is impossible today to get a consistent-list of USGs and ASGs in the organization. Mandate-creeps across departments and entities have blunted the ability to monitor posts, functions, levels, and finances judiciously. It would therefore, be misplaced to attribute budgetary demands to staff-remunerations alone.

Mr. Chairman,

Before closing, let me assure you of my delegation's constructive engagement in deliberations on this agenda item.

I would like to conclude by quoting one of the most renowned Urdu poets from the Indian sub-continent GHALIB whose words are so very apt in today's context.

Ghalib said:

"Such are the thousand ambitions that each of them would consume my life. And yet my desires are not enough for this one lifetime"

I Thank you

700. STATEMENT BY MR. P. RAJEEVE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT AND MEMBER OF THE INDIAN DELEGATION, ON AGENDA ITEM 64 "REPORT OF THE HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL" AT THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 13, 2013.

Mr. President,

We thank the President of the Human Rights Council for his briefing on the activities of the Council.

Human rights questions are amongst the most important and cross-cutting of all subjects in the realm of international discussions today. The strength of the Human Rights Council lies in its emphasis on dialogue, cooperation, transparency and non-selectivity in the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

We believe that the HRC should emerge as a forum for voluntary participation and sharing of national experiences and best practices in the protection and promotion of human rights. There should be an emphasis on capacity-building of States through technical and financial assistance.

Mr. President,

It goes without saying that actions of the UN and its organs should be anchored in the principles of the UN Charter. We believe that collaboration of all States in the spirit of equal and mutually respectful dialogue is the most effective tool to promote and protect human rights. This would not only strengthen the confidence of all interested parties in the Human Rights Council and its mechanisms but also contribute to the reinforcement of its political and moral authority and credibility.

We would like to express our appreciation for the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Ms. Navenetham Pillay and her Office in supporting the work of the Human Rights Council. Serious thought needs to be given to increasing the accountability of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Human Rights Council. We believe that our common endeavour to promote and protect all human rights for all globally can be advanced further through a formalized interaction that will strengthen institutional linkages between the Council and OHCHR.

Regular interaction between the OHCHR and the HRC in Geneva and the GA in New York is important for deliberations on issues such as OHCHR's strategic thematic priorities, budgetary considerations, staffing, etc. It remains a matter of concern that the OHCHR depends for two-third of its budget through voluntary funding. This financial dependence distorts strategic planning and allocation of available resources in OHCHR's work. The geographical imbalance in the staffing pattern of the OHCHR also continues to be a matter of concern. These matters require greater attention and deliberation.

Mr. President,

Special Procedures is an important mechanism of the Human Rights Council for a "genuine dialogue for strengthening the capacity of member states". It is, therefore, important that Special Rapporteurs maintain confidence by adhering to the code of conduct and their mandates established by the HRC. We also reiterate the importance of ensuring equitable distribution of financial resources among all Special Procedures mandate holders through a transparent process.

In this regard, we would like to request the President of the Human Rights Council to reflect on these important issues and exchange views on what steps can be taken by the Council.

Mr. President,

I would like to also briefly refer to the issue of reprisals. We share the view that any act of reprisal or intimidation is unacceptable and must be dealt with effectively. However, we regret that the Human Rights Council could not address this issue in a unified manner. We are in fact concerned at attempts in the Council to trespass into areas that are not strictly within its mandate.

The appointment of a UN-wide mechanism on reprisals that will deal with other UN entities not primarily dealing with human rights issues is the prerogative of the body that has universal representation. We would have preferred that such matters be transmitted to the competent body i.e. the General Assembly, of which the Human Rights Council is a subsidiary body. Here, we would like to underline the importance of the Council's adherence to the Institutional Building Package in carrying out its mandate.

Mr. President,

Allow me to also place on record our appreciation to the President of the Human Rights Council, Mr. Remigiusz Henczel for the smooth and effective manner in which he has conducted the deliberations of the Council. We also appreciate his efforts in streamlining the work of the Council through the annual voluntary calendar of HRC thematic resolutions.

We believe that the Human Rights Council should continue to rationalize and prioritize its work to make the most efficient use of limited resources. We reiterate our firm commitment to continue to engage constructively with all member states to make the Council more effective, efficient and responsive. We believe that we can advance our common cause only through dialogue and cooperation

701. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR ASOKE KUMAR MUKERJI, PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE ON UNGA DEBATEON 'SITUATION IN AFGHANISTAN.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 20, 2013.

Madam President,

At the outset, let me thank you for organizing this discussion on 'The Situation in Afghanistan'. I also avail of this opportunity to commend the German delegation for coordinating inter-governmental negotiations in an excellent manner that has led us to this annual General Assembly resolution.

As for the last several years, India is happy to co-sponsor this resolution, which is traditionally adopted by consensus.

Madam President,

Afghanistan is undergoing a significant period of transition which encompasses security, political and economic dimensions. The progress in the technical preparation of the Presidential elections is a testimony of the resolve of the people of Afghanistan to have a smooth political transition. The key to successful elections in 2014 is an election whose outcome is acceptable to the people of Afghanistan.

Madam President,

The Presidential elections in 2014 will be yet another significant step towards the political reconstruction effort in Afghanistan which must always remain Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and let me add 'Afghan-Controlled'. The rationale behind our addition of 'Afghan-controlled' is that we want to stress that the destiny of Afghanistan is in the hands of Afghan people and it will also symbolize the distance which the people of Afghanistan have covered in the process of transition and transformation. This will be the 3rd democratic election in Afghanistan, a significant achievement for Afghanistan, and a sign of maturity of its new political system.

