14. Hon'ble Members of Parliament would recall that the Government voted in favour of a Resolution entitled 'Promotion, Reconciliation and Accountability in Sri Lanka' tabled by the United States at the UN Human Rights Council (UNHRC) in Geneva in March 2012. I would like to inform the august House that we understand that a follow up procedural Resolution on Sri Lanka is likely to be proposed by USA for consideration at the forthcoming session of the UNHRC in Geneva in March 2013. At this juncture, we would encourage the United States and Sri Lanka to directly engage on the draft resolution and aim for a mutually acceptable outcome. Needless to add, our decision on a potential resolution in the forthcoming meeting of the Human Rights Council will await the outcome of these efforts and would depend on the substance of the resolution finally tabled. Government will continue to remain engaged with the Government of Sri Lanka to advance its objective, namely, the achievement of a future for the Tamil community in Sri Lanka marked by equality, dignity, justice and self-respect.

Hon'ble Chairman,

15. Some Members have expressed concern over incidents of attack and apprehension of India fishermen by the Sri Lankan Navy in waters between India and Sri Lanka. Allow me to reiterate, at the outset, that the welfare, safety and security of our fishermen have always received the highest priority by Government.
16. In response to reports of incidents of attacks on Indian fishermen, the Government, through diplomatic channels, immediately takes up the matter of their expeditious release and repatriation with the Sri Lankan authorities. As a result of these efforts, presently, there are no Indian fishermen in Sri Lankan custody on fisheries related charges. However, some Indian nationals have been arrested in Sri Lankan waters on charges of smuggling narcotics and contraband. These include the five fishermen detained on 29 November 2011. Officials from our High Commission in Colombo and Consulate in Jaffna are in regular touch with the detained Indian nationals and are extending all possible consular assistance to them.
17. During my meeting with the External Affairs Minister of Sri Lanka on the sidelines of the Indian Ocean Rim - Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) Council of Ministers Meeting in November 2012 and the India Sri Lanka Joint Commission Meeting in January 2013, I reiterated our position that the use of force could not be justified under any circumstances and that all fishermen should be treated in a humane manner.
18. At the same time, the need for creating greater awareness among our fishermen to avoid crossing over into Sri Lankan waters for their own safety and security has been felt. We remain engaged with the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure that fishermen on both sides can continue to pursue their livelihood in a safe, secure and sustainable manner.

Hon'ble Chairman,

19. On the occasion of the 8th India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission Meeting in New Delhi in January 2013, I highlighted the need for continued dialogue between the Government of Sri Lanka and the representatives of the Sri Lankan Tamil community and expressed the hope that there would be early progress on meaningful devolution building upon the 13th Amendment and leading to national reconciliation.

20. The Government remains engaged with Government of Sri Lanka to take forward the process of national reconciliation, and in a spirit of partnership, to arrive at a solution that meets substantially the aspiration of the Tamil community for equality, justice, peace and dignity.

Thank you

221. Suo-Moto Statement by External Affairs Minister in Lok Sabha on the apprehension of Indian Fishermen by Sri Lankan Navy.

New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Madam Speaker,

I notice that concern has been expressed by some Members of the House on the recent incidents of attack and apprehension of Indian fishermen by the Sri Lankan Navy in waters between India and Sri Lanka.

At the outset, I would like to reiterate that the Government attaches the highest priority to the welfare, safety and security of our fishermen. I would like to apprise this August House on the steps taken by the Government with regard to recent incidents involving Indian fishermen.

On 3 March 2013, 16 Indian fishermen with three boats were apprehended by the Sri Lanka Navy. On 04 March 2013, they were remanded to judicial custody for 14 days on charges of fishing in Sri Lankan waters. We had immediately taken up the matter with the Sri Lankan Government seeking their immediate release and repatriation. Our Mission officials secured consular access and were in constant touch with these fishermen to ensure their safety and well being. Pursuant to our efforts they were released on 11 March 2013. Our High Commission in Sri Lanka arranged for their safe custody, 330 litres of diesel for boats and in coordination with the Indian Coast Guards arranged their safe return to India on March 12, 2013.

An incident of firing on Indian fishermen allegedly by the Sri Lankan Navy was reported in the early hours of 07 March 2013 in which one Indian fisherman was injured. We had, through diplomatic channels, lodged a strong protest with the Sri Lankan Government the same day. The Sri Lankan Navy has, however, denied having fired at any fishing craft.

According to available information 19 Indian fishermen with 04 boats were apprehended by the Sri Lankan Navy at 2030 hrs on 13 March 2013; and 34 Indian Fishermen with five fishing boats were apprehended at 0530 hrs earlier today. Officials from the Consulate General in Jaffna have sought consular access to these fishermen.

In the absence of Sri Lankan High Commissioner to India (who is out of New Delhi), the Sri Lankan Deputy High Commissioner to India was called in today and a strong protest was lodged at these incidents of apprehensions of Indian fishermen. We have called for immediate release and repatriation of the apprehended Indian fishermen. We have emphasized on the need for the Sri Lankan Navy to exercise restraint, extend humane treatment and not to resort to violence under any circumstances.

We are also aware of the case of some Indian nationals have been arrested in Sri Lankan waters on charges of smuggling narcotics and contraband. These include the five fishermen detained on 29 November 2011. Officials from our High Commission in Colombo and Consulate in Jaffna are in regular touch with the detained Indian nationals and are extending all possible consular assistance to them.

I would like to reiterate that we remain engaged with the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure that the fishermen on both sides can continue to pursue their livelihood in a safe, secure and sustainable manner.

222. External Affairs Minister's Statement in Rajya Sabha on Agitation by Students in Tamil Nadu.

New Delhi, March 15, 2013.

"We have had a discussion in the House earlier and anxieties have been expressed because students' bodies of various colleges and universities in Tamil Nadu are in the streets agitating over the Sri Lankan issue. I want to share with the House that the process for deciding on the Resolution, which is a procedural Resolution, a follow-up on the last year's Resolution, is now underway. We are engaging all other Member-countries. We are, absolutely, committed to what we tried to do last year which was to ensure that there must be accountability, there must be fair participation, there must be sanctions which must be imposed, where they are to be found after adjudication, and a life of dignity and a life of equality must be ensured to all the Tamil citizens of Sri Lanka. This was the objective of supporting the Resolution last year. The objective remains important, and we are constantly in pursuit of that objective. Whatever steps are necessary towards the pursuit of that objective, they will be taken by the Government of India. We are in the process of finalizing our position and posture. We are in touch with all other stakeholders. And as soon as the final view is taken, we will come back to the House and we will inform the House of the latest position.

I share the sentiment of the Hon'ble Member and the investigation must be impartial, transparent and independent. This is something that has been reiterated repeatedly, and we remain committed to this objective."

223. Statement on recent incidents involving Sri Lankans in Tamil Nadu.

New Delhi, March 19, 2013.

In response to questions, the official spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs stated:

“We have noted with concern recent incidents involving Sri Lankan citizens, especially monks, in Tamil Nadu. The state government of Tamil Nadu has taken immediate action to identify and prosecute the miscreants, in respect of the recent incidents. The Government of India, in consultation with the concerned state governments, has taken and will continue to take all measures to ensure the safety, security and well-being of Sri Lankan visitors to India, including to Tamil Nadu.”

224. Intervention in the United Nations Human Rights Council under Agenda Item: 2 on the Resolution on Promoting Reconciliation and Accountability in Sri Lanka.

Geneva, March 21, 2013.

Mr. President,

Allow me to make a few remarks on the resolution under discussion “Promoting Reconciliation and Accountability in Sri Lanka”.

India believes that the report of the LLRC and its findings and recommendation provides a window of opportunity to forge a consensual way forward towards a lasting political settlement through genuine national reconciliation and the full enjoyment of human rights by all its citizens. We note with concern the inadequate progress by Sri Lanka in fulfilling its commitment to this Council in 2009. Further, we call on Sri Lanka to move forward on its public commitments, including on the devolution of political authority through full implementation of the 13th Amendment and building upon it.

India has always been of the view that the end of the conflict in Sri Lanka provided a unique opportunity to pursue a lasting political settlement, acceptable to all communities in Sri Lanka, including the Tamils. We call for effective and timely implementation of all the constructive recommendations contained in the LLRC report, including those pertaining to missing persons, detainees, disappearances and abductions, reduction of 'high security zones', return of private lands by the military and withdrawal of the security forces from the civilian domain in the Northern Province. We reiterate our call for an independent and credible investigation into allegations of human rights violations and loss of civilian lives. We urge Sri Lanka to take forward measures to ensure accountability. We expect these measures to be to the satisfaction of the international community.

As Sri Lanka's closest neighbour, India remains engaged in a substantial way in the relief, resettlement, rehabilitation and reconstruction process in that country. Our efforts have contributed to the resettlement of Internally Displaced Persons and the rebuilding of infrastructure and development, especially in the Northern and the Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka.

While noting the commitment of Sri Lanka to hold elections to the Northern Provincial Council in September 2013, it is our expectation that the people of the province can exercise their democratic rights freely and without delay as guaranteed to them by the Sri Lankan Constitution.

We note the invitation extended by Sri Lanka to the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and urge her to undertake the visit at an early date. We hope that the Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights and UN Special Procedures continue their engagement in accordance with their mandate.

We encourage the Government of Sri Lanka to expedite the process of a broad-based, inclusive and meaningful reconciliation and political settlement that ensures that all communities live in dignity with equal rights and equal protection of the laws. As a neighbour with thousands of years of relations with Sri Lanka, we cannot remain untouched by developments in that country and will continue to remain engaged in this matter.

225. Information supplied by the Ministry of Defence to Lok Sabha in reply to a question on the attacks on Indian fishermen by the Sri Lanka Navy.

New Delhi, April 22, 2013.

From time to time there are reports of incidents of attack on Indian fishermen, allegedly by the Sri Lankan Navy. Government has been consistently taking up such issues with the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure that the Sri Lankan Navy acts with restraint and our fishermen found near International Maritime Boundary Line (IMBL) are treated in a humane manner. In order to avoid recurrence of incidents involving our fishermen and keeping in mind the humanitarian and livelihood dimensions of fishermen issues, Government has reached an understanding with the Government of Sri Lanka in October, 2008, to put in place practical arrangements to deal with bonafide Indian and Sri Lankan fishermen crossing the International Maritime Boundary Line (IMBL). As part of these arrangements, it has been agreed that there would be no firing on Indian fishing vessels and that Indian fishing vessels would not enter the sensitive areas designated by the Government of Sri Lanka along its coastline. Following are the details of the number of fishermen died, captured and imprisoned in Sri Lanka during the last three years:

2011	02	203*
2013	Nil	125 (till date)

* 10 Indian nationals including 05 fishermen arrested in November 2011, are in custody on charges of smuggling narcotics and contraband.

Indian Coast Guard provides assistance to Indian fishermen at sea while they are in distress through regular patrolling. It also conducts Community Interactions Programmes to educate fishermen among other issues, on the perils of cross border fishing. Under operation Tasha', Indian Navy and Coast Guard ships are deployed continuously (24X7) in Palk Bay area to prevent any illegal activities and also to protect the fishermen from any attacks, while they are fishing in Indian waters.

226. Response of official Spokesperson to a question on the visit of delegation from Tamil National Alliance (TNA), Sri Lanka to India.

New Delhi, June 18, 2013.

“ A six-member delegation of the Tamil National Alliance (TNA), Sri Lanka is visiting India from 16-19 June 2013. The delegation is led by Mr. R. Sampanthan, MP, and consists of Mr. Mavai S. Senathirajah, (MP), Mr. K. (Suresh) Premachandran (MP), Mr. P. Selvarajah (MP), Mr. Selvam Adaikkalanathan (MP) and Mr. M.A. Sumanthiran (MP). A TNA delegation had also visited India in October 2012.

The TNA delegation called on the Prime Minister today. They had earlier called on the External Affairs Minister and the National Security Adviser.

The Prime Minister conveyed to the TNA delegation that he was dismayed by reports suggesting that the Government of Sri Lanka planned to dilute certain key provisions of the 13th Amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution ahead of elections to the Northern Provincial Council. It was noted that the proposed changes raised doubts about the commitments made by the Sri Lankan Government to India and the international community, including the United Nations, on a political settlement in Sri Lanka that would go beyond the 13th Amendment. The changes would also be incompatible with the recommendation of the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission (LLRC), set up by the Government of

* Later on July 4 Prime Minister in a letter replying to the Tamilnadu Chief Minister J.Jayalalithaa informed her that there was no change in India's stand on the issue of reconciliation and devolution of political powers to ethnic Tamils in Sri Lanka, and New Delhi would work towards ensuring that Tamils are “masters of their own destiny within framework of a united Sri Lanka”. “We have long advocated the creation of an environment in Sri Lanka in which all communities, particularly the Sri Lankan Tamils, are masters of their own destiny within the framework of a united Sri Lanka. We will continue to work towards this end”. Ms. Jayalalitha had written to the Prime Minister strongly urging New Delhi to pressure the Sri Lankan Government not to take any steps to repeal or dilute the 13th Amendment of the Sri Lankan Constitution in any manner. It may be recalled that the 13th Amendment is part of the 1987 Indo-Lanka accord which seeks to give more powers to the provinces. There are reports that the Lankan government wants to repeal it despite India's concerns. Ms. Jayalalithaa had called upon the Centre to take a decisive and bold stand in support of the Tamils, besides asking India to ensure that the process of democratic decentralisation was in no way jeopardised.

Sri Lanka, calling for a political settlement based on the devolution of power to the provinces.

The Prime Minister stated that he was deeply concerned about the welfare and wellbeing of the Tamil community in Sri Lanka. He stressed on the expectation that the Sri Lankan Tamil community would lead a life of dignity, as equal citizens, and reiterated that India would make every effort to ensure the achievement of a future for the community marked by equality, justice and self-respect.”

227. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of National Security Adviser to Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, July 9, 2013.

Mr. Shivshankar Menon, National Security Adviser of India, visited Colombo on 8-9 July 2013 to participate in the 2nd NSA-Level Meeting on Trilateral Cooperation on Maritime Security between India, Sri Lanka and the Maldives.

Governments of India, Sri Lanka and Maldives have been engaged in trilateral discussions to address the common maritime challenges in the Indian Ocean region. Following the meeting on 8 July, the three-side agreed on a roadmap for future cooperation in maritime security. In this context, they signed an Outcome Document outlining further collaborative measures in the areas of inter alia Maritime Domain Awareness (MDA); strengthening coordination of maritime Search and Rescue (SAR); promoting marine oil pollution response cooperation; expanding 'DOSTI' (friendship) exercises; sharing of information on illegal maritime activities; and piracy. The text of the Outcome Document is enclosed.

The next NSA-Level Meeting on Trilateral Cooperation on Maritime Security between India, Sri Lanka and the Maldives will take place in New Delhi at a mutually convenient time.

During his visit, the National Security Adviser called on H. E. the President of Sri Lanka and also held bilateral meetings with Minister for Economic Development Mr. Basil Rajapaksa and Defence Secretary

Mr. Gotabaya Rajapaksa of Sri Lanka. In these meetings, both sides reviewed the progress in bilateral cooperation and exchanged views on areas of common concern. They expressed satisfaction on the progress in implementation of the Indian-assisted projects for relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of IDPs, including the Housing Project, as well as projects relating to the development of railway infrastructure in the Northern and Southern Provinces. They also discussed the fishermen issue and agreed on the need to deal with it in a humane manner without resorting to violence under any circumstances. They agreed that fishermen's associations on both sides, which had met in the past and reached some understandings, needed to meet again to work on developing this further. This could then serve as the basis for finding a solution to this humanitarian issue.

The National Security Adviser conveyed to the Sri Lankan leadership the Government of India's views on the recent political developments and called for early political settlement and national reconciliation through the meaningful devolution of power so to ensure that all citizens of Sri Lanka, including the Sri Lankan Tamil community, would lead a life marked by equality, justice, dignity and self-respect. In this context, he also emphasized the need for adhering to the commitments made by the Sri Lankan Government to India and the International Community on a political settlement in Sri Lanka that would go beyond the 13th Amendment. He also expressed the hope that elections to the Northern Provincial Council would be held in a free, fair and credible manner.

The National Security Adviser also met with other political leaders, including Leader of the Opposition and Chairperson of UNP Mr. Ranil Wikremesinghe, Chairperson of SLMC and Minister of Justice Mr. Rauff Hakeem, and a delegation of Tamil National Alliance led by Mr. R. Sampanthan.

228. Outcome Document of the Second NSA-Level Meeting on Trilateral Cooperation on Maritime Security between India, the Maldives and Sri Lanka.

Colombo, July 9, 2013

1. The Second NSA-level Meeting on Trilateral Cooperation on Maritime Security between India, the Maldives and Sri Lanka (hereinafter referred to as the 'Trilateral Meeting') took place in Colombo on 8, July 2013. The Indian side was led by H E Shivshankar Menon, National Security Advisor to the Prime Minister, Republic of India, the Maldivian side by Hon Mohamed Nazim, Minister of Defence and National Security of the Republic of Maldives and the Sri Lanka side by Mr Gotabaya Rajapaksa, Secretary, Ministry of Defence and Urban Development of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka (hereinafter referred to as the 'three sides').
2. Following the First NSA-level Trilateral Meeting in Male on 1 October 2011, four meetings were held at the senior official and technical level between the three sides. This preparatory work has been useful in framing the outcomes of the Second NSA-level Trilateral Meeting.
3. During the Second NSA-level Trilateral Meeting, the three sides discussed a wide range of topics including enhancing cooperation in Maritime Domain Awareness (MDA) through provision of Long Range Identification and Tracking (LRIT) services, MDA training and Merchant Ship Information System (MSIS) software by India, sharing of Automatic Identification System (AIS) data; strengthening coordination of maritime Search and Rescue (SAR) including SAR training; promoting marine oil pollution response cooperation; expanding bilateral 'DOSTI' (friendship) exercises through holding of table top exercises; further enhancing sharing of the information on illegal maritime activities through existing points of contact; and forming a trilateral sub-group focused on policy and legal issues related to piracy. The roadmap for future cooperation in all these areas was confirmed and is outlined below:

- I. obtain the facility of the Indian Long Range Identification and Tracking (LRIT) Data Centre by Sri Lanka and Maldives in order to monitor and track Maldives and Sri Lanka flagged merchant vessels owned by them. Sri Lanka and Maldives are to provide required details as per International Maritime Organisation (IMO) regulations through diplomatic channels;
- II. utilisation of the Merchant Ship Information System (MSIS) for exchange of unclassified information on white shipping;
- III. sharing Automatic Identification System (AIS) data in a trilateral format over the MSIS platform;
- IV. undertaking Maritime Domain Awareness (MDA) training in India;
- V. strengthening maritime linkages in the field of Search and Rescue (SAR) including through SAR operations, providing expertise and technical assistance by India in setting up Maritime Rescue Coordination Centres (MRCCs) in Sri Lanka and Maldives, coordination in relaying and receiving distress alerts and safety messages, and, conduct of SAR training in India;
- VI. strengthening mechanisms for Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) surveillance and providing additional support and assets on a case by case basis;
- VII. maintaining lines of communication on illegal maritime activities between identified Points of Contact and exchanging messages on a regular basis;
- VIII. strengthening marine pollution response cooperation through conduct of IMO Level I and Level II courses in India, formulating Contingency Plans for pollution response, capacity building, and participating in India's National Pollution Response Exercise (NATPOLREX), as observers;

- IX. strengthening the biennial trilateral exercise 'DOSTI' by conducting table top exercises and seminars on maritime issues in every alternate year;
- X. passing Tsunami warnings simultaneously to agreed Points of Contact in addition to the designated National Tsunami Warning Centres;
- XI. setting up a trilateral sub-group focused on legal and policy issues related to piracy.

The three sides agreed that in the current maritime security environment in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR), it was important to raise the level of maritime cooperation between India, the Maldives and Sri Lanka. In this context, it was also agreed to explore the possibility of expanding the scope of the trilateral initiative to include other Indian Ocean littoral countries.

The three sides agreed that the Third NSA-level Trilateral Meeting will be convened at a mutually convenient date in 2014 to review the progress made in implementing the areas of cooperation agreed upon as well as identifying new areas of cooperation. They also agreed that prior to the Third NSA-level Trilateral Meeting, the Working Group would meet to implement the consensus and decisions agreed to by the three sides at the Second NSA-level Trilateral Meeting.

229. Extract relevant to Nuclear cooperation between India and Sri Lanka from the Media briefing by Official Spokesperson.

Q: Yesterday the Hindustan Times ran a report saying that Sri Lanka was offered a comprehensive nuclear pact by India and one round of negotiations has taken place, but there has not been a comeback from Colombo since then, and the report suggests that they are looking at a similar kind of agreement from Pakistan. Are you in a position to say anything about that?

Official Spokesperson: I can certainly tell about our nuclear cooperation pact or discussions with Sri Lanka. I do not know about any other aspect. But the point is, our approach to this entire issue is in terms of nuclear safety, and nuclear safety is not exclusive, it is an inclusive concept. Therefore, if there are agreements between a country and another country on nuclear safety issues, it is all to the good. As far as our agreement is there, it is on the table, there have been discussions with Sri Lanka on this.

Let me also tell you that nuclear is a sophisticated technology which requires enormous infrastructure. This sort of starting from scratch and then going up to speed on nuclear takes in several places at least a decade. So, we will have to understand that the sort of things that a nuclear arrangement entails are not only in terms of cooperation in physical terms but also legal issues. It also means training. It means understanding of global legal norms, liability, etc. So, it comes with the paraphernalia which is fairly comprehensive. It requires immense cooperation globally. Ultimately the nuclear value chain is global in nature. Therefore, any country which endeavours to move on the nuclear path does cooperate with a variety of suppliers and those who can assist and cooperate in that endeavour. So, we need to understand this in that broader paradigm rather than in terms of a competitive arrangement of any sort. These are not exclusive arrangements that any one country has with the other.

Q: Is there any update on the Pakistani response to the calendar for the resumption of the dialogue?

Official Spokesperson: My understanding is that when the Special Envoy of the Pakistani Prime Minister, Mr. Shahryar Khan, came here, we exchanged views. He has gone back with an understanding of our views on this. And we will now take it up when we receive a response from Pakistan on that. As you are aware, the third round of the resumed dialogue started sometime in September with the meeting of the Commerce Secretaries. Another meeting was scheduled I think for the Wular Barrage; that did not happen. That is the meeting which needs to be taken forward along with various other meetings in the resumed dialogue format. We are in discussions through diplomatic channels for those.

230. Government of India Statement on release of Fishermen.
New Delhi, August 7, 2013.

From time to time, Government receives reports of apprehension of Indian fishermen by our neighbouring countries for alleged violations of their territorial waters.

As on date there are 437 fishermen believed to be Indian in Pakistan's custody belonging to Andhra Pradesh (2 persons), Bihar (2 persons), Dadar & Nagar Haveli (3 persons), Daman & Diu (17 persons), Gujarat (391 persons), Maharashtra (17 persons), Uttar Pradesh (4 persons) and West Bengal (1 person). Pakistan authorities have provided Consular Access to all 437 fishermen; nationality status has been confirmed for 378 fishermen for whom official requests for early release and repatriation have been made. There are also over 740 Indian fishing boats in the custody of Pakistani, but no boats have been returned in the last five years.

As per available information there are presently, 114 Indian fishermen, along with 21 vessels in the custody of Sri Lanka. There are no Indian fishermen in the custody of Bangladesh.

Government attaches the highest priority to the safety, security and welfare of Indian fishermen. Government has been consistently taking up the issue concerning the release of all Indian fishermen and their boats in Pakistani custody with the Government of Pakistan at all appropriate levels. Our High Commission in Islamabad is in regular touch with the concerned Pakistani authorities for securing immediate Consular Access (CA) when any information is received about arrest of an Indian fisherman. Concerned Pakistani authorities are also reminded regularly for release of all fishermen who have completed their prison terms. Necessary travel documents are provided promptly by the High Commission to facilitate repatriation of fisherman as and when they are released by Pakistan authorities.

As soon as reports of apprehensions of Indian fishermen are received Government through diplomatic channels, immediately and consistently takes up the matter with the Government of Sri Lanka to secure an early release and repatriation of apprehended Indian fishermen.

The Ministry of Agriculture (Department of Animal Husbandry, Dairying & Fisheries) is the nodal agency for payment of compensation to the fishermen lodged in Pakistani jails and the scheme –“Soft Loan Package for Replacement of Fishing vessels held in captivity in Pakistan” is being implemented by Marine Products Export Development Authority (MPEDA). The Minister of External Affairs Shri Salman Khurshid gave this information in a statement in Lok Sabha today.

231. Statement in Rajya Sabha by Salman Khurshid Minister of External Affairs regarding "Repeated Attacks on Indian fishermen by Sri Lankan Navy".

New Delhi, August 22, 2013.

(Statement in Rajya Sabha by Shri Salman Khurshid, Minister of External Affairs, in response to Calling Attention Notice tabled by Dr. V. Maitreyan, MP, Rajya Sabha and others regarding "Repeated Attacks on Indian fishermen by Sri Lankan Navy")

"I rise to respond to the House on the Calling Attention Notice regarding the "Repeated Attacks on Indian fishermen by Sri Lankan Navy".

At the outset, I would like to reiterate to this august House that the Government attaches the highest importance to the safety, security and welfare of Indian fishermen.

In response to reports of incidents of attacks on Indian fishermen, the Government, through diplomatic channels, immediately takes up the matter issues relating to incidents of firing on or apprehension of our fishermen with the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure that the Sri Lankan Navy acts with restraint and our fishermen are treated in a humane and pragmatic manner.

Hon'ble Members would recall that to avoid recurrence of incidents involving our fishermen and keeping in mind the humanitarian and livelihood dimensions of the fishermen's issue, the Government had reached an understanding through a Joint Statement with the Sri Lankan Government on 26th October 2008 to put in place practical arrangements to deal with bonafide Indian and Sri Lankan fishermen crossing the International Maritime Boundary Line. As part of these practical arrangements, it was agreed that there would be no firing on Indian fishing vessels and Indian fishing vessels would not tread into sensitive areas designated by the Government of Sri Lanka along its coastline.

Following the October 2008 understanding, the incidents of attack and apprehension of Indian fishermen by Sri Lankan authorities have come down. The Sri Lankan side has, however, denied the involvement of their Navy in any incidents of harassment or intimidation or attack of Indian fishermen and has stated that none of the alleged attacks have taken place in Indian waters.

Hon'ble Chairman,

I would like to inform this August House that at the 4th meeting of the India-Sri Lanka Joint Working Group on Fisheries, held from 13-14 January 2012 in Colombo, both sides reiterated the highest priority accorded by their respective Governments to the well being, safety and security of fishermen from the two countries. Both countries agreed that the use of force could not be justified under any circumstances, and reiterated in this regard the importance of extending humane treatment to all fishermen. Acknowledging that fisheries involved the socio-economic and livelihood dimensions of the fishermen living in coastal areas in India and Sri Lanka, the two sides agreed to enhance cooperation that would allow both countries to pursue their fishing activity in a safe, secure and sustainable manner. They also discussed measures for the expeditious release of bonafide fishermen from both countries. It was also agreed to hold meeting of the fishermen communities from the two countries at an early date.

I would like to inform this august House that during my meeting with External Affairs Minister of Sri Lanka on 19 August, 2013, I have strongly taken up the issue of expeditious release of fishermen. During my meeting with the External Affairs Minister of Sri Lanka on the sidelines of the 12th meeting of the Indian Ocean Rim- Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) Council of Ministers on 2 November 2012, both sides agreed that the use of force could not be justified under any circumstances and reiterated in this regard the importance of continuing to extend humane treatment to all fishermen. During the 8th India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission Meeting, it was noted that both sides are committed to decrease incidents pertaining to fishing on the International Maritime Boundary Line (IMBL). The matter has also been raised with the Sri Lankan Government during NSA's visit to Sri Lanka on July 8-9, 2013.

The Sri Lankan High Commissioner was issued a demarche by the Ministry of External Affairs for the expeditious release of Indian fishermen in the custody of Sri Lanka on 7 August, 2013.

The need for creating greater awareness among our fishermen to avoid crossing over into Sri Lankan waters for their own safety and security has been felt. In this context, the Government is working with the concerned State Governments on the need to sensitize Indian fishermen to respect the International Maritime Boundary Line. The Government has also requested the Government of Tamil Nadu to finalise the dates for a proposed meeting of the representatives of Fishermen's Associations from India and Sri Lanka at the earliest.

Government continues to remain engaged with the Government of Sri Lanka to ensure that fishermen on both sides can continue to pursue their livelihood in a safe, secure and sustainable manner.”

232. Gocverment of India Statement on the elections to the Northern Provincial Elections in Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, September 24, 2013.

The Government of India welcomes the successful culmination of elections to three Provincial Councils, including the Northern Provincial Council, on September 21, 2013. The high voter turnout and the enthusiastic participation of various political parties demonstrate the continuing commitment of the people of Sri Lanka to democratic values and elections for representative bodies at various levels, including the Provincial Councils. We have taken note of the observations made by election observers from the Forum of South Asian Election Management Bodies and also the Commonwealth. Overall, it has been acknowledged that the will of the people has been reflected at these elections.

2. The Government of Sri Lanka has honoured its commitment to the international community to hold elections to the Northern Provincial Council. We look forward to the implementation by Government of Sri Lanka of other important commitments made to the international community, including the full implementation of the 13th Amendment and going beyond it.
3. We have noted the positive statements made by the TNA and the Government of Sri Lanka. It is indeed a matter of satisfaction that they have expressed willingness to work with each other for the progress of the people of the Northern Province. We would urge both sides to engage constructively, in a spirit of partnership and mutual accommodation, so that the urgent needs of the people of the Northern Province, which has recently emerged from the throes of a thirty-year long armed conflict, are addressed with a sense of urgency and purpose. Only such a cooperative approach will pave the way for genuine reconciliation between the communities involved.

4. The Government of India is committed to working with both the sides to further this process, so that all communities in Sri Lanka, including the minorities, can feel that they are equal stakeholders in a united Sri Lanka and can look forward to a future marked by equality, justice, dignity and self-respect.

233. Media Statement by External Affairs Minister and Joint Media Interaction with the Sri Lankan Foreign Minister.

Colombo, October 7, 2013.

Hon'ble Prof. G.L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs,
Distinguished Representatives of the Media,

1. I am pleased to be in Sri Lanka, which we consider India's closest neighbour, and with whom we share a relationship that goes back to the very beginning of recorded history in the subcontinent. At the outset, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to Hon'ble Minister Prof. Peiris and the Sri Lankan Government for the warm hospitality extended to me and to my delegation.
2. This afternoon, I had excellent discussions with my host and friend Prof. G. L. Peiris on all issues of bilateral, regional and international concern. We had the opportunity to review progress in various areas, including trade, investment, development cooperation, culture and education.

3. We looked at the progress made in implementation of the Indian assisted projects for IDPs, particularly the Housing Project, as well as projects relating to the development of railway infrastructure in the North and the South. We also discussed the fishermen's issue and agreed on the need to deal with it in a humane manner without resorting to violence under any circumstances. In this regard, we agreed to encourage fishermen's associations on both sides, which had met in the past and reached some understandings, to meet again to work on developing this further.
4. I am happy to note that our development cooperation projects, including the housing and railway projects, are progressing well and are expected to be completed on schedule. As you are aware, our development assistance projects are entirely based on the priorities set by the government and the people of Sri Lanka. The main themes are connectivity, housing, health, education, livelihood restoration and economic revival.
5. Minister Peiris and I will be witnessing signing of agreements (8 agreements) relating to the Sampur Thermal Power Project and an MoU for Technical Assistance in support of the 10-year National Plan for a Trilingual Sri Lanka at the Presidential Secretariat soon after this media interaction. With the conclusion of the Sampur project related agreements today, we hope we will be able to commence work on the ground and pick up pace for completion by 2016, as agreed earlier. I am also hopeful that, through the MoU for implementation of the Trilingual Plan, we will be able to contribute to this important initiative, thereby aiding national reconciliation and promoting harmony between the various linguistic communities in Sri Lanka.
6. I am happy that our bilateral trade in goods has expanded significantly in recent years, to reach the USD 5 billion mark. I am also happy to note the significant contribution of India in the area of investments and tourist arrivals. To sustain this positive momentum in our trade and economic relations and take it to the next level, I feel it will be important to finalize a more comprehensive framework of economic cooperation.

7. I would be calling on His Excellency President Mahinda Rajapaksa tomorrow morning. Later, I would be visiting Jaffna to review our development assistance projects. I will also be meeting the Governor and the Chief Minister of Northern Provincial Council.
8. We hope that successful culmination of elections to the Northern Province will usher a new beginning towards a better future for the people in the North. India has been consistent in calling for an early political settlement and national reconciliation through meaningful devolution of powers, so to ensure that all citizens of Sri Lanka, including the Sri Lankan Tamil community, would lead a life marked by equality, justice, dignity and self-respect.
9. India is committed to the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka. It is our hope that the vision and leadership that resulted in an end to armed conflict and holding of elections to the Northern Province, will now be employed to work for genuine reconciliation. The Government of Sri Lanka has on many occasions conveyed to us and to the international community, its commitment to move towards a political settlement based on the full implementation of the 13th Amendment, and building on it. We look forward to an early resumption of the dialogue process, in order to address this issue in a timely manner. We will continue to work with the Government of Sri Lanka, and help in whatever way we can, to take this process forward, in a spirit of partnership and cooperation.
10. Friends, India and Sri Lanka are bound by ties of history, geography and culture. Our partnership must therefore progress in the spirit of being the closest of neighbours and friends, whose destinies are intertwined .Thank you.

Q&A at the Joint Media Interaction

Officer: The two Hon. Ministers will take four questions, as I said earlier. We have to bear in mind the strict time limitation because they both have to proceed to the Presidential Secretariat for the signing ceremony.

Q (Sri Lankan Media): Your Excellency, with all the positive comments about the ...(Inaudible)... situation between Sri Lanka and India, I would like to know whether your Prime Minister is participating in the CHOGM Summit.

Indian External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): You know that our commitment to the Commonwealth is complete and profound. CHOGM events are very important for the growth and the sustenance of this very important movement in world governance. At an appropriate stage, looking at the prevailing conditions, looking at the importance of our relationship, and looking at conditions for which our Prime Minister has to give his attention and time, he will make an announcement.

The announcement of course is an announcement that will come from the Prime Minister's Office. I am in touch with the Hon. Minister, and we will keep Sri Lanka posted. I will myself obviously come as part of the delegation as Foreign Minister. But rest of the announcement has to come from the Prime Minister's Office. We will let you know as soon as we are ready.

Q (Sri Lankan Media): Could you specify what you mean by meaningful devolution? Could you elaborate on that? You said you want meaningful devolution in Sri Lanka. Could you elaborate on that?

Indian External Affairs Minister: I am not a Sri Lankan government official nor am I a Constitutional expert. All I can say is that whatever you do in a democracy comes by way of consensus. And consensus is arrived at through dialogue, and dialogue is based in a democracy, in a practical consideration through an exchange of opinions between representatives.

Today you have an elected representative Government in the Northern Province. I hope that they will work closely with the Central Government and together the Governments and the people will arrive at a working arrangement that empowers and gives a sense of participation and satisfaction to everybody. To me it will be meaningful. If you do not get that, it is not meaningful. So, it is really for a democratic decision within the framework of your Constitution and the aspirations of all people of Sri Lanka.

Sri Lankan Minister of External Affairs (Prof. Gamini Lakshman Peiris): I just want to add a short comment to what my distinguished colleague says. The ceremony this morning at which the newly-elected Chief Minister of the Northern Province took his oath in the presence of His Excellency the President. That is a very happy augury for the future because ...(Inaudible)... we would like to work with the newly-formed Northern Province ...(Inaudible)...

As for the second part of the question, His Excellency pointed out that consensus is what is important with regard to Constitutional changes. Constitutional changes if they have to be meaningful, must be based upon consensus, as His Excellency Salman Khurshid said. Now the only way to arrive at a consensus in a Constitutional setting is of course through a Parliamentary Select Committee because Constitutional reform is essentially a matter for the legislature. So, that Parliamentary Select Committee has been formed. It is doing its work. It is addressing all these issues. And that encapsulates the consensus which His Excellency the External Affairs Minister of India referred.

Q (Indian Media): Sir, there has been a lot of talk about political devolution for the last several years. Is there a timeframe that the Indian Government wants from the Sri Lankan Government on the devolution? And has it sought any assurance that it will be done in the next two years, or four years, or five years?

Indian External Affairs Minister: I think you should understand that relationship between two sovereign governments and two sovereign countries is not a relationship in which you put timeframes to things. They are aspirations that you can indicate. We have had a long history of dialogue with Sri Lankan Government when conflict resolution was a priority for Sri Lankan Government, and certainly that was something that was endorsed by India and supported by India, conflict resolution. Certain steps were taken towards conflict resolution including Constitutional Amendments such as the Thirteenth Amendment.

Now the Constitution is to be taken forward. One important step that has taken place is the election. I think that election is the core of a representative democracy. An election that has taken place successfully is an election that should be treated as a very important and a very significant step towards political settlement. Different dimensions of the political settlement are to be conducted through an internal democratic dialogue. We can only be of assistance and help. Of course when you share certain thoughts, and you share certain aspirations, and you share certain hopes and expectations, those remain between you. How much of those, when they can be fulfilled, in which manner they can be fulfilled, where you have to move forward fast, and where you have to move forward with care, are things that have to be taken into account by the Government in Sri Lanka. We cannot decide for them; they have to decide. But we remain in constant consultations. They know that we are available for advice, we are available for help and assistance; and to the extent that we can be of help, we will always remain of help.

Q (Indian Media): Sir, has there been any sort of an assurance given by the Sri Lankan side on the Indian fishermen who are under custody, who were held recently ...(Inaudible)...

Indian External Affairs Minister: But there is something better than an assurance. They have released most of our Indian fishermen. I think actually acting in a compassionate and humanitarian way to release the fishermen that they took into custody believing that they have the right to take them into custody. We urged that it is important because this is a livelihood issue, and not to insist on technicalities but on a humanitarian ground they should be released. And I think the release of most of those fishermen is something that we express our gratitude and appreciation for.

Beyond this, we have agreed that fishermen on both sides, the representatives of fishermen and fishermen associations, should meet very quickly so that whatever governments had put in place in 2008 can be more effectively implemented, fortified or some other working methods can be arrived at through consultation between fishermen on both sides, it would be good for everyone. So, we will encourage that meeting to take place and facilitate that meeting to take place at the earliest.

Sri Lankan Minister of External Affairs: Sri Lankan Government is in entire agreement with that. We would like the discussions to begin at that point so that a solution can emerge from the discussions that will take place among the fishermen on the two sides. At the same time, the Government of Sri Lanka has consistently emphasised the need for some concrete action to review substantially the numbers of boats and fishermen coming into Sri Lanka's territorial waters because it has to do with the livelihoods of the fishermen in the North. People have been deprived of their livelihood for a very long period because of the activities of the sea tigers. Now life is returning to normal. And we have consistently emphasised the need for concrete action to prevent large numbers from coming into Sri Lanka's territorial waters in order to take away these resources.

Officer: I thank the two Hon. Ministers for participating.

234. Remarks by External Affairs Minister at the Ceremony for Distribution of Certificates to Beneficiaries of the Indian Housing Project and Small Business Enterprises in the Northern Province of Sri Lanka.

Jaffna, October 8, 2013.

Distinguished Guests

Ladies and Gentlemen,

This is my first visit to Jaffna. I am particularly happy that my visit coincides with the historic occasion of the successful culmination of the first provincial elections in over 25 years and the formation of the Northern Provincial Council. It also gives me a lot of pleasure to be part of this ceremony to handover certificates to a small number of beneficiaries of our Housing Project, and to those of our project to provide assistance to owners of micro and small enterprises, whose business premises were damaged during the armed conflict.

After decades of armed conflict, when the people of Sri Lanka are staking a claim to a peaceful future, the Government and the people of India remain committed to assisting them in their endeavours for rehabilitation and reconstruction. Our assistance to the Sri Lankan people, appreciated for its timeliness and phased approach, has evolved taking into account the ground situation and the immediate needs of the people at any given time.

Earlier today I had visited Tellipalai, one of the villages where beneficiaries are reconstructing their houses themselves, with the help of funds provided by the Government of India. I was happy to inaugurate two houses that had just been completed, among many others in the area. Our Housing Project is truly the flagship project of India's development assistance to Sri Lanka and I am happy to note that this is the largest grant assistance project undertaken by the Government of India in any part of the world. Having completed 1000 houses under the Pilot Project, nearly 16,000 houses are under various stages of construction in the 2ndPhase of the Indian Housing Project. It is expected that our commitment to construct all the 50,000 houses would be fulfilled before the end of 2015.

The reconstruction project for the Northern Railway line, under Indian lines of credit, is progressing smoothly. The Medawachchiya-Madhu Road section was inaugurated in April 2013 and the Kilinochchi-Omanthai section was inaugurated in September 2013. The full project is expected to be completed by April 2014, ahead of schedule. Our vision is to see the Yaal Devi Express, which used to ply on this route, restart its services in 2014. Complementing our assistance in the railways sector, we have helped remove wrecks from the Kankesanthurai Harbour and have completed the process of dredging the port. We have offered a line of credit for upgrading the infrastructure and developing it into a commercial port. Our efforts would also be to enhance sea-side connectivity by restarting the ferry service between Rameswaram and Talaimannar. For this purpose, we are helping reconstruct the pier at Talaimannar. In addition, we have also offered assistance to rehabilitate Palaly and develop it into a full-fledged civilian airport, with regional connectivity. Our belief is that these initiatives will provide a substantial fillip to the local economies on both sides.

Under our Small Development Project Scheme, we have successfully completed a number of other projects and continue to expand our portfolio of projects in diverse sectors such as health, education, agriculture, fishing, livelihood restoration, community empowerment, and culture.

Another important project of ours is the construction of the Jaffna Cultural Centre at a location next to the Jaffna Public Library. We are in the process of concluding the MOU with the Government of Sri Lanka for implementation of the project. I am confident that this Centre, when completed, will emerge as a cultural landmark in Jaffna, if not the entire Northern Province.

Friends,

India and Sri Lanka share a dynamic and multi-faceted relationship which is rooted in civilisation of ties of history, language, culture, religion and trade. An important aspect of this is the special relationship between the people of the Northern Province and those of Southern India. Over centuries, Jaffa has stood at the crossroads of history, culture and religion, apart from trade, arts, dance and literature.

India remains committed to uplifting the lives of the people of the Northern Province through its efforts to restore the social, educational, economic and cultural infrastructure, which were devastated by the armed conflict.

Yesterday, I witnessed the signing of a number of agreements marking the conclusion of negotiations for the Sampur Thermal Power Project. We can now proceed with the implementation of the project on the ground. We are hopeful that this project, apart from adding 500 MW to the national grid, will have a beneficial effect on the local economy in the East. We have also signed an MoU to provide technical assistance to support the 10-year National Plan for a Trilingual Sri Lanka. We believe this is an important initiative to promote harmony and national reconciliation between the various linguistic communities in Sri Lanka.

Friends,

I would like to assure the people of the Northern Province that India will work closely with the Government of Sri Lanka and the Northern Provincial Council, to ensure that a constructive and cooperative relationship is established, with the overall objective of rebuilding peoples' lives devastated by the three decades of armed conflict.

India is committed to pursuing the full implementation of the 13th Amendment, and building upon it, to achieve a meaningful devolution of powers. Our objective is to enable lasting political settlement which will ensure that all communities, including the Sri Lankan Tamil community, are able to lead a life marked by equality, justice, dignity and self-respect. In this regard, India will do everything possible to work with the Government of Sri Lanka to take this process forward in a spirit of partnership and cooperation.

Thank you

236. Interview of External Affairs Minister to NDTV on board his special flight en-route to Sri Lanka to participate in CHOGM 2013.

November 13, 2013.

Q: I want to ask you, the Tamil Nadu political parties had talked about boycott of Commonwealth, the PM took time to make a decision on whether he was going to go or not, we have seen the reasons about the election campaign response that he has given for not attending the commonwealth. Nonetheless, in public perception it seems that that he is caved in to political pressure from Tamil Nadu parties and not going himself. Do you agree with this perception?

External Affairs Minister: Well there are many ways one would look at it, I think it would be wrong for us to say that we were not conscious and sensitive to the position of the Tamil Nadu people represented by their Assembly and the Government and their opposition took on this matter. But we have said very clearly that there are several issues that were under consideration. This was not the only thing, there are very important preoccupations also at home and then this is not the first time that it is happening that the Prime Minister is unable to go. Last time the PM didn't go. Now what those who are asking for a boycott can make of this, after all I'm going. So there is no boycott. We are engaged with Commonwealth in the manner in which we have been in engagement with Commonwealth in the past. Our aspiration is that we should be represented at the level of the Head of Government or at a high level but it's not always possible. There is nothing that will confine us to any part of the agenda, the entire agenda that we have for the commonwealth we will engage in a meaningful way and in an enthusiastic way.

Q: So here, what we saw happen here, was the cross over between multilateral consideration for India and a bilateral relationship with Sri Lanka which is often maybe being held hostage, as a strong word, has often had taken into consideration the views of parties in Tamil Nadu. How much do you think domestic politics should actually impact and influence what goes on? You are the Minister of External Affairs, how much does it get in the way of your work?

External Affairs Minister: Well, it's obviously difficult if you don't have support from within the country for something which is in enlighten way, you believe, is good for the country which you do something outside. It's not as though what we do is detrimental to the country. What we do by way of foreign policy is for the good of the country and the good of the country is the aggregate of the entire country in which the strong expectation in any part of the country, any state or any section of the country remains important and that's how you work here for foreign policy. Foreign policy is enlightened self interest. The issue is not the disagreement between an enlightened self interest and foreign policy and some local domestic policy. It's not that. It is the failure for somebody to understand what the enlightened self interest is. If that failure comes in the way then obviously it becomes an impediment, it slows down but people who are committed to enlightened self interest know that in the long run that this is what will prevail and not a more myopic and short sighted way of looking at it.

Q: So in this case the enlightened self interest would be engagement with Sri Lanka on the Tamil cause with the Government as you were just pointing out to ensure that the rehabilitation process goes on, the reconciliation process in Sri Lanka with the Tamils goes on. Does the Tamil parties interested in the human rights violation would be raise by the Govt levels and engagement as well. You have that Chief Minister of Jaffna, Mr Vigneshwar inviting the PM as well to Jaffna and Tamil parties in Sri Lanka saying we want the Indian Head of State to come visit. Why are they speaking on our behalf?

External Affairs Minister: Well, let me just say a simple thing. If there is an invitation to the Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu to go to Jaffna will she go? And if she does go how will she explain why she does not want the Prime Minister to go. Are we saying that in future nobody will travel to Sri Lanka? Are we saying that? I believe that is not going to be the case and certainly I think as two responsible countries we cannot say that when we travel to another country we will insist that we will go to only one part of the country and not the another part of the country. So if there are politicians from our side in important positions who are being invited and I imagine they have been invited and if I get a chance I would certainly tell XXXX on the other side including Jaffna why don't you invite people from India to come and see what is happening here. From the main opposition the BJP, from Congress from other parties Parliamentarians have been there and I have seen the outstanding work India has done. We haven't done this kind of work anywhere in this world. The size of the housing systems that we are providing, it's not even been thought of anywhere in this world and I think India should proudly go and see and then we have important investments in Sri Lanka, they have investments in India. I haven't heard telling that we should withdraw our investments. I haven't heard someone telling that we should not build some more power plants. I haven't heard telling me that the rest of the 40,000 houses should not be build and that I am not going to be able to build those houses without going there and even on political issues how do I speak to Sri Lanka if I don't go there. So I frankly don't know what the parties that have objected or people have objected to our going there or felt that we should not go there. What plan they have? Are they saying this is the end of history or they are saying that there are some conditionalities without fulfillment of those conditionalities we can't do something with Sri Lanka or can't do anything with Sri Lanka. These are big questions. So I think it's been blown out of proportion. Unfortunately these kinds of things happen and I do sincerely hope that our colleagues in Sri Lanka are able to see this in a perspective that the best or worst anyone could do about our relationship with Sri Lanka is being done and from this very moment we begin the story afresh. We move on. We do more. We continue to do our work that we have to do.

Q: Are you apprehensive with the meeting with your Sri Lankan counterparts, this is something to iron out with them. It's going to be a tricky situation to explain in one way and also when you look at Sri Lanka you look at the way they talk about attracting Chinese investments for example. India raised concerns about that. They could be used as lever somehow perhaps by them to sort of push further with India to back off with their plans for Tamils within.

External Affairs Minister: See, I am not concerned about their dealing with any country. They are a sovereign country. They have the right to deal with any country. Something that offers more than us, more attracting and better opportunities why should we be the dog in the manger. I think we must have the confidence that we have enough going between us and Sri Lanka, enough possibilities in historical context for them to remain engaged with us and for us to remain engaged with them. I think it's important we talk, we say this to each other and we explain this to each other. I am hardly going to say I am not going to talk to you, I am sorry I have come here; I am not going to come back. Nobody has asked me to say this and I don't think that's what I am going for but the focus of course is multilateral not bilateral engagement. But in multilateral meetings, on sidelines you have an opportunity to talk about some bilateral issues we may have. Because I am there for five days and if I need to reach out to them in any way I will of course because as far as I am concerned my engagement with Sri Lanka is 100 percent. Who are we doing a lot for? We are doing a lot for not for Tamil Nadu but we are doing for Tamils of Northern province and therefore I am little perplexed that what we are doing for the Tamils of Northern province I am being told can be done better if I don't go. I find that logic somewhat confusing.

Q: ... (interjection) and you can deal with the Tamil parties once you get back then after I suppose.

External Affairs Minister: That's not my job. My job is to as I said represent India and India's enlightened self interest across the globe and certainly amongst our neighbours. I hope that these little things will not keep us from fulfillment of our ambitions to see our entire region come together and bound together more meaningfully.

On Tamil Nadu Assembly resolution to boycott CHOGM

"Well truthfully I haven't seen anything about the assembly resolution. It happened sometime yesterday. I was, throughout the day, in the ASEM meeting. But, I have heard about it and I would say that I find it curious because last night I had a large delegation of Tamil Nadu, important Tamil Nadu politicians and concerned people, who came to ask me to use my good offices to get the Sri Lankan government not only to release the fishermen who are with them, but also to be generous and release the boats because these are very important livelihood matters. And they also urged that I should persuade Sri Lanka to move forward on a date for having the fishermen representatives of the two sides to meet in India or in Sri Lanka as early as possible. I find that a bit curious that people who don't want us to go and want us to boycott are also saying while you are there, can you please talk to them and arrange something which is for us a desirable outcome.

“They were led by MLAs, but they were people who are the former fishermen’s organisations that are recognised; they are the people who claimed they also have a right. I wasn’t going to argue with them about...this is not the right time to say such things because as far as I am concerned, this is a normal expectation that we have from Sri Lanka and I am sure they have from us and I will continue to do so. Business is usual. I am not going there to argue with them. I am going there because this is a multilateral meeting taking place in the region close to India. They are committed to Commonwealth and that’s what we are going for. I think if we have a bilateral issue with them, we have bilateral meetings in which we can take up those issues but because I will be there on this sidelines and I have an opportunity, whatever we have been saying to them throughout, we will. I think it is very important in this context we do not forget that India has done some outstanding work for the Tamils of the Northern Province. 50,000 houses we are building and 5,000 of them are ready and they are going to be handed over at this time. If we had an opportunity, our leader, Prime Minister, could have gone to Jaffna. We have been building roads, we have been building infrastructure for them, community centres, we also engaged in giving Sri Lanka major power plant in Sampur at the railway line. I have not been told by anybody that this should not be done, that we should boycott these or we should not do anything for Sri Lanka, particularly for the Northern Province. And I am very proud that today the Northern Province has an elected government and we have been advocating that and that’s being successfully done. I think it’s our duty to give whatever support we can continue to give for the success of the Northern Province, both economically and politically. And we remain committed to that and we expect the Sri Lankan government will also appreciate this is just as much their success as it is ours.”

On devolution of powers by Sri Lanka to the Provincial government in the North

“Well ofcourse we have a duty to push them to devolve powers but they are not the only ones. In India people are asking for devolution of powers. We devolve powers by introducing constitutional amendments for giving more power to the Panchayat Raj institutions. So to say to somebody that you have to devolve powers is ofcourse a sensible thing. We have a Indo-Sri Lanka accord and I think that the accord gives us the entitlement to continue to persuade them, I can't understand how we would say please devolve if we were not there.”

238. Transcript of the Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Australian Foreign Minister.

New Delhi, January 21, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this event. As is usual, we will begin with opening statements by the two Ministers. Following that they have agreed to respond to a few questions.

I will now request the External Affairs Minister of India Shri Salman Khurshid to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Your Excellency Senator Bob Carr, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and friends from the media:

I have just had a very useful round of discussions with Senator Bob Carr, Foreign Minister of Australia. We held the eighth round of the Framework Dialogue between our two countries. The dialogue is an integral component of the strategic partnership between our countries which was agreed by our Prime Ministers in 2009.

We have reviewed the entire range of our bilateral relations as well as regional and global issues. We are pleased that our strategic partnership has grown in strength and expanded in scope. We also recognize that there are tremendous opportunities for much greater cooperation. We shall strive to attain all of them.

Our relations are based on shared interests and mutual benefit in political and security areas, our expanding economic and trade ties, our cooperation in the energy and resources sectors which is extremely important for India, collaboration in science and technology and research, and our meaningfully growing people-to-people links.

The State visit of the Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard to India last year was a landmark in our strategic partnership during which a number of agreements were signed and several new initiatives were launched. Senator Carr and I have reviewed the progress in the implementation of those decisions. We are satisfied with the scope and extent of progress made in various areas. We have strengthened our collaborative endeavours in several sectors and have opened up new areas of cooperation.

We held the first Ministerial level Energy Dialogue led by the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission and the Australian Minister for Energy in December 2012. We shall be commencing negotiations on a civil nuclear energy cooperation agreement, led by our Ministry of External Affairs and the Australian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade, in March 2013 in New Delhi. Our cooperation in water resources has expanded, and the Water Technology Partnership will take concrete shape at the next Joint Working Group in April 2013. And negotiations for the transfer of sentenced persons will commence shortly.

High level Ministerial level exchanges have taken place in several areas. We shall soon be hosting the Joint Commission between our Minister for Commerce and Industries and the Australian Trade Minister which will give impetus to our trade relations, currently at 21 billion Australian dollars.

Our trade negotiators have been engaged in broadening understanding towards a mutually beneficial CECA. Our investments in Australia have grown significantly in recent years, particularly in the resources sector. We have welcomed the Australian side to invest in the opportunities in India. Our Defence Minister will be visiting Australia soon for further discussions on cooperation in defence and security.

We highly value our cooperation in science and technology. Our scientists have been working together on research projects that address the needs of the people as well as the frontier areas of science. We are pleased with our cooperation in the education sector, which has been expanded by the inclusion of specific programmes on vocational skills. And establishment of such centres in India has also been given a stronger structure through close collaboration between the governments in addressing the needs of the student community in Australia both in terms of curriculum quality as well as safety issues.

On the regional and global issues, we have strengthened our cooperation and consultation. We recognize the importance of regional cooperation in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR-ARC) which has acquired a new momentum during our Chairmanship will continue the positive movement as Australia assumes the Chair for the next two years.

We have collaborated closely on our cooperative agenda with ASEAN and in East Asia Summit. We look forward to working closely with Brunei, the new ASEAN Chair in this effort. Similar cooperation has also furthered our objectives in ASEM and in G20. Australia will host the G20 Summit in 2014 and we look forward to close collaboration and consultation on global economic issues. We welcome Australia's role at the UNSC.

Our people-to-people exchanges have been intensified through closer cooperation on cultural, academic, sporting and other links, which have broadened our relationship and deepened our understanding of each other. I wish to congratulate Australia for hosting the Ozfest which has brought our people closer.

Our bilateral relations have shown steady progress over time with consolidation of our strategic partnership through expansion and deepening of cooperation in various sectors. We will continue to build upon these and also in new areas of cooperation. We shall play our due role in the transformations taking place in our region and be responsible partners in the emerging regional architecture.

I thank the Minister for a very very meaningful interaction. Australian Foreign Minister (Mr. Bob Carr): Thank you, Minister. It is a great honour to be here.

The focus of our talks, as you said, was on maintaining the momentum in the relationship between Australia and India following the successful visit to India by Prime Minister Gillard in October last year.

India is a key part of Australia's future. And our recent strategic document, Australia in the Asian Century, identified the relationship with India as being of crucial importance to Australia. I said to the Minister this is supported by Australian public opinion. Australian public opinion wants to see India and Australia get closer. This is underpinned by our common values, democracy, secular government, strong judicial systems, a robust freedom of expression, and shared interest in cricket. This is part of the dialogue between our countries that worked so well that we want to add momentum to the progress signaled by our Prime Minister's visit in October last year.

In that spirit, I am pleased that the announcement we are able to make today on the opening of talks on civil nuclear cooperation can be done. I am delighted to say the first round of negotiations on that cooperation agreement will take place in Delhi in March. I am pleased that we have been able to agree to work together on shared security challenges including joint efforts to combat terrorism, with Australia hosting the next meeting of the Joint Working Group we have on combating terrorism.

We agreed on an expanded bilateral dialogue on cyber policy. We discussed maritime security in the Indian Ocean. I welcome the forthcoming visit to Australia by Defence Minister of Antony which would be the first ever by an Indian Defence Minister to Australia. Again that is confirmation of how we are working more closely than ever in the past.

As two leading democracies in the region we want to do more to encourage engagement between our elected representatives. We have agreed to revitalize engagement between our Parliaments. As a first step, Australia will host a goodwill delegation of Indian MPs in February this year.

I am delighted to announce first phase of the Water Technology Partnership today with Australia committing a total of 12 billion dollars over four years. As a first step, we will pilot an Australian Water Management Tool in three States in eastern India, but also help improve flood warning systems and flood management in the Kosi river basin, and host a delegation to Australia to study our systems in the Murray Darling basin.

We are a nation that suffers drought. We have an erratic rainfall pattern of necessity. We have to learn some expertise in border management. We want to share what we have learnt.

We have already affirmed our mutual commitment to strengthen the East Asia Summit, and we agreed we would continue to cooperate closely in the G20, particularly in the lead up to Australia's chairmanship in 2014. Australia will host the next IOR-ARC Council of Minister's meeting in Perth in November when we take over its chair from India.

Our Minister for Trade will visit India later this month to advance our Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement negotiations. We agreed to work towards a date in 2013 for the next round of negotiations on social security agreement.

So, our discussions were broad and are fruitful. We reaffirmed that our interest whether economic and strategic are converging in a way they have never done before. Australia and India are getting closer as strategic partners. Minister, thank you.

Official Spokesperson: The two Ministers have agreed to take a few questions.

Q (Indian Media): My question is addressed to the Indian Foreign Minister. Sir, you said that civil nuclear negotiations will begin in March this year. Have you set any timeframe for the talks to conclude?

External Affairs Minister: The sense of urgency and commitment between us is very clear. I think that these are very important negotiations. Of course we have done negotiations with other countries successfully on this. So, there is a backdrop available and there are models available. But Australia has had a very significant contribution to make in the field of nuclear energy and on non-proliferation. I think, therefore, when we speak on a matter of such high import, to actually put an artificial deadline and say we must complete it as quickly as within this period, would not be appropriate. But obviously a sense of urgency and purpose will be there. And hopefully we will move quite swiftly.

Q (Australian Media): This is to both Ministers. I am interested in the potential resumption of the trilateral or quadrilateral talks. There was some mention of that by the Japanese Prime Minister some weeks ago that he was the architect of those talks a while ago between America, Japan, India and Australia. You mentioned that your talks today touched on regional issues, Indo-Pacific, South China Sea issues. Is there a chance that Australia and India will participate once again in quadrilaterals or trilaterals that will deal specifically with these regional security issues?

Australian Foreign Minister: I met my counterpart the Japanese Foreign Minister, Minister Kishida, in Sydney the weekend before last, and he did not raise this idea. When it comes to the trilateral involving Japan, India and Australia, it remains hypothetical. We would welcome separate discussions with Japan. But there is no formal proposal for a trilateral on issues we discussed today. So, that remains a hypothetical possibility. The quadrilateral it is probably fair to say is even more ambitious than that. Again, it is clearly hypothetical.

External Affairs Minister: I would have given you the same answer. I think that Australia and India are on the same page. Every time you move beyond bilateral to something that is trilateral, quadrilateral or multilateral, you look at many implications, and you look at the content and the context, and then you take a decision as you move. But the issues that you mention are already being looked at in various fora. And a stated position of freedom of navigation on open seas is the same between Australia and ourselves that the law of the sea must prevail. And I think this has been reiterated many times over. But wherever there are specific agenda issues, they are being handled there I believe adequately. Today we were not called upon to move this any further. But broadly speaking we are both on the same page.

Q (Australian Media): Sir, this is regarding an issue going on elsewhere. What is your advice to Australians in Algeria? What is the risk for Australians working in the mining industry in Africa? And would Australia consider deploying any assistance if extremists threatened any Australian mining interests in Algeria?

Australian Foreign Minister: Australia has huge mining interests in Africa. I think the figure is about 50 million dollars in investment in the ground or being planned. In fact, we have an annual conference called Africa Down Under held in Perth every year with the mining Ministers and mining officials from Africa come to Australia to talk about collaboration on mining. Clearly we are concerned following what happened in Algeria for the safety of Australian personnel in mines, in Mali where there is at least one, and elsewhere in the Sahel.

When I went to Algeria last year, I was able to talk about the prospect of more mining collaborations with Algeria. It is good for them, it is good for us. What we are seeing here is the mining boom in Australia creating opportunities for Australian expertise, and Australian capital in Africa bringing jobs and investment to countries that desperately need it, and bringing opportunities for Australian based companies. The Australian mining boom is spilling over into Africa. So, naturally we are very concerned at the prospect of extremist threats in the Sahel or in West Africa that could considerably target Australian investments.

I will speak to our French colleagues; I will speak further to our British friends about the how ... (Inaudible)... is the threat to the mining interests in that part of the world, and will consider further what advice can be given to Australians.

Q (Indian Media): My question is for Mr. Salman Khurshid. Sir, the Pakistan High Commissioner to India has described the beheading of the Indian soldier as India's domestic issue. He has also criticized Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's statement that there can be no business as usual with Pakistan under the circumstances. What is your view on this? Also, have you taken a view on the offer of talks at the Foreign Ministers' level?

External Affairs Minister: This cannot be described as an offer. I think there were suggestions on how to move forward and the possibility that it could be done in one way or the other. Of course, that is a suggestion that came through the media. We have already said that we believe moving from any attempt to suggest a third party intervention to bilateral interface is a positive signal. The fact that things have been quiet on the Line of Control, the fact that our DGMOs have been in touch in a meaningful way, I would believe that this all signifies a welcome shift in the right direction. But these are matters where the entire atmospherics and the entire context needs to be carefully studied, analysed from time to time before any further steps are taken.

I would just simply say that we should not necessarily react to every statement. I do not think that every statement made in domestic context should necessarily be treated as the last word. It is important that we let a little time go by so that the dust as it were settles, and then in a sensible and a calibrated manner one can move forward. For the present I believe the situation looks a lot better than it did a few days ago.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

239. Joint Statement Issued on the Visit of Defence Minister A.K Antony to Australia.

Canberra, June 5, 2013.

The Defence Minister Mr. A K Antony and the Australian Minister for Defence Mr. Stephen Smith met in Perth yesterday and Canberra today to discuss shared strategic and security interests, including maritime security and bilateral defence cooperation.

The Ministers exchanged ideas concerning regional and international security as well as defence cooperation and exchanges between Australia and India. The Defence Ministers acknowledged deepening strategic and defence cooperation between Australia and India. They agreed to continue to contribute to the peace, stability and prosperity of the Asia-Pacific region and to promote cooperation in the Indian Ocean region.

The two Ministers took note of the progress made in defence cooperation, in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding on Defence Cooperation concluded in 2006, the Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation issued during the visit of the Australian Prime Minister to India in 2009 and the Joint Statement issued during Australian Prime Minister Ms. Julia Gillard's visit to India in 2012.

They agreed that interactions held between the defence establishments of both sides in a variety of fields and at various levels have been mutually beneficial. Both sides were pleased with the bilateral architecture established for pursuing defence cooperation and agreed that consultations have helped in deepening mutual trust and understanding between the defence establishments.

The Ministers took note of the growing cooperation between the Navies of both countries. The Defence Minister Mr. Antony accepted Mr. Smith's invitation for Indian naval ship participation in the International Fleet Review to be held in Sydney in October 2013.

Both sides acknowledged that maritime security and freedom of navigation in accordance with principles of international law is critical for the growth and prosperity of the Asia Pacific and Indian Ocean regions.

They agreed to continue consultations and cooperation on issues concerning the Asia-Pacific and Indian Ocean regions both bilaterally and multilaterally, including through the East Asia Summit (EAS), ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), ASEAN Defence Ministers' Meeting-Plus (ADMM-Plus), Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS) and the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC). The Ministers noted both countries are already cooperating through the IONS, which Australia will Chair next year, along with hosting the IONS Conclave of Chiefs in Perth in March 2014, and the IOR-ARC of which India is currently Chair and Australia the next Chair.

Both sides recalled the contributions made by the Indian and ANZAC forces during the Gallipoli campaign and agreed to commemorate their contributions by launching a publication during the Gallipoli Centenary celebrations in 2015.

The Ministers agreed that efforts to promote cooperation between the defence establishments should continue. In this regard, both Ministers agreed to the following activities:

- i. to continue to have regular bilateral Defence Ministers' Meetings;
- ii. to promote exchanges between the defence establishments and the Armed Forces of both sides, including through the regular conduct of the Defence Policy Dialogue, Armed Forces Staff Talks and professional military exchanges;
- iii. to continue ongoing bilateral Naval exchanges to build confidence and familiarity between our Navies and work towards a bilateral maritime exercise in 2015;
- iv. to continue to cooperate in the Asia-Pacific region bilaterally and through various multilateral fora including the EAS, ARF and ADMM-Plus;
- v. to enhance Indian Ocean cooperation, including through the framework and priorities of the IONS and the IOR-ARC; and

- vi. to promote the sharing and exchange of professional knowledge and experiences through participation in training courses in each other's military training institutions.

Both the Ministers looked forward to implementing these defence cooperation initiatives to further strengthen the strategic partnership between Australia and India.

Mr. A K Antony thanked the Australian Defence Minister Mr. Stephen Smith for the friendly hospitality extended during his visit to Australia. Mr. Antony invited Mr. Smith to visit India at a convenient time.

A day earlier when the Defence Minister arrived in Perth, he was received by the Australian Defence Minister Stephen Smith. This was the first ever official visit to Australia by an Indian Defence Minister. Speaking at a reception hosted in his honour at Perth, Mr Antony said the defence cooperation between India and Australia had increased substantially in the last few years. He said India valued its strategic partnership with Australia and was committed to further strengthen our bilateral relations in various areas including defence. Referring to the Indian Ocean Region, Mr Antony said it was critical to our maritime interests. He said India's economic development was dependent on maritime trade. The security of shipping along with sea-lanes is of vital interest to us, he said. Speaking on the occasion, Mr Smith said the Indian Defence Minister's historic visit was indicative of the increasing importance and depth of the Australia India bilateral relationship, including Defence-to-Defence and Military-to-Military cooperation. The reception was attended by prominent members of Western Australian and Indian academic, business and community organisations. Mr Smith had added that the 2013 Australian Defence White Paper outlined the profound strategic changes that were occurring as economic, strategic and military weight shifted to our part of the world, the Indo-Pacific region. He said 'India and Australia have a shared interest in helping to address these strategic changes, including through Defence collaboration'. Mr Smith referred to Perth as Australia's 'Indian Ocean capital'.

240. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence regarding the Indo-Australian Joint Naval Exercise.

New Delhi, August 5, 2013.

India and Australia have agreed to continue bilateral Naval exchanges between Navies of both countries, including working towards a bilateral naval exercise in 2015 in order to build confidence and familiarity between both Navies. Such exercises are planned as per felt need and mutual convenience of both sides.

The government also proposes to hold joint exercises with countries with whom it has relevant agreements.

This information was given by Defence Minister Shri AK Antony in a written reply to Shri P Kumar in Lok Sabha today.

242. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Australian Foreign Minister.

New Delhi, November 19, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Hon. Ministers, members of the delegation and friends from the media, we will now have a brief media event.

We will begin with a few initial remarks by the two Ministers following which the Ministers have agreed to answer a couple of questions. I now request the External Affairs Minister of India to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Allow me to welcome Ms. Julie Bishop, the newly elected Member of Parliament and the Foreign Minister of Australia who I had the privilege to meet in Perth on the 31st of October this year for our Framework Dialogue where we discussed the entire range of bilateral issues.

Of course we had already met previously in New York during the UN General Assembly, and then subsequently in Perth for the IORA meeting, which is the renamed IOR-ARC Association that we are both members of. We have handed over the chair to Australia. We continue to work as part of the troika with Australia and Indonesia who will in due course succeed Australia.

We again met at CHOGM, which was in the last three days in Sri Lanka, where again I think we were able to work very closely together in the spirit of the Commonwealth looking at a host of issues that concern the world and certainly the Commonwealth.

I also had the privilege to meet with the new Prime Minister of Australia, Prime Minister Tony Abbott, who had a very good meeting with our Prime Minister in Brunei on the margins of the East Asia Summit. We are looking forward to Australian Prime Minister's visit to our country. We are greatly, greatly impressed, and indeed grateful that he thought of an early visit to India. Perhaps we could have found a slot at this time but for a large number of visits that were already stated. Therefore, we are looking at a very early slot next year. Both of us have agreed that we will work on that slot. It is very important that we get the Australian Prime Minister to come here in response of his very very generous indication that he wants to begin a very fruitful tenure with a visit to India.

We have a host of things which are on the landscape for us now. Civil nuclear energy cooperation talks, I think the Hon. Minister will tell you more about this, is on the 26th and 27th of November. We have both worked hard and, as I said, Minister will tell you more about it. We are scheduling the Energy Dialogue early in 2014 when Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia will visit Australia.

We welcome the positive investment regime for Indian investments in energy and resources sector. We already have, I think, an impressive footprint on the Australian soil, and I hope that a larger number of Indian companies will look forward to investing in Australia. The CEOs' forum will meet very soon, and this will be the necessary combined effort of the private sector cooperation to complement and supplement what we can do as Governments together.

My colleague Mr. Pallam Raju has been to Australia recently and he is very very keen on the growing knowledge and skills sector cooperation that we have. I want to share with you that our interactions in ASEAN, the East Asia Summit, IORA which I just mentioned, and of course G20 where Australia will now take the chair, we hope that in G20 Australia's stewardship will help many of the ideas that we are working on together to find root in the attempts that we are making at influencing the world.

I am very grateful to the Australian Government and I want to thank the Foreign Minister for a very successful Pravasi Bharatiya Divas that we have just concluded in Sydney. This was on the 10th and 12th of November.

And of course for those of you who are encouraged by our conversation here in our press conference want to travel directly to Australia, I can recommend to you Air India which has now opened direct flights to Sydney and Melbourne. That is not to say that the Australian airlines are any less. But it is an important signal that I believe we have given to our friends that we believe that we have an extremely fruitful, growing relationship and that must be rewarded both symbolically and substantively by both public and private sector of our country.

I look forward to many more discussions and our working together in various fora. I am sorry that the Minister could be only for a few hours here in Delhi but I am sure she will tell you about the exciting visit to Mumbai. And I hope that whatever she has not been able to do this time, she will come back soon and then we will have more time to present Delhi and other parts of India in a more fruitful way.

Thank you very much.

Australian Foreign Minister (Ms Julie Bishop): Thank you, Foreign Minister Khurshid for your very warm welcome on this my first visit to India as Australia's Foreign Minister. I have been here before but I wanted to ensure that I was able to visit India very early on in my tenure as Australia's Foreign Minister to underscore the significance that we attach to the Australia-India relationship.

As Foreign Minister Khurshid has indicated, Australia and India's economic and security and strategic interests are converging in unprecedented ways. The signing of these two agreements is just an indication of the breadth of the deeper engagement that we want to see between Australia and India.

When we met in Perth at the Indian Ocean Rim Association Meeting, at the dialogue on the day before and then at the IORA Meeting, we found that there are so many areas where Australia and India are working closely together. In the economic field we see a significant increase in investment from Indian businesses in Australia and we very much welcome the around US$ 10 billion worth of Indian investment in the Australian economy particularly in the mineral and resources sector.

We also encourage Australian businesses to invest in India. During my meetings here in Delhi and also in Mumbai I was struck by the enthusiasm that Australian businesses have for investing in India and doing business here. We hope that Australia and India would be able to conclude a closer economic cooperation agreement or a free trade agreement. I think both the governments can be ambitious yet pragmatic in approaching the negotiations for such an agreement and ensure that it will be in the interests of both countries, mutually economically beneficial for our two countries.

In the area of security cooperation, we see a deeper engagement between our Navies. They will begin joint exercises in 2015. We are also working closely together on maritime security not only through IORA but bilaterally on counterterrorism, on cyber, and these are issues where we can support each other, share information, share ideas and have a deeper and closer engagement.

We see great opportunities for Australia to be a trusted and reliable supplier of energy and resources for India's needs, and we recognise India's need for energy security. Not only are we supplying coal, hopefully LNG, for Australia is a significant exporter of LNG.

We also hope to conclude a civil nuclear cooperation agreement for the supply of Australian uranium. It has been the consistent position of the coalition in Australia that we should supply Australian uranium to India. In the context of that and consistent with our desire to conclude such an agreement, the Australian Government has decided that we will support India's membership of the Nuclear Suppliers Group. And I have informed Foreign Minister Khurshid tonight of the Australian Government's decision. We have given a detailed consideration since we came into office, and we believe that it is appropriate, given India's strategic importance in our region and globally, given India's record on non-proliferation, we think it is appropriate that they should have membership of this Group and so Australia will lend its support.

We hope that the civil nuclear cooperation agreement can be concluded. The negotiations will continue for the third round on the 26th of November, and both sides will continue to negotiate in good faith, and I feel sure that we will be able to conclude an agreement that suits both sides.

There are so many other areas of engagement that we have hardly touched this evening but have been the subject of detailed discussions between us at the meetings that number about three or four at this stage, including in the agricultural area, in education particularly as we welcome so many Indian students to Australia in the higher education sector, and in our ...(Inaudible)... sector.

The Abbott Government has also announced that we intend to introduce what is called Australia's New Colombo Plan which will be a government-backed programme to provide young Australian undergraduates with the opportunity to undertake some of their studies at a university in the region. And while undertaking those studies they will also have the opportunity for an internship with a business operating in the host country, either an Australian or a host country business.

We have a pilot programme to commence this rather grand initiative because we are talking about thousands of students over time in 2014, and we hope that shortly thereafter India will come on board as one of their partners in Australia's New Colombo Plan so that we will see a generation of young Australians going the other way, coming to India to study in your higher educational institutions.

We have also talked about the water partnership that Australia and India have, and it is going to its second phase. There have been a whole range of issues where we are cooperating and extremely well.

A trilateral arrangement with Australia-India-Indonesia born out of the Indian Ocean Rim Association will also see us spending a lot of time discussing matters of mutual interest, whether it is maritime security, trade and investment, disaster-relief management and the like.

So, I look forward to a broader, deeper and more diversified level of engagement with India, and I truly believe that as the Prime Minister makes arrangements to come here early next year we will see even greater cooperation between our two countries. And I am confident that the best days of the Australia-India relationship still lie ahead of us.

Thank you.

Q (Ms Parul Chandra, The Asian Age): Good evening to both of you. There is a perception that the civil nuclear negotiations between India and Australia are getting delayed because of Australia's insistence on IAEA Plus guarantees, which India is reluctant to commit to. Did this issue come up for discussions today, and have the two sides been able to agree on any kind of timeframe by when the negotiations will be completed and an agreement signed?

Australian Foreign Minister: I do not see any delay in the negotiations. In fact, they are reaching the third round on the 26th of November and I believe that those negotiations are going ahead. I am sure our negotiators are preparing to be here on the 26th of November. So, I do not see any delay at all.

There is no specific timeframe because we want to get the agreement right. But I will not go into the details of negotiations because of course I do not want to pre-empt our negotiators. But I feel sure and I am confident that we will be able to reach agreement and conclude such an agreement.

As far as Australia's attitude towards selling uranium to India is concerned, we have long held the view that our country should be supplying uranium to India, and I think our announcement tonight that we support India's membership of the Nuclear Suppliers Group indicates the level of support that we have for India, its record of non-proliferation, and its strategic importance.

Q (Ms Stefanie March, ABC): Minister Bishop, today the Indonesia has recalled its Ambassador to Australia following revelations that the Australian Government has been spying on the Indonesian President, his wife, and senior Ministers. The Indonesian Government has asked for an apology and an explanation. China has also asked for an explanation. How concerned are you about the damage done to the relationship and what are you going to do to repair it?

Australian Foreign Minister: I certainly take on board the concerns expressed by the Indonesian Government. We note their deep concerns. But as I have indicated on a previous occasion, it is not the practice of any Australian Government to comment on intelligence matters, and I intend to maintain that practice and that principle.

Q (Ms Stefanie March, ABC): This is going beyond intelligence matters though. It has become a massive diplomatic incident. What are you going to do? Have you spoken to Marty Natalegawa? I understand she has been trying to call you this evening.

Australian Foreign Minister: I am not going to give a running commentary on this matter, but I can assure that I am aware of Minister Natalegawa's concerns, I am aware of the concerns of the Indonesian Government, I take them seriously, the Prime Minister takes them seriously. As we have said on other occasions, we value the relationship with Indonesia, and the Abbott Government will work very hard to ensure that that relationship continues to be strong. It is in the interest of both nations I suggest that we continue to cooperate as much as we can across a whole range of areas, and we are determined to ensure that the relationship continues to flourish. We are aware of their concerns and we take them exceedingly seriously. But I am not going to comment on intelligence matters.

Q (Ms Stefanie March, ABC): And Minister Khurshid, how do you feel about the revelations that Australia has been spying on the leaders of its friendly neighbours? Are you concerned that Australia may be spying on India's leaders? And would you also like an explanation from the Australian Government about these revelations?

External Affairs Minister: We are really looking at a positive relationship; we are looking at signing an agreement on the nuclear matters, on civil nuclear cooperation. That is not something that happens between nations that do not trust each other. We have trust, we have a very wholesome working relationship. I do understand that periodically between nations issues arise, sometimes blown out of proportions, sometimes based on some act of individual, sometimes systemic failures. But these issues arise and it is for nations between themselves bilaterally to settle these issues. We know each other, Foreign Ministers know each other just for this to work together for a better destiny and future for their respective people and indeed to be able to address anything that happens which may cause an impediment or a derailment or a slowing down of relationship.

So, I think that I can say this with confidence that I am sure that two friendly nations like Indonesia and Australia, if there is an issue amongst them they will be able to find appropriate solutions and appropriate ways to address them.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

243. Press Release on the Third Annual India – China Defence Dialogue.

Beijing, January 14, 2013.

The Third India-China Annual Defence Dialogue took place in Beijing today. Defence Secretary Shri Shashikant Sharma led the Indian side and the Chinese Deputy Chief of General Staff General Qi Jianguo led the Chinese side. The discussion took place in a friendly and cooperative atmosphere and in a forward looking manner. The two sides discussed bilateral, regional and international issues of common interests including the situation in the Asia-Pacific region and in the India-China border areas.

Both sides agreed to expand and enhance bilateral exchanges covering the Army, Navy and Air Force of both countries.

The two sides agreed to advance mutual strategic trust and also enhance mutually beneficial practical cooperation.

The two sides reviewed the ongoing measures to maintain peace and tranquility on the Line of Actual Control (LAC). The two sides agreed upon a plan of bilateral military exchanges for 2013 which includes conduct of the next joint military exercise.

Shri Sharma also called on General XuQiliang, Vice Chairman of China's Central Military Commission. During the discussion, General Xu called for enhancement of mutual trust between the two countries and he said that consultations need to be held between the two sides to focus on commonalities which are more important than the differences between the two countries. He said good relations between India and China is important for both countries as well as for world peace and security.

244. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the Brahmaputra River.

New Delhi, January 31, 2013.

Government of India carefully monitors all developments on the Brahmaputra River. As a lower riparian State with considerable established user rights to the waters of the River, India has conveyed its views and concerns to the Chinese authorities, including at the highest levels of the Government of the People's Republic of China. India urges China to ensure that the interests of downstream States are not harmed by any activities in upstream areas.

(a) to (e) The recently released ‘Outline of the 12th Five Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development of the People’s Republic of China’ indicates that three more hydropower projects on the main stream of the Brahmaputra River in Tibet Autonomous Region have been approved for implementation by the Chinese authorities. Government carefully monitors all developments on the Brahmaputra River. As a lower riparian state with considerable established user rights to the waters of the River, India has conveyed its views and concerns to the Chinese authorities, including at the highest levels of the Government of the People’s Republic of China. India has urged China to ensure that the interests of downstream States are not harmed by any activities in upstream areas.

246. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the information given to Lok Sabha on India-China Joint Military Exercises.

New Delhi, March 11, 2013.

During the fifth Defence Dialogue held between India and China in January 2013, both sides have agreed to conduct defence exchanges between the Armed Forces of both countries, including the conduct of a joint exercise at a time and location to be mutually decided by both sides. Defence exchanges, including the conduct of joint exercises, are useful to build mutual trust and confidence between the Armed Forces of both sides.

247. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the talks between the Chinese and Indian officials on Defence Cooperation.

New Delhi, March 22, 2013.

The Deputy Chief of General Staff (Dy CGS) of the Chinese PLA Lt. Gen. Qi Jianguo met Defence Secretary Shri Shashi Kant Sharma and called on the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony here today. The Dy CGS was accompanied by an eight member delegation.

The two day visit of Lt Gen Qi to India is a follow-up to the meeting between Defence Secretary and Gen Qi in Beijing in January 2013 during the Annual Defence Dialogue of which both are co-chairs.

During the meeting both sides agreed to finalise the plan of bilateral exchanges between the Armed Forces of India and China. It has been decided that exchanges will be conducted between the Armies, Navies and Air Forces on both sides. Both sides also discussed preparations for the 3rd Joint Army exercise, which is scheduled to be conducted in China this year. It was agreed that the strengthening of exchanges between the Armed Forces should be carried out as a way of building mutual trust and confidence and consistent with the overall bilateral relationship between both countries.

The implementation of measures to ensure continued peace and tranquility along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) was also discussed. Shri Sharma and Lt Gen Qi also discussed issues relating to the regional security situation.

During the call on Shri Antony, Lt Gen Qi conveyed that the new leadership in China attaches high priority to consolidate cooperative relations with India in all spheres.

248. Extract relevant to the reported Chinese intrusion into Indian territory in Ladakh from the Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson.

New Delhi, April 23, 2013.

Q: Akbar, the External Affairs Minister this morning said that India is addressing the issue of incursion by China 'in an appropriate manner' and that 'we do not want any departure from proportionality'. Could you please define proportionality? Is incursion of a platoon strength contingent of the Chinese army or indeed any foreign army inside 10 kilometres of the territory proportionately speaking a small matter? What is proportionality in this case?

Official Spokesperson: Your question addresses the military aspects but let me try and address what we have done so far and how we pursue this incident because I think that would be more appropriate for me as the Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to answer, and I think you will have a reasonably good idea of how we are approaching this entire issue.

The ongoing incident that you have mentioned refers to an incident in the Depsang area of the Western Sector of the India-China boundary. We see this as a face-to-face situation between border personnel of the two sides due to differences on the alignment of the Line of Actual Control.

We have, therefore, asked the Chinese side to maintain status quo in this sector, and by status quo I mean status quo prior to this incident.

The term face-to-face situation is not something that we have conjured up. It is something that is referred to in the 2005 Protocol for the Implementation of CBMs in the Military Field along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China Border Areas. Let me just refer to the specific article in this. It is article 4 of that protocol and it reads as follows: "If the border personnel of the two sides come to a face-to-face situation due to differences on the Line of Actual Control, they shall exercise self-restraint and take all necessary steps to avoid an escalation of the situation". Then there is a whole listing of procedures that need to be followed. Therefore, when we say face-to-face situation this is what we are referring to.

Now, the ongoing incident in the Depsang area of the Western Sector of the India-China Boundary is a localized event. This is a sector in which there are differing perceptions of the Line of Actual Control. That is why we have, since 1996 been maintaining that there is a need for both sides to work together in clarifying and confirming the Line of Actual Control.

What steps have been taken since this incident occurred? Those of you who have been following this are aware that this came to note on 15th April. On 16th April morning, Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who chairs the working mechanism for consultation and coordination on India-China border affairs, spoke to his counterpart who is the Director-General Border Affairs of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs. This was on 16th morning. Subsequently, perhaps you are all aware, on 18th morning there was a flag meeting. Following that, on 18th evening the Foreign Secretary expressed the concerns of the Government of India to the Ambassador of China in Delhi.

This morning there is a flag meeting which is still underway by last account. I do not have a read-out. Let us wait for that. I hope you are able to understand what the situation in technical terms is and what we have done. Let me also try and clarify that overall, the India-China border areas continue to remain peaceful. We believe that this ongoing incident can be handled on the basis of agreements between the two countries and through mechanisms established under those agreements to resolve such situations peacefully.

I hope I have clarified to a large extent without getting into the technical details because I do not think I am competent to respond to the technical details of situations on the border.

Q: Has India sent any additional troops to the area to meet any eventuality?

Official Spokesperson: I just mentioned to you I am not the right person to handle questions relating to operational details on the border. I suggest you or your colleagues address such questions to people who are appropriately qualified to answer that. What I have explained to you is what action we have taken to try and have this matter resolved peacefully. It has been our experience that similar incidents in the past have been resolved peacefully and we hope to resolve this incident too peacefully. So, please, on issues relating to other than peaceful means, you may like to address other appropriate organs which deal with this.

Q: When Mr. Bambawale spoke with his counterpart on the 16th, what kind of a response did he get? You have told us what we have been doing. What have their responses been please?

Official Spokesperson: This was followed on the 18th by a border meeting, flag meeting. So, I suppose there was some movement during those talks which led to the flag meeting.

Q: Sir, since this is the first opportunity for an on-the-record statement, there have been differing reports, can we have a factual narration of what has happened, how deep inside are the Chinese troops, what are the numbers of the Chinese troops, and what sort of structures/tentage they have raised there in that place?

Official Spokesperson: Again as I said, my job is to interact and discuss this at a diplomatic level. There are others in Government of India, who you are well aware of, who may be able to provide you that information. But please understand, irrespective of where we are coming from I have explained to you how we in the Ministry of External Affairs have taken this up, have conveyed the concerns, and what has been the outcome of those concerns. So, my suggestion is, please wait on. If there is a read-out at the end of the flag meeting today, that would be an appropriate time to ask these questions and seek responses from those who are involved in that process. I am not involved in that process, as you would see.

Q: The Chinese Foreign Ministry said yesterday that they had not trespassed into Indian territory. This morning we spoke to the Chinese Embassy and they said that they stand by that statement. How would you respond to that? Also, is there any effort to look at this politically and reach out to them at a political level and not just at the diplomatic level?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, I think we need to go through very carefully the mechanisms and agreements that we have on this issue bilaterally. Let me try and put to you one of the agreements which will indicate about differing perceptions. This is article 10 of the 1996 agreement on Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China Border Areas. Article 10 states as follows: 'The two sides agree to speed up the process of clarification and confirmation of the Line of Actual Control'. As an initial step in this process, they are clarifying the alignment of the Line of Actual Control in those segments where they have different perceptions. This is a written document which should be available publicly. All we are saying is that in our perception or in our view or in our approach, we see this as a situation of differing perceptions; this is based on agreements and mechanisms that we have established; we have activated those mechanisms based on our understanding of what the situation is and what the agreements between the two countries provide for.

Q: Since you have referred to previous incidents - there have been other similar incidents you said - should we understand that your Government does not believe this one to be a particularly provocative act?

Official Spokesperson: I will not get into a description of the incident. All I would like to say is that we have resolved all previous incidents peacefully and it is our hope that we will resolve this incident too peacefully. I would appreciate if all of you help us in this and extend some space and time for us to work this out, because ultimately for such situations to work out you require both time and space, and I would be grateful to all of you to provide us with that.

Q: Sir, we have got reports that Chinese have also done another violation of water space this time in Pangong Lake. There are at least 20 Chinese boats coming into the Indian waters.

Official Spokesperson: I would be grateful if you can pass that information up to me, and we will then take it up and see where we are on this. At this moment, I must confess, this is the first I have heard about this issue. Because all of you have been asking me since this morning or last evening about the ongoing incident in the Depsang area, I did come prepared with a lot of homework on that issue.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Unfortunately, I do not have that pleasure of being able to talk to my principals the way you can.

Q: Any change in the programme of the visit of Chinese Premier to India next month?

Official Spokesperson: Let me put it this way. Both India and China are committed to having high-level visits. There is a commitment both by our Prime Minister to visit China and an invitation from our Prime Minister for the Chinese Prime Minister to visit India. We are still working on these issues and once they are finalized we will certainly share it with you on when those commitments which we have agreed to will materialize. At this stage I just announced a visit of the External Affairs Minister two days from today. The visit beyond that, I restricted it to situation which is evolving when he asked me questions on that. So, going by my track record you would appreciate that anything beyond the end of this month is like beyond the horizon as far as I am concerned. I know you are much better organized and I appreciate that. But given my limited organizational capacities, I focus on the here and now.

Q: I would like to know whether in recent times this is the real face-to-face situation?

Official Spokesperson: I do not know what you are asking but I have explained to you what this situation is and how we describe it. You should have asked and found out about a situation when it happened then how we had described it. Since I took over this is the first situation. But those who have been here longer are aware of these situations developing previously and differing perceptions being part of our vocabulary going back to more than a decade or so on these issues. I just related to you how this notion of differing perceptions figures in documents going back to 1996. So I am certain they may have been but I do not think it would be proper for me to account for it. They may have been in the past, face-to-face situations and your colleagues would be able to answer that better. And I am certain there would have been such situations previously, and let me assure you we have resolved all of them peacefully.

Q: On China, on 18th we had a flag meeting.

Official Spokesperson: In the morning of the 18th.

Q: Right. So, is it safe to conclude that the two sides do not agree and that is why we are having a second flag meeting? And between these two flag meetings is there something new that is on the table?

Official Spokesperson: Between the two flag meetings was the meeting of the Foreign Secretary with the Ambassador of China.

On May 2 the Official Spokesperson answering several question on the this issue which are as under:

Q: The Foreign Minister was quoted as saying that the Chinese incursion is like acne. Senior sources in the Indian Army have actually described it on various television channels as more like an epidemic or a rash. So, they think the actual ground situation is much more serious. What signs is the Indian Foreign Ministry, the Government of India going to give to Beijing? There must be a Plan-B. For instance, what would be the worst case scenario? Would the impending visit of the Foreign Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid scheduled on May 9th be postponed or cancelled, and also the visit of the Chinese Prime Minister on the 20th?

Official Spokesperson: Let me tell you that since I was able to share some information with you last week there has been continuing diplomatic contact, and this contact has been at various levels and in different locations. So, diplomatic contact between India and China on this issue is, if I may say, ongoing.

We have been able to communicate our concerns to the Chinese and I think there is no doubt on this matter that this is a matter of concern for the entire country. Having said that, you have used various words, I have used various words, others have used various words, but the point I think that we have made previously is and the nub of what we would like to communicate is that this is an incident which is limited in geographical scope. That is the goal that we are trying to indicate. Perhaps some use a metaphor and others use other metaphors. But that this incident is limited, localized in geographical and spatial terms is what we would like to convey. Having said that, we have conveyed this and our goal has been, as I said last time, the objective of all our diplomatic contacts has been that we return to status quo as it was in that limited spatial geographical area prior to April 15.

As regards your question on the visits, I would not like to speculate because diplomacy like all good things in life requires time and space. We are working on this. I have said this previously that we require time and space to work this through. Channels are active, a variety of channels are in play and they are all active.

As regards speculation, I think the External Affairs Minister himself has said this that he intends to go to Beijing and that is the last word on this. As regards the visit of the Chinese Premier, when this question was asked last time I did answer that we are in discussions working out an appropriate date and the visit of the Chinese Premier to India is in an advanced stage in terms of discussions and planning for that. Once we finalise that, we will certainly let you know the dates of that.

Q: On China again, do you have a read-out of the flag meetings because you guys are the nodal agencies apparently to even talks about what is happening in the borders. They are being seen as failed flag meetings. What is the Government's interpretation?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much for exalting us to important positions. But the reality is, and I have always said this before, as far as non-diplomatic issues are concerned, we are not the right people to respond to it. And I am afraid what happens in a flag meeting where no diplomats are involved, I would not be the right person to respond to that. And we have repeated it and I would like to reiterate that again. Having said that, I have explained to you what is happening at the diplomatic level. And I would suggest that there are competent authorities available in other organizations who can perhaps give you a read-out of what is happening in flag meetings.

Q: There was a report yesterday in the Times of India saying that MHA and MEA split on case against Italian Marines. Can you elaborate?

Official Spokesperson: Maria, you have been following us very regularly. You also know that I never respond to this sort of inter-Ministerial reports. My understanding of the situation is that what is clearly specified in the court order and is what we have placed on record. The External Affairs Minister has talked to an ANSA correspondent and I am certain you have the entire script available with you. I would suggest that that is the final word on this matter because it is based on consultations among all concerned Government organizations. I would suggest that you go by that rather than any other sporadic report on this matter.

Q: Sir, several days after the 15th of the month when the Chinese intrusion happened, three Indian army officers led by a Brigadier visited Beijing for several days to discuss joint exercises between India and China.

Official Spokesperson: You know my answer.

Q: Was the MEA consulted on this and what was the MEA's view on it?

Official Spokesperson: I have answered this before and I will answer it again that the Government of India has finally one view. Like all normal governments they seek views of various Ministries and they respond to that. I have indicated to you previously that it is not my intention to use this pulpit to exhibit my entrails and indicate what view we took on one matter or another. So, please, may I request you again on these issues of inter-Ministerial consultations it is normal in any Government to have those consultations and we do not comment on inter-Ministerial consultations.

249. Extract relevant to China from the media briefing by the official spokesperson.

New Delhi, May 2, 2013.

250. Extracts relevant to Chinese intrusions from the Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson:

Q: This is regarding the denial of the foreign journalists to attend the court hearings on the cases of rape in Delhi. It happened once and it happened twice, and three times. Can you just clarify to us are we allowed in or are there any norms or regulations we should follow?

Official Spokesperson: Dr. Awad, you are the President of the Foreign Correspondents Association and I understand your need to have a response for that, and I also am aware of this situation. Having said that, this is a matter which is sub judice. My understanding is that this matter was raised in the court and there was a view taken in the court. If there is a contrary view to that, I would suggest appeal in the court because once a matter is sub judice, you know very well the executive stands back.

Thank you very much

251. Official Spokesperson's response to a query on situation on Line of Actual Control between India and China.

New Delhi, May 6, 2013.

In response to a query on situation on Line of Actual Control between India and China, the Official Spokesperson said:

“The Governments of India and China have agreed to restore status quo ante along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) in the Western Sector of the India-China boundary as it existed prior to 15 April, 2013.

Flag meetings have been held to work out the modalities and to confirm the arrangements.”

* In this connection the External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid said there was still “no clarity” on the reasons behind the April 15 incursion by the People’s Liberation Army in Ladakh, but added that he did not seek an explanation from the Chinese during talks here. Mr. Khurshid, who held talks with his counterpart Wang Yi over three hours on May 9, said both sides had expressed “satisfaction” over the fact that the stand-off in Ladakh was resolved peacefully through existing mechanisms. Asked if he had sought clarity on the reasons behind the PLA’s move to set up tents on the Depsang plains — a move that Indian officials described as an unexpected provocation that broke with established patrolling patterns followed by both sides in disputed areas — Mr. Khurshid told reporters, “I did not look for [clarity]. We are not even ready with our analysis of why it happened.” “It is not clear why it happened,” he added. “I think they were not offering us that background, and we were not asking for that background... There was a tremendous sense of satisfaction that it was resolved in the manner it was resolved.”

Mr. Wang told Mr. Khurshid his visit to Beijing was “hugely important” to pave the way for the Chinese Premier Li Keqiang’s May 19 visit to India — his first overseas trip after he took over in March. That the Chinese side have framed his visit as heralding a new chapter in ties has made the April 15 incident all the more puzzling, officials acknowledge. Mr. Khurshid, however, said “it is not very helpful at this stage to apportion blame between them and us, and it will only take away from the sense of relief and satisfaction that it was resolved in time not to upset the apple cart of what is going on, which is far more important”. The External Affairs Minister said he did not think the incursion was related to ongoing talks between India and China over a border defence cooperation agreement. The Chinese side submitted a draft to India on May 4, which India is currently studying. “I don’t think this incident should be seen or indicated as part of flagging or a reminder as a nudge or push to solve the border issue,” he said. He said both sides had a “shared conclusion” that existing systems were working. Mr. Khurshid said the 16th round of talks between the Special Representatives on the boundary question will take place in the next two months. He said China had appointed the former Foreign Minister and top diplomat Yang Jiechi as the new SR to succeed recently retired former State Councillor Dai Bingguo, who chaired the previous round with National Security Adviser Shivshankar Menon. That meeting would provide a platform for both sides to discuss in greater depth what led to the stand-off. Indian officials will on Friday speak with Chinese officials handling boundary affairs and may also speak with officials from the PLA on Saturday. "We only urge them not to allow anybody to use their relationship with them to India's detriment," he said. "I was not there to make him accountable to NSG requirements. Those are multilateral agreements to which I am sure they know their responsibility... and I am sure they will take the appropriate position." He also raised China's plans to build three new dams on the Brahmaputra, with India suggesting that existing mechanisms to share hydrological data be expanded to address concerns. He said he received a "positive" response from the Chinese, although no commitment as yet. On trade, Mr. Khurshid said he raised the fast-widening trade imbalance, with China expressing interest in "major investment" in India and supporting liberalising the visa regime to offset the deficit. China, he added, had responded positively to India's concerns over the cases involving two traders in Yiwu, Deepak Raheja and Shyamsunder Aggarwal, who were sentenced last year, and six diamond merchants. He said China had granted the two Yiwu traders a concession. "They have been released and gone back home," he said.

252. External Affairs Minister's interview to Chinese Media in India ahead of his visit to China from May 9-10, 2013.

New Delhi,, May 9, 2013.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Good morning. This is a good opportunity to talk to all of you together. We do not always get this opportunity but on the eve of my first trip as Foreign Minister to China it is a very good opportunity for us to be able to talk about things, both those that pertain to this visit and also those that are of general interest to you being resident correspondents for your respective agencies and newspapers.

Allow me to welcome you warmly. I hope that you are enjoying your beat, you are enjoying your assignment here in our country, and living with us in exciting times. I do not know if you and your newspapers and channels use the same high pitch that we have in our media. But it is a challenging thing and interesting part of modern times both conventional media as well as the social media that we now have to encounter in a growing way. So, once again welcome. I will be happy to answer your questions and see where we go.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, what do you expect of your forthcoming visit to China and what would be the impact for the development of relations between our two countries during your visit and also the nearby visit by the Chinese Premier?

External Affairs Minister: Two things. One is that it is part of the business of handling foreign relations with friendly countries, with our neighbourhood, and this very special relationship that we have with China. That is part of my job. Therefore, I am just doing my job.

Having said that, there are special features. This is my first visit as External Affairs Minister to China. We have been hoping to do this visit for some time but there were very important changes, historic changes, on the Chinese side with the new leadership taking over from the old leadership that had over the last decade developed a very sound and a very good relationship with our leadership. And we were given the message both by the outgoing leadership of China as well as new leadership at various levels and in the meetings that took place at multilateral summits that it is the intention of the new leadership of China to not only continue with this excellent relationship but also look at the possibility of enhancing it and helping it grow. That is a very welcome signal that we receive with not only a great satisfaction but we reciprocate it with the same depth and the same commitment with which it has been made.

Having said that, words are not enough in any relationship. You need to work to fulfill the words that are said at important meetings and that is the job that we have to do at different levels, at the level of the Foreign Minister, at the level of the Foreign Secretary, at the level of other officials of the Foreign Ministries and also people-to-people, plus at different Departments, different levels. To lay that out in a sense of a map for how we proceed and how we improve and how we further develop our relationship.

To take stock of that I think the new Foreign Minister, and it so happens that there are new Foreign Ministers on both sides, had to come together and work out a plan, work out a scheme, work out priorities, look at and take stock and see there is something that needs to be given a push, need to see whether there is something that needs to be reviewed, re-examined, some things on which we need further consultations. So, this is one major part of my visit.

The other one of course will be for both sides to work out the steps that need to be taken for the Chinese Premier's visit here which is only ten days after I visit China. Of course, the background work has already been done. But it is good to take a look at it, refresh our memory, and look at what any further work needs to be done, prioritise and examine the content that will finally be placed before the leaders during the delegation-level meetings in Delhi and their own private meetings in Delhi. So, preparation for the writing of a new chapter by our respective leaders, writing of a new chapter in the relationship which is both valuable, important, not just to the two of us but also to Asia and to the world, so, really to check out the work that needs to be done for the beginning of the new chapter in our relationship.

Chinese Media: Mr. Khurshid, my question is also related to your upcoming visit to China. What is your main concern and expectation from Indian side for your visit?

External Affairs Minister: I do not know how you translate the word concern. Concern is an interesting English word that can be used in many ways. One is, concern can be used as what is your priority or concern that I want to first do this'. Concern can also be 'I am worried'. Concern can also be 'I must do something to address this problem'. Therefore, I will refrain from using the word concern but I would say that my priority is how to develop a very good working relationship with the Foreign Minister.

In international relations, in foreign policy, a great deal has to do with historical circumstances, a great deal has to do with the sense and perception of people. Governments follow their people. A great deal has to do with the vision of the leadership of governments. They have a vision and they translate that to their people and to their counterparts in other countries. A great deal has to do with personal equations, personal chemistry. You can fulfill and achieve a great deal if you get along well as individuals, as people, as persons.

I think that it is also very important for Foreign Ministers to develop a personal chemistry and relationship which can help you overcome many challenges that arise in the normal course of doing business with neighbouring countries or with countries across the globe. And it would be my effort – it is a short time, two days is a very short time to build up a relationship but sometimes it can happen very quickly, sometimes you have to work very hard on it. I am hoping. I am hoping that we will strike the right chord in our meeting. I think the historical circumstances are favourable, and we have a huge, huge obligation on us in respect to the expectations of our people and of our leadership. And I will try to see that we can strike a chord and be good friends so that we will find it easy to transmit and translate the vision of our leaders towards a more meaningful and valuable relationship between India and China.

Chinese Media: You have been saying that what improved the relationship between China and India so as a Foreign Minister, what is your plan? What exactly ... (Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: There are some objective things and there are some subjective things. Objective things are we need to work together- and both of us know that, we need to work together - on addressing the trade deficit, not because we are being more concerned about ourselves or being selfish. But to be sustainable, a trade relationship has to be a balanced one. If there is an insurmountable difficulty of being able to address in the short run the issue of trade, of balancing trade, then you can set it off against investment. So, it is possible that you have investment flows from one country to the country that has trade surplus so that an overall economic balance between the two countries is established. This is what we are working together to do between India and China, looking at how we can balance our trade but also that in the short run to offset an imbalance of trade through investment.

But investment standalone itself is important because in today's world there are two important ways how you get people to come together, not just governments but people to come together. One is by having cultural exchanges – in culture I include sort of education and soft culture like tourism and so on - and the other one is by investment.

If you have a Chinese company investing in India, producing in India, and have a huge number of Indians working for the Chinese company, that is a stronger bond than you can provide by opening an Embassy because you are dealing with people's immediate aspirations which is a job, food, employment security and learning to work together, what they call work culture. I think that it is our aspiration that there should be some really conspicuous big Chinese investment projects in our country, as indeed we are encouraging our companies to go to China. Some of our business organizations have established offices for outreach in China. A lot of our businessmen are now exploring opportunities in China. There are joint projects and collaborations that are taking place in areas such as steel. But we must always keep in mind that we are both partners and competitors.

There will be market places where goods from both countries will be on the shelves and we will have to compete. Maybe you would get an upper hand in certain goods and we will get an upper hand in certain goods. In certain cases, you will just have to have a greater choice to give choice on a menu which gives both the Chinese product and the Indian product. In some cases we will have to collaborate. But these are things that the market will partly decide and partly because we both believe in planning in our economy, at least to some extent. To some extent our planners will decide which means how do you incentivise, how do you de-incentivise, how do you regulate, how do you control. But at the same time, the same selection process will continue in the market place as well where you have some strengths and we have some strengths. But, as our Prime Minister has said, the world is a large enough place to allow India and China both to work and to live in very comfortably, sometimes holding hands, sometimes walking together, sometimes racing each other, sometimes as competitors and sometimes as collaborators and partners.

So, these are very important dimensions and features of our relationship and each dimension and each aspect has to be worked upon, either encouraged or actually physically and intellectually worked upon to ensure that we get the best for our people.

Chinese Media: Your Excellency, as the Minister of External Affairs what is your understanding about China's importance within India's foreign policy in the background of global pictures?

External Affairs Minister: China's place in the world, both historic as well as in terms of an economic power, is well known. At the same time, China has arrived late in certain places. In WTO for instance, China has just arrived in WTO. Therefore, you have to make your mark in WTO. Now you have many complementarities with us as far as WTO is concerned and we vigorously supported your presence in WTO. Russia again is new to WTO and Russian industry will be in a sense adjusting and accommodating to WTO. But both Russia and China still have to I think pick up domain knowledge of WTO and begin to contribute more substantially and more effectively to WTO. But, we are working, China and Russia, we are working in BRICS together. And I think that in a sense is an ideal situation for us to harmonise and to converge on positions that we take multilaterally or positions that we take on important issues such as restructuring and reform of the international financial architecture also of the United Nations etc.

I do not think that we can say that immediately, instantly we have to agree on everything. It is a process of dialogue by which we learn from each other's experiences and factor in each other's aspirations. So, this is for us very important and, therefore, you can see that while we want friendships across the globe and China has friends across the globe, and not all of our very fast friends are your fast friends, and not all of your very fast friends are our fast friends. But there are many that we have in friendship in common.

We cannot be absolutely completely alike because our circumstances are different, our aspirations are different, our historical experiences are different. But the effort has to be while working together bilaterally or in organizations like BRICS or for instance working in the United Nations, the effort has to be if we can bring our positions and align our positions to make them much closer and effective. I hope that what I am saying about China, I hope you will hear from the Chinese leadership about India as well because we are proud to be able to say that we have made remarkable strides as far as economic growth and development are concerned.

Of course in many ways China is far ahead of us because despite having a strong socialist system, China went into the economic reform at least a decade before us. We came a decade later. And China is on a faster track of reform than we are. Our reform requires consensus building all the time. In China, you are led from the front, you are led from the top and you are able to show the advantage of reform very quickly to the people, so get an endorsement from the people for reform. Because our reform goes slow, it takes much longer to show the advantage to the people. Therefore, to get the endorsement also takes time. So, it is a kind of a chicken and egg story.

But we hope that the importance that we think China has in the scheme of things as we plan our view of the world, I hope is also if not entirely substantially also felt by the Chinese leadership about India. And as I said, our historic experiences could be different, and therefore, we may have to put in more effort to align our future aspirations. If your past is different, your future to be aligned requires greater effort. If your past is similar, then your future is easier to align. But this is something that both sides know and we have worked towards this and periodically we will go fast, periodically we will slow down depending on circumstances that prevail in the world. But I think the direction is very clear. India and China collaborating to give substance to people's belief that the 21st century is the Asian century, is an imperative. India and China have to collaborate for the Asian century.

Chinese Media: ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: That is why I said to him concern word is an English word that translates badly both for our Indian media and for you. So, we will not use the word concern, we will use the word attention.

Chinese Media: What would be your view towards China-India relationship under the new circumstances?

External Affairs Minister: I am very optimistic. I have very positive aspirations. I think it is a very great opportunity. I think the first signals that have come from the new Chinese leadership are extremely welcome, positive, and will be reciprocated in full substance from us. We are looking forward to a meaningful decade with working with the new leadership.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, I have another question. In China we have a saying that bad things can turn into good things. The recent incident in Ladakh, both countries handled it very well and peacefully resolved the dispute. Can I say that this means that the Sino-Indian relation is getting more matured and at the same time can this way of handling set a precedent, example for the future similar incidents?

External Affairs Minister: To be honest with you, I personally think we have shown tremendous maturity but also more than maturity we have shown tremendous understanding of each other. In these matters if you do not have fundamental understanding of each other, you can misunderstand such gestures. But to keep them at a proportionate level and contain them as limited or localized and not necessarily part of a larger scheme things, it is important to have a fundamental understanding of each other. I think we have developed that over the years and that is a wonderful thing. But what we have as Governments, I think a lot of people who pass off as scholars of India-China relations have also to develop that understanding. There is an impatience in them. You cannot dictate timelines on everything that happens between friends. Timelines and pushing people and making people take hasty decisions can cause them to make mistakes.

Both India and China are ancient civilizations and I do not think that we can work towards instant solutions. We have to savour even the process of resolving anything that might appear to be a disagreement. We have to savour the moment and to show patience and understanding. I feel a sense of comfort that in our dealings with China in the recent weeks I found that that was exhibited by both sides in a very great measure, and that I find an extremely, extremely comforting and satisfying feeling.

Thank you

253. External Affairs Minister's media briefing on his visit to China.

New Delhi, May 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming on this holiday for most of you in the afternoon, at short notice. The External Affairs Minister has just returned this afternoon from China on what many of you thought was an important visit and we thought since none of you could travel with him, I had requested the External Affairs Minister if it was possible to brief you about the visit and the outcomes from that visit. He has kindly agreed and that was why we had this short notice because it was only this afternoon that he came back and he immediately agreed to this media interaction. That is the primary focus of this interaction. If any of you would like to ask questions after that on any other things, we will try and allow a couple of other questions.

With that I will request the External Affairs Minister to first make a few opening remarks and then we will leave the floor open.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Good afternoon friends and thank you for coming here. First of all I must tell you we sorely missed you all in Beijing, a good place to report from. Some of your colleagues were there but not enough.

I will begin with sharing some good news with you. Almost on an impulse I mentioned to Premier Li - with whom I had an outstanding meeting, a very friendly, a very open and a very enjoyable meeting - that I felt that the media in our two countries must have a chance to interact a lot more with each other and to discover experiences that each other have of the other country, and that this would perhaps contribute to better people-to-people understanding and indeed facilitate the grand future that India and China can build together provided we align our positions, we understand each other better and there is a higher level of cooperation in every field - social, political, economic.

He immediately and promptly thought it was a very good idea, that we should create some mechanism by which Indian media can on a regular basis interact with the media in China. So, this I hope will happen. We have left it to officials to work out and we will certainly consult you on this as to how best we can go about it, perhaps step by step as we discover which is the most creative way of taking this forward. We will study also if there are any other models available either for them or for us. So, that is the news that concerns you directly and I thought I will give it s high billing and say that to you first.

Of course the primary purpose of the visit this time was to prepare for Premier's Li's visit beginning 19th of this month. It is something they emphasized and we acknowledged with gratitude and appreciation that this would be his first foreign visit after becoming Premier of China, and the first stop will be in India both in Delhi and Mumbai. The words that were used in our conversation were that this was very deliberately and very consciously after careful thought this decision that was taken giving India a very high priority.

I think that that was the general theme that one found in our conversations at different levels which included my meeting twice with Foreign Minister Wang Yi – twice I say because our formal meetings were fixed at 5, 5:30 in the afternoon going on to delegation talks and then finally dinner. But he chose to come to the hotel soon after I checked in and spend about 20 minutes with me to greet me as a very special gesture. I believe that that set the tone frankly to everything else that we did thereafter, as I said, at the delegation-level meeting in the evening followed by dinner.

Next day I had a very good meeting with the Special Representative who was Foreign Minister till recently and I had spoken to him on phone when he was Foreign Minister which again he recalled very fondly, Special Representative Yang Jiechi who will now in the near future be working with our Special Representative Mr. Shivshankar Menon to take forward their Special Representatives' interaction, Round 16 that will now take place hopefully in the next couple of months.

Thereafter of course I called on Premier Li who again was extremely friendly, very warm, extremely welcoming in his demeanor and his words and the time that he gave to me. Essentially we were looking at of course the lay of the land for the visit. I assured the Chinese leadership that the visit was going to be a very significant one and a very successful one as we saw it. They felt and we agreed that the joint statement that is to be issued after the meeting of the two Prime Ministers and the delegations should be a strong message to our respective people, to the rest of Asia and to the world. This is a very very repeatedly emphasized, greatly emphasized point that they made. We have certainly responded in equally enthusiastic terms. But in order to make that into a strong statement sending strong messages of India and China's intention to work closely together, they had laid out many points, agreement, MoUs that we could work on, and we in turn had indicated some on which there had been movement forward.

The Joint Secretary Gautam Bambawale stayed back because we thought it would require another day's or perhaps two days' work so that we can have as much done and not leave it to the last two, three days before the Premier's arrival in India. I think that the convergence that we have on issues that actually flow from the intent to have extensive engagement on several fields - and I think these flow from the strategic, economic dialogue that is held regularly between us - we are actually ready with and we have brought it to their notice that we are ready with agreement on micro irrigation, on waste water management. We will possibly be ready also with the translation of classic and contemporary works.

They have responded very positively on the visa simplification and liberalization MoU which may or may not be ready in time for signing during this visit. But as we agreed, on their suggestion, that whatever we have in the pipeline we can indicate strongly our political agreement and commitment and the signing can then be done on our Prime Minister's visit later this year to China. I think since 1954 possibly, this is the first time when there will be two-way Prime Ministers' visits between India and China taking place. Therefore, I think this Year of the Snake will be a significant year as we see it.

We have in principle agreed that the Foreign Ministries will exchange an MoU on sister cities and sister provinces which we hope can be aligned with one major point on which there was prompt agreement and that was on Chinese investment, a Chinese industrial park in India for which we have promised the representatives of Ministry of Commerce can visit India soon and they can look around to see which point other than places they have already identified in the past for engagement could be suitable for a Chinese industrial park.

But that will be seen in conjunction with the attempts that we are making to balance our existing trade that is looking up, is growing very fast but where our concerns about balance remains. And they were agreeable that we have to very specifically address the issue of balance in our trade to make it sustainable. But to see it in conjunction with investment flows that can at least in the short-term address the issue of imbalance of trade but investment flows being both ways.

I had the opportunity to see and meet with officials of various private sector companies that are particularly in the IT sector, which are already doing good work in China and we hope that during the Prime Minister's interaction we will be able to enhance that to a higher level.

There are two important matters on which we have agreed that we require more work, something on which more inputs are necessary at our end from other Ministries and indeed in bilateral terms with other countries that are involved. One is the Bangladesh-China-India-Myanmar Economic Corridor, something that in principle we also as our Look East Policy and connectivity with ASEAN are looking forward to being able to establish but on which some bilateral I think engagements are still called for particularly with Bangladesh. And that is an area we said we will continue to work, and it could at some stage involve all the countries working together. But certainly in principle an attractive idea, something that we would have worked on ourselves and are working on ourselves, but that we will be happy to engage with them once everybody is on board.

The other issue on which we have if you like taken a little bit of a pause for the present is the regional trading arrangement that they have suggested. That again goes back to the trade imbalance. We said that let the trade imbalance be addressed upfront as an urgent priority, and then of course we can move to the next stage which is the regional trading arrangement.

We did not actually specifically discuss this but because during the officials meeting that will take place today I can share with you that Chinese side had given us a border defence cooperation agreement some weeks ago which essentially consolidates and brings together many of the agreements and protocols and the arrangements and the mechanisms that we have in place, brings those together, rationalizes them and takes them forward somewhat. We also have some suggestions there based on our experience of the past few years, and we have in turn given them some suggestions, indicated certain points in the draft that need to be reworked upon. Hopefully this will be in their hands today and, therefore, this is something on which we can work. But this was not part of the discussion that I had had, or on the agenda specifically.

One important, modest but significant move that we have seen is our discussions on the trans-border rivers. The good thing was that the Chinese side at the highest level reaffirmed their intent to ensure that India's downstream interests are not affected adversely in any way. They have heard us out very carefully about either enhancing the mandate of the existing arrangement that allows for sharing of flood time hydrological information, expanding that in order to cover some of our concerns, or look at a separate mechanism that would address our concerns.

The movement forward we have now is a clear indication from them that this is something that they are committed to, that they are going to be ever so careful about India's interest and that this requires in some manner either an enhanced mandate or an alternative way in which our concerns can be addressed. I think this is the first time that we have actually specifically face-to-face been able to move forward on this particular thing.

We both took note of a very interesting dimension in our relationship which is the movement forward on multilateral and matters concerning security in our region. We both agreed that our first dialogue on Afghanistan was a very good one, a successful one; and that we would be working more closely together with them as they move towards the next Istanbul Process meeting that will take place in China. I think that our understanding is converged. Largely there are areas in which we need really to discover more as to what our positions can be. But both on Afghanistan as well as on Syria there were vast areas of convergence and articulation and I hope that we can work further on some of these issues, particularly since many fast changing movements are taking place. On a humanitarian front the Chinese were very good to have told us that they have released two Indian nationals who were in custody in Yiwu and that had become a little bit of a humanitarian concern. We felt that they had suffered enough. For personal reasons both of them had been allowed to travel to India and then went back. But the Chinese were generous and good. As a gesture of goodwill, they shared with us that they have released the two nationals who are now on their way back home.

Because of this I thought that I would go a little further and I requested them to consider whether the same could be done for all or for some at least of the six Indian diamond merchants who are also incarcerated in southern China. The immediate reaction that we got was that they would look at it in as positive a term as possible and get back to us. We had hoped that this could be done before Premier Li's visit to our country.

The most critical and important thing is of course the manner in which we were able to discuss our recent problem on the Line of Control. I think we were on the same page, China and India, completely in saying with a degree of satisfaction that the mechanisms in place for dealing with such issues and such episodes or incidents have worked, that we both have the confidence that they will work, and that they did work was a matter of considerable satisfaction.

It was also very clear that we both believe that our vision and our commitment is to the larger picture between China and ourselves, and that we are both equally determined that such an incident should not be allowed to stand in the way and to obstruct a very meaningful growth in our relationship, signals of which and indications of which are there for all of us to see both in terms of growing investment, trade and much greater contact between our people over the last ten years.

I did say to the Chinese side and I shared this with the Premier also that we felt it was important to analyze our respective systems to work out why such things happen or indeed why the most recent incident happened. We would in a sense be able to take some lessons from the manner in which it was satisfactorily resolved. We should also take some lessons about why it happened, how we should ensure that such things do not get repeated, do not happen, and if at all despite best efforts something of this nature happens that we are able to address it with greater urgency and with less passage of time than we had to suffer this time, which was three weeks.

I think that my intention was to be clear, to let our Chinese friends know that this is something that was extremely important because it does not just remain as a statistic, it becomes part of perceptions about our people and I assume about their people, about us. We were not doing a post mortem and we were not apportioning blame. But we had certainly felt that it was important keeping the larger interest of our two countries in mind that something that caused enormous concern to our public opinion should be addressed, of course taking advantage of the mechanisms that we have in place.

I did leave it to them to have this matter reflected upon in greater detail when the Special Representatives meet because the entire background and the context in which this discussion has to take place is familiar to them and they have the domain knowledge to be able to deal with it more specifically.

All in all I believe it was a very successful trip. I think we have prepared well. We can look forward to a very meaningful visit of Premier Li ten days from now.

Thank you very much

Official Spokesperson: The floor is now open for any questions that you may have.

Q: Your talks in Beijing have raised the bar for a very successful visit by Premier Li. Looking ahead, what do you think are some of the contentious issues on which there are still differences and what is the way ahead on those issues? Also, did you discuss the need to intensify strategic communication?

External Affairs Minister: I can clearly say that we do not have any prickly issues, major issues of significant difference that could be seen as obstacles. Wherever we are still not ready on both sides, still not ready on articulating an agreement, we are certainly ready to indicate that is our objective and that is our aspiration. The important thing is that this was understood by them and from their point of view understood by us, that some things are done and ready, some things will need to be clearly indicated as our objectives for Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit to China later in the year, and there are some things on which in principle agreement must be indicated although we all know that it will take some time.

And the Premier said to me that the Chinese saying that journey of a thousand miles begins with one step I think indicates how they see every step forward as being significant and important although we both realize that we have a long journey to make.

Q: You said that India has made certain suggestions on the border defence cooperation agreement. Could you share with us what those suggestions were? Does it mean that the previous mechanisms in place to solve such incidents as happened recently are not delivering?

External Affairs Minister: I think the idea is to develop and to work beyond the success of those mechanisms and the experience of the success of those mechanisms to perhaps raise the bar of ambition for working more extensively, more effectively and taking it much further than we have in the past. As I have read the draft, it does not appear to be replacing everything that is already there, but as periodically we have had the 1993, 1996, 2005 etc, moving up based on experience of the past and really in the direction that was given by those protocols and agreements.

There is of course something that I believe easily would be appropriate to consider when we look at any new agreement, is to see if there have been some points at which our level of satisfaction could have been greater. So, if we emphasize those dimensions, we would obviously be better off. But there is not a sense that there is a disappointment or a failure of the mechanism we have in place. It is indeed our sense of satisfaction that our mechanisms have worked, have brought us thus far and now it is a question of going even further.

Q: In the context of the recent standoff and the change in the leadership in China, do you think that the boundary issue has remained in the background on a track all by itself and the relationship has gone ahead on economic, trade and other track; and that this will change or at least slow down and the boundary issue will once again come to the fore?

External Affairs Minister: That is not my impression. I think that the two track approach - if one can describe it as a two-track approach one not impeding the other but obviously helping each other if you go along and if you are moving in the right direction because the gravitational pull of the success of one will inevitably be felt on the aspiration of the other. I do not think there is any reversal in that process. I do not think there is any indication of a slowdown from either side. If at all there is something, there is an expression by the new Chinese leadership that we need to move faster. That is the reason perhaps why they have given us that agreement.

But faster must also be read with surer, steady and sure if you want to speed up what you are trying to do. It must again fall back on the experience of what we have done. Therefore, the 16th round of SRs meeting would be able to reflect on this and assess and judge it a lot better than you can in normal conversations.

Q: You have mentioned about trade and a delegation coming down to look at investments in various sectors. Will the Indian government allow unhindered investment opportunities to the Chinese in India?

External Affairs Minister: I do not know what you mean by unhindered. The extent to which we allow investment from anywhere else, there is no exception for China. But obviously trade must come with travel and that is the reason why liberalization of visa regime is important because business travel must become easier. You can always pitch for journalistic travel becoming easier and I would be very happy to support you on that, but I have to admit right now it was not a priority. Business travel is a priority. I think if that begins and the investments begin, we would get a very special stride forward.

Q: There are certain sectors where India feels that investment should not come from the Chinese.

External Affairs Minister: Those are areas where between Finance and Home they have special concerns not relating to China alone but the sectors themselves and also from different parts of the world. But those are things that are reviewed from time to time. I think we should not have a theology on this. We should really work on it in a practical sense. We are doing that in the visa regime for many countries. Some more countries are hoping and expecting that we will do it for them. I think we need to rationalize; we need to be more confident about ourselves and confident of our systems, and be clear that what is important is there must be much greater contact between the peoples.

Q: My question is regarding the security arrangement in the international and the regional security. You spoke about Afghanistan and Syria as an example. Can you elaborate a little especially post-2014 if there is any mechanism between the two countries; and also regarding Syria, especially after the meeting of the Russia and the US for the conference by the end of this month?

External Affairs Minister: I think these are still issues that all of us are reflecting on. There are no ready answers with anyone of us on our questions both for Syria as well as for Afghanistan. We are in fact closely engaged with the Afghan side to understand what happens when we talk to other stakeholders in Afghanistan at the Istanbul Process conference for instance, or with China as we have done, or with the United States of America. We tried to understand better what will happen after 2014. But frankly I do not think there are easy answers being given right now. Therefore, there has to be a wait and watch.

Meanwhile, our commitment as far as development partnership is concerned, the two billion dollars that we are investing in Afghanistan continues. We expect to complete the projects like Salma dam and also the Parliament building well in time before 2014 elections. The small district level projects also are in process.

As you know, in my recent visit to Iran we indicated that Chabahar development will be contributed to by India because we see that as an alternative route particularly to western part of Afghanistan where we could have major investments in time to come. So, we are not putting anything on pause waiting for all the answers. As we continue to work on development partnership and enhancing different areas of our relationship with Afghanistan, we are still waiting to understand better. But we have at least been able to share how our perception would be somewhat different from perception of many other countries but it also overlaps with the perception of other countries. China I think is quite close to us in our perception about Afghanistan.

Q: Considering that you got so much positive signals from China that the new leadership wants to take forward our relationship, did you get any sense why the border incident happen? Was it that part of the army wanted to do it or what? Did you get any sense?

External Affairs Minister: To tell you the truth, I thought the best thing was to flag for them that it is important that we should figure out why it happened. That it happened, we have agreed. That it was reversed, we have agreed. That it was reversed using the mechanisms that we have in place and they worked successfully, we have agreed. But why it happened I think is important. I do not think that if you reflect back on incidents that have happened in the past, this question as to why it happened has ever been asked. Usually the question that is asked is, can you please reverse it, or that if you do not you know what, etc., etc. But nobody has ever asked why it has happened. We raised it for the first time. And you will understand that raising it for the first time you cannot expect an answer there and then. But we raised it, we flagged it, and we said that we both need to do an analysis of why it happened. The analysis then perhaps can be converged and shared and then we would have a better idea. And while all this is going on, we can improve our attempts and our ability to resolve the bigger issue, the larger issue which is finally what we have to resolve. This is only an intermediate arrangement that must address the ambience and the atmosphere as we moved to address the big issue.

Q: You spoke of the trans-border rivers. Have we suggested any species of mechanism to them whereby this issue can be dealt with bilaterally?

External Affairs Minister: No we have not. What we have suggested is that there must be a mechanism and we have left flexibility in saying the existing mechanism can be expanded, the mandate can be expanded to address what we are hoping will be addressed, or an alternative mechanism can be put in place. So, it is the first time that we have seen some movement, and I certainly saw sensitivity to India's concerns, and I think also anticipation that this is an issue that India would want to raise. Therefore, they had obviously considered the issue. They did not say let us think and come back to you. They immediately said we understand your concerns, we are committed to ensuring that there is no adverse impact as far as your downstream rights are concerned, but something needs to be done, we agree. How it can be done, we can work on it. I think that is a movement forward.

Q: Was there any regret in the Chinese that they had actually intruded and pitched tents in Indian territory? Did they even have a tone of a little bit of regret that they had done what they had done? And also, it is a fact that before that, between January and March, there were five face-offs between border patrols - three in January and two in March. And on the 1st of April there was a sort of deep intrusion in that area. Since India knew about it and reports went right up on the 12th of April, were they seen as warning signals? Did India do anything about it then?

External Affairs Minister: I do not want to expand looking at our border issues and problems to other incidents that may have happened. In the articulation that we placed before them we did say that it is important that one incident in one place does not get linked with issues or incidents anywhere else, and that it is important that we do some systems analysis to find out why it happened. But really the trip was not to score points. The trip was to ensure that we are clear about what we want to say and that it is conveyed clearly.

When you talk about note of regret and so on, you know Chinese are better face readers that we are. They may have read something in my face but I certainly was not able to read their face. I can only say this to you that there was, at least I sensed, an atmosphere of relief and a desire to move forward. And I think that it would not have been fair on my part that when we have only ten days left to receive the Premier, that desire to move forward should have been retarded by me. But the points that we wanted to make I think were very clearly made and understood. We would like to see what the SRs can do with it as we move forward.

Q: Sir, I wanted to ask you about the industrial park that you spoke about with the Chinese. I understand that this must be in a very preliminary stage. But given the fact that we have a major trade imbalance, how does this work out?

External Affairs Minister: The trade imbalance issue is already being addressed. Trade imbalance issue really requires market access issues as far as pharmaceuticals are concerned, as far as IT is concerned, and those the Ministry of Commerce is already addressing. That is the best that can be done immediately. That is very clear. But in addition to that, since we wanted an industrial park idea to be taken up and they brought up that idea, we were very happy that there was convergence and that that convergence could take us in the right direction. My people told me that if we can pinpoint and agree on this, Chinese will be able to deliver the industrial park a lot faster than most other countries, which is a good idea. I do not know if my State of UP will be happy to snap it up but I would be very happy if my State of UP snapped it up.

Q: You were quoted in Beijing as saying that you did not raise the issue of why they did what they did because there was some blame and you did not want to get into the blame game.

External Affairs Minister: That was on the first day. I had a second day as well and what I am telling you now is what happened in two days. But the report was on the first day.

If you raise everything on the first day, you do not get a chance to raise it on the second day. So, we took it step by step. On the second day I raised all that I have shared with you and I think satisfactorily. The words I see prominently in our discussions are: sense of relief, desire to move forward, let us think big.

Q: If you think that they wanted us to work faster on the boundary agreement, does that mean that in all these talks that we have been having, we have been stalling a resolution or we have been going slow on the resolution on the boundary agreement because that was not something that we took back in all these meetings? Third, the new defence cooperation agreement that we are working on, will that stop the kind of incursions that we saw in Depsang recently? Is that something that you are putting in?

External Affairs Minister: When I said to them that there must be lessons that we must learn from what has happened and those lessons must inform whatever we do in future, a systems analysis of this needs to be done on both sides, I would imagine that that is what it meant. And I did not find the Chinese working at anything that we said. I did not find them specifically giving an alternative formulation. But at the same time it would be wrong if I said that they just ticked everything I said.

I think there was very extensive convergence. And certainly if I am assessing the ground that we have prepared for the two Prime Ministers' meeting, the Prime Ministers meet after Foreign Ministers because they do more than the Foreign Ministers can do, so I think we prepared very good ground for things to happen. The takeaway expression that I gave them was that I am very glad that I have come here in Spring time because what I see is hope all around and beautiful Chinese blossoms. And what the Premier said to me was the world is thinking big, let us think bigger than them. This is what the Premier said to me and I thought that these are the two lines that summed up my two days there.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: This fast, faster, fastest did not come up but certainly it was not an attitude that look this will solve itself one day do not worry. Let us keep that in mind, let us move fast on that as well. I did not get any indication that they felt we were stalling, we were slow, that we were not willing. The formulations that these are historic issues, they are complicated, they take time to resolve, those formulations were repeated. And I think that there is not any major departure there. But yes, not just from my meetings but even otherwise, we have received some signals that they would like to solve a problem. The exact speed and exact velocity etc., I think the SRs will get a better chance to judge.

Q: You said that there was a convergence on Afghanistan. Was there a convergence on Syria as well? If there was, does it take you closer to the Russian and Chinese position on Syria?

External Affairs Minister: I think there was convergence on Syria but at the same time there was some lack of clarity as to how things are moving now that there was statement between the US and Russia. But at the same time while that statement that there should be an attempt, there was also a statement that was carried there which said that Assad cannot be party to this thing. So, I think the contours were still unclear both to them and to us. But the basic principle that we can only solve Syrian issue not from outside but by somehow creating conditions conducive for a Syrian dialogue between the Syrian opposition and the ruling establishment, I think on that there was complete convergence.

Q: From your opening remarks, you seemed to have sort of a foot down position on the regional imbalance being corrected because some of the proposals, which you said yourself were pretty exciting, have been put on hold until that is done. So, were you able to read some kind of a timeframe with the Chinese apart from the general assurance that they gave you that they are going to move forward on this?

External Affairs Minister: I think the area of trade imbalance is a complicated area and the Commerce Ministry has been dealing with it. I have merely said to them that I would like to flag for Commerce Ministry your attempts to move forward on these areas which would require that the trade imbalance is addressed more effectively. But we did not go into further details on this. I was told that market access on pharmaceuticals and IT was critical and I did flag that and they know. They know very well that that is what is critical. They are talking a great deal about education; they are talking about tourism; they are talking about greater airline connectivity. So, there are many issues of this nature which I will pass on to my colleagues and see if we can get something interesting.

Q: Do we have a geological profile of the area where the Chinese tents were put up? Do we know what minerals are there beneath the surface there?

External Affairs Minister: Broadly speaking yes, we know what is there. It is pretty barren and it is at present pretty unpromising in terms of what it offers except a very difficult stay in the night if you pitch a tent there. But that they came to drill for oil is not something that we seriously ... Our idea of where the uranium is that can be accessed by us is different from the Tibetan Plateau. But I am not going to take a final guess on this. I am sure there are people who are better equipped to be able to tell us.

Q: Minister, you will complete 200 days in your office next week.

External Affairs Minister: Very tough days!

Q: You have been to 16 countries in four continents including the capitals of three permanent members of the United Nations. What do you think have been your three top achievements in the last 200 days?

External Affairs Minister: I think that would be very immodest but I can say with some satisfaction that I have had enormous assistance, help and understanding given to me by Foreign Ministers of the countries that I have visited. I think I have been able to develop an interesting chemistry with a lot of them. With many I am on terms such as their being able to send me SMSs and call me on my mobile phone and I can call them back. In some cases it has delivered us away from seemingly crisis-like situation developing. Italy was one such case. I think I have certainly received enormous amount of candour in expression of aspirations as well as caution and inquisitiveness about India's plans and India's policies. It has been a very satisfactory experience, these 200 days. But you need 2000 days frankly to do this job well and I have not got 2000 days.

Q: After your talks with the Chinese leadership, do you still feel it is a localized incursion by the Chinese troops and how effective was the hotline between India and China in resolving the standoff?

External Affairs Minister: You cannot give away strategic secrets about hotlines and things like that. But I think yes that is the impression, I think our view is that it was very localized. Localised can be interpreted in two ways - localised in terms of a concept and localized in terms of physical attributes. I think it was localized in both ways - concepts and physical attributes. I have no reason to believe that what impression we gathered before my departure for China was misplaced or in any way required to be modified or rectified.

Q: What is your impression of the social progress in China, especially the slowing down of the economy and corruption and poverty?

External Affairs Minister: I watched Chinese television and it is not like ours. I did not have a chance to go through Chinese social media. So, I may have missed something. I walked around Tiananmen Square and that seemed pretty peaceful and looked very beautiful. There were lots of flowers there. But speaking to ordinary Chinese at receptions and to people from institutions, and indeed meeting them in the Embassy function as indeed talking to some Chinese media, looking at their newspapers there, it was very refreshing. They are talking about a lot of issues that in our perception here ordinary people will feel are not discussed in China.

There are elements of accountability to the public. That is very clearly there. I think in its own way China is moving forward in terms of what we see a society to be. It is a very disciplined society, and if I am not wrong the impression that I had is that every Chinese seems to be doing everything with a sense of larger national purpose, not just simply limited to the job that they are doing. That is very exciting and very admirable. If you ask me would I like to go and live in China, the answer is yes. It is a beautiful place, a wonderful place. But not while I am Foreign Minister, I mean after.

Q: Just to take you back to the incursion one last time, at the time when it happened you just said that it was localized, you really emphasized that it was a localized incident. There were army sources who told many of us including me that the actual troops on the ground said that they were waiting for further instructions from Beijing. Could you just sort that out please?

External Affairs Minister: These are military personal secrets that are best heard from retired Generals. But the body language and the communications between our platoon that was there in what Chinese described as a face-to-face situation - we describe it as a faceoff, they describe it as a face-to-face. I do not know whether the two are marginally different. I think the ground level situation I can tell you, I was not there but this is on information, the body language, the communication between the troops was just as good as it generally is. There was not a sense of hostility, and there was not a sense of betrayal, and there was not a sense of disagreement, although they knew that something had to give because they were talking about it, they were talking about it.

But clearly if you are out there in a nowhere place, you need having done something in order to revert from that or to change that position you will have to check with somebody, and that takes time. And that somebody may want to check with somebody else. But it was not as belligerent and hostile and as ugly as one might imagine that an intrusion would be. Actually, we continue to use the word incursion which is a little less hostile than intrusion. I mean incursion could also be a joyride, you know come and look and go, but intrusion seems more aggressive and more assertive. But frankly it is a good thing that there was not the same hostility.

If there had been some sense of national pride hurt, hostility, I would not have seen the kind of public reaction that we saw when we walked around the streets and how young people stopped to take photographs. They certainly must have known that we are Indians or we looked Indians. I mean there were people with me who were dressed in very specific Indian clothes, so they would have known we are Indians, and their flag was there on the car. But the number of people who stopped to take pictures was amazing, incredible. If I did not know China well enough, and I was not reasonably well travelled, I might have thought that they are trying to take pictures to post in places which I would not like to see my picture there. But that was not it. There was genuine warmth that one saw in the streets, genuine warmth. I think if we have genuine warmth in the streets of Beijing, we have a good thing going. Let us develop it further. That is my intention.

I know that today there was a press conference and at that press conference some suggestion was made by the leading opposition party that we have let down India's strategic interest. Let me just tell you with all emphasis at my command that is nothing, nothing but unwarranted suspicion. It is not something that we will allow to happen, it is not something that happened. It was not something that was even remotely suggested by anybody to do a quid pro quo somehow to give a sense that everything was well. Absolutely untrue! If it was, we would not be in this feeling of comfort that we are. There was an offer from the opposition to stand with the Government in the matter of national interest. The national interest today is that the world should see India and China not in disagreement but in agreement, and an agreement on grounds that are reasonable, fair, equitable and transparent.

Q: I know you have answered this question many times on the trade deficit. But on this regional trading agreement, the joint visibility study was finalized in 2007. Is India reluctant to launch the formal round of negotiations because that is the only way we can address the trade deficit problem with China?

External Affairs Minister: I think it has to be examined by experts. If there is such a report available, I am sure the Commerce Ministry would examine it. We did not say this is something that must be completely off the agenda. All we said is that time may not be ripe for us to be able to do this because we need to prioritize and in sequence first begin addressing the trade imbalance issue and then we can come to this. Otherwise, the acceptability among sectors and people who should really endorse something like this will be very difficult to get. Therefore, let us just take it step by step. Commerce Ministry will address the areas that they are addressing. We will flag it for them and hopefully we can then move forward.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. We have had about an hour's interaction and I am grateful to all of you to have come for this.

254. Media Briefing by the Official Spokesperson on the visit of Chinese Premier to India, Prime Minister's visit to Japan and Thailand and External Affairs Minister to Saudi Arabia.

New Delhi, May 14, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon everyone and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. I have a few announcements to make following which, as is the usual practice, I will answer any questions that you may have on those announcements or on anything else. Let me start off with the announcements that I have to make.

His Excellency Mr. Li Keqiang, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, will pay a state visit to India from May 19th to 21st of May 2013 at the invitation of the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh.

The second announcement that I have to make is that the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh will pay official visits to Japan and Thailand – from May 27 to 29 to Japan, and to the Kingdom of Thailand from May 30 to 31.

The visit to Japan is at the invitation of the Japanese Prime Minister His Excellency Mr. Shinzo Abe. This is for the annual summit between the Prime Ministers of India and Japan which aims to enhance and strengthen the strategic and global partnership between the two countries. The Prime Ministers are expected to discuss bilateral, regional and global issues of common interest. Prime Minister and Shrimati Kaur will also be received in audience by Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress of Japan.

The visit to Thailand is at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Thailand Ms. Yingluck Shinawatra. During the visit Prime Minister will, as is expected, discuss bilateral, regional and global issues. India-Thailand relations are characterized by shared bonds of civilisational contacts. Our partnership has been strengthened by close cooperation in political, security, economic and cultural contacts as well as coordination on regional issues.

The final announcement that I have to make relates to the visit of the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia from 24th to 27th May. This is at the invitation of his counterpart the Foreign Minister of Saudi Arabia Prince Saud Al-Faisal. That concludes the parts relating to the announcements. If any of you would like to know any additional information about these announcements, we could begin with that and then move to anything else.

Q: What is the purpose of Mr. Khurshid's visit to Saudi Arabia? Will there be discussions on energy issues also?

Official Spokesperson: The visit of the External Affairs Minister to Saudi Arabia is the first in five years. The last External Affairs Minister who visited Saudi Arabia was the then External Affairs Minister Shri Pranab Mukherjee in 2008. Subsequent to that, we had other high-level visits, that is, the Prime Minister's visit to Saudi Arabia in 2010 and the Defence Minister visited Saudi Arabia in 2012. But the Foreign Ministers have not met since 2008. So, this is in the context of their ongoing need to consult each other. There will be an entire range of issues discussed.

Energy in a generic sense yes, because we import 17 per cent of our oil from Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabian exports are approximately, I think, 33 billion dollars worth. And we have approximately nine billion dollars of exports to Saudi Arabia. So, we have a substantial economic relationship. In addition we have, by the latest estimates provided to us by Saudi Arabia, about 2.8 million Indian nationals resident in Saudi Arabia. Their welfare as you are aware has been a matter on which there has been some concern expressed.

Recently the Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs Mr. Vayalar Ravi had led an Indian delegation there consisting of the Minister of State Mr. E. Ahamed, and Mr. T.K.A. Nair from the Prime Minister's Office. The goal at that stage was to try and ensure that the Saudi policies which are largely of a domestic nature are implemented in a manner that takes into account the humanitarian needs of Indian nationals who are resident there. Since then Saudi Arabia has made some announcements, I understand on May 10, providing some sort of options for various expatriates including Indian nationals.

Of course the regional situation is bound to be discussed and that means issues related to the Middle East including issues relating to Syria as well as other matters of common interest to both countries regionally and internationally. That is about the expanse of the likely discussions between Prince Saud Al-Faisal and our External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid.

Q: Could you please elaborate on the visit to Japan, on the issues to be discussed and especially the nuclear energy thing?

Official Spokesperson: India and Japan have annual summit level meetings. We also have a strategic and global partnership. We both believe that given our common values and priorities as well as interests, relations can be even broader and deeper. Visits at senior levels are a cornerstone of our interaction. Prime Minister Singh has been interacting with various Japanese Prime Ministers. My understanding is that since 2006 he has interacted with six Japanese Prime Ministers. Prime Minister Abe was the first Japanese Prime Minister he interacted with in 2006 and then again in 2007 when Prime Minister Abe visited India.

As I mentioned, all issues of bilateral interest will be discussed and of course nuclear energy is an important aspect of our interactions. We do understand that there are issues in Japan domestically on this matter relating to safety of nuclear energy. So, we will take it at a pace that is dictated by our Japanese counterparts on this. But we will continue to pursue it because for us in India, nuclear energy is a major component of our energy mix.

As you know, economic cooperation is an important aspect of interaction between Japan and India. We recognize that Japanese Overseas Development Assistance has played a unique role in India catalyzing advanced projects of exceptional nature in India. And there are several visionary projects of infrastructure development in India which we are cooperating and undertaking together with Japan. These include the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor, the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, and infrastructure development in Chennai-Bangalore corridor is also being looked at. So, we have a very broad range of economic issues that are likely to be discussed, and the two leaders will certainly discuss political and security cooperation also.

We will, at a certain stage nearer the visit, provide you a more detailed briefing on what are the likely outcomes of the visit, what are the deliverables and what is the programme. Right now we have a major visit coming up and so we focus on that. Certainly we will have briefing on the details related to the visit of the Prime Minister to Japan.

Q: Is there a defence component to the team that goes along with the Prime Minister? Will there be a Defence Attache or a defence team - since you did mention strategic issues – in the composition of the team that will go?

Official Spokesperson: The National Security Advisor to the Prime Minister will be on board with the Prime Minister. He certainly will be able to advise the Prime Minister on those elements that you have referred to. We also have a Defence Attache in Japan, but I think inputs from Delhi are available through the National Security Advisor.

Q: Can you please give us the details of the programme of Chinese Premier at Mumbai?

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and give you the details broadly and then of course Mumbai will be an important component. The Chinese Premier will meet the Prime Minister both in restricted meeting as well as delegation-level talks in Delhi. He will be given a ceremonial reception at Rashtrapati Bhavan. Also he will pay homage to the Father of the Nation at Rajghat. This is normal for a state visit. Prime Minister will host a banquet for him at the Hyderabad House on the 20th. External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid as well as the Leader of the Opposition will call on him. The Chinese Premier is also scheduled to call on the Vice-President of India, and he will meet the Chairperson of the UPA. As regards his other activities in Delhi, I understand he will address an event which is hosted by the ICWA and FICCI on 21st May, 2013. This is in the morning and it is open to all journalists. So, we would welcome all of you to be present there.

In Mumbai, the Chinese Premier is scheduled to address a meeting involving all three business chambers. It is, I understand, with ASSOCHAM in the lead but also FICCI and CII being partners in this. This is the primary, main business-related event in Mumbai. But I also understand he is likely to visit the TCS in Mumbai, and will meet relatives of Dr. Kotnis while he is there in Maharashtra, and finally the Chief Minister of Maharashtra will call on him. This broadly is the range of activities for the visit of the Chinese Prime Minister here. We will put out a detailed advisory so that you could be informed of the opportunities available for the media.

Q: Could you give us the elements of the Chinese Premier's visit? What are the main issues on the agenda? Secondly, yesterday the Chinese Spokesperson said that the two countries should redouble their efforts on evolving something settling the boundary issue. What would be your response to that especially because the Joint Secretary was in Beijing this weekend and held talks with his Chinese counterpart?

Official Spokesperson: As regards the elements of the visit of the Chinese Premier in terms of substance, we will have a joint declaration. We are still working on other outcomes which we will try and make available to you perhaps just before arrival, given the time that has elapsed and the work that is in progress. So, this is work in progress. I would refer to those of you who have not read it, a detailed briefing provided by the External Affairs Minister. He did point out to some of the elements of the likely outcomes. Maybe if you could read that it would certainly refresh memories of what are likely to be the major areas of discussion.

That said, I will come to the issue that you have raised about the boundary question and how we see that. As all of you are aware, issues related to the India-China boundary have been discussed through the mechanism of the Special Representatives, and this is a specially constituted mechanism which deals with this. The two Special Representatives have had 15 rounds of talks during which they have completed the first step and that is they have arrived at an agreement on political parameters and guiding principles for the resolution of the India-China boundary question. Now they are in discussions on the second phase which is related to the framework for a resolution of the boundary question. I think we have said it before but I would like to reaffirm that India is committed to seek a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable solution to the boundary question through consultations.

Now coming to the specific issue that you have raised about how does India perceive, on the speed etc., I would like to mention quite clearly that it is our conviction that an early settlement of the boundary question will advance the basic interest of the two countries and we, therefore, feel it should be pursued as a strategic objective by both countries.

Q: Of late there have been reports in the media saying that a proposed multilateral military exercise involving the United States, Japan and India was to have taken place in the US and because of the so-called fear of China, India has decided not to get involved in that and go for only bilateral exercises with Japan and America separately. Would you like to throw some light on that?

Official Spokesperson: I too have seen, like you, these media reports. My understanding is that they have already been denied by those who were involved in this. There is a clarification which has been issued by the defence authorities who are in the forefront of these discussions clearly denying that there was any truth to this news report. I do not think I can add anything further to it because that is available on the record as having denied the veracity of this report.