The international community must strongly support the Afghan authorities' preparations in this endeavour, and at the same time resist any outside effort to derail the process.

Madam President,

The security situation in Afghanistan remains fragile. Civilian casualties have risen. So have targeted killings. The condemnable attack on the Indian Consulate in Jalalabad on 3rd August 2013 which led to injuries to several Afghan security personnel guarding the Consulate and the killing of several innocent Afghan citizens, including 10 children is another example of the tenuous security environment in Afghanistan. As we have stated earlier, India does not have an "exit policy" in Afghanistan. India will not be deterred by such attacks. We do not see this attack as only aimed against India, but also against the efforts of the Afghan people to overcome the tragic consequences of the last several decades of war and conflict. I would like to reiterate our commitment to stand by the Afghan people and their personnel who have shown exemplary courage in protecting the Afghan people.

Madam President,

It has been seen that most of the terrorist attacks in Afghanistan originate from beyond Afghanistan's border by groups closely allied to the Al Qaida and their affiliates. We would like to reiterate that we must be continuously watchful of the designs of these terrorist organizations. The listing and delisting process of the individuals and entities for targeted measures by the "Al Qaida and Taliban Sanction Committees" must remain proactive and attentive. Here the role of the international community is critical in not only giving inputs to the Sanctions Committee and other related Counter Terrorism entities but also in continuing to support the efforts of the Afghans in addressing the security and terrorist challenges faced by them. In this regard, concerted action is also needed to isolate and destroy the syndicate of terrorism, which includes elements of the Taliban, Al-Qaida, Lashkar-e- Taiba and other terrorist and extremist groups. It is therefore extremely important that the transition security plan takes into account the threats posed by these terrorist organizations, and supplements the security architecture in Afghanistan. The drawdown of troops and its implication on the security arrangements needs to be carefully assessed and appropriate measures need to be taken to ensure the safety and security of the Afghan people.

Madam President,

The time has come for the international community to re-assess the role it wishes to play in Afghanistan's internal political process. In this regard the issue of the renewed mandate of UNAMA needs to be discussed.

Afghanistan has reached a considerable level of political maturity with the huge political reconstruction effort in Afghanistan. We applaud the role UNAMA has performed over the last decade in the political, humanitarian and development spheres in Afghanistan along with other agencies of the UN system. However, we are of the view that we should take note of the maturity of the political process in Afghanistan and therefore, define UNAMA's political mandate to ensure that it keeps its focus on supporting the institutions of politics rather than the political process itself, which must be left to Afghanistan's own leaders. We also believe that UNAMA must step-up its humanitarian and developmental role through better delivery of assistance in Afghanistan, since the UN is uniquely placed with access to the remotest and most isolated communities in the country. The improvement in infrastructure along with access to basic services like health, education, nutrition on a regular basis to all Afghans would create a vital 'space' for the new Afghan political system to mature and take deep roots in Afghan society. This must complement and supplement the Afghan State institutions and their initiatives in these spheres, since it is not capacity 'substitution' but 'capacity building' that we are seeking to achieve in Afghanistan. It would also be useful if we undertake a serious assessment of the future role of UNAMA, by learning from its experiences and from the views of other member states. The objective should be to see how best the international community can realistically assist the Afghan people in a fast changing political scenario.

Madam President,

The assessment of issues facing UNAMA must take into account the problems of coherence in performing its mandated activities and the related duplication of resources, and a higher cost of programs.

In conclusion, Mr. President, as Afghanistan moves toward 2014, it would be entering a new era of development and progress. Needless to say, the international community's support and constant encouragement for Afghanistan would be critical in this transition. We would like to assure that India will remain steadfast in its support to Afghanistan during this period of transition and thereafter. India once again reiterates its support for an Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-controlled process of transition and development.

Thank you

702. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, on the Annual Report of the UNSC at the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, November 21, 2013.

Madam President,

Thank you for organizing this meeting on the annual report of the United Nations Security Council for the period 1 August 2012 - 31 July 2013.

At the outset, I would like to thank Ambassador Samantha Power and the US delegation for their efforts in preparing the introduction to the report. Our thanks are also due to Ambassador Liu Jieyi and the Chinese delegation for presenting the annual report of the Security Council.

In November 2012, as President of the Security Council, India had the honour of presenting the report.

Madam President,

The report of the Security Council is an important means for facilitating interaction between the most representative organ of the United Nations and its most empowered one. The UN Charter itself bestows on the report a profound gravitas as is evident from the fact that there exists a separate provision mandating such a report, rather than clubbing it with the provision for reports from other UN bodies.

The membership of the General Assembly has repeatedly requested that this report be more analytical and incisive than being a mere narration of events. The report, however, continues to be a statistical compilation of events and listing of meetings and outcome documents.

This leaves us with no other option but to recognize that the real solution not only for a more credible, legitimate and representative Council, but even for a more thorough report, lies in the comprehensive reform of the Council, including expansion in both the permanent and non-permanent categories, and improvement in its working methods.

Madam President,

Much of the Council's efforts and activities during the year centered around Africa, including the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mali and Somalia.

The period of report saw the Council endorsing the Peace, Security and Cooperation Framework for the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Region, signed in Addis Ababa on 24 February 2013. The Council also authorized the deployment of an intervention brigade for MONUSCO to carry out robust activities to take on armed groups, as stated on page 17 of the Report.

As a major troop contributing country and one with a substantial presence in MONUSCO, I would like to underscore the need for an objective assessment of the implications of such robust mandates on the impartial nature of UN peacekeeping.

It is important to remember that impartiality and neutrality are key principles for ensuring acceptability of UN peacekeepers and also for their safety and security and in the long term, robust mandates could, indeed, add more threats to maintenance of international peace and security.

Moreover, the implication of having intervention and traditional peacekeeping units under one command, with no differentiation in physical appearance, is that it would invite attacks on peacekeepers.

Another related issue is how to deter threats to peacekeepers from nongovernment forces or militias. The Council has asked for apprehending those responsible for killing UN peacekeepers, but not much has happened to ensure this so far, either in the DRC or in South Sudan. We would ask the Council to refer to pages 17 and 34 of the Report in this context, and call for visible steps to be taken by the Council to prosecute and bring to justice those who attack peacekeepers within a determined time frame. The Council has to use its authority to effectively deter non-government forces or militias, which threaten both the UN peacekeepers, and, as importantly, the civilians who these peacekeepers are protecting.

Robust mandates may also pose issues relating to the legal immunity from prosecution of UN peacekeepers. It is imperative to ensure immunity of UN peacekeepers from prosecutions in order to ensure that they discharge their duty smoothly. Especially at a time when peacekeepers are deployed after being oriented on the various dimensions of international humanitarian law relevant for UN peacekeeping.

In operations where peacekeepers are operating without robust mandate, such as UNDOF, the threats to the UN, mentioned on page 49 of the Report, have to be taken seriously. All Member States must be cognizant of their responsibility under the Charter to protect and uphold the integrity of UN operations. They must investigate and prosecute those who blatantly threaten the UN, especially if the sanctity of the Council is to be maintained.

Madam President,

I am happy that yesterday, member states adopted a resolution on Afghanistan in the General Assembly, which we co-sponsored. India expressed full support to an Afghan-led, Afghan-owned and Afghan-controlled process of peace and reconciliation.

Madam President,

On the issue of Counter-Terrorism, we recall that the Council has endorsed a policy of 'Zero Tolerance' for terrorism. This implies that no cause or grievance, including so called "root causes", can be used to justify terrorism. India strongly supports all efforts, especially within the purview of the United Nations that strengthen international and regional cooperation in the fight against terrorism. In this context, the challenges facing the international community continue to grow, as set out on pages 65 and 66 of the Report.

Madam President,

I cannot but conclude by bringing up an issue which has an umbilical relationship to the agenda item of today's debate, i.e. reforms of the UN Security Council. I would like to flag, in particular, two key issues in this regard for your consideration:

One, the process of bringing about UNSC reforms cannot be seen to be an exercise ad infinitum. A results based timeline is imperative, and those who ask for not imposing artificial timelines may be advised to desist from inflicting artificial delays on this process.

The debate convened by the President of the General Assembly on 7-8 November, 2013 had three important statistics, which you must bear in mind as you plan the way forward. Firstly, of the nearly 90 countries which took the floor, 58 individual countries asked for expansion in both categories. Secondly, 26 individual member states explicitly asked for concrete outcomes by 2015. Thirdly, 23 individual delegations supported commencing the IGN on text based negotiations as leading from your initiative. If one were to consider the numbers as represented by their Groups, the number of these countries would be even twice higher than the ones just stated.

I therefore urge you, Mr. President, to act on this collective call made by such a large number of states from this very podium. You have the full support of the overwhelming majority of this august assembly to steer your own initiative towards its logical culmination and commence the IGN immediately on the basis of a text.

And secondly, Mr. President, even as we embark on marking the 70th anniversary of the United Nations and crafting a post-2015 development agenda, it is important that we deliver on the most important unfinished mandates from 2005 World Summit i.e., early reform of the Security Council. Indeed, while all other mandates from the World Summit have been fulfilled or remain work in progress, its only this which remains 'work without any progress', i.e. still stuck where it was in 2005! This is an unacceptable interpretation of the words "early reform" unanimously argued to by all Members of the United Nations eight years ago.

Thank you

703. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative, on Agenda Item 36 - 'Question of Palestine' at the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, November 25, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. President,

At the outset, I would like to express our appreciation to you for convening this important discussion on the Question of Palestine at the General Assembly.

Mr. President,

We are marking the International day of solidarity with the Palestinian People. Let me begin by quoting from my Prime Minister H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh's message to the friendly people of Palestine on this occasion:

"On the occasion of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, I reaffirm India's strong and steadfast support for the Palestinian cause. We welcome the recent efforts of Palestine and Israel mediated by the US, for resumption of direct peace talks and remain hopeful that the negotiations would lead to a comprehensive peace process for final resolution of the conflict within an agreed time line. India supports a negotiated resolution, resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital, living within secure and recognized borders, side by side and at peace with Israel, as endorsed in the Arab Peace Initiative, the Quartet road map and relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions.

I also take this opportunity to extend heartiest congratulations to the people of Palestine and their leadership on obtaining 'Non-Member Observer State' status in the UN General Assembly last year. India has always played a proactive role in supporting Palestinian cause in the multilateral fora. We cosponsored the resolution enhancing Palestine's status in the UN General Assembly and will continue to support Palestine's bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations.

India has also supported the nation-building efforts of Palestine through technical and economic assistance, including budgetary support. We are supporting construction of schools and setting up an IT centre and Vocational Training Centre in Palestine. Additionally India contributes $1 million annually to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) for Palestinian refugees. We are also implementing developmental projects in Palestine jointly with Brazil and South Africa as partners in IBSA. India will continue to support these efforts.