Q: Returning to the border negotiations, the statement you read out is reaffirming India's position about the border as far as I know, perhaps I misheard it, but the impression coming from China leads to what I have been reading in the newspapers that it sounds like they are looking at a renewed push or a new ways to try and move this forward. Is that something that India has been feeling and something that India was responding to?

Official Spokesperson: We have thought of various ways on this and this goes back to quite some time. For example, one of the mechanisms that we had thought of was while the border issue was to be resolved, we could try and clarify and confirm the Line of Actual Control on the India-China border pending the final settlement of the border question. That is a thing that we had placed on the table quite some time ago. If what you say is what is coming as your perception, that is available on the table for further discussions. But that said, I think I did not only reiterate what we have said previously but I have also said and I repeat it that it is our conviction that the early settlement of the boundary question will advance the basic interests of both the countries, and therefore we feel it should be pursued as a strategic objective by both. And I think this is pretty clear on what we would like to pursue as a strategic objective.

Now as far as I can recall we finished issues relating to the announcements I have made. If you would like to ask questions on any other issues, I would welcome that.

Q: Is it true that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh has categorically denied an invite by would be Prime Minister of Pakistan Mr. Nawaz Sharif to visit Pakistan for his oath taking ceremony? Has he denied categorically?

Official Spokesperson: I think you should be informed that India and Pakistan have very well functioning, established diplomatic channels. Through those diplomatic channels, my understanding is that the Prime Minister did call up Mr. Nawaz Sharif and in the course of that call he did extend his congratulations on the victory of Mr. Sharif. He also extended an invitation for Mr. Sharif to visit India at a mutually convenient time. During the course of that conversation also Mr. Sharif extended a similar invitation to the Prime Minister.

On the diplomatic agenda, these are the two issues that I am aware of following which the Prime Minister then did write to Mr. Nawaz Sharif, and a copy of that letter in its entirety has been made available to you. Other than that, on the diplomatic agenda, no other specific proposal has been received or even heard of except through of course the mechanisms that many of you represent and have been asking since this morning. So, I hope I have clarified to you that while all of you do an excellent job I think on this issue there seems to be a disconnect between what has been put out through diplomatic channels in a very transparent manner by us as well as by Mr. Nawaz Sharif in terms that he had invited the Prime Minister. These are both requests and invitations at a time which is mutually convenient. Other than that I do not see or have heard of a specific proposal for a specific visit for a specific time available through diplomatic channels.

Q: Not taking part in oath ceremony apart, has the Prime Minister got any proposal to visit Pakistan in the near future? Any timeframe?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are aware that Prime Minister has previously said that he would like to visit Pakistan. This is a stated position. At this stage there is no specific proposal on the table of a specific request for a specific occasion.

Q: ...(Inaudible)

...Official Spokesperson: If you say ifs and buts, if ifs and buts were valid, then my point is that I do not think I have ever responded to and I do not want to respond to ifs and buts.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Let us wait for specific proposals on this. As I said, we are in direct contact through diplomatic channels. These diplomatic channels have functioned very well. You would understand during the recent crisis there have been several diplomatic contacts between senior officials of the Pakistani government and our government to try and ameliorate the conditions which stemmed from the tragic events when an Indian prisoner was killed there, and the tragic death in a regrettable incident of a Pakistani prisoner in India. These mechanisms have worked very well and I would like to assure you that should that happen, it will be through these mechanisms and we will certainly share with you, as we have shared with you the letter of Prime Minister to Mr. Nawaz Sharif.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: There was an old proposal to exchange maps on each country's perception of LAC. Do you think there is any forward movement on this issue?

Official Spokesperson: You are right that this was an Indian proposal made quite some time ago to clarify and confirm the LAC in the India-China border areas pending the final settlement. You are also aware that this proposal could not move forward. If there are attempts to move that forward, we stand ready on that because this was our proposal at that stage.

Thank you very much

255. Media Briefing on the Visit of Chinese Premier to India.

New Delhi, May 18, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Thank you very much for your patience and staying back for this briefing on the visit of Premier Li Keqiang to India.

As we have announced previously, Premier Li Keqiang has decided to make India the first stop of the first foreign tour that he is embarking upon. We think very highly of this gesture because it is our view that high-level political exchanges between our two countries are an important aspect and vehicle for our expanded cooperation. The object of such visits and meetings is to enhance trust and understanding between our two governments and our peoples as well as to exhibit sensitivity to each other's concerns.

As far as China is concerned, it is a very important country and India places priority to our relations with China. We are both ancient civilizations, the most populous countries in the world, and our economies are growing rapidly. We feel that the relationship between India and China is one of the most important in the 21st century. We need to carefully nurture our growing partnership which is significant not only in the bilateral dimension but also increasingly has a global nature.

We have shared with you details of the Premier's visit but I will just add some elements to what we have shared before. He is arriving tomorrow at 3:20 p.m. following which in the evening there is a restricted meeting with the Prime Minister. Subsequently Prime Minister is hosting a dinner for the Chinese Premier. On the next day, is the formal reception and welcome at the Rashtrapati Bhavan which is at 9 o'clock in the morning.

It is followed by the usual homage that visiting dignitaries pay to the Father of the Nation, and that is at 9:30 at Rajghat.

It is normal for a state visit that the External Affairs Minister usually is amongst the first to call on the visiting dignitary, and the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid will call on the visiting dignitary at 10:15 a.m. After that at 11:30 there will be delegation-level talks at the Hyderabad House, following which we will have some agreements to be signed and these will be signed at 12:30 p.m. There is also an event in terms of media statements by the two leaders. And then Prime Minister will host a banquet lunch for the visiting dignitary and his delegation and other important persons. In the afternoon, again in accordance with the norms of state visits, the Leader of Opposition will call on the visiting dignitary. He will also have a meeting with the Chairperson of the UPA and will call on the Vice-President of India.

On 21st May, the visiting dignitary will address university students at a function organised by the ICWA along with other collaborators. This is at 10:30 at the Taj Palace Hotel. I understand that we have indicated to all of you the process by which you can attend that function if you so desire. Subsequent to that he will call on the President of India at 12 noon at Rashtrapati Bhavan, and then depart for Mumbai.

In Mumbai he would be visiting the Tata Consultancy Services around 3:30 p.m. and will meet the relatives of Dr. Kotnis at where the visiting dignitary is staying and that is Hotel Tajmahal at about 5:45 p.m. Subsequent to that the Chief Minister of Maharashtra will call on him. And at 7 o'clock, he will meet Chief Executives of leading Indian business houses at a function, and dinner which is being arranged by the ASSOCHAM, CII, FICCI, the three apex chambers of commerce. The next day, that is the 22nd, the Premier will depart.

I think this is the expanse of our interactions. Subsequent to this briefing we will put these details out in the public domain and these will be available on our website along with clear instructions of what are the media opportunities, photo opportunities, etc. All those of you who have PIB cards are welcome for these interactions or events.

Having given you the process, I now have with me Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia) who also handles China. He is well-known to all of you. Any of you would like to ask him any questions on any of the substantive issues, you are welcome to do so.

Q: China has proposed a border defence cooperation agreement with India. Any forward movement on that?

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): That is a subject which is being discussed between the two governments and it will continue to be discussed including during this visit. So, we will have to wait and see.

Q: I understand that the border defence cooperation agreement has proposed that the troop levels should be frozen at the border, and it aims to curb the military plans that we have. What are our views on that?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): This is an intergovernmental agreement which is currently being negotiated. So, obviously I cannot say anything about it because this is a process which is on. Whenever the agreement is finalized and when it is signed, you will get to know the details of the agreement. Right now I cannot say anything because it is a work in progress. We are actually negotiating it with the Chinese and they are negotiating it with us. So, I think I will have to say just say these words and stop there.

Q: This meeting in Mu mbai with CEOs, are there any agreements or anything that are likely to be signed? Can you just give us some kind of a feel as to who all would be present at that meeting?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): You are right. There is the standard meeting that our chambers of commerce hold for any visiting dignitary, any Prime Minister or President from any country. This one is being done in Mumbai. I think the Chinese side thought that they should do the economic meeting in Mumbai. I am afraid I do not know who will be attending from our side from the chambers of commerce and industry. But there are some commercial agreements which are to be signed between firms and business entities of the two sides. I believe that is to be done before this particular event at 7 o'clock in Mumbai starts. I would refer you to ASSOCHAM which is the lead organization for this particular meeting. They will have greater details of the agreements and the contracts which are to be signed between Indian and Chinese companies.

Q: I just wanted to ask if the coincidence in New Delhi of the Chinese Prime Minister and the President of Afghanistan will give any particular opportunity to some contact or discussion on the 20th of May.

Official Spokesperson: Maybe I will just answer you on the process. I think you did not listen to my briefing related to Afghanistan. I said that the Afghan President's interactions here start on the 21st in the evening.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): On the substance, I would only like to draw your attention to the fact that India and China have in various ways been discussing the future of Afghanistan as we move forward. We have done this bilaterally. I think all of you know that our Additional Secretary for Afghanistan visited Beijing a few weeks ago and had a first round of bilateral discussions with the Chinese. It has also been discussed at the NSA's level trilaterally in Russia. So, Russia, China and India have been discussing this subject with the idea of giving all support to the Afghan Government as we make this transition in 2014.

Q: I have seen this figure of 35 billion in investments from China towards infrastructure in India. Is that an accurate figure?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Actually the figure is $55 billion. This is the amount of projects contracting the Chinese companies have in India. It is the amount of projects that are either completed or in the pipeline in India. So, it is not investment in terms of foreign direct investment. It is not in terms of setting up factories or units here. It is projects which Chinese companies are doing in India including in many sectors as well as the infrastructure sector.

Q: Given the fact that we are still not looking at a possibility of exchanging maps on the eastern and western sectors, the border defence cooperation is still a work in progress, what are the chances that a recurrence like Ladakh incident might actually impact bilateral relations again? How do you intend to flag it off in the meeting? And is there also a feeling that because the telecom sector issues for Chinese companies have not been sorted out yet completely, they might be holding it as far as opening up the Indian exports in pharmaceutical and IT-enabled services are concerned?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Let me answer the first question first and then come to the second question on telecom.

What is going to be discussed between the two Prime Ministers is something that even I am not aware of. Everything is on the table when two Prime Ministers of any two countries meet, and definitely that is true even of the Prime Ministers of India and China. Having said that, I think the two Prime Ministers would talk about this subject since it has been a recent occurrence. But I do not want to try to predict what is going to happen. I will see what comes out of their meeting. Of course all of you will be briefed on it by our Joint Secretary (External Publicity) after the meetings of the Prime Ministers have taken place. So, let us see! It is still something that we will look forward to as we move ahead. We will be able to brief you about the outcomes of what the Prime Minister has discussed only after the meeting has taken place. And we will do that as soon as possible after the meeting is over on Monday the 20th of May.

Can you just repeat what was the gist of your question on telecom?

Q: Since we still have issues as far as the Chinese entry into the telecom sector is concerned, Huawei and the other companies, is there a feeling that they might be holding up increased exports of India in pharmaceuticals and IT-enabled services?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think we will continue to press on market access in China for Indian companies, whether it is in the pharmaceuticals sector, whether it is in the IT sector. We will continue to press for that and we hope to see results very soon. In fact I can even mention that the reason that the Chinese Premier is visiting Tata Consultancy Services in Mumbai is because TCS has had some success in penetrating the Chinese market especially over the last two, three years. They have adjusted their business model. They have a special business model for China which is different from what it is for the western countries including the United States. And I think they have been successful in getting contracts in China. That is one of the reasons he is visiting TCS. But I am sure TCS themselves will be in a position to explain better to you what their model in China is.

Q: Sir, I just want to know if India's cooperation with Southeast Asian countries, especially Vietnam and Taiwan, will figure in the talks between the two Prime Ministers.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): As I said, I really cannot predict what will figure and what will not figure. But every subject under the sun is on the table. The two Prime Ministers are free to talk about anything that they would like. Whether it is actually discussed, we will brief you after the talks are over on Monday.

Q: Sir, you said that in Mumbai the Chinese Premier will have time to meet all the chief executives and senior members of the business community. Will he have time to meet survivors of 26/11 or members of the families of people who have died, since he is also going to be at that hotel? And since there is precedence with this, I think other senior leaders have done that in the past, is this something India suggested to the Chinese?

Official Spokesperson: We have explained to you the entire expanse of his programme here. These are matters which are discussed in advance between the two sides and worked out based on mutual agreement. We have explained to you what those are. If you have any suggestions to make in this regard, I would suggest you make them through appropriate channels either through the Chinese Mission or through our Protocol. What we are providing to you is what is the agreed programme here.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I have already explained to you and we will put it out in the public domain what is his programme here.

Q: Is India raising the issue of Chinese activity in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir? In the same context, is Sakshgam on the table?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I can only repeat what I have said earlier that everything is on the table and what will be discussed I cannot predict, the Prime Ministers of the two countries will decide. We will brief you after the event is over, after the meetings are over, you can be sure of that. We will do an early briefing as I was mentioning, and I hope that the Joint Secretary (External Publicity) will organise something on Monday itself.

Official Spokesperson: I think we are now getting into a repetition of questions but I will permit one last question on this.

Q: You said everything will be on the table. Will Chinese side raise the Dalai Lama and so-called anti-China activities, what do you think? What will be India's response if they raise it?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I am afraid I have to repeat what I said. It is all on the table. Whether it is discussed or not we will tell you after the meeting is over between the two Prime Ministers.

Official Spokesperson: I think it bears out my contention that we are repeating the questions and answers. Our suggestion is that once the meeting is over we will have a briefing for all of you and we will provide you information of what were the issues that were discussed. It is premature on our part to pre-empt what the Prime Ministers will discuss. And as he said, everything is available on the table, nothing is off the table.

With that takeaway, may I thank you all for being here?

Thank you very much

256. Media Statements by Prime Minister of India and Chinese Premier in New Delhi.

New Delhi, May 20, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Honourable dignitaries, ladies and gentlemen, and friends from the media, we will have the next event which is the media statements. I would request the Prime Minister of India to make his media statement.

Prime Minister of India (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Your Excellency Premier Li and ladies and gentlemen of the media: It is an honour for me to welcome Premier Li on his first official visit to India. It has been an immense pleasure to get to know him personally. I sincerely appreciate his reaching out to me on his first day in office and his choosing India as his first foreign destination as Premier.

Starting yesterday evening, Premier Li and I have had wide-ranging and candid discussions covering all matters of mutual interest and concern.

I am delighted that there are so many areas of convergence between us and on which there is a great deal of meeting of minds. Most importantly, we agreed that the relationship between our two countries is of growing significance and essential for our peaceful development and sustained economic growth, as well as for stability and prosperity in our region and the world.

India and China are two civilizational neighbours and have lived in peace through the ages. We have had our differences in more recent times, but over the last 25 years we have steadily built a mutually beneficial relationship. The basis for continued growth and expansion of our ties is peace and tranquility on our borders. While seeking an early resolution of the boundary question, Premier Li and I have agreed that this must continue to be preserved.

We also took stock of lessons learnt from the recent incident in the Western Sector, when existing mechanisms proved their worth. We tasked our Special Representatives to consider further measures that may be needed to maintain peace and tranquility along the border. We agreed that our Special Representatives will meet soon to continue discussions, seeking early agreement on a framework for a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable boundary settlement.

I also reiterated to Premier Li India's concerns about the effects on lower riparians of activities in the upper reaches of our shared rivers. It would be useful for the mandate of our Expert Level Mechanism to be expanded to include information sharing on upstream development projects on these rivers. I am glad that we have agreed to expand cooperation on trans-border rivers. It would also be useful for India and China to collaborate on a better understanding of the stresses on our shared Himalayan ecosystem.

I shared with Premier Li my view that the rise of China and India is good for the world and that the world has enough space to accommodate the growth aspirations of both our peoples. To make this a reality, it is important to build understanding between our two peoples. We agreed that both sides must work to strengthen greater trust and confidence, which in turn will permit much larger cooperation.

Economic cooperation constitutes a very important part of our relationship and the growth potential of our two economies can provide the engine for greater cooperation. There are many ongoing areas of cooperation that we will carry forward as outlined in the Joint Statement. I conveyed to Premier Li our concerns about the trade deficit and sought increased market access to China for our exports and investments. I also invited increased Chinese involvement in the vast opportunities in our infrastructure and manufacturing sectors.

The rapid development of our economies has opened up new opportunities for economic cooperation bilaterally in our region and globally, which our Strategic Economic Dialogue will identify and explore. We have also discussed the possibility of infrastructure development to link India's Northeastern region with Bangladesh, Myanmar, China and other countries in the Southeast Asian region.

Premier Li and I also used the opportunity to review the rapidly evolving global political and economic situation and resolved to strengthen our strategic communication and dialogue on these issues. We also agreed that we have a shared interest in an open multilateral trading system and in combating protectionism.

Before I conclude, let me say once again what a pleasure it has been to welcome Premier Li amongst us. I am sure that his leadership will go a long way in strengthening the relationship between our two countries and extending it to new frontiers. I look forward to seeing him again very soon and I have also accepted his gracious invitation to visit China at the earliest opportunity.

I thank you

Official Spokesperson: I now request the Premier of China to make his media remarks.

Premier of China (Mr. Li Keqiang): Your Excellency Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, ladies and gentlemen, friends of the press: It is my great pleasure in joining the Prime Minister to meet with our friends from the press and to inform you as soon as possible the consensus and the outcomes the two sides have arrived.

Both last night and this morning, together with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and other officials of the Indian Government, we have had multiple, friendly, in-depth and candid discussions. The most important outcome of these discussions is that the leaders of the two countries have reached strategic consensus and deepened our strategic trust.

Both sides believe that each country should see the other's development as a major opportunity for itself. China and India have a combined population that exceeds one-third of humanity. Amicable relations between China and India will be a positive thing for Asia, and a common development of China and Asia will provide new engines for the world economy.

Since we are strategic partners and we are good friends that can speak to each other with candour, so we do not deny that there are some problems between the two sides. Both sides believe that with regard to the boundary question, one that is left over by history, the two sides have over time established the principles for settling this question. And in the meantime we have worked together to maintain tranquility and peace in the border areas. Both sides believe that we need to improve various border-related mechanisms that we have to put into place and make them more efficient, and we need to appropriately manage and resolve our differences.

With regard to Indian concerns about transborder rivers, in recent years we have shared hydrological information with the Indian side bearing in mind the overall interests of our relations and acting in a humanitarian spirit. And we stand ready to step up communication with the Indian side with regard to the development of water resources and environmental protection.

China and India are friendly neighbours. So, neither side will do anything that damages the interests of the other side without getting benefit himself. The two sides have discussed these issues very candidly and we can inform the content of discussions to the press. That is because we have strategic consensus on these issues. And our two time-honoured nations have the wisdom to resolve these issues and overcome our differences.

Both the Prime Minister and I believe that there are far more shared interests between China and India than the differences that we have, and both sides need to draw wisdom from our long history and learn from our respective vast experiences. We need to confront the various issues with a broad mind and conduct dialogue on these issues in a mature and sensible way. We need to appropriately handle our cooperation by maintaining peace and tranquility in the border areas and on the transborder river issues.

The strategic consensus that we have arrived at creates the condition for expanding shared interests between China and India, and it also lays down the foundation for our two countries to seize the opportunities and modernize our two large developing countries.

China and India have a combined population of 2.5 billion. Together we account for over one-third of the world's population. Amicable relations, deeper cooperation and common development between China and India are a true blessing for Asia and the world at large. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh stated that the world is big enough to accommodate the growth aspirations of both China and India. I might add that without the common development of China and India, Asia won't become strong and the world won't become a better place.

By conducting effective and a sincere dialogue, the Prime Minister and I have reached the abovementioned consensus. These also represent the joint views of our two governments and our two peoples. We believe by arriving at these consensus we have made a big stride forward in our relationship and that there are unprecedented and enormous opportunities for opening a new chapter in China-India relations.

On the basis of the consensus, this time the two Governments during my visit have reached a joint statement that covers five major areas. On the basis of strategic mutual trust the two sides have reached agreement on a series of cooperation agreements that cover a multiple range of areas. These will help to boost all-round cooperation between China and India, the world's two largest developing countries. And just now the Prime Minister, myself, government officials from both sides, and the press, friends of the press, have witnessed the signing of these agreements. These are just the seeds that we sow today but in the near future they will blossom into towering trees laden with rich fruits.

Secondly, the two sides will discuss and explore ways to achieve trade and investment liberalization and facilitation and to work out a practical roadmap for arriving at a dynamic balance in our trading relationship. The two sides will also promote cooperation in infrastructure and industrial zones so that we can connect and complement the two largest developing markets of China and India.

Thirdly, the two sides have agreed to jointly explore the establishment of a BCIM economic corridor, and also to strengthen border trade between us. This way we will be able to increase connectivity between East Asia and South Asia.

Both between our two time-honoured civilizations and in the present day context we need to increase people-to-people exchanges in the fields of tourism, culture, youth affairs and nongovernmental ties so as to further deepen mutual understanding between our two peoples. And number five, the two sides have agreed to increase coordination and communication on major international and regional issues. Both sides would like to see the other to play a more important and constructive role in international affairs in the United Nations including in its Security Council.

It is fair to say that during this trip the two sides have arrived at multiple significant outcomes that can help to both deepen our strategic mutual trust and practical cooperation between the two sides. And that places us in a very favourable position for creating positive areas in Asian cooperation and in proving to be new engines for the world economy.

As I said to the press this morning, I have made India the first stop of my first overseas trip as the Premier of China. This is because India is an important neighbour for China. This is because India is one of the largest developing countries in the world with a population comparable to China's. This is also because I have my own good sentiments towards the people of India. Twenty-seven years ago I spent more than a week in this country as the leader of China's youth organization, and during that trip the seeds of friendship have been sown in my own heart.

In our history, our two civilizations have had uninterrupted and in-depth exchanges. Today facing the future we see enormous potential for the common development of both countries. We hope that the seeds we sow today in spring will be harvested in autumn and that there will be more bountiful fruits to show. And in that context we look forward to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit to China later this year so that together we can harvest the outcomes of cooperation and of friendship between our two countries. Thank you.

And I want to thank all of the friends from the press for your hard work and I hope you will join us in saluting the fruits of cooperation between China and India.

Official Spokesperson: With that we come to the end of this event.

257. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Indian Ambassador to China on Chinese Premier's ongoing visit to India.

New Delhi, May 20, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. As you know, we have just had the delegation-level talks between Prime Minister Singh and Premier Li. I have here with me Ambassador Jaishankar who is our Ambassador in China. Along with him is Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who also looks after China at headquarters. What we will try and do is to give you in a summarized form what we see as the importance of the visit.

You have with you a large number of documents which are available. Let me try and recall for you what they are. You have with you eight agreements. We have outlined what these agreements are. If any of you would like any clarifications on them, we will provide them. You also have with you a very substantive, productive and broad-ranging joint statement which gives you an understanding of the broad areas of convergence between India and China. Now let me try and summarise for you the visit before I ask Ambassador Jaishankar to speak a little bit more.

As you are aware, this is the first visit of Premier Li outside China. Therefore, we have repeatedly emphasized that for us this is a very important visit both in terms of gestures but also more importantly in terms of substance. When we mean substance we want you to have a look at the Joint Statement, the various areas – we will run through some of them with you – as well as the agreements which came out of the visit. It was also for us a very productive visit, productive again in terms of forward-looking areas that how we see the relationship growing. And finally you have yourselves seen the personal chemistry between Premier Li and Prime Minister Singh.

So, if I may summarise for us it has been two very very useful, productive, important, substantive days. We hope that the takeaway that all of you leave with from here is what we are trying to convey to you in terms of this visit.

I will now request Ambassador Jaishankar to speak to you for a few minutes because he has been involved with this visit since its inception to date, and he will give you a flavour of what went into it, what were the issues that were discussed, before we open the floor for questions. Ambassador Jaishankar!

Indian Ambassador to China (Dr. S. Jaishankar): Thank you, Akbar.

At the risk of some repetition, let me start really with what Akbar said, which is: it is a significant visit, it is a substantive visit, it is a productive visit, and he made the chemistry point.

Now why is it significant? I think an India-China visit at the level of a Premier is by definition a very significant visit. The fact that you have a Premier- level visit in India and China itself is a very significant event. The fact that it is the first stop of Premier Li's first visit abroad adds to the significance. And he himself made the point that he had given it some thought before deciding on India. He actually said that this underlined that India was a priority today in Chinese foreign policy.

Now, the substantive part. I think as Akbar mentioned, there were wide-ranging talks, candid. All matters were discussed. And it took place at a time when actually the relationship is expanding in many ways, cooperation is growing. There are issues but on the whole the view was that our shared interests are more than our differences. Regional and global issues also were discussed but not at the same length as bilateral ones.

In terms of the outcomes, the Joint Statement sort of reflects that and the agreements reflect it very accurately. Premier Li is a very outgoing person, very warm. He recalled his 1986 visit to India, quite nostalgic about it. So, that really in many ways sort of set the atmosphere.

On the bilateral side, I think the first big point was the discussions focused on the need to build greater trust. Obviously peace and tranquility issues came up because of recent happenings. I think the main point made from our side was that peace and tranquility on the border is the foundation of our relationship. Where really the discussions led to was that the Special Representatives would meet, they would discuss and consider further measures on how to strengthen peace and tranquility.

Economic issues took up a lot of time in the discussion. Obviously trade including the trade deficit, market access issues came up at some length. What we saw was that the Chinese Premier suggested very practical measures on how to deal with this. I would say, in the last few years certainly this was the most positive and most practical response that we have got at the high level from the Chinese side. Again some of it was in evidence in the agreements which were signed in terms of greater market access.

The second aspect of economic cooperation was investment. Really both sides saw investment as providing part of the solution to trade problems, that if there was more investment it would in a sense facilitate trade between the two countries, it would create more employment, it would open up new areas. I think projects particularly in the infrastructure sector were very positively looked at.

There was some discussion on energy cooperation, all forms of energy cooperation. There was a certain amount of interest in taking that forward. You saw from the agreements that some best practices in urbanization, in water usage were discussed and agreed upon. I should add here that the India-China CEOs' forum had its first meeting today. This was really the economic basket.

Water, in this case river, came up for discussion, trans-border rivers. I would really characterize the Chinese response as sympathetic. I think they recognize that we have concerns. They pointed out that they were responsible, that they would not do something which would damage our interests. And essentially what we agreed upon was that we would strengthen our cooperation based on our existing mechanism and now we have to work further on that.

There was some discussion on people-to-people relations. We signed an agreement on twinning cities. We have, as you know, other cooperation on teaching Chinese language, on tourism. We are working on liberalizing the visa system right now.

If I were to sum it up on the bilateral side, I would say it was a lot potential, new areas to be explored. I think a point made was that if India and China are both growing, surely our relationship should be growing at least as fast as we are each growing. I think that was fairly optimistic, fairly visionary in a way.

On the bilateral side I think the follow-up which we are looking at is that Raksha Mantri, Defence Minister, would be going to China soon. The dates would be announced when we are ready. NSA Mr. Menon would also be going to China as Special Representative to meet his counterpart. There will be a meeting of the Strategic Economic Dialogue which is headed on our side by Mr. Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, and at some point of time in the near future a meeting of our Commerce Ministers which is the Joint Economic Group. So, these would all now take place now that the Premier's visit is over.

Apart from that, on the regional, global issues I would just make three very quick points. Yesterday at dinner, global economy was discussed at some length. Again if I were to sum it up, it would be really that developing nations like India and China have a shared interest in a more open economy, in a less protectionist economy.

Then regional trade and connectivity came up for discussion. This included issues like the RCEP and the RTA, the bilateral FTA, which as many of you would be aware is a goal that we are looking at when conditions are right.

There was an agreement that we would study economic corridor of BCIM countries which of course would also now require us to consult Bangladesh and Myanmar before that goes forward. There was some discussion today on Afghanistan, and I think the Afghanistan position is very accurately captured by the Joint Statement paragraph.

I think on my side that is really what I have.

Official Spokesperson: With that we will then throw the floor open for questions. We will take about ten or twelve questions because Dr. Jaishankar has another appointment.

Q: Sir, in the backdrop in which the Chinese Premier has come here, was there any specific assurance on the border issue? Of and on there are assurances from the Chinese side but it does not work. What was new in this meeting?

Ambassador to China: First of all what was new was that it was a visit, it was coming after an incident which was very unusual. I think basically where the discussions headed was that we need to look into how this happened and what are the lessons to be learnt. That is where, as I pointed out, the understanding was that we would ask the Special Representatives to really lead that effort and they will look into the mechanisms, how they work, what were the shortcomings, how this happened. And if they have suggestions to make, I think both governments will look at it.

Q: Sir, was the border defence cooperation agreement discussed or how to go forward on it?

Ambassador to China: No.

Q: Did we ever ask them why this incident happened in Ladakh? It was not just a regular incursion. As you yourself said, it was an unusual incident and we still do not seem to have figured out why this happened in the first place.

Ambassador to China: During this visit obviously this issue was discussed at some length. You all heard the Prime Minister's media statement. If you look at the Joint Statement, we underlined the importance of peace and tranquility. The fact is that the boundary issue is a complicated issue. The agreement between the leaders was that this needed detailed examination. And that is really what they left, they charged the Special Representatives with that.

Q: Was there any specific discussion on building greater military-to-military trust and in maritime domain?

Ambassador to China: Yes, there was a certain amount of discussion particularly today on more defence cooperation and defence exchanges including maritime. The understanding was that we would work on this so that by the time Raksha Mantri's visit takes place we would be in a position to really show that this has gone forward.

Official Spokesperson: Manish, I would also refer you to paragraphs 22 and 23 of the Joint Statement. Paragraph 23 deals specifically with enhanced interaction in the military field, and paragraph 22 deals with bilateral cooperation on maritime security.

Q: Can you just talk about BDCA the draft of which was given by China to India on 4th of March? How do you look at this document? Have we given them our own counter suggestions? And you said that this issue did not come up before the two Premiers? Isn't it rather surprising, or was it by design?

Ambassador to China: The Chinese gave us their draft on the 4th of March. I think we gave them our draft on the 10th May. Obviously now we will be discussing it with the Chinese. Since our draft is pending their consideration, to me it is not at all surprising the matter did not come up because it is still something on which we need to engage them in detailed discussions.

Q: Dr. Jaishankar, the border talks have been going on since Rajiv Gandhi's visit to China in December 1988. You had a Joint Working Group and then SRs. One hears from academic circles something to the effect that at one point of time the Chinese have suggested that the existing Line of Control be treated as a permanent border. Is there any truth to that?

Ambassador to China: I am here just to brief you on a visit and whatever happened on a visit, not on what academics might tell you about a negotiation where they were not actually in the room. So, I think I do not want to get into what happened, or did not happen, or could have happened, or speculated to have happened. In terms of the visit this was not an issue.

Q: There is a reference to bilateral nuclear cooperation in the Joint Statement. What will be the shape of this nuclear cooperation, and did China agree to India's demand for a membership to various nuclear regimes?

Ambassador to China: We have had bilateral civil nuclear cooperation with China in the past, not in the recent past but in the past. Today the issue came up again. And you must bear in mind that we are today probably the two countries who have the largest planned civil nuclear energy programme. So, it makes great sense for us to exchange views and have other exchanges. So, I think in the meeting today the two Prime Ministers decided that this was an area that we should be doing more. The NSG issue did not specifically come up because I think that is still being worked at at another level.

Q: Dr. Jaishankar, you said that the talks you are trying to escalate and speed up also bilateral relations and bring them up to scale of the size of the two countries. You spoke about the visit of the Defence Minister, the NSA, Montek Singh Ahluwalia. Is there a timeframe that was discussed given the larger intention of speeding up everything including also for the border talks and the future meetings of the Special Representatives?

Ambassador to China: It was decided that the Special Representatives would meet soon. Here by talking soon, I am not talking months I am talking weeks. But I would hesitate to give you a date because I think they have not worked out a date yet.

Q: ... (Inaudible)...

Ambassador to China: Yes. So, I am telling you that they are meeting soon.

Q: Ambassador Jaishankar, I am a little confused, why does our Prime Minister think that the existing mechanism for peace and tranquility on the border is working while the Chinese Premier says there are deficiencies, it needs to be improved?

Ambassador to China: I do not think your characterization is accurate. Let me tell you the words I heard, and I had the advantage of being in the room. The words I heard were that, I mean they discussed this issue. And where they left it was, if there were shortcomings, if things did not happen as promptly as they should have, as effectively they should have, then definitely the whole matter is worth a very serious look. And then if they both agree that it is worth a serious look, then the logical people to look at it are the SRs. So, that is how that conversation went. I do not think the way you put it that one felt this way and one felt that way. I think there was an understanding on this.

Q: Did the Chinese side express any concern or dismay about the activities of the Tibetan refugees, particularly the Dalai Lama in India? And what was our response?

Ambassador to China: The matter came up, not at any great length, and our response was that the Tibetans in India do not conduct political activities from Indian soil, and we stand by that position.

Q: Sir, Premier Li kept referring to the strategic consensus that has been reached between India and China. Would you please elaborate what the strategic consensus is?

Ambassador to China: The way he used that term to the best of my understanding is that we have agreed on big and basic issues on how to take our relations forward. When you use the adjective strategic, it both indicates in a sense the long-term nature of the understandings between us and the enormity of the implications of what it is that we were discussing.

Q: Because we know that China proposed a new border defence cooperation agreement, and this time we are looking forward to the two sides to sign this agreement, but this time it does not happen. So, what is India's concern?

Ambassador to China: I have answered that. This is an ongoing negotiation. The Chinese have given us their proposal. We have given them our proposal. We gave them our proposal just a few days ago. The Chinese need a few days to study it like we took time to study this. So, it is something which will be discussed between us and only then you will see the result.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction. I do understand there were several of you who would like to ask another twenty-five questions but unfortunately we do not have the time.

Thank you

258. Joint Statement on the State Visit of Chinese Premier Li Keqiang to India.

New Delhi, May 20, 2013.

1. At the invitation of H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Mr. Li Keqiang, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, is on a State visit to India from 19 to 22 May 2013. Premier Li held talks with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and will call on H.E. Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, President of India. The leaders of the two countries had an in-depth exchange of views on bilateral relations and regional and international issues of mutual interest in a sincere and cordial atmosphere and reached broad consensus.
2. The two sides reviewed with satisfaction the comprehensive and rapid progress of India-China relations in the 21st century. Over the years, India and China have evolved an effective model of friendly coexistence and common development, which can be an example for relations between big, neighboring countries. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to abide by the principles and consensus arrived at by leaders of the two countries over the years concerning the development of India - China relations, and to further consolidate the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity on the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence and mutual sensitivities for each other concerns and aspirations.
3. India and China have a historic opportunity for economic and social development and the realization of this goal will advance peace and prosperity in Asia and the world at large. The two sides welcome each other's peaceful development and regard it as a mutually reinforcing process. There is enough space in the world for the development of India and China, and the world needs the common development of both countries. As the two largest developing countries in the world, the relationship between India and China transcends bilateral scope and has acquired regional, global and strategic significance. Both countries view each other as partners for mutual benefit and not as rivals or competitors.

4. The two sides hold that the right of each country to choose its own path of social, economic and political development in which fundamental human rights and the rule of law are given their due place, should be respected. The two sides will not allow their territories to be used for activities against the other. The two sides are committed to taking a positive view of and support each other's friendship with other countries.
5. Recognizing the growing bilateral relationship and the increasing global importance of both India and China, the two sides agreed to a regular exchange of visits between the Heads of State/ Government of the two countries. The leaders of the two countries will also continue to meet on the sidelines of important multi-lateral forums.
6. The two sides attached great importance to the active role of the Strategic Economic Dialogue in promoting macro-economic policy coordination and pragmatic cooperation in various fields between the two countries and expressed satisfaction over the progress made in the meetings of the Dialogue. They agreed to further strengthen cooperation in the areas of energy and environmental conservation, new and renewable energy and high-technology. The two sides agreed to enhance cooperation in the railway sector including heavy haulage and station development.
7. Considering the rapid changes in the world economic situation, the two sides tasked the Strategic Economic Dialogue mechanism to consider issues of macro-economic coordination, and to suggest possible responses by the two countries. Both countries share a common interest in preventing protectionism and in an open multilateral trading system. The two sides agreed to continue pushing forward the Doha Development Round, consider the potential for a bilateral Regional Trade Arrangement and review the state of negotiations on the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP).
8. The first meeting of the India - China CEO's Forum was held during Premier Li Keqiang's visit to India. The Prime Ministers of both countries look forward to the recommendations of the Forum to further enhance bilateral trade and investment.

9. While striving to realize the trade turnover target of US$ 100 billion by 2015, the two countries agreed to take measures to address the issue of the trade imbalance. These include cooperation on pharmaceutical supervision including registration, stronger links between Chinese enterprises and Indian IT industry, and completion of phytosanitary negotiations on agro-products. The Indian side welcomed Chinese enterprises to invest in India and participate in India's infrastructure development. Project contracting cooperation between the businesses of the two countries would be enhanced.
10. The two sides expressed willingness to carry out cooperation on establishing industrial zones so as to provide platforms for cluster-type development of enterprises of the two countries.
11. The two sides agreed to strengthen cooperation between their financial regulators, and support their banking institutions in setting up representative offices, branches or subsidiaries, and carrying out business activities subject to relevant laws and regulations. The two sides agree to promote cooperation between their financial institutions to provide funding for bilateral economic cooperation projects.
12. The two sides agreed to focus on areas of mitigation and management of earthquake and natural disasters, astronomy and astrophysics, technology research on climate change, traditional knowledge and medicine within the framework of India - China Committee of Science and Technology Cooperation.
13. To pursue mutual benefit and fulfill their international cooperation objectives, both India and China agreed to consider collaborating on development projects of common interest in third countries.
14. India and China decided to mark the 60th anniversary of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence (Panchsheel) in 2014 by designating it as the "Year of Friendly Exchanges". The two sides noted that youth exchanges play an important role in increasing mutual understanding and decided to continue with the annual exchange of 100 youth. Both sides encouraged Hanban on the Chinese side and CBSE on the Indian side to enhance their cooperation on Chinese language teaching.

15. In accordance with the Agreement to Facilitate Cooperation and Linkages between Indian and Chinese Cities and States/ Provinces, the two sides agreed to encourage their cities/ provinces to establish twinning relationships.
16. To promote trade, personnel movement and connectivity across the border, the two sides agreed to consider strengthening border trade through Nathu La Pass. The Chinese side shall provide greater facilitation to Indian pilgrims for the Gang Renpoche and Mapam Yun Tso Pilgrimage (Kailash Manasarovar Yatra). The Indian side conveyed appreciation to the Chinese side for the improvement of facilities for the Indian pilgrims.
17. The two sides agreed to enhance media exchanges and cooperation to improve the mutual understanding and friendship of the two peoples, and to hold a India-China High-Level Media Forum. The two Foreign Ministries will work closely together in this aspect. They also decided to complete the compilation of the Encyclopedia of India - China Cultural Contacts in 2014, and agreed to jointly start the project of translating each other's classic and contemporary works.
18. The two sides appreciated the progress made in promoting cooperation under the BCIM (Bangladesh, China, India, Myanmar) Regional Forum. Encouraged by the successful BCIM Car Rally of February 2013 between Kolkata and Kunming, the two sides agreed to consult the other parties with a view to establishing a Joint Study Group on strengthening connectivity in the BCIM region for closer economic, trade, and people-to-people linkages and to initiating the development of a BCIM Economic Corridor.
19. In view of the expanding trade and commerce and growing people-to-people contacts, it was agreed to work towards simplifying visa procedures.
20. As large developing countries committed to promoting the use of clean energy, India and China believe that expansion of civil nuclear energy program is an essential component of their national energy plans to ensure energy security. The two sides will carry out bilateral cooperation in civil nuclear energy in line with their respective international commitments.

21. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to promoting multilateral arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation processes. They support the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of all nuclear weapons and reaffirm their opposition to the weaponization of and an arms race in outer space.
22. The two sides agree to further enhance bilateral cooperation on maritime security, searching and rescuing at sea, oceanic scientific research and environment protection, work together to tackle increasingly outstanding non-traditional security threats, and strengthen cooperation in naval escort missions in the Gulf of Aden and waters off the coast of Somalia, earnestly safeguarding security of international sea-lanes and freedom of navigation.
23. The two sides noted that enhanced interaction in the military field was conducive to building mutual trust and confidence. Both sides agreed to hold the next round of joint training exercises later this year. Both sides also decided to increase exchanges between the Army, Navy and Air Force of the two countries.
24. The leaders expressed satisfaction over the work done so far by Special Representatives of the two countries on the Boundary Question and encouraged them to push forward the process of negotiations and seek a framework for a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable settlement in accordance with the Agreement on Political Parameters and Guiding Principles. Pending the resolution of the boundary question, the two sides shall work together to maintain peace and tranquility in the border areas in line with the previous agreements.
25. The two sides noted with satisfaction that the meetings of the India - China Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on Border Affairs held till date have been fruitful.

26. The Indian side expressed appreciation to China for providing flood-season hydrological data and the assistance in emergency management. The two sides will further strengthen cooperation on trans-border rivers. They agreed to cooperate through the Expert Level Mechanism on provision of flood-season hydrological data and emergency management, and exchange views on other issues of mutual interest.
27. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the enhanced bilateral engagement at the working level on wide-ranging issues of regional and global significance. Bilateral consultations on Afghanistan, West Asia, Africa and Counter-terrorism have been held recently and those on Central Asia, Maritime affairs and Disarmament, Non-proliferation and Arms Control will be held soon.
28. Both sides agreed that the Afghanistan issue concerns regional security and stability. As two important countries in the region, they reiterated their support for an "Afghan-led, Afghan-owned" reconciliation process and their commitment to working with regional countries and the international community to help Afghanistan achieve its objective of peace, stability, independence and development at an early date.
29. Asia-Pacific region plays an increasingly important role in global affairs. The two sides are of the view that the current priority of this region is to maintain peace and stability of the region, promote regional common development, as well as to establish an open, transparent, equal and inclusive framework of security and cooperation based on the observance of the basic principles of international law.
30. The two sides support multilateral cooperation mechanisms in Asia, take a positive view of each other's participation in regional and sub-regional cooperation processes, and support each other in enhancing friendly relations with their common neighbors for mutual benefit, and win-win results. Both sides agree to broaden cooperation in the East Asia Summit, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation and the Asia-Europe Meeting.

31. The two sides believe that the 21st century should be marked by peace, security, development and cooperation. The promotion of multi-polar world, economic globalization, cultural diversity and information revolution are high on the global agenda. The two sides will make joint efforts to democratize international relations and strengthen the central role of the United Nations in promoting global peace, security and development.
32. Noting their convergence on global issues, both sides agreed to enhance their cooperation in multilateral forums including United Nations. China attaches great importance to India's status in international affairs as a large developing country, understands and supports India's aspiration to play a greater role in the United Nations including in the Security Council.
33. As developing countries, India and China share common interest on several issues of global importance like climate change, Doha Development Round of WTO, energy and food security, reform of the international financial institutions and global governance. This is reflected in the close cooperation and coordination between the two sides within the BRICS and G-20 frameworks. The two sides agreed to enhance coordination in the follow up process of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development and in discussions on the post 2015 development agenda as well as international negotiations on climate change.
34. Both sides reiterated their resolute opposition to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and committed themselves to cooperate on counter-terrorism. They also emphasized the need to implement all relevant UN resolutions, in particular UNSC resolutions 1267, 1373, 1540 and 1624.
35. Premier Li Keqiang, on behalf of the Chinese government and people, expressed his appreciation to the government and people of India for their warm hospitality. Premier Li Keqiang invited Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to visit China at a mutually convenient time and Prime Minister Singh accepted the invitation with pleasure. The dates of the visit will be decided through diplomatic channels.

259. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the India-China MOUs to address concerns on trade deficit.

New Delhi, May 20, 2013.

India and China today here signed three Memorandum of Understandings (MoUs) on buffalo meat, fisheries and pharmaceuticals; and one agreement on feed and feed ingredients. These MoUs will address the growing trade deficit between the two countries. The trade deficit has increased from USD 1.08 billion in 2001-02 to USD 40.77 billion in 2012-13. The MoUs were signed during the visit of the Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, Mr. Li Keqiang to India.

The Union Minister of Commerce, Industry & Textiles Shri Anand Sharma said that "the signing of the MoUs between India and China is a good beginning to address the issues India is raising with China from time to time. All the sectors are of immense trade importance to India and India has clear price and quality competitiveness in these sectors to compete in the world market."

A MoU for the export of buffalo meat from India to China was signed between Chinese General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection and Quarantine (AQSIQ) and India's Agricultural and Processed Food Products Export Development Authority (APEDA). The export of buffalo meat is not allowed from India to China and this has been a long pending issue between two countries. With the resumption of trade, India hopes a big merchandise trade that will not only be helpful in reducing trade imbalance of India but also in China's food security by providing quality and hygiene meat products.

The Marine Products Export Development Authority (MPEDA) and AQSIQ signed a MoU on cooperation for import and export trade of fishery products. The MoU aims to institutionalise cooperation in promoting trade of fishery products and healthy development of trade between India and China. India is expecting more exports from India to China through this cooperation.

A MoU was also signed between Pharmaceuticals Export Promotion Council of India (Pharmexcil) and The China Chamber of Commerce for Import and Export of Medicines and Health Products (CCCMHPIE). India has been finding it difficult to expand its trade with China in the pharmaceutical sector. The signing of the MoU is expected to facilitate access to the China market in pharmaceuticals. The average imports of medicinal and pharmaceutical products from China during last five years were USD 4332.37 million vis-à-vis exports from India of USD 692.44 million.

An agreement was also signed between Export Inspection Council of India (EIC) and AQSIQ on trade and safety of feed and feed ingredients. India hopes a big merchandise trade for feed & feed ingredients after the resumption of trade as China has suspended import of feed and feed ingredients since January 1, 2012.

A work programme was also constituted on the Working Groups constituted during the 9th Joint Economic Group (JEG). The programme proposes concrete deliverables to constitute and define detailed mandate of the Working Groups as per the spirit of the JEG held on 27th August 2012 in New Delhi.

The bilateral trade between India and China had gone up from USD 2.09 billion in 2001-02 to the high of USD 75.59 billion in 2011-12; which tapered to USD 67.83 billion during the year 2012-13.

260. Press Release issued by the Presidents Secretariat on the call by the Chinese Premier on the President.

New Delhi, May 21, 2013.

Mr. Li Keqiang, Premier of the State Council of People's Republic of China called on President Pranab Mukherjee at Rashtrapati Bhavan today (May 21, 2013).

The President expressed happiness over the fact that India was the first country Premier Li was visiting after assuming office. He said it reflects the importance attached to India-China relations by the Premier.

The President said the India-China relationship is one of the most important in 21st century. Our vision for India-China relations is of a truly good neighbourly relationship that is based on a high degree of trust and understanding with a strong intersection of common interests. He said the two countries should be sensitive to each other's concerns and there is need to build trust as well as expand shared interests. The President also said that the trans-border rivers should unite rather than divide the two people.

Mr. Li Keqiang warmly reciprocated the President's words and assured the President that China sees India as a strategic partner and believes there is great potential for improved bilateral relations. It would do nothing to harm India's interests.

Beijing, June 29, 2013.

1. The 16th round of talks between the Special Representatives of India and China on the Boundary Question, Shri Shivshankar Menon, National Security Adviser and Mr Yang Jiechi, State Councillor took place in Beijing on June 28-29, 2013. The talks were held in a productive, constructive and forward-looking atmosphere.
2. The Special Representatives continued their discussions on a framework for a resolution of the Boundary Question, which constitutes the second step of a three- stage process.
3. As directed by the Prime Ministers of India and China, the Special Representatives also discussed the maintenance of peace and tranquillity in the India- China border areas including possible additional confidence building measures, ways and means of strengthening existing mechanisms for consultation and coordination on border affairs and methodology to enhance the efficiency of communications between the two sides.

4. The Special Representatives also reviewed the status of bilateral relations in the wake of the recent landmark visit to India of Chinese Premier Li Keqiang. They discussed regional and global issues of mutual interest.
5. The National Security Adviser Shri Menon called on Premier Li Keqiang on June 28, 2013.

* The Official Spokesman of the Chinese Foreign Ministry made a statement in this connection a day before the talks:

Q: China and India will hold the 16th Special Representatives' Meeting on the Boundary Question tomorrow. How do you see the future of special representatives' meeting?

A: At the invitation of Chinese Special Representative on the China-India boundary question and State Councilor Yang Jiechi, Indian Special Representative and National Security Advisor Shivshankar Menon will attend the 16th Special Representatives' Meeting on the China-India Boundary Question in Beijing on June 28 and 29. Besides State Councilor Yang Jiechi, Premier Li Keqiang and Foreign Minister Wang Yi will also meet with Special Representative Menon.

Premier Li Keqiang once said that friendship, cooperation and development between China and India is friendship, cooperation and development of over one third of the humanity, which is of major implications and significance to the whole world. We hope to make joint efforts with India to maintain the sound and steady development of our relationship, which serves the interests of the two peoples as well as regional peace, stability and development.

China-India boundary question is a complicated issue left over from history, which takes time to resolve. We must see that the two sides have made longstanding efforts for an early settlement of the boundary question. Positive progress has been made in the previous rounds of special representatives' meetings. We have signed the political parameters and guiding principles for the settlement of the boundary question and reached preliminary agreement on the framework of a solution. We are ready to work with the Indian side to make good use of the existing mechanisms and find an equitable, reasonable and mutually acceptable solution based on the agreement and consensus between the two sides. Pending the final settlement of the boundary question, we hope that the two sides could make joint efforts to uphold peace and tranquility in the border areas and prevent the boundary question from affecting the overall development of bilateral relations.

Reports in the Indian media said that the two countries discussed putting in place additional confidence-building measures (CBMs) and strengthening mechanisms for communication along the border, following two days of talks. They also attempted to push forward the slow-moving negotiations to clinch a framework to settle the boundary dispute.

The focus of this round of talks, however, shifted away from the actual process of negotiation to finding ways of strengthening mechanisms to prevent recurrence of incidents such as the April 15 incursion by Chinese troops in Depsang in eastern Ladakh. According to Media report at the start of the talks, Mr. Yang expressed the hope that the discussions would “help both sides take a strategic and long-term view of and better push forward the relationship.

Quoting a top Chinese diplomat the report said both countries were “in a joint march towards prosperity,” a development he described as “one of the most noticeable in the international landscape in the 21st century.”

About the Depsang incident Mr. Menon said that the fact that it had been handled successfully and peacefully, with both sides returning to the status quo, indicated progress. “We are making progress steadily. I think the proof is in the successful way we handled the Depsang [incident], and in the way we are discussing a new Border Defence Cooperation Agreement (BDCA),” he said.

On July 5, External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid said

On July 5, the External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid said in an interview with the Straits Times of Singapore: ‘India and China will not rush to resolve differences over their contested border even as there has been steady progress in the overall relationship. I think we have constantly, if not rapidly, made progress. I feel there is no reason why we should continue to feel a sense of alarm or discomfort. But it helps to remain cautious and vigilant and careful. Because it is not a relationship that has finally overcome the difficult issues that caused us to actually come into a confrontation. We are also very clear that it does not help to hasten resolution if you are not ready.’.

262. Media interaction by External Affairs Minister and Chinese Foreign Minister in Brunei Darussalam.

Chinese Foreign Minister (Mr. Wang Yi): We had a very cordial discussion like between good friends and brothers. If you take a look at how close the two of us are, you can see how close the relationship between our two countries is.

The most important thing that we agreed upon is to constantly push forward China-India relationship. Premier Li Kechiang just visited India, and we look forward to receiving Prime Minister Singh in China later this year. We believe that these two visits are like sowing the seed in spring and reaping the fruits in autumn, and this is our common goal which we believe serves the interests of both peoples.

We believe our two countries are natural strategic partners and we should engage in all-round cooperation in a wide range of areas. We are two big countries and we have the important responsibility; we believe that we shoulder this common responsibility to regional and global peace and stability.

External Affairs Minister of India (Shri Salman Khurshid): Thank you very much. As you can see, Asia's future lies here, together.

Between India and China we have reviewed the work that has to be done, that has already been done since Premier Li's visit. And amongst the various things that we are going to do is several consultations on the region in the areas that we are interested in.

Our Defence Minister will be in China in two days' time and we will take our defence cooperation to a higher level. And most important of all for you, we are looking at ways and means of getting the Chinese media and Indian media together.

Q: I have a question to the Chinese Foreign Minister. Sir, did you touch upon the border issue, the border dispute which we have; and do you think they have made any progress in the Sixteenth Round of talks between the SRs?

Chinese Foreign Minister: As you said, the Sixteenth Round of the Special Representatives consultation was just held in Beijing. As far as I know, it was a very successful round of discussion and good progress was made.

External Affairs Minister: And I have the same information that good progress was made.

Thank you very much.

Chinese Foreign Minister:

Thank you

263. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the talks between Defence Minister A. K. Antony and the Chinese leaders in Beijing.

New Delhi, July 5, 2013.

The Defence Minister Mr AK Antony who is on a four- day official visit to China held delegation level talks with his counterpart Gen Chang Wanquan in Beijing. Mr Antony also later called on Premier Li Keqiang.

During the meetings, both sides discussed a number of issues relating to bilateral defence relations, exchanges and interactions between the Ministries of Defence and Armed Forces of both countries and the regional and international security situation.

Premier Li and the Defence Minister conveyed that the new leadership in China attaches great importance to developing friendly and cooperative relations with India. Mr Antony conveyed that India reciprocates the sentiment and looks forward to building the relationship further on a foundation of mutual trust and confidence and based on mutual respect for each other's concerns. In the discussions between the two Defence Ministers, measures to promote mutual trust and confidence building between the Armed Forces were discussed. It was agreed that 'strategic communication' is required for building trust and understanding.

Both sides agreed on the need to maintain peace, tranquility and stability on the LAC. It was acknowledged that the border issue is a remnant of history which both sides are making efforts to resolve and it was agreed that the Special Representatives mechanism should continue to work towards a solution. Both sides also agreed that in the meanwhile, both countries will make joint efforts to maintain peace and tranquility on the borders and take measures to strengthen communication and coordination at various levels between the border guarding forces.

Among the measures for practical cooperation discussed was the conduct of the third joint Army exercise in China in October 2013. Both sides have also agreed that the Navies and Air Forces of both countries will also undertake enhanced professional exchanges.

Mr Antony was assisted by the Indian Ambassador Dr S Jaishankar, the Defence Secretary, Shri R.K.Mathur; GOC-in-C, Eastern Command, Lt General Dalbir Singh; FOC-in-C, Southern Naval Command, Vice Admiral Satish Soni and other officers of MoD and the Armed Forces.

Earlier on his arrival at the Bayi PLA Headquarters, Mr Antony was given a tri-Services guard of honour.

264. Joint Statement issued at the end of Defence Minister A.K. Antony's visit to China.

Beijing, July 6, 2013.

1. The Indian Minister of Defence, Mr AK Antony, paid an official visit to China from 4-7 July 2013 at the invitation of the Chinese Defence Minister Gen Chang Wanquan. He held talks with his counterpart Gen Chang Wanquan and also called on Premier Li Keqiang. Raksha Mantri also met State Councillor Yang Jiechi.
2. The two Defence Ministers held talks in a cordial and friendly atmosphere and had an extensive exchange of views on a wide range of defence and security issues. They reaffirmed that defence exchanges were an important facet of the India-China strategic and cooperative partnership for peace and prosperity.

3. Noting that peace and tranquility on the border was an important guarantor for the growth and development of bilateral cooperation, the Ministers emphasized the importance of enhancing mutual trust and understanding between the two militaries. They reviewed the working of agreements and protocols dealing with the maintenance of peace and tranquility and directed that it be further strengthened. Appreciating that border defence cooperation would make a significant contribution in this regard, they agreed on an early conclusion of negotiations for the Border Defence Cooperation agreement between the two Governments.
4. The Ministers discussed ongoing and proposed bilateral exchanges and welcomed the holding of the counter-terrorism bilateral joint exercise between their armies in China in 2013. They also agreed on the following additional exchanges and visits between India and China:
 - i. Senior military commanders from service headquarters, command/military region and field formations will exchange visits regularly on a mutually agreed annual schedule.
 - ii. Visits of border troop delegations would be enhanced to promote dialogue and strengthen trust and cooperation.
 - iii. Border Personnel Meetings(BPM) will take place with greater frequency and additional locations will be finalized after discussions.
 - iv. The Navies will increase ship visits, consider conducting joint maritime search and rescue exercises and cooperate in counter-piracy operations. The call by PLA Navy Hospital ship 'Peace Ark' to Mumbai in August 2013 was welcomed.

- v. The Air Forces will carry out high level visits and expand their functional exchanges. They would focus on topics of mutual interest including flight safety, aviation medicine and training.
 - vi. Military training institutions will also strengthen their exchanges at the faculty and student levels.
 - vii. To promote greater awareness and understanding among young officers of the armed forces, visits and exchanges will be carried out annually.
5. Defence Minister Antony invited his Chinese counterpart, Gen Chang Wanquan, to visit India in 2014 as convenient. The Chinese Defence Minister accepted the invitation.
6. Minister Antony expressed appreciation for the warm hospitality extended by the Minister of Defence of the People's Republic of China to him and his high level delegation during the visit.

265. Third meeting of the Working Mechanism for Consultations and Coordination (WMCC) on India-China Border Talks.

New Delhi, July 24, 2013.

The 3rd meeting of the Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs was held at New Delhi on 23-24 July, 2013. The Indian delegation was led by Shri Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia) and comprised of representatives of the Ministries of External Affairs, Defence and Home Affairs as well as members of the Indian Army and the Indo-Tibetan Border Police. The Chinese delegation was led by Mr. Ouyang Yujing, Director General, Department of Boundary and Oceanic Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprised of representatives of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and National Defence of the People's Republic of China.

The Chinese delegation called on Foreign Secretary, Shri Ranjan Mathai.

The talks were held in a constructive and forward-looking atmosphere. The two delegations reviewed recent developments in the India-China border areas with the objective of enhancing peace and tranquillity between the two countries. They discussed additional confidence building measures between the two sides. They also consulted on measures to improve the functioning of the Working Mechanism and make it more efficient.

The two delegations further discussed the possibility of introducing an additional route for the Kailash-Manasarovar Yatra.

The 4th meeting of the Working Mechanism will be held in China at a mutually convenient time.

* The talks were held in the wake of the three-week standoff in Ladakh's Depsang valley in April. Media reports said that the Officials attending, the third meeting of the Working Mechanism on India-China Border Affairs discussed the possibility of holding flag meetings between in Ladakh non-Army border forces — mainly the Indo-Tibetan Border Police and its Chinese counterparts. The eight representatives from each side also talked about increasing the number of venues for holding flag meetings. The 18-month-old Working Mechanism consists of multi-ministry representatives headed by a Foreign Office official from each side. The setup was meant to prevent gaps in communication between Ministries on both sides whenever an incident took place on the Line of Actual Control (LAC). The standoff ended with the return of the Chinese and Indian troops going back to original bases without firing a shot. The Working Mechanism felt such incidents ought to be eliminated altogether. In this respect, they decided to consider the proposal of involving the auxiliary forces in flag meetings that were till now held between the Indian Army and the People's Liberation Army. The Working Mechanism was set up in January last year (2012) and essentially tries to ensure that both sides adhere to the spirit of the three India-China pacts on maintaining tranquillity on the LAC.

266. Information supplied by the Ministry of Defence to the Lok Sabha in answer to a question on the Chinese intrusion into Indian territory.

New Delhi, August 5, 2013.

During the past three years from January 2010 to till July 2013, a total of 28 violations of Indian Airspace by other countries have been reported. All such cases are taken up with the concerned countries through laid down channels as per established procedure.

There is no commonly delineated Line of Actual Control (LAC) between India and China. There are areas along the border where India and China have differing perceptions of the LAC. Both sides undertake patrols upto their respective perceptions of the LAC. On account of differences in the perception of the LAC, certain transgressions incidents take place on the ground. Government regularly takes up any transgression / incident with the Chinese side through established mechanisms. Government takes adequate measures to safeguard the sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of India by reviewing the threat perception from time to time, and takes appropriate steps to meet the threats. Development work in border areas is carried out through close coordination between security forces and local administration.

Indian Territory under the occupation by China in Jammu & Kashmir is approximately 38,000 sq. kms. In addition, Pakistan illegally ceded approximately 5,180 sq. kms. Of Indian Territory in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir to China. India and China have appointed Special Representatives to work out the framework for a boundary settlement.

267. Information supplied to the Lok Sabha by the Ministry of External Affairs regarding Chinese intrusions into Indian Territory.

New Delhi, August 7, 2013.

There is no commonly delineated Line of Actual Control (LAC) in the border areas between India and China. From time to time, on account of differences in the perception of the LAC, situations have arisen on the ground that could have been avoided if we had a common perception of the LAC. Government regularly takes up any transgression along the LAC with the Chinese side through established mechanisms including border personnel meetings, flag meetings, meetings of Working Mechanism for Consultation & Coordination on India- China Border Affairs and diplomatic channels. The two sides have reiterated, on many occasions, their commitment to maintain peace and tranquility along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China border areas, pending a final settlement of the Boundary Question. Government keeps a constant watch on all developments having a bearing on India's security and takes all necessary measures to safeguard it.

268. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Chinese Dams on Brahmaputra.

New Delhi, August 7, 2013.

The recently released 'Outline of the 12th Five Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development of the People's Republic of China' indicates that three more hydropower projects on the main stream of the Brahmaputra River in Tibet Autonomous Region have been approved for implementation by the Chinese authorities. A hydropower project at Zangmu is under construction. Government carefully monitors all developments on the Brahmaputra River. As a lower riparian State with considerable established user rights to the waters of the River, India has conveyed its views and concerns to the Chinese authorities, including at the highest levels of the Government of the People's Republic of China. India has urged China to ensure that the interests of downstream States are not harmed by any activities in upstream areas.

The Minister of External Affairs Shri Salman Khurshid gave this information in a statement in Lok Sabha today.

269. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the signing of the MoU with China to address trade deficit.

New Delhi, August 14, 2013.

India and China have signed MoUs /Agreements to promote Indian exports to China during the visit of Premier Mr. Li Keqiang to India in May 2013. Details are given below:

- (i) MoU for the Export of Buffalo Meat from India to China entered into between the Agricultural and Processed Food Products Export Development Authority (APEDA) and the General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection and Quarantine of the People's Republic of China (AQSIQ)
- (ii) MoU on Cooperation Related to Import and Export Trade of Fishery Products entered into between the Marine Products Export Development Authority (MPEDA) and AQSIQ
- (iii) Agreement on Trade and Safety of Feed and Feed Ingredients entered into between the Export Inspection Council of India (EIC) and AQSIQ
- (iv) MoU between the China Chamber of Commerce for Import and Export of Medicines and Health Products

(CCCMHPIE) and Pharmaceuticals Export Promotion
Council of India (Pharmexcil) for co-operation on Pharma.

Details of import-export and trade deficit with China during last three years are given below:-

Table-1; Trade & Trade Deficit Statistics between India and China

USD	Million		Value in

Major items of Indian exports to China include cotton raw & yarn, non-ferrous metals, iron ore, other ores and minerals, plastic & linoleum products, spices, Dyes/intermediates, machinery & instruments and petroleum (crude & products). Major imports from China include electronic goods, machinery, organic chemicals, project goods, fertilizers, iron and steel, transport equipments, electric machinery (except electronics) and manufactures of metals.

With the implementation of the above MoUs, export of buffalo meat, and feed and feed ingredients to China are expected to benefit. With the operationalization of the MoU on co-operation on Pharma between CCCMHPIE and the Pharmexcil, Indian generic drugs are expected to get market access in China.

270. Press Release issue by the Ministry of Defence on the information given to the Lok Sabha regarding the India-China Border Defence Pact.

New Delhi, August 20, 2013.

A draft of a Border Defence Cooperation Agreement has been received from the Chinese side. Two rounds of negotiations have been held so far. The purpose of the proposed Agreement is to formalize mechanisms and procedures to enhance mutual trust and confidence between the border troops of India and China and to facilitate the maintenance of peace and tranquility along the border with China. The ongoing and proposed exchanges between the Armed Forces of India and China include visits at various levels, conduct of exercises, ship visits and training-related exchanges. This information was given by Defence Minister Shri AK Antony in a written reply to Shri Eknath M. Gaiwad and others in Lok Sabha today.

271. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the 5th India-China Strategic Dialogue.

New Delhi, August 20, 2013.

The 5th India-China Strategic Dialogue was held at New Delhi today. The Indian side was led by Foreign Secretary Sujatha Singh and the Chinese side was led by Vice Foreign Minister Liu Zhenmin. The discussions covered bilateral, regional and global issues of mutual interest.

Taking stock of developments in bilateral ties since the successful visit to India of Chinese Premier Li Keqiang, the two sides discussed several issues including enhancing understanding on the utilization of trans-border river waters, expanding bilateral trade and investment while addressing problems of the large and growing deficit faced by India, ways of maintaining peace and tranquility along the Line of Actual Control

(LAC) in the India-China border areas, methods of boosting cultural cooperation as well as people-to-people exchanges and expansion of scientific and technological cooperation. The two sides also discussed the possibility of a visit to China, later this year, by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. The potential and prospect for BCIM economic cooperation was also touched upon.

Future cooperation in the BRICS framework, ways of ensuring an open, inclusive and transparent architecture in the Asia-Pacific region and the outlook for Afghanistan in 2014 and beyond were other areas of discussion between the two sides.

Vice Foreign Minister Liu called on External Affairs Minister.

The 6th India-China Strategic Dialogue will be held at Beijing at a mutually convenient time.

272. Meeting between Minister of Commerce Anand Sharma and Chinese Minister of Commerce Gao Hucheng.

Brunei, August 20, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce and Industry Minister Shri Anand Sharma had a bilateral exchange of views with the Chinese Minister of Commerce Gao Hucheng today during his visit to Brunei where he is attending several ministerial meetings on Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, East Asian Economic Ministers Meeting and the ASEAN-India Ministerial meeting. This was the first meeting of the two ministers after the visit of the Chinese Prime Minister to India in June.

Ministers followed up their discussion with a view to plan for the next meeting of the Joint Economic Group likely to be scheduled in late October this year in Beijing. The Commerce and Industry Minister informed the Chinese Minister about India's preparedness for further engagements in the three working groups constituted during the Prime Ministerial Meeting earlier this year. The working group on the trade and economic cooperation is mandated to prepare an action oriented work plan for improving India's trade imbalance with China. Shri Sharma specially drew the Chinese Minister's attention to India's pending request for facilitating Indian exports of Pharmaceuticals, Agricultural products, Buffalo meat and Information Technology services. He was assured by his counterpart that China would make every effort to facilitate imports from India for bridging trade imbalance. They agreed that the working group should meet in September for further work. They also agreed that the other two working groups on Trade in Services and Trade Statistics should also meet in September with a view to implement the decisions of their leaders. The Indian minister sought Chinese investment in manufacturing in the National Manufacturing Investment Zones. China showed special interest in infrastructure, Power and Capital Goods manufacturing. They will finalize the details of such understanding during their next meeting in October. In the last JEG Meeting with China on 27th August 2012 in New Delhi, Shri Sharma had handed over to the Chinese Minister of Commerce the roadmap for enhanced cooperation between India and China in IT& ITeS and the pharmaceuticals sector. If implemented, it would surely be helpful in bringing down the trade deficit with China. "A favourable action in the matter is needed from Chinese side. India and China have many complementarities in these sectors particularly in IT and ITeS sector and the Pharmaceutical sector. Joining hands in these sectors would prove a win-win situation for both the countries" said Shri Sharma.

The minister also exchanged views on the state of negotiations on the Doha Round for the Ministerial meeting in Bali. They both agreed that they would like to see Trade facilitation, Proposal regarding Food Security and the development package to be harvested in Bali. They shared their common views on their strong requirement to see the food security proposal accepted in the Bali ministerial.

During January- June 2013 India's export to china stood at USD 5.42 billion whereas imports were USD 24.70 Billion.

New Delhi, September 16, 2013

Honourable External Affairs Minister

H.E. Vice Minister Zhou Mingwei

Distinguished friends from the Indian media

And honoured guests from the Chinese media who have travelled to New Delhi to be with us for this inaugural meeting of the India China Media Forum.

As a well-known Chinese proverb goes "the journey of a thousand miles begins with a small step." From what I have heard from my colleagues the vibrant, robust and productive discussions earlier today at the India-China Media Forum have set in motion the beginning of an exciting and multi-pronged conversation between opinion leaders from media organisations of our two countries.

This is only to be expected as it is estimated that the total number of registered media publications in both our countries taken together is more than 100,000. The total number of TV channels exceed more than 1000. And, the number of those who are using the social media from both our countries taken together are in the hundreds of millions. Yet today cumulatively there are little more than a dozen news organisations from India and China with correspondents reporting on news about each other. So we have a dozen people from amongst the 2.5 billion of us who have this privileged task of reporting directly about each other and helping us understand each other better.

I hope that your interactions today have opened new pathways, beyond the dozen. A more meaningful and productive relationship between the media organisations of our two ancient civilisations which are transforming themselves and are re-emerging as key players on the world stage is essential.

The imperatives for greater media cooperation are all in place.

From less than a billion dollars a little more than a decade ago, the India-China bilateral trade is now hovering around $70 billion, and, despite the festering global downturn we are aiming at a trade target of $100 billion by 2015 even as we work to reduce the balance of trade and ensure sustainability. The economic and commercial linkages between India and China will keep growing thereby ensuring that the economic imperative for a better understanding of the matrix of our relationship is only going to get stronger.

In an increasingly interdependent global world India and China both desire to co-exist and co-prosper. We have commonalities relating to the international economic system, energy security, climate change and the environment. Both want a stable Asia-Pacific that will allow us to sustain our economic growth. Both are looking towards cooperating on maritime security as we have a common interest in freedom and security of transportation on the global commons. Both are wrestling with the new challenges posed by non-traditional threats and are pursuing new frontiers in space and cyberspace. So the scope of our international cooperation has widened.

Yes, the boundary question which is a particularly difficult issue remains unresolved. Yes, we have differing perceptions on some issues. And, Yes we have potential differences on other matters. However, as governments we have set up a number of mechanisms for dialogue and communication to address these issues. Yes there is need to widen and deepen the scope of our engagement in some areas. And Yes, I can with confidence say, we are endeavouring in a mature spirit of reconciliation and pragmatism to manage issues that arise in our relationship even as we build on the commonalities.

However, in this day and age where our stakes are growing by the day in terms of their scope such channels of communication and engagement cannot remain confined to what Governments do. The media is an important stake holder, in varying degrees, in both our societies. As the scale of India-China interactions has grown so must there be a quest amongst media organisations to find a new equilibrium in our understanding of each other.

I am, therefore, happy to see a frank and free-wheeling exchange of ideas among leading opinion-makers of both countries with a view to taking this important project of bridging knowledge and information deficit forward. There is a lot riding on this exercise of developing and refining mutual perceptions of each other - an enduring diplomatic and strategic relationship between the two countries can't thrive without adequate understanding of each other's societies, cultures, systems and ethos.

Right now, there is a deficit both in terms of information about each other as well as in terms of the quality of perceptions. There is not enough reporting about each other in the media of the two countries. I am told that a survey by The Global Times, China's influential newspaper, has shown that the reporting on India in Chinese media platforms has declined sharply in the last two years. I am sure there must have been discussions on the reasons for this apparent decline in interest in India and also constructive suggestions on how to bridge this gap.

Also, the same survey has shown that besides India and China, border and incursions are most used words in the reporting about China in the Indian media. The survey, my Indian media friends tell me, is a little unfair as more than 85 per cent of stories on China in India media are neutral, and very often contains elements of admiration about China's accomplishments in myriad fields. These statistics point to the nature of the problem: first, there is limited interest in each other; and second, if there is interest it is focused around a set of specific themes creating asymmetry and perhaps also spawning prejudice.

I understand that the discussions to day have shown, there is a candid acknowledgement of this situation and at the same time a willingness to address the situation.

As the great Chinese sage-philosopher Confucius said memorably:

"When things are investigated, knowledge is extended. When knowledge is extended, thoughts are made sincere, when thoughts are made sincere, the heart and mind is rectified..."

There is a striking echo of this spirit of seeking truth and keeping doors and windows of minds and hearts open in what the father of the nation, Mahatma Gandhi, said:

"I do not want my house to be walled in on all sides and my windows to be stuffed. I want the cultures of all the lands to be blown about my house as freely as possible. But I refuse to be blown off my feet by any."

It is with this deep civilizational perspective and the purity of mind and heart we should approach the India-China relationship and aspire for greater heights in years to come.

Friends, there has been plenty of food for thought, and now it's time to have real food. Thank you all for finding time to be here. I hope you will enjoy your dinner and carry fond memories of the intellectual feast which is what the day-long discussions can be best described as.

I wish our Chinese guests a pleasant stay in India and a happy and safe journey back home.

Thank you

274. Address by External Affairs Minister and Chinese Minister of the State Council Information Office during inauguration of India-China Media Forum.

New Delhi, September 16, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Ladies and gentlemen, Hon. Minister, Delegates from the media in India, and our Chinese friends who have traveled a long way to be with us here: I would like to welcome you to this first effort of ours at an India-China Media Forum.

For those of you who are perhaps not aware of the background, let me try and summarise this. This is an effort that has been in the making for some time but it gathered momentum when External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid had discussions with his Chinese counterpart earlier this year. The idea was to provide a platform of the media so that they can interact directly between themselves. So, what we have done is to provide that platform. The rest is for the representatives of the Indian and the Chinese media to take this further.