On this important occasion, on behalf of the people of India, I convey our best wishes and greetings to the friendly people of Palestine."

Mr. President,

It has been almost a year since this assembly voted on the up gradation of Palestine's status in the United Nations to a non-member observer state along with other resolutions which are voted every year. While the upgradation was an important milestone, the aspirations of the Palestinian people and leadership for the full membership to the United Nations still remains to be achieved.

Mr. President,

The Resolution of the Palestinian question is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. Given the fragile and unpredictable situation in the Middle East with the ongoing conflict in Syria, there should be no more delay in addressing the Israeli-Palestinian issue.

The situation in the occupied Palestinian territories has been deteriorating due to settlement activities in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. These activities are creating new realities on the ground threatening the very premise of a two- state solution. The blockade of Gaza has also had serious consequences for the lives of Palestinians. It has adversely affected essential services, economic activities and infrastructure development. The Palestinian Authority is also facing a severe financial crisis that could erode the significant progress made by the Palestinian Authority in building state institutions. All these issues have to be issued in a timely manner for just and durable peace in the region.

While there has been improvement in restrictions on the West Bank, and movement of humanitarian supplies and construction material into Gaza, we continue to hold that it is necessary for Israel to lift the blockade on Gaza and allow normal and unrestricted movement of persons and goods within Palestine. We also join others in urging Israel to stop settlement activities.

Mr. President,

India has a long history of solidarity with the Palestinian people. As demonstrated over the past six decades, including during its memberships in the UN Security Council, India also stands ready to support all measures that the Palestinian leadership may take towards political resolution of the Final Status issues.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to reiterate India's continued support for the Palestinian cause.

I thank you

704. STATEMENT BY H E AMBASSADOR BHAGWANT SINGH BISHNOI, DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, AT THE JOINT DEBATE ON AGENDA ITEMS 121: IMPLEMENTATION OF THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE UNITED NATIONS & AGENDA ITEM 122: REVITALIZATION OF THE WORK OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 4, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for convening this important discussion.

I am happy to place on record our appreciation for the good work done by the Chair of the Ad Hoc Working Group for last year, Ambassador Mootaz Ahmadein Khalil, Permanent Representative of Egypt.

I also welcome the appointments of the Permanent Representatives of Slovakia and Thailand as co-Chairs of the ad-hoc Working Group for this Session.

I would also like to align myself with the statement made by Algeria on behalf of Non-Aligned Group.

Mr. President,

The impact of the political transformations sweeping parts of the world and the continuing weakness in the global economy has exposed the weakness of globalization. The increasingly complex and pressing transnational challenges of our time, namely the issues of peace and security, development, human rights, the environment and health, among others, also require more effective structures of global governance and a revitalized General Assembly.

Mr. President,

In your acceptance speech in July 2013, you had rightly identified reinvigoration of the reform agenda of the General Assembly as critical. In your inaugural address to the 68th General Assembly you had reiterated your determination to dedicate significant time and resources to the issues of reforming and revitalizing the major bodies of UN: the Assembly and the Council. You can count on India's support in these endeavors of yours.

The need for revitalization of the General Assembly has long been recognized by this Assembly. However, after more than two decades of discussions, there are few changes even in its working methods and negligible outcome in terms of substantively changing the norms and structures of the Assembly.

Mr. President,

Without prejudging the proceedings of the Ad Hoc Working Group that should start soon, I would like to place on record the Indian delegation's considered views on some of the more important aspects of the issue which concern General Assembly Revitalization.

We have consistently held the view that the General Assembly can be revitalized only when its position as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations is respected both in letter and spirit. The Assembly should take the lead in setting the global agenda and restoring the centrality of the United Nations in formulating multilateral approaches to resolving transnational issues. In particular, revitalization must restore the primacy of the UN in development matters.

We need to change it from being a talk shop to a place where transnational issues that impact each and every one of us are addressed swiftly and truly global solutions prescribed.

Mr. President,

First of all, it is critical that we establish a relationship of respect for respective mandates between the General Assembly and the Security Council in the spirit of the Charter. The Council should not encroach upon the mandate of the Assembly through extremely wide and permissive interpretations of what constitutes a threat to international peace and security.

Second, the Assembly we believe must have a greater say in the process of selection of the Secretary General. The continued circumscribing of the Assembly's role and responsibilities in the process of selection and appointment of the Secretary General needs to change in the interests of the United Nations system in general and the Assembly's prerogatives in particular.

And, thirdly, the Assembly and the other entities that form part of the UN system must reflect best practices in its day to day functioning. And it has a lot to learn from member-states in this regard.

Mr. President,

In conclusion, let me re-emphasize the need to discuss substantive measures that would strengthen the role of General Assembly as the chief deliberative, policy-making and representative body of the international community.

You can count on India's constructive support and participation in these efforts.

Thank you

705. Statement by Mr. Amit Narang, First Secretary after adoption of the 2nd Committee Resolution on 2nd UN Decade on Eradication of Poverty at the Second Committee of the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

New York, December 6, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

Like the rest of the world, India is mourning the loss of President Nelson Mandela. The passing away of this giant among men is as much a loss to India and the world as it is to the South African nation. He belonged to the world and his courage will inspire generations.

Mr. Chairman,

We are happy we have adopted this important resolution on the 2nd UN Decade for the Eradication of Poverty. We would like to commend the constructive engagement of all delegations on the resolution.

Mr. Chairman,

After having significantly contributed to the global reduction of poverty in the last two decades, India remains fully committed to eradicating poverty and raising the living standards of our people through inclusive growth.

We strongly believe that the international community must redouble its efforts to end poverty once and for all under the Post-2015 Development Agenda. The global commitment to the central imperative of poverty eradication must not slacken.

We are happy therefore that the resolution that we have adopted reaffirms the commitment of the international community that poverty eradication shall be central to the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

We were however somewhat surprised that this commitment, which should have been a given, should have required so much discussion, let alone negotiation.

We need to remind ourselves that our leaders gave us a clear mandate at the Rio+20 Conference - that eradication of poverty is the greatest global challenge today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development. This mandate must underpin the Post-2015 Development Agenda.

Not only is poverty eradication a critical economic necessity but also the highest political and moral imperative.

Mr. Chairman,

We would like to emphasize that the centrality of poverty eradication as the central and overarching objective of the post-2015 development agenda cannot subject to negotiation.

We of course look forward to engaging constructively with all delegations in the run-up to the Post-2015 Development Agenda to agree on ways to strengthen national and international efforts to make poverty history.

706. STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR BHAGWANT SINGH BISHNOI DEPUTY PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE, ON AGENDA ITEM 76(a) AND (b) "OCEANS AND THE LAW OF THE SEA" AT THE 68TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 9, 2013.

Mr. President

Allow me to begin by thanking you for convening today's meeting for the consideration of the agenda item "Oceans and the Law of the Sea", a subject of significant interest for the whole world.

The outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development held in Rio de Janeiro in June 2012 entitled "The Future we want" recognizes the oceans and seas as an integral and essential component of the Earth's ecosystem and of crucial value to sustaining it. The role of oceans in supporting life on Earth is thus of vital importance.

We note however, that our oceans face terrific challenges including the deterioration of the marine environment, biodiversity loss, climate change, those relating to the maritime safety and security including the acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, and illegal fishing practices.

Mr. President

Safe navigation and smooth transportation of goods by seas are crucial to international trade and development. The acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea are a grave threat to maritime trade and the security of maritime shipping. Piracy endangers lives of seafarers, affects national security, territorial integrity and hampers economic development of nations.

We highly appreciate the work of the Contact Group on Piracy off the Coast of Somalia (CGPCS) in containing piracy through international cooperation and coordination. India actively participates in international efforts to combat piracy and armed robbery at sea. We are gratified that these efforts have yielded significant results as in the past year and a half, there has not been a successful hijacking off the coast of Somalia.

We would however, like to express our deep concern over the incidents of piracy and armed robbery at sea in the Gulf of Guinea. Although, the States in the region have the primary role to play to counter the threat of piracy, we urge the entire international community to continue cooperation and efforts toward ensuring the end of this menace.

Mr. President

Turning to the international legal mechanism, the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 is the key international instrument governing ocean affairs. It sets out the legal framework for all activities in oceans and seas. The Convention enjoys wide acceptance with 166 Parties, Niger being the latest State joining the Convention on 07 August 2013.

We thank the Secretary-General for his Report A/68/71 and Addendum 1 on issues concerning oceans and the law of the sea.

We welcome the report A/68/159 of the Co-Chairs of the fourteenth Meeting of the United Nations open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea (ICP), on the deliberations on "The impacts of ocean acidification on the marine environment". The broad scientific thinking and studies reveal that ocean acidification has serious impacts on marine ecosystem. The changes in temperature due to ocean acidification may alter the rate and pattern of ocean productivity. This necessitates the need for a more comprehensive study on ocean acidification and for capacity building including through filling the knowledge gaps and promoting the transfer of technology.

We welcome the report A/68/82 of the Co-Chairs of the meeting of the Ad-hoc Working Group of the Whole on the Regular Process for the global reporting and assessment of the state of marine environment, including socio-economic aspects. We commend the efforts toward materializing the first global integrated assessment of the state of the marine environment and look forward for its completion by 2014.

We also welcome the report A/68/399 of Co-Chairs of the meeting of the Ad-hoc open-ended Informal Working Group to study issues relating to the conservation and sustainable use of marine biological diversity beyond areas of national jurisdiction. The working group took note of the deliberations of experts in the intersessional workshops held in May 2013. The Workshops provided valuable scientific and technical information on conservation and management tools, environmental impact assessments, as well as on marine genetic resources; and also considered the issues relating to intellectual property rights, capacity-building and the transfer of marine technology. We support the efforts of the Working Group towards addressing, on urgent basis, the issue of the conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity of areas beyond national jurisdiction, including through developing a legal framework.

Mr. President

The smooth functioning of the institutions established under the Convention namely the International Sea-bed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf hold the key to the proper implementation of the provisions of the Convention and to the realization of the desired benefits from the uses of the seas. We therefore support all efforts towards ensuring their smooth functioning, and note with satisfaction the progress made by these institutions in their respective areas.

Mr. President

Being a country with a vast coastline and numerous islands, India has a traditional and abiding interest in the maritime and ocean affairs, and assures full cooperation in efforts toward ensuring the proper management and sustainable use of the oceans and seas as a responsible partner of the international community.

Finally, Mr. President we thank both the Coordinators for having successfully conducted the consultations on draft resolutions "Oceans and the Law of the Sea" and "Sustainable Fisheries" and support their adoption.

Thank you Mr. President.

707. Joint G4 Statement delivered by Ambassador Asoke K Mukerji, Permanent Representative of India to the United Nations at the First meeting of the 10th Round of Intergovernmental Negotiations of the 68th Session of the UN General Assembly on the Question of Equitable Representation and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Related Matters.