As a Chinese saying goes, of a good beginning cometh a good end. So, as a good beginning when the Chinese Delegation arrived here, we decided we start with the best that India can offer, and that is a visit to the Taj Mahal. We hope that with that good beginning we provided a platform for all of you to interact; and we look forward to this evening for the end product.

I am particularly grateful to our Chinese colleagues who have been able to get together a team of media representatives which represents virtually every section of the Chinese media. For our part it was a difficult choice. We have more than 90,000 Indian publications, almost 800 Indian TV channels, and social media is as vigorous as that in China. So, it was a difficult decision, but we did manage to bring a representative group of Indian media representatives here.

I do not want to take much of your time but only to set the ball rolling I will request the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid to deliver his Inaugural Address because he was somebody who started this process. I am grateful for him for being here today and kicking off, so to say, this process in its actuality. External Affairs Minister!

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Good morning to all of you. I have the great honour of the presence of His Excellency the Minister Cai Mingzhao, His Excellency the Vice Minister Zhou Mingwei, distinguished friends from the Chinese media and Indian media, and ladies and gentlemen.

I have a written speech but I thought it is important for us to say something from the heart to our Chinese friends, communicate something which we believe is extremely important for two major countries of Asia and the world.

Often we find ourselves speaking of the 21st century being the Asian century. And it is our firm belief that the Asian century dream will remain unfulfilled if India and China are unable to find congruence on important ways in which we think on global issues, and we know how to communicate effectively from the heart and the head about our dreams with you and your dreams with us.

I take it on board the Chinese saying 'we are living in interesting times' is indeed critical for our understanding of the effort that we are trying to put in towards making Asian century truly a successful century.

I have, in my few months in the External Affairs, emphasized in the formatting and formulation of foreign policy, the very important role that language plays in diplomacy. Therefore, it is important for us to work on a common language. A common language is not a hybrid of the Chinese and Indian languages, of Mandarin and of Hindi or any other Indian language, but a common language is something that even if not spoken, communicates because it is the ideas that converge. Ideas have a language of their own. And I wish and hope that our conclave here of the media on two sides will be able to provide a bond and link of ideas that would translate themselves into a common language.

We know that historically and culturally we have a very very significant link. In the Mahabharat itself, there are, I understand, at least seven references to China. I also know that in our understanding of Islamic philosophy China is seen as a destination in search of knowledge and connectivity with the world. The spread of Buddhism, we all know - and I have just traveled through parts of the neighbourhood countries of China where Buddhism retains a distant echo even after enormous changes having taken place civilisationally in those countries in Central Asia, in Southeast Asia - remains significantly important cultural and spiritual presence in China. Thirty-five thousand words of Pali and Sanskrit origin, I understand, have been found by scholars in the Mandarin language.

When we speak of historical links, travels of scholars and intellectuals, Chinese itinerant scholars like Hiuen Tsang and Fa Hien studied at the ancient Nalanda University. And the good news is that we together - China and India along with other colleagues in ASEAN - are now working on re-establishing and reviving the centuries-old university in Bodh Gaya in Nalanda.

In the 20th century, our links have inevitably been of a very significant nature. From the Indian side, Mahatma Gandhi, Gurudev Ravindranath Tagore and Jawaharlal Nehru helped create a soaring vision of India that incorporated our relationship with China.

Over the years, we sit here in a building that amplifies and symbolizes the Panch Sheel or the five principles of peaceful coexistence, which continue to be the basic framework of our relationship even as the peaceful and harmonious coexistence that we have known for over a four thousand years - but for a short interlude that both of us feel must become quickly a part of history as we look forward to significant cooperation between us.

It is a fact that we still have an undefined boundary and, therefore, differences in perception - something that appears from time to time to become an insurmountable problem. But we know, deep in our hearts we know, that not only is this not an insurmountable problem but also that both of us are completely and totally committed to eradication and removal of these irritants in a relationship that is significantly valuable to both of us and which we believe matters enormously in the years to come to the way the world will be shaped. Therefore, as I said, language becomes important to reach out to each other, clear cobwebs of misconceptions, misunderstandings of the past, the present and even of the future.

As we do this exercise, I have in mind the Chinese involvement that we encourage, that we welcome, and that we seek for working more closely in infrastructure in our country. We are looking for at the same time greater market access in China for our pharma and the IT companies to provide a more balanced trade between our two countries - a matter that was treated as of high importance between the visit of Premier Li. But we hope that even as we work on balancing of trade, investments will significantly compensate to some extent the importance of sustainable balanced trade.

All this we believe is important in the backdrop of not only our economic engagement but also our working together on many many regional and global issues and much closer cooperation and collaboration. And I do believe that this is happening in a substantive way in many areas such as global trade regimes as well as climate change.

The important thing is for us to understand what will be our relationship. Will we see ourselves only as an artificial construct of rivals and competitors? Or will we see ourselves possibly in a multidimensional role with each other, collaborating, cooperating, competing, assisting, sharing, and - if I might add an important word - caring for each other?

Our Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, as you will recall, has said on many occasions that there is enough room in the world for India and China to grow together and to flourish. This in fact I think echoes the Chinese notion of 'a harmonious world' - 'shijie datong' - a synthesis which goes well with the concept of one world enshrined in the Indian ethos of Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam.

Therefore, speaking of language, our connectivity, our shared goals, and our shared aspirations, it becomes important that the speaking voice of our two countries, the media that we cherish and value enormously in our country as a pillar of strength to our democracy, not always necessarily in agreement with government but that is the beauty of having a thousand voices express one strong sentiment of solidarity and patriotic zeal. But we do hope that this interaction here will help in developing constructive reporting and analysis methodology through better understanding of each other's working systems, of each other's – if I may go back again – language.

Independence of the media for us has been an extremely important dimension of Indian democracy. And independence of course comes both ways, with rights and obligations, something that applies to all citizens of our country. And what is the balance that we find within our own system is something that I am sure that you will find interesting coming directly from the very people who are the purveyors of that balance.

Having said this, I would say that there are and there will remain periodically between us - as trust and ability to understand each other better continues to deepen and widen, and the footprint of our work together grows in the world – there will be moments of hyper sensitivity, sensitivity, and moments where we need critical care in conveying what we believe is important for us respectively.

And I do urge colleagues on both sides to look at whether there is permissible, within our system, some methodology that allows for a larger national interest, and here a transnational interest, to prevail over a desire to report more aggressively and to report more extensively. But this is really not something that can be dictated, it is not something that can be normatively imposed. This is something that only can come from within our respective systems, our understanding, our cultural ethos, and of course our professional training.

Finally, I might just bring in something that I am sure is of great interest to the conventional media on our side and certainly on your side - and that is something that we are still learning about, something that we are still learning to deal with – the social media. Social media comes really in a form which is unlike anything that we have known in the past in terms of governance, in terms of decision making, in terms of influence on public policy. We are still learning, and I am sure that your experiences in social media will also be very edifying and educative for us.

If I might quote Chinese Indologist Ji Xianlin, whom India recognized by conferring the national award of Padma Bhushan, "China and India have stood simultaneously on the Asian continent. Their neighbourliness is created by heaven and constructed by earth". We do not know much about heaven, we are happy to learn from you about heaven, but being earthlings we need to talk more and know each other better to fructify the full potential of this relationship between our two countries.

I wish you all the best in your discussions and hope to hear from you at the end of the day of the ideas that you together suggest for our moving forward with greater strength, greater joy and greater creativity.

Thank you very much

Minister of the State Council Information Office of the People's Republic of China (Mr. Cai Mingzhao)

Distinguished Minister Khurshid,

Friends from Chinese and Indian media,

Ladies and gentlemen,

I am very glad to come to the beautiful city of New Delhi, to attend the First China-India Media Forum. First, I would like to extend my warm congratulations on the convening of this forum on behalf of the State Council Information Office of the People's Republic of China! I would like to sincerely thank Chinese and Indian journalists, experts and scholars present at the forum!

Chinese Premier Li Keqiang paid an official visit to India during May 19-22 this year. India was the first country that he visited after assuming the post of Chinese Premier. This suggests that China's new government attaches great importance to China-India relations.

During the visit, the two sides signed a number of cooperative agreements, including documents on economic and trade cooperation. They also issued a joint statement, which charted the future development direction of our bilateral relations. Both Chinese and Indian media covered Premier Li's visit with great attention and enthusiasm. Premier Li asked me to convey his thanks to Chinese and Indian journalists.

This China-India Media Forum is a specific measure to carry out the decisions made during Premier Li's visit and to enhance cultural exchanges between the Chinese and the Indian people. I believe that this forum will further deepen understanding between media of the two countries, expand their areas of cooperation and push media exchanges and cooperation to a higher level.

Just like you, I'm also a media professional. I worked for long time with Xinhua News Agency and People's Daily, the two most famous media in China, for more than twenty years. I fully understand that the nature of journalism is to pursue new development and changes and report progresses of the times. There are no two other countries like China and India, each with a population of more than 1 billion, which have achieved rapid growth in the past few decades. This is an unprecedented historic event both Chinese and India media people should cover with great enthusiasm.

The fact that China and India are developing simultaneously illustrates that the world is big enough for us to develop at the same time. It suggests that we have each found a development path that suits our respective national conditions. We should walk hand in hand to continue along the paths that suit our own national conditions.

Since China and India established diplomatic ties more than 60 years ago, the relations between the two countries have been growing soundly and comprehensively. Our mutual strategic trust has been gradually enhanced. Our bilateral ties have become more resilient to disturbances. Our two countries' interests have become more intertwined. The strategic economic dialogue and other mechanisms have become more well-established. The areas of pragmatic cooperation continue to expand. Cultural exchanges keep growing. Friendship between the two peoples has deepened. The two countries have often worked together in international and regional affairs to safeguard common interests.

Looking to the future, China-India relations have great potential for growth. As close neighbors and partners, friendly and pragmatic cooperation between China and India is in the fundamental interests of both nations, as well as a blessing for Asia and the world.

Ladies and gentleman,

Relations between nations lie in amity between the people, while amity between the people lies in mutual understanding. Exchanges between people constitute an important cornerstone of friendly relations between nations.

From past to present, there are many examples about the exchanges between the Chinese and the Indian people. Tagore is a household name in China and India. One of his students, Wei Fengjiang, came from China.

Eighty years ago, in 1933, the 22-year-old Wei arrived in India, becoming the first modern Chinese scholar to study Indian history and literature in India. After returning to China in 1939, Wei authored and translated many books to introduce the Indian culture and history to the Chinese people.

After Wei passed away, a statute of him was built in Zhejiang Yuexiu Foreign Languages Institute in Shaoxing City, where he once worked, to commemorate his important contribution to China-India cultural exchanges.

Since the 1920s, a large number of famous Chinese scholars, such as Liang Qichao, Cai Yuanpei, Zheng Zhenduo, Xu Beihong, Ji Xianlin, Tan Yunshan and Tan Zhong, have actively contributed to friendly exchanges between the Chinese and the Indian people.

Meanwhile many famous Indian scholars have studied China and promoted bilateral exchanges. These scholars include Swami Vivekananda, Sri Aurobindo, Radhakrishnan, Manik Artatrana Nayak, and Kamal Sheel. The seeds of friendship they sowed have now grown into exuberant tall trees.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Media is an important tool to disseminate information, transmit culture and bridge different civilizations. They serve as a bridge to enhance understanding between the people and to foster friendship.

In recent years, Chinese and Indian media have played unique and positive role in maintaining and consolidating strategic cooperative partnership between the two countries. Exchanges and cooperation between media in the two countries are progressing comprehensively. Exchanges between executives of mainstream media are more frequent and so are those between media professionals. Forums, seminars and dialogues have promoted communication between Chinese and India media, significantly contributed to the development of bilateral relations, and enriched the comprehensive bilateral cooperation.

Nonetheless, for some reasons, Chinese and Indian media still do not have sufficient understanding of each other's country, still cannot fully reflect the current status of the friendly bilateral relations, and still cannot meet the two peoples' demand for information about the other country.

To promote media exchanges, I would like to make the following proposals:

First, build this forum into a long-term and institutionalized platform for media exchanges. The forum could be held every year, in turn in India and China. Press officials of the two governments and executives of major media institutions will be invited. Participants will have extensive and in-depth discussions on issues of common concerns.

It is necessary for Chinese and Indian media to engage in long-term and frequent dialogues and communication, pushing us to see each other rationally and objectively and presenting a real China and a real India to domestic audience, so as to promote the healthy development of bilateral relations and deepen understanding and friendship between our two peoples.

Second, strengthen pragmatic media cooperation between our two countries. Currently, China and India have altogether about 20 reporters stationed in the other country, which is inadequate given the two countries' population size and the importance of the two countries' relations. Obviously, these reporters are not enough to meet the two peoples' demand for information about each other.

I suggest that media of both countries carry out extensive cooperation in mutual visits, article exchanges and joint interviews. I hope that they could gradually station more reporters in each other's country, or send more reporters to each other's country to conduct interviews, meet local residents, and gather real, fresh and first-hand information.

Third, media of both countries should help maintain our bilateral relations. Chinese and Indian media have different cultural backgrounds, perspectives and reporting methods, which is understandable. All media should report truthfully, objectively and fairly. Media should report more on the two countries' efforts to enhance communication and mutual trust, on the efforts to push forward pragmatic cooperation, on the efforts to expand cultural exchanges and deepen mutual understanding and trust, on the efforts to care about each other's concerns and properly handle complicated issues. Media should instill more positive energy into the healthy development of bilateral relations.

Ladies and gentlemen,

In the world, there are no two other countries that are like China and India, which have made unique contributions to the mankind with their great civilizations that have lasted thousands of years. China and India are connected by common mountains and rivers, and have engaged in exchanges in various fields for more than two millenniums. As early as in the Han Dynasty (206BC-220AD) and the Tang Dynasty (618-907), the Silk Road on the land and sea connected China and India. As two pearls in Asia, the Chinese civilization and the Indian civilization are different from each other. Yet, they also share many similarities and have illuminated each other in history. Together, they have contributed to splendid Asian civilizations.

Over the past century, the destiny of the two nations has been linked ever closer. The Chinese and Indian peoples understood and supported each other in their respective pursuit of national independence and liberation, with many touching stories. Our two countries jointly advocated the Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence which have become important guidance for new type of international relations.

Mahatma Gandhi once said that China and India are fellow travelers sharing weal and woe in a common journey. As fellow travelers, Chinese and India media have more reasons to engage in frequent exchanges to deepen the friendship between our two peoples and to jointly push ahead the strategic partnership between the two countries for the common interests of our two peoples. Let us work together for this great goal!

I wish this forum a great success!

Thank you

275. External Affairs Minister's interaction with Chinese Media.

Beijing, September 17, 2013.

Chinese Media: I would like to thank you on behalf of the whole media delegation, Your Excellency, for taking time out of your busy schedule to accept our group interview.

My question is, what is your assessment of the current India-China relationship and what are your priorities in developing the bilateral relationship?

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): As I tried to suggest this morning, I think there are very strong fundamentals that provide a base for a very sustained relationship between India and China. These fundamentals include complementarities between our two economic and social structures. They include imperatives of our working closely together in the world on many issues that are really of very important common interest. They also include I think some matters essentially pertaining to our region and also finally about our perceptions of an equitable global system. I think these fundamentals are there for everyone to be able to see.

On the foundations of these fundamentals we need to build and we have to build a superstructure. That superstructure is, shall we say, subject to the fashion of the day, the preferred designs, the prevailing political outlooks of the government during different periods in China and the government in different periods in India. I think there is an overall consensus. It is not as though we would move in this direction because my party is in power and then it will be different if there was another party. I think there is core consensus based on how it is important for us to build this infrastructure. There could be variance in pace and in terms of priority but I think that that is unlikely to be of any appreciable difference.

The critical thing I believe that matters for us between India and China is that China does not and cannot have only one neighbour and one friend. India also cannot have only one neighbour and one friend. There will be people of different priority, size in the region and in the world that we will deal with and you will deal with.

Sometimes people have suggested to us over the years a tie up between China, Iran, India. When I was Minister of State and I went to Geneva for the Human Rights Commission, there was such a proposition. Sometimes, as you are fully aware, people have suggested, last night there were some people on television suggesting US and India working together and trying to have a common position on China. And we have said, no. We have said that we do not want a tie-up with anybody. Our sovereign decision is to have a full, wholesome relationship with China and this I think has now a consensus in our country.

Having said all this, there will be periodic issues of divergence, maybe irritation, concern, some issues that have a more lasting impact of question mark or a concern. You have a very important relationship with Pakistan but your relationship with Pakistan 20 years ago and your relationship with Pakistan today does not have to be based on the similar considerations because China has gone beyond what China was 20 years ago; we have gone beyond what we were 20 years ago; and Pakistan I think has also in a sense moved on from what it was 20 years ago.

So, the kind of relationship China had with Pakistan 20 years ago need not be there today. And, therefore, it is not necessary for China to, shall we say, tie itself to policy formulations that are concentrated on Pakistan. Although you have a relationship with them, and we have no problem that you have a relationship with them, our concern in your relationship with Pakistan is only about the impact on nuclear non-proliferation. That is one concern that we have expressed to you.

And perhaps the other concern is the extent to which your collaboration and help to them is concentrated in the area that we believe they have occupied forcibly. If you were building the highway between Islamabad and Karachi, we would not even think twice. But if there is a highway that is being built in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir, then we have to consider and speak to you and say, look is it necessary, is it possible that you tone down your concentration here. Now this is a very narrow area in which we need to talk from time to time.

And then finally of course there is our common endeavour and effort to moves step-by-step towards resolving our boundary issue, the Line of Actual Control. I think we can say with satisfaction that the Special Representatives and other mechanisms in place are moving steadily. And I think we have both rightly decided not to push the pace so that it gives way rather than continue to progress in the manner. And we think we have a very satisfactory progress as far as the boundary dispute is concerned.

So, if China has a greater stake in India's economy and we have a greater participation in the Chinese economy, many of these issues will get dwarfed even further and we will be able to look at a much larger landscape of collaboration and cooperation. I look forward to the day when in the world when a decision needs to be taken, people will look at India and China and say we cannot take this decision unless both of them are on board because they think alike. So, any desire of anybody to say, 'can we drive a wedge between India and China' is something that we want to reject, discourage, and hopefully obliterate completely.

Chinese Media (China Daily): It seems that there are different views among the Indian elite on the China-India relationship. Some think China and India as two incompatible competitors. Others hold that there is room for cooperation and both countries can benefit from that kind of cooperation. My question is, in your view, which one plays a more dominant role?

External Affairs Minister: Your Yin-Yang circle is what we will become one day. I think that is inevitable. It is inevitable. We are destined to be the Yin Yang. That is what we are destined to be one day. I think we have it in us to at least work towards that.

People who think that the shape of Yin Yang cannot come together in India are very few. They are either ill informed or they have some other reason for taking up a position that India and China cannot be compatible as collaborators, as friends, and as partners. I think, as I said, either they are not fully informed, or they are informed by interests which are very narrow, political interests which are narrow.

But there is no political gain. Maybe somewhere near the border one or two Districts may get influenced by this kind of talk. But my understanding of Indian politics is that there is no political gain, even in the short term, to be had from this kind of political position that people take, and they will understand. Gradually they will understand this.

Of course what is important is, as I said this morning, that the reporting of our relationship must be of a positive nature, both by the Chinese press and by the Indian press, because if you are reporting not fairly and correctly, it can mislead people. I will give you an example. When I came back from China - I was very pleased with my visit and I think there is nothing wrong in saying that I was pleased with my visit - somebody asked me what do you think of Beijing. I said it is a beautiful city and I would not mind staying in Beijing when I cease to be Foreign Minister.

Now, there are some people who deliberately printed this as saying that why are you showing China to be better than India. It was not about better, it was about liking. You were very hospitable, you were very friendly. I saw outstanding institutions. I went to the National Museum. I walked in the Tiananmen Square. I saw young people; I saw spring in their step. And I think it would not be fair if I did not describe what I saw. It was good. Not to say that you do not have problems like we do not have problems, but every big country will have problems. There will be somebody in disagreement; there will be somebody out of sync, etc.

I think there is nothing wrong in our being frank and open and transparent in our praise of each other. And I think that people of your country should welcome if you say that you went to Delhi and you felt that Delhi was a homelike city, it is a city that you could make your home. I think that kind of positive spins to be given to our feelings for each other are very important. I do not know if the Chinese are emotional people, but we in India are very emotional. And it helps to touch an emotional chord with us. So, if you can touch an emotional chord with India, you will be always more welcome and more successful in dealing with our people.

Chinese Media: Your Excellency, I would like to ask you a question about India's China policy. We know that geographically India is a country which Washington and Tokyo are trying to ... (Inaudible)... What do you think ... (Inaudible)... India's China policy?

External Affairs Minister: To tell you the truth, a lot of scholars write about it and we read it in papers as well, but nobody, neither the Japanese and the Americans have not told us to participate in an encircling manoeuvre with China. They do not even flag for us their displeasure or discouragement at the collaborations that we are doing with you and military exercises we do with you. The fact that we celebrate our relationship as a strategic, comprehensive partnership, they do not say to us why are we doing this. That is because if they did, we would say well why do you deal with China?

Some of your biggest investment is coming from Japan. I guess your biggest debt to you is owed by the United States of America. So, if they are dealing with you in their best interest and their own enlightened interest, why should we not deal with you, why should we subject ourselves to someone else? Why should we become for somebody else an element by which they can drive a better bargain with China?

We will bargain with you as friends, as partners. And there is always an exchange which should be a fair and equitable exchange between partners. We would not want to be able to load our negotiations with you on behalf of anyone else. But again we also say to you that we have no self consciousness that we have a good relationship with Japan, and you can see for instance the automobile industry, how strongly we work with Japan in the automobile industry. You see the cars in the streets of Delhi. But that is not at your cost. Just as we would not be friends with you at their cost, we are not going to be friends with them at your cost.

But sometimes there will be competition, and let me tell you where. Some people think that India should also have bullet trains. We do not have a bullet train yet. The Chinese have one model of a bullet train, Japanese have one model of a bullet train, the French have another model of a bullet train. And I think there is no harm our saying, why do not you compete and give us the best at the best price. I think that is an acceptable thing to do, to say that let us get the best from the people who have spent money in research on this train till such time as we get to a level that we can research and develop our own train.

So, no question, we have never endorsed it. Nobody has ever encouraged us to do that. Whatever signals people read from elsewhere, we are not concerned. We are very clear. We have an open, honest relationship with China; and we have an open, honest relationship with the US and with Japan. There are many things that the US-India relationship cannot replicate, which is available to us in China-India relationship; and similarly with Japan.

When there are differences between you, we think and we always advice that we should not get involved. It is best if through dialogue those matters are settled, which is what you are trying to do where you have differences with Japan.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, It has been reported that Prime Minister Singh will visit China next month. It will be the first exchange of visit of the two Ministers in one year. In your opinion, what is the significance of this visit and will the two leaders sign any documents or agreements?

External Affairs Minister: I think yes, we are working very seriously on documents. Our Prime Minister makes it a point to tell us that before every visit, that his visit must involve concrete deliverables and not just be a visit for a formality. Therefore, my colleagues have to work very hard day and night to ensure that the documents that need to be signed are prepared well in time. Both sides have worked very hard since my visit.

When I came, we started many of the negotiations followed again and taken to a higher level. Premier Li was in India and we are very honoured and pleased that his first stop outside the country as Prime Minister was in India. And I think that is an important and significant indication of our relationship coming from your side. Then as you said, in the same year Prime Ministers of both countries going to the other country happened two decades ago. I think it happened in 1954 and we are now doing this in the year 2013. So, obviously, there is something very significant that has gone into the growth of our relationship. Our Prime Minister has made a personal investment in improving the relationship of our leadership with your leadership. I think that this in itself is the biggest takeaway that this is a crescendo of visits from both sides. We would like to see even more visits from China. As you know, I signalled this morning that we are thinking of moving forward now on twinning of cities, sister cities, between our two countries, on industrial parks, which are Chinese industrial parks.

As you will know, Chinese food is the most popular food in our country - perhaps different from your Chinese food but it is Chinese food - and I hope equally Indian food is the most popular foreign food in Beijing. So, just as I said, I think we have complementarities that we just need to work on. Fundamentals are very strong but the infrastructure and the superstructure has to be developed and it is our responsibility to do it.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, in the just concluded Media Forum many participants suggested that our two countries should increase mutual trust. What are the main reasons behind the trust deficit between the two countries and how can the situation be improved?

External Affairs Minister: Trust is not something that you can switch on and switch off. Trust is something that is based on experience. It is based on exchanges between people. It is based on sharing thoughts, sentiments, on having positions that are common, facing challenges together and helping each other facing challenges. Learning more about each other, you will begin to trust. You do not trust strangers because you do not know enough about them. The more you know about each other, the more you know about responses and reactions, the more you begin to trust.

And if in critical moments when there is pressure on you and there is pressure on us, in those critical moments we are able to show - whether it is public pressure from within the country or it is pressure from outside globally, there is pressure from institutions, or pressure from other countries - and we withstand that pressure, that will be the way of advancing trust amongst ourselves.

Ultimately and finally, I think much more meeting together, the more you meet and talk, the more you are likely to find common ground. That is true at all levels, not just at the levels of government officials and Ministers and Heads of State and Heads of Government, but also amongst ordinary people. You know Chinese travel to the world in very large numbers, huge, huge numbers, as tourists, as people who go out for shopping and people who go out for various other purposes. Many more Chinese need to come to India, and many more Indians need to travel to China. I think whatever we can do to facilitate this I think is important. I am going to give your Minister some recently made films in India including “3 Idiots” and I will recommend that you see more Indian films and get more attracted towards what we are doing in our country, and I think all that will bring up trust.

Chinese Media: ...(Spoke in Chinese)...

External Affairs Minister: I tell you how much I trust you, I will say yes without any interpretation. But yes, please continue.

Chinese Media: ...(Inaudible)... the China-India Friendship Year that will come in 2014. The year 2014 will come very soon. My question is actually something we talked about this afternoon. In the Forum we agreed that ... communication and exchanges between the two countries especially in the media sector ...(Inaudible)... So, my question is, in preparation for the upcoming China-India Friendship Year, has Indian side made any preparation? Our newspaper ...(Inaudible)... and we would like to know your plans on ...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: ...(Inaudible)... The plans are still being made and they are being prepared. But the person who is hands on preparing the plans will tell you because when they take final shape is when I come into the picture. But he will share with you.

Senior MEA Official: Thank you very much, Minister. As the Minister said, the plans are still being prepared. I will be in Beijing in the last week of September to fructify and consolidate some of these plans. The India-China Cultural Exchange Programme is being finalised also. That will give us some idea about what are the activities that we will do next year. But in general I can confirm to you that there will be a lot of exchanges between our two countries not only in the sphere of performing arts but also in the areas of films, television and hopefully media.

We want to hold the second India-China Media Forum at an early date next year. I can also tell you that we have invited China to be the guest country of honour at the International Film Festival of India which will take place in Goa in November 2014. These are some of the activities that will take place. A listing is being prepared and hopefully will be ready by the time of our Prime Minister's visit to your country.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, my question is that in this era of new social media, in this era of internet we have this saying in China that everything that has a microphone ...(Inaudible)... And in fact because of the internet era ...(Inaudible)... voice your opinion. And I want ...(Inaudible)... any pressure on the creation ...(Inaudible)... of the diplomatic policies and whether the Indian Government or your Ministry are doing anything to deal with such a pressure? Or, if I may put my question this way, are you actually being able to find a balance between meeting the demands of the public ...(Inaudible)... creation and implementation of the government's diplomatic policies?

External Affairs Minister: I think this is a very difficult question because we do not have answers to this right now. And I am sure you do not have answers in China to this as well. That is because the systems of governance and the systems of public engagement and involvement in policy making that we have followed traditionally, you have followed traditionally in your country and we have in our country, have been in a sense bypassed by social media.

Social media strengthening these systems is a welcome thing. In some places, this social media strengthens the existing systems by making them more affordable, making them more accessible, making them more transparent, and making them more responsive. To that extent social media has been I think a great asset. But it has also in some cases tried to bypass existing systems, which is not a good thing.

People have to understand governance and structure of government, and structure of democracy, and of policy making. That can easily be undermined by social media that has no responsibility. If we are wrong in government, and if you are wrong in government, the people tell you that you are wrong by not appreciating what you have done, or by saying that what you are doing is not acceptable. But if somebody is wrong in social media, they disappear. There is no accounting by them at all.

We have had cases where irresponsible social media comments have caused migrations of huge number of young people working in another part of India back to their own State because somebody had a message go viral which said if you do not leave, you will be attacked. Now, this is completely unacceptable. And if you try to restrict it, then people complain about censorship and they complain about lack of freedom and so on. So, we have to find a balance. Freedom comes with responsibility. Freedom is not only licence, it comes with responsibility. So, I think that both of us can share our experiences on how to deal with social media.

One thing we have accepted and we agree that if you do not give material to the social media, then it finds its own material. So, we need to populate the social media with information more easily made available by the government and by agencies of government so that there is much more information available leaving less space for irresponsible information to get in. But I think we will have to work by experience and learn how we move forward over the next few meetings of the Media Forum. You can tell us your experiences and we can tell you our experiences.

Chinese Media: Mr. Minister, I am honoured to ask the last question today.

For Chinese investors, India's seems to be a difficult market to enter. For example, Chinese telecom companies ... (Inaudible)... frustrated in their efforts to expanding to the Indian market. My question is, what is India's policy towards investment from China? The two countries have decided to expand bilateral trade volume to 100 billion US dollars by 2015. So, how ... (Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: I think with the telecom and electronics sector which you have mentioned is special. I do not think that the concern that has been felt by Chinese industry vis-a-vis those sectors is not common across the board on other Chinese equipment and Chinese products. Of course, periodically you will have the problem of dumping and you will have the problem of WTO, etc., but that works both ways. It could happen in China for Indian goods and here. That is something that we have both agreed we have to comply with and adhere to.

Here we are ourselves concerned. I do not think that your companies need be frustrated. I have met with them. They have even been to my own constituency and they have dealt with people in my constituency giving them computers and bicycles for girls and so on. There was a concern that is partly protection of Indian manufacturers and partly an issue of the security issues involved in electronics. But I think we are resolving it. This is something which is of concern. Even within our own Government there were different views of how much concern should be followed and to what extent. So, I think this is only a learning experience because this is something relatively new to the Indian market. I do not think that this is something that really should worry your people. They are in touch with us; we are in communication with them. I think these matters that are being sorted out and will be resolved.

Chinese Media: Thank you. Thank you very much for your time.

External Affairs Minister: Thank you. I enjoyed talking to you and I hope that this is going to become a very important institution, contacts between media in our country with you. And I hope that these contacts will not be restricted only to meeting when the Forum meets. I hope that you will at your own levels remain in contact and in touch, and that we will have the advantage to reap more of your stuff published in our newspapers, and I hope that you can publish something that we give you. I will begin by writing something for one of your agencies, and you can print it and distribute it. I will do it before our Prime Minister comes to China. Thank you.

Chinese Media: Thank you once again.

276. Press Note of the Ministry of Commerce on measures to address trade imbalance with China.

New Delhi, September 24, 2013.

Zinc concentrates & copper concentrates, cotton yarn and cotton linter, frozen fish/linter, methanol, castor oil & gaur gum, Indian granite block and cedrus deodara seed are the most sought after items of export from India which have generated interested among Chinese businessmen. It is to be noted that purchase of zinc concentrates & copper concentrates worth USD 130 million, purchase of cotton yarn and cotton linter worth USD 93 million, purchase of frozen fish/linter worth USD 68 million, were the prominent products for which Memorandum of Understandings (MoUs) were signed during the India-China Business Matchmaking Symposium for boosting exports from India to China. The day-long meeting saw around sixty Indian companies from various sectors engaging themselves with an aim to find ways to address the trade imbalance. For this, fifteen MoUs worth USD 338 million were signed between Indian and Chinese companies here yesterday. This model will be replicated in other cities also.

This step is among various other steps initiated by both the countries in the recent past to take the trade agenda forward on different fronts. Earlier in May 2013, India and China signed three Memorandum of Understandings (MoUs) on buffalo meat, fisheries and pharmaceuticals; and one agreement on feed and feed ingredients. The MoUs were signed during the visit of the Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, Mr. Li Keqiang to India. With the implementation of the above MoUs, export of buffalo meat, and feed and feed ingredients to China are expected to benefit. With the operationalisation of the MoU on co-operation on Pharma between China Chamber of Commerce for Import and Export of Medicines and Health Products (CCCMHPIE) and the Pharmaceuticals Export Promotion Council of India (Pharmexcil), Indian generic drugs are expected to get market access in China.

In August 2013, when Union Minister for Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma met Chinese Minister of Commerce Mr. Gao Hucheng, the Chinese Minister assured Shri Sharma that China would make every effort to facilitate imports from India for bridging trade imbalance. Earlier, during the visit of Chinese Premier Mr. Li Keqiang to India in May 2013, both the sides while striving to realise the trade turnover target of USD 100 billion by 2015, agreed to take measures to address the issue of the trade imbalance. These included cooperation on pharmaceutical supervision including registration, stronger links between Chinese enterprises and Indian IT industry, and completion of phytosanitary negotiations on agro-products.

Major items of Indian exports to China include cotton raw & yarn, non-ferrous metals, iron ore, other ores and minerals, plastic & linoleum products, spices, Dyes/intermediates, machinery & instruments and petroleum (crude & products). Major imports from China include electronic goods, machinery, organic chemicals, project goods, fertilizers, iron and steel, transport equipments, electric machinery (except electronics) and manufactures of metals. While on the other hand, major imports from China include electronic goods, machinery, organic chemicals, project goods, fertilizers, iron and steel, transport equipments, electric machinery (except electronics) and manufactures of metals.

The bilateral trade between both the countries reached around USD 68 billion in calendar 2012, which is less than bilateral trade in calendar 2011 (US$ 73 billion) due to the slight slowing of economic growth in both countries. There has been fall in bilateral trade of 10.28% during the year 2012-13 but still the trade deficit for India for 2012-13 crossed USD 40 billion which is 3.49 % more than USD 39.44 billion deficit in the year 2011-12. China has emerged as our largest trading partner. India ranked 16th among the countries exporting to China while India was the 7th largest export destination for China in 2011.

277. Joint Statement issued after the Sixth China-India Financial Dialogue.

Beijing' September 27, 2013.

Based on the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on 'Launching the Financial Dialogue between the People's Republic of China and the Republic of India' signed in April, 2005, the two sides have successfully held five rounds of dialogues in April of 2006, December of 2007, January of 2009, September of 2010 and November of 2011. The Sixth China-India Financial Dialogue was held yesterday in Beijing.

During this Dialogue, the two sides held in-depth discussions on new challenges facing the global economy, macro-economic situations and policies in China and India, progress on structural reforms in both countries, cooperation under multilateral frameworks as well as bilateral financial cooperation. Both sides agreed to strengthen regular communication and coordination at various levels on macro-economic policies and major international economic and financial issues.

Macro-economic situation and policy

Both sides recognized that global economic recovery was still fragile with downside risks remaining high. Volatility in financial markets has also intensified. With growth picking up in advanced economies, there is a need for them to collaborate with Emerging Market Economies (EMEs) on the pace and timing of recalibration of their unconventional monetary policies and strengthen communication with the market to avoid negative spillovers. As a group, the EMEs have continued to grow but the pace of growth has slowed in several countries. Under these circumstances, China and India called for greater international coordination on economic policies, particularly in the implementation of policy measures adopted by the G20 to boost growth and employment for promoting strong, sustainable and balanced growth of the world economy.

Macro-economic Policy and Structural Reforms in China and India

Both sides recognized the importance of sound macro-economic policies and sustained structural reforms for improving long-term growth prospects. The overall economic situation in China is stable and has the foundations to sustain sound development as new progress has been made in structural adjustment, consumption has realized steady growth, prices have maintained stability and employment situation has remained sound. The fiscal policy has focused on adjusting the expenditure structure, reducing administrative spending, supporting structural adjustment and improvement of people's well-being, and providing tax incentives to small and micro enterprises. With enhanced liquidity management, the monetary policy has neither been relaxed nor tightened. The Chinese government will continue to strive for economic development while maintaining stability, and keeping the continuity and stability of the macroeconomic policies as well as making these policies more targeted and coordinated. The government will also fine-tune the policies at an appropriate time and by an appropriate degree according to changes in the economic performance. China will constantly deepen reform and opening up, promote economic transformation and upgrading, release domestic demand potential, stimulate market vitality and enhance the quality and efficiency of the economic development.

Notwithstanding the persistence of global economic meltdown, India's economic fundamentals remain strong. India has adopted bold macro-economic and fiscal management policies that seek to attain the twin objectives of inclusive development and high, sustained economic growth. The Union Budget (2013-14) renewed the Government's commitment towards fiscal responsibility. It also incorporated a slew of measures aimed at boosting investments, controlling inflation, creating high quality infrastructure and ensuring comprehensive social security for the poor. The Government is continuously undertaking initiative to improve the performance of the manufacturing sector. In a recent review of this, the Government has also liberalized several sectoral caps in FDI. Several monetary measures have already been taken by the Reserve Bank of India. The effects of persistent economic reforms undertaken in the last year have started to manifest and the full effect will eventually be seen in the overall GDP growth. India remains committed towards strengthening and deepening its reform process.

The two sides agreed to actively explore opportunities for cooperation in the process of their respective structural reforms.

Cooperation under Multilateral Frameworks

Both sides acknowledged the effectiveness of bilateral coordination under multilateral frameworks such as the G-20, BRICS and international financial institutions. Both sides agreed to work together to promote the implementation of the important consensus reached in the G-20 St. Petersburg summit, strengthen the momentum of global recovery, push for faster economic growth, generate better jobs, and build on the foundation for long-term growth. Both countries agreed to intensify cooperation with other BRICS member countries towards tangible results on the initiatives on BRICS Development Bank and Contingency Reserve Arrangement in the next BRICS summit. Both sides are committed to pushing forward reforms in the international financial institutions and urge other countries to fulfil their commitment of implementing the 2010 IMF Quota and Governance Reform expeditiously and to complete the next general quota review by January 2014. Both sides urged the international financial institutions to increase their lending capacity to developing countries so as to expand the global aggregate demand.

Bilateral Financial Cooperation

Both sides recognized the importance of strengthened fiscal and financial cooperation in the expansion of bilateral trade and investment. The two sides agreed to maintain close communication, and work for more opportunities and better environment to enhance bilateral financial cooperation. Financial regulators from both countries exchanged views on market access regulation policies for foreign banks, agreed to support banks to establish branches and subsidiaries in each other's market, and advocated deeper cooperation between financial institutions from the two countries, especially in areas of infrastructure investment and financing.

Both sides reiterated their commitment to strengthen the China-India Financial Dialogue, enhance mutual cooperation, deepen mutual trust, and promote bilateral fiscal and financial communication and cooperation. Both sides agreed to hold the 7th India-China Financial Dialogue in 2014 in New Delhi.

278. Fourth Meeting of the Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs.

Beijing, September 30, 2013.

1. The 4th meeting of the Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs was held in Beijing on 29-30 September 2013. The Indian delegation was led by Shri Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia) and comprised of representatives of the Ministries of External Affairs, Defence and Home Affairs as well as members of the Indian Army and Indo-Tibetan Border Police. The Chinese delegation was led by Mr. Ouyang Yujing, Director General, Department of Boundary and Oceanic Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprised of representatives of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and National Defence of the People's Republic of China. The Indian delegation called on Mr. Liu Zhenmin, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs.

2. The talks were held in a candid, constructive and forward looking atmosphere. Reviewing recent developments in the India-China border areas, especially in the Western Sector, the two delegations agreed that peace and tranquillity on the border is the basis for the continued expansion of India-China relations. To this end, both sides discussed further measures to maintain stability on the border, building on existing understandings and arrangements.
3. The 5th meeting of the Working Mechanism will be held in India at a mutually convenient time.

279. Opening Remarks by Foreign Secretary at Media Briefing on Prime Minister's visits to Russia and China.

New Delhi, October 18, 2013.

On the first leg of his two-nation tour, Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, will pay an Official Visit to Moscow from 20 to 22 October, for the 14th Annual India-Russia Summit.

The practice of having an Annual Summit between India and Russia was institutionalized in 2000 with the signing of the Declaration of the Strategic Partnership between India and Russia. The annual event exemplifies the 'Special and Privileged' Strategic Partnership between our two countries. Our Prime Minister is no stranger to Russia – this is the tenth Summit he will attend, the fifth in Moscow. He has also attended several multilateral events in Russia, including the G-20 Summit held in St. Petersburg in June.

Russia has been a steadfast friend and partner for over six decades. It has been a source of our defence needs, space program and high technologies. It has extended friendship and support through challenging times in India's history. This partnership is today a key priority of India's foreign policy.

The relationship is supported by an elaborate, multi-layered and very effective mechanism which allows us to broaden and deepen our interaction continually. In the run-up to the Summit, we have had an intense exchanges.. This year, External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid has visited Moscow twice: the last visit was in October 2013 for the nineteenth Session of the Inter-Governmental Commission, which is co-chaired by Deputy PM Rogozin. EAM also had a very productive meeting with Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov. Home Minister of India Shri Sushil Kumar Shinde has visited Moscow in April. Commerce and Industry Minister, Shri Anand Sharma has visited Russia thrice, to energize trade and economic ties and business-to-business links. Our National Security Adviser too visited Russia thrice during the year, while the Russian National Security Adviser visited India in January 2013. The Chairperson of the Russian Federation Council visited India in February 2013. In addition, we have had numerous official level engagements. For instance, we have Foreign Office Consultations with Russia on 17 different subject areas, reflecting the convergence in our approaches on regional and global issues.

What this robust exchange indicates is a deep, rock solid and time-tested relationship, with one of our closest global partners. Today, India-Russia cooperation is truly multi-dimensional, covering the fields of defence, energy, space, high-technology, trade & economy, science, culture and people-to-people exchanges.

Russia is a key partner for us in the field of defence. In recent years, our military technical cooperation has evolved into joint design, development and production of defence systems such as fifth generation fighters and multi-role transport aircraft. Earlier this year, we received our stealth frigate INS Trikand and we are now awaiting the commissioning of INS Vikramaditya next month. Our Armed Forces are holding the INDRA 2013 exercise in Rajasthan, as we speak.

The Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant exemplifies our close cooperation in the field of nuclear energy. The Unit 1 of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Plant has been completed and attained criticality in July this year. Unit 2 at Kudankulam should be ready in the first half of 2014. On Units 3 & 4, our companies are finalizing documents.

Last year witnessed a 24.5% rise in bilateral trade, crossing USD 11 billion in 2012 for the first time. Investment is also emerging as an important focus of our bilateral ties. Russia is an important partner in the field of hydro-carbons and OVL is participating in two projects – as 20% partner in the Sakhalin 1 project and as 100% owner and operator of Imperial Energy in Tomsk Region.

Coming back to the visit program, the Prime Minister shall be arriving in Moscow on October 20th. October 21st is the main engagement day where he shall be meeting President Putin for official talks and a working lunch. The Prime Minister will the same day be conferred with an Honorary Doctorate by the Moscow State Institute of International Relations (MGIMO). As is customary, a Joint Statement will be issued at the conclusion of the talks, touching on bilateral as well as global issues. We expect a few agreements to be signed in diverse areas like science and technology, energy efficiency and standards. Also, on the margins of the Summit, we will have a meeting of the newly re-constituted CEO's Council.

Following the visit to Russia, Prime Minister will pay an official visit to Beijing from 22-24 October, 2013. This is the Prime Minister's second bilateral visit to Beijing. Previously he had visited China in January 2008. Also this is the second bilateral meeting between the Prime Minister and Prime Minister Li Keqiang during the course of this year. You would recall that Prime Minister Li Keqiang was in India for a visit in May 2013. It is for the first time since 1954 that the Prime Ministers of India and China will have visited each others' country in the same calendar year.

The programme for the visit is broadly that Prime Minister will reach Beijing in the evening of 22 October, 2013 and will be received ceremonially the next day morning at the Great Hall of the People by his Chinese counterpart. They will then have discussions both in limited as well as delegation level format. Premier Li Keqiang will host a banquet lunch. PM will also be meeting the Chairman of the National People's Congress Zhang Dejiang in the afternoon. In the evening, Prime Minister will be hosted by President Xi Jinping at a banquet dinner. On 24 October, the Prime Minister will address the Central Party School of the Communist Party of China. So he has a rather tight schedule in Beijing.

The meetings with the Chinese leadership have a broad agenda and are likely to cover all aspects of our bilateral relations in addition to regional and global issues of importance.

India and China have an elaborate architecture of engagement and dialogue which covers the entire gamut of bilateral relations. Prime Minister had met President Xi Jinping on the margins of the BRICS Summit in Durban in March, 2013. Also this year itself, the External Affairs Minister has met his counterpart on four occasions. The Defence Minister visited China in July. The Special Representatives held their 16th round of talks on the boundary question in June at Beijing. The Strategic Dialogue at the level of Foreign Secretary and Chinese Vice Minister was held in August, 2013. We have also had the first India-China Dialogue on Afghanistan and the first India-China Dialogue on Central Asia. The intensity and breadth of the interactions is reflective of the importance that both countries place on the relationship.

Maintenance of peace, tranquility and stability of our border is an important factor in our bilateral ties and it is expected that this would be an important aspect of the discussions as it is also the basis on which the rest of our bilateral relationship can proceed and grow.

Prime Minister has, on several occasions previously, emphasized that there is sufficient space in the world for both India and China to meet their developmental aspirations. Therefore, even as we pursue our economic and social goals we have expanded our bilateral ties. In particular, economic exchanges have emerged as an important underpinning of our bilateral relations. Both India and China are aiming to achieve their commonly set target of US$ 100 billion in terms of bilateral trade by 2015 and are also striving to ensure balance of trade flows. The possibility of Chinese investment in India through the mechanism of an industrial park is being explored. During the visit of Prime Minister to Beijing, the second meeting of the India-China CEOs Forum is also taking place in Beijing and PM and PM Li Keqiang are expected to receive the recommendations of the CEOs to expand economic linkages.

As 2014 is the 60th anniversary of the enunciation of Panchsheel is designated as the Year of India-China Friendly Exchanges, measures relating to people-to-people exchanges during the next year are also areas where we see possibilities of greater cooperation. The 1st India-

China media Forum was successfully held in New Delhi and we intend to have this as an annual feature. We are also pursuing avenues of cultural cooperation.

At the culmination of the visit, a Joint Statement will be issued summarizing the major areas in our bilateral ties. It is also expected that some agreements would be signed on issues which we are currently working on and hope to conclude during the visit.

Both the visit to Russia and to China manifest the priority we place on regular high level interactions in our engagements with these two very important countries.

281. Prime Minister's statement to media after delegation level talks with the Chinese Premier.

New Delhi, October 23, 2013.

Your Excellency Premier Li,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media

I am delighted to be in Beijing once again at the invitation of Premier Li. I am touched by the warm welcome and the generous hospitality of the Government and the people of China. I recalled to Premier Li how much India appreciated his decision to make India his first overseas destination after taking over as Premier. This year, I have had the privilege of meeting President Xi Jinping and Premier Li on a number of occasions on the margins of multilateral meetings, and I am delighted to have another opportunity of meeting them during this visit.

Premier Li and I have just concluded a very productive round of talks and reached a number of important understandings.

First and foremost, we agreed that the prosperity and progress of 2.5 billion Indian and Chinese people would be a major factor of Asian resurgence and global prosperity and stability. As leaders of large re-emerging nations, pursuing socio-economic progress in a rapidly changing and uncertain global environment, we have resolved to realize the full promise of our partnership and maintain the friendliest of relations. This will be our strategic vision.

Second, we agreed that peace and tranquillity on our borders must remain the foundation for growth in the India-China relationship, even as we move forward the negotiations towards a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable settlement to the India-China Boundary Question. This will be our strategic benchmark.

Third, we agreed that, as large neighbours following independent foreign policies, the relationships pursued by India and China with other countries must not become a source of concern for each other. This will be our strategic reassurance.

Accordingly, I suggested to Premier Li that we do things that enhance mutual trust, expand common interest and deepen mutual understanding. I received his full support for this roadmap.

To build mutual trust, we have agreed to enhance transparency and strengthen strategic communication at all levels, including, as I said, on our shared neighbourhood. I flagged our interest in continued and expanded cooperation on trans-border rivers and received reassurances from Premier Li. We decided to encourage and institutionalize greater exchanges between the armed forces of our two countries.

The Agreement on Border Defence Cooperation that we have just signed will add to the existing instruments to ensure peace, stability and predictability on our borders.

Premier Li was receptive to my concern about the unsustainable trade imbalance between our two countries and we have agreed to explore avenues to bridge this gap. We are taking forward the suggestion made by Premier Li in New Delhi for a Chinese industrial park to act as a magnet for Chinese investment in India. We are also exploring the feasibility of the BCIM Economic Corridor connecting our two countries via the southern Silk Road.

We are determined to inject new dynamism into our economic relations, by working with wider stakeholders. Even as Premier Li and I were holding our discussions, the India-China CEOs' Forum was meeting here under the same roof.

To foster mutual understanding, we decided to encourage provincial and sub-regional exchanges, institutionalize the High-Level Media Forum, continue youth exchanges for the next five years and celebrate the year 2014, which is the 60th anniversary of the enunciation of the Panchsheel principles, as the "Year of India-China Friendly Exchanges". I appreciate China's cooperation on Nalanda University.

I conveyed to Premier Li our commitment to visa simplification to facilitate travel of Chinese nationals to India and expressed hope that China will also facilitate such exchanges.

We also had candid and constructive discussions on regional and global issues of importance to India and China. This is one of the promising developments in our relationship.

The Agreements and MOUs signed today in various areas — covering defence cooperation, road transport sector, trans-border rivers, power equipment, cultural exchanges, Nalanda University and sister-city linkages — will build on our impressive range of cooperation.

As Premier Li has said, India and China are two ancient civilisations. We account for 2.5 billion people. When India and China shake hands, the world takes notice. I believe that my visit to China has put our relations on a path of stable and fast growth. I thank Premier Li once again and look forward to my other engagements with the Chinese leadership and the public today and tomorrow. It has been a most enjoyable stay in this beautiful city and I thank Premier Li and the people of China for their hospitality.

I thank you

282. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary and Ambassador of India to China on Prime Minister's ongoing visit.

Beijing, October 23, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here. We have here with us Foreign Secretary who will briefly outline to you a sense of what were the discussions today. Along with her is our Ambassador Jaishankar who has shepherded Indo-China relations during the last four years plus. On his right is Mr. Gautam Bambawale who is the Joint Secretary and our chief point person on relations with China as far as the Ministry of External Affairs is concerned.

I would request Foreign Secretary to give you a brief understanding of what was the sense of the discussion so far today. Then I think she will also request Ambassador Jaishankar to indicate about the major agreements and the main points of those. Following that we will open the floor for questions. We have about 30 minutes because they have to go for another function after this.

We will have another briefing at the end of today's discussions, that is late in the night at about 8 o'clock, where you can ask any supplementary questions. With those introductory words, I will ask Foreign Secretary to make her opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Sujatha Singh): Good afternoon friends. As Akbar said, I am going to try and give you a sense of what lay beneath the meeting today, the atmospherics.

You know that we had over three hours of interactions - one hour at the restricted level, about one hour at the delegation level, followed by lunch. I can confirm to you that we had extremely useful and constructive discussions.

China is one of India's most important and complex strategic partners. In the course of the talks, we covered the entire gamut of issues at a bilateral level, at a regional level, and at the larger global level.

There was also a CEOs meeting that was taking place at the same time to address what we could do to enhance trade between the two countries, especially exports from India.

What are the important points that came up? Strategic communication between the two countries covering the entire spectrum of relations, the entire gamut of issues - boundary issues, rivers, question of terrorism, regional developments, economic issues. Prime Minister suggested a three-point roadmap to take relations forward: 1. Enhance mutual trust. 2. Expand common interests. 3. Deepen mutual understanding.

Now, what do we mean by enhanced mutual trust? We mean enhancing the strategic communication at all levels from the leadership levels, including in the shared neighbourhood. Then there were the nine agreements that were signed of which the two most important agreements are on the BDCA which implies increased exchanges amongst the militaries, and the trans-border rivers. Expand common interests through WTO, BRICS cooperation, trade, then you have the BCIM, linkage and connectivity issues.

Underlying all the interactions was this very palpable sense of this being an extremely important meeting, something that the Prime Minister referred to also in his press statement, of relations between India and China embodying relations between 2.5 billion people, two old civilisations and two close neighbours; and relations between India and China being indispensable for Asia's resurgence and a must for stability in a dynamic Asia. To quote, 'no other bilateral relationship can match in scale, scope and time span than that between India and China'. And this is why we believe that India-China relations will be amongst the most important relations of the 21st century.

I am going to ask Ambassador Jaishankar to expand on the two most important agreements that we signed today and a very important component was also the people-to-people relations which is set to expand at all levels. You are already aware that 1954, 59 years back, was the last time we saw an exchange of Prime Ministers in the same calendar year, and there are a slew of programmes meant to increase people-to-people relations. I will come back to that at the end of the press briefing as to how that is doing already and set to grow.

Ambassador to China (Dr. S. Jaishankar): I think all of you would have seen the text of the two agreements that we are talking about – the BDCA and the Trans-border Rivers Agreement.

On the BDCA, let me explain to you the four big underlying concepts of the BDCA. The first concept is that there is actually a lot of activity on and near the border, not necessarily military activity. So you have a set of understandings which relate to management of activity near or on the border. This includes for example exchanging information on unmarked mines, dealing with smuggling of arms, wildlife, other contrabands, locating personnel and livestock which is actually not an infrequent occurrence, and responding to natural disasters. I think I do not have to remind any of you how real that possibility is now. That is one concept of dealing with non-military issues on the border.

The second is regarding meetings on the border itself. This is primarily of course between the border and military personnel. Here we have a set of meetings envisaged starting with border personnel on the border, then between the military regions - in our case the Commands and in their case there are two military regions that we deal with – then between the Ministries, periodic meetings between the Ministries of Defence. And then these two mechanisms we have, the primary mechanism is the Working Mechanism on Consultation and Coordination on Border Affairs which is actually headed by Gautam here on our side, and the Annual Defence Dialogue which is headed by the Defence Secretary. So, this is a kind of graduated scale of meetings that we are looking at.

In addition to the meetings, we are also looking at how to strengthen communications. Here we have two broad approaches, one is at the border. We establish border personnel meeting points and eventually in all sectors. At the moment we do not have it in all sectors. Secondly, we have a hotline between the military headquarters of the two countries. That is the communications side which is the parallel activity to the meetings which take place on a more structured and formal basis.

The third concept is actually to get the troops on the border to get a little more comfortable with each other. So, you have issues like joint celebrations, marking days, doing non-contact sports, cultural activities, and even small-scale tactical exercises.

Finally we come to the fourth concept which is actually the military dimension. In the military dimension there are three important points. One is to formalise an understanding we had that we should not be following or tailing patrols of the other side, particularly in areas where there is no common understanding of the Line of Actual Control. The other is that when we encounter situations, what we call doubtful situations, then each side has the right to seek clarification from the other side. The third is that when despite one and two if you actually have face-to-face situations in areas where there is no common understanding of the Line of Actual Control, then there is a commitment that both sides would exercise maximum self restraint. This in essence is actually the substance of the BDCA that we have signed today.

On the trans-border rivers MoU, we actually have a mechanism called the expert-level mechanism where hydrological on two rivers – Brahmaputra and Sutlej – is exchanged during flood season. In addition to that we discuss emergency management if such a situation arises. This MoU has three important points. First of all it recognises the trans-border rivers, related natural resources, and the environment are of value to all riparian countries.

The second is in terms of hydrological data, the period for which we get data has been expanded. The third is that the Chinese side and we have reached an agreement that we would exchange views on other issues of mutual interest. Many of you know that we have other concerns in regard to this.

Till now our trans-border dialogue was largely limited to hydrological data. Now under this MoU, the nature of the dialogue has widened. This mechanism would be used to discuss other issues. I think some of that was actually touched upon in the discussions today. The Chinese Premier did indicate to our Prime Minister that China would take a very constructive view and would have a very open mind in discussing issues of concern to us.

That I think would be the explanation in a sense for the second agreement.

Official Spokesperson: Before we open the floor for questions, I just wanted to mention to you that apart from these agreements, in the next hour or so we will put up on the website and email to you all the other agreements.

We now have about 15 minutes or a little less than that for questions. I suggest that you limit your questions in this round to just a few and we will come back and clarify.

Q: I just wanted to ask maybe Ambassador Jaishankar since he explained the agreements. Does the border agreement in any way affect our right to build any kind of border infrastructure/infrastructure along the Line of Actual Control?

Ambassador to China: The short answer is, no. The slightly longer answer is that in the agreement there is actually a very specific mention of something called the principle of mutual and equal security. The principle of mutual and equal security is there in all our previous agreements with the Chinese going back to 1993, 1996 and 2005. Essentially what that means is that there is recognition that the situation on the border is asymmetrical, that what is there on their side is different from what is there on our side. So, each side in a sense will approach its security in its own way. I think if you take that 'no' as the direct answer and this as the additional explanation, I hope I have answered your question.

Q: Madam, during your press conference just before you left, you maintained and said very clearly that Arunachal is an integral part of India. Now, what was the Chinese response, or what has been the Chinese response on this issue because visa has come up several times in these recent weeks?

Foreign Secretary: Arunachal is an integral part of India. There is no doubt about that. Are you asking me a question about stapled visas?Question: Yes.

Foreign Secretary: Yes, it did come up. It was raised.

Q: And what was the Chinese response?

Foreign Secretary: That is something that will be under discussion. and I am not in a position to go into further details at this point of time.

Q: Madam, you mentioned that issues of regional importance, events that affect us in our neighbourhood were discussed, the entire gamut of issues was discussed. In this context, India's concerns over terrorism coming from Pakistan, sourced from Pakistan, sometimes supported by agencies of Pakistan, did we put this across and ask whether the Chinese could use their influence with Pakistan to try and get a better outcome from Pakistan on these issues?

Foreign Secretary: Without going into details as to what exactly we told our Chinese interlocutors and what exactly they told us, you will appreciate we cannot go into those details, I can assure you that the issue did come up. We put it squarely on the table and we did discuss it.

Q: Madam, just going ahead with that Arunachal stapled visa issue, are we right to conclude that there was no categorical assurances which was given by China to India?

Foreign Secretary: I have told you what I can share with you at this point of time. This is an issue on the table now and we will take it further.

Q: Madam, the Prime Minister said that the two countries have agreed that a third country would not influence our internal discussion, our relationship between the two. Does it mean that we cannot raise the issue of PoK or Pakistan with China?

Foreign Secretary: We did raise the issue of PoK with China.

Q: Ambassador Jaishankar, can you share specific details on what are the additional designated places where troops would be meeting? Are there any specific details that you can give us of the number of locations has increased by how many? Also, on the liberalisation of the visa regime which did not happen, what was the reason?

Official Spokesperson: One question per person please. You choose one of those questions.

Q: The first one.

Ambassador to China: On the first one, we have just concluded the BDCA. Consequent to the BDCA there will be further discussions including through the working mechanism, and I think some of those details will still have to be worked out.

Q: Ambassador, yesterday off line you were talking about ...

Ambassador to China: If I mentioned it off line, you cannot ask me.

Q: Okay. I suppose we would have raised the issue of cross-border terrorism and regional terrorism. What was China's response on this because the impression is that they have not been very responsive to our concerns?

Foreign Secretary: These issues are discussed by us with all our strategic partners. It is an ongoing discussion that we carry on because terrorism is an ongoing issue.

Q: Article 1 says, 'the two sides shall implement the agreement without prejudice to their respective positions'. How long do we agree to differ with each other?

Ambassador to China: I do not think we have put a time line on how long we are going to take about this. But the fact is that at the moment since we do not have an agreement on the alignment of the Line of Actual Control, we do not want to let that stop us from cooperating on issues or working together on issues we are working on. But if you ask me to predict when we would agree, we cannot.

Q: Ambassador Jaishankar, this agreement has come into effect today. Suppose it was there before Depsang, how differently would it have been handled because of the details now agreed upon between the two countries? Can you tell us how it is a step forward?

Ambassador to China: That is very very hypothetical. There are a lot of things ...

Q: How will it help avoid a next Depsang? You can answer that.

Ambassador to China: That is even more hypothetical.

I do understand the sense of your questions. The sense of your question is that if you look at three of the key concepts that I mentioned which is when you look at not following on tailing patrols, it clearly makes for a safer situation on the border. When you have a provision which says, when one party does something which the other party has questions about and has the right, once you accept that the other party has a right to raise clarification, then you set up the basis of some communication between the two parties.

The third is that when there is a very explicit recognition that if you have a face-to-face situation and at the highest levels of the Government people are telling you please exercise maximum self restraint, then I would imagine in disciplined armies people exercise maximum self restraint. So, I think each one of these has a value because in a sense these become operational instructions to the forces on the ground. So, it does impinge on behaviour, it does create a certain mindset when the two sides occasionally encounter each other on the border. I think that kind of answers your question.

Official Spokesperson: With this we come to the end of this interaction, the next one will be at eight o'clock. I have the list of those who have asked and we could not respond to. They will be asked first, and then the others will be responded to.

Thank you very much

283. Joint Statement- A vision for future development of India-China strategic and cooperative partnership.

Beijing, October 23, 2013.

1. At the invitation of H.E. Mr. Li Keqiang, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, the Prime Minister of the Republic of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh paid an official visit to China from 22-24 October 2013. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh called on H.E. Mr. Xi Jinping, President of the People's Republic of China and held talks with Premier Mr. Li Keqiang. He also met with H.E. Mr. Zhang Dejiang, Chairman of the National People's Congress.
2. The two sides held wide ranging talks on bilateral, regional and international issues of common interest and reached broad consensus. Recalling the important understandings reached between leaders of the two countries this year, the two sides reaffirmed their commitment to take forward their Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity. This would be done by following the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence [Panchsheel] and displaying mutual respect and sensitivity to each other's concerns and aspirations. The exchange of visits by the Prime Minister of India and the Premier of China within the same calendar year was the first since 1954 and has great significance.

3. The leaders recognized that India and China are poised to enter a new stage of economic engagement based on pragmatic cooperation and mutually advantageous policies and practices. They expected the Strategic Economic Dialogue during its meeting in November/December 2013 to work out specific projects and initiatives in areas that have already been broadly agreed upon. The Joint Economic Group will continue to expand the bilateral economic cooperation and promote a balanced growth of bilateral trade. Its Working Groups will expeditiously discharge the mandate given to them in pursuit of those objectives. The two sides agreed to look into the prospects of a bilateral Regional Trade Arrangement (RTA). They will also review the state of the negotiation on the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP). Efforts to conclude a framework agreement for the establishment of industrial zones to provide platforms of cluster type development for enterprises of the two countries would be expedited. Economic agreements signed at the conclusion of the talks reflect the progress made since May 2013.
4. Pursuant to the understanding reached between the two leaders in May 2013, India and China have each established a Study Group on the BCIM [Bangladesh, China, India and Myanmar] Economic Corridor. The visit of the Chinese delegation to India in this regard was noted as a positive step. Further discussions on concepts and alignment of the economic corridor are envisaged. Both India and China would continue to discuss with the other parties to this initiative, and hold the first BCIM Joint Study Group meeting in coming December to study the specific programs on building the BCIM Economic Corridor.
5. Special Representatives, who have been charged with exploring a framework of settlement of the India-China boundary question, were encouraged by the two leaders to continue their efforts in that direction. Peace and tranquility on the India-China border was recognized as an important guarantor for the development and continued growth of bilateral relations. Building on previous agreements signed in 1993, 1996 and 2005 that recognize the principle of mutual and equal security, the two countries signed a Border Defence Cooperation Agreement that will strengthen maintenance of stability on the border.

6. Defence exchanges and military exercises are important in building greater trust and confidence. The holding of a counter-terrorism exercise in November 2013 underlines the shared desire of both Governments to enhance mutual understanding. Exchanges and visits agreed upon by the Defence Ministers of the two countries in July 2013 will be implemented step by step.
7. The Indian side deeply appreciated the resources and efforts of the Chinese Government in making available data on and emergency management of the trans-border rivers. The leaders welcomed the signing of a MoU on Strengthening Cooperation on Trans-border Rivers. The two sides agreed to further strengthen cooperation and, within the Expert Level Mechanism, work together on provision of flood-season hydrological data and emergency management, and exchange views on other issues of mutual interest.
8. The shared goal of an expanded engagement requires facilitating greater people-to-people contacts and exchanges. The Program of Cultural Exchange for the years 2013-2015 which includes art and culture, cultural heritage, youth affairs, education and sports, media, publications and mass communications was also signed. This would be supported by sister-city relationships that have been concluded initially on a pilot basis.
9. In addition to marking 2014 as a Year of Friendly Exchanges, India and China will discuss with Myanmar appropriate ways of commemorating the 60th anniversary of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence [Panchsheel].
10. The two leaders discussed political and economic issues of regional and global significance, including those with a potential to affect the growth and development prospects of their respective nations. They agreed to further strengthen coordination and cooperation in multilateral forums including Russia-India-China, BRICS, and G-20 to jointly tackle global issues such as climate change, international terrorism, food and energy security, and to establish a fair and equitable international political and economic system. They encouraged the various mechanisms and dialogues covering relevant issues to meet regularly to ensure a proper appreciation of each other's concerns and interests.

11. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh expressed his appreciation for the warmth of his reception and the hospitality extended by the Chinese Government. He invited Premier Mr. Li Keqiang to visit India at a time of mutual convenience.

284. Prime Minister's responses to Chinese media resident in India ahead of his official visit to China.

New Delhi, October 23, 2013.

Q.1 : When China's Premier Li Keqiang visited India in May, the two Governments agreed to promote the construction of BCIM Economic Corridor. What will Gol do to promote the BCIM Economic Corridor?

Ans. 1: India is promoting regional connectivity for balanced economic and infrastructure development within our country and accelerated integration with our neighbourhood, including with Southeast Asia. We believe that the BCIM Economic Corridor can potentially reinforce our existing connectivity initiatives and we have expressed our support in principle to the idea during Premier Li Keqiang's visit to India. To take the idea forward, we need to first get the support of the other two countries, namely Bangladesh and Myanmar and together study the various practical elements of such a corridor, its alignment, funding, responsibility of member countries, economic potential, soft infrastructure requirement, etc. Following our agreement during Premier Li's visit to set up a Joint Study Group of all four countries, we have set up the Indian component of this JSG. India will participate with great enthusiasm in its deliberations.

Q.2: More and more Chinese companies are investing in India. Some local governments in India also want to attract more investment from China. Will the Indian Central Government do something to construct the China Industrial Zone this or next year.

Ans.2: India faces an unsustainable imbalance in its trade with China. One of the ways of overcoming the trade deficit is for India to attract larger flows of Foreign Direct Investment from China. We are happy that more Chinese firms are looking to India as an investment destination. During his visit to India in May 2013, Premier Li suggested that we look at the option of establishing a Chinese Industrial Park in India where companies and firms from China could cluster together. We welcome this idea. Recently, a Chinese delegation visited India and had good discussions with our concerned officials. We have also shown them a few possible sites for a Chinese Industrial Park. We will work with the Chinese side in implementing the idea.

Q.3: What are your views about the prospect of India-China cooperation in the BRICS framework? Can you give some specific suggestions? Could you brief us about progress of India's capital implementation of the BRICS Development Bank?

Ans. 3: BRICS cooperation draws strength from bilateral relationships between its individual members, including between India and China, which have acquired significant depth and substance. There are many functional areas of cooperation such as Urbanization, Agriculture, Health, Science and Technology under BRICS in which India and China find synergies.

It is a matter of satisfaction that the BRICS Development Bank, which was first mooted during the New Delhi Summit in March 2012, has registered significant progress. There is now agreement on key issues. I hope that BRICS technical experts would be able to resolve the remaining issues before the next Summit. Setting up of the New Development Bank would send a strong signal of collective capacity of BRICS to help each other as well as other developing countries to address challenges relating to deficit of long-term infrastructure financing. Another important BRICS initiative is the Contingent Reserve Arrangement, which will help stimulate trade among our countries.

Q.4 : China has accumulated lot of skill and experience on High Speed Railway (HSR) and launched cooperation with Thailand. What will be India's plan of developing HSR and how is the potential of bilateral cooperation?

Ans.4: We are aware of China's High Speed Railway development. India is currently undertaking techno-economic studies on HSR. We have not yet made a decision on whether to go forward with construction of HSR in our current stage of development. Meanwhile, the Railway authorities of India and China have been in touch with each other and are considering cooperation in station development, heavy haul freight traffic and raising the speed of passenger trains on existing tracks.

Q.5 : India-China relations have witnessed enormous development in the past 10 years. Which part of bilateral ties makes you most satisfied and proud? What message will you give the new generation Chinese leadership?

And

It has been more than 5 years since your first official visit to China. What are your main expectations from your upcoming visit to China?

Ans.5: During the past 9 years that I have been Prime Minister, I have attempted to put India-China relations on a stable growth path. Working together with the Chinese leadership, my attempt has been to create a forward looking agenda for our bilateral relations. There has been tremendous increase in our economic exchanges as both India and China themselves have grown and prospered. We have also managed our differences and have kept our border region tranquil. At the same time, we have not allowed our differences to come in the way of expanding our cooperation in diverse areas. Stability and predictability in our relations has proved invaluable as both India and China address their internal priorities, particularly growth and development of 2.5 billion people.

My last visit to China five years ago came before the onset of the financial crisis and the global economic meltdown. Today, despite the fragile global economic situation, India and China continue to grow, albeit slowly. China also has a new Government in place now. I have already had useful meetings with President Xi and Premier Li earlier this year. I hope to utilize my visit to get to know the new leadership better and to work with them to consolidate the all round progress in bilateral relations and put them on a firm trajectory of sustained growth.

Q. 6: Could you brief us on the progress of the discussion of Regional Trading Arrangement (RTA) between China and India?

Ans. 6: We have asked our Commerce Ministers to explore the idea of a Regional Trading Arrangement, for which some studies were conducted a few years ago. I am sure the Commerce Ministers will continue to discuss this idea. But I must be honest that there is a great deal of concern in our industry, given the large and growing deficit in our trade with China. When conditions are more propitious and trade is more even, we will find it more feasible to discuss an RTA or an FTA between our countries.

Q. 7: What is your view on the prospects of Border Defence Cooperation between China and India? How do you evaluate the border talks between Special Representatives?

Ans. 7: The Boundary Question between India and China is complex and sensitive. We have established the Special Representatives mechanism to find a political solution to the Boundary Question. The Special Representatives have worked hard and arrived at the political parameters and guiding principles for a boundary resolution. In the present stage of their negotiations, they are seeking a framework for a boundary resolution. I support the work done by the Special Representatives of the two sides. This is not an easy issue and will take time to resolve.

In the meantime, both the Governments of India and China are committed to maintaining peace and tranquility in the India-China border areas. This is an important guarantor and a fundamental basis for further progress and growth in our bilateral ties. The leadership of the two countries is united on this issue. As long as we follow the principles and procedures set out in the Agreements of 1993, 1996 and 2005, expand and improve upon them where necessary to take into account the changing reality of India and China and enhance dialogue and friendly exchanges between our border troops, I am confident that the strategic consensus between leaders will continue to be reflected on the ground

285. Memorandum of Understanding between the Ministry of Water Resources, the Republic of India and the Ministry of Water Resources, the People's Republic of China on Strengthening Cooperation on Trans-border Rivers.

Beijing, October 23, 2013.

The Ministry of Water Resources, the Republic of India and the Ministry of Water Resources, the People's Republic of China (hereafter referred to as the "parties"),

Recalling the Working Regulations of the Expert Level Mechanism on Trans-border Rivers between the People's Republic of China and the Republic of India of April 2008, the MOU between the Ministry of Water Resources, the People's Republic of China and the Ministry of Water Resources, the Republic of India upon Provision of Hydrological Information of the Langqen Zangbo/Sutlej River in Flood Season by China to India of December 2010, the MOU between the Ministry of Water Resources, the People's Republic of China and the Ministry of Water Resources, the Republic of India upon Provision of Hydrological Information of the Yaluzangbu/Brahmaputra River in Flood Season by China to India of May 2013, and the Joint Statement between the People's Republic of China and the Republic of India of May 2013,

Have reached the following understanding:

1. The two sides recognized that trans-border rivers and related natural resources and the environment are assets of immense value to the socio-economic development of all riparian countries.
2. Both sides agreed that cooperation on trans-border rivers will further enhance mutual strategic trust and communication as well as strengthen the strategic and cooperative partnership. The two sides appreciated the role and importance of the Expert Level Mechanism on Trans-border Rivers between China and India.
3. The Indian side expressed appreciation to China for providing flood-season hydrological data and the assistance in emergency management.

4. The Chinese side agreed to extend the data provision period of the Yaluzangbu/Brahmaputra River, which was agreed upon in the MOU between the Ministry of Water Resources, the People's Republic of China and the Ministry of Water Resources, the Republic of India upon Provision of Hydrological Information of the Yaluzangbu/Brahmaputra River in Flood Season by China to India of May 2013 from 2014, that is to start from May 15th instead of June 1st to October 15th of the relevant year. The two sides shall implement this in accordance with related Implementation Plan. The Indian side expressed appreciation to the Chinese side in this regard.
5. The two sides agreed to further strengthen cooperation on trans-border rivers, cooperate through the existing Expert Level Mechanism on provision of flood-season hydrological data and emergency management, and exchange views on other issues of mutual interest.

This Memorandum of Understanding will enter into force upon signature and can be amended and modified with mutual agreement.

286. Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of China on Border Defence Cooperation.

Beijing, October 23, 2013.

The Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of China (hereinafter referred to as the 'two sides'),

Firmly believing that the India-China Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity serves the fundamental interests of the people of the two countries,

Reiterating that neither side shall use its military capability against the other side and that their respective military strengths shall not be used to attack the other side,

Reaffirming that neither side shall use or threaten to use force against the other side by any means nor seek unilateral superiority,

Having accepted the principle of mutual and equal security,

Acknowledging the need to continue to maintain peace, stability and tranquility along the line of actual control in the India-China border areas and to continue implementing confidence building measures in the military field along the line of actual control,

Recognizing the importance of materializing the spirit of the Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and Government of the People's Republic of China on the Maintenance of Peace and Tranquility Along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China Border Areassigned on 7th September 1993, the Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of China on Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field Along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China Border Areassigned on 29th November 1996, the Protocol between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of China on Modalities for the Implementation of Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field Along the Line of Actual Control in India-China Border Areassigned on 11th April 2005 and the Agreement between the Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of China on the Establishment of a Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs signed on 17th January 2012,

Have agreed as follows:

Article I

The two sides shall carry out border defence cooperation on the basis of their respective laws and relevant bilateral agreements.

Article II

The two sides shall implement border defence cooperation in the following ways:

1. Exchange information-including information about military exercises, aircrafts, demolition operations and unmarked mines-and take consequent measures conducive to the maintenance of peace, stability and tranquility along the line of actual control in the India-China border areas,
2. Jointly combat smuggling of arms, wildlife, wildlife articles and other contrabands,
3. Assist the other side in locating personnel, livestock, means of transport and aerial vehicles that may have crossed or are possibly in the process of crossing the line of actual control in the India-China border areas,
4. Work with the other side in combating natural disasters or infectious diseases that may affect or spread to the other side,
5. Any other way mutually agreed upon by the two sides.

Article III

Border deference cooperation visualized in this agreement shall be implemented through the following mechanisms:

1. Flag meetings or border personnel meetings at designated places along the line of actual control in the India-China border areas.
2. Periodic meetings between officers of the relevant Military Regions of China and Army Commands of India and between departments responsible for military operations.

3. Periodic meetings of the representatives of the Ministry of Defence of the Government of India and the Ministry of National Defence of the People's Republic of China.
4. Meetings of the Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs.
5. Meetings of the India-China Annual Defence Dialogue.

Article IV

In implementing border defence cooperation and to facilitate contacts and meetings between relevant organizations, the two sides may establish Border Personnel Meeting sites in all sectors, as well as telephone contacts and telecommunication links at mutually agreed locations along the line of actual control. The two sides may also consider establishing a Hotline between the military headquarters of the two countries. Specific arrangements shall be decided upon through mutual consultations between the two sides.

Article V

In order to enhance understanding and cooperation between the border defence forces of the two sides, each side may invite the other side for joint celebrations on major national or military days or festivals and organize cultural activities, non-contact sports events and small scale tactical exercises along the line of actual control in the India-China border areas. In addition, the two sides may also conduct joint military training exercises, at Army level, in each other's country on a regular basis. The theme of such joint exercises will be decided through mutual consultations.

Article VI

The two sides agree that they shall not follow or tail patrols of the other side in areas where there is no common understanding of the line of actual control in the India-China border areas.

Article VII

In case a doubtful situation arises with reference to any activity by either side in border areas where there is no common understanding of the line of actual control, either side has the right to seek a clarification from the other side. In such cases, the clarification shall be sought and replies to them shall be conveyed through any of the mechanisms established under Article III of this Agreement.

Article VIII

The two sides agree that if the border defence forces of the two sides come to a face-to-face situation in areas where there is no common understanding of the line of actual control, both sides shall exercise maximum self-restraint, refrain from any provocative actions, not use force or threaten to use force against the other side, treat each other with courtesy and prevent exchange of fire or armed conflict.

Article IX

The two sides shall implement this Agreement without prejudice to their respective positions on the alignment of the line of actual control as well as on the boundary question.

Article X

This Agreement shall come into force on the date of its signature. It may be revised, amended or terminated with the consent of the two sides. Any revision or amendment, mutually agreed by the two sides, shall form an integral part of this Agreement.

Signed in duplicate in Hindi, Chinese and English languages at Beijing on 23rd day of October month of 2013, all three versions being equally authentic. In case of divergence, the English text shall prevail.

* The Border Defence Cooperation Agreement is a constructive step towards resolving the boundary dispute. The BDCA itself is not a game-changer: it simply reinforces the basic international norm that countries ought to settle differences through peaceful means. Specifically, the Agreement adds to the existing layer of confidence-building measures through flag meetings, joint military patrols, and periodic high-level interaction. The BDCA nevertheless indicates both New Delhi and Beijing have accorded high priority to preventing hostile incidents along the Line of Actual Control. That Chinese Premier Li Keqiang and Dr. Singh have exchanged visits within six months of the incident reflects this fact. The Chinese intrusion and subsequent withdrawal from the Depsang plain earlier this year provided the impetus to BDCA negotiations, and prompted serious introspection on the effectiveness of the Working Mechanism on Border Affairs. By opting for a tempered Agreement though, Dr. Singh has chosen to play his hand cautiously in an election year. The BJP, which facetiously claimed the government has ceded territory to China, would do well to acknowledge the spirit with which former Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee established the Special Representative mechanism on border talks during his 2003 Beijing visit.

287. Agreement on the establishment of sister city relations between Bengaluru, Republic of India and Chengdu, People's Republic of China.

Beijing, October 23, 2013.

Bengaluru, Republic of India and Chengdu, People's Republic of China (hereinafter referred to as the Parties),

Recalling the Agreement between the Ministry of External Affairs, Republic of India and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, People's Republic of China to facilitate cooperation and linkages between Indian and Chinese cities & states/ provinces, signed in New Delhi on 20 May 2013 to facilitate closer cooperation between the local authorities of India and China;

In furtherance of their desire to promote closer engagement in the fields of public policy, education, health, science and technology, tourism and culture;

Have agreed as follows:

- i. To establish sister-city relations and create mechanisms for its implementation;

289. Prime Minister's speech at the Central Party School in Beijing — India and China in the New Era.

Beijing, October 24, 2013.

Your Excellency,

Executive Vice-President of Central Party School,

Foreign Minister Wang Yi

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am deeply honoured at this invitation to speak at the Central Party School of the Communist Party of China. Ladies and Gentlemen, I am conscious of the unique place that this School holds in the governance system of contemporary China and its contribution to the remarkable transformation of Chinese society. Many of you will play a decisive role in shaping China's future development, which will be of great significance for Asia and the world.

I can think of no better place than this School to speak about India and China in the new era.

Relations between India and China are unique in the world. We are two continuous ancient civilizations. We are neighbours with a long history of cultural, spiritual and economic ties. We both embarked on a new phase of our political histories around the same time. Today, we are the world's two most populous nations, engaged in a process of socio-economic transformation of our people on a scale and at a pace unprecedented in human history.

Ladies and Gentlemen, both our countries have achieved considerable success in this endeavour. Indeed, China's early economic reforms and impressive achievements are a source of inspiration across the developing world. After China, India has been the fastest growing major economy in the world, averaging a growth rate of 7% per year over the past two decades and around 8% per year during the past ten years. As a result, both our economies have expanded several times. We have achieved a high degree of economic modernization and have lifted hundreds of millions of our people out of the clutches of poverty.

In our own ways, we have also had an impact in shaping the global economy – China in the manufacturing sector and India in the services sector.

Over the past two decades, the process of economic reforms in India has gone through the rigour of democratic debate, and met the test of political consensus and public support. India's policies have focused not only on accelerating growth, but also on making it sustainable and regionally balanced. We have emphasized not only modernization, but also addressing the challenges of opportunities, capacity and equity for our vast and diverse population. This is the path on which we will continue to move forward.

In structural terms, India's growth is propelled by domestic demand and financed largely by our own resources. But we are also increasingly integrated into the global economy. The prolonged global economic crisis has affected us, as it has many other emerging economies. I believe, however, that this is a temporary disruption. In recent months, we have taken measures to enhance foreign investment flows, speed up implementation of major projects, boost infrastructure development, strengthen our financial markets, reform our tax system and make our business environment more attractive.

Our effort is to return the Indian economy to a sustained growth rate of 7-8% per annum. We believe that the underlying fundamentals of our economy, particularly investment and savings rates, are strong and consistent with this projection.

India's critical challenges in the days ahead are precisely in areas where I see opportunities for cooperation between India and China and I would like to highlight eight specific areas in this regard.

One, we need to pay much greater attention to the expansion and modernization of our infrastructure.

India plans to invest one trillion U.S. dollars in infrastructure in the next five years and we would welcome China's expertise and investment in this sector.

Two, we need to increase our agricultural productivity in order to reduce rural-urban disparities in income and manage efficiently the process of mass urbanization, which is a phenomenon common to both our countries. This will mean paying particular attention to the issues of water and waste management.

China has significant experience of urbanization and our national planners, city administrators and entrepreneurs should share experiences and seek solutions in dealing with the physical, social, environmental and human challenges of mobility and urbanization.

Three, we want to draw upon China's strength in the manufacturing sector, which is vital for providing mass employment. India, for its part, has strength in services, innovation and certain manufacturing sectors, which can benefit China. A linked challenge for India is in skill development, where we can learn from each other's experience.

Four, as large and growing consumers of energy, we should intensify cooperation on the shared challenges of energy security, including joint development of renewable energy resources, as well as working jointly with third countries.

Five, growing population, shrinking land, improving consumption levels and price volatility make food security a key policy priority for us. India has launched a major legislation-based food security programme. Our two countries should pool our resources and expertise in this area.

More broadly, in an uncertain global environment, India and China can work together to impart stability to the global economy and sustain growth in our two economies by leveraging our resources, large unsaturated demand, economies of scale and our growing income levels.

Six, in an integrated world, economic success requires a favourable external environment. In recent decades, India and China have been among the greatest beneficiaries of an open global economy; a rule-based and open international trade regime; and free flow of finance, information and technology.

However, the emerging global environment may not remain as favourable as it has been in recent decades. We should therefore work together to make the international economic environment more conducive to our development efforts. Please allow me to elaborate this point.

After the prolonged global economic crisis of 2008, we face a fundamentally different future for the world economy. We are in the midst of a significant and ongoing transformation where both political and economic power is being diffused. A multi-polar world is emerging but its contours are not yet clear.

Protectionist sentiments in the West have increased and the global trading regime may become fragmented by regional arrangements among major countries. India and China have a vital stake in preserving an open, integrated and stable global trade regime even as we work together to foster regional economic integration. We should also intensify our efforts to support trade and investment and reduce risks in emerging markets. The BRICS Development Bank and the Contingency Reserve Arrangement are examples of such cooperative efforts. Our cooperation will also help accelerate reforms in global financial institutions.

Seven, while we welcome and celebrate the rapid economic growth of our economies, we must also confront the challenges of climate change and focus greater attention on the safeguarding of our fragile environment. Both India and China are heirs to civilizations that value Nature and have practiced sustainability through the ages. However, as we meet the basic needs of our people, we also face the danger of unfair burdens being imposed on us for mitigating climate change. We should ensure that the international response to climate change does not constrain our growth and that it continues to be based on the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities.

Eight, India and China have also benefited from a largely stable global order and peaceful periphery. But we cannot take a stable political and security environment in our region and beyond for granted. If we look carefully, many of our challenges are common. Terrorism, extremism and radicalism emanating from our neighbourhood affect both of us directly and can create instability across Asia. Similarly, maritime security in the Pacific and Indian Oceans is vital for our economies just as peace and stability in West Asia and Gulf are essential for our energy security.

Above all, India and China need a stable, secure and prosperous Asia Pacific region. The centre of gravity of global opportunities and challenges are shifting to this region. In the coming decades, China and India, together with the United States, Japan, Korea and the ASEAN Community, will be among the largest economies in the world. While this region embodies unparalleled dynamism and hope, it is also one with unsettled questions and unresolved disputes. It will be in our mutual interest to work for a cooperative, inclusive and rule-based security architecture that enhances our collective security and regional and global stability.

While both India and China are large and confident enough to manage their security challenges on their own, we can be more effective if we work together. Regional stability and prosperity will also gain from stronger connectivity in the Asia-Pacific region. This should be a shared enterprise of India and China.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have said on several occasions that India welcomes China's emergence. Frankly, old theories of alliances and containment are no longer relevant. India and China cannot be contained and our recent history is testimony to this. Nor should we seek to contain others.

We both know that the benefits of cooperation far outweigh any presumed gains from containment. Therefore, we should engage with each other in a spirit of equality and friendship and with the confidence that neither country is a threat to the other. This is the essential premise of India's external engagement. Our strategic partnerships with other countries are defined by our own economic interests, needs and aspirations. They are not directed against China or anyone else. We expect a similar approach from China.

The landmark visit of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to China 25 years ago marked a new beginning in our relationship. Since then, successive leaders in our two countries have built on that historic opening. Over this period, our relationship has prospered and our cooperation has expanded across a broad spectrum of areas. This is because we have managed our differences and have, in general, kept our border regions tranquil. At the same time, we continue to make progress in resolving our border dispute. Having agreed to the Political Parameters and Guiding Principles, we are now discussing a Framework for a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable boundary settlement.

This stability in our relationship has created the basic conditions for our two countries to exploit the opportunities created by our economic growth and opening. Indeed, the most dynamic area of our relationship has been economic and China has emerged as one of India's largest economic partners.

Naturally, there are also concerns on both sides – whether it is incidents in the border region, trans-border rivers or trade imbalances.

Our recent experiences have shown that these issues can become impediments to the full exploitation of the opportunities for bilateral and multilateral cooperation between India and China, which is important for the continuing progress and transformation of our two countries.

I believe that our two countries not only share a common destiny, but that we have unlimited possibilities for closer cooperation. Let me therefore outline seven practical principles of engagement that I believe will set India and China on this course.

One, we should reaffirm an unwavering commitment to the principles of Panchsheel and conduct our relationship in a spirit of mutual respect, sensitivity to each other's interests and sovereignty, and mutual and equal security. India has welcomed President Xi Jinping's concept of a new type of great power relations. This is a contemporary development of the Panchsheel or Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence, elaborated by Prime Minister Nehru and Premier Zhou Enlai in the 1950s. It highlights, in a modern context, the need for creating inter-state relations among major powers, based on mutual trust, sensitivity to each other's core concerns and a commitment to resolve all outstanding issues through peaceful dialogue. We should develop our relations on the basis of these principles.

Two, maintaining peace and tranquility in the India-China border areas has been the cornerstone of our relations. It is essential for mutual confidence and for the expansion of our relations. We should do nothing to disturb that. Indeed, we can achieve it by adhering to our agreements and utilizing our bilateral mechanisms effectively. At the same time, we should move quickly to resolve our boundary issue.

Three, we should increase consultations and cooperation on complex issues such as trans-border rivers and our trade imbalance so as to strengthen our strategic and cooperative partnership.

Four, we should maintain a high level of strategic communication and consultations, in a spirit of transparency, on our region and our periphery, eliminating misunderstanding between our two countries and building experience of positive cooperation. As the two largest countries in Asia, our strategic consultation and cooperation will enhance peace, stability and security in our region and beyond.

Five, our convergence on a broad range of global issues should lead to enhanced policy coordination on regional and global affairs and cooperation in regional and multilateral forums in the political, economic and security domains.

Six, we should harness the full potential of cooperation in all aspects of our relationship, including in the economic area.

And finally, we will achieve much greater success in our relations by increasing contacts and familiarity between our people in every walk of life.

Like a beautiful tangram that emerges from seven different shapes, these seven principles would together create a beautiful tapestry of India-China relations in the years ahead.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am pleased that the agreements that we have signed yesterday will help to advance many of these shared principles. As officials who will determine public policy, I hope you will do everything to advance our cooperation and promote India-China relations from your positions of responsibility.

Before I conclude, let me recall what I have often said that the world is large enough to accommodate the development aspirations of both India and China.

In my meeting with President Xi yesterday, he echoed this thought when he said that the Chinese and Indian dreams for becoming strong, developed and prosperous nations are inter-connected and mutually compatible. My meetings with President Xi and Premier Li give me great confidence that we can fulfill this noble vision. More than ever before, the world needs both countries to prosper together. We were not destined to be rivals, and we should show determination to become partners. Our future should be defined by cooperation and not by confrontation. It will not be easy, but we must spare no effort.

What is at stake is the future of India and China; indeed, what may be at stake is the future of our region and our world.

I thank you for your attention.

290. Extracts from Prime Minister's onboard media interaction en route to Delhi from Beijing.

October 24, 2013.

Prime Minister: Ladies and gentlemen, you have been briefed extensively on the visits to Russia and China, so I won't go into the details. My visit to Russia was primarily for the Annual Summit. Russia is, for us, a key strategic partner in many areas, including defence, energy and trade. We also have important convergences in a number of areas of regional and international interest. My visit has renewed my confidence in the strength of this relationship.

In China, my visit was to follow up on the process of getting to know the new Chinese leadership better. China is our largest neighbour, a significant economic partner and a country with increasing global presence. While we have our differences, there are many areas, bilateral, regional and multilateral, where cooperation among us is to our mutual benefit. It is only through a process of intense engagement that we will be able to move forward in all areas. I am satisfied that my just concluded visit has served its purpose.

Any questions which you would like to ask?

Q: Sir, during this China visit, as a part of the nine historic agreements, you have also signed some crucial and landmark cross-border river agreement also. At the moment you represent North-East. What is the likely impact of this agreement for our North-Eastern states?

Answer: Well, because I represent the North-East, I have been emphatic that cooperation between China and India in matters relating to the trans-border river system should proceed forward. I have been discussing this earlier also with the Chinese leadership. I raised this issue again and there is incremental progress. They have agreed to supply data for more number of days. Also they have recognized that the behaviour of the trans-border river system is of interest to all riparian states. So, our concerns have been put on the table. I hope there will be progress in years to come.

Q: The Chinese leadership termed the visit as very successful, so how do you term your visit to China and compare the two visits to Russia and China?

Answer: Both these visits have served their purpose. I am satisfied with the results that we have been able to secure, both in Russia as well as in China.

Q: Our relations with Pakistan haven't really gone well given the sustained attacks on our border and the meeting in New York which did not go well. With that going down the tube, do you believe that with China we stand a chance with this new border agreement, possibly of settling the border issue at some stage and having peace and tranquillity in that sector?

Answer: There is a commitment on the part of both China and India that peace and tranquillity on the border is a pre-requisite for progress in our relationship. So, there is this recognition and on the whole there has been peace and tranquillity on the Indo-China border. So, I am reasonably satisfied that the Chinese leadership is as serious as we are in ensuring peace and tranquillity on the India-China border.

Q: Sir, you have mentioned at least on a couple of times, and in fact, this morning that terrorism, extremism and radicalism emanating from the region is a matter of concern. What was the response of the Chinese government on the concerns that we have on terrorism, India has on terrorism from the region.

Answer: Both in Russia and China I found growing recognition that terrorism is a threat to all the countries of the region and that terrorism and extremism both are enemies of progress, that we must work together, pool our intelligence and information system to deal with this menace.

Q: Its been over three weeks since you met Pakistan's Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif in New York. Firing, Prime Minister, has not only increased at the LoC but also along the international border, are you disappointed with Nawaz Sharif and if Pakistan continues to fire, how should we respond Prime Minister?

Answer: Let me say that I am disappointed, because in the New York meeting there was a general agreement on both the sides that peace and tranquillity should be maintained on the border, on the Line of Control as well as on the international border and this has not happened. It has come to me as a big disappointment. We had agreed at that meeting that the ceasefire which was made effective in 2003, if it has held ground for 10 years, it could be made to hold ground later on also. The fact that this is not happening, is something which is really a matter of disappointment. I sincerely hope that at this late hour Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif will recognize that this is a development which is not good for either of the two countries.

Q: India and China seek for further liberalisation of Visa Regime. Can we expect any positive steps in the near future.

Answer: That's an aspiration that we both have and I hope we can find workable mechanisms to realise that goal.

291. External Affairs Minister's interview with P.S. Suryanarayan of the Institute of South Asian Studies.

Singapore, October 24, 2013

What is the new gravitational pull between the United States and India, on one side, and even between China and India, which is quite a pleasant surprise?

If you go back to the roots of India's philosophical position of non-alignment, it was essentially saying that "we're in nobody's camp. We deal with everybody on merit. We have an autonomous and independent foreign policy and, on merit, we have friendships". There are countries with which we share fundamental values of democracy; there are countries which are important partners for us in terms of our strategic concerns; there are countries that are in our neighbourhood and therefore ... we have our own reasons for reaching out to them. ... There were one kind of expectations that the world had of India – one kind of leadership [for that] soon after [India's] Independence, you know, [in the context of] the Afro-Asian stirring for emancipation, independence; and the ability [of India] to take your own decisions about your own national interests.

And, now, in another phase, there is the other expectation of India. And, I think, that expectation of India is reflected in people supporting India for a Permanent Seat in the [United Nations] Security Council, [whenever] a reformed Security Council and reformed UN system [is formed]. Because, they think that we provide intrinsic and important link between the developing world and the developed world – which is really where we are when we are in the G20 [Group of Twenty] [given] our relationship with Brazil, Russia [and] China in BRICS or with South Africa and Brazil and ourselves in IBSA. This is the reflection of a current, contemporary situation in which there are different expectations from India, but still expectations of leadership. And, we are trying to fulfil those. And in doing this, we have something to do with China, something to do with Russia. ... We have something to do with the US and we have something to do with other parts of the world, Africa, Southeast Asia, Latin America. I have tried to find a balanced approach.

You have given a panoramic perspective of India's foreign policy in the present times. But this being a globalised world and there is a lot of realpolitik – I don't have to say that to you – there should surely be some factor which is galvanising the relations, on one side, between the US and India and also at the same time between China and India. Is there not some kind of a linkage? Is there a China factor in the US-India relations and, therefore, an India factor in China-US relations?

We have very specifically said this and we are very clear: China-India [equation] on its own, US-India on its own. We will never be allies of the US; we will be friends, strategic partners, not allies. And similarly we will be strategic partners with China; hopefully, we will become friends with China when all our issues are resolved; we have a very good working relationship with them, but we have things to resolve with them.

As far as the US is concerned, I think, it is very, very important that we deal with them, because US is a driving force in [the US-India] '123 civil nuclear agreement'; US is a driving force – in a landscape [of global nuclear commerce] where India was excluded – on our terms, on our terms, to give us inclusion. I think the US played a very major role. And, of course, when this happens, it can't be a one-way street, there is an interaction; there is give-and-take. And there are expectations which the US has of India; there are expectations which we have of the US.

What could be the US expectations of India?

The US expectation is market access. Simple

Will that be the be-all and end-all of the relationship?

I think, in all fairness, US has not imposed upon us in terms of strategic choice. We have taken a position on Iraq, we have taken a position on Iran; we have taken a position on Syria. We can talk to US about everything. We have a communication level with US, which is very good. We consult, we talk but we don't necessarily always align our positions. We may not be hostile to a US position, but we certainly are not subservient to a US position. We understand their concerns, we understand their concerns in Afghanistan; we understand their concerns about Pakistan, but we can't necessarily agree. So, we often can agree to disagree. But in the larger context, we converge on many positions; and, critically, those positions that really matter.

What are the US expectations, as you would have discerned them, of India with respect to China? Surely there must be some.

They never told us this is what you need to do with China. People speculate in this part of the world about US position on pivot, US position on rebalancing towards Asia; ... and there are, obviously, methodologies of and connectivity that this part of the world has with China despite differences on certain dimensions. But we are, I think, lucky in that our position is that we will not be part of anybody else's scheme of things; and, therefore, we are not. We have told China "we want to be friends with you and we don't demand that you give up your other friendships in this region. But, all we expect is: don't make your friendships at the cost of India. That's all we ask, not at our cost". That's all we say to Turkey, that's all we say to any country that has a position that we may not be completely aligned with. ... If we believe that we have a right to an autonomous foreign policy, we must respect the right of other people to have an autonomous foreign policy.

two specifics in relation to China, because China is the overwhelming presence in East Asia: So, with reference to Pakistan as China's old "all-weather friend" and with reference to China's position on India's permanent membership [of a reformed UN Security Council] . What are the updates you have?

Well, you see, obviously, China, as I said, has an important relationship with Pakistan; and we have made it known they can have an important relationship with Pakistan, which is not our concern. Our concern is limited to two things: one is China's cooperation with Pakistan as far as the Pakistan-occupied Kashmir is concerned – obviously, I mean, that's adverse to our interest. And, the second one is issues of proliferation – that is, helping Pakistan with their nuclear programme – that is a matter of concern to us. We make it known to China at every interaction that we have with China. But beyond that we have no problem if they are friends with Pakistan. We are happy to work with them on many other fields; we will continue to work with them in many fields. They now have to decide – their friendship with Pakistan entails what kind of positions that they take in the world.

Now, we actually advocated China's entry into WTO [the World Trade Organization] ... because, that allowed China to participate in a larger frame of things, in which India was a willing partner. So, there will obviously be both give and take when something like this happens. It's for China to decide and categorically take a position on what is going to happen with the Security Council; but there is a huge number of countries [supporting India] ...

Does India have a comfort level with China on these issues?

It's a working level. I don't know if I would describe it as comfort level. We have a working level. We have a good working relationship with China. We are working closely with them in many fields, including field of economics. We look forward to China's investment in our country. We want to balance trade with China; and one way to compensate for the imbalance is to have greater Chinese investment in India. We are willing to have them put up industries, to invest in industrial townships.

Now, you may describe that as comfort level, you may describe that as an interest, you may describe that as cooperation, you may describe that as collaboration; but all this is open with China. We have ring-fenced (re-fenced) our differences with China. And our differences are of perception – basically the border. The good news is that there are no casualties [along the disputed SinoIndian border]; the good news is that our differences don't blow up; there are natural barricades that prevent any spill-over of those into other areas of cooperation. And, I think, this is a good example of working step by step to resolve an issue peacefully through dialogue and with the conviction that, in the long term, we really need to work together rather than remain aloof and remain estranged.

[on a different front] there are once again reports of LoC [Line of Control] firings from Pakistan. What is the situation? Do you think that some sections in the Pakistani establishment are still trying to “sabotage” India-Pakistan relations?

I don't know if it's sabotage, or prevent, or interfere, or obstruct – use any word you like. But if there is firing on the Line of Control and firing on the [India-Pakistan] border, somebody, somebody is doing it. And we believe that something on such a large scale can't be done without the consent, participation, or at least connivance, or at least indulgence of the [Pakistan] Army. Now, when we say this, our Pakistani counterparts get very upset: “Why are you blaming the Army?”

But, you know, we can only go by field reports that we get from our own armed forces. And the field reports from our own armed forces indicate that that there is involvement of regular Army units from the other side. The kind of firing; that is, the nature of violations that happen, and so on. Then, of course, there is this issue of infiltration [into India from Pakistan], infiltration by terrorist elements. That, we have – because of fencing, and because of vigilance – we have controlled considerably; but sometimes they try concerted effort, as they did recently – concerted effort when a large number of people tried to get through either under protection of darkness or under protection of firing from across the border. So, it's a harsh and bitter reality that we live with.

But, in the long run, we believe it's important not to get provoked. We hold our line, we don't let our defence to be breached, and we make our point very clearly across to counterparts in Pakistan that this is unacceptable. Of course, a lot of people say, "how can you keep saying, 'unacceptable' and do nothing about it, to which we say: 'What do you do about it? You don't have a war with another nuclear power because they are firing with small weapons across the border'". It's hurtful; it's irritating; it's unacceptable; but, as a responsible power, as a responsible country that is being considered as a serious candidate for permanent membership of the Security Council – which is not the case with Pakistan – I think we know what we should be doing.

about [India's] Prime Minister Manmohan Singh asking [Pakistan's] Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif whether he could show leadership: what exactly was 'leadership' in that particular context? Did Dr Singh mean that Pakistani Prime Minister should be independent of their army? You were privy....

Well, we don't know. Yes, when we say "we want peace" we must deliver peace. When they say they want peace, they must deliver peace. We [India] can't talk to the [Pakistan] Army. We can't talk to the various sections of their government. We can only talk to the elected leaders [in Pakistan]. And the elected leaders have consistently said, during the [recent] election campaign and thereafter, that they want peace with India. And, they want peace on reasonable terms. ... Like we have with China, they [the Pakistanis] also have some issues with us. And we said "we are not afraid to talk about those issues". We have talked about them in the past; we can talk about them again, but we can do so only when you can carry conviction with the people of your country. The people of our country must be able to see that there is bona fide and honest effort from across the border to reach out to India. And then we can talk. That's what leadership is about: leadership is that you have to take responsibility for what your people want to do. And we are asking for responsibility for 26/11 [the terrorist attacks in Mumbai in 2008]; we are asking for accountability, we are asking for dismantling of the infrastructure of terrorism [in Pakistan]. We do understand it's not easy. None of these things are easy if they have gone on for years. It's not easy. But that's where leadership comes in.

What's your sense? Is Mr. Sharif displaying this kind of leadership?

I think you can't judge. [Recently] he has been elected, settling down. His stated position is very clear. We appreciate it. But you have got to put your money where the mouth is. [In the meeting between Dr Singh and Mr Sharif in New York on 29 September 2013, the Pakistani leader did highlight his leadership qualities, it is understood.]

New Delhi, November 29, 2013.

In response to a question regarding a report on the India-China Boundary Question, in the Mail Today, the Official Spokesperson said:

" We have seen the article. It is speculative and factually incorrect."

* The article referred to speculated that India and China had agreed that while China will agree to India retaining the Arunachal Pradesh including Tawang, India would agree to China retaining the entire Aksai Chin in Ladakh Sector of J&K

293. Information supplied to the Rajya Sabha by the Ministry of Defence on the Infiltration by the Chinese troops.

New Delhi, December 11, 2013.

There has been no infiltrations by Chinese troops into Indian Territory. However, there is no commonly delineated Line of Actual Control (LAC) between India and China. There are areas along the border where India and China have differing perceptions of the LAC. Due to both sides undertaking patrolling upto their respective perceptions of the LAC, transgressions do occur. Government regularly takes up any transgression with the Chinese side through established mechanisms.

Government takes adequate measures to safeguard the sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of India by reviewing the threat perception from time to time, and takes appropriate steps to meet the threats.

* However last month on November 11, Minister of External Affairs had while conceding that there were different perceptions of the LAC on both the sides, said India was concerned about periodic provocative incursions by Chinese troops that have resulted in "eyeball-to-eyeball confrontations", but was hopeful that the border issues will eventually be settled. "Obviously, we are concerned about periodic steps that seem provocative or adverse to our interests," External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid said. "But, of course, they (incursions) are occurring in the context of a different perception of what the Line of Control is and where it should be. The good news is that there hasn't been a casualty on the Chinese front for several years. There have been skirmishes and eyeball-to-eyeball confrontations, but no casualties", he said. He believed the border issues will eventually be settled and peace and stability between India and China will become stronger over time, Mr. Khurshid said in an interview to The Australian. Responding to a question if India and China, by virtue of their size, proximity, contrasting political systems and diverging geo-strategic interests, were not destined to some extent to be strategic rivals, Mr. Khurshid said: "Yes, I think that's to some extent inevitable, although it's much more complex than that, of course. But we'd like to be rivals who are also partners, partners who are also rivals."

"Our Prime Minister has said that the world is large enough to accommodate the aspirations of both China and India," he said.

Mr. Khurshid said he was prepared to talk in some detail about one of the most vexed issues in the Sino-Indian relationship — the border of Arunachal Pradesh — with China.

India and China last month inked a comprehensive pact — Border Defence Cooperation Agreement (BDCA) — which commits them not to use military capability to attack each other.

The agreement was signed following a series of incursions by the Chinese army into Depsang Valley in Ladakh region in May.

Mr. Khurshid also expressed satisfaction with India's ties with the United States.

"The U.S. is a very important security partner to us. We have never subscribed to the idea of an alliance. In the past, we had our non-aligned position and more recently we describe it as our autonomous strategic position.

"But, we have collaborated closely with the U.S. We are constantly now in joint (military) exercises. We are involved in intelligence sharing. We are looking at the joint design and manufacturing of defence equipment, so that we move beyond the vendor and customer relationship," he said.

Mr. Khurshid, however, noted that U.S.-India economic and investment relationship has moved at a slower pace as some Americans, especially U.S. industry leaders, had hoped.

"The experience in what happened in the subprime loan episode and in the financial crisis which hit Southeast Asia some time before that, has confirmed for us that what is described as an element of conservatism in our economic policy has served us well," he said.

On US politics, Mr. Khurshid said, "India, more than any nation, understands the business of internal democratic contention and delay.

"India is a friend of the U.S. We see the U.S. as an inspiration and a very successful economy. When we see question marks over the U.S., it worries us. We hope they emerge stronger than ever."

INDONESIA

297 Prime Minister's interview to Kompas newspaper, Indonesia.

Q. India and Indonesia share old civilizational links and now we are strategic partners. What are the main expectations from your visit to Indonesia?

Ans. We regard Indonesia as one of our most important partners in our neighbourhood and a key constituent of India's Look East Policy. Our two countries are among the most populous in the world. We are both pluralist democracies, which share many interests, including maritime security and emergence of a peaceful, stable and prosperous Asia. There is enormous potential for bilateral cooperation across a broad range of areas, including trade and investment, based on our civilizational linkages, which led not only to a fusion of art and culture, but also to a confluence of ideas, values and social ethos. The Ramayana and the Mahabharata, the architecture of ancient temples and stupas, similarities in designs and motifs of handloom textiles, respect for the elderly and the wise – all are our shared heritage. The leaders of our two countries also shared their experiences during our respective freedom struggles, forged Afro-Asian solidarity and led the Non-Aligned Movement.

Our relationship has flourished as a robust, multi-faceted strategic partnership today. We work closely in regional, multilateral and international fora such as the UN, NAM, G-20, EAS and other ASEAN mechanisms, IOR-ARC and WTO. President Yudhoyono's visit to India in 2011 added greater momentum to the relationship. I am keenly looking forward to my own visit to consolidate and deepen the strategic content of our relationship, strengthen trade and investment relations, and broaden people-to-people linkages.

Q. Trade between India and Indonesia stands at US$ 20 billion. In the context of downturn in the global economy, how do you think the trade/ investment relations between our countries can be improved upon? What are core sectors for a fruitful India-Indonesia engagement?

Ans. The trend in bilateral trade is positive, though trade saw a minor dip in 2012-13 on account of the global financial situation, and stood at USD 20 billion. We are confident of achieving the bilateral trade target of US$ 25 billion by 2015. We believe the potential is much higher.

We should diversify our trade basket, resolve impediments to trade and investment and encourage higher flow of investments in both directions. A bilateral Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) will open up the potential on both sides and provide strong impetus to growth.

The early signing of ASEAN-India Services and Investment Agreements, negotiations on Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP) and emergence of an ASEAN Economic Community by end-2015 would also have a positive effect on our trade and investment relations with Indonesia.

Our imports from Indonesia have largely been from extractive industries, which should be diversified. India could be a significant source for a broad range of goods, including agro-products, automobile components, engineering goods, IT, pharmaceuticals, meat and meat products and biotechnology products.

Indian companies view Indonesia as an attractive investment destination. We already have significant investments in your country in infrastructure, power, textiles, steel, automotive, mining, banking and FMCG manufacturing. All prominent Indian companies, including Tata, Birla, Reliance, SBI, and many others have a presence in Indonesia. In comparison, Indonesia's investment in India is relatively limited. I invite Indonesian companies to look at the immense investment opportunities that India offers in the infrastructure, logistics, hospitality, and services sectors. It would be of mutual benefit if Indonesia invites Indian investments in education, healthcare, pharmaceuticals and port development.

Q. What are the main agreements/MOUs, which are going to be signed during the visit?

Ans. Both sides have prepared a number of MoUs to be concluded. Some of them are between Government Ministries and agencies, and others are between educational and training institutions. These will reflect the multi-dimensional character of our relationship.

Q. The ASEAN community will come into force in 2015. India successfully hosted the India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in December 2012. How do you see India's role in the ASEAN community?

Ans. I am arriving in Jakarta directly from Brunei, where we held the 11th ASEAN-India Summit. I have said on many occasions that our engagement with ASEAN remains the cornerstone of our 'Look East' Policy. We admire the progress in ASEAN cooperation and integration, and ASEAN leadership in forging broader regional cooperation and integration. We firmly believe that ASEAN centrality in that process is important for the evolution of a cooperative, rule-based open and inclusive regional architecture.

We value Indonesia's leadership role in ASEAN and ASEAN-centric processes. We have elevated our relationship to the level of a strategic partnership during the Commemorative Summit we held in New Delhi in December last year. Our engagement with ASEAN covers the full spectrum of political, security, economic and socio-cultural cooperation.

We are keenly following the evolution of the ASEAN Community by 2015, and remain committed to extending all possible assistance. Our focus has been on capacity building and on connectivity. We have established several Entrepreneurship Development Centers (EDCs), Centers for English Language Training (CELTs), IT Centers and Vocational Training Centers (VTCs) in CLMV countries. We offer more than 1000 scholarships to ASEAN countries. We are actively engaged in connectivity initiatives - both physical and institutional - to bring India and the ASEAN closer, including through our initiative to build the India-Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway and our support to the ASEAN Master Plan on Connectivity.

Q. China has become a dominant partner in the Asia Pacific region. In this context how do you see India's role in the Asia Pacific region? How can the Asia Pacific region become a strong alliance amidst the seeds of regional disputes, border issues and other issues between Japan and China and India and China?

Ans. India and China are two civilizational neighbours. Economic cooperation constitutes a very important part of our relationship and the growth potential of our two economies can provide the engine for greater cooperation and can also contribute to prosperity in Asia and beyond. We have had differences, but we have steadily built a mature and mutually beneficial relationship. We have maintained peace and tranquility on our borders. We also collaborate on a range of regional and global issues.

I am convinced that there is enough space in the world today for cooperative efforts by all sides to meet their needs and aspirations. In this century, when global and regional inter-dependence are growing rapidly, cooperation, consultation and coordination, as also respect for international law and resolution of differences through peaceful dialogue, are indispensable for the peace, security and prosperity of all countries. Regional forums can play a useful role in this process. We, therefore, see immense value in the East Asia Summit, ASEAN Regional Forum, ADMM+ and other cooperative mechanisms in the region. The Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership is also a major initiative with great promise for our region.

Q. The Indian economy is in a downward spiral from a high growth. Apart from the global recession affecting most developing economies, what have been the main reasons for the sluggish performance of Indian economy?

Ans. If you leave aside last year's economic performance, in the previous nine years, the Indian economy has grown at an average annual rate of about 8% per annum. This is the highest rate of growth achieved by India in any previous decade. Last year, our growth rate declined to about 5%, partly because of the recession in the global economy, including the Euro zone and slow growth in US and Japan. India imports nearly 80% of its oil requirement and rising oil prices and slump in exports have hurt our trade balance. There are also some supply side bottlenecks in India, which we are addressing through policy and administrative reforms.

However, our economic fundamentals remain strong. Our savings and investment rates are still over 30% of GDP. Given our capital output ratios, we can restore the growth momentum to 8% per year in the short to medium term. We have taken a number of reform measures to boost domestic investments, attract more foreign investments, strengthen the financial sector and improve and simplify the tax regime. We have launched a broad range of entitlement programmes for the vulnerable sections of our population that require special attention of the government. And we are purposefully addressing the fiscal and current account deficits. At the same time, we will persist with our open trade regime. I am confident that the impact of these measures will be visible soon.

Q. The free fall of the Indian Rupee has been a matter of concern. The Indonesian Rupiah has also depreciated. What are the precautions/measures we need to take as developing countries to bring about stability in the currency?

Ans. Emerging economies have been affected by the prolonged global economic crisis and uneven and uncertain recovery. Slowdown in our exports and in inward flow of investments has affected growth and balance of payments. The unconventional monetary policy followed by major developed countries and expectations around its reversal had induced huge volatility in the financial and currency markets. India and Indonesia are part of the G20. The need for enhanced international coordination and communication on policies was emphasized at the G20 Summit in St. Petersburg in September. Sustained global economic recovery will benefit emerging economies.

However, each of us also needs to take appropriate national measures to accelerate economic growth, attract foreign investments and boost exports, including by leveraging the competitiveness generated by currency depreciation.

Q. India and Indonesia are gearing to elections in 2014. What are the main issues concerning the people of India which will influence the voters?

Ans. We are both strong democracies and elections are a way of life. In today's India, the electorate of close to 800 million is educated and politically well-informed. Many are young and full of energy, enterprise and ambition. They seek a better life for themselves and their children through access to opportunities, jobs, education, skill development, food and health care. All these issues are bound to figure in the run-up to the elections.

Q. India has been playing a big role in Development Partnership, especially in establishing Vocational Training centres, training and education. What do you think can be done to make it more effective?

Ans. India is a developing country, focused on national development and improving the living standards of its people. At the same time, we are happy to partner in the development efforts of other countries by sharing our experience, expertise and resources in whichever way we can. Human resources hold the key to a country's success. That is why we have laid emphasis on education, training and institutions in our development partnership. We also make a modest contribution in infrastructure development in our partner countries. We have committed, for instance, USD 9.5 billion in concessional assistance to African countries.

Currently, we offer around 100 scholarships to Indonesian students and officials under various schemes and Indonesia also offers such scholarships. We have also set up Chairs of Indian Studies in Indonesian Universities. Every year, we invite many students, academics, scientists, think tanks and media persons from Indonesia to visit India. We have set up two VTCs in Indonesia, in Jakarta and Banda Aceh, which are doing well, and are ready to set up a similar center in Papua. The recently established Development Partnership Agency in our Ministry of External Affairs is providing a new focus to our international development partnership efforts.

I believe that dynamic emerging economies such as India and Indonesia should share their development experience and expertise as this can be more relevant and effective in promoting economic development in the more vulnerable regions and countries of the world.

298. Prime Minister's media statement after delegation level talks in Indonesia.

Jakarta, October 11, 2013.

Your Excellency President Yudhoyono,
Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media

I am delighted to return to this beautiful country on my first official bilateral visit at the invitation of President Yudhoyono. I have always admired the President for his wisdom and visionary leadership and for the abiding personal commitment he has brought to strengthening the strategic partnership between our two countries.

Indonesia is one of India's most valued partners in our Look East Policy. Our bilateral relations are rich in potential and growing rapidly. As two large democracies and major emerging economies, we have many convergent interests and responsibilities in bilateral regional and global forums. As maritime neighbours along one of the most critical sea links in the world, we also have shared interests in maritime security.

I attach great importance to this visit as an opportunity to build on the momentum generated by President Yudhoyono's two landmark visits to India in 2005 and 2011 and to add further content to our relationship.

In our discussions today, we reaffirmed the importance of our Strategic Partnership for our two countries and our region. We expressed satisfaction with progress in our relations and outlined an ambitious course for the future. To this end, President Yudhoyono and I have agreed to deepen our partnership in each of the five major dimensions of our relationship: political, security, economic, people-to-people and international issues.

We agreed to continue the process of intensifying our political exchanges and stressed the early implementation of our bilateral initiatives. To this end, we have directed our officials to evolve a comprehensive action plan for meaningful and mutually beneficial security cooperation.

We reiterated our resolve to boost bilateral cooperation in combating terrorism, organized crime, drug and human trafficking and counterfeiting.

I requested early ratification by Indonesia of the Extradition Treaty and Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. The Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in Disaster Management and Combating Narcotics Trafficking signed today will also give more substance to our growing security cooperation.

The fourfold growth in bilateral trade in the last seven years reflects the vast potential of our economic relations. I emphasised to the President that measures to increase trade and encourage investments, besides early conclusion of a bilateral Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement would greatly expand and diversify our economic relations. We agreed that improved connectivity, early implementation of India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Services and Investment and the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership would be important in this regard.

We took note of our valuable space cooperation and looked forward to strengthening it in future. I conveyed to the President our offer to assist the Indonesian Government in setting up a Vocational Training Centre in Papua, after the successful experience of those established in Jakarta and Banda Aceh.

We have also decided to establish Chairs of Indian and Indonesian Studies in each other's universities and further expand our programme of scholarships, facilitate linkages among educational institutions and encourage partnerships in training and research.

I conveyed to President Yudhoyono our appreciation for Indonesia's strong support for the evolution of India's Strategic Partnership with ASEAN. We value Indonesia's leadership role in the ASEAN and the Association's effort in fostering broader regional cooperation and integration. I also recalled the President's very valuable suggestion for cooperation in the fields of food security and counter-terrorism between India and ASEAN at the India-ASEAN Summit yesterday in Brunei, and directed our officials to work towards concrete proposals in this regard.

Let me reiterate that India-ASEAN partnership is a force for peace and shared prosperity in our region. We also look forward to working closely with Indonesia in important regional, multilateral and global forums.

I thank President Yudhoyono once again for a very productive meeting and his generous hospitality. I am confident that our discussions and the agreements we have signed today will add new meaning and content to the strategic partnership between India and Indonesia.

Thank you

299. Prime Minister's Speech at the Banquet Dinner hosted by President of Indonesia.

Jakarta, October 11, 2013.

Your Excellency President Dr. Yudhoyono,

Madam Yudhoyono,

Distinguished guests,

Friends, ladies and gentlemen,

I thank you, Excellency, for your kind words and the eloquent expression of your warmth towards India. We are deeply touched by your warm welcome and generous hospitality.

Excellency, you have led Indonesia with great vision and wisdom at a crucial time for your country and during a period of remarkable change in the region. Under your leadership, Indonesia's democracy has been strengthened, its economy has grown, its regional role has increased and its global stature has expanded. We also see your unmistakable imprint in every milestone that India has crossed in its engagement with ASEAN. You have been an architect of the Strategic Partnership that was established between our countries during your landmark visit to India in 2005. Your visit in 2011 as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations reaffirmed the multiple strands of ties – ancient and modern – that bind our two countries into a special relationship. Excellency, in the long history of our civilisational interaction, our worldview has been moulded by the common spiritual heritage of Hinduism and Buddhism in the early centuries and Islam in the last few hundred years. The hearts of our peoples continue to pulsate to the beats of the Ramayana ballads. In the state of Orissa in my country, Bali Yatra, which recalls the once vibrant maritime Silk Route, is still a part of life.

We have enriched each other through art, architecture, music and language. We gave strength to each other in our struggle for freedom and in the first flush of our independence. Soon thereafter, we worked together for solidarity and unity in a world descending into division. It is not only this rich legacy, but also an extraordinary range of shared interests that add enduring warmth and strength to our relationship today. Both our countries, among the most populous in the world, are pluralist democracies that share development aspirations and face common challenges. We are also two major emerging economies that seek a peaceful and stable international environment to complete our transformation. We share a huge responsibility for shaping the future of our region, which is a storehouse of dynamism and optimism, but is also dealing with unsettled questions and the uncertainty of change. In the past decade, our engagement and cooperation have grown and deepened in every field of human endeavour and every dimension of our relationship. Yet, our discussions earlier today have demonstrated the vast untapped potential for working together to mutual benefit. I am confident that, in the coming years, we shall realize this potential more fully. Excellency, as the home of the ASEAN Secretariat, Indonesia signifies both Asia's unity and its diversity, values that are dear to India as well. Indonesia's foreign policy dictum of "thousand friends and no enemies" too finds an echo in India's guiding philosophy of "Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam", that is, the entire world is one family. I have no doubt that Asia, in its resurgence, will show the world the way towards peace, harmony and prosperity. It is the spirit of harmony captured so beautifully in the song composed by Your Excellency, which was rendered this evening, that finds resonance in India and holds the promise for us in Asia and the world.

With these worlds, Excellencies, friends, ladies and gentlemen, I invite you to join me in a toast:

- To the personal good health and happiness of His Excellency President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono and Madame Ani Bambang Yudhoyono;

- To the well-being, progress and prosperity of our two peoples; and
- To timeless friendship and partnership between India and Indonesia.

300. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) in Jakarta on Prime Minister's Ongoing Visit of Indonesia.

Jakarta, October 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): We requested Secretary (East) to brief you all quickly so that you can go and file your stories well in time. It is only now 4 o'clock Indian time. So, you will have enough time to file your stories.

I will request Secretary (East) to make his opening remarks where he will outline the areas of discussion. then if you have any questions, he will be willing to answer.

Secretary (East) (Shri Ashok Kantha): Thank you Akbar.

As you are aware, the Prime Minister and President Yudhoyono had a tete-e-tete followed by delegation-level talks. Earlier in the day, both External Affairs Minister and Commerce and Industry Ministry had separate discussions with their counterparts, and we have signed six documents altogether. Four documents were signed in your presence just now - on health, ant-corruption, narcotics and disaster management.

This morning in the presence of External Affairs Minister and his counterpart, two MoUs on cooperation - (1) between the Indian Council of World Affairs and its counterpart in Indonesia, and (2) between the Lal Bahadur Shastri National Academy of Administration and National Institute of Public Administration of Indonesia - were signed.

As for the flavour of the visit and discussions, the two principles have already spoken. They have given very clear indication of where they stand in terms of our strategic partnership and kind of strong commitment that we have on both sides to take it forward.

I would like to mention that this was Prime Minister's third visit to Indonesia, but first official bilateral visit, as he mentioned. President Yudhoyono also has been to India three times. In fact in last ten years we have had eight visits at the level of Head of State or Government, four in either direction. That also sort of illustrates the kind of importance that is being attached to this relationship by both countries.

Prime Minister during his discussions with President Yudhoyono expressed desire that we seek a stronger, durable, action-oriented, strategic partnership with Indonesia. He also mentioned that we regard Indonesia as closest of neighbours. He described Indonesia as a maritime neighbour. As you know, the distance between Andaman Nicobar Islands and the tip of Sumatra is barely 90 nautical miles.

Likewise, President Yudhoyono also expressed a very strong desire to enhance what he characterised as long-term strategic partnership. So, there is this convergence of views between the two sides. In fact after the Prime Minister's remarks President Yudhoyono said that he agrees entirely with what the Prime Minister had suggested in terms of future directions of relations.

Likewise, Prime Minister endorsed President Yudhoyono's suggestion that the Ministers on two sides should put in place a medium-term blueprint for further development of strategic partnership between India and Indonesia.

Coming to the outcome document, which has already been released to you, it seeks to add further depth and content to the strategic partnership which was established in 2005 when President Yudhoyono had visited India.

We are focusing on five principal pillars of this partnership: strategic engagement: defence and security cooperation, comprehensive economic partnership, culture and people-to-people links, and cooperation in responding to common challenges. Details are given in the outcome document, Joint Statement that has already been circulated. So, I will not go into detail. I will just highlight some of the key features of the document and the discussions that took place between our Prime Minister and President Yudhoyono.

On strategic engagement, the two leaders have agreed that we should have annual summits at the leadership level, which I think is a very realistic goal considering that in the last ten years there have been eight visits already. At the suggestion of Indonesian side, Minister of External Affairs of India has agreed that we will have Joint Commission meetings every year instead of alternate year as at present.

The two leaders have also constituted Eminent Persons Group which will come up with a Vision Document 2025. On our side the EPG will be co-chaired by Mr. Shyam Saran, our former Foreign Secretary who is also a former Ambassador to Indonesia. So, he is very familiar with this country.

We have identified number of areas which require attention from a strategic perspective. Just to mention a couple of them, space cooperation is an area both leaders agreed that we need to develop further. Here again if I may just mention, we have fairly significant ongoing cooperation between our two sides. We have a Telemetry Tracking Station at Irian Jaya set up by India. We are cooperating in launch of Indonesian satellites, training Indonesian space scientists. Yesterday in Brunei, in the ASEAN context, we have agreed that beginning April next year we will start setting up a satellite tracking and data reception centre. So, space is an important area of cooperation.

We also agreed to renew the agreement for cooperation in utilisation of nuclear energy. That will be another area that will be developed further.

President of Indonesia, during his remarks at ASEAN-India Summit yesterday, specifically raised two areas where he thought we should step up cooperation. One relates to counterterrorism and the other is food security. Food security he felt that as two large developing countries India and Indonesia need to work together because we have common challenges there, including areas like our common interest in stockpiling of food grain reserves, working together in WTO, R&D cooperation, etc. Prime Minister responded positively.

Counterterrorism is another area he emphasised and he suggested that India and Indonesia are similarly placed in terms of trans-border threats, in terms of Jihadi threat. He suggested enhanced intelligence cooperation. Prime Minister responded very positively to that.

Coming to the related field of defence and security cooperation, here again, as you are aware, our Defence Minister had visited Indonesia last October when we had agreed to enhance our defence and security cooperation. We already have a Joint Defence Cooperation Committee. We have staff talks between two armies and navies. Today we have agreed to establish staff talks between two air forces as well. So, we propose to significantly upgrade our defence and security collaboration including with regard to maritime security. This is one area which was proposed by Indonesian President and our Prime Minister has responded positively. In fact, the two leaders have directed that we should draw up a comprehensive action plan for security cooperation. This dimension of our strategic partnership is getting a renewed emphasis.

The third pillar of our strategic partnership which figures in the outcome document relates to comprehensive economic engagement. Here the two leaders expressed satisfaction that ASEAN-India FTA process has been completed and agreements on services and investment will be signed in December this year. They agreed that shortly after the conclusion of ASEAN-India FTA we will launch bilateral CECA negotiations to build on what we achieved in ASEAN-India context.

As you know, we already have a trade turnover of US$ 20 billion. Since the establishment of strategic partnership in 2005, our bilateral trade turnover has increased more than five times, and we have set the target of US$ 25 billion by 2015, which we believe is quite realistic. There are also very significant investment flows from India into Indonesia in excess of US$ 10 billion. Several big Indian companies are already present here.

There are some issues regarding some of these investment projects. So, in response to our request, President of Indonesia has agreed that there will be a joint high-level task force which will go into issues pertaining to investment and encourage two-way flow of investment because this is again another very important area of cooperation. We had the first meeting of CEO's forum yesterday which was co-chaired by our Commerce and Industry Minister.

Connectivity is another important area. Batik Air has agreed to commence direct flights to India and Jet Airways and Garuda Airlines of Indonesia have also entered into code-sharing arrangement. As you can see, in several areas there is both forward movement as well as new initiatives to consolidate these gains.

The fourth pillar relates to culture and people-to-people links. I will not go into details. They are given in the outcome document. I will just highlight a couple of points there. Prime Minister announced that we will increase scholarship slots to Indonesia, establish Chairs of Indian studies in Indonesia and likewise encourage Chairs of Indonesian studies in India. We will help set up a new vocational training centre in Papua. There are already two, one in Jakarta and the other in Banda Aceh.

On Indonesian side they have agreed to extend their cooperation in setting up Nalanda University. As you just saw, Lal Bahadur Shastri National Academy of Administration and its counterpart institution in Indonesia have signed a memorandum of understanding to consolidate their cooperation in training the civil servants, which is already ongoing.

Finally with regard to cooperation in responding to common challenges, this is one area which received a lot of attention in the discussions between the two leaders. You would have heard in media statements by our Prime Minister and President Yudhoyono, both referred to the fact that we face common challenges; and these common challenges that we face as two largest Asian countries, we need to respond together.

Here we agreed to step up our cooperation say with regard to ASEAN or East Asia Summit. Prime Minister conveyed his appreciation for the very supportive role played by Indonesia in development of our strategic partnership with ASEAN. Earlier when welcoming into the fold of East Asia Summit, Indonesia has always been very supportive.

I referred earlier to a suggestion from President Yudhoyono made yesterday about food security. That was discussed further during discussion today also and the two leaders had directed officials to work out an action plan in that regard. There is a formulation in the Joint Statement you may wish to refer to.

They also agreed that in the context of WTO, especially Doha Development Round where the Ministerial Meeting will be taking place in Bali in December, we will work together because we have very similar concerns and challenges there.

These were some of the highlights I wanted to mention. I will conclude by recalling what Prime Minister mentioned during his discussions with President Yudhoyono. He remarked that there is complete convergence of ideas between him and President Yudhoyono. And both leaders expressed enormous satisfaction with what has been achieved and they expressed desire to build on these achievements. Thank you.

Q: Sir, Did Indonesia, endorse the food security?

Secretary (East): we did not brief him about the food security; no such talk took place. From the population angle we believe that India and Indonesia are among the four big countries of the world, we have to take care of our food security ourselves. This cannot be done externally. There are some requirements, as stock piling of food grains, we have to ensure these requirements. There was a suggestion that we need cooperate in the R&D in this area. In terms of mechanism, and about what you said, there will be discussion. They want to know about our food security act; we will discuss further about it.

As mentioned before we will cooperate in the WTO; the suggestion about the food security was made by the Indonesian President and our prime minister endorsed it.

Q: Will India support the food security programme of Indonesia?

Secretary (East): ... In food security we have to look after our respective requirements. But there is a certain international framework within which we need to deal with. Like, you would have heard President Yudhoyono referring to the need for maintaining stability of food prices or preventing distortions in markets of agricultural commodities. These are some of the common challenges that we have and when we pursue the agenda of food security, we would like to do it in a manner that it does not in any way impact on our own ability to take care of our food security requirements.

Q: Have you discussed the trade aspect of food security?

Secretary (East): This was a discussion at the leadership level. They have asked officials to work out what could be specific areas of cooperation. So, I really do not want to anticipate that at this point of time.

Q: There are a lot of talks about common challenges. Would you like to spell out what are these common challenges?

Secretary (East): Common challenges range from the fact that, as both leaders mentioned, India and Indonesia are two of the four most populous countries in the world; we are both located in Asia; we are maritime neighbours; we have common challenges relating to counterterrorism, relating to maritime security, relating to our developmental agenda. Indonesia would like to work with us when it comes to developing a security architecture for Asia Pacific region, developing principles for a security architecture.

There is a whole range of issues. The two leaders referred to WTO where we need to work together. G20 is another where we are already working together. There was understanding that there should be greater financial inclusion within G20.

We are currently the Chair of IOR-ARC. Next month we will hand over the Chair to Australia, and Indonesia will take over the Vice Chair of IOR-ARC. Indian Ocean is another where we are working together and there we propose to step up our cooperation. There is a very wide range of issues that we can work together on.

Q: Sir, you said that the President proposed maritime security ... (Inaudible)... and that PM responded positively. Can you elaborate a bit on that?

Secretary (East): We already have a fairly significant defence and security cooperation with NATO countries. Just to give you a couple of examples, we have coordinated patrolling between the two navies in Malacca Strait because we are at the mouth of Malacca Strait and they are the littoral country for Malacca Strait. So, we are already working together through coordinated patrolling. That is one area our navies have agreed to have joint exercises. We have separate navy staff talks.

We are also working on establishment of AIS chain. We have agreed to step up cooperation with regard to maritime domain awareness and hydrography. Maritime domain awareness means movement of what is called white shipping, that means merchant shipping; having a better idea of that through exchange of data. That is one area we have agreed to step up cooperation in. Hydrography is another area. Some of these areas are referred to in the Joint Statement also. So, it is a fairly broad field. Anti piracy is one area. As you know, Malacca Strait had a serious problem of piracy earlier which has been controlled to a large extent mainly through regional cooperation.

Q: Sir, you referred to Indonesia's willingness on cooperation in security, anti terror and especially ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): I will say it is a shared desire. This is one suggestion which came from President yesterday during the course of ASEAN-India Summit, but it is a shared desire.

Q: Can you elaborate a little bit what exactly is the cooperation at this point of time and what new initiatives can be taken in the future?

Secretary (East): I think I have already responded to that question. I talked about our security cooperation earlier. I have talked about maritime security. On counterterrorism we already have an ongoing dialogue. There is recognition on both sides that these are transnational challenges and we cannot deal with these challenges individually, we need to pool our resources because those players, those non-state actors, collaborate among themselves. They do not respect national boundaries. So, when we deal with them, there is need for stepped up intelligence for instance. And that is something that is already happening and we propose to enhance it.

Q: For anti terror also ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): Yes. Counter terrorism is anti terror, isn't it?

Q: Again about the security aspect and both sides, just a day before the Chinese Premier went on a charm offensive, proposed a plan for the South China Sea safe passage and all. Did this figure during the talks between India and Indonesia?

Secretary (East): There is no reference to what the Chinese Premier offered or did not offer. I think we have a fairly strong partnership between India and Indonesia which is driven by our respective desire to promote it further.

Q: But then, suppose if it is between you and me, when we build a relationship our outside environment also impacts ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): There was no discussion on that.

Q: He has used the word comprehensive action plan for security cooperation. It includes ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): It is going to be developed. The two leaders have directed the officials to work out ...(Inaudible)...

Q: It will include ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): Let us see. I do not want to anticipate what will be developed, isn't it? You go through the Joint Statement. You will get a fairly good idea of what is there at present.

Q: But that perception is there, isn't it?

Secretary (East): I do not want to make any such linkage. Let me make it very clear that we are not making any such linkage.

Q: It is independent. It is bilateral.

Secretary (East): It is bilateral but I referred to common challenges. So, we are dealing with common challenges.

Official Spokesperson: I think what Secretary was saying was these are transnational in nature. So, these are challenges which are mostly of non-state actors. Piracy, maritime security, cyber issues, these are all issues which are as far as ...

Q: When we are talking about maritime security, it is not just about piracy. Piracy is one aspect of it. But maintaining the ...(Inaudible)... of the sea lanes the question of sovereignty comes in.

Q: Actually, Mr. Kantha, you can tell us off the record.

Secretary (East): I know. There was no such discussion.

Official Spokesperson: There was no such discussion. This is your perception.

Q: I am not imputing. I am just seeking a clarification.

Official Spokesperson: There was no discussion on this. There was no reference.

Q: Two-way investment flows ki baat hai, us mein kis tarah ke concerns hamaare taraf se the joh address honge? Aur koi big ticket investment negotiation conversation hai pipeline mein?

Secretary (East): Kayi investment proposals already implement ho rahe hain. Indian companies, as you know, are investing in coal mining in Indonesia because that is one critical input for our power sector. We are already importing substantial quantities of coal and several Indian are investing in coal to export to India. In some areas it is moving well; there are some areas where projects which were announced during the visit of President Yudhoyono in January 2011 progress has been somewhat slow. So, Prime Minister is ...(Inaudible)... we agreed to have a high-level task force to go into those issues. Prime Minister also welcomed investment by Indonesia in India. So, it will be a two-way process.

Q: What is the name of the institution participating ...(Inaudible)... and ICWA?

Secretary (East): The name of the institution is National Institution of Public Administration (NIPA).

All that is there in the joint document. That is why I am not going into all those details.

Q: Sir, two specific questions. One is the Indonesia President referred to trade deficit and said that Indonesia has a trade deficit.

Secretary (East): No, we have trade deficit.

Q: Sorry, we have trade deficit. So, how are we trying to address that?

Secretary (East): On this issue I may mention that both during External Affairs Minister's meeting with his counterpart this morning as well as Prime Minister's meeting with President this afternoon, Indonesian side raised it on their own. They fully recognise the need for trade to be more balanced because at present our exports last year are in the tune of US$ 5.5 billion and our imports are about US$ 14.5 billion. They recognise that to be more sustainable, we need to increase the basket of commodities.

At present it is focused a bit too narrowly on extractive industries because we are sourcing material from Indonesia, coal for instance. Palm oil is another big area we are sourcing. They are the largest exporter of palm oil to India. Fine! Those are critical requirements for us. But as we broaden our trade I think it will also become more balanced over the years.

Q: On coal, are there any say levy or tax related issues which Indian companies are facing there?

Joint Secretary (South)(Shri Sanjay Bhattacharyya): There are certain regulatory issues regarding the coal, the mining sector which require certain divestment of their stocks, they have the shares over here. The second thing that has happened is a certain indigenous content in terms of the sale of the proceeds. But the experience of the coal companies which are mining over here is mixed. Some of it has to do with the domestic legislation, some of it has to do with the international price of coal on the basis of which it is traded. But mostly they have found that it is a venture into which more business is coming in. But what the Indian operators are looking for is a more transparent, stable and predictable regime.

Secretary (East): But one thing I want to clarify is that whatever regulations are there are global in character. It is not that they are specific to Indian investment. As Sanjay said, since our investors are making fairly large investments here, they would like to have more stability and predictability in terms of investment climate. There is nothing very special, these are issues just as faced elsewhere also.

Q: These are very big issues for Indian coal companies since Coal India's output is not really increasing and we desperately need coal and domestically too we have not cleared many projects because of environment issues. So, Indonesia that way is a big source.

Secretary (East): That is why we have set up a high-level task force to go into those issues. It is an important area for us.

Q: Mr. Secretary, you mentioned that the two leaders discussed about space cooperation and that it is a key area.

Secretary (East): That is one of the areas. I was just illustrating. I did not want to give a laundry list. So, I just gave an example.

Q: Can you just help us understand what about the kind of cooperation that is possible and that we are considering?

Secretary (East): I think it is already there in the Joint Statement. So, I will not repeat that. It is there in the Joint Statement. It lists out cooperation.

Q: I wanted to ask you if we are going to launch a satellite for them. Is ISRO going to do that?

Secretary (East): That is one area where we have proposed cooperation.

Q: Most papers here are saying that. We are doing it for other countries.

Secretary (East): We have done that for them in the past and that is another thing which ... (Inaudible)...

Q: On defence cooperation, are we going to export something, technology?

Secretary (East): There is already some limited defence supply relationship. It is quite limited. But we have agreed to have greater cooperation with regard to say co-production. So, those things have been listed out. But it will take time. This is something which has been identified.

Q: Co-production of defence equipment?

Secretary (East): Yes. It is listed in the Joint Statement. All these details are given in the Joint Statement.

Q: How was the chemistry?

Secretary (East): Chemistry was extremely positive. You would have heard Prime Minister's statement. He paid a personal tribute to President Yudhoyono's contribution to development of strategic partnership. Likewise, President Yudhoyono had lot of appreciation for Prime Minister's role in development of this important relationship.

Q: Did he say anything about his third term?

Secretary (East): Please ask this from them.

Official Spokesperson:

Thank you

JAPAN

301. First India-Japan Maritime Affairs Dialogue.

New Delhi, January 29, 2013.

The first India-Japan Maritime Affairs Dialogue was held in New Delhi on January 29, 2013.

The Indian delegation was led by Mr. D.B. Venkatesh Varma, Joint Secretary (Disarmament and International Security Affairs), in the Ministry of External Affairs and the Japanese delegation by Mr. Kazuyuki Yamazaki, Deputy Director General (Ambassador), Foreign Policy Bureau, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Japan. Representatives of various Ministries participated from both sides.

Issues of mutual interest were discussed, inter alia, maritime security including non-traditional threats, cooperation in shipping, marine sciences and technology, marine biodiversity and cooperation at various multilateral forums.

302. Interaction of External Affairs Minister with Japanese Media in New Delhi.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): It is wonderful to have you with us. All of you presumably are familiar with the working of this Ministry and indeed the events that these days are keeping us all busy. In that range of exciting things that we have to do is now for me and certainly for the country it is a very important visit. For me personally, it is really a very important visit because I have cherished the idea of being able to go to Japan at a time when there is peach blossom and cherry blossom with beautiful pink and white flowers. I have seen a little bit of that in a visit to China but not quite as exquisite and as beautiful as it is in Japan. Therefore, it will be really for me a dream visit.

I look forward of course to first meeting with Foreign Minister Kishida with whom I spoke on the phone and I now have a chance to see him face to face. We start building upon the foundation of a very strong partnership that we have between our two countries. As you know, we will be co-chairing the seventh meeting of the India-Japan Strategic Dialogue. There is an entire range of issues that are of bilateral, regional and international interest to our country. We will review, we will discuss, look for areas of convergence.

This really is the preparation of the annual summit that had to be postponed at the last minute last year because elections were announced in Japan. So, the postponed annual summit of our Prime Ministers is what we will be preparing for particularly looking at dates convenient to both sides. It is a very important annual summit and we therefore want it to be held at the earliest possible date. We do know that the inevitability of elections in democracies is a thing that you have to factor into whatever you are doing. We get distracted obviously because we have elections all the time. Right now as I speak to you we have elections announced in Karnataka. Therefore some of our energies will get diverted to working in those elections, again very important elections for us. So, hopefully we will have an early date.

I also would like to share with you that I will have the opportunity and really a privileged opportunity to address the Rikkyo University in Tokyo where we will talk about the potential of Indo-Japan relations in the 21st century, and of course how we can expand on our strategic and global partnership. Your colleagues from Japanese media will have a chance to meet with me at the Japan National Press Club, which I am sure you are all very familiar with.

We will look at what we can do in terms of enhancing our trade, and I will certainly see if there are ways which we can explore areas of balancing our trade ties. We will look at security cooperation. We will certainly look at how we can enhance people-to-people exchanges, science and technology cooperation.

We will have a chance to review the developments which have taken place on the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor project which is a very important project for both of us, and indeed the very substantial participation in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor and the Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor.

I think Japan's presence and flag of Japan fluttering with the Indian Tricolour on these far-reaching iconic, if you like dream projects for the 21st century is something that we believe gives our relationship a dimension that is in a sense unique and goes far beyond our relationships with many other friendly countries.

We are happy on this occasion to flag our gratitude for Japan having helped bring a dramatic change to the profile of Delhi and the facilities that we provide to the citizens of Delhi, and that is the Japanese ODA assisted project of the Delhi Metro project the first phases, which were actually the kickoff phases as it were, were actually built through Japanese assistance, and which we believe has transformed the way we live in Delhi.

We do know that both in terms of infrastructure across the country but specifically developing infrastructure on the Buddhist Circuit, part of which is in my State of UP. And I understand I just have been told that the Chief Minister of UP will also be traveling to Japan a few days after I visit Japan. I think that is a very significant infrastructural involvement of Japan in the State of Uttar Pradesh which again I think is extremely important.

We are very happy with our collaboration with the East Asia Summit, with Japan the ASEAN Regional Forum, ASEAN Defence Ministers' Plus meeting, and the ASEAN Maritime Forum. I will later today be addressing very important diplomatic figures on India's Look East Policy, and how the Indo-Pacific concept can be developed, and of course China there will play a very important role.

So, on all international issues we are happy that we are able to work together with the United Nations and G20. We celebrate the success of Japan. The story of Japan's success is really the beginning of the story of Asia's success and Asia's arrival in the 21st century as a very significant force, economic force, cultural force, and a force in terms of institutional capacity building.

That is the curtain raiser. I will be happy to answer any questions that you may have.

Q: My question about Shinkansen deal. There are some media reports in Japan that both countries have reached agreement on Shinkansen deal during Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's upcoming visit. Could you confirm whether it is true or not?

External Affairs Minister: I should confirm these things to you when I return. As I said, we will see all the issues that we have that are work in progress. We will review, we will see various adequate progress made on them, and that what more needs to be done. Once both Foreign Ministers are able to be sure and certain that we have reached a point where we can announce the agenda, that of course obviously means that the Foreign Ministers will put it up to their respective Prime Ministers, an agenda will then be decided. But as I said, the entire range of work-in-progress issues will be looked at by us. Wherever we need some effort is required to push them further, we will do so. But when I return I think I will be in a better position to give you a status report on where we stand.

Q: My question is about FTA for ASEAN plus 6 countries including China and Japan.

External Affairs Minister: We have to understand that balanced trade is what is desirable and the aspirational purpose for all of us, and imbalanced trade and one-way trade is not sustainable. But there are sometimes intrinsic difficulties or intrinsic complexities between two countries which do not allow despite your best effort to balance that trade.

Protectionism as we know in the world today is not the preferred and the desirable method by which you try to balance trade. So, wherever we have this difficulty, we try to substitute it by greater investment from the country concerned so that what you are not able to recover in terms of balance trade at least you get in terms of inflows of foreign direct investment, and, therefore, we work harder than on investment. That is the way by mutual cooperation we can give sustainability to our trade relations. And this will be true with all countries.

But China is unique in the sense that China is in our neighbourhood. In that sense China is for many countries an immediate option between India and China for investment and for trade. We make many of the goods that the Chinese make. Chinese have a distinct advantage in terms of cost inputs. Vis-à-vis them we may be at a disadvantage. We have an advantage vis-à-vis developed societies. So, I think all these things need to be factored in an appropriate way and then we see how we arrive at a sustainable relationship. It is something that you have to continue working on all the time. You cannot just say that we will do it once and that will take care of it. I think it is an ongoing thing that you have to keep working on.

Q: As regards maritime security cooperation among India, Japan and the United States, what kind of cooperation do you expect among the three countries? Also, Prime Minister Abe said recently a security diamond. He said, Hawaii, Australia and India and Japan is a kind of a security net for them against China. I think so.

External Affairs Minister: There are various expressions that have been used by different strategic approaches taken by different countries which are China-centric. I understand that Japan being in the historical position it has vis-à-vis China and also in terms of its relative size of your population and your country vis-à-vis China, Japan has its own special concerns. Then of course you have your regional issues. There are formulations that we have heard about strategic approach that the United States of America takes for instance rebalancing Asia, pivot and so on. These are formulations that we have seen from time to time. 'Encircling' is another, 'containing' is another expression that has been used.

Now we have very consciously and carefully tried to develop our relationships with countries bilaterally and in terms of regional and multilateral cooperation without making that dependent on and focused on China alone. But obviously we do things together, it will have some implications for China. We do things with China, it will have some implications for another country. What we try to do is that our relationships with each country bilaterally must be secured on the merit of our exchange and not influenced by the consequences on the third country, particularly if those consequences are not illegitimate consequences.

So, we do not plan against any country. We plan for the country that we are dealing with and with the country that we are dealing with and this is what we have done. For instance in ASEAN on the whole issue of South

China Sea we have reiterated our position on the freedom of navigation on high sea. We have reiterated it very categorically and clearly. But where we have said there are bilateral issues or sovereignty issues, bilateral sovereignty issues, we believe that by dialogue that should be settled by the countries concerned.