New York, 12 December 2013

Mr. President,

I have the honour to deliver this statement on behalf of the G4 countries; namely Brazil, Germany, India and Japan.

We wish to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your reappointment as Chair of the Intergovernmental Negotiations, and under your dynamic leadership, we look forward to achieving tangible progress in this round of the IGN.

Mr. President,

We are meeting today, following a very fruitful exchange of views in the General Assembly on 7-8 November.

It is therefore important that this round of the IGN does not ignore three very important pointers from the General Assembly debate.

First and foremost, was the strong call by the collective membership to finally start genuine text based negotiations in this round of the IGN. Several delegations categorically stated that this was not just the 'next logical step' but the 'only' next step forward. This was also a recommendation that you had yourself as the Chair of the IGN made earlier in your letter of 25 July 2012.

The initiative taken by the President, Ambassador John Ashe, therefore comes as a welcome step in the right direction. The non paper that he has submitted in his letter of 10 December, is a well balanced, honest and sincere attempt to contribute to the process, by providing a set of very useful ideas, on each of the reform clusters, as was outlined in UNGA Decision 62/557.

We believe that it provides a very good way forward to conduct this round of the IGN, by building further upon it, through a truly membership driven process from the floor of the IGN. We would also like to compliment the distinguished members of the Advisory Group, as well as Ambassador Sinclair, who have together contributed to this outcome, in a professional and neutral manner.

The President of the General Assembly has given you a clear mandate. The ball, Mr. Chair is now in your court. We encourage you to heed his call and use the non paper as a guide for this year's programme of work. A thorough discussion on the ideas presented, organised around the five reform clusters, would provide us, the member states, the opportunity to clearly voice our preferences, and to indicate where room for convergence exists. Such a discussion would also help you Mr. Chairman, to arrive at, a sound assessment of where the mood of the house stands on the options presented under each cluster. This is not just the logical way forward but perhaps the only way forward in our common pursuit of early reforms.

Mr. President, our second point flows from the November GA meeting, which was the categorical affirmation by nearly 2/3rds of the 90 odd speakers that took the floor, calling for support in expansion in both categories of membership. The overwhelming support in favour of expansion in both categories has already been established on each of occasions that we have debated the subject both within the GA, as well as the IGN.

The third key outcome from the GA discussion, was the clear call of a time line to deliver concrete outcomes on this long standing debate. As the United Nations approaches its 70th Anniversary Session of the General Assembly in the year 2015, it is important to finally deliver the only unfulfilled mandate from Para- 153 of the 2005 Outcome Document, i.e. achieve early reforms of the Security Council.

Mr. President, this is not an artificial timeline, if we only recall that the mandate under which we are discussing this subject was agreed to by us unanimously on the 60th anniversary of the UN. It was not an open ended mandate and it was not a contentious mandate. It was a clear call for 'early reforms'. The world has changed rapidly since 2005, and the Security Council has been called upon to address complicated issues of international peace and security without in any way benefiting from early reforms to make it more representative and effective. It is in this context, Mr Chairman, that we need to work towards the next significant milestone in our organization, which is the 70 th anniversary summit of 2015.

It is in this spirit that the G4 countries have reached out to all regional groups. We aim to find a path that will reflect the dominant call by Member States for a reform of the Security Council leading to an expansion in both categories of membership, permanent and non-permanent. In so doing, we have, together with our partners, pursued a constructive approach, calling for action - not only words, and for progress - not the status quo. We are encouraged by the broad and cross regional support that our efforts continue to enjoy.

Mr. President,

Against this background, it is even more important that this round of the IGN takes us a step forward by providing for a regular set of meetings, focussed on specific ideas contained in the PGA's non paper and aimed at achieving clear deliverables, which would help us in arriving at a consolidated 'membership driven' text. We also hope that you would be able to arrive at an assessment by the end of this round, on where the overwhelming body of opinion among member states lies on each of the options in each cluster and reflect the same in your concluding assessment.

From our side, as exhorted by the PGA in his letter of 2 December, the G4 countries are ready 'in a spirit of flexibility and accommodation' to arrive at a common ground on the issue of Security Council reform. We also encourage others to show the same spirit of 'flexibility and accommodation' that is required to engage in a text based negotiation process that deserves to be called so in content and not in name only.

The G4 stands ready and committed to playing its part in this process.

I thank you Mr. President.

708. Statement by Ambassador Asoke K. Mukerji, Permanent Representative at the Informal General Assembly Plenary Meeting of the Intergovernmental Negotiations on "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and other matters related to the Council" at United Nations General Assembly.

New York, December 16, 2013.

Mr. Chairman,

I have already addressed this meeting on behalf of the G4. In my national statement, I would like to align my delegation with the statement of the L.69 delivered by the distinguished Permanent Representative of Nicaragua, and express our full support for the statement delivered by the distinguished Permanent Representative of Guyana, on behalf of the CARICOM. These alignments demonstrate, Mr Chairman, India's mainstream position in these negotiations with a large number of like-minded developing countries from Asia-Pacific, Africa and Latin America, all of whom seek expansion in both categories of a reformed United Nations Security Council.

Like other speakers, Mr Chairman, my delegation is happy with your reappointment as the Chair of the Inter-Governmental Negotiations (IGN). India has never hesitated in expressing publicly our support for your valued professional stewardship of our proceedings.