Vietnam has some concerns, Japan has some concerns, and so on. And we have advocated bilateral dialogue between those countries. That is the model that we prefer that if there are disagreements among countries, we are all civilized and we are all very respectable countries, we need to dialogue and find solutions. Obviously it is not completely in silos. There are always overlaps between multilateral approaches and bilateral approaches. There is some overlap at the edges. But I think the core approach has to be that of bilateral dialogue.

Q: What kind of dialogue do you expect between your country and China because in China a new Government is in power?

External Affairs Minister: The first indication that we have had from Chinese leadership including the outgoing leadership is that our Prime Minister had developed a good working relationship with. The first indication is that the new leadership wants to engage with India in a meaningful way. I have seen the incumbent President's statements made recently in the last two, three days where he has talked about enhancing relationship with India, but of course recognize as we do that there are some historical differences and difficulties that we face particularly on the border. But as we both have decided that that will not be a hiccup and that will not be a roadblock to moving forward.

We may have differences from time to time but we know that we have to live together as neighbours, and that we will try to overcome our differences once again through constant meaningful and open dialogue. And that has gone well and we certainly would want to welcome China's indication that they want to enhance that dialogue and to take it to higher levels, we will certainly welcome that but not at the cost of our relationship with anyone else.

Q: I want to ask about nuclear negotiation between India and Japan. What is your expectation of results of the negotiation because so far it has been suspended?

External Affairs Minister: We are sensitive to Japan's concerns. We know that Japan has been preoccupied with a fresh look at its entire policy framework after the tsunami. We also know that Japan has been preoccupied with rehabilitation and reconstruction which is something that I must say is a remarkable example to the world. Rebuilding after such a calamity and such an enormous loss of life and property, and interruption of infrastructure particularly on power, rebuilding really from scratch in such a short time with the least amount of complaints - and I am sure there must have been complaints but least amount of complaints - and solidarity shown by the people is absolutely remarkable. I think the world should applaud this as an example of managing disasters in our lives. I think that is really very good, very terrific.

Now obviously, Japan has reviewed safety and management issues. And we have also done the same sort of review in light of the experiences of Japan. On the other hand, Japan's whole approach to nuclear technology will have to be worked out by the Japanese people. Therefore, we do not want to push Japan on any of these issues. We want to allow Japan the time that is needed for it to work out these issues for itself and then we move forward with negotiating our agreements that are partly negotiated.

But at the end of the day my understanding is that Japan cannot do without nuclear technology, at least in the near future, and that despite all the cautions that one gets from soothsayers from Europe and elsewhere we also because of our diminishing water resources and also the need to address environmental concerns, will have to continue depending on nuclear energy to a much greater extent that we do today. Therefore this is something with Japan we have to move forward and we will move forward. But we would rather give Japan the time it needs before we can start addressing these things more aggressively.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...Yesterday there was a report of North Korea attacking South Korea by means of a cyber-attack and the IP address was in China. US also condemned China for cyber-attacking it from China, but China denied it. How do you think of the situation?

External Affairs Minister: You know that cyber security is a very serious concern for Governments as well as for industry. And I think in times to come this is going to be a growing challenge. We have been addressing this matter at the level of UN. We have been addressing it globally. This is a matter that we take up bilaterally with all the countries that we are interacting with. Some obviously are more affected by it, some are less affected by it. The most successful countries, particularly countries like Japan obviously have a much greater reason to be concerned and worried than a less developed country would be because the penetration is much greater and the consequences and the impact can be much greater. Therefore, we share the concerns of all countries to address this issue. And I believe that the world is working closely and needs to work faster on issues of cyber security.

Q: I have a technical question. You are arriving in Japan on Tuesday the 26th or Monday the 25th?

External Affairs Minister: Twenty-sixth morning.

Q: And till when will you be staying?

External Affairs Minister: I will be there on the 26th, 27th and leaving on the 28th morning.

Q: The main person you are meeting will be our Foreign Minister. Will you meet somebody else?

External Affairs Minister: The Foreign Ministers' meeting is obviously there. Obviously till the time of my arriving day, we will be working on what more meetings can be fitted in. I will be willing and available for as meetings as possible.

Thank you

303. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary and Secretary (East) on Prime Minister's visit to Japan and Thailand.

New Delhi, May 24, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. You will recollect that on the 14th of May we had made an announcement of Prime Minister's visits to Japan and Thailand from 27th to 31st. This evening's briefing will be focused on those two visits.

I have here with me Foreign Secretary who will brief you about the elements relating to Prime Minister's visit to Japan. I would also like to introduce to you Mr. Ashok Kantha who has today taken over as Secretary (East). He has just come back from Sri Lanka. Along with him on Foreign Secretary's right is the familiar figure of Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who has been with you for the last week. To his right is Mr. Sanjay Bhattacharyya, Joint Secretary (South), who also handles Thailand.

With those brief introductory remarks I will request Foreign Secretary to make his opening remarks following which we will also have Secretary (East) Mr. Ashok Kantha make his opening remarks, and then the floor will be open to questions to both of them. Foreign Secretary.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Ranjan Mathai): Thank you, Akbar.

It is good to have Ashok join the Ministry as Secretary (East). He arrived late last night. How late was it?

Secretary (East) (Shri Ashok K. Kantha): It was 3 o'clock.

Foreign Secretary: It was 3 o'clock in the morning and as soon as he arrived in the Ministry he was told he has to face the media, which shows how seriously we take you and how important we regard our interaction with you.

The Prime Minister, as you have already been told, will visit Japan from May 27 to 30 - 27th he leaves and 30th he leaves Japan. This is the postponed annual summit between the Prime Minister's of India and Japan which was originally scheduled for the end of last year. PM's delegation will include the National Security Advisor, the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister, and other senior officials. Prime Minister arrives in Tokyo late evening of Monday, May 27.

The broad outlines of his programme include an address at a business meeting hosted by Kaidanren, the premier chamber of commerce and industry of Japan, in the afternoon of May 28. He will then address a gathering which is jointly organised by the Japan-India Association, Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League, and the Friendship Exchange Council, in the evening of May 28. The Japanese Prime Minister and Mrs. Abe will host a private dinner for Prime Minister and Mrs. Kaur also in the evening of May 28.

There will also be calls on Prime Minister by senior Ministers in the Abe Cabinet as well as leaders of the main political parties. The Prime Minister and Mrs. Kaur will call on Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Japan, who will host a luncheon for them on May 29. And then the annual summit between the two Prime Ministers will take place in the evening of May 29.

The two Prime Ministers will take stock of the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership, and will also discuss how to further strengthen it. This is the first occasion for the two Prime Ministers to meet after the December 2012 general elections in which Japan saw Prime Minister Abe and his party win office. The two Prime Ministers will discuss all issues in the bilateral relationship including political exchanges, high-level visits, the economic interaction, our defence cooperation and people-to-people ties.

As you are aware, our economic relationship is one of the drivers of the overall bilateral relations. The two Prime Ministers will obviously discuss all major projects such as the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor, and the infrastructure upgradation process in the Chennai-Bangalore corridor. The Government of Japan is keen to showcase its high-speed rail technology or Shinkansen, which they would like us to consider. This is a subject which will be discussed.

At his address to Japanese business, Prime Minister will highlight major investment opportunities in India and seek greater Japanese private sector investments. We see very good prospects for increasing Japanese investment in India.

Energy cooperation is another area of promise in the bilateral relationship. Japan will organise a major exhibition of energy efficient and green technologies in Delhi later this year. As you are aware, we have a regular dialogue on energy between the two governments. Of interest though it is at a very early stage, Japan has recently made a breakthrough in the frozen seabed gas hydrates and their exploitation, which is of great interest to us. The two countries are already cooperating on a joint study on LNG pricing.

The two leaders will also discuss regional and international issues. Our cooperation in the field of security will be one of the subjects covered. As is normal in such visits, the two leaders will issue a joint statement which will capture the essence of their discussions and chart a vision for the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership over the coming years.

Thank you.

Secretary (East): Thanks Ranjan.

Prime Minister after his visit to Japan will pay an official visit to Thailand on 30-31 May at the invitation of Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra. You remember that the Prime Minister of Thailand had visited India as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day in January last year and she came again for India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in December 2012.

During his visit to Bangkok, Prime Minister will have official talks with Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra on bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of mutual interest. We expect a number of documents to be signed and announcements to be made on new initiatives.

As you are aware, we have very close, friendly and growing relations between India and Thailand, and Thailand is also an important component of our Look East Policy. There has been a sustained interaction at the high level which has added dynamism to bilateral relations which are multifaceted and growing. Following the visit of Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra in January 2012 when we had signed a number of agreements on security, defence, trade and cultural cooperation, we have covered ground to achieve progress in key areas such as security cooperation, economic relations and connectivity. Later this year we are also planning on the visits of Raksha Mantri (Defence Minister) and Minister of External Affairs to Thailand which also shows the desire on the part of both countries the momentum in our relationship.

We have made rapid strides in strengthening defence, security and juridical cooperation. We have signed an MLAT in criminal matters, and an agreement on transfer of sentenced persons, and we are now close to signing an extradition treaty with Thailand. We have strengthened cooperation between law enforcement agencies, particularly in counterterrorism and transnational crimes. In defence we have a broad-based engagement which includes training, joint exercises, anti-piracy operations, maintenance of security of sea lanes, and exchange of visits.

Likewise, our trade and investment relations are growing especially after conclusion of the framework agreement FTA of 2003 and early harvest in 2004. We seek a comprehensive and balanced outcome of the FTA negotiations. Trade reached the level of US$ 9.2 billion in 2012-13 and there has also been a fairly impressive growth in two-way investment flows between our two countries.

India and Thailand have been working to promote connectivity between the two countries and also in the region through cooperation and development of road and shipping infrastructure. Enhanced connectivity will greatly benefit our Northeastern region in particular. India-Myanmar-Thailand trilateral highway project has made good progress and is expected to be completed by 2016.

The newly constituted Joint Working Group on Connectivity and Infrastructure has focused on initiatives in third countries including exploring possibilities for cooperation in Dawei project in Myanmar and connectivity to Lao and Cambodia. Bilaterally we have excellent civil aviation connectivity with 138 flights per week. And last year as many as 1.16 million Indian tourists visited Thailand.

We are also seeking to expand cooperation in science and technology including in areas like ICT, space applications, and R&D cooperation.

Our cultural ties played an important role in deepening civilisational and historical bonds. Indian Cultural Centre in Bangkok and Chairs of Sanskrit studies and Indian studies in different Thai universities have brought our people closer. ICCR and ITEC scholarships have promoted exchanges and earned the appreciation of the Thai people. We greatly appreciate the contribution of the Thai Government and the Thai private sector towards establishment of Nalanda University as an international institute of excellence. In recognition of the major role played by Buddhism, we are planning a major Buddhist art exhibition in Bangkok which will be coordinated by the Indian Museum in Kolkata.

We have been working together on regional and multilateral issues. We have a strategic partnership, as you know, in ASEAN and have close cooperation in ARF, EAS, BIMSTEC, MGC, as well as multilateral fora such as the UN. The visit of Prime Minister to Thailand is expected to consolidate our partnership and provide new direction in future cooperation.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: We will now throw the floor open for questions. We will try and take questions first on the issues that have been now covered, that is Japan and Thailand. And at the end of it if we have time, Foreign Secretary has agreed to respond to a couple of questions on issues other than this. Let us begin with this.

Q: Sir, you talked about defence cooperation between India and Japan. Can you give us an update of what is going on right now between the two countries?

Foreign Secretary: We have a regular dialogue with Japan and we engage in exercises together. Japan is the only country with whom we have institutionalized what is called the 2+2, which is the Defence Secretary and the Foreign Secretary from India and their counterparts in Japan. We have a series of activities which go on between our Services and their counterparts in Japan.

I will ask the Joint Secretary to add a little bit to this.

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): As you probably know, the first ever bilateral naval exercises between India and Japan took place off the coast of Japan in June of 2012. So, that was a major step that we took forward. This year there has been a series of exchanges between the armed forces of India and Japan. Our Chief of Army Staff was in Japan earlier this year in end of March. Similarly we have had the Chief of the Japanese Self Defence Forces here in India a few weeks ago. That is an update on some of our defence cooperation activities.

Foreign Secretary: I would also add to this that there is a regular dialogue between Raksha Mantri and his Japanese counterpart, just as there is a strategic dialogue also between the two Foreign Ministers.

Q: Sir, you referred to the energy cooperation that is going to be talked about in Japan. In that respect you spoke of energy efficiency as well as the green technology. Are we going to discuss civilian nuclear cooperation with Japan especially from the point of view of safety? Is this subject going to be discussed?

Foreign Secretary: Certainly. In fact I should have brought in the question of the civil nuclear cooperation. This has been under discussion between India and Japan and there are various aspects to it including certainly discussions on safety. As you are aware, in the post-Fukushima period that is in fact the main focus of much of our dialogues with many countries. But with Japan we also have discussions regarding industrial collaboration in terms of power production through the civil nuclear energy route. These are at a very preliminary stage. We will first need to reach an agreement. We are hopeful of making progress later in the year on this. This is a matter on which we have had discussions over a long period of time.

It is also well-known that in Japan the Japan Steel Works produces reactor vessels which are an important component in the activities which we undertake with other partners also because that is a very specialized technology which Japan has. So, certainly yes, this is one area which we will be discussing. But, as I said, we have been discussing specifically civil nuclear cooperation agreement and we will continue those discussions, and we hope to make by the end of this year more progress in this field.

Q: Foreign Secretary, in what way the India-Japan economic cooperation is helping us particularly in the corridor projects implemented in Chennai and Mumbai? Secondly, since Mr. Ashok Kantha has come to Delhi Sri Lanka is missing a High Commissioner there. Who is going to replace him?

Foreign Secretary: The specifics which we are talking about are these very major infrastructure development programmes. The DMIC is really one of the biggest anywhere in the world if you look at it in terms of its ambition. Japan has already announced 4.5 billion dollars, as you know, when Prime Minister Noda came here in December 2011 to this. And I think by this year we have already reached an outline of at least ten specific projects under that 4.5 billion dollar grant from the Japanese. The Chennai-Bangalore corridor is a more recent development in terms of how we started discussing it. But as you are aware, there is a very large number of Japanese industries both in Chennai and in the Bangalore region. So, there is a desire to upgrade infrastructure and provide a basis for further investments into that region. There is a lot interest also in port development, the development of Ennore Port, the development of infrastructure around it. These are some of the ideas which are under discussion with Japan.

And in answer to your second question, even though it is not technically related, Mr. Yash Sinha will be our High Commissioner. He would be there in a few weeks.

Q: I think both Japan and Thailand were interested in Nalanda University, but Nalanda University is stuck somewhere somehow. What future do you see for the Nalanda University after these visits?

Foreign Secretary: Let me request you to go to the National Gallery of Modern Art where there is an exhibition of the design competition for the Nalanda University. It is really well worth a visit. You will see the winning award. The jury has already met and decided on it. It is already at a stage where the new campus is being designed. So, I do not think it can be described as stuck.

Q: Foreign Secretary, has India been given a briefing by Japan on the status of Senkaku islands and what is expected of India?

Foreign Secretary: When you say a briefing, these are subjects which are discussed from time to time. When we discussed regional security and regional issues, certainly the Japanese did bring this up. Even at the end of last year when I had gone for the 2+2, which I mentioned, there was a discussion regarding these security-related issues. So, this will continue.

Q: Regarding the tension in the Korean Peninsula, do you see India and Japan position as more converged on a common stand on the tension in that region?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think there is a specific convergence as such but there is a convergence in the principle that we would like to see peace and stability in the Korean Peninsula which is vital for the entire region of East Asia. We have had discussions with the Japanese, as I said, on this in the framework of our dialogues on a regular basis. But we also have dialogues with other countries in regard to that. In fact Mr. Bambawale has held a dialogue in North Korea some months ago.

Q: A question about security cooperation. Are there likely to be new exercises, naval or otherwise, agreed upon on this trip? And is it true that India pulled out of a trilateral exercise recently? And if so, why?

Foreign Secretary: India did not pull out of a trilateral exercise. There was some planning between India and the USA for an exercise and at some stage it was felt that this could be converted into a trilateral exercise. That did not quite work out. But what we have done is invite Japan to hold exercises in the Indian Ocean and now to institutionalize them because what we were told is that they need to have a fixed programme that they can work on so that they know when we are planning our exercises together. So, we are going to institutionalize the regular exercises between the Indian and Japanese navies.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: It has been under discussion, certainly will be one of the outcomes.

Q: Sir, on the same subject, there is an impression that India is showing reluctance to hold trilateral exercises in the seas around Japan, while it is happy to hold these trilateral exercises in the Indian Ocean region. Is the full extent of the potential of defence ties with Japan circumscribed at some level by the fear of offending China?

Foreign Secretary: I think whatever we do with Japan is intended purely to develop our bilateral defence cooperation and it is certainly not aimed at anyone else. I do not think we are circumscribed in that way. As I said, we would like to place emphasis on having exercises on a very regular basis and institutionalizing them.

Q: Mr. Mathai, is post US withdrawal Afghanistan also likely to feature in your talks given the security talks that you are going to be having with Japan?

Foreign Secretary: Certainly, when we discuss issues in the region Afghanistan will be one of the subjects we talked to Japan. This has in fact been on the agenda of our bilateral discussions for a considerable period of time. We have in fact talked about doing projects jointly with Japan and the United States in the economic field in Afghanistan. Japan was one of the countries we were very keen to have as an investor in Afghanistan when we convened the investors meet in June of last year. So, certainly, yes we would continue our discussions with Japan on Afghanistan.

Q: Foreign Secretary, about the civilian nuclear agreement between Japan and India you just mentioned you expect by the end of the year more progress. Does it mean you want to see it signed by the end of the year?

Foreign Secretary: Agreements always take a certain amount of time. What I am saying is that the discussions have been given some impetus recently but there are a number of stages we will have to go through before we reach the signature. I cannot put a date on it but we would certainly like to progress.

Q: This is about the civil nuclear cooperation agreement again. Has India raised issues about nuclear safety during these discussions? What kind of concerns has it raised and what has been Japan's response?

Foreign Secretary: Safety, as I mentioned earlier, is one of the issues which we always discuss whenever we have discussions on civil nuclear cooperation with any country. And in the present atmosphere safety is in fact probably a very very high priority in our bilateral cooperation with any country. Certainly with the Japanese we will be discussing this at great length.

Q: Ashok, good to see you here. It is nice to know that India is planning to have an exhibition on Buddhism in Bangkok. I was in the Indian Museum a few months ago and I saw several vacant places and it said, 'Sent to South Korea for an exhibition', 'Sent to some country in South America'. These exhibitions got over many many months ago, in fact two years ago but the statues have not come back. Is somebody keeping tabs on things like this here?

Secretary (East): I cannot possibly comment on that but you have exchange of exhibits as part of such activities. In this particular case we are looking at Indian Museum in Kolkata working with the National Museum in Bangkok to set up an important exhibition of Buddhist art because, as you know, Buddhism is a very important bond between India and Thailand.

Q: This is for Ashok, Sir. Sir, will you tell us about our ties with Thailand in terms of transport linkages that we are planning, both sea and surface?

Secretary (East): We have a good connectivity between India and Thailand when it comes to civil aviation, something like 138 flights a week. We are also looking at Thailand as an important bridge between South Asia and Southeast Asian hinterland. Here there is already, as I mentioned earlier, the trilateral project involving India, Myanmar and Thailand which is making good headway and we expect completion by 2016. In addition, we announced this initiative on Joint Working Group on Connectivity and Infrastructure which had its first meeting in September 2012. Under that we are looking at possibilities of cooperation with third countries including cooperation on Dawei deep sea port and a special economic zone in Dawei, as also projects in Lao and Cambodia. So, there are a number of ideas which are being explored. Trilateral project has already made headway and we expect good progress on other projects as well in the days to come.

Q: Japanese Emperor is planning to visit India. Do you expect the timing will be announced during the Prime Minister's visit?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think it is linked to the Prime Minister's visit. We are looking forward to the great honour of receiving Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress. The visit will be announced as soon as both Governments agree on a date on which we will announce it.

Q: Sir, our Commerce Minister was visiting Japan a few weeks ago and he raised the issue of rising trade deficit after the FTA talks have begun. How is India going to take this issue up during these summit-level talks?

Foreign Secretary: Over the last few years India-Japan trade has increased very substantially except I believe in the financial year we saw some decline. The CEPA, as it is called not the FTA, has been under implementation since August 2011. And in 2011-12, bilateral trade grew by 29 per cent to reach a figure of 18.5 billion. It came down to 17.5 billion as I said.

Yes, there is a fact that the trade is not exactly balanced, it is in fact very substantially in Japan's favour. We would be taking up issues relating to market access for some of those sectors where India has competitive advantage. We would be emphasizing also certain nontariff barriers which have arisen in the case of our shrimp exports. Certainly we would like to revive some traditional exports of India to Japan which have tapered off in the last few years, for example iron ore. So, there is a range of measures we need to take on our side to address this trade imbalance and we will be raising this with the Chinese.

Q: Sir, China has signed a pact with Pakistan on a rail link from Gwadar to China. Your comments please!

Foreign Secretary: Developments in other countries which are between two countries is not a matter for me to comment on. But to the extent that it involves Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, we certainly have already made our views known to the Chinese leadership at the highest level. We have serious reservations about this.

Q: Sir, the Iranian Energy Minister is coming in a couple of days' time and there is a talk of energy cooperation enhancement. Your comments on that!

Foreign Secretary: Iran has been a traditional partner of India in the field of energy, very specifically in the field of oil. We have been having a supplier-buyer relationship for many many decades, and some of our refineries are in fact geared specifically to Iranian crude. But we are all aware that due to a variety of problems in the field of banking, in the field of shipping, in the field of insurance, the actual off-take by our refineries has gone down. So, this is one of those issues which we will certainly discuss.

But we will also take the opportunity to discuss the prospects for India and Iran to work together in the field of natural gas, in the field of fertilizers and other developments broadly in the hydrocarbons sector. These will take some time to actually come to fruition because, as I said, there are a number of technical, financial, banking and other problems which come in the way of actually implementing things now. But we are hopeful that once all these problems get sorted out, our relationship will be a strong one in the field of hydrocarbons. But, as I said, right now we have considerable difficulties in implementing many of the projects which we wanted to do together.

Q: Sir, you had a meeting with Ms. Wendy Sherman today. Can you please throw some light on that?

Foreign Secretary: This was part of the regular consultations which India and the United States engage in. When I went to Washington in February I had a long session with Ms. Wendy Sherman, the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs of the US State Department. The subjects we discussed are the preparations for the visit of the Secretary of State which is planned for 24th of June for what is called the strategic dialogue - I do not know if we have made a formal announcement of the date yet but anyway that is now impending on us - and also the ongoing dialogue on regional issues which we regularly have. These were the two broad features of our discussions.

Q: Did you discuss Shale gas exports from US to India?

Foreign Secretary: On this occasion I did not. I did bring it up when I was in Washington in February not only with the State Department but also with the Department of Energy. And I would like to say that you may have read in the press that Freeport, that particular project has been approved. Now that is not one from which we will be sourcing LNG. But the arrival of new sources of LNG on to the global market will certainly be a very positive development.

Q: Mr. Mathai, I wanted to ask you about China. What would you say was the main takeaway from the Chinese Premier's visit here for us?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have done extensive briefing on this. Our Ambassador, I think gave you more than one takeaway, in fact a number of takeaways. So, I would not like to expand on it. Just to say that I think it underlined the extensive nature of our relationship, the maturity of that relationship, and also the need for regular dialogue which China in an atmosphere of candour and of constructive approach.

Q: Sir, there is talk of the Prime Minister visiting the US later this year. Would you kindly confirm if that is correct? And is this to revive the drift that has seeped into the relationship?

Foreign Secretary: Since there isn't any drift, I do not see how we can either revive it or deal with it. There have been discussions regarding a visit. As soon as those reach a stage of finality, we will make an announcement.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

304. Prime Minister's interview with the Japanese Media.

New Delhi, May 26, 2013.

Japanese Media Question: Dr. Manmohan Singh, thank you very much for your time. My first question will be on Indo-Japanese relationship. Are there any changes in your agenda for the summit-level meeting in Tokyo in view of the change of Government in Japan particularly Mr. Shinzo Abe our Prime Minister is considered to be a great friend of India? Also how do you think of economic policy of Mr. Abe like Abenomics and diplomatic policy including our negotiations on civilian nuclear deal? Yesterday we heard Mr. Mathai say he wants to see more progress on this issue by the end of the year.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh: We have the annual tradition of a summit between India and Japan. This visit was to take place in November last year but because of understandable reason it had to be postponed. I am now looking forward very eagerly to meeting Prime Minister Abe whom we know in our country as a very special friend of India, and people of India remember with great fondness his visit to our country in 2007 and his memorable address to the two Houses of our Parliament.

Prime Minister Abe and I would review the state of Indo-Japanese relations. I am of the view that both in India and in Japan there is all-round agreement that our two countries must have robust strategic and global partnership. Therefore, it will be my effort to use this visit to strengthen our global and strategic partnership, and that also includes trying to reach out an agreement with regard to civil nuclear energy cooperation. I do recognize there are problems in Japan, and they have elections to the Upper House which fall due later this year. But I do hope that we can make progress in the civil nuclear energy cooperation field as well.

As far as Prime Minister Abe's economic policies are concerned, we believe that whatever can be done to revive and give a new push to the Japanese economy is good for Japan, it is good for Asia, it is good for India. Therefore, we earnestly hope and pray that Prime Minister Abe's economic policies succeed in giving a new push and a new momentum to Japanese economic growth, and the initial results of the last few weeks are very encouraging. We wish the Japanese people the best of luck in tackling the economic situation in Japan.

Q 2: Prime Minister, what is your analysis of the current economic situation in India? And what in your opinion needs to be done for the economy to bounce back to a growth rate of eight per cent? And what are India's expectations in terms of Japanese investment? And what sector, what industry would they like to see investment coming in from Japan?

Prime Minister: If you leave aside last year's economic performance, in the previous nine years the Indian economy has grown at the average annual rate of about eight per cent per annum. This is the highest rate of growth achieved by India in any previous decade. Last year our growth rate declined to about five per cent for very special reasons partly because of the recession in the global economy, Eurozone output and incomes declined, Europe was in recession, the American economy was also slow moving, and even Japan's economy was also in the slow rhythm process.

We had also some domestic reasons because several projects which were listed, which were included in our development plan got held up because of regulatory problems with regard to environment clearance, with regard to availability of coal and other inputs. Now we are trying to tackle all these issues. Our hope is that in the current year our growth rate will go up to six to 6.5 per cent and in the next two or three years, we are confident of returning the Indian economy back to the eight per cent growth rate.

Now you will ask me what convinces me that this will happen. One thing that I would like to point out, in the last few years Indian savings rate was as high as about 35 per cent of the GDP. It has declined recently to about 30 per cent and our investment rate is still very high, about 35 per cent. A capital output ratio of 4:1, a savings rate of over 30 per cent, an investment rate of 35 per cent, will easily yield a growth rate of about eight per cent.

So, our principal concern is to strengthen the impulses to accelerate the process of investment, particularly the investment in infrastructure which has been a big bottleneck which has held up our growth process. We would like to remove these bottlenecks. We have set up the Cabinet Committee on Investment to look at precisely the bottlenecks which hamper the growth of infrastructure sector. And we are hopeful and confident that this will happen. And as I said, this year our growth is likely to go up to about six to 6.5 per cent.

Now, in all this, we require robust participation of Japanese business, Japanese industries in India's economic development. Today we have more Japanese companies operating in India than ever before. But in terms of their contribution to Indian growth process, much needs to be done. We have plans to invest about one trillion US dollars in infrastructure in this Twelfth Five-Year Plan, that is, 2012 to 2017. And I see an enormous role for the Japanese industry to contribute not only to infrastructure development of India, but also to accelerate the tempo of manufacturing sector in India's economy.

We have of course the shining example of Maruti Suzuki, but more such examples could be created. We need Japanese investment in energy, in clean energy, in renewable energy. We would like Japan to repeat for example what Japan has done for India in Delhi Metro. We would like more Metros to come up in our metropolitan cities. And in all these areas I see enormous opportunities to strengthen cooperation between India and Japan. I invite the business community of Japan to take full advantage of the enormous opportunities that are opening up in a liberalized Indian economy.

Q3: Sir, how about the BRICS Bank? Do you have any opinion about the BRICS Bank?

Prime Minister: It is an idea which requires lot of further examination. We would I think the developing countries to look at the prospects of south-south cooperation, and the BRICS Bank is an example of that. But we have many many miles to cross before we can say that this idea has really come to a stage where it can take practical shape.

Q4: What is the view of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh on steps needed to strengthen maritime security in the region by both India and Japan, collectively and otherwise, in view of maritime threat from China?

Prime Minister: Both India and Japan are important maritime nations. Therefore, safety and security of the sea lanes of communication, especially in the Indian and Pacific Oceans, is vital for both countries. India supports freedom of navigation and unimpeded lawful commerce in international waters, and right of passage in accordance with accepted principles of international law. We believe that where disputes exist, they should be peacefully resolved by concerned parties through negotiations. This is essential for peace and stability in our region.

Maritime cooperation and coordination between India and Japan has grown. India and Japan launched bilateral naval exercise last year. We started a new dialogue for discussing maritime affairs, including maritime security challenges. These activities are not aimed against any third country, but are meant to advance our shared interests. As you may be aware, in anti-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden, India, Japan, the Republic of Korea and China coordinate escort schedules for merchant ships. This is an example of practical cooperation between Asian countries.

Q5: How do you see the liberalization of trade in the Asia Pacific region, especially with regard to RCEP and TPP? What is India's stand?

Prime Minister: Trade liberalization and economic integration can make a major contribution to advancing prosperity and economic development across the entire Asia-Pacific region. India is part of the great process of economic integration under way in East Asia. Like Japan, we are a founder member of the East Asia Summit. We are participating in the negotiations on a Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP). We are not a part of the Trans-Pacific Partnership, and we are studying its implications. Regional trading arrangements, however, should not be at the cost of an open, multilateral trading system. We are also concerned about protectionist tendencies in many parts of the world.

Q6: My question will be on security environment of Asia-Pacific region. In order to maintain peace and stability in the region, what kind of role does India want to play, and what kind of role does India want Japan to play? How do you foresee the future relationship with Pakistani newly-elected government?*

Prime Minister: India has vital stakes in security, stability and prosperity in the Asia-Pacific region. Our shared values, our convergent interests and the potential of our economic partnership anchor our Strategic and Global Partnership. This partnership is indispensable for promoting deeper regional economic integration, cooperation and connectivity, maritime security and the emergence of a rule-based, open and balanced regional architecture. I look forward to discussing with Prime Minister Abe ways in which we can advance those goals.

I have consistently advocated peaceful, friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. We have sought to pursue dialogue for the resolution of all issues, in an atmosphere free of terror and violence. I look forward to working with the new Government in Pakistan to take forward our relations.

Q7: The Japanese government is expected to offer support to build High Speed Train systems in India including financial assistance. What kind of agreement do you expect with the government of Japan regarding the introduction of Japanese High Speed Train systems like the Shinkansen? What is needed for your government to choose Shinkansen as High Speed Train system in India?*

Prime Minister: Indian Railways have looked into the possibility of High Speed Rail (HSR) corridors for passenger traffic in their long term perspective plans. Japan's Shinkansen system is well known for its efficiency and safety record. Such capital-intensive projects will be considered in accordance with our infrastructure requirement, national priorities and financial resources. We welcome Japan's interest and would be happy to look at Japan if we decide to take up High Speed Railways in India.

305. External Affairs Minister's Speech at Rikkyo University, Tokyo.

Tokyo, March 26, 2013.

Chancellor Mr. Itoigawa,
President Professor Yoshioka,
Professor Takenaka,
Teachers and students of Rikkyo University,

Friends.

Thank you for your very warm welcome. I am delighted to be with all of you today at this prestigious campus of the famous Rikkyo University. I am here in Tokyo on my first official visit to your beautiful country as the External Affairs Minister of India. I will utilize this wonderful opportunity today to spell out what I see as the trajectory of relations between India and Japan in the coming years of the 21st Century.

When I planned this visit to Tokyo, I did not realize that I would be visiting this capital city of Japan when it is at its prettiest, with the sakura or the cherry blossoms in full bloom. I am told that they have bloomed a little early this year, perhaps in time for my visit. I would like to think that this is an omen. What I will argue in the course of my address to you today is that the relationship between our two countries, between India and Japan, is also on the cusp of flowering and blooming like the cherry blossoms. Relations between our two countries are about to experience spring time.

In a period of history when we are seeing the resurgence of Asia within the world economy, we in India constantly remind ourselves that it was Japan which was the first country in Asia which underwent the industrial revolution. The rise of Japan in the 19th Century into an industrial society and an important economy has always urged us in India to follow your example and driven us in our national endeavor of economic development and social progress. In this sense, Japan has been like the Pole Star and guided us in India on the way forward in our own national domestic effort.

Centuries before the Meiji Restoration, India had made its own contribution to Japanese society when Buddhism traveled from the land of its birth over the seas to Japan. The teachings of the Buddha with emphasis on the Middle Path found fertile ground for growth in your country. The famous Todaiji Temple at Nara is a monument to the flourishing exchanges that existed between us in a bygone era. Isn't it an amazing fact that the Indian monk Bodhisena traveled to Nara over 1200 years ago to consecrate the Buddha statue at Todaiji?

While we have this rich heritage on which we can build further, today in the 21st Century India and Japan share common values which provide even firmer ground on which our Strategic and Global Partnership is founded. We are the two largest, most enduring democracies in Asia. Each of us cherish the free and fair electoral system which throws up the Governments that lead our countries and which in turn find legitimacy from such periodic elections. The Japanese and Indian people both uphold and value individual freedoms and human rights. We firmly believe in the rule of law and that no individual is above the law of the land. I am confident that this shared value system will stand us in good stead in the years ahead and it will prove to be the foundation for an expanded relationship between our countries and our peoples. Such a relationship will be guided by principle but will also be grounded in reality and pragmatism.

A second factor which augurs well for the India – Japan partnership is that there is consensus in both our nations and across the political spectrum that a strong relationship between our countries is in our national interests and is good for Asia and the world at large. Therefore, whatever political party may be in power either in Japan or in India, our bilateral ties will continue to prosper and grow. We have indeed experienced exactly this through the changes of Government in Japan over the past few years.

The end of the Cold War and the beginning of a new Century provided the necessary conditions for a quantum leap in interaction and exchange between our countries. It was the vision and leadership of then Japanese Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori which helped convert potential into practice. His historic, path breaking visit to India in the year 2000 provided the much needed impetus for our relations to be taken to a new level. Guided by his strategic vision both nations saw the merit in substantive bilateral engagement in diverse spheres. What Mori-san started at that point in time has been taken to its logical conclusion by succeeding Governments both in Japan as well as in India.

Our economic engagement has expanded significantly over these past few years, since we established our Strategic and Global Partnership in 2006. We have implemented a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement since August 2011. It has been well over a year since then and the initial results in terms of greater flows of trade and investment are heartening after factoring in the depressed global economic conditions that have ensued in this period. We are delighted that India continues to poll very high amongst Japanese firms as a long term investment destination. The number of firms from your country which have operations in India is over 1000 now, and while we can take some satisfaction from this fact, naturally we want many more of your firms to invest in India. Very frankly, there is a perfect fit here since India is a labour abundant country with relatively low wage rates. Japan is abundant in capital and has technology and management expertise which can be married to our competitive advantages. We are also immensely aware of the need to upgrade physical infrastructure in India whether at our ports or our highways and roads. That is why we plan to invest about 1 trillion US Dollars in infrastructure during the period 2012 to 2017. We are confident that in the near future the infrastructure needs of corporate Japan will be met in India. We have also recently announced a new manufacturing policy to encourage and support this very important segment of the economy. Jobs for our young population will come mainly from manufacturing and we believe Japanese firms will find a win-win situation in this regard in our country.

Suzuki, of course, is a household name in India thanks to the automobiles it has been producing in India since the 1980s. They were well ahead of the curve in entering India, had first mover's advantage and therefore even today have the largest market share in our domestic car market.

What I find very interesting about the Suzuki model, is that they have now also made India a manufacturing hub for export of cars to the Middle East, North Africa and even East Europe. We are delighted that other famous Japanese auto firms such as Nissan and Toyota have followed suit. The ancillary firms have begun to come to India more recently and this relatively recent development makes us sure that we are on the right track for enhancing foreign investment flows.

India continues to be the largest recipient nation of Japanese Official Development Assistance for many years in a row. The Government and people of India greatly appreciate this help from the people of Japan. This aid has been utilized in large, iconic infrastructure development projects such as the Delhi Metro project which has revolutionized travel within the city for millions of commuters. Seeing this successful example, other cities of India are also vying to build underground metro projects, some of them with Japanese assistance. Similarly, the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor project will help accelerate the speed with which goods are transported between Delhi and Mumbai and will benefit the Indian economy greatly. The Delhi Mumbai Industrial Corridor is another Japanese funded project in India which has enormous significance since it will establish new towns and cities which will become manufacturing hubs and will combine modern technologies to make them smart cities. Many of these ventures are futuristic in their orientation and will positively impact modernization and development in India.

I firmly believe that India - Japan economic engagement creates a win-win situation for both our countries and will help foster growth in the second and third largest economies of Asia.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Political and security cooperation between India and Japan has a significance which goes beyond our two countries. We are both members of the East Asia Summit process and we desire to see this architecture being open, transparent and inclusive. We have a bilateral Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation and an Action Plan to Advance Security Cooperation that spells out a detailed dialogue mechanism which has been meeting regularly and its decisions implemented steadfastly. We have annual Summits between our Prime Ministers and we hope to have our Prime Minister visit your country soon. We also have an annual Strategic Dialogue between the Foreign Ministers of our countries and I myself am here in Tokyo for the 7th dialogue with Foreign Minister Kishida whom I will meet later this evening. We expect to talk about the entire range of issues in our bilateral ties as well as regional and global issues. The discussions between us are usually frank, candid and constructive in keeping with the partnership our countries enjoy. Japan is the only country with which India has a 2 Plus 2 dialogue between the Defence and Foreign Ministries of our Governments.

The Indian and Japanese Coast Guards have regular interactions as does the Indian Navy and your Maritime Self Defence Force. We had our first bilateral naval exercise last June. All this cooperation is not aimed at any other country but helps us to gain valuable knowledge and experience about the interoperability of our defence forces.

Prime Minister Abe has also contributed immeasurably to the India – Japan strategic partnership. In his earlier stint as Prime Minister of Japan he visited us in India in 2007 and delivered a memorable address to a joint sitting of our Parliament. At that time, he had eloquently spoken of the confluence of the two seas which gave rise to the term 'Indo-Pacific' that is commonly used by strategic thinkers today. There can be little doubt that countries like India and Japan must cooperate in ensuring the security of the global commons including freedom of navigation on the high seas that is critical to both our countries which import large amounts of oil and gas. Let me say clearly today that India stands with Japan, and other like minded countries, in pursuing and implementing these goals and objectives.

India and Japan work closely on international and global issues as well. Both our Governments have been relentlessly pursuing the objective of reforming the United Nations, including its Security Council, so as to make it more representative of the realities of today's world. We are both members of the G-20 where we have worked tirelessly to overcome the international financial crisis and its impact on the world economy. Within Asia, we are partners in the ASEAN Regional Forum, the ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting Plus and the expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum. We have a Trilateral Dialogue with the United States.

Ladies and Gentlemen, while our economic interaction and political and security exchanges are strong and expanding, the one area in our bilateral ties which continues to remain weak is in the area of people-to-people exchanges. While politics and economics are indeed important, perhaps it is the interaction between the people of any two countries which is a significant variable in relations between nations. This is where the Governments of our countries are paying their greatest attention since tourism flows can indeed be strengthened as can student exchanges. Direct flights between cities in India and Japan have increased over the last two years, but are still far below potential. Given the fact that our combined population is nearly 1.4 billion, we are very aware that we can do far better in attracting more Japanese tourists to India. Indeed, the same is true of Indian tourism in the direction of Japan. The number of Indian students in Japan does not exceed a few hundred. Perhaps, Universities in each of our countries can institute more scholarships which may attract more students from the other country. There are Chairs of Indian Studies at the University of Tokyo as well as at Ryokoku University. I encourage Rikkyo University to establish a Chair in Indian Studies. It will help spark increased interest in India.

I would venture to state that both India and Japan need to work on ensuring a confluence of our peoples if we are to ensure that bilateral ties continue to stay on their high trajectory. I am told that Indian movies are beginning to make an entrance into the Japanese market and that may bring our people closer together.

Which leads me to the question of where I think India – Japan relations will be in a decade from now? As I have spelt out, all the necessary conditions for a take-off in our relations are in place. The sufficient conditions are being worked upon and I hope will fall into place in the next few years. These sufficient conditions include better infrastructure in India, more flows of tourists and students in both directions and political convergence between our Governments.

It is these facts on the ground which leads me to be very optimistic about our bilateral ties and to predict that they will blossom further in the coming decade of the 21st Century. I have little doubt that it will be young people like the students who are gathered here today at Rikkyo University who will lead this charge and on whom will devolve the responsibility of ensuring that spring comes early to India – Japan relations.

I thank you for your patience. I thank you for your welcome.

306. External Affairs Minister's statement to the media at the joint press interaction following the 7th India-Japan Strategic Dialogue.

Tokyo, March 26, 2013.

Your Excellency Foreign Minister Kishida,
Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media.

I am delighted to be in Tokyo on my first official visit as the External Affairs Minister of India. Foreign Minister Kishida and I have just had excellent discussions on the entire range of bilateral issues in our relations. As you are aware, these conversations form part of the 7th India-Japan Strategic Dialogue. We will continue our discussions on regional and global issues immediately after this media interaction.

My Government looks forward to further strengthening and expanding the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership. I discussed with Foreign Minister Kishida the way forward for enhancing our economic, political and security cooperation. You have just witnessed the signing of the Notes for the ODA Loan Package for financial year 2012. India appreciates the economic assistance provided by the Government and people of Japan. Such assistance has been utilized in upgrading our infrastructure. The iconic Delhi Metro project has positively impacted the lives of millions of Indian citizens in the National Capital Region of Delhi.

Our security cooperation is proceeding well. Earlier this year, we received the Chief of the Japanese Maritime Self Defence Force in India and your Defence Minister is expected to visit us later this year. The 1st Maritime Affairs Dialogue between India and Japan was held in January this year.

Foreign Minister Kishida and I also discussed the possibility of convening the Annual Summit between the Prime Ministers of India and Japan in the coming months.

As the two largest democracies of Asia, we agreed to expand our cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region. Foreign Minister Kishida and I agreed that India and Japan will coordinate their actions more closely within the East Asia Summit process.

I have invited Foreign Minister Kishida to visit India soon.

307. Media Briefing by the Official Spokespersons on the visit of Chinese Premier of India, Prime Minister's Visit to Japan and Thailand and External Affairs Minister to Saudi Arabia.

New Delhi, May 14, 2013

Please See Document No. 254

308. Prime Minister's Statement on his departure for Japan and Thailand, May 27-31, 2013.

New Delhi, May 27, 2013.

I am proceeding today on a trip to the East, which will take me to our important friends and partners Japan and Thailand.

My visit to Japan is for the Annual Summit between our two countries, which got deferred last year due to impending general elections there. Japan is a key regional and global partner for India. There is a growing congruence in our interests and I see this relationship as an essential component of our vision for enduring stability and prosperity in Asia. In my Summit with the new government of Japan, led by my good friend Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, I will build on the momentum imparted by successive summits to the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership.

During this visit, I propose to invigorate our relations with Japan in the political, security and energy spheres. We will explore ways to harness the full potential of our Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Partnership by intensifying and balancing our two-way trade and investment linkages. The visit will also allow the two governments to take stock of the progress in flagship projects in our partnership, like the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, and to facilitate bilateral engagement for meaningful and mutually beneficial association.

I also hope to exchange views with Prime Minister Abe on important regional and global developments of shared interest.

As on every previous visit to Japan, I look forward to a gracious audience with Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress of Japan. I will also have an opportunity to interact with leaders across the entire political spectrum in Japan, captains of Japanese business and industry and friends of India from all walks of life in Japan.

My other destination, Thailand, is an important bilateral partner as well as a regional leader situated at the heart of ASEAN. During my talks with Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra, I will carry forward the new dynamics in our relations since her milestone visit to India as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day in 2012.

Thailand and India share centuries-old people-to-people, cultural and spiritual ties. Being maritime neighbours, we also share common interests in maritime security. Our defence and security cooperation with Thailand is progressing well and it will be my effort to further enhance it during my visit. As one of our top trade and investment partners in ASEAN, Thailand is an essential part of India's integration with the region.

Thailand's importance to India is also underpinned by its potential as a hub of connectivity between India and Southeast Asia. The Trilateral Highway project will connect our Northeast with Thailand through Myanmar and create avenues for commercial and cultural interaction.

I intend to utilize this visit also to re-emphasize our commitment to building a stronger partnership with ASEAN. Thailand is also a key component of our sub-regional engagements in BIMSTEC and the Mekong Ganga Cooperation initiative.

My visits to Japan and Thailand will add depth and new meaning to our “Look East” policy and contribute to peace, prosperity and stability in the Asia-Pacific.

309. Prime Minister’s Statement on arrival in Tokyo.

Tokyo, May 27, 2013.

India and Japan have a strategic and global partnership. There are enormous potentialities for further enriching our relationship, deepening it and brightening it in the economic relations, political relations, and security relations. In all areas there is enormous potential for widening and strengthening our relationship with Japan.

The people of India have fondness for the people of Japan. I look forward to further cementing our ties with Japan.

310. Prime Minister’s address to Japan-India Association, Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League and International Friendship Exchange Council.

Tokyo, May 28, 2013.

I am delighted to be here in this room full of friends of India. I am particularly gratified, and honoured, by the presence here of Mori-san.

Mori-san is not only a good personal friend. He is also a great friend of India. As Prime Minister of Japan, Mori-san laid the foundation of a new phase in the ancient relationship between our two countries and our two peoples. That is why we in India were privileged to confer on him our national honour of Padma Bhushan.

Asia’s resurgence began over a century ago on this island of the Rising Sun. Ever since, Japan has shown us the way forward. India and Japan have a shared vision of a rising Asia. Over the past decade, therefore, our two countries have established a new relationship based on shared values and shared interests. Japan's rise as a modern, knowledge-based industrial power was a source of inspiration to India's great national leaders. The philosopher Swami Vivekananda, the poet Rabindranath Tagore, the engineer M Vishweshwarayya, the patriot Subhas Chandra Bose and the nation builder Jawaharlal Nehru, and many more – were all inspired by Japan's great achievements in the 19th and 20th centuries.

More recently, India's gradual but sustained economic rise has created new opportunities for both our countries to cooperate and work together. India needs Japanese technology and investment. In turn, India offers increasing opportunities for the growth and globalization of Japanese companies for the overall prosperity and growth of Japan.

I was most deeply honoured by the invitation that Prime Minister Shinzo Abe extended to me to be his first guest in Tokyo this year. Unfortunately, I was unable to travel at the time due to my parliamentary commitments.

While I missed the opportunity to visit during the Cherry Blossom season, I am delighted to be here in the season of Spring, which, I am confident, signifies a great future for our relationship. I am also convinced that friendship between our peoples, partnership between our businesses and cooperation between our defence and strategic communities will blossom further under the leadership of Prime Minister Abe.

On this occasion, I am reminded of Prime Minister Abe's inspiring and visionary address to the Indian Parliament in August 2007, when he spoke of "the confluence of the two seas" – the Pacific and the Indian Oceans – which has defined the new framework for our bilateral relationship. Prime Minister Abe and I will work together to strengthen our strategic partnership, impart new momentum to our economic cooperation and deepen our dialogue on shared regional and global interests.

The Indo-Pacific region is witnessing profound social and economic changes on a scale and at a speed rarely seen in human history. It has experienced an unprecedented rise in freedom, opportunity and prosperity over the last half century.

At the same time, this region faces multiple challenges, unresolved issues and unsettled questions. Historical differences persist despite our growing inter-dependence; prosperity has not fully eliminated disparities within and between states; and there are continuing threats to stability and security.

It is in this moment of flux and change that we also have the greatest opportunity to chart a new course for Asia in this century. With the weight of the global economy and its drivers of growth shifting to this region, its future will also shape the contours of the world in this century.

India and Japan are among the major actors in this region. Our shared religious, cultural and spiritual heritage embodies the principles of peace, co-existence and pluralism. It is our responsibility to foster a climate of peace, stability and cooperation and to lay an enduring foundation for security and prosperity. I would like to suggest three areas of cooperation in this regard.

First, we should strengthen regional mechanisms and forums that will help develop habits of consultation and cooperation, enable us to evolve commonly accepted principles for managing differences, reinforce congruence in the region and allow us to address common challenges.

Second, we should promote wider and deeper regional economic integration and enhance regional connectivity. This will promote more balanced and broad-based economic development across the region and also contribute to a more balanced regional architecture.

Third, maritime security across the linked regions of the Indian and Pacific Oceans is essential for regional and global prosperity. We should therefore uphold the principles of freedom of navigation and unimpeded lawful commerce in accordance with international law, resolve maritime issues peacefully and work together more purposefully to harness the potential of the seas and address common sea-based challenges such as piracy.

India's own deepening engagement in the region is informed by this vision. Our Look East engagement began with a strong economic emphasis, but it has become increasingly strategic in its content. Our political relations have intensified with all countries and groupings like ASEAN. We have developed a web of trade and economic agreements.

We are emphasizing connectivity and participating actively in regional anchors of cooperation and security like the East Asia Summit and the ASEAN Regional Forum.

Our relationship with Japan has been at the heart of our Look East Policy. Japan inspired Asia's surge to prosperity and it remains integral to Asia's future. The world has a huge stake in Japan's success in restoring the momentum of its growth. Your continued leadership in enterprise, technology and innovation and your ability to remain the locomotive of Asian renaissance are crucial.

India's relations with Japan are important not only for our economic development, but also because we see Japan as a natural and indispensable partner in our quest for stability and peace in the vast region in Asia that is washed by the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

Our relations draw their strength from our spiritual, cultural and civilizational affinities and a shared commitment to the ideals of democracy, peace and freedom. We have increasingly convergent world views and growing stakes in each other's prosperity. We have shared interests in maritime security and we face similar challenges to our energy security. There are strong synergies between our economies, which need an open, rule-based international trading system to prosper. Together, we seek a new architecture for the United Nations Security Council.

In recent years, our political and security cooperation has gained in salience. Japan is the only partner with whom we have a 2-plus-2 Dialogue between the Foreign and Defence Ministries. We have also begun bilateral exercises with the Japanese Maritime Self Defence Force.

Japan has long been part of important milestones in India's economic development efforts.

The Maruti-Suzuki collaboration sparked off a wave of industrial development in India. The Delhi Metro is inspiring a similar revolution in public transportation. Our two flagship infrastructure projects – the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor and the Delhi Mumbai Industrial Corridor – are unmatched both in their size and scale. We are also exploring new projects such as an industrial corridor between Chennai and Bengaluru. Our Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement was launched in 2011 and last year we signed an agreement for cooperation in the field of rare earths.

All this would suggest that ours is already a rich relationship. However, we have set for ourselves higher ambitions consistent with the vision that we have for this partnership. Going forward, therefore, we should intensify our political dialogue and expand our strategic consultations on regions and issues of mutual interest. Our defence and security dialogue, military exercises and defence technology collaboration should grow. We should consult and coordinate more closely in global and regional forums.

Our relationship should also be anchored in expanded trade and investment relations. As I told business leaders at the Keidanren function earlier today, there should be no doubt about our commitment and confidence that we will soon restore our growth to the 8%-plus levels that we experienced over the past decade.

This confidence stems from the strength of our economic fundamentals, the thriving spirit of enterprise in our country and the steps that we have taken recently to reform policies and accelerate implementation of mega projects.

Greater investment by Japanese companies in India's large market will be in our economic as well as strategic interest. This consideration should also guide closer engagement in high technology commerce, clean energy, energy security and skill development.

Prime Minister Abe and I have a rich agenda for discussion before us. Together, we had started the institution of annual summits and many initiatives that have given our relationship such extraordinary depth and diversity. We will seek not only to sustain the rising momentum of our relationship, but add new content and meaning to it, in the interest of our two countries, our region and our world.

Let me conclude by confessing that Japan has been close to my heart ever since I first visited this beautiful country in 1971. It has been my dream to see our relationship grow and prosper, and this is an objective towards which I have worked in the last nine years of my tenure as Prime Minister of India. Today, I am heartened to witness the transformation of India-Japan relations into a durable partnership. I have no doubt your efforts and initiatives will continue to be a source of great strength for the relationship.

311. Address by Prime Minister at the Luncheon hosted by Nippon Keidanren.

Tokyo, May 28, 2013.

Chairman Yonekura of Keidanren,
Members of the Japan-India Business Leaders Forum, Distinguished Business Leaders from India and Japan,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am glad to return to the precincts of Nippon Keidanren. I have always valued this opportunity to interact with business leaders and share my thoughts on India Japan economic cooperation.

Japan's contribution to India's economic development has been enormous. For many years, Japan has been our largest bilateral donor and we are grateful for the assistance we have received. Japanese assistance has financed some of our most iconic infrastructure projects such as the Delhi Metro and now the Dedicated Freight Corridor.

Japan has also been a major player in the modernisation of Indian industry in the period after economic reforms. The Maruti-Suzuki partnership is a household name in India. There are other similar examples.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Since my last visit to Japan in October 2010, both our economies have coped with exceptionally difficult situations.

Japan experienced an unprecedented calamity in Fukushima. You met that challenge with characteristic resolve and determination, and your handling of the problem is the subject of much admiration. On the economic side, the latest economic forecasts and the rise in business confidence in Japan are positive developments. India and the world have a strong economic and strategic interest in Japan's success.

India too has been affected by the difficult circumstances in the world economy. Our growth rate came down to 5% last year due to a combination of global factors and domestic constraints. We cannot do much about the global economy. But we have reacted with determination to overcome domestic constraints on economic growth.

The 5% growth witnessed last year should be seen as a temporary slow down. The Indian economy grew at an average of 8% per year over the past decade, including the last year of 5% growth. The economic fundamentals which made that possible are still intact. We are confident therefore that we can return to the growth path of 8%.

India's Twelfth Five Year Plan outlines the many things we have to do to realise our full growth potential and to make that growth inclusive and sustainable. Our people have tasted the benefits of rapid growth and they will not settle for less. I want to assure you that our government is committed to take hard and difficult decisions in the long term interest of our economy.

In recent months, we have taken a number of steps to revive the economy. We have started to bring the fiscal deficit under control and also outlined a medium term path for fiscal consolidation. We have accelerated the implementation of large infrastructure projects by setting up special mechanisms to ensure that various regulatory clearances do not lead to delays. We have taken tangible steps to enhance incentives for investments. We have liberalised foreign investments in areas like multi-brand retail, power exchanges and civil aviation and further rationalisation and simplification is being planned. We have introduced further reforms in the financial markets. The Central Bank has indicated that it will start the process of expanding grant of new bank licenses.

As a result of these efforts, we expect that growth in 2013-14 will be much better than in the previous year, hopefully around 6% or so. We will do even better in 2014-15.

Our strategy for growth involves heavy investment in infrastructure. Lack of quality infrastructure is the single biggest obstacle to achieving higher levels of competitiveness in India. We have targeted an investment of around 1 trillion US dollars in infrastructure over the Twelfth Plan period, with half of it coming from the private sector and public-private-partnership.

India's growth will provide expanding opportunities for foreign investment. We welcome foreign investment in the development of our economy and especially so in the critical infrastructure sector. I hope Japanese business will pick up a large share of the investment opportunities that India offers.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The scope for expanding economic co-operation between our countries is enormous. As Asian democracies, we have shared values. We have a very comfortable relationship between the two governments. There is also great public goodwill in both countries.

Given these commonalities, I believe we should have done much more than we have. I am told that Japanese companies rank India the most promising long term destination. However, India accounts for only 4% of total Japanese outward investment flow into Asia. I am sure you will agree that this percentage should be much higher. We on our part will work hard to turn promise into reality.

Let me touch on some areas where India and Japan are collaborating, and which can be the basis for expanded engagement.

The two ongoing flagship projects of the India Japan partnership are the Western Dedicated Rail Freight Corridor between Mumbai and Delhi and the associated Delhi Mumbai Industrial Corridor. Both are making good progress.

The Western Dedicated Freight Corridor between Delhi and Mumbai is scheduled for completion as planned in 2017. The procurement of civil works for Phase-I of the project is in an advanced stage and construction is to begin soon. The Engineering Service Consultants for Phase-II of the DFC project are already in position. I hope Japanese construction companies will participate strongly in both phases.

The Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor project is also making good progress. It has moved from the planning to the implementation stage. I am happy to say that many of the recommendations you made have been implemented. JICA has committed 1.5 billion dollars for the project and JBIC has committed 3 billion dollars. JBIC has been given 26% equity in the DMIC Development Corporation, making it a global strategic partner in this iconic project. This is a project in which Prime Minister Abe has expressed great interest. I am confident it will develop futuristic, smart and sustainable industrial cities which will help address challenges of industrialisation, urbanisation and creation of job opportunities for our young population.

A number of priority projects for implementation from the first tranche of 4.5 billion US dollars provided by Japan for the project have been listed. We have resolved the issues of priority sector lending treatment to DMIC projects. Restrictions on foreign currency borrowings have been relaxed. I understand a few problems remain relating to long term swap arrangements. We are willing to consider innovative suggestions to resolve these problems. I am also happy to say that Japanese banks are being given licenses to open branches in metropolitan areas.

I understand that Japan has also offered financial and technical support for a Detailed Project Report for the Mumbai-Ahmedabad High Speed Railway route. This is an ambitious project and we will need to take a holistic view, based on our infrastructure needs, commercial viability, overall national priorities and the availability of financial resources. We are willing for Japan and India to co-finance a joint feasibility study on this.

The Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor is the base for many Japanese companies in India. It provides another focus for expanded Japanese industrial cooperation in future. I am pleased that the Preliminary Study for a Comprehensive Integrated Master Plan for this corridor has been completed, and the second phase of the project is about to commence.

The present bilateral trade of 18 billion US dollars does no justice to our potential. We must harness the full potential of our Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement to expand our trade and make it more broad-based and balanced. I hope that Japan would be more open and accessible for Indian companies in our areas of strength, such as pharmaceuticals and IT services. I am happy to say that the Social Security Agreement we concluded in November 2012 would be of great benefit to the growing number of Indian and Japanese professionals who live and work in each other's country.

For the past few years, we have been engaged in an India-Japan Energy Dialogue to address some of our shared challenges in the area of energy security, including the issue of access to assured, reliable, secure and affordable supply of hydrocarbons. Japanese investments in India in the areas of solar power generation, clean coal technologies and upgrading of brown coal would be greatly welcome. We also look forward to Japanese involvement in the setting up of a gas hydrate R&D Centre.

One of the outcomes of the Energy Dialogue is that an exhibition on clean and renewable energy technology from Japan will be held in India in September this year. I hope this will be an opportunity for a large number of Japanese companies to display their products and technologies, and for Indian companies to build partnerships in this very important area.

India and Japan are both major importers of Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG). I am happy that a study is being conducted by research institutions in India and Japan on LNG pricing for Asian importers and will be ready by the end of the year.

Skill development is a key national priority in India to power our industrial growth and to create opportunities and employment for India's vast youth population. We look to closer partnership with Japan in setting up skill development centres in India, just as we are also collaborating on a new generation Indian Institute of Technology in Hyderabad.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The India-Japan partnership has never been more important to our two countries than it is today. It is rich with possibilities. A stronger commercial partnership between our two countries should be the corner stone of our relationship. It would not only contribute to each other's economic growth, but will also be in the strategic interest of India and Japan. It will also contribute to wider and enduring prosperity in Asia and beyond.

I thank Nippon Keidanren for all that you have done in the past to further India Japan co-operation and I urge you to continue to make your contribution to this cause which is of mutual benefit for our two countries.

Thank you

312. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary in Tokyo on Prime Minister's Japan Visit.

Tokyo, May 29, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends. I must apologise before I begin for keeping you waiting but at least there is still time available for Indian deadlines. So, I hope you will forgive us this one time that we have kept you waiting a little.

We have here with us Foreign Secretary who will brief you on the entire events of today, i.e., the two meetings that the Prime Minister has had with his counterpart as also other meetings. We have with Foreign Secretary, Ambassador Deepa Wadhwa who is our Ambassador in Tokyo. If you would like to ask her any other question because she has been involved with the entire preparations for this visit. We further have here, on my right, Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who was handling this visit from New Delhi. Finally we have here the familiar figure of the Communications Advisor to Prime Minister, Mr. Pankaj Pachauri. With these introductions I will ask Foreign Secretary to make his brief opening remarks following which the floor will be open for any questions that you may have. Foreign Secretary.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Ranjan Mathai): As Akbar just told you, we are late but that is because the event of the evening has just got over fifteen minutes ago and we have just been able to come here.

You are aware of the extensive engagements that PM has had over the last two days in Tokyo. These included an audience with Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress of Japan at which only our Ambassador was present. So, if there are any questions on that, you can direct them to her. That was followed by a private lunch purely for Prime Minister and Shrimati Kaur with the Emperor and the Empress.

Last night, Prime Minister and Mrs. Abe hosted a private dinner for PM and Shrimati Kaur, which was an occasion both for renewing their acquaintance as well as some substantive discussions. There were talks between the two Prime Ministers this evening, first in a restricted format and then in the delegation-level format. Immediately after the delegation-level format was the press interaction where I think most of you were present.

I draw your attention also to the fact that the Prime Minister delivered two major addresses during this visit. The first was focused on economics and business, and that was to Nippon Keidanren, and the second was the larger canvas of India- Japan relations which was to the Japan-India Association, the Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League, and the Friendship Exchange Council, who jointly hosted that event. I believe most of you have already covered those speeches, so I will not spend any more time on them.

Today, Foreign Minister Kishida and METI Minister Motegi called on PM during the evening just before he went for his meeting with the Prime Minister. The leader of the Democratic Party of Japan which was holding office till the last election - the current leader is Mr. Kaieda - and the leader of the new Kometo Party Mr. Yamaguchi, had also called on PM.

The main message covered by PM during his range of activities in Tokyo is that India looks forward to expanding the strategic and global partnership with Japan. This covers political exchanges, economic interactions and strategic affairs. As the Prime Minister put it, the global and strategic partnership between India has been designed to lift our bilateral relations to an entirely new level, spreading from the area of economic cooperation, trade development, infrastructure development in India with Japanese assistance to the strategic areas of our current relationship.

You have seen the Joint Statement issued earlier today by the two Prime Ministers. They actually signed it in your presence. I would refer to some of the highlights of this document. It underlines what I just called the Strategic and Global Partnership and includes some specific issues in that partnership. For example, India and Japan have agreed to institutionalize bilateral naval exercises, to conduct them regularly and with increased frequency. The Japanese Government has offered to sell the US-2 amphibious aircraft to India. This has been reported already. This is one of the few occasions where Japan has offered to sell such dual use equipment with both military and civilian applications to a foreign country. I draw your attention to the fact that this has dual uses. The idea is that this is an aircraft with extraordinary capabilities of landing even in fairly high seas where waves are quite high and has a very very long range, therefore, it has both civilian as well as possible military applications.

Our Prime Minister noted Japan's unwavering support for India's development process, and the DMIC, the Dedicated Freight Corridor, and now what is emerging as a new area of cooperation which is the Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor are all symbols of this commitment of Japan. You are aware that our Ambassador signed the latest in the infrastructure development agreements which will be funded from Japanese ODA and that is the Mumbai Metro Line III aff Project for 71 billion yen.

The Japanese side has given great emphasis to the Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor. There is a critical mass of Japanese industry which is investing in that particular region, and therefore they felt that this particular corridor holds great potential for the future. As part of this, there has been a preliminary study for a comprehensive integrated master plan, and we have now completed the terms of reference to take forward this master plan.

The two Prime Ministers also agreed to co-finance a joint feasibility study on the possible introduction of high-speed railways or Shinkansen on the Mumbai-Ahmedabad route in India. Now as you are aware, one of the great achievements of Japan is the Shinkansen or the high-speed rail and we are all familiar with the extraordinary achievements of Japan. We are going to have a joint feasibility study to see how this fits in with the overall plans of our Railways given their priorities, and we would like to take it forward after that feasibility study is over.

India and Japan are also cooperating in the field of rare earths. A government-to-government memorandum was signed by the Ambassador last November and it is already in place. Companies from India and Japan – the Indian Rare Earths Limited and Toyota Tsusho – are negotiating the sale of rare earth oxide.

You have witnessed, as I said, the exchange of diplomatic notes for the Mumbai Metro project. The total commitment of Japan ODA this year would be the highest which it has ever been, which is over three billion, and I think that is in the Joint Statement.

You would see from the Joint Statement that the two Prime Ministers have directed us officials to accelerate negotiations - I mark the words - accelerate negotiations on a bilateral agreement for cooperation on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy so that we can conclude an agreement at an early date.

There were also a number of initiatives in the field of people-to-people exchanges on which I would ask our Ambassador to elaborate later in case any of you have interest. The IIT Hyderabad is one such; the Indian Institute of Information Management, Jabalpur is another; and the Genesis programme under which Prime Minister Abe said he would like to have more than a thousand young Indian people come and visit Japan, are all examples of this. There was appreciation for India's, what was described as encouraging words which is really, endorsement of Japan's bid to host the Olympic Games in 2020.

I would, therefore, sum up that PM has had an extremely successful visit to Tokyo which has led to expanded strategic understanding between India and Japan which, as the Prime Minister himself stated, will contribute to peace and stability in Asia and in the world.

On a completely separate note I had mentioned that the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister both expressed their shock over the attack which took place in Chhattisgarh and conveyed their condolences over this, and it was described as inadmissible in a democracy that attacks of this nature should take place.

I referred to the IIT Hyderabad. We did raise a number of issues with the Japanese side on the commercial arena. The Prime Minister urged Japan to make the registration procedures for generics and pharmaceutical products quicker and easier. And he was assured that the Japanese side would look into this. This, as you know, has been a longstanding issue.

Japan's contribution to the Nalanda University, which is coming up, through the Faculty of Peace Studies was referred to. And finally we are greatly honoured that Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress of Japan will visit India at the end of November-early December this year.

I will stop there and throw open the field to questions. Thank you.

Q: Sir, today we had a briefing in the afternoon from one of the members of Prime Minister's Office. He told us that on civil nuclear cooperation there will be two tracks – one he said we will continue to work on how we can achieve this, and on the other side he talked about a number of things that are required to be done by India. And he said we cannot put a deadline or dateline. Roughly, he said maybe two years. Would you like to say anything on this?

Foreign Secretary: I am not sure which are the two tracks he is referring to. We have a dialogue which is an ongoing one for a civil nuclear cooperation agreement, which is handled by the Ministry of External Affairs and the Department of Atomic Energy together. That process will continue. Perhaps he is referring to other sets of dialogues which we have on the export control regimes where we have another set of dialogues which is ongoing. But if you see, even in that, in the Joint Statement there is agreement to work together for India's full membership, full membership, of all the four export control regimes. Now I do not know where the timeline of two years has emerged from. As far as we are concerned, we are going on the basis that it has been decided to accelerate the process of the negotiations.

Q: Is it possible to have full-fledged membership unless we sign CTBT and NPT?

Foreign Secretary: I think the four export control regimes stand on their own. They are issues on which our position is well-known. And the export control regimes proceed on the basis of the acceptance of the entire body of accepting new members.

Q: I just bring you back to the question of export control regimes. Could you just elaborate on the paragraph because it talks about a few things? It says, the Prime Ministers recognize the importance of an effective national export control system. Now we have done a lot in the national export control system. Does it mean that what we have done till now is falling short of Japanese standards? And second, when it says that commitment to continue to work to prepare the ground rules can that be interpreted as support because Japan had a kind of a different point of view at the last Nuclear Suppliers Group meeting?

Foreign Secretary: I think these are two separate issues. They talk about preparing the ground, not the ground rules, which is preparing the way for India to enter.

Q: Can that be construed as support?

Foreign Secretary: It is support. It is very clear-cut support for India's moving towards the membership.

Q: About the national export control system.

Foreign Secretary: I think what that line refers to is the extensive briefing we have given to the Japanese as to our other partners, on the upgradation of our export control regimes. You might be aware that our SCOMET lists as they are called are upgraded and this actually was announced when the Director-General of the IAEA was in Delhi, and it has been accepted by most of our partners that today our lists of this what is called SCOMET by DGFT are in fact in line with the best practices of the NSG, the MTCR and the other export control regimes. I think this is a recognition of that.

Q: Sir, how important would be the domestic politics for the Japanese? While we were coming out of the function today, we saw some protests directed against both the Japanese Government and the Indian Government saying no to nuclear exports. How important would be domestic politics in deciding which way Japan goes?

Foreign Secretary: I can hardly comment on the domestic politics of Japan. That would not be appropriate for me to do. What I would say is that if you see even in the statement the Japanese Prime Minister has formally recognized the excellent nonproliferation record of India. That has in fact been mentioned in the Joint Statement. I think we are reaching a stage where today the possibilities of cooperation between Japan and India are taking a decisive step forward. As you are aware, the Japanese Prime Minister had recently visited a number of countries where he in fact signed civil nuclear cooperation. Our Ambassador might be able to expand on this a little, maybe she could tell us which countries they were. But it is in line with that that I think he is moving towards a responsible policy on civil nuclear cooperation with many countries, and certainly he recognizes India's special place in this scheme of things.

Indian Ambassador to Japan (Ms. Deepa Gopalan Wadhwa): The countries have been: Turkey, the UAE, Vietnam. I believe that he is headed shortly to East Europe, the old...(Inaudible)...countries, and I think the objective is really the same. So, they certainly are out in the market with nuclear reactors because they believe there are very high safety standards in this country.

Foreign Secretary: I think that is one important point in terms of the domestic opinion which you mentioned. Domestic opinion is focused very sharply also on safety. And the Japanese Prime Minister did mention, the Japanese Foreign Minister did mention, that it is the safety element in Japanese technology which they are emphasizing today.

Q: Sir, the statement states about a gas-based IPP in Maharashtra. Can you elaborate on the location and the size of the power plant to be established by the Japanese?

Foreign Secretary: That is under the DMIC.

Ambassador to Japan: It is one of the early-bird projects.

Foreign Secretary: I do not know if we have a location here.

Q: Sir, regarding the rare earths, when is it likely to start the commercial production? And, is there a Chinese angle for that because the export of rare earths from China to Japan is now affected by their bilateral relations?

Foreign Secretary: I will answer the first one and that is that the negotiations are now at a stage where we are trying to work out between the two commercial entities. Last November the Ambassador and the Japanese counterpart signed the Intergovernmental Agreement, which makes cooperation in the field of rare earths through a joint venture a possibility, a definite target of the two governments. What we are doing now is that the two entities which have been identified by each government - on our side Indian Rare Earths Limited and on the Japanese side Toyota Tsushu - to arrive at a commercial agreement so that they can start production. When you arrive at a commercial agreement you need to make decisions on issues like pricing, volume, etc. That is under negotiations right now. There is an accounting procedure which has to be gone through. Once that procedure is over, I think they should be able to start production. We were in fact told that on the Japanese side the plant is in fact going to be ready or it is already ready.

Q: Would you agree with the perception that Indo-Japan trade has failed to match the hype over the friendly relations between the two countries? For example, the two-way trade is just about 18 billion dollars and it has in fact fallen in the current financial year. Why is this happening? Your comments.

Foreign Secretary: I will ask the Ambassador to first start on the facts of the trade and then I will deal with the perception later.

Ambassador to Japan: I wonder how that perception came about because I think in one year it grew from about 13 million to 18 million dollars. So, it has not certainly been a fall. Maybe it is not growing as we would like it to, as our expectations are, but certainly it is on an upward trajectory.

Foreign Secretary: I will say that Prime Minister has repeatedly said and the Japanese Prime Minister agreed with him that 18 billion is really far below the potential of the two countries. I would not link it to hype about our relations. We need to deal with the reality of where our trade was ten years ago, where it is now, and where it is likely to go. We are focusing on where it is likely to go. We believe that there is tremendous potential for our trade to increase; and there are a number of areas in which we are working together. And we believe the investment-led trade growth will be a very important factor. We must remember that it was only in August 2011 that the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement was signed, and it is only a year and a half coming on to two. I think in the next few years you will see this full flowering of the potential of the CEPA. And when Japanese investment into India grows, you will see a concomitant growth in the trade relationship between the two countries. We have been assured again and again that a very large number of Japanese companies have now prioritized India as the area where they would like to invest.

I know that even two years ago India was identified as potentially the best country to invest. But today there is a critical mass of opinion growing in the offices of the CEOs, this is the feeling we got when Prime Minister addressed the Keidanren. We were sitting and talking to a large number of business people who said, no I think the time has come now. Perhaps they were waiting and watching to see the global situation, the evolution of our own policies. But I think they have now reached a decision that investing in India makes sense for Japan.

Q: Question for the Foreign Secretary and the Ambassador, on a completely separate track. There was the case in the Delhi High Court recently where they have instructed the Central Government to ascertain the location of Subhash Chandra Bose's ashes. I just wanted to check with the Ambassador if that is something that the Embassy is looking into. Are you looking into it? His ashes are supposed to be at a temple here in Tokyo. Anything on that at all since the court instructed the Central Government to figure out where the ashes are?

Foreign Secretary: This is an issue of great national importance and there is no underestimating how important that issue is. But we will have to await specific instructions. As you know, there is a long history to Netaji Subhash Chandra Bose's presence in this country, his activities in this country, and his ashes in this country, his memories.