My country, Mr Chairman, attaches high priority to our work. Speaking in the General Assembly in September this year, Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh said, and I quote:

"For multilateralism to remain relevant and effective in the future, multilateral institutions need to be reformed. The place to begin is right here. The UN Security Council must be reformed and restructured to reflect current political realities. More developing countries should be included as both permanent and non-permanent members."

Mr Chairman,

Let me with your permission proceed to outline some practical suggestions for your consideration on how to structure our future work in the months ahead. What we are about to suggest to you, Mr Chairman, given your "institutional memory" of chairing this long-drawn out process, may appear to be deja vu. You would recall that in March 2009, when we were engaged in the first round of these negotiations, you had proposed to give, and I quote "guidance to Member States on the path to decisive progress"¹. This is the same commitment that we are seeking of you, Mr Chairman, as we stand on the threshold of the tenth round of these negotiations today.

¹ A/63/960 dated 10 September 2009

First, we believe that all of us would benefit by your circulating a schedule of our meetings, preferably to be held at least once a month, from now till the end of the 68th General Assembly in September 2014, so that we can regain the momentum in our negotiations. In 2009, Mr Chairman, you had conducted our meetings by following a similarly circulated schedule.

Second, we would like you, Mr Chairman, to provide a framework for our activity, so that we can get down to our job of text-based negotiations in earnest. We agree with other member-states participating in these negotiations that such a framework document must be based on the views articulated by members during the previous nine rounds of our discussions on each of the five clusters of issues agreed to by all of us in Subsection (e)(ii) of General Assembly Decision 62/557.

Third, Mr Chairman, we find that the views of member-states has been summarized very objectively in the non-paper circulated by the distinguished President of our General Assembly (PGA), Ambassador John Ashe. The non-paper in fact follows the structure of the five broad clusters that was identified and accepted by all of us in GA Decision 62/557.

Mr Chairman,

We would like to convey, through you, our deep gratitude to the PGA for investing his time and energy to take the initiative of restoring the momentum of these intergovernmental negotiations by seeking, and I quote from his letter, "an instrument to assist in the organization of the IGN." That instrument, Mr Chairman, is the non-paper circulated to all of us by the PGA. In the process, the PGA has given you the authority and guidance to move forward this process, or "organize", the IGN.

In your letter to us, Mr Chairman, you have specifically asked us to speak at this meeting on, and I quote, "ways in which [members] can benefit from the Non Paper as a tool to lead us towards genuine give and take, which is essential to taking the process forward".

Whether we call it an "instrument" or a "tool", Mr Chairman, the non-paper deserves to be appreciated because of its status, its content, and its potential as a reference framework for our text-based negotiations.

First, Mr Chairman, its status. The non-paper has been circulated by the PGA, who has elected unanimously by all of us, and continues to enjoy our full trust and confidence. His initiative to constitute an Advisory Group was taken transparently, and within his powers as the President of the General Assembly. The terms of reference of his Advisory Group were reportedly drawn up in close interactive consultation with each of the six distinguished Permanent Representatives chosen by him, and contained amendments and suggestions made by them, including by our distinguished colleague who has attached a dissenting note to the non-paper.

As you will no doubt recall, Mr Chairman, there has been a precedent for such an initiative by the PGA in tackling the subject of early reform of the United Nations Security Council. Five "facilitators" had been appointed by the PGA during the 61st General Assembly. These five distinguished Permanent Representatives produced a report which guided Member-States in April 2007 towards a "framework for result-oriented negotiations". GA Decision 62/557 is a direct outcome of such an input.

Mr Chairman, the non-paper is a similar initiative by the PGA to motivate us to conclude this protracted inter-governmental negotiation.

The non-paper has been accepted and circulated by the PGA. It has his moral authority, and should not be ignored or dismissed as an irrelevant document. Especially so because both the PGA and you, Mr Chairman, have clarified that the non-paper does not have the status of a negotiation text. My delegation honours your clarifications, keeping in mind the authority and dignity of your offices.

That brings us, Mr Chairman, to the content of the non-paper. It is a summary of views expressed during the nine rounds of our negotiations so far. On the basis of a preliminary reading, we find that it is a sincere attempt by the Advisory Group, in their individual capacity, to reflect all the views that have been expressed in this process by participating Member-States so far.

The objectivity of the non-paper can be gauged by the fact that even those who have argued vigorously against the very existence of this non-paper would find their viewpoints reflected in it. Those among us who feel that the summary points of the nonpaper have not brought out the finer nuances of their actual views can, in fact, correct such perceived imperfections by participating in the text-based discussions which, we hope, Mr Chairman, you will initiate from our next meeting.

This leads us to give you our view on the potential of this non-paper. Mr Chairman, my delegation has always expressed full faith in your ability and impartiality in producing a negotiation text, based on the views of member-states you have heard over the past six years in these negotiations. Your own desire to do so, in your letter of 25 July 2012, has unfortunately been subjected to an apparent "veto" by some in this room.

In this context, Mr Chairman, the non-paper has the potential to bridge this crucial gap in our negotiating process. The framework provided by the non-paper can be placed, cluster by cluster, section by section, on the screens in this hall. As our Chairman, you could invite comments on each section from the floor, making it a member-driven process. The comments can be used to refine the language on the screen in an interactive manner, providing us with the outlines of a text-based negotiating process.

A first reading of the contents of the non-paper demonstrates that the substance of our respective positions is indeed reflected in the framework of the document. To illustrate, Section 1.a reflects the view supported by my delegation, including as a member of the G4 and L.69, and the position of many delegations from Asia-Pacific, Africa and Latin America, who have spoken on the need for expansion in both categories. Perhaps Section 1.d and 1.e would resonate among my distinguished colleagues from the Uniting for Consensus group! Section 2.1, we note is framed "in relation to enlargement", and therefore does not mention what is already contained in Article 27 of the Charter, which should allay the concern expressed by distinguished colleagues from some of the permanent members of the existing Council. This illustration, Mr Chairman, is meant to show how we see the potential of the non-paper. It is indeed, as the PGA and you have said, an "instrument" or a "tool" to move us to engaging in the give-and-take of negotiations.

After nine rounds and six years of chairing this process, it is clear to you Mr Chairman that there are differences of views among member-states on each of the five clusters. Therefore, there can never be any unanimous consensus on these clusters. However, we have a unanimous mandate for "early reform" of the UN Security Council. We must accordingly move to bridge the differences through the give-and-take of negotiations on the basis of the framework provided by the non-paper.

Such a transparent process would also enable you, Mr Chairman, to determine, as the Chair of our negotiations, where you can seek consensus, based on the views of the majority of participating Member-States in these negotiations.

Mr. Chairman,

There are some in the room who feel that by launching this process of negotiations, we are in fact trying to harvest the final outcome at the very beginning of this process in a non-negotiated manner. This is not the case.

We, for one, are fully cognizant that the final outcome of our negotiations will come only from what we have always termed the "give-and-take" of our interaction. We are aware that all member-states willing to take on the additional responsibilities and obligations from participation as permanent and non-permanent members of an expanded Security Council will have to campaign, and be elected, on their individual merits under the procedures of the UN Charter.

Mr. Chairman,

Before I conclude, I would like to draw your attention to the dramatic attention the issue of UN Security Council reform has received internationally during recent weeks. This attention has come because, it has been asserted, that all the efforts made by us in recent years

"did not result in reaching the reforms required to be made to enable the Security Council to regain its desired role in the service of the issues of peace and security in the world."²

This assertion must act as a wake-up call for all of us engaged in these negotiations. Otherwise, the malfunctioning heart of the multilateral system designed for the maintenance of international peace and security, which is the UN Security Council, will be damaged beyond repair.

We therefore call on you, Mr Chairman, to use your position and your mandate to act now, and set us on the path of actual negotiations from our next meeting itself.

709. Statement by Ambassador Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Permanent Representative in the special meeting of the General Assembly dedicated to the life and memory of His Excellency Nelson Mandela.

New York, December 19, 2013.

Mr. President,

Thank you for convening this special meeting of the General Assembly dedicated to the life and memory of former President, Dr. Nelson Mandela.

At the outset, let me join others in paying homage to a visionary, a venerated elder and a great soul. As described by my Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, Dr. Mandela was a "giant among men". He was the epitome of forgiveness, compassion and humaneness that inspired all of mankind. He dedicated his life to values of peace, pluralism, justice, equality and dignity which are also embodied in the United Nations Charter.

Mr. President,

The passing away of Dr. Mandela is as much a loss to India and the world as it is to South Africa. The world has lost an apostle of peace and non-violence. We pray for eternal peace for the departed soul.

Mr. President,

We, in India, have long admired him - and all that he stood for - and we will always cherish his friendship and love for our people. The outpouring of intense grief and sadness across India reflects the high degree of love and respect which Dr. Mandela commanded in my country. We observed state mourning for five days in India as a mark of respect to him. The President of India, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee who participated in the Memorial Service in his honour was accompanied by a delegation representing the cross-section of our political spectrum.

Nelson Mandela was a household name and someone, we saw as one of our own. His life was a living example of human strength and courage in the face of brute force and gross injustice. He was the last of the giants who led the world's struggles against colonialism. Indeed, his life and struggles - which represented 'hope' for people in South Africa and all over the world, reminds us of the principles that the father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi, stood for. His stoic determination, patience and magnanimity reminded us, in India, of the revolutionary methods of Mahatma Gandhi. It also mirrored our own hope for a better world. It was, therefore, an honour for India to confer upon Madiba our highest civilian award, the Bharat Ratna when he visited India in 1990.

Mr. President,

It is matter of great honour and pride for us that upon his release from prison, Nelson Mandela chose India as the first country to visit. Speaking at a banquet hosted by then-President of India, Madiba said of India,

"The indentured labourers also served to establish an umbilical cord that ties together the peoples of our respective countries. As much as India is a part of our country, so are we too a part of India. History has condemned us to seek each other out, to deal with each other as members of the same family.

It is that history which makes it possible for each one of us to claim the immortal Mahatma Gandhi as our national hero.

In 1995, when he again visited India as the first President of post apartheid Africa, Mandela visited Gandhiji's Sabarmati Ashram and said that it was for him a homecoming, a pilgrimage.

Mandela often acknowledged the influence of Mahatma Gandhi and the first Prime Minister of India, Jawarharlal Nehru on his own thought process. During his visit to India, remembering Nehru, he said:

"Panditji taught that narrow forms of nationalism, intense and powerful as they may be in awakening people to struggle, are inadequate as a basis for achieving victory or for lasting peace. Our experience has shown us the truth of this lesson that exclusiveness must give way to co-operation and inter-dependence. It is a lesson forged in struggle and inscribed in the rapidly changing world order..."

Mr. President,

We have no doubt that the world will honour the historic legacy of Madiba, one of the most influential personalities of our century, who taught the world the true meaning of forgiveness and reconciliation.

Thank you