Q: Sir, any timeline regarding acquisition of amphibious aeroplane?

Foreign Secretary: Let me be very clear. What we have agreed to is a setting up of a Joint Working Group to examine the potential of this aircraft, the possibilities of whether it can be used, whether it should be manufactured jointly. There are a number of issues which will have to be looked at. This is a very new proposal which has come to us. It needs to be fitted into a larger framework of how we proceed both, as I said this is a dual use, as a civilian project and as a defence project. We will have to study it. So, the Joint Working Group will go into issues like what is the capability, what will be the uses of this aircraft, can it be jointly produced, which agencies would use it, what would be the off take, a number of such related issues. It is early days yet but I think the fact is that this is an aircraft with very extraordinary potential. Given its long range, its ability to land and take off in very choppy seas, it is a technological achievement. So, we would certainly like to look at it.

Q: Japan has undertaken three important corridors, as you have mentioned. But most of them are lagging behind schedule. What is the reason behind it?

Foreign Secretary: The DFC West is on track.

Ambassador to Japan: I also agree. I do not think they are lagging behind schedule. The Dedicated Freight Corridor is on track. I think it should be ready by about March 2017, that is what we are told. And the DMIC also I think has perhaps reached the implementation phase because there have been lot of studies. The Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor actually is going to envelop a lot of existing Japanese investments in that area as well as build infrastructure. And I think the master plan has just been completed. So, I do not think there are delays.

Foreign Secretary: In fact when you talk of the DMIC, I wish we had brought Mr. Amitabh Kant who is the CEO of DMIC, with us. The size and scale of what is being sought to be achieved through the DMIC is really a game changer. It could transform the nature of industrial growth in that entire western section of India. Just to give you an example, if you look at the plans for Dholera which is in one segment of that corridor, I am told by some people who know, that it is larger than Shenzhen. I mean that is the scale on which this is being planned. So, this is going to be a long-term project, and it will take a certain amount of time. But when it comes through, it will be the biggest thing that has happened in terms of industrial development in western India.

Q: Sir, one question not related Japan. Is it correct that Mumbai police has contacted MEA to bring back Asad Rauf, umpire of Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: I have not heard about it but I have been out for the last two days. When I get back I will check it.

Q: Sir, it seems Japan has of late been concerned about aggressive stance of China. Today they also talked about how by force and might they are trying to change boundaries. Were these concerns shared in the course of last two days?

Foreign Secretary: I think when the Prime Minister said the Strategic and Global Partnership between India and Japan is in the interest not only of our two countries but in the interests of Asia, the Asia-Pacific region, and therefore, because of the importance of this region, to the larger world, I think we are talking in terms of building structures of stability. Obviously this means that we share a lot of interests, we share a lot of concerns, we share a lot of ideas about how to build a better architecture of security in our region.

Official Spokesperson: If there are no other questions, thank you very much.

313. Prime Minister's media statement after meeting the Prime Minister of Japan.

Tokyo, May 29, 2013.

Prime Minister Abe,
Members of the Media,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to return to Tokyo, a city where I have always found warmth, goodwill and hospitality whenever I have visited it over the past four decades. My wife and I were deeply honoured by the special gesture of Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress in hosting us earlier today. I also want to thank Prime Minister Abe for the excellent arrangements that have been made for our discussions and for his exceptional hospitality.

Prime Minister Abe and I had wide-ranging discussions over the past two days, characterized by a convergence that is fully consistent with our Global and Strategic Partnership. Our discussions were guided by the fundamental belief that at a time of global uncertainties, change and challenges, India and Japan are natural and indispensable partners for advancing prosperity in our two countries and for a peaceful, stable, cooperative and prosperous future for the Asia-Pacific and Indian Ocean regions.

The Joint Statement reflects our mutual understanding and the steps we are taking to advance our relationship. We attach particular importance to intensifying political dialogue and strategic consultations and progressively strengthening defence relations, including through naval exercises and collaboration in defence technology. Cooperation in high technology, space, energy security and rare earth minerals will also add rich content to our strategic partnership.

While continuing our development partnership, especially in the infrastructure sector in India, we will also strive to substantially expand the flow of trade and private investment.

We had a meeting of minds in our discussions on global and regional issues. We will seek reforms in the United Nations Security Council, an open, rule-based and balanced regional architecture and deeper regional economic integration and connectivity.

I also conveyed our good wishes and support for Japan's bid to host the 2020 Summer Olympics.

I am satisfied that not only is our strategic partnership on a strong foundation, but that we are truly moving forward in pursuit of the vision for which we have reached out to each other with so much resolve and intensity in the past decade.

314. Joint Statement on Prime Minister's visit to Japan: Strengthening the Strategic and Global Partnership between India and Japan beyond the 60th Anniversary of Diplomatic Relations.

Tokyo, May 29, 2013.

1. The Prime Minister of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, is currently on an Official Working Visit to Japan on 27-30 May 2013 for the Annual Summit of the Prime Ministers at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Japan, H.E. Mr. Shinzo Abe. The two Prime Ministers held extensive talks on bilateral, regional and global issues on 29 May 2013 in Tokyo.
2. Applauding the commemorative events held to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries in 2012, the two Prime Ministers reaffirmed that India and Japan, as the two largest democracies in Asia sharing such universal values as freedom, democracy and rule of law, enjoy very close and wide-ranging relations. They expressed their resolve to further consolidate and strengthen the Strategic and Global Partnership between India and Japan in the years ahead, taking into account changes in the strategic environment.

3. Prime Minister Abe expressed his appreciation for the invitation to Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress of Japan to visit India. The two Prime Ministers confirmed that the two governments would make necessary preparations and coordination with a view to realizing Their Majesties' visit as State Guests from the end of November to early December.
4. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at the steady growth of political exchanges, dialogue and policy coordination at all levels. They positively evaluated Ministerial-level annual dialogues and exchanges, particularly the Foreign Ministers' Strategic Dialogue and the Ministerial Level Economic Dialogue. The two Prime Ministers also noted the successful outcomes achieved during the "2 plus 2" dialogue, the Foreign Secretary level Dialogue, the Foreign Office Consultations, the Defence Policy Dialogue, the Trilateral Dialogue between India, Japan and the United States, as well as other key interactions on various areas including cyber, counter-terrorism and economic partnership. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the launch of the bilateral Maritime Affairs Dialogue, the first meeting of which was held on 29 January 2013 in Delhi.
5. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the expanding defence relations between the two countries based on the Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation between India and Japan. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction that the first bilateral exercise between the Indian Navy (IN) and the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force (JMSDF) was held in June 2012 off the coast of Japan and decided to conduct such exercises on a regular basis with increased frequency. They decided to establish a Joint Working Group (JWG) to explore modality for the cooperation on the US-2 amphibian aircraft.

6. Prime Minister Singh expressed his appreciation to the Government and people of Japan for their continued and unwavering support to India's development. Prime Minister Abe reaffirmed that Japan would continue its Official Development Assistance at a substantial level to encourage India's efforts towards social and economic development, including in the area of infrastructure and human resource development. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of the Exchange of Notes for yen loan totalling 71 billion yen for the "Mumbai Metro Line-III project", as well as the yen loan of the fiscal year 2012 totalling 353.106 billion yen for eight projects. Prime Minister Singh appreciated the pledge by Prime Minister Abe for the Campus Development Project of Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad (Phase 2) for 17.7 billion yen and the "Tamil Nadu Investment Promotion Programme" for 13 billion yen.
7. Noting that the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) has given a fillip to economic and trade relations, the two Prime Ministers stressed the importance of continued efforts to further enhance trade in goods and services as well as investments. In this context, they expressed satisfaction with the successful holding of the second meeting of the Joint Committee as well as a series of Sub-Committees.
8. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of the Agreement between India and Japan on Social Security in November 2012 and directed their relevant authorities in the governments to work towards its early entry into force. They expressed hope that this agreement would contribute to further accelerating bilateral activities of private sectors.
9. Prime Minister Singh expressed concern on the issue of import of Indian shrimp by Japan and hoped that this issue would be resolved soon.
10. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction with the progress in cooperation of creative industries and welcomed the successful launch of the Indian Design Mark developed by the India Design Council and the Japan Institute of Design Promotion.

11. The two Prime Ministers noted with satisfaction the progress in implementation of the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor (DFC). They expressed satisfaction that in Phase-I the procurement of civil works was at an advanced stage and that the Engineering Service Consultants for Phase-II were already in position. The two Prime Ministers also
12. expressed satisfaction with the signing of the first tranche of the Main Loan Agreement for Phase-II totalling approximately 136 billion yen.
13. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the progress made in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC) as a visionary India-Japan Strategic Partnership project which would enable India to access innovative, cutting edge technologies. The two leaders shared the view that all instruments of funding of the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC) and the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) including the Special Term for Economic Partnership (STEP) may be explored. They appreciated the formation of the DMIC Project Implementation Trust in India as well as the listing of possible projects for Japan's public and private financing as Japan's USD 4.5 billion facility decided during the DMIC Task Force meeting at Tokyo in October 2012. The two Prime Ministers also welcomed 26% equity participation of the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC) in the DMIC Development Corporation (DMICDC), and the dispatch of an expert from JICA and board members from JBIC to DMICDC. The two Prime Ministers reviewed the rapid progress made in absorbing next generation technologies through the Smart Community Projects and directed the relevant authorities to vigorously accelerate implementation of the seawater desalination project at Dahej, Gujarat, the Model Solar Project in Neemrana, Rajasthan, and the gas-fired independent power producer (IPP) project in Maharashtra. The two Prime Ministers also stressed on the early realization of other Smart

Community Projects and directed that all necessary measures be taken to provide solutions for provision of gas at reasonable rates and for electricity and environmental regulations so that each project moves ahead speedily as a symbol of India-Japan strategic partnership. Prime Minister Abe welcomed the relaxations of capital and financial regulations by India which could bring sustainable and stable economic growth in India by enhancing private sector investments and domestic production. The two Prime Ministers decided to continue consultations and work towards expeditious solutions to the remaining issues.

14. Recognizing the importance of development in the Chennai-Bengaluru areas, the two Prime Ministers underlined their commitment to reinforce their cooperation. Prime Minister Singh directed relevant authorities to accelerate the improvement of infrastructure such as ports, roads, bridges and industrial parks, as well as electricity and water supply, in Ennore, Chennai and adjoining areas and to monitor the progress utilizing the Tamil Nadu Investment Promotion Programme (TNIPP). They welcomed the outcome of the preliminary study conducted by JICA for a Comprehensive Integrated Master Plan of the region and the signing of the Terms of Reference (TORs) for the Master Plan for the Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor (CBIC). The two Prime Ministers instructed their relevant authorities to accelerate their efforts to develop the Master Plan by the end of fiscal year 2014.
15. Noting the importance of increasing Japanese investment and business in India for economic growth of both countries, the two Prime Ministers expressed their expectation to advance cooperation between the Ministry of Commerce and Industry of India and the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI) of Japan in the framework of India's "National Manufacturing Policy" in such areas as industrial human resource development and business environment improvement. The two Prime Ministers highly appreciated the achievements of the Visionary Leaders for Manufacturing (VLFM) programme as a valuable Japanese contribution to the development of the manufacturing sector in India and welcomed the development of this programme as the new project 'Champions of Societal Manufacturing' (CSM).

16. Prime Minister Singh noted Japan's interest in supporting the introduction of high speed railway system in India. Prime Minister Singh appreciated Japan's high level of expertise in designing and implementing High Speed Railway (Shinkansen) systems. Prime Minister Singh conveyed that India will plan such projects based on its infrastructure priorities, commercial viability and financial resources in India. The two Prime Ministers decided that the two sides will co-finance a joint feasibility study of High Speed Railway system on the Mumbai-Ahmedabad route.
17. The two Prime Ministers, recognising the importance of upgrading the speed of passenger trains on the existing Delhi-Mumbai route to 160-200 kmph (Semi-High Speed Railway system), welcomed the final report of the feasibility study undertaken with Japan's cooperation, and confirmed that further consultation between the two countries would be continued to draw up a road-map.
18. The two Prime Ministers shared the view that business environment improvement is significant in enhancing bilateral investment and trade which would drive growth of both countries. In this connection, the two Prime Ministers expressed their expectation that both countries would continue to work closely to achieve an enabling predictability and transparency in terms of business environment including tax administration which is conducive to India-Japan economic cooperation and greater flow of investment, technology and services between the two countries. The two Prime Ministers welcomed JETRO's matching activities later this year to strengthen business partnership and consolidate supply chains between the two countries.
19. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction with the successful outcomes of the 5th and 6th India-Japan Energy Dialogue and shared the importance of strengthening energy cooperation including in areas of renewable energy and energy conservation, Clean Coal Technologies (CCT), institutional issues as well as transmission and distribution system in power sector. Confirming to expand LNG cooperation through LNG Producer-Consumer Conference, the two Prime Ministers welcomed the progress of a joint study on pricing of LNG the result of which will be reported at the Conference. Prime Minister Singh expressed interest in cooperating with Japan in extraction of natural gas from methane hydrate deposits under the sea. They reaffirmed the importance of India-Japan Energy Forum to be held in India in September 2013 by JETRO, NEDO and TERI, including an exhibition to showcase Japanese technology in energy sector.

20. The two Prime Ministers appreciated the steady progress made in enhancing trade in high technology for mutual benefit and directed their relevant organizations to bring the dialogue in this field to a successful outcome.
21. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed the importance of civil nuclear cooperation between the two countries, while recognizing that nuclear safety is a priority for both Governments. In this context, they directed their officials to accelerate the negotiations of an Agreement for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy towards an early conclusion.
22. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of the Memorandum between the Department of Atomic Energy of India and the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI) of Japan on cooperation in rare earths industry in India. The two Prime Ministers shared the view that the commencement of commercial production of rare earths by Indian and Japanese enterprises should take place at the earliest.
23. The two Prime Ministers noted the importance of cooperation in the field of science and technology for development of national economies and improvement of socio-economic standards of life. They welcomed the progress made under Agreement between the Government of Japan and the Government of India on Co-operation in the Field of Science and Technology and noted with satisfaction the implementation of various science and technology activities. The two Prime Ministers also welcomed the steps being taken by both sides to further enhance science and technology cooperation between the Department of Science and Technology (DST), Ministry of Science and Technology of India and the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology (MEXT) of Japan. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the progress made so far in information and communications technology (ICT) and electronics sectors, including Ministerial level interaction resulting in creation of Japan Help Desk for facilitating cooperation in Electronic system Design and Manufacturing. They shared the common view to further enhance business tie-ups in private sectors and cooperation in cyber security as well as promotion of joint research and development (R&D) and bilateral cooperation in international standardization in the information and communications technology. Prime Minister Singh expressed hope to further enhance opportunities for Japanese industries in Electronic System Design and Manufacturing and Telecommunications in India and business opportunities for Indian ICT companies in Japan.

24. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their resolve to further promote people-to-people exchanges between the two countries, particularly youth exchange. In this connection, Prime Minister Abe expressed Japan's intention to invite approximately 1,200 youth from India to visit Japan through JENESYS 2.0 in order to promote interest towards Japan among the youth of India and to promote tourism between the two countries. Noting that there is a very high potential for growth of tourism traffic between the two countries, the two Prime Ministers underlined the importance of enhancing cooperation in the tourism sector and welcomed the recent progress concerning the bilateral cooperation in the field of tourism between the Ministry of Tourism of India and the Ministry of Land, Infrastructure, Transport and Tourism of Japan. The two Prime Ministers also welcomed recent measures taken by the two countries respectively relating to residence permits which would further enhance business and professional exchanges. Prime Minister Abe appreciated India's 'visa on arrival' scheme for Japanese tourists which would facilitate tourism from Japan to India.

25. The two Prime Ministers reconfirmed the importance of educational cooperation between the two countries. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at progress of cooperation for the Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad (IIT-H) and the Indian Institute of Information Technology, Design and Manufacturing in Jabalpur (IIITDM-J) with Japanese support. Prime Minister Singh appreciated Japan's intention to contribute to Nalanda University including through the yen loan for the improvement of road access to the University, as well as its support for Peace Studies in the University.
26. The two Prime Ministers noted on-going discussions on cooperation in urban development in the framework of the bilateral Joint Working Group, which is one of the important areas of bilateral cooperation in view of increasing urbanization in India.
27. The two Prime Ministers reiterated the commitment of India and Japan to the freedom of navigation and unimpeded commerce based on the principles of international law, including the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS). They noted ongoing bilateral exchanges on maritime security including counter-piracy activities, participation in bilateral and multilateral exercises as well as sharing of information, and in this context, welcomed the joint exercises between the Coast Guards of India and Japan held off Chennai in January 2012 and in Tokyo Bay in November 2012. They expressed their expectations to further promote bilateral and multilateral cooperation on maritime issues.
28. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their support for the East Asia Summit (EAS) as a forum for dialogue on broad strategic, political and economic issues of common interest and concern with the aim of promoting peace, stability and economic prosperity in East Asia. They acknowledged the significant role the EAS can play as a forum for building an open, inclusive and transparent architecture of regional cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region. The two Prime Ministers noted the importance of the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), the ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting

Plus (ADMM-Plus) along with the EAS in this regard. They welcomed the successful first meeting of the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum. The two Prime Ministers shared the importance of economic integration in the region and welcomed the holding of the first EAS Economic Ministers' Meeting as well as the launch of negotiations on Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP), followed by the successful first round of negotiations held in May 2013 in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei Darussalam. They also confirmed the 6th EAS Declaration on ASEAN Connectivity that includes consideration be given to the "Connectivity Master Plan Plus" in the future anticipating the Economic Research Institute of ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) to provide useful inputs towards this.

29. The two Prime Ministers renewed their intention to assist Afghanistan's efforts to become a stable, democratic and pluralistic state, adhering to rule of law. They welcomed the outcomes of the successful Tokyo Conference on Afghanistan in July 2012 for development and security assistance from Transition to Transformation Decade. Recognising that the main threat to Afghanistan's security and stability is terrorism, they emphasized the need for joint and concerted efforts and cooperation among regional and other countries to address the challenge of terrorism. The two Prime Ministers supported the efforts made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan for reconciliation process that is Afghan-led, inclusive and transparent.
30. The two Prime Ministers expressed concern over North Korea's continued development of its nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programmes, including its uranium enrichment activities. They urged North Korea to fully comply with its obligations under all relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions and its commitments under the 2005 Six Party Talks Joint Statement. They reiterated the importance of full implementation of the Resolutions by the international community. They urged that the abductions issue be resolved at the earliest as a humanitarian concern.

31. The two Prime Ministers condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purpose. They reiterated that no cause or grievance justifies terrorism, and the need to adopt a holistic approach that ensures zero tolerance towards terrorism. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at the meetings of the India-Japan Joint Working Group on Counter-terrorism and their cooperation in multilateral fora. They recognize the need to finalize and adopt the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism in the United Nations.
32. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their shared commitment to the total elimination of nuclear weapons. Prime Minister Abe stressed the importance of bringing into force the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) at an early date. Prime Minister Singh reiterated India's commitment to its unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. The two Prime Ministers also reaffirmed their commitment to working together for immediate commencement and an early conclusion of negotiations on a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty (FMCT). They also supported the strengthening of international cooperation to address the challenges of nuclear proliferation and nuclear terrorism. The two Prime Ministers recognised the importance of an effective national export control system conforming to the highest international standards. Prime Minister Abe recognized India's sound non-proliferation record. Both sides expressed their commitment to continue to work to prepare the ground for India to become a full member in the international export control regimes: the Nuclear Suppliers Group, the Missile Technology Control Regime, the Australia Group and the Wassenaar Arrangement.
33. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the outcome of the 18th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) in Doha in December 2012 and emphasized the need for all Parties in UNFCCC to work together in an open, transparent and inclusive manner for enhanced action under the Durban Platform. The two Prime Ministers stressed the need to strengthen bilateral and regional cooperation to promote sustainable development and environmentally friendly technologies including in actions for GHG emissions reductions, promotion of low-carbon technology, products and services, and welcomed the outcome of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) in June 2012 as reflected in “The Future We Want”, in particular, political commitment including the reaffirmation of the Rio principle made towards sustainable development and poverty eradication. Prime Minister Abe congratulated India on the successful outcome of the 11th meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD COP11) held in Hyderabad in October 2012, which was an important step toward achievement of Aichi Biodiversity Targets. The two leaders expressed their hope that the post-2015 development agenda will be focused on development, economic growth and poverty eradication and that the relevant intergovernmental process under the United Nations on this issue will finalize a balanced, equitable and pragmatic outcome.

34. The two Prime Ministers reemphasized their resolve to work towards early reform of the United Nations, including the expansion of the United Nations Security Council in both permanent and non-permanent categories, particularly through the efforts of the G-4 so as to reflect contemporary geopolitical realities. They confirmed that such reforms were necessary to make the Security Council more representative, effective, credible and responsive to the needs of its wider membership. They concurred in continuing to take an active part in the inter-governmental negotiations in the United Nations General Assembly supporting the Chair to achieve meaningful progress. In this regard, they also decided to strengthen their bilateral cooperation and consultation with other Member States. They decided to hold the 1st India-Japan Consultation on UN Issues, including United Nations Security Council reform, soon and confirmed to hold regular consultations twice a year, to further enhance cooperation between the two countries.

35. Prime Minister Singh expressed his appreciation for the warm welcome and hospitality of Prime Minister Abe and the Government of Japan. Prime Minister Singh extended an invitation to Prime Minister Abe for the next Annual Bilateral Summit in India at a mutually convenient date to be decided through diplomatic channels. Prime Minister Abe accepted the invitation with pleasure.

315. Prime Minister's speech at the banquet hosted by the Prime Minister of Japan.

Tokyo, May 29, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Abe and Madam Abe,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

I am deeply thankful to Prime Minister Abe for his warm and kind sentiments. My wife and I are delighted to be back in Tokyo. Over the last two days, we have been overwhelmed by the generous and gracious hospitality extended to us on this visit. This only reinforces my belief in the friendship that we have forged personally and the relationship that we are building steadily between our two countries.

Mr. Prime Minister, in the short time since your return to office, you have moved boldly and decisively to revive Japan's economy and strengthen its foreign relations. You have inspired confidence and optimism at home and won respect and admiration abroad. As far as India is concerned, in your earlier tenure as Prime Minister, you had outlined a bold new vision of relations between our two countries and you have remained steadfast in the pursuit of that vision and in your friendship for India.

Your Excellency,

Each visit to Japan brings home to me the strength and vitality of our relationship, which is based on ageless bonds of admiration and affection between our people.

In Swami Vivekananda's sermon to the Indian youth to go to Japan after his own visit in 1893 or in Okakura Kakuzo's discovery of India a hundred years ago, we see that when Indians and Japanese come together, they strike a deep chord in each other.

It is not only our spiritual and cultural affinities that bring us together, but also our shared commitment to democracy and international peace. The success of our partnership is vital for the prosperity of our people and indispensable for a future of peace and stability in the Asia Pacific region.

In pursuit of that vision, our two countries established a Strategic and Global Partnership more than six years ago. Since then, our political, economic and strategic dialogues have expanded. Mega infrastructure projects in India such as the Dedicated Freight Corridor and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor signify the scale of our ambitions and the enormous possibilities in our partnership. Our Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement opens new possibilities for our economic relations. Our growing security cooperation is now adding an important dimension to our partnership.

Regional economic integration and the creation of an open rule-based architecture that promotes security and stability are also goals that Japan and India share. India values its cooperation with Japan in the East Asia Summit and other regional forums. Together, we seek a new architecture for the United Nations Security Council.

Excellency, in the course of these two extraordinary days, we have reaffirmed the enduring value of our strategic partnership. We have resolved to expand our economic relations, anchored in increased trade and investment. And we have agreed to progressively deepen our security cooperation. This visit gives me the confidence that a very rich future awaits this extraordinary relationship between our two countries.

With those words, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in a toast to:

the health and well-being of His Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan and Mrs. Abe;

the continued prosperity and progress of the friendly people of Japan; and an expanded and enhanced India – Japan Strategic and Global Partnershi

316. Extracts from the Media interaction by the Prime Minister on-board his special flight from Bangkok to New Delhi.

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and gentlemen, I have had two successful visits - first to Japan at the invitation of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, and then to Bangkok at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Thailand.

I believe both of the statements that have been issued at the end of these meetings have been made available to you. So, therefore, I will not waste your time in recapitulating what is contained in these two statements. If there are any questions that you have to ask, I will be very happy to answer them.

Q-1: My question is pertaining to your Japan tour. You just described it successful but specifically in terms of forward movement made on civil nuclear deal, is there any possibility of getting it signed with Japan before 2014 Lok Sabha polls?

PM: There have been discussions with Japan and this visit marked a formal move in that direction. I am hopeful that before long we will be able to put our signatures to a civil nuclear energy agreement with Japan as well.

Q-2: How do you describe the progress made so far in respect of the Look East Policy especially in the backdrop of your bi-nation visit? What is the progress made so far and are there any emerging new issues to be focused under the policy?

PM: The Look East Policy of the Government of India is not a new development. When Mr. Narasimha Rao was our Prime Minister, I was the Finance Minister. We charted out the course of action to get closer to Southeast Asian countries particularly ASEAN. Since then this process has been moving forward. ASEAN countries are our strategic partners and there are enormous opportunities of expanding trade ties, expanding investment relations, expanding maritime cooperation, expanding the scope of trade and investment. And now we have reached a stage where large-scale flow of trade and investment is becoming a reality.

We have, for example, the Dedicated Freight Corridor where Japan is helping us; we have Mumbai-Delhi Industrial Corridor where also the Japanese help will be available; the Mumbai-Bangalore corridor also there is a great interest of East-Asian countries like Japan, Thailand and Malaysia. So I am hopeful that this Look East Policy of India is paying rich dividends and the results are going to improve as we move forward.

Q-3: There is a new Government, a new dispensation in Pakistan and there has been quite a bit of cordiality from the side of Mr. Sharif as far as you visiting Pakistan. Could you give us any guidance on whether you plan to visit there before the end of this year? Also, what sort of outcomes you are expecting before it can be, as you said in your own words, business-as-usual with Pakistan again?

PM: I rang up Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on the very first day when election results were coming out. I conveyed my congratulations to him and I reciprocated his sentiments that India-Pakistan relations should move forward. I also invited him to visit India, he also invited me to visit Pakistan. There is an invitation from the Government of Pakistan for me to visit Pakistan. There is no firm decision on either side. No dates have been fixed. But we would certainly like to have good neighbourly relations with Pakistan. It has been consistently our policy that in India-Pakistan relations we should deal with all the outstanding issues. We are committed to resolve them in a peaceful manner. That is also the sentiment which was reciprocated by Shri Nawaz Sharif.

A Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) was signed between India and Japan on 16th February 2011 and it came into force from 1st August, 2011. The salient features of India-Japan CEPA are as follows:

- The Agreement is most comprehensive of all the agreements concluded by India so far as it covers more than 90% of the bilateral trade between India and Japan. Japan and India have liberalized 92 % and 87.16% of tariff lines at six digits respectively.
- The agreement covers Goods, Services, Rules of Origin, Movement of Natural Persons, Telecom, Financial services, Investment, IPRs, Government Procurement, Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures, Customs Procedures and Cooperation in other Areas.
- India has offered only 17.4% of tariff lines for immediate reduction of tariff to zero duty, as against 87% of tariff lines offered by Japan for zero duty on 1st August, 2011.
- From Indian side Tariff will be brought to zero duty in 10 years on 66.32% of tariff lines to give sufficient time to Industry to adjust to the trade liberalization.
- India's exclusion list covers 12.84% of all tariff lines and 9.9% of volume of trade, as against Japan's exclusion list covering only 8% of all tariff lines and 3% volume of trade.
- CEPA provides for an institutional mechanism to encourage and improve Business/investment environment. India seeks greater investment by the Japanese companies.

Though there is no specific provision in the CEPA for reducing India's trade deficit with Japan, Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) promote stronger trade and commercial ties between participating countries, and open up opportunities for exporters and investors to expand their business in the tariff lines which are opened or in which tariff is reduced. The tariff lines are liberalized between the two countries thus giving impetus to trade which can bring down trade deficit between the countries.

318. India-Japan Joint Press Statement on currency swap.New Delhi, September 6, 2013.

1. The two Governments decided to expand the current bilateral currency swap arrangement from 15 to 50 billion US dollars. The two Governments expect that this will contribute to the stability of global financial markets including emerging economies.
2. The two Governments also reiterated the importance of continued reforms in financial and investment sectors for promoting stable and long term capital inflows into India.
3. The two Governments believe that these policy measures will strengthen the bilateral financial cooperation between Japan and India.

319. Joint Statement on the occasion of the 7th India-Japan Energy Dialogue between the Planning Commission of India and the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan.*New Delhi, September 12, 2013.

H.E. Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission of India and H.E. Mr. Toshimitsu Motegi, Minister of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan held the 7th meeting of the India-Japan Energy Dialogue on September 12, 2013 in New Delhi.

Senior officials of the relevant ministries and departments of both sides participated in the discussions. Both sides welcomed the progress achieved so far in the previous six rounds of the Energy Dialogue and in the deliberations of the various Working Groups. They appreciated the sector-specific discussions by experts of both sides and the progress made in various areas of cooperation.

During the dialogue, both sides recognized that it is important to hold the India-Japan Energy Dialogues annually, and that the issues of energy security and global environment are high priority challenges requiring continuous and effective action. In particular, to overcome challenges such as the global-scale changes in the energy demand structure seen in recent years and soaring energy prices, both sides confirmed to strengthen consumer-producer dialogue on LNG and deepen cooperation in energy conservation and renewable energy sectors. In addition, both sides decided to strengthen programs to further disseminate and expand model business projects that have thus far been implemented by both sides, and to enhance cooperation in upstream development of petroleum and natural gas.

Both sides recognized the need to promote industrial cooperation to expand bilateral energy cooperation on a commercial basis, based on the Joint Statement issued at the 6th India-Japan Energy Dialogue. Specifically, both sides welcomed the fact that New Energy and Industrial Technology Development Organization (NEDO) and The Energy and Resources Institute (TERI) held the Japan-India Energy Forum after making further improvements to the contents. Both sides also welcomed the fact that the forum contributed inputs to this dialogue. Both sides commended each other for conducting research on Smart Community and renewable energy, and for the forum's suggestions regarding the future of bilateral cooperation in these fields between India and Japan. Moreover, both sides welcomed the fact that NEDO and Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO) held the technology exhibition and convention in India to showcase Japanese technology in the energy sector for wider dissemination in India. Both sides welcomed the memorandum between the Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) and NEDO in the promotion of Japanese technologies that may help resolve energy issues in India.

The two sides engaged in discussions in the following areas:

1. Cooperation in energy efficiency and conservation

Both sides recognized that it is important for them to cooperate with each other in the energy efficiency and conservation sector, and welcomed that the meeting of Energy Efficiency and Conservation Working Group under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework was held in New Delhi on September 2, 2013. Both sides reaffirmed the need to strengthen bilateral relationship in the energy sector, focusing on energy conservation and environmental issues, and the need to expand the consultation process between the government and the private sector.

Both sides welcomed the progress, including organization of workshops, in cooperation among Bureau of Energy Efficiency (BEE), Petroleum Conservation Research Association (PCRA) and Energy Conservation Centre of Japan (ECCJ). Both sides also welcomed cooperation to spread energy conservation by using audit manual developed by PCRA and ECCJ for the textile industry.

1. Both sides confirmed to continue the capacity building program further for State-Designated Agencies (SDAs), Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs) and energy managers/energy auditors.
2. Both sides reconfirmed the importance of the projects carried out by the Regional Energy Efficiency Center (REEC) set up in Chennai with technical assistance from the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI of Japan) in promoting energy conservation at the working level in India. In addition, both sides welcomed the training of trainers at Dr. Ambedkar Institute of Productivity for hands-on training of energy-using equipment such as furnaces, motors, compressors, etc. which is being implemented as part of the capacity-building project by NEDO. Both sides also welcomed the fact that the facility continues to be utilized, with the Government of India taking the lead in implementing training for over 120 people.
3. Both sides confirmed that the construction work of the demonstration project for a sinter cooler waste heat recovery system, currently being implemented by NEDO based on the energy conservation cooperation of industries which consume large amounts of energy, would be definitely completed within this fiscal year, although there has been a significant delay in the progress. Both sides also welcomed the achievements of the demonstration project utilizing a coke dry quenching facility, and the demonstration project for cement exhaust heat recovery, both of which were implemented by NEDO, and confirmed their continued cooperation in promoting those projects.

4. Both sides decided to share information in the sectors where consumption of energy has been growing in recent years, such as steel, cement, machine tools, inverter air conditioners and transport, including in relation to SMEs. In addition, based on the fact that demand for energy is increasing in the transport sector in line with India's economic growth, both sides decided to explore the possibility of further cooperation in the said area. Both sides welcomed the implementation of further public-private partnership between Japan and India based on the customized list of 17 Japanese energy conservation technologies in iron and steel sector, which was prepared in the Public and Private Collaborative Meeting between the Indian and Japanese Iron and Steel Industry after its discussion for about two years.
5. Both sides welcomed the exchange of opinions regarding the Joint Crediting Mechanism (JCM) since the 6th India - Japan Energy Dialogue held on 10th October, 2012. Both sides shared the view to continue consultations regarding the JCM.
6. The Japanese side commended India's initiatives to promote energy conservation such as the implementation of the Perform, Achieve and Trade (PAT) scheme and National Manufacturing Policy. To ensure the effective and efficient implementation of these initiatives, both sides acknowledged the importance of further cooperation. From this point of view, especially regarding the areas of steel, cement, machine tools, transportation, and inverter air conditioners, both sides confirmed their intentions to share information and exchange views on a regular basis through the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Working Group under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue and various research projects. They also confirmed their intentions to discuss challenges in promoting advanced energy-saving technologies and actions to be taken to address the challenges.
7. Both sides confirmed the importance of conducting vigorous activities under the International Partnership for Energy Efficiency Cooperation (IPEEC) framework. In this light, they praised the activities of Global Superior Energy Performance Partnership (GSEP) with the aim of promoting best practices and spreading high-efficient and low-carbon technologies in the industrial sectors (steel, cement and power) under public-private partnership. Both sides will continue to collaborate and aim to further expand its activities.

Cooperation in renewable energy

8. Both sides recognized that bilateral cooperation is important in the renewable energy sector. They welcomed the fact that a meeting of the Working Group on Renewable Energy, established under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework, was held on July 23, 2013 in Tokyo.
9. Both sides welcomed the smart community projects in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC) that utilize Japan's environmental system technologies and IT technologies such as solar power, smart grids, smart urban transportation, as well as water management, recycling and treatment in order to develop next-generation energy infrastructure, noting that it is important, among other things, from an energy perspective. Both sides confirmed that all necessary steps will be taken by the Indian side as well as the Japanese side for an early realization of the demonstration project of the micro-grid system using large-scale photovoltaic power generation in Neemrana Industrial Park in the state of Rajasthan and its related cutting-edge technologies from Japan under the memorandum signed in April 2012 among the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy, the Department of Economic Affairs of the Ministry of Finance, and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor Development Corporation and NEDO. Both sides will study ways to disseminate these technologies widely throughout India.
10. Both sides welcomed the feasibility study by NEDO to promote greening of the telecommunication towers in India by installing a photovoltaic system, lithium ion batteries and an energy management system. Both sides confirmed the mutual cooperation for an early commencement of the demonstration.

The Indian side confirmed to accelerate working for an early conclusion of the memorandum among the relevant Indian and Japanese agencies for the purpose of implementing the demonstration project. Both sides welcomed the National Solar Mission launched by the Government of India, focusing on building a system for generating 22 GW of solar energy by the year 2022, and decided to study the possibility of contribution to be made by technologies and products through mutual cooperation. Both sides also welcomed the joint research program towards energy access improvement in non-electrified areas by introducing micro hydroelectric generation facilities.

11. The Japanese side commended India's initiatives to implement the use of renewable energy such as the Waste to Energy and the "Green Energy Corridor" as well as to develop smart grid. The Indian side acknowledged the support of NEDO and Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) in the field of renewable energy. From the perspective of ensuring the stable supply of power and the significant increase in renewable energy in India, both sides confirmed their intentions to enhance cooperation in smartening the power transmission and distribution system.
12. For the purpose of promoting the use of renewable energy, which will become more important in the future, both sides confirmed their intentions to cooperate in establishing appropriate investment environment including financing. Moreover, both sides confirmed that they will actively utilize private-sector vitality and know-how, etc., through cooperation with such organizations as the Japanese Business Alliance for Smart Energy Worldwide (JASE-W) and CII. As a specific plan for cooperation with the private sector, both sides confirmed that they will constitute a public-private round table with a particular focus on enhanced introduction of renewable energy and smart grid development, and hold the first meeting by the end of 2013. Both sides also welcomed the exchange of contact information to facilitate private sector cooperation.

Cooperation in electricity

13. Both sides recognized that bilateral cooperation is important in the electricity sector. Both sides welcomed the fact that a meeting of the Working Group on Electricity, established under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework, was held on August 23, 2013 in New Delhi.
14. Both sides recognized that it is important and beneficial to closely collaborate in the development of infrastructure in the electricity and energy sector such as deployment of high-efficiency coal-fired power generation, pumped-storage power generation, electrical power transmission and distribution systems in order to meet the rapid increase in power demand, and promote sustainable economic growth taking environmental issues into consideration.
15. Both sides recognized that coal fired-power plants remain as an important power source in India. Both sides also welcomed the fact that the Japan Coal Energy Center (JCOAL) performed a diagnosis of and made a proposal for the renovation and replacement of equipment and facilities of seven sites (Ramabundam and Dr. Narla Tata Rao in Andhra Pradesh, Wanakbori in Gujarat, Kahalgaon in Bihar, Badarpur in NCT Delhi, Unchahar in Uttar Pradesh, and Durgapur in West Bengal) from fiscal year 2010 to fiscal year 2012, and that JICA also conducted the same for four sites (Parli and Bhusawal in Maharashtra, Satpura in Madhya Pradesh, and Obra in Uttar Pradesh) in fiscal year 2012 in order to improve the efficiency of the plants and environment in India, and the implementation of follow-ups.
16. Both sides welcomed the plan that JCOAL will invite Indian experts to Japan in fiscal year 2013 in order to promote the introduction of Super Critical and Ultra Super Critical coal power generation in India. Furthermore, both sides welcomed the completion of study pertaining to pumped-storage power generation in Maharashtra by JICA last year, confirming that they will collaborate in the development of pumped-storage power generation in India.

17. Both sides confirmed that they will discuss technical aspects of Grid Stabilization project and Green Energy Corridors.

Cooperation in coal

18. Both sides recognized that bilateral cooperation is important in the coal sector. Both sides welcomed the fact that a meeting of the Working Group on Coal, established under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework, was held on August 22, 2013 in New Delhi.
19. Both sides recognized that it is important and beneficial to closely collaborate in the coal sector such as the implementation of coal washery technology, the promotion of high-efficiency use of low rank coal and the implementation of communication system for the purpose of securing safety in a coal mine in order to meet the rapid increase in coal demand, and promote sustainable economic growth taking environmental issues into consideration.
20. Both sides expressed their strong expectation that the commercial-scale demonstration project by NEDO aiming to reduce ash content of coal in India using highly efficient coal washery technology at Angul, Talcher, Odisha, would be completed in 2013, although there has been a significant delay in the progress, and that said technology would be widely deployed in India. Both sides also welcomed the exchange of technology pertaining to coal washery technology through the invitation of Indian experts to Japan, which has been continuously conducted by JCOAL since 2001.
21. Both sides welcomed the smooth implementation of a feasibility study by NEDO concerning a project that combines Upgraded Brown Coal (UBC) technologies using Indian lignite with Ultra Super Critical (USC) coal power generation technologies. They also welcomed the continuous examination among the participants for the purpose of implementing the project after the completion of said feasibility study.

22. Both sides welcomed the commencement of the examination among the persons concerned regarding the possibility of cooperation in the communication system in a coal mine and the centralized monitoring system that Indian side requested.

Cooperation in petroleum and natural gas

23. Both sides recognized that bilateral cooperation is important in the petroleum and natural gas sectors, and welcomed the fact that a meeting of the Petroleum and Natural Gas Working Group, established under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework, was held on September 2, 2013.
24. Both sides confirmed that Japan, the world's largest consumer of LNG, and India, a country where large increases in consumption are anticipated in the future, would cooperate through, inter alia, participation in the LNG Producer-Consumer Conference, to ensure the stable and competitively priced supply of LNG. Both sides especially welcomed the issuance of the joint statement on the "Joint Study on Pricing of LNG in the Asia Pacific Market" on September 9, 2013, by India and Japan.
25. Both sides confirmed that they would strengthen their cooperative relationship in upstream development of petroleum and natural gas. Both sides confirmed to explore possibilities of collaboration in exploration and production activities in India and in third countries and procurement of LNG. Both sides will begin ad hoc meetings by the end of 2013, to discuss actual steps to concretize and realize joint exploration and production and joint procurement of LNG.
26. Both sides also confirmed to continue cooperation in the study of Indian offshore geo-scientific data for delineation of gas hydrates, to explore further cooperation in gas hydrates research and development and technical information exchange, which would support India's efforts to set up a Gas Hydrates Research Centre in India.

27. Both sides reconfirmed to continue to collaborate and jointly work in the field of fuel conservation. In this regard, through the renewed memorandum between PCRA and ECCJ, both sides also confirmed the continuation of cooperation in the field of fuel economy in transport sector through eco-driving programmes.

Cooperation in nuclear energy

28. Both sides reaffirmed that bilateral cooperation is important in civil nuclear energy sector. Both sides welcomed the fact that a meeting of the Nuclear Energy Working Group, established under the India-Japan Energy Dialogue framework, was held on September 10, 2013 and information on current nuclear energy policies of both sides were exchanged.
29. Based on the experience of the accident at the Fukushima Daiichi Nuclear Power Station of Tokyo Electric Power Company (TEPCO) and the lessons learned from it, both sides reconfirmed the need to cooperate in enhancing the safety of nuclear power plants.
30. Both sides reaffirmed the importance of an early conclusion of the negotiations of an Agreement for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, taking into account the joint statement of May 29, 2013 between the two Prime Ministers.

Cooperation in the Energy Sector in the international arena

31. Both sides recognized the need to promote energy cooperation in the East Asia Summit Energy Ministers Meeting (EAS EMM) as well as to demonstrate leadership for enhancing energy security in East Asia. Moreover, both sides praised the research study on the strategic usage of coal through Clean Coal Technologies and the optimization of the electric power infrastructure, etc., by the Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA), which supports the enhancement of energy cooperation in EAS EMM.

32. Both sides expressed hope that progress would be made in discussion on energy security and improvement of the market among countries with large energy consumption at the IEA Governing Board at Ministerial Level to be held in November 2013.
33. Both sides stressed that bilateral cooperation in the framework of India-Japan Energy Dialogue should not be limited to the above-mentioned activities, and such cooperation should be further deepened. Both sides decided to hold the 8th India-Japan Energy Dialogue in Japan at a mutually convenient time in 2014.

New Delhi

September 12, 2013

(For the Planning Commission of India)

Montek Singh Ahluwalia (Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission of India)

(For the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan)

Toshimitsu Motegi (Minister of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan)

320. Media Statements and Joint Media Interaction after Seventh India-Japan Energy Dialogue in New Delhi (12 September 2013).

New Delhi, September 13, 2013.

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam H. Bambawale): We now go into a press conference. I would first request Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. Ahluwalia, to make his opening statement to the media.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission (Shri Montek Singh Ahluwalia): I have had a very fruitful discussion with His Excellency Mr. Motegi on our cooperation with Japan in the energy sector.

In the seventh round of the high-level Energy Dialogue, we reviewed progress in energy cooperation since the time the last dialogue held in October, 2012, and identified new areas and new approaches for future cooperation.

Energy cooperation has emerged as an integral part of our expanding global and strategic partnership with Japan. We want to build a mutually beneficial partnership with Japan in areas of capacity building, exchange of best practices, and development of technologies to enhance energy efficiency, reduce emissions and address concerns of energy security, especially in the area of LNG.

Last year, I had proposed that Japan hold an exhibition in India in 2013 to exhibit new technologies in the energy sector. I am very happy that such an exhibition is being held in Greater Noida from today till the 14th of September to exhibit new environment-friendly technologies from Japan. I hope this will give an opportunity to Indian companies interested in these areas to interact with potential Japanese counterparts.

At the last meeting of the Energy Dialogue, I had also suggested a joint study of LNG imports and their pricing in Asia Pacific. We have done such a study and its report was presented at the recently held Second LNG Producer-Consumer Conference in Tokyo.

I have suggested to Minister Motegi that India and Japan jointly participate in planning and execution of gas hydrate expeditions and research programmes related to exploration and exploitation of gas hydrates. We look forward to receiving Japanese technical expertise in setting up R&D facilities in gas hydrates in India.

We are working with the Japanese side in areas like combining Upgraded Brown Coal technologies, using Indian lignite with ultra supercritical coal power generation technologies, and joint R&D in renewable energy sectors, notably in the use of large-scale photovoltaic power generation. These are projects with a lot of potential benefits to us.

We greatly appreciate Japan's assistance to train officials from our energy conservation authorities, and hope to expand the scope of energy cooperation by taking up more joint development projects.

I am greatly satisfied with productive and forward-looking discussions in this room with the team led by Minister Motegi. I look forward to continuing this important dialogue with Japan.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I now request His Excellency Minister Motegi from Japan to make his media statement.

Japanese Minister for Economy, Trade and Industry (Mr. Toshimitsu Motegi): At today's 7th India-Japan Energy Dialogue, we were able to have a very productive and constructive discussion together with Deputy Chairman Ahluwalia ... (Inaudible)... between the two leaders at the last May summit meeting between Prime Minister Abe and Prime Minister Singh where they called for enhancing cooperation in the field of energy.

This we believe that we have been able to set ... (Inaudible)... this scheme where the public and private sectors of both countries can cooperate in the field of energy. And as requested from the Indian side we have organized this exhibition where we are showcasing Japan's technology as well as providing opportunities for business ... (Inaudible)...

In the field of renewable energy, in order to study the possibilities of enhancing the investment environment in India and new renewable energy promotion, India-Japan Public-Private Round Table will be established, and the first meeting is due to be held by the end of this year.

At today's meeting we were able to look in to the six areas where the two countries are cooperating: (1) Energy conservation, (2) Renewable energy, (3) Electricity, (4) Coal, (5) Oil and natural gas, and (6) Nuclear energy. And we were able to hear the report on the progress being made at the respective Working Groups. And I believe that we were able to have a very significant ... (Inaudible)... discussion.

In the area of energy conservation, we have talked about the initiatives presented in India to realize energy conservation in particular in the fields of steel, cement, machine tools amongst others. We have agreed that we will carry out joint responsive research between the two countries in order to disseminate the outstanding energy community technologies that are available to us in Japan. And Japan will also cooperate in the area of human resources development.

In regard to ...(Inaudible)... we have confirmed that both countries will continue their cooperation in this area. To be more specific, we have decided that both countries will jointly study and start to study, about the end of the year, what specific measures can be done to collaborate in the upstream development and LNG procurement. We have also confirmed that we would work to expand collaboration amongst the other consuming nations of LNG.

In addition, we were able to look into other initiatives for cooperation mainly the ultra supercritical power generation, engineers retraining, to invite engineers to Japan to undergo training. Also we will be carrying out technical cooperation for the power grid stabilization in India as well as assisting India in the coal upgrading. We have also discussed on nuclear energy amongst other many topics.

Also, we have talked that we would like to continue very much on this energy dialogue. We have conveyed this point and also we discussed that we are sure to, prior to the India-Japan Summit meeting, trying to put together the outcome of our Energy Dialogue so that we can then put these outcomes of deliverables to leaders.

Another point we discussed was that the next meeting should be held in Tokyo, and we would like to invite His Excellency Deputy Chairman to Tokyo to attend the meeting.

Thank you.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): The Ministers have agreed to take one question each, one from the Indian media and one from the Japanese media.

Q (Press Trust of India): My question is to both the dignitaries. How soon do you see the inking of civil nuclear energy pact between India and Japan given the fact that PM's of both the countries have directed their officials during the main meeting to do so?

Japanese Minister for Economy, Trade and Industry: We have agreed that we will make efforts so that we can conclude the agreement between our two countries as soon as possible. There are several outstanding issues that we made and we have said that we will have these issues discussed mainly at the working groups and others so that we can accelerate this effort. .

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I endorse entirely what Minister Motegi has said. This is a very important area of our collaboration but we are not fixing deadlines to it. We are making progress and let us see how it goes. It is a very complex and complex set of issues that have to be addressed.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): The next question will be from the member of the Japanese media. If there is anyone from the Japanese side who would like to ask question, please do raise your hand.

If there is no one from the Japanese media, I see the hand of the correspondent from UNI of India.

Q (United News of India): My question is also to both Mr. Ahluwalia and the Japanese Minister.

You said there are several outstanding issues in the agreement that you will be signing for nuclear cooperation. Could you please elaborate a bit what these outstanding issues are?

Japanese Minister for Economy, Trade and Industry: As the Deputy Chairman Ahluwalia has mentioned, this is a very important issue and yet there are various difficulties that still exist. So, this issue is still being discussed within the Working Group and I think that it would not wise for me to specify what specific outstanding issues exist because this would be misleading. Therefore, I would like to refrain from making any specific comments about that.

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: I agree with that and I just want to say that a lot of progress has been made but whenever you have complex negotiations they are not over until they are over; and it is not useful to sort of indicate when we are there, what exactly we have discussed. But progress is being made.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I can see that the representative of Kyodo news here in Delhi has his hand up. So, I would request him to ask his question.

Q (Kyodo News): My question is about the cooperation in development of oil and energy by both countries. Please clarify more about this issue?

Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission: If you are referring to petroleum and energy that's the whole area that we have discussed.

Actually the declaration that we have just signed gives a very detailed account of the collaboration and cooperation. And I am very pleased that in everyone one of these areas since this dialogue began, we have made a lot of progress and certainly from India's point of view we have received a lot of collaboration and support from Japan in technical assistance, in many areas which are crucial for rational management of India's energy resources.

I refer you to the detailed statement you will find quite a lot and it's all detailed sector by sector coal, thermal, power, petroleum, nuclear all of that resources and energy efficiency which is also very important.

Japanese Minister for Economy, Trade and Industry: Deputy Chairman has covered most of what I wanted to say about working groups. And the six areas that I earlier mentioned at the beginning are working hard to ... (Inaudible)... and to try and make progress. We have seen quite a bit of progress not only limited to oil, upstream development, but there is LNG procurement and various other areas where we are cooperating and we would like to continue to cooperate.

At the same time we have discussed that our cooperation should not be limited to just the two countries but the two countries should take the lead so that this cooperation can be expanded to all of Asia.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Thank you very much ladies and gentleman of the media. With that we bring this press conference to an end.

Thank you so much

321. Press Release on the Prime Minister's Special Envoy Dr. Ashwani Kumar's visits Tokyo.

Tokyo, September 18, 2013.

India and Japan pledged to further deepen their Strategic and Global Partnership as the two countries prepare for the upcoming visits to India of Their Majesties Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko.

In a meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe in Tokyo this afternoon, Prime Minister's Special Envoy Dr. Ashwani Kumar said that India is honored and privileged to welcome Their Majesties, which would be the first ever visit by the Japanese Emperor and Empress to India. The people of India looked forward to the Imperial visit later this year and the Government of India is making all possible arrangements in ensuring a memorable and productive visit by Their Majesties, he added.

Dr. Kumar also reiterated the invitation extended to Prime Minister Abe to visit India for the annual summit. He said, the summit between the two Prime Ministers would help not only consolidate the India-Japan strategic partnership but also expand bilateral cooperation and signal the shared determination of the two countries to work for peace, progress and prosperity in the region and the world at large.

Echoing the sentiments, Prime Minister Abe referred to the landmark visit of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to Japan in May 2013 and said that keeping up the momentum of bilateral exchanges would be important for taking forward the India-Japan partnership to even greater heights. He called for the bilateral economic engagement to be further intensified to add value to the Strategic and Global Partnership. To give further impetus to Japanese business, he will be accompanied by a high-level business delegation during his next visit to India. Referring to the India-Japan Civil Nuclear Cooperation agreement, Prime Minister Abe assured Dr. Kumar that the process of negotiations towards resolution of all outstanding issues will be taken forward. Recalling his past visits to India, he reiterated the need for the two nations to work together for global peace and prosperity, and conveyed his greetings to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

Dr. Kumar said that the multi-dimensional and multi-faceted India-Japan engagement is the culmination of the efforts of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the Japanese leadership, and particularly the recent efforts of Prime Minister Abe. He said India-Japan strategic engagement is unique inasmuch as it would enable both countries to meet common global challenges including piracy, maritime security, terrorism, cyber security and environmental change. He assured to facilitate Japanese investments to India and address specific issues having an impact on these investments. He said that necessary steps in this regard have been initiated at the highest level in the Government. Indian investment in the infrastructure sector over the next five years is projected at US$ 1 trillion in which Japanese companies are expected to play a major role.

322. Press Release on the visit of the Prime Minister's Special Envoy for Japan Dr. Ashwani Kumar to Tokyo.

New Delhi, September 19, 2013.

India and Japan pledged to take forward the ongoing negotiations for an early conclusion of the Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement. In a meeting today in Tokyo with Prime Minister's Special Envoy for Japan Dr. Ashwani Kumar, Japanese Foreign Minister Fumio Kishida expressed his confidence that the proposed agreement can be concluded soon with the support of the people of both countries.

The meeting with Foreign Minister Kishida also provided an opportunity for a high level review of the India-Japan strategic and global partnership as the two countries prepare for the visit of Their Imperial Majesties and the subsequent visit of Prime Minister Abe for the Annual Summit. The two leaders expressed full support for further deepening the unique multi-faceted relationship between India and Japan. Both sides agreed that closer economic cooperation between India and Japan was essential for Asia's continuing growth. In this context, they welcomed the recent decision to expand the bilateral currency swap arrangement to US$ 50 billion, the continuing progress on the Delhi-Mumbai Freight Corridor and Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor projects and the discussions on introducing a high-speed railway system in India. Dr. Kumar also referred to the progress in bilateral defence and security cooperation including in the areas of maritime security, anti-piracy and counter-terrorism.

Continuing his high-level engagements in Tokyo following his call on Prime Minister Abe yesterday, Dr. Ashwani Kumar also met a group of Japanese Parliamentarians led by Katsuyuki Kawai, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Diet. The parliamentarians who had visited India in August 2013 where they were received by Dr. Ashwani Kumar, were greatly appreciative of the arrangements made during their visit to Delhi, Mumbai and Bangalore and described it as a great learning experience. Dr. Kumar stressed on the importance of more Japanese companies entering the dynamic Indian market and taking advantage of the DFC and DMIC projects in the infrastructure sectors. In this context, both sides agreed on the necessity of expediting the bilateral Agreement on Social Security which would greatly benefit Japanese and Indian companies working in each other's country.

Dr. Ashwani Kumar today concludes his 3-day visit to Tokyo to carry out his mandate in his capacity as the Special Envoy of the Prime Minister to maintain the momentum of high-level exchanges with Japan and prepare for the visits of Their Majesties and Prime Minister Abe.

323. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson, Chief of Protocol and Director (East Asia) on the State visit of Emperor and Empress of Japan to India.

New Delhi, November 28, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. As you are all aware, one of the biggest moments in terms of our diplomatic engagement this year will begin later during the week and that is the visit of the Emperor and Empress of Japan to India from the 30th November.

For many of us this is a first in many ways. It is a first in the sense that it is the first time that the Emperor and Empress of Japan are coming to India. It is also a first that India has hosted the same two dignitaries on a state visit after a lapse of fifty years. It has never happened before in the history of independent India.

As you are all aware of the importance that we place on this visit, I have requested our Chief of Protocol who is here with us, Ms. Ruchira Kamboj, to come along and explain to you the efforts that we have made to ensure the success of this visit. We also have with us, for many of you an old friend, Director (East Asia) Mr. Shambhu Kumaran who is right now handling the visit. He will respond to any questions that you may have on the visit other than the protocol aspects.

I will now ask the Chief of Protocol to brief you. Then if you have any questions for her on her briefing or for Director (East Asia), they will both be willing to answer. As usual, we will open the floor for any questions that you may have on other issues. With that I would request the Chief of Protocol to make her opening remarks.

Chief of Protocol (Ms Ruchira Kamboj): Thank you Akbar and good afternoon everybody. I am delighted to be here and to brief you on the programme elements of this most significant visit.

To begin from the very beginning, Their Majesties will arrive on the 30th of November. It is a six-day visit in all. So, it is a longish visit. They will be arriving on the 30th of November which is a Saturday. Then moving on to Sunday 1st December, there would be some private time where they will be taking a walk in Lodhi Garden.

On the 2nd of December, which is Monday the main day of engagement, there would be the ceremonial welcome for Their Majesties at Rashtrapati Bhavan. Thereafter, Their Majesties would pay their respects at Raj Ghat. After Raj Ghat they would proceed for a meeting with the Prime Minister at Hyderabad House.

Following that there are a couple of private engagements, a visit to the Jawaharlal Nehru University. And finally that day the main event, the most significant event, is the meeting with the President followed by the customary banquet, which is very traditional for a state visit, followed by the farewell tete-a-tete.

The next day, that is Tuesday 3rd December, there would be a visit to the India International Centre. This is quite significant also because Their Majesties had laid the foundation stone sixty years ago. Thereafter, their next two engagements are two calls on at the hotel, the first by the Leader of the Opposition in the Lok Sabha and the second by the Vice-President of India. Thereafter, that day there is some time where there will be some private engagements on their part.

And then we move on to Wednesday, 4th December. Fourth December is the day when they will emplane for Chennai. It is a two-city visit – Delhi and Chennai. So, on the 4th in the morning they will leave for Chennai. Their main engagement that day will be to visit the Kalakshetra Foundation.

The next day, Thursday 5th December, which is effectively their last day in India, they would be visiting the Children's Park at the Guindy National Park in Chennai. Then of course there will be the main meeting, the meeting with the Governor followed by a lunch that will be hosted by the Governor in honour of Their Majesties.

After the lunch and some downtime, they will visit the Spastic Society of Tamil Nadu, and round up their visit with a couple of private engagements in the hotel where they will meet representatives of Japanese expatriates in Chennai. They would be emplaning for Tokyo on the night of 5th December. So, altogether it is a six-day visit.

Needless to add as I round up that this is a state visit and a visit I think on which the Ministry of External Affairs has worked extremely hard, and now we are much looking forward to welcoming Their Majesties to India.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Before we open the floor for questions, since all of you represent media organisations we just like to tell you for example, if any of you are interested you can contact our colleagues, we have been able to dig out footage and photographs of their last visit and these are available with us. If any of you would like to know what were the places they visited, what were the photographs, these are all available. We are also showcasing them on our website. Some of you may have seen that on a day-to-day basis we put in different video footage and photograph because it is also a visit of nostalgia as far as India hosting the same dignitaries who have been here 50 years ago. We have never had that occasion.

With those words I now open the floor for questions that you may want to ask on anything.

Q: Who is going to the Palam airport to welcome the Emperor? Is Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh also going?

Chief of Protocol: We will have a complement of senior officials at the airport which is the standard norm for a state visit. There will be a Minister Accompanying who will also be at the airport. And for this particular visit the Minister Accompanying is the External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid.

As far as the Prime Minister's presence at the airport is concerned, which point you have raised, matters are still under finalisation. These aspects are being finalised. But yes there might be a possibility of this. But I should also hasten to add in that vein that if this happens, this will not be the first time. There have been a couple of visits, the most notable in the recent past being that of President Obama where the Prime Minister has gone to the airport to receive a distinguished visitor. So, let us wait and see.

Official Spokesperson: Just to add to what she said, all that we have said is indicative that we are placing the utmost importance on this visit, and the highest importance that India can extend. So, please be certain that every aspect of protocol and importance will be given at every level to ensure that this will be a memorable visit.

Q: Actually I would like to know whether there is any special thing about choosing Chennai for visit.

Chief of Protocol: As far as Chennai is concerned, before any visit there are lots of rounds of negotiations with the country's Embassy based in New Delhi. Here I would like to tell you that it was the choice of the Japanese. The Japanese decided that they would like to take Their Majesties to Chennai for the second leg of the visit.

Q: This visit is also about the parameters of our relationship, the fact that there is a China angle here. Can you give us something about the way defence ties are progressing and what is it that we are looking at?

Director (East Asia) (Shri Shambhu S. Kumaran): I think one must bear in mind very clearly that this visit from the Japanese side is a visit that is very high in symbolism. And the practice in Japan is for the Emperor to be studiously away from political issues and contemporary issues, and we would respect the Japanese sentiments on this. The nature of the visit is that it is a highly symbolic visit. The Japanese Emperor is the symbol of the Japanese state and the people. Essentially the way in which the discussions would carry on would, therefore, focus on the extraordinary maturity of the relationship over the past several decades.

As you know, we celebrated last year the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations. We have a very strong popular connectivity in terms of spirituality, culture, people-to-people exchanges. So, this visit to a certain degree is a manifestation of that aspect of the relationship rather than getting into the points that you had mentioned.

Q: This meeting between the representatives of the Japanese expatriates and the Emperor, is it a courtesy call or is it on the request of the representatives of the Japanese expatriates that this has been planned?

Chief of Protocol: This particular meeting that you are talking about has been organised completely by the Japanese side. This is their programme and they have led on this. So, this is not part of the programme that MEA has led on. This is their programme.

Official Spokesperson: And it is normal for Heads of Government or Heads of State when they go out to have this sort of thing. We also do that regularly.

Director (East Asia): If I may add, I think in terms of Chennai as you know there is a very large concentration of Japanese expatriates there. So, we suspect that it may also have been a factor in deciding to visit Chennai.

Q: I hear that Mr. Salman Khurshid has met or seen the Japanese Emperor when he came here in 1961. Is it true?

Official Spokesperson: I did ask the Minister this question and he did indicate that his grandfather was the Governor of Bihar at that stage. And the Crown Prince and the Crown Princess did visit Nalanda. He said that he was I think seven years old at that stage. He has very fond memories of that. And he has specifically requested that we collect as many photos of their visit to Patna. And we have been able to collect those photos and hand them over to the Minister who is very nostalgic and remembers this with great fondness.

Q: What is our understanding of why the Emperor has chosen to visit India now? I am asking this because the invitation from India to the Emperor had apparently been pending for more than ten years now, and such visits take place apparently only at the advice of the Japanese Cabinet. Could you provide us with some understanding?

Director (East Asia): Of course we are deeply honoured that he has chosen to visit us and it would be, I would say, impolitic for us to speak as to why he chose to visit us now. Our invitation, as you correctly pointed out, has been a longstanding one. We have invited him repeatedly. I think we are looking at this visit, as I mentioned earlier, as a reflection of the depth and maturity of the relationship and I do not think we want to read anything more into why now, why not earlier, etc.

Q: Sir, is there any proposal of Prime Minister of Japan's visit to India in coming months?

Official Spokesperson: You know that both India and Japan have an annual dialogue. There was a dialogue earlier this year and it is normal that there would be one next year too.

Q: Does this visit have any bearing on the strategic partnership? And does it impact in any way on the nuclear negotiations?

Director (East Asia): Subhojit, I am just trying to draw up the framework for this visit here and I am trying to bring to your attention that the Japanese Emperor's visits, which are very rare, are essentially manifestations of goodwill and popular sentiment towards another country, a friendly country. We do not want to, as you are suggesting, look at this in a very narrow prism in terms of day-to-day, or shall we say immediate, or medium term diplomatic issues. The way in which we are looking at this relationship is as a symbol of the goodwill of the Emperor and the Japanese people towards India. And as I said, we are very honoured to be able to accept this goodwill gesture from the Japanese side.

Q: Any agreement of importance likely to be signed during the visit, of any historic importance?

Director (East Asia): No agreements envisaged during the visit.

Official Spokesperson: I think all of you would do best to you ask your Japanese colleagues here about the role that the Emperor plays in Japanese society and government. I think with that background information many of your questions will be answered because there are specific norms that these visits follow and the role of the Japanese Emperor, and those norms are being abided by during this visit too.

Official Spokesperson: Since there are no more questions on the visit, now the floor is open for questions on anything else.

Q: India has given the dossiers on 26/11 to Pakistan. But the lawyer for the seven accused has said that the evidence is a sham and is insufficient evidence for the court.

Official Spokesperson: Ranjana, if your question is that should I respond to some nondescript individuals, my answer is that I will not do so. But if your question is a little bit more substantive and do you think that India would just allow this somebody to wish away what is a deeply felt national sentiment that the perpetrators of 26/11 should be brought to book, my answer is that we will never allow that wish list to ever happen. Not now, not later, not ever.

Now if your question is about the quality of evidence that we have provided, my understanding is that when we have had discussions with our Pakistani counterparts including the recent visit of Mr. Sartaj Aziz to Delhi, we were assured repeatedly that all that they wanted was provided to them from information that they had asked us for.

Having said that, I would also like to emphasise that it is our firmly held belief that 99 per cent of that evidence on the 26/11 case is available in Pakistan because this conspiracy was hatched in Pakistan; the people who undertook this were nationals of Pakistan; the training for this attack was undertaken in Pakistan; the financing for this attack was through banking or other channels which are in Pakistan. Therefore, it devolves on the Government of Pakistan to ensure that evidence is provided from what is available with them given the expanse of the evidence and the entire range of activities that were undertaken there prior to this attack. I hope I have answered all aspects of your question.

Q: Bangladesh is facing poll violence now. Assam and West Bengal share a 4,000 km border with Bangladesh. Are you worried that this poll violence may impact India?

Official Spokesperson: Bangladesh is a democratic country which periodically goes to the polls. We have had our engagement with Bangladesh when they have had previous polls. We respect their decisions to choose freely and democratically their governments. Therefore, we wish them all the best in that endeavour, and we do not see this as anything antithetical to our security or our safety.

Q: Regarding the Italian marines, I saw in Hindustan Times today a report about NIA seeking death penalty for the marines. Can you confirm the news? Also can you explain what is the position of the MEA regarding this issue?

Official Spokesperson: Maria, you know that from this platform we do not comment on issues of an inter-Ministerial or inter-agency nature. Therefore, I do not have anything to say on reporting on this. But if you would like to know the Government of India's position on this, I think you should refer to the statement made on the floor of Parliament on 22nd March, 2013 by the External Affairs Minister. It is available on our website. I could read out portions of that but it is available. It explains clearly what is the Government of India's position. If your argument is that there may be some developments where x, y, z may have felt something at this stage, I can assure you the Government of India intends to abide by those statements that were made on the floor of the House in Parliament, and any decision that we take will be a considered one taking into account the policy framework that has been articulated in that statement to Parliament.

Q: Akbar, this is a question for you and Shambhu. As you know, the eagle has over flown the dragon land. I am referring to the over-flight of two unarmed B2 bombers over China's so-called ADIZ. What are your comments on that? And there are also reports that China is mulling over a similar India-specific ADIZ.

Official Spokesperson: Rajiv, I think I will answer that question. There is no need for two people to answer that. All I can say is that we are aware of newspaper reports and other reports on this issue. And once we have a statement to make, you will be the first to know about that.

Q: Is President Karzai visiting India next month on the invite of the Government of India? What will be on the agenda when he comes?

Official Spokesperson: I can confirm that President Karzai will be visiting India, and this is in connection with an invitation he has received from an educational organisation. This is going to be during the second week of December.

As you are aware, the last time he visited India he was invited by the Lovely University in Punjab. On this occasion, this is another educational institution that has invited him. And let me assure you, whenever President Karzai comes to India as an honoured guest, he always does meet all important sections of Indian society including our leadership. So, he will be received by the Prime Minister of India during his next visit to India in the second week of December.

Q: Which is the organisation which has invited him?

Official Spokesperson: I think it would be best if that university or that group of educational institutions makes this public because this is an invitation from them. I have confirmed to you that the Prime Minister will meet him during his visit here. Now it is only proper for that educational organisation to make public the nature of their invitation.

But as far as we in Government are concerned, every time President Karzai, who is a great friend of India, visits India - and he is always welcome to do so – he will be received with appropriate honour that we extend to friends of India.

Q: Is the institution in Delhi?

Official Spokesperson: I can play this game with you a little bit more and I will answer that its headquarters are not in Delhi.

Q: Regarding Central African Republic which is descending to chaos and the UN is seeking troops, as one of the major contributors in the peacekeeping operations, is India planning to contribute?

Official Spokesperson: We will let you know once we take a decision on that.

Q: Back to Their Majesties visit again.

Official Spokesperson: Welcome.

Q: Her Majesty the Empress was supposed to be visiting India in 1998 to take part in an international conference but for obvious reasons the Japanese Government allowed her not to go to India. But anyway she took part not directly but through sending a video message of keynote speech to that conference. How does the present day Government of India take her decision back then?

Director (East Asia): As you rightly said, the Empress had addressed the Congress of the International Board on Books for Young People. And we are aware of her great interest in children's literature. We have also been told that she has a great interest in the Panchatantra. And I think we are going to let it rest at that.

Q: My question is about the Chinese Air Defence ...

Official Spokesperson: I think I have answered that question.

Q: Yes, but India's flights are also going to fly over that area. For example, the Japanese Government has said that their companies do not need to reply to that. What is India's reaction on that?

Official Spokesperson: I have just answered that question. You will now be the second person to be formed of it since Rajiv is the first. He has taken over that slot.

Q: If you are having a briefing on WTO Ministerial at Bali, then it is okay. Otherwise I wanted to ask about the peace clause. What is India's stand on the two-year, four-year thing? And what are the other issues besides this food thing that India puts upfront at the Ministerial?

Official Spokesperson: Sandip, my understanding is that the Ministry of Commerce will have a separate detailed briefing on all these aspects. So, let us wait for that.

Q: Following the interim arrangement between Iran and P5+1, what is the kind of opportunity it opens up for India in terms of oil trade, and also Indian investments in Chabahar and the land routes to Central Asia. The Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister was here for foreign office consultations. Was this process taken forward?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, the Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Ibrahim Rahimpour was in Delhi. He did meet the Foreign Secretary. He did provide a detailed briefing on their assessment of the situation as it would evolve following the interim agreement between Iran and the E3+3. At this stage, he also indicated that things need to be watched as go forward because, as you are aware, the document of that interim agreement is now publicly available, there are a series of steps that are likely to be unveiled as we go along.

As far as India is concerned, we have always held that we would like to engage Iran economically and any issues that Iran has with other parts of the world should not impede our legitimate economic interactions with Iran. Therefore, energy is a major area of cooperation between India and Iran and we intend to pursue that.

Similarly, we have, as you are all aware, a very keen interest in the Chabahar port. That per se does not get affected directly by any sanctions that are currently in place because those sanctions, even of a unilateral nature, do not have an impact directly on port-related activities. So, we intend to pursue that also actively. In addition, we are also in touch with Iran with other possibilities to strengthen our energy cooperation and that will be unveiled as time goes ahead because I think it is not prudent to tell in advance of decision making on matters of that nature, the outcomes. But you can be certain that there are activities which we are considering.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much for being very patient and for coming here this afternoon.

Director (East Asia): I just wanted to also inform you that former Prime Minister of Japan Mr. Yoshiro Mori will also be a part of the Emperor's Delegation. As many of you who have been following India-Japan relations are aware, he is one of the key personalities who has played a very transformational role in India-Japan relations. I just wanted to mention that. He is what they call the Head of the official suite as part of the delegation. That is just a point of fact.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

MONGOLIA

329. Keynote address by Sanjay Singh, Secretary (East) at the 2nd India-Mongolia IDSA-ISS Bilateral Dialogue.

New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Dr Arvind Gupta, Director General, IDSA,

Dr. D. Ganbat, Director, Institute for Strategic Studies, Ulaanbataar,

H. E. Ambassador Bayaraa,

Excellencies,

Distinguished scholars and friends,

I am truly delighted to be here this morning for the second round of the IDSA-ISS Dialogue.

The theme you have chosen for today's discussions, "Emerging International Strategic Dynamics", is both extremely interesting and of great topical relevance. The international strategic landscape is evolving faster and in more complex ways than ever. This is particularly true of Asia. In our own ways India and Mongolia are agents of some of the changes that are taking place. We are also impacted directly by fast moving developments in our near and extended neighbourhood. This Dialogue is thus also timely and important for both our countries.

India and Mongolia have extremely warm and friendly relations, both at the inter-governmental level and also in terms of cultural and people to people exchanges. I have always sensed great warmth and cordiality in my interactions with Mongolian officials and leaders and I am sure that my Mongolian colleagues will agree that the reverse is equally true.

Over the past few years, we have imparted greater content and strategic orientation to our Comprehensive Partnership through institutionalised cooperation on foreign policy, defence and security issues in addition to our economic and technical cooperation. The priority that both countries place on our bilateral relationship is underlined by the regular high-level exchanges that have taken place in recent years, including the state visit of the President of India to Mongolia in July 2011 and that of the President of Mongolia to India in September 2009. This was in fact President Elbegdorj's first visit abroad after taking office as President. In January 2013, we were glad to receive Mongolian Foreign Minister Lu Bold and in the coming week we will be holding the next round of the Ministerial Bilateral Joint Committee in Delhi. This is thus a very active and dynamic bilateral partnership. Equally importantly, there is clear commitment on the part of our leaders to take this relationship forward.

Allow me to now make a few general observations about recent international dynamics from a strategic perspective. Speaking in very broad terms, there has been a shift in economic power from the West to the East. We are moving from a situation of Western dominance to a scenario where Asian countries, as well as some major developing countries such as Brazil will play an increasingly greater role even as the US, Russia and major European powers remain crucial international actors. Overall, given the current trends, there is little disagreement in strategic circles that this is the Asian moment, if not as is widely claimed, that this will be an 'Asian century'.

At the same time, several Asian countries are experiencing significant political change, ranging from peaceful political transitions to a violent overthrow of regimes, the implications of which are yet to be fully understood. Asia also has several relatively younger nation-states, some of them just over two decades old as fully independent countries. Also, the pace of political and economic changes in Asia varies widely. The issues and challenges that countries face are also radically different as one moves across Asia. There has understandably been a lot of focus on developments in the Pacific, especially in the seas around China. At the same time, the prospect of a major and imminent shift in Afghanistan could pose even more significant challenges for Asian security over the immediate future.

Paradoxically, even as regional cooperation frameworks have multiplied across the world, and in Asia, there have been serious question marks about the idea of regional cooperation. In Europe for instance, efforts to proceed towards greater political unity have been impeded by multiple crises linked in many ways to attempts to forge greater economic and financial integration. In Asia, where we have several regional frameworks, some of which have been working reasonably well, efforts to bring about greater and broader regional cooperation have to absorb these lessons.

Thus, while it is clear that while this will in many ways be an Asian century, it is far from self-evident as to what sort of century this will be for Asia, India or Mongolia.

From a strategic perspective, the terms of engagement, of competition and conflict, have shifted. Of course, this is a dynamic reality. While it would be hasty to state that conventional conflict does not pose a very serious threat to peace and security, there are fewer and fewer open conflicts between states. At the same time, newer kinds of conflict are here to stay, such as proxy wars and terrorism, as well as new arenas for competition and conflict, over markets and resources or over cyberspace. All of these require new analytical perspectives and newer tools in the policy toolkit.

For India, clearly our immediate neighbourhood in South Asia will remain a key priority even as we engage with a larger Asian reality. The major changes underway in the SAARC countries, including Afghanistan, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Maldives and Sri Lanka will continue to engage a large part of our attention. At the same time, China is also our neighbour. Even as we move forward in our bilateral partnership with China, we cannot remain disengaged with the larger strategic context involving China or even the US' pivot to Asia. As we recognise China's growing presence, we also feel the need to engage with them and our other partners about the content and terms of that presence. This is an area on which both India and Mongolia can have a useful exchange. I am sure this Seminar will generate some interesting insights in this regard.

Friends,

India is in the centre of Asia, especially if we were to look at the way Asia is placed in relation to the oceans. On our east we have Australia,

Southeast Asia and the ASEAN countries leading up to Japan and the Pacific. We have the vast Indian Ocean with all its significance for trade and energy security at the centre. If we move westwards, we have Iran and the mineral rich countries of the Gulf and West Asia. Above us, we have China and Central Asia. India has a policy of steady engagement across Asia, and we seek a future of cooperative structures that will promote economic interactions as well as ensure a peaceful context for our continued economic development. Our efforts will thus continue to focus on addressing issues through diplomacy and dialogue, and to bring together what appear to be competing or conflicting interests and perspectives.

Similarly, if we were to consider Mongolia's position on a map, in many ways you are also at the heart of the Asian landmass. We are both developing countries wedded to democracy. It is thus not at all surprising that in many ways both our countries have a balanced orientation emphasizing peace and stability. This is a natural impulse engendered by our geographical position. Both our countries have foreign policies that try and seek to establish a larger, harmonious yet pluralist whole out of the diversity that confronts us. This is also in keeping with our shared Buddhist heritage of the middle path.

I wish the discussions today all success and look forward to hearing about your conclusions.

Thank you

330. Fourth meeting of INDIA-MONGOLIA Joint Committee on Cooperation.

New Delhi, March 21, 2013.

The 4th Meeting of the India-Mongolia Joint Committee on Cooperation was held in New Delhi on 21 March 2013. It was jointly chaired by Mr. E. Ahamed, Minister of State for External Affairs of India, and Mr. Luvsannyam Gantumur, Minister for Education and Science of Mongolia.

The Joint Committee reviewed the entire range of issues in India-Mongolia relations.

The Indian side conveyed that Indian companies were interested in playing a larger role in the Mongolian mineral processing and mining industry, and expressed the hope that a favourable environment for their operations could be created.

The Indian side reiterated its support for Mongolia's development processes and reaffirmed that it is modernizing the Rajiv Gandhi Polytechnic College of Production and Art in Ulaanbaatar. The Indian side is also considering setting up a milk processing plant in Mongolia. Implementation of the Line of Credit of US $20 million extended by India to Mongolia for setting up an India-Mongolia Joint Information Technology Education and Outsourcing Center in Ulaanbaatar was discussed.

Discussions during the Joint Committee Meeting also focused on continuation of joint military exercises, the proposed visit of an Indian business delegation to Mongolia this summer, the possibility of launching air services between India and Mongolia and the establishment of an India-Mongolia Joint School.

The 5th Meeting of the Joint Committee on Cooperation will be held in Mongolia in 2014.

MYANMAR

331. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on cooperation between India and Myanmar on issues of common concern.

New Delhi, January 22, 2013.

Defence Minister Shri AK Antony today called on the President of Myanmar U Thein Sein in NayPyiTaw. Shri Antony conveyed the importance placed by India on enhancement of bilateral ties in all fields, including defence. He noted that the recent exchanges of visits between both countries at political and other levels had imparted a new momentum to the bilateral relationship.

In the case of defence in particular, the defence minister noted that the two sides were working to consolidate ties, in mutual interest of both. He informed that the visit of all three Service Chiefs of India to Myanmar in the last 18 months reflected the desire of the Indian government to strengthen ties. These visits and other exchanges in the recent times had provided each side a better understanding of mutual concerns, needs and strengths. Shri Antony stated that as neighbours which share a land and maritime boundary, both sides should work together to address common concerns.

The Myanmar President welcomed the enhancement of bilateral ties between both countries in all fields. He stated that Myanmar can also play the role of a bridge between India and South-East Asia.

The President also assured that Myanmar will not allow its territory to be used by anti-India insurgent groups. He welcomed the development of cooperation between the Armed Forces of both sides to deal with challenges along the land and maritime boundaries between both countries.

Earlier, Defence Minister met the C-in-C Defence Services of Myanmar Armed Forces Vice Senior General Min Aung Hlaing, who also hosted a lunch in his honour. The C-in-C welcomed the enhancement of exchanges and interactions between the Armed Forces of both countries. In particular, he stated that such exchanges would be useful in maintaining stability in border areas. He also looked forward to enhancement of exchanges between the Navies and Air Forces of both countries.

Yesterday, Shri Antony met the Defence Minister of Myanmar Lt Gen Wai Lwin. During these meetings, both sides discussed various issues of mutual interest and also discussed measures to enhance exchanges and cooperation between the Armed Forces of both sides. Enhancement of measures of closer and regular contacts between border forces were also discussed.

332. Recent incidents of violence in Central Myanmar.New Delhi, March 23, 2013.

In response to a question from the media with regard to recent incidents of violence in central Myanmar, the Spokesperson said :

“We express our profound sorrow at the tragic loss of lives and damage to property reported during the recent incidents of violence in Meiktila in Myanmar. We have been in contact with the concerned Myanmar authorities in Nay Pyi Taw and Mandalay. We have been informed of steps taken to restore normalcy. We are hopeful that communal peace and harmony would prevail. India stands ready to extend assistance to relief efforts for those affected by the recent incidents.”

333. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the economic relations between India and Myanmar.*New Delhi, June 6, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce, Industry & Textiles Shri Anand Sharma asserted that with democracy tightening its grip in Myanmar, which has provided a right enabling environment to inspire investors' confidence, India remains committed “to be a steadfast partner of Myanmar as it charts its path to growth and progress.” Speaking during a session entitled “The Long-Term View” at the World Economic Forum on East Asia 2013 in Nay Pyi Taw, Myanmar today, Shri Sharma highlighted that India's engagement with Myanmar is premised on a strong development partnership and that India would like to align its cooperation with the economic priorities of Myanmar.

With India concluding a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement with ASEAN, Shri Sharma stressed that this over-arching framework will act as a catalyst to boost trade and investment ties with countries of the region including Myanmar. “India is working closely with Myanmar and Thailand to develop the tri-lateral highway as we call it... we are half-way there and am sure that by 2015-2016, this should be fully operational,” announced Shri Sharma.

Shri Sharma also spoke on the importance of investment in human resource, by adding that India has always believed that it will reap dividends in the long run. “We have already established Centre of Excellence in IT sector in Yangon. We are going to establish now Information Technology institute like a university in Mandalay. In addition to that we have also established an Industrial Training Centre in Pakokku to develop skilled labour for Myanmar industry,” said Shri Sharma. During the visit of Indian Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2012, India announced doubling the number of training slot to Myanmar from 250 to 500.

Shri Sharma also added that India would also like to share her experiences with Myanmar in the enhancement of agricultural productivity and agricultural extension. “With this end in view, we are establishing an Advance Centre for Agricultural Research and Education at Yezin and a Rice Bio Park is also being established in Myanmar through grant assistance by India,” said Shri Sharma.

Speaking during the session, Shri Sharma also highlighted the importance of developing high-quality infrastructure. Putting stress on the fact that sound infrastructure will help in the creation of a robust economic linkage between India, Myanmar and beyond, Shri Sharma said that “India is developing Kaladan Multimodal Transit-Transport Project which will connect Mizoram to Sittwe port in Myanmar.”

334. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the meeting between Commerce Minister Anand Sharma and Aung San Suu Kyi.

Nay Pyi Taw, June 6, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce, Industry & Textiles Shri Anand Sharma today met Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, Chairperson of the National League for Democracy (NLD), Myanmar at Nay Pyi Taw. Shri Sharma conveyed to Ms. Suu Kyi that India stands ready to extend all necessary assistance to the people of Myanmar in their developmental efforts. "Myanmar is a vitally important neighbour for us. The relations between our two countries have broadened and deepened in the past two years," said Shri Sharma to Ms. Suu Kyi. Both the leaders exchanged views on the issues of mutual interests. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi expressed keen interest in building linkages with the textiles sector of India. Stressing the preference of the people of Myanmar for natural fiber, Ms. Suu Kyi said that the handloom sector of India has immense potential for Myanmar. Pointing to the conducive ecology, Ms. Suu Kyi sought India's help in developing a full value chain for silk production in Myanmar. Shri Sharma conveyed the greetings from Indian Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and UPA Chairperson Ms. Sonia Gandhi to the Myanmarese leader.

Later in the day, Shri Sharma met Mr. U Than Htay, Minister of Energy, Myanmar. In his meeting with the Myanmarese Minister, Shri Sharma conveyed the interest of Indian banks in setting up their branches in Myanmar. "India will also be happy to assist in strengthening the banking system in Myanmar as we inherit common banking laws," said Shri Sharma. The two Ministers set a bilateral trade target of USD 3 billion by 2015.

Shri Sharma also conveyed India's interest in deepening cooperation in procuring energy, oil and natural gas from Myanmar. "Our companies are interested in securing more exploratory oil and gas blocks both onshore and offshore," said Shri Sharma to Mr. Htay. The issue of the revival of the discussions on the gas pipeline connection between India and Myanmar through Bangladesh was also discussed. Shri Sharma said that India stands ready to continue to assist Myanmar in the development of its infrastructural projects. "We are encouraged by the progress that has been made on implementation of several of the decisions taken during the State visit of President of Myanmar in October 2011 and that of our Prime Minister in May 2012,” said Shri Sharma. He also expressed happiness over the progress made in the Inland Waterway component of the Kaladan project.

The need to improve air, road and water connectivity between India and Myanmar also came up for discussion between the two Ministers. “A Joint Working Groups (JWG) to determine the technical and commercial feasibility of cross-border rail links and the commercial feasibility of direct shipping links between the two countries are working with the sole aim to boosting the trade ties between the two countries,” said Shri Sharma. While in 2011, the total trade between the two countries stood at USD 1.708 billion, it was USD 1.872 billion in 2012. India is the fourth largest trading partner of Myanmar after Thailand, Singapore and China.

335. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on Minister of Commerce ANAND SHARMA’s call on Myanmar President U THEIN SEIN.

New Delhi, June 9, 2013.

India has offered to help in revival of 300 apparel factories in Myanmar. During his meeting with the Myanmar President U Thein Sein on June 7, 2013, in Nay Pye Taw, The Union Minister of Commerce Industry and Textiles, Shri Anand Sharma also offered US$ 5 million Line of Credit for revival of these factories. The South India Textile Research Association (SITRA) will provide technical assistance in formulation of revival plans for these factories. Private Sector companies will play a big role in revival and building joint ventures with these closed apparel factories. “A delegation comprising the experts, officials and businessmen will visit Myanmar within two weeks”, Shri Sharma informed the media persons after the meeting.

India will also cooperate with Myanmar in formulating a common compliance code for standards and also the best practices in the factories, said Shri Sharma. The Minister proposed to the Myanmar President a Common Compliance Code - Disha Myanmar with technical assistance from AEPC – to enhance compliance standards in Myanmar for exports to developed countries. Sponsored by Ministry of Textiles, and helmed by AEPC Disha is an initiative to driving industry towards sustainable human capital advancement. Disha attempts to educate apparel exporting members on a code of ethics that covers all critical social and environmental concerns like child labour, health and industrial safety, etc. For capacity building in Myanmar textiles sector, India has offered 2 scholarships for 2 slots under National Institute of Design (NID) and 250 scholarships for textile workers under Integrated Skill Development Scheme. Scholarships have been offered in National Institute of Fashion Technology and Institute of Foreign Trade also.

India will be setting up India-Myanmar Apparel Sector JVs in Thilawa SEZ in collaboration with other international brands, said Shri Anand Sharma . India will also set up a textiles trade show - Textiles Expo in Yangon for traditional textiles with Handloom Export Promotion Council (HEPC) as lead council. Enterprise India Show in Yangon as an annual event: As was agreed during Indian Prime Minister's visit to Myanmar to conduct an annual trade promotion event. Shri Sharma announced that ITPO will undertake this event during November 2013. "We will also facilitate in return an exhibition of Myanmar industry in India organized by ITPO free of cost next year" said Shri Sharma.

Textiles sector appeared prominently during Shri Sharma's three-day visit to Myanmar as NLD leader Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, during her meeting with Shri Sharma, also expressed keen desire to establish linkages in the sector specially in handloom an silk. "Entire sector as such will be brought in for cooperation including silk", Shri Sharma told media persons.

336. Media report on the Call by the Myanmar Parliamentary Delegation on the President of India.

New Delhi, December 5, 2013.

India stands ready to support Myanmar's efforts in whichever way it can, President Pranab Mukherjee said on December 5 during a meeting with a delegation from Myanmar at the Rashtrapati Bhavan.

A 23-member Parliamentary Delegation from Myanmar — led by U. Khin Aung Myint, Speaker of Amyotha Hluttaw (Upper House) — called on the President.

He said both Parliaments have a big role in steering and supporting cooperation for the mutual benefit of the people.

Commenting on the relations between India and Myanmar, Mr. Mukherjee said ties between the two countries are, "rooted in our history; generations of our people have travelled, lived and worked together".

The President said over the past year there have been a series of high level exchanges with Myanmar and these meetings between the representatives of people help increase understanding and enhance friendship.

The Leader of the Myanmar Parliamentary delegation said, "Myanmar, which is reviving multi-party democracy has much to learn from India. India has shown 'brotherly spirit' by assisting and providing training in Parliamentary matters."

He also pointed out that despite a large land and maritime border between the two countries, there has never been any problem between the two countries any where on these borders and expressed confidence that the visit of this delegation to India will further advance relations between the two countries.

The above report is as appeared in the Hindu daily of December 6, 2013.

NEW ZEALAND

337. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister of New Zealand.

New Delhi, June 4, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here. We will have the press interaction now. As usual we will begin with the opening remarks. I request the External Affairs Minister to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Thank you very much ladies and gentlemen. Good afternoon and welcome to our press interaction.

I am absolutely honoured to have here as our very honoured guest Foreign Minister of great caliber from New Zealand. This is our second meeting. We have had a very good conversation and dialogue on a host of issues of interest to us of bilateral, regional and multilateral nature.

I do believe, as you will get our both statements together, that we have enormous convergence, agreement on issues of great importance, desire that our people-to-people contacts continue to grow, that we establish much more important institutions and arrangements for enhancing our trade relations, looking at much greater interface as far as the field of education is concerned, and to cooperate and collaborate in key areas in multilateral events as indeed in our bilateral relationship.

We share an extremely close partnership and the strong political understanding, shared values, expanding trade and investment ties, education and cultural linkages and in the growing people-to-people interaction and contacts are of extreme importance to all of us.

We have the common linkage of Commonwealth, in itself extremely important, parliamentary democracy, of course the English language, and cricket. Our dynamic partnership and multifaceted relations are characterized by common aspirations, on a host of bilateral issues as I said and our growing convergence on global peace and security matters, North-South cooperation, and combating international terrorism, as indeed ecological preservation. I do believe that our working together will help us transform our region. Of course the vast region in which our Look East Policy is now playing a very important role.

Our economic relations are strong. We have of course recognized that there is potential for doing a lot more. And I suggested that in the field of agriculture is an area in which we still have some negotiations to complete as we move on the free trade area agreement. But there are areas in which we can work closely together. And I mentioned to His Excellency that India imports a lot of good wool from New Zealand for the carpets that we make in my own State in Bhadoi and of course Kashmir. I hope that we can work more closely together in the matter of wool production.

As I said we are working on the FTA. We have agreed His Excellency is meeting my colleague Mr. Anand Sharma very soon, and I will certainly urge my colleague that we need to push forward the FTA which was targeted for eight to ten months at the time of the last meeting between the Trade Ministers. But it has already been over a year and a quarter and I think it is time that we push forward quickly.

We have a number of Indian companies in New Zealand now in the area of minerals, banking, IT. And of course the potential for us is cooperation in agriculture as I said, high-yielding varieties for instance, but also in food processing, in agro machinery which is of great importance to India in its present state of development. We will continue to work closely on the fight against international terrorism.

I acknowledge once again that on the attack in Mumbai, one of the first few countries that immediately responded, and I think it is important, was New Zealand. Equally we felt the pain of New Zealand when the earthquake hit New Zealand. I have conveyed my sympathy and my support on behalf of the country for the people who suffered. Also looking at the vast devastation that took place we have expressed our hope and support that New Zealand will soon overcome that set back.

We value the cooperation with New Zealand in multilateral fora, in the ASEAN processes, in East Asia Summit, in the Pacific Island Forum where New Zealand, as you know, have a very important role.

We are pleased with New Zealand Government's steps to attract Indian students. Twelve thousand of them are now presently there. It has gone up from four thousand in 2008. So, obviously you can see that that is a very attractive educational platform, and we hope we can work even further closely together perhaps in third countries in Central Asia region.

New Zealand has also become, as you know, a favourite destination for location shooting for Bollywood film producers and I am sure that this will bring us closer together and I hope that some stories that bring together our two countries as part of the movies itself will soon be written.

Before I conclude may I mention two sporting issues that bind us? I have already mentioned cricket and we look forward to the Cricket World Cup to be jointly hosted by New Zealand and Australia in 2015, and we hope to return with the Trophy, Minister. I know that you have a share of the matches between you and Australia and some of the good matches will be played by India.

We are also, as you all know, currently celebrating the 60th anniversary of the first ascent of the Mt. Everest by Sir Edmund Hillary and Tenzing Norgay on 29th May 1953. Many of you have recently highlighted this event in your channels and newspaper stories including interviews of the grandson of Tenzing Norgay.

We look forward to the further strengthening of our multifaceted relations with this wonderful country New Zealand.

Thank you

Foreign Minister of New Zealand (Mr. Murray McCully): Thank you, Minister Khurshid. Can I first of all thank you for the warm hospitality that we have received here in India and say how much we look forward to your paying a return visit to New Zealand at a date that is not too far distant. And we hope that we will see many people from India come to New Zealand for the cricket world cup matches in 2015 which will be an opportunity to focus not just on the sporting relationship between our two countries, but to also see some of the trade and commercial elements of our partnership taken forward at the same time.

We have had warm and constructive talks this morning covering the various aspects of our bilateral relationship. The Minister has referred to agriculture as an area in which we can obviously take forward our cooperation. Education is an area in which we have seen progress but have ambition to do much more.

Of course the Free Trade Agreement which the Minister speaks of is an immediate goal for us because it has been our experience that the other elements of the partnership always succeed in pursuing a Free Trade Agreement and we believe that the potential of the relationship between New Zealand and India will be unlocked through an FTA. So, we have both agreed that we will urge our Trade Minister colleagues to work out to achieve this objective.

Our two countries are very different in terms of size and in terms of geography. But there are so many areas in which we cooperate internationally. We have discussed the areas above the...(Inaudible)... in our multilateral cooperation this morning.

We also have had a chance to explore some of the issues in your own neighbourhood. Your neighbourhood is a bit more interesting than ours in that respect. India is a big and significant player in this region. It has been valuable for us to sit down and hear the inside understanding of some of the challenges in the wider region, and to be able to commit to working constructively with your government to ensure that we all make progress.

We are at this stage looking forward to an opportunity through the Free Trade Agreement, through sport, through education and tourism, to bring the ties between our two countries even closer together. That says you have seen, Minister, an important view in the relationship. We have a long history but we also believe we have a very bright future.

Thank you

Official Spokesperson: The Ministers have agreed to respond to a couple of questions.

Q: The question is for both the Ministers. You have stressed on the importance of the Free Trade Agreement, but why has there been this delay? Also about the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty, why is there a delay in that?

External Affairs Minister: Good wine always takes time to mature. Far-reaching impact these agreements have, particularly the Free Trade Agreement has, and the local producers, local constituencies have to be taken onboard. There is no point having an agreement that ...(Inaudible)... all the stakeholders. So, you have to build up consensus and that is done through extensive consultations with other Ministries and then you move forward.

Of course, there are a lot of agreements now being negotiated across the world and the best negotiators are very limited in number. But, as the Minister said he would be seeing Mr. Anand Sharma now later in the afternoon. We will provide a further impetus. And this is why sometimes meetings between Foreign Ministers are very significant because they allow for an opportunity to refocus and reenergise the issues that you need to address.

Foreign Minister of New Zealand: To answer the first of your question, I think that the mutual assistance issue is the one that needs to be picked up. As Minister has indicated, the fact that we have these meetings provides an opportunity to take stock ... (Inaudible)... there is a need for one of the parties to pick up an issue. This can be done. I think we will proceed to prompt from the discussions this morning that this needs to be attended to on the New Zealand side.

With regard to Free Trade Agreements, we have some significant experience in this regard and all of that experience tells us that if the Free Trade Agreement, free trade architecture is in place, then all of the other elements of the relationship burgeon to support and match the growth in trade in goods and services. And it is our ambition to move forward as quickly as we can because we believe that an FTA would set the scene for a period of much closer contact between our two countries... (Inaudible)....

Q: My question is for both the Ministers. First to the New Zealand Foreign Minister. Sir, I believe you are going to Colombo after Delhi. Was there any discussion with Mr. Khurshid on Sri Lanka hosting CHOGM? What level is New Zealand going to be represented at if New Zealand attends the meeting at all?

And to Mr. Khurshid, Sir, what are your exchanges like on the subject? What level is India likely to be represented at?

Foreign Minister of New Zealand: First I should record the fact that the New Zealand Prime Minister Right Hon. John Key has already indicated publicly that he would attend the CHOGM meeting in Colombo this year, and I also will attend that meeting with him. We made this decision sometime ago. The discussions that we have had this morning, which I hope we will have the opportunity to continue informally, have really been in the nature of seeking a greater understanding of recent developments in Sri Lanka from a country that is a neighbour and has significantly greater knowledge of recent developments in that country. I have found that exchange extremely valuable.

We have obviously some concerns about developments over recent years in Sri Lanka. I will be visiting there tomorrow. I look forward to the opportunity to have a free and frank exchange with my counterpart on that front, that is to say, on the insights from the Minister and his senior colleagues, senior officials, very helpful indeed.

External Affairs Minister: I think we have had a very useful conversation on this. It is important, we are very close in physical terms to Sri Lanka and New Zealand is able to see more objectively from somewhat of a distance. And I think if we compare the two perspectives and it gives you a much better idea of how we should proceed. I think that we have convergence on this which is helpful to both of us. We will of course continue to remain in touch on many issues including this as well.

I am not at present in the know of any decision about the actual CHOGM meeting as and when it takes place. For the present we are really looking at those issues that we have flagged as issues of importance on which there has been a formal agreement of points of view between Sri Lanka and ourselves. We would be pleased to see movement forward as we now know that the elections have been announced. And I hope that all parties will collaborate, participate and contribute to moving forward to a peaceful, permanent settlement to all the issues that have caused agony and hurt to people of parts of Sri Lanka. It is a matter on which I think we should think positively and move forward positively giving our friends such assistance as they need, require or ask for.

Q: Sir, for Nawaz Sharif's inauguration, is anybody going from India?

External Affairs Minister: I think, as I understand, it is a local event. The Missions will all be represented. I am not sure that there are any invites to anybody to be coming, certainly not to our knowledge. Therefore, there was not any need to take a decision on this. There would probably not be enough time between the formal election in the National Assembly and the actual swearing in which will be tomorrow. Our High Commission was here. We have talked to him this morning. He is going back to attend the swearing in as the other Heads of Mission would.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event

PHILIPPINES

338. Joint Statement on 2nd India-Philippines Joint Commission on Bilateral Cooperation.

Manila, October 21, 2013.

1. The 2nd Meeting of the Philippines-India Joint Commission on Bilateral Cooperation was held on 21 October 2013, in Manila. The meeting was co-chaired by the Honorable Albert F. Del Rosario, Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of the Philippines and His Excellency Salman Khurshid, Minister of External Affairs of the Republic of India.
2. Secretary Del Rosario and Minister Khurshid held comprehensive discussions on political, defense, security, economic and cultural cooperation, and reviewed the progress of the Joint Working Groups on Trade and Investment, Tourism, Agriculture, Health and Medicine, Joint Committee on Renewable Energy and of the Joint Defense Cooperation Committee. They emphasized that the opportunity to meet regularly at high level is important, to reflect their growing and dynamic bilateral partnership.
3. Secretary Del Rosario reiterated the invitation of President Benigno S. Aquino to H.E. President Pranab Mukherjee and H.E. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to visit the Philippines. Minister Khurshid welcomed the invitations and conveyed that the President of India looked forward to his visit to the Philippines in 2014.

4. The Ministers agreed that the next meetings of the Policy Consultations and Strategic Dialogue will be held in Manila, in 2014.
5. Secretary Del Rosario briefed Minister Khurshid on the GPH-MILF Framework Agreement on the Bangsamoro and its Annexes. Minister Khurshid expressed India's support to the Philippine government's pursuit of a just and lasting peace in Mindanao
6. Secretary Del Rosario also briefed Minister Khurshid on the developments in the West Philippine Sea. Minister Khurshid expressed support for a peaceful resolution of the West Philippine Sea/South China Sea dispute consistent with freedom of navigation and the rule of law.
7. The Ministers affirmed their condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and reiterated their commitment to expand and deepen cooperation in counter terrorism. In this regard, they agreed to convene the Joint Working Group on Counter Terrorism, in New Delhi, in 2014 to discuss all issues related to terrorism and other transnational crimes.
8. Aware that the rise of transnational crime necessitates increased international judicial cooperation, they agreed to commence negotiations on Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty in Criminal Matters (MLAT) in December 2013 and consider a Transfer of Sentenced Persons Agreement (TSP). Secretary Del Rosario also committed to push for the immediate ratification of the PH-India Extradition Treaty.
9. On defense cooperation, the Ministers welcomed the convening of the 2nd Meeting of the PH-India Joint Defense Cooperation Committee (JDCC) in November 2013, in New Delhi. They also committed to increase exchanges in military training and education. Secretary Del Rosario thanked Minister Khurshid for the naval ship visits which strengthened relations between Philippine and Indian navy and coast guard forces. Minister Khurshid thanked the Philippines side for assistance to the sailing ship INS Sudarshini, on its voyage to mark the India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in December 2012.

10. The Ministers agreed to step up cooperation in combating non-traditional threats through exchange of experiences and capacity building in the areas of disaster management, food security and pandemics. The Philippines side welcomed the cash support of US$100,000 provided by the Indian side for disaster relief following the recent devastating earthquake in the Philippines.
11. The Ministers committed to increase bilateral trade and investments between their countries and to fully maximize the potential of the Joint Working Group on Trade and Investment to bring their bilateral trade to an even higher level. Minister Khurshid welcomed the encouragement provided by Secretary Del Rosario to facilitate the expansion of Indian investments in the Philippines to the sectors of textiles and garments, pharmaceuticals, agribusiness, tourism, renewable energy and automotive parts.
12. They welcomed the results of the 2nd Meeting of the Joint Working Group on Tourism and agreed to review the 1949 Bilateral Air Services Agreement.
13. The Ministers agreed to convene the 2nd Meeting of the Joint Working Group on Agriculture and the 2nd Meeting of the Joint Working Group in Health and Medicine at an early date.
14. They welcomed the convening of the first meeting of the Joint Committee on New and Renewable Energy in July this year, and called for the adoption of its Action Plan.
15. Noting the phenomenal growth and symbiotic relationship of Philippine and Indian Information Technology Enabled Services (ITES) companies, the Ministers committed to conclude at the earliest the proposed Memorandum of Understanding in Information and Communications Technology. They also agreed that the 1987 Agreement for Cooperation in Science and Technology must be tapped and implemented through a Program of Cooperation (PoC).
16. They also agreed to discuss a new Executive Program on Cultural Exchange, for the years 2014 to 2016.

17. The Ministers exchanged views on regional and international issues of mutual interest, including the forthcoming 11th Asia-Europe Foreign Ministers' Meeting to be held in New Delhi, and the India-ASEAN Summit and East Asia Summit (EAS) in Brunei.
18. The Ministers agreed that the 3rd Meeting of the Joint Commission will be held in 2015, in New Delhi.
19. Minister Khurshid thanked Secretary Del Rosario for the excellent hosting and the hospitality extended to him and his delegation during his visit.

339. Message of Prime Minister to the Philippine's President Benigno Aquino conveying condolences and offering help in relief and rehabilitation efforts.

New Delhi, November 12, 2013.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has conveyed his condolences to President Benigno Aquino over the loss of life and destruction caused by Typhoon Haiyan in the Philippines. In his message Dr. Manmohan Singh said that India is ready to provide all help in the relief and rehabilitation efforts.

Excerpts of the Prime Minister's message:

"I write to convey to you the deepest condolences of the people of India on the catastrophe caused by Typhoon Haiyan. The scale and severity of the death and destruction caused by the typhoon has saddened and shocked us. Our thoughts and prayers are with the victims and the people of the Philippines in this extraordinary moment of grief.

While any nation would take time to come to terms with a tragedy of this magnitude, I have full faith in the resilience and resolve of the people of Philippines to quickly rebound from their losses and in the capacity of your government to provide immediate relief to the affected communities and rebuild their lives.

We stand ready to provide all help to support the relief and rehabilitation efforts of your government.

Please accept, the assurances of my highest consideration.”

340. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the assistance to Philippines in the aftermath of Typhoon Haiyan.

New Delhi, November 19, 2013.

In a display of solidarity with the citizens of Hurricane ravaged Philippines, Government of India mounted a speedy Joint Services response coordinated by HQ Integrated Defence Staff to provide help to the beleaguered nation. The relief package comprising of medicines, hygiene chemicals, tentage, blankets, tarpaulins and meals ready to eat were provided ex Armed Forces stock and airlifted by an Indian Air Force C-130 Super Hercules aircraft. The aircraft reached Tacloban, the epicentre of the devastating natural calamity where more than 10,000 people are feared dead, on Saturday and delivered the much needed relief supplies that are expected to help meet the urgent need for life saving medical care, food supplies and construction of temporary shelters in the face of a serious humanitarian crisis. Similar aid was provided to Philippines by India in 2006 as well.

Plans are now underway to further supplement the effort and provide additional relief material, a second consignment on-board an Indian Naval Ship that is expected to be despatched shortly from Vizag. Additional relief material consignment on board will be of much larger quantity to include temporary shelters, prefabricated huts, life saving medical care and earth moving plants. The water purification capacity of the ship shall also be utilized to provide clean drinking water to the affected people. Necessary coordination for sending the ship and its arrival formalities at Philippines are being carried out with the Embassy of Philippines.

SINGAPORE341. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence extending India-Singapore Five-Year Agreement for the use of Army Training and Exercise facilities in India.*New Delhi, June 4, 2013.

India and Singapore last night signed a fresh agreement to extend the use of training and exercise facilities in India by the Singapore Army for a further period of five years from August this year. The agreement was signed by the Indian Defence Secretary Mr Radha Krishna Mathur and the Singaporean Permanent Secretary of Defence Mr Chiang Chie Foo in the presence of the Defence Ministers of the two countries, Mr AK Antony and Dr Ng Eng Hen.

It may be recalled that a bilateral agreement for utilization of facilities in India by the Singapore Air Force and Army was signed in October 2007 and August 2008 respectively. The agreement for training and exercises of Singapore Air Force in India was extended up to October 2017 during the visit of Singapore's Permanent Secretary of Defence to India in July last year. Singapore is the only country to which India is offering such facilities.

Mr Antony, who is now on a three- nation visit, arrived in Singapore last evening.

The two sides held wide ranging talks on defence cooperation. They also exchanged views on global and regional security issues including Asia-Pacific Security.

* Defence Secretary, Radha Krishna Mathur and Singapore Permanent Secretary of Defence, Chiang Chie Foo exchange their documents after sign an agreement between India and Singapore on training and exercise facilities in India, in Singapore on Monday. Defence Minister, AK Antony and his Singaporean counterpart Ng Eng Hen are also seen.

342. External Affairs Minister's address at Singapore India Chambers of Commerce & Industry (SICCI).

Singapore, July 4, 2013.

Ambassador Kishore Mahbubani,
SICCI Chairman Mr. Narayanamohan,
High Commissioner Ms. Vijay Thakur Singh,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Thank you for your very warm welcome. I am delighted to be with all of you today.

Ambassador Kishore Mahbubani - you have been a student of philosophy and history, served your country with distinction as an astute Diplomat, you have also won widespread acclaim as a thinker and as an intellectual who has written extensively, your academic credentials are indisputable. Moreover, like Singapore itself, you have been a long- standing friend of India - I am happy that you are here with me today at this event.

I am in Singapore on my first visit in my capacity as the External Affairs Minister of India. Each time you visit Singapore, you are struck by the manner in which this amazing city-state keeps reinventing itself to promise a better life for its people. The country's economic success is an example of how people of different backgrounds can come together and create a viable nation. Singapore's strength lies in its multiculturalism, secularism and social harmony- these are attributes which are our two countries share and value.

I wish to utilize the platform of Singapore Indian Chambers of Commerce & Industry (SICCI) today to share with you my perspectives on the relationship between India and Singapore.

Our two countries have ties which are old and strong- we have a shared sense of history, many culture commonalties, bonds of trade and commerce go way back to historical times when the early Indian traders sailed the waters carrying goods and merchandise. The economic and social connects have grown stronger and more robust as we go forth.

The ties through all these years have been boosted in recent decades particularly by India's Look East policy. In 1991, Prime Minister Narasimha Rao decided that it was in India's best interests to make a strategic shift towards Asia. The opening of our relations with Singapore began the process of our economic partnership.

PM Manmohan Singh at the time of his bilateral visit to Singapore in November 2011 had emphasised that we place the highest priority on our relations with Singapore. As nations, we have convergent perspectives on many regional and international developments. We also work closely together in a number of regional mechanisms, such as the East Asia Summit, ASEAN, the ASEAN Regional Forum, ASEAN+ 5 and ADMM Plus. We share similar views on building an open and inclusive architecture of regional cooperation in Asia, which enhances trust and confidence.

Yet another defining point in the India- Singapore relationship in the present times was when we signed the bilateral Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA). After India and Singapore entered into the CECA, in 2005, bilateral trade has grown from a level of US $ 8.7 billion (2005 - 2006), to US $ 21.3 billion in 2012-13. Singapore has emerged as the second largest foreign investor in India. Even India's investment in Singapore has gone up eight-fold as a result the Indian business community has emerged as the largest foreign business community in Singapore.

The stock figure for total investment by Singapore in India stood at USD 19.1 billion as in February 2013. The figure for Indian investments in Singapore stood at USD 25.7 billion as in March 2013. Clearly, the mechanism for Bilateral Investment protection and the Double Tax Avoidance Agreement have both contributed wonderfully to building confidence in investors both ways.

Indian companies located in Singapore are numerous, and many from the sub-continent as well as around the world, now live and work in Singapore. In fact, there are large numbers of IIT and IIM alumni in Singapore, perhaps one of the densest concentrations in the world. Many Indian companies have their global headquarters in Singapore which administer their businesses around the world including that in India- TCS International is in Singapore, is one example. HCL Technologies service their global enterprise clients from Singapore.

Beyond economics, we are also working on the security architecture. Singapore and India have crucial stakes in shielding their common sea-lanes of communication, combating piracy and narcotics trade, curbing gunrunning, and preventing maritime terrorism.

Recently, when our Prime Ministers met they decided to step up bilateral cooperation and exchanges in the fields of defence and security. To that end, they signed a Memorandum of Understanding to renew the bilateral arrangement between our Air Forces on joint training and exercises. The renewal of the bilateral arrangement for continuing joint army training and exercises was done at the time of Defence Minister Shri AK Antony's visit to Singapore in June this year. Notably, Singapore is the only country that India has offered its facilities to for training and its land for exercises.

Bilateral Cooperation in areas of human development so essential for any country's growth like education and skills development has also grown. Singapore has excellent institutions in the area of skills education. At the time of Prime Minister's last bilateral visit to India in May 2011, we signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in Vocational Education and Skills Development. Another MOU which was signed was to establish a world class post-secondary Technical Education Institute in New Delhi- this was to be realised through a joint-collaboration by Singapore's Institute of Technical Education and the Delhi State government's Department of Training and Technical Education. The World Class Training Centre is expected to train up to 15,000 students in different vocational disciplines making them not only more skilled but more employable as well by industry.

In the field of science and technology too, our cooperation has been growing- on 20 April 2011, Singapore's first locally built satellite- micro-satellite, X-SAT- was launched by in space by an Indian PSLV from the Satish Dhawan Space Centre, Sriharikota in India.

The institutional connectivity between India and Singapore is also growing - in May 2012, the Singapore Management University (SMU) and Indian Institute of Management Bangalore (IIMB) entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) in management research and education. Raffles Education Corporation Limited headquartered in Singapore has presence in 7 Indian Cities. CECA itself provides the institutional mechanism for both countries to facilitate collaborations in the field of education- as an example, between the Indian Institutes of Technology (IIT), the Indian Institute of Science (IISc), and the universities in Singapore. Collaborations between IIT Mumbai and the National University of Singapore, and IIT Chennai and the Nanyang Technological University of Singapore, offer post-graduate research and education, with industrial linkages to, multi-national and local companies based in India and Singapore.

In 2009, India and Singapore signed a Joint Action Plan on tourism cooperation. In July, 2012 the Singapore Exchange (SGX) announced a product partnership with National Stock Exchange of India (NSE) to offer SGX S&P CNX Nifty options aimed at further enhancing offshore investors' access to the Indian economy.

Like the growing institutional connectivity, people to people linkages are also growing. Changi Airport is now the most connected point to India from Southeast Asia. There are 422 flights per week to 12 Indian Cities (Chennai, Mumbai, Delhi, Calcutta, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Ahmedabad, Cochin, Coimbatore, Trivandrum, Vishakhapatnam and Tiruchirapalli). The number of passenger movements between India and Singapore stood at 3.06 million at the end of April 2013.

This year in April when the Minister for Civil Aviation Shri Ajit Singh visited Singapore, the two countries signed a new Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on bilateral air services arrangement which enhances, by 10%, the capacity entitlement considering the increased economic activity between India and Singapore which requires better air connectivity. This revised capacity is in addition to unlimited seating capacity to 18 cities in India which is available for all the ASEAN countries, including Singapore. There is great potential in flights to the North East.

Singapore sits astride major sea lines of communication & commerce. It is a key member of ASEAN and of the newly emerging regional economic arrangements like the Trans- Pacific Partnership (TPP) and the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP). I look upon Singapore as an enabler, a global platform that creates a kind of bridging connection between the nations located on the India Ocean with the nations on the Pacific Ocean.

Going forward, from where I stand, I can see the bonds of friendship and areas of cooperation growing stronger between India and Singapore and Singapore. The levels of engagement and connectivity are growing deeper with each passing day with ASEAN and with Singapore. Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, has already indicated India's strong support to the objectives of creating an ASEAN Community by 2015, the Initiative for ASEAN Integration and the ASEAN Master Plan on Connectivity through his remarks at the 10th India- ASEAN meet.

India- ASEAN connectivity will facilitate competitive growth- it will smoothen the progress of the economics of agglomeration and integrated production networks and to enhance trade and exchanges further. Technology and better physical connectivity will allow areas of lesser industrial development to also grow rapidly in shorter periods of time as production shifts to such areas on account established agglomerations having become more and more expensive- this will allow disaggregation and spread of both urbanisation and of incomes.

In India too, we have our own DMIC and the NMIZs - as the new focus areas of growth and urbanisation- the Delhi Mumbai Infrastructure Corridor- one of the largest projects of its kind aiming to develop 7 new urban nodes in phase 1. I am sure many of you here would have looked at these projects with interest and as excellent opportunities to make profitable investments. Singapore companies are present in the DMIC, there is Jurong Consultants which has completed a feasibility study on the Manesar-Bawal investment region which is in Haryana; Hyflux which is a water treatment company is co-developing a seawater desalination plant in Gujarat, in the Dahej special economic zone. Ascendas has evinced interests in developing integrated townships, airports, seaports and utilities.

I have been informed that in Singapore since the beginning of this year, there has been three significant interactions with the businesses and the investing community in Singapore and each of these events had a Ministerial level presence from India. The first was on the occasion of the visit of the Finance Minister, Shri Chidambaram and drew participation from a large number of institutional and corporate investors based in Singapore; the second was addressed by Minister for Commerce & Industry, Shri Anand Sharma and was marked by an equally impressive turnout from businesses based in Singapore; the third was stewarded by the Singapore Exchange (SGX) and the Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) and was attended by Shri Kamal Nath and by Minister Lim Hng Kiang last month- this itself shows the commitment in our intent to continue our engagement with the international investor community and with Singapore in particular.

In order to make it easier for Singaporean companies to do business in India we have, through the Department of Industrial Policy and Promotion, been actively discussing and attempting to ease the common challenges which are faced by Singapore companies in India. On a broader scale, we have decided to pursue reforms with energy and expedite clearances through the newly constituted Cabinet Committee on Investment- the Cabinet Committee focuses on removing bottlenecks for projects both in public and private sectors, having investment of Rs 1000 Crore.

The Singapore Indian Chambers of Commerce & Industry is itself an embodiment of the deep bond between the two countries- each one you represents the bridge that both India and Singapore have. I have been informed that Singapore Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry would shortly be completing 90 years of its coming into being- let me take this opportunity to congratulate you and to wish you every success in the future.

I would also like thank you for the wonderful opportunity that you have afforded to me to speak with you- Thank you once again, for your patience.

343. Prime Minister's Statement on his departure for Japan and Thailand, May 27-31, 2013.

THAILAND

344. Media Statement by Prime Minister during his visit to Thailand.

Bangkok, May 30, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the media.

I am delighted to be in Bangkok on my first bilateral visit to Thailand. I want to thank Madam Prime Minister for her invitation and for her gracious hospitality. I also want to thank her for the momentum that she has imparted to our relationship, especially since her visit to India in January 2012 as our honoured Chief Guest for the Republic Day. We have just completed a very meaningful, productive and satisfying discussion on bilateral, regional and global issues of common interest. We have agreed to maintain the momentum of regular high level dialogue. In the coming months, India's Defence Minister, Commerce and Industry Minister and External Affairs Minister will be travelling to Bangkok.

India attaches high importance to its relationship with Thailand. We are neighbours, linked by millennia old ties of culture and civilization. Our cooperation is growing in multiple dimensions – in defence and security, trade and investment, science and technology, education, culture and tourism – and each area holds enormous potential.

Thailand was also the springboard for India's engagement with Southeast and East Asia and remains the vital link in our Look East Policy and our strategic partnership with ASEAN. We see Thailand as an important partner in promoting maritime security, regional economic integration and the evolution of an open, balanced and inclusive regional architecture, anchored in ASEAN centrality.

Though our two countries have strong economic synergies, our trade and investment levels are yet to reach their full potential. We have directed our Ministers to quickly resolve the few outstanding issues to achieve a comprehensive and balanced India-Thailand Free Trade Agreement at the earliest.

We would like to see enhanced presence of Indian and Thai companies in each other's markets, especially as both countries are planning massive investments in infrastructure over the next five years.

Our connectivity projects by sea and land will further deepen linkages and cooperation between India and Southeast Asia. They will support economic development and reinvigorate historic cultural and spiritual links in the region, especially in northeastern India. We will work together with Myanmar to ensure completion of the trilateral highway project by 2016 and pursue development of other corridors.

Our growing security cooperation received a major boost today. The Extradition Treaty, concluded after two decades of negotiations, and a memorandum on cooperation in anti-money laundering send a major signal of our shared commitment to combating terrorism, organized crime, drug trafficking and counterfeiting.

We also agreed to continue strengthening defence relations, including through exchanges, exercises and joint patrolling.

As you have seen from the agreements signed today, we place strong emphasis on improving collaboration in areas like science and technology, space science, education, culture and people-to-people exchanges. These will benefit our two countries and bring our people together in a variety of ways. We are also going to mount a major exhibition on Buddhist Art in Bangkok soon.

We agreed to strengthen consultations and cooperation in the ASEAN Regional Forum and other ASEAN-related forums, East Asia Summit, BIMSTEC and the Mekong Ganga Cooperation initiative. I appreciate Prime Minister's Shinawatra's unstinting support to India's strategic partnership and enhanced engagement with ASEAN. Let me reiterate India's commitment to making India-ASEAN partnership a force for peace and shared prosperity in our region.

The sapling from the sacred Bodhi Tree, which the people of India are deeply honoured to present as a special gift to His Majesty the King on the occasion of this visit reminds us of our historic links. It also represents the blossoming of our relationship. I am confident that our discussions today will add new meaning and content to the promising relations between India and Thailand.

I thank you

345. Prime Minister's speech at the banquet hosted by H. E. Yingluck Shinawatra, Prime Minister of Thailand.

Bangkok, May 30, 2013.

Your Excellency Madame Prime Minister,

Distinguished guests,

Ladies and gentlemen,

I wish to thank the Prime Minister for her warm welcome and the gracious hospitality extended to me and my delegation in the Land of Smiles.

Excellency, we admire the way you have steered the industrious people of Thailand through the calamity of nature in 2011 and the turmoil of the global economic downturn. Thailand, by making giant strides towards development, has once again lived up to its ancient reputation as the Suvannabhumi in our part of the world.

We also appreciate your deep personal commitment to the relations between our two countries and the momentum you have imparted to them with your characteristic drive and resolve. Your milestone State Visit to India as the Chief Guest for our Republic Day celebrations last year took our bilateral relations to a new level. It has been a privilege to work with you in the cause of our relationship and our region.

Madame Prime Minister, no visitor to this bustling city would miss the indelible imprint of our ancient links of civilization, culture and commerce. The timeless message of Lord Buddha and the shared lore of the Ramayana make us kindred in spirit. The sapling from the sacred Bodhi Tree, which was presented as a special gift from the people of India to His Majesty the King on the occasion of my visit, also represents an idea germinated in India but nurtured on this land. It shows the way ahead in our relations.

Madame Prime Minister:

Today, we are two modern nations in transition seeking to transform the lives of our people. I am confident that our shared heritage, shared values and shared aspirations will lead us to seek an even stronger partnership of shared endeavours.

We are part of an Asia experiencing unprecedented change, confident about its future, but also concerned about the uncertainties and challenges that change inevitably brings. Asia has an ancient wisdom drawn from a civilizational heritage of peace, pluralism and co-existence. Asia also has the energy and excitement of youth to shape a future defined by cooperation, integration and shared prosperity. Speaking at the Dusit Palace in Bangkok in 1927, India's Poet Laureate Rabindranath Tagore said that Asia was regaining its self-consciousness for the realization of its own self. It is a task that India and Thailand must rededicate themselves to in their own interest and for the good of our region.

I am pleased that today we have taken one more giant step in pursuit of closer cooperation, stronger connectivity and greater commerce. We have resolved to strengthen our bilateral engagement and advance maritime security in our region. We will harness the benefits of science and technology and we will nurture our relations through education, culture and tourism. Together, we will work to promote regional economic integration and connectivity, and the evolution of an open, balanced and rule-based regional architecture, anchored in ASEAN centrality. We will also strengthen the India-ASEAN partnership, BIMSTEC and Mekong-Ganga Cooperation.

Madam Prime Minister,

In pursuing this relationship of extraordinary depth and richness, which serves our people and our region well, we are living the oft quoted message of Lord Buddha that noble friends and companions are the whole of the holy life.

So, in this historic Santi Maitri building, which celebrates peace and friendship, it gives me great pleasure to invite you to join me in raising a toast:

- to the good health and well-being of Their Majesties the King and the Queen
- to the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Thailand, and
- to the eternal bonds of friendship between India and Thailand.

346. Joint Statement on Prime Minister's visit to Thailand.

Bangkok, May 30, 2013.

1. At the invitation of the Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Thailand, H.E. Ms. Yingluck Shinawatra, the Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, paid an Official Visit to Thailand from 30-31 May 2013. He was accompanied by the Minister of External Affairs, a high level official and media delegation.
2. The Prime Minister of India presented a sapling of the sacred Bodhi Tree in Bodh Gaya as a special gift to His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej as a symbol of the shared cultural heritage between India and Thailand.
3. The official talks between Thailand and India were held on 30 May 2013 in a warm, cordial and friendly atmosphere, reflecting the excellent bilateral relations and friendship that exist between the two countries. Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra hosted an official banquet in honour of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the Indian delegation.

4. The two Prime Ministers held wide-ranging discussions on bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of mutual interest. They reviewed the progress made in recent years on building a stronger, broader and deeper relationship across the range of Thailand-India interests, based on shared historical, religious and cultural ties. They also noted with satisfaction that Thailand and India have developed a strong and mutually beneficial cooperation at bilateral, regional and multilateral levels and have played a significant role in fostering cooperation, contributing to socio-economic development, peace and stability in the region.
5. They agreed that, while substantial progress has been made, there was considerable potential for expanding the relationship further. Thailand's 'Look West' and India's 'Look East' policies will be pivotal for the development of the Thailand-India relationship towards a strategic partnership. Both sides also agreed that the visit has imparted greater momentum to the ongoing bilateral ties.

Economic, Trade and Investment Cooperation

6. The two Prime Ministers took note with satisfaction that the bilateral trade between Thailand and India has grown significantly in recent years. Over the past five years, trade between Thailand and India increased at over 15% per annum. Last year, bilateral trade crossed USD 8.6 billion. Both sides hoped that bilateral trade would continue to further expand for the mutual benefit and sustainable economic growth of both countries.
7. The two Prime Ministers appreciated the growth in investment between Thailand and India in recent years, which has contributed to economic growth and job creation in both countries. Last year, Thailand's Board of Investment approved 25 Indian projects which were worth over USD 200 Million. Meanwhile, investment in India by the Thai private sector is growing steadily. FDI inflows from Thailand to India were over USD 12 million last year. They welcomed the new initiatives taken to facilitate and increase the flow of investments between the two countries.

8. India invited participation of the Thai private sector in India's plans to modernize and upgrade manufacturing and infrastructure sectors, especially in Delhi-Mumbai and Chennai-Bangalore Industrial Corridors, the Buddhist circuit and the North-East States of India. India also welcomed Thai investment particularly in sectors such as ports and highways, electronics, automobile components, food processing and power generation, as well as tourism and hospitality facilities. India expressed its interest in participating in mega transport and infrastructure development projects in Thailand.
9. The two Prime Ministers welcomed establishment of Thailand-India Business Forum with the involvement of the private sector to stimulate expansion of bilateral trade and investments, and facilitate business partnerships. They expressed the hope that the Thailand-India Business Forum will expand the existing ties between private sectors in the two countries.
10. In order to further create a supportive atmosphere for trade and investment promotion as well as to facilitate travel of business persons of both countries, the two sides agreed to provide fast track business visa service to the qualified entrepreneurs of each other's countries.
11. The two Prime Ministers underscored the need to have an institutional arrangement on the social security benefits of the workers in each other's countries, which will facilitate labour mobility and investments between the two countries. Both sides noted with satisfaction the positive discussions on Social Security Agreement between the two countries that would facilitate and streamline the movement of professionals and workers and expressed the hope that this agreement would be finalized at an early date. In this connection, they agreed to discuss a proposal for the establishment of a framework to enable regulated deployment of labour from India into the required sectors in Thailand.

12. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their strong commitment to achieve a comprehensive and balanced outcome of the Thailand-India FTA negotiations. Both sides appreciated the progress made in the negotiations since the last round held in New Delhi in November 2012. Given the emerging convergence on most issues, both sides expressed hope that the negotiations be concluded soon after the next round of negotiations in June-July 2013 in Bangkok. The Prime Ministers advised their respective negotiators to show the required flexibility in concluding the long pending negotiations to give a further fillip to the bilateral trade which has shown healthy growth even during the current economic slowdown.
13. They welcomed the successful conclusion of the negotiations on the ASEAN-India Agreement on Trade in Services and the Agreement on Investment under the broader framework of Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and the ASEAN.
14. They also agreed that the BIMSTEC FTA will be beneficial to the region and encouraged the BIMSTEC members to accelerate the negotiations with an aim to concluding the negotiations at the earliest opportunity.

Connectivity

15. The two Prime Ministers emphasized the importance of enhancing connectivity between the two countries through regional cooperation and the development of road and shipping infrastructure linking Thailand and India. They welcomed the setting up of the Thailand-India Joint Working Group on Connectivity and Infrastructure to help expedite cooperation on connectivity initiatives in both countries as well as in third countries. They took note of the fruitful outcomes of the first meeting held in New Delhi in September 2012, including the possibilities for cooperation on the Dawei Deep Sea Port and Special Economic Zone projects.

16. Both leaders reaffirmed the importance of the India-Myanmar-Thailand Trilateral Highway Project, as it would greatly enhance the connectivity between the Mekong sub-region and India. They also noted that the Joint Task Force Meeting on the Trilateral Highway, held in New Delhi in September 2012 agreed to make all efforts to complete the trilateral road connectivity by 2016. The meeting also emphasized the necessity to develop the infrastructure to ensure fast and seamless transit along the Trilateral Highway as well as an increase in trade, investment, services and tourism activities.
17. In this connection, the Indian side welcomed Thailand's proposal to host the next India-Myanmar-Thailand Joint Task Force Meeting on the Trilateral Highway Project, as well as the second Meeting of the Thailand-India Joint Working Group on Connectivity and Infrastructure in June-July 2013.
18. The Thai side proposed to host the Third India-Myanmar-Thailand Ministerial Meeting on Transport Linkages to address the issues of infrastructure and facilitation. This is aimed at maximizing the utilization of the Trilateral Highway as a means of strengthening regional economic growth and integration. Thailand will liaise with India and Myanmar regarding the appropriate date for the Meeting.
19. The Thai side informed the Indian side of the progress that Thailand and Myanmar have made on the project for the development of the Dawei Special Economic Zone in southern Myanmar, which, once operational, would further enhance regional connectivity including port-to-port linkages with India and open enormous business opportunities for the region. In this regard, the Thai side invited the Indian business sector to invest in the Dawei Special Economic Zone, especially in the areas where Indian companies have expertise, such as steel, manufacturing, power, petrochemicals, services and others. Thailand welcomed India's invitation to organize a road show in India in this respect later this year.

20. Both sides noted with satisfaction that connectivity between India and Thailand through aviation has developed continuously and increased significantly. There are currently around 150 flights between Thailand and India per week. The two Prime Ministers welcomed new air routes by Thai Airways connecting Bangkok with Ahmedabad as well as Phuket - Delhi and Phuket - Mumbai. They also expressed their support for more air connections between both countries.

Security and Defence

21. The two Prime Ministers appreciated the close interactions and regular exchanges between the Armed Forces of Thailand and India including the official visit of the Thai Defence Minister to India in December 2012, the conduct of the Defence Dialogue in February 2013 and the regular Coordinated Patrol (CORPATs) conducted by the Indian Navy and the Royal Thai Navy. The Thai side also welcomed the visit of the Indian Defence Minister to Thailand in June 2013. Both sides agreed to enhance anti-piracy cooperation, promote security of sea lanes and Coast Guard cooperation to contribute to the maintenance of peace in the region and to work towards ensuring safety and security of navigation in the Indian Ocean. Both sides agreed to continue providing scholarships and training programmes for the sharing of expertise.
22. Thailand expressed interest in India's defence industry, which has competitive production and advanced technology. Both countries agreed to pursue defence industry collaboration in areas of mutual interest.
23. They also welcomed the deepening of cooperation through the Joint Working Group on Security Cooperation. The 7th India-Thailand JWG on Security Cooperation, held in Thailand in July 2012, agreed to expedite the implementation of the five-year programme finalized by the Joint Working Group. Progress on the implementation of the Work Programme will be reported at the next JWG meeting, to be hosted by India.

24. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of the bilateral Extradition Treaty which would provide a legal basis for bilateral cooperation in dealing with elements acting against national interests. Both leaders reiterated their resolve to significantly enhance bilateral cooperation in combating terrorism, organized crime, drug trafficking, counterfeiting and human trafficking. They agreed to strengthen cooperation in the field of counter terrorism and intelligence sharing through expedited follow-up of each other's requests for legal assistance.

Science and Technology

25. The two Prime Ministers acknowledged the significance of cooperation in science and technology. Exchanges of technology, R&D, education and skills are encouraged to broaden ties between the scientific and technological communities of both governments. The leaders noted the importance of continued cooperation and declared their commitment to improve coordination in science and technology.
26. Both leaders acknowledged the progress made under the Programme of Cooperation in the field of science and technology and welcomed the implementation of joint research projects. They agreed that capacity building and joint projects on space application under existing institutional arrangements and agreements such as 'urban mapping', 'agriculture crop mapping' and 'archaeological atlas' would help in the betterment of lives of the people of the two countries.

Culture, Education and People-to-People Exchange

27. Both countries agreed to deepen cultural and historical ties between the two countries by promoting diverse cultural exchanges. Both sides welcomed the setting up of the Thailand-India Exchange Programme which would help accelerate people-to-people contacts in cultural and other fields benefiting both societies. Both sides agreed to further promote exchanges among parliamentarians, academicians, scientists, artists and intellectuals.

28. Recognizing the significance of educational collaboration, the two Prime Ministers agreed to promote more student exchanges at all levels and expressed interest in further enhancing the mobility and exchange of students between India and Thailand. The Thai side noted with appreciation that India would continue to offer 90 scholarships under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC), 26 scholarships under the Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and scholarships under AYUSH each year. Both sides noted with satisfaction the contribution of the ICCR Chair for Sanskrit Studies at Silpakorn University and welcomed the decision to establish an ICCR Chair for Hindi at Thammasat University, which has offered a Bachelor of Arts programme in Indian Studies for the first time this year while other universities in Thailand continue to offer Indian Studies courses.
29. The two Prime Ministers noted that institutional links between the two countries are progressing very well. They welcomed the increase in direct university to university collaboration and progress in the realisation of the shared goal of making the modern Nalanda University an international institution of excellence. India appreciated the Government of Thailand's contribution of USD 100,000 to the University's Establishment Fund, as well as contributions totalling more than USD 33,000 by Thailand's private sector, particularly those having investments in India, to the Thailand Fund for Nalanda University. The private contributions will be used to finance students and academicians pursuing Buddhist Studies, Philosophy and Comparative Religion.
30. Both sides reaffirmed their commitment to promote Thailand-India cultural exchanges. Thailand welcomed activities by the Indian Cultural Centre in Bangkok, which had been enhancing Thai citizens' understanding of the Indian culture.
31. Both sides discussed the implementation of the bilateral Cultural Exchange Programme for 2012-14, and in this connection welcomed the offer by the Indian Museum in Kolkata to hold a major exhibition on Buddhist art in Bangkok in collaboration with National Museum of Thailand.

32. People-to-people links are central to the relationship between Thailand and India. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed that both countries welcomed all legitimate travellers, including tourists, students, workers and monks. In this context, they expressed satisfaction over the progress made in the first two meetings of the ad hoc Thailand-India Joint Working Group on Visa and Consular Matters to facilitate and encourage people-to-people contact between the two countries in addressing issues related to travel, visa facilitation, the safety of tourists and employment with a view to achieve mutually satisfactory solutions.

Regional and Multilateral Cooperation

33. The two sides expressed their desire to further deepen their valued partnership and cooperation in the context of ASEAN-India strategic partnership as well as BIMSTEC. Both sides agreed to foster regional ties, particularly through the enhancement of economic, scientific, educational and technical cooperation.
34. Both leaders reiterated their commitment to development projects and capacity building in the lower Mekong region through the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation (MGC). In this context, both leaders supported the setting up of the MGC Asian Traditional Textiles Museum in Siem Reap, Cambodia. They also endorsed the usefulness of the India-CLMV Quick Impact Project Fund to give a fillip to short gestation projects under MGC.
35. The two sides acknowledged that the Leaders-led East Asia Summit can play a significant role as a forum for building an open, inclusive, transparent and participative architecture of regional cooperation in Asia and the Pacific to promote peace, stability and prosperity in the region.
36. The two Prime Ministers noted with appreciation the close cooperation between Thailand and India in various international fora and agreed to further enhance their cooperation in the United Nations and other international fora on matters of mutual interest.

37. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the Doha Gateway outcome of the 18th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and emphasized the need to work closely for a balanced outcome under the Durban Platform in accordance with the principles of Common but Differentiated Responsibilities and Equity. They welcomed the outcome of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) in June 2012 which reaffirmed the Rio Principles and made political commitment towards sustainable development and poverty eradication. The two leaders expressed their hope that the post-2015 Development Agenda would focus on development, economic growth and poverty eradication, preserve the national policy space and priorities of developing countries and provide the necessary means of implementation to developing countries.
38. The two leaders reiterated their strong support for the ongoing reform of the United Nations and its principal organs with a view to making the United Nations more democratic, transparent and efficient so that it can deal more effectively with the myriad challenges of the contemporary world. They emphasized the importance of an early reform of the United Nations Security Council so that it reflects the contemporary realities and functions in a more accountable, representative and effective manner. The Thai side acknowledged India's credentials for permanent membership of the UN Security Council. The two leaders commended each other's active role, continued constructive contributions and cooperation in the field of international peace and security.
39. The following agreements were signed during the visit: -
 - o Extradition Treaty.
 - o MoU on the Establishment of the Thailand-India Exchange Programme.

- o MOU between Geo-Informatics and Space Technology Development Agency and Survey of India for cooperation in the field of Mapping and Geospatial Technology Applications.
 - o MOU between Geo-Informatics and Space Technology Development Agency, Thailand and National Atlas and Thematic Mapping Organization, India for cooperation in the field of Mapping and Geospatial Technology Applications.

Bangkok

347. Extracts from Prime Minister's on-board Media Interaction en route to Delhi from Bangkok on May 31, 2013.

May 31, 2013

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and gentlemen, I have had two successful visits - first to Japan at the invitation of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, and then to Bangkok at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Thailand.

I believe both of the statements that have been issued at the end of these meetings have been made available to you. So, therefore, I will not waste your time in recapitulating what is contained in these two statements. If there are any questions that you have to ask, I will be very happy to answer them.

Q: My question is pertaining to your Japan tour. You just described it successful but specifically in terms of forward movement made on civil nuclear deal, is there any possibility of getting it signed with Japan before 2014 Lok Sabha polls?

Prime Minister: There have been discussions with Japan and this visit marked a formal move in that direction. I am hopeful that before long we will be able to put our signatures to a civil nuclear energy agreement with Japan as well.

Q: How do you describe the progress made so far in respect of the Look East Policy especially in the backdrop of your bi-nation visit? What is the progress made so far and are there any emerging new issues to be focused under the policy?

Prime Minister: The Look East Policy of the Government of India is not a new development. When Mr. Narasimha Rao was our Prime Minister, I was the Finance Minister. We charted out the course of action to get closer to Southeast Asian countries particularly ASEAN. Since then this process has been moving forward. ASEAN countries are our strategic partners and there are enormous opportunities of expanding trade ties, expanding investment relations, expanding maritime cooperation, expanding the scope of trade and investment. And now we have reached a stage where large-scale flow of trade and investment is becoming a reality.

We have, for example, the Dedicated Freight Corridor where Japan is helping us; we have Mumbai-Delhi Industrial Corridor where also the Japanese help will be available; the Mumbai-Bangalore corridor also there is a great interest of East-Asian countries like Japan, Thailand and Malaysia. So I am hopeful that this Look East Policy of India is paying rich dividends and the results are going to improve as we move forward.

Q: There is a new Government, a new dispensation in Pakistan and there has been quite a bit of cordiality from the side of Mr. Sharif as far as you visiting Pakistan. Could you give us any guidance on whether you plan to visit there before the end of this year? Also, what sort of outcomes you are expecting before it can be, as you said in your own words, business-as-usual with Pakistan again?

Prime Minister: I rang up Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on the very first day when election results were coming out. I conveyed my congratulations to him and I reciprocated his sentiments that India-Pakistan relations should move forward. I also invited him to visit India, he also invited me to visit Pakistan. There is an invitation from the Government of Pakistan for me to visit Pakistan. There is no firm decision on either side. No dates have been fixed. But we would certainly like to have good neighbourly relations with Pakistan. It has been consistently our policy that in India-Pakistan relations we should deal with all the outstanding issues. We are committed to resolve them in a peaceful manner. That is also the sentiment which was reciprocated by Shri Nawaz Sharif.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Thank you very much ladies and gentlemen.

348. Press Release of the Ministry of Defence on cooperation between India and Thailand in Defence production.

New Delhi, June 6, 2013.

The Defence Minister Shri AK Antony offered to discuss with Thailand possible areas of cooperation and collaboration in Defence production. During talks with his Thai counterpart Air Chief Marshal Sukumpol Suwanatat in Bangkok, Shri Antony said India has, over the years, developed a well established defence industry which can meet varying requirements of the Thai Armed Forces. He said India would welcome the visit of Thai teams to various Defence production facilities. Shri Antony said conscious planning, hard work by our scientists and support by the government is resulting in the growth of a strong defence industrial base in the country.

The talks between the two ministers covered a wide range of issues including regional security concerns. Shri Antony said both our countries have large stakes in the maintenance of peace and stability in our immediate neighbourhood and in the wider Asia Pacific region. He said our trade is dependent on the sea lanes. Hence, security of the sea lanes and freedom of navigation is critical to our economic and overall security. India supports the freedom of navigation in accordance with the principles of international law.

Shri Antony said our view is that peace and stability is in the interest of all countries in the region. "We support the resolution of differences and disputes through the process of dialogue and consensus between the parties to such disputes. All countries must exercise restraint and resolve issues diplomatically, according to the principles of international law".

Shri Antony said New Delhi has been of the consistent view that ASEAN is central to any security architecture for the region. "India is committed to efforts of ADMM Plus, ARF and the East Asia Summit for promoting dialogue and consensus building among all countries of the region", he said.

Earlier on his arrival at the Thai Ministry of Defence, Shri Antony was accorded an Inter-Services Guard of Honour. The Thai Defence Minister also hosted a lunch in honour of Shri Antony and his delegation.

349. Statement by Official Spokesman on situation in Thailand.

New Delhi, December 3, 2013.

We are following developments taking place in Thailand and are in constant contact with our Embassy in Bangkok, which is also providing updated information on current situation to Indian travellers and residents, including through its website.

We are supportive of all measures and efforts to address the situation through consultations in order to uphold the rule of law, preserve democracy and restore normalcy.

* The Spokesperson was referring to anti-government protests in the capital Bangkok against Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra calling for fresh elections .Finally in a military takeover, the Prime Minister was put underdetention.

350. Official Spokesperson's response to a question on situation in Thailand.

New Delhi, December 16, 2013.

In response to a question on situation in Thailand, Official Spokesperson said:

“We have taken note of recent developments in Thailand, our close friend, where fresh elections have been announced. We support all measures to uphold the rule of law, resolve political differences peacefully through dialogue and consultations within the constitutional framework and democratic processes of Thailand and to restore normalcy.”

TUVALU

351. Visit of Mr Taukelina Finikaso, Foreign Minister of Tuvalu to India (August 21-25, 2013).

New Delhi, August 23, 2013.

The Foreign Minister of Tuvalu, H.E. Mr Taukelina Finikaso is on an official visit to India from August 21 – 25, 2013. This is the first visit of Mr Finikaso who has recently taken charge as the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Trade, Tourism, Environment, and Labour, Govt. of Tuvalu.

Foreign Minister Finikaso called on Ms Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs and discussed bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest.

* Tuvalu, formerly known as the Ellice Islands, is a Polynesian island nation located in the Pacific Ocean, midway between Hawaii and Australia. It comprises three reef islands and six true atolls spread out from 6° to 10° south. Its nearest neighbours are Kiribati, Nauru, Samoa and Fiji. Its population of 11,200 makes it the third-least populous sovereign state in the world, with only Vatican City and Nauru having fewer inhabitants. In terms of physical land size, at just 26 square kilometres (10 sq mi) Tuvalu is the fourth smallest country in the world, larger only than the Vatican City.

Mr Finikaso has inaugurated the newly constituted Honorary Consulate of Tuvalu. The opening of Tuvalu's Hony Consulate provides both countries further opportunity to expand bilateral relations for mutual benefits.

India and Tuvalu enjoy warm and cordial relations. Tuvalu has been supportive of India's candidature in various international fora. India has provided project assistance under its Grant- in Aid Scheme for Pacific Island countries in areas such as health, water management, development projects and training as well as humanitarian assistance in times of need to Tuvalu.

VIETNAM

352. Transcript of the Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister.

New Delhi, January 9, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): I welcome you to this media interaction. As is usual, we will begin with opening statements by the two dignitaries.

I now request the External Affairs Minister of India to make his opening statement to the press.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Your Excellency Mr. Vu Van Ninh, Deputy Premier of Vietnam; friends from the media; ladies and gentlemen:

I am indeed very delighted to welcome His Excellency the Deputy Premier of Vietnam amidst us this morning. The Deputy Premier and I have just concluded a very productive round of discussions on the entire gamut of our bilateral relations and in particular on ways to take forward our strategic partnership.

The visit of the Deputy Premier to India this year is of special significance as he will be participating in the closing ceremony of the India-Vietnam

Friendship Year celebrated in India which commemorates the 40th anniversary of our diplomatic relations and 5th anniversary of our strategic partnership. Correspondingly, we have celebrations taking place in Vietnam, the closing ceremony of which will be presided over by our own Vice-President.

India and Vietnam enjoy very close cooperation, I need hardly tell you this, in various sectors including economic, commercial, scientific and technical, defence, security, cultural and people-to-people.

Today we have discussed ways to promote connectivity and further strengthen economic cooperation. Our corporate sector, we are pleased to note, is already engaged in several areas in investment in Vietnam. We are working together on several other projects. I am confident that once Indian banks are fully operational in Vietnam under the agreement signed between the State Bank of Vietnam and RBI, it will provide further impetus to our economic relations. And that will help us achieve our target of bilateral trade of US$ 7 billion by 2015.

His Excellency and I agreed that we have to sustain high-level visits to keep our bilateral relationship getting stronger. The State Visit of His Excellency the President Truong Tan Sang to India in October 2011 was significant from that point of view. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has greatly appreciated the visit of Prime Minister Nguyen Tan Dung of Vietnam to India for the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit which was held in December last year. This was yet another occasion for the leaders of the two countries to discuss various issues and deepen what is already an excellent relationship.

We consider Vietnam as a major pillar of our Look East Policy. I reiterated to His Excellency that India accords the highest priority to further strengthening of our ties with Vietnam, and will continue to work closely with it within the framework of multilateral fora such as ASEAN, Mekong-Ganga Cooperation, United Nations, and others as well.

In the Friendship Year of 2012, we have intensified exchanges in many sectors including cultural, academic and economic field. The international conferences on Buddhism, on Tagore, and Cham civilisational linkages in Vietnam held during the year have greatly enriched our understanding with each other and our interaction since times immemorial. We were privileged to receive several Vietnamese troupes in India including one that is performing this evening. The opening of an Indian Cultural Centre in Vietnam we hope will enhance this important cultural dimension of our relationship.

We thank His Excellency for his visit and look forward to working together to further strengthen our strategic partnership. Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: I now request the Deputy Prime Minister of Vietnam to make his opening remarks.

Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Vu Van Ninh): Ladies and gentlemen, at the invitation of the Indian Government I and my Delegation have come on an official visit to India this time on the occasion of the closing ceremony of the Vietnam-India Friendship Year. And I have had very useful and productive exchange with His Excellency the Minister.

Vietnam and India have enjoyed a very traditional long-term friendship over forty years of diplomatic relations. In the past five years we have established strategic partnership. And I am very happy at the results that we have recorded in the last five years.

We have promoted cooperation between the two countries in all different fields from politics to diplomacy, to national security and defence, to education and training, science and technology, and healthcare. We are very happy at the very successful organization of the very practical and meaningful activities to commemorate the Friendship Year over the past year.

We have agreed on increase of exchange of delegations, implementation of signed agreements between the two countries, and maintenance of different cooperation mechanisms such as the Joint Commission on Trade, the agreement on transfer of sentenced persons, the signing of the supplement aviation agreement between the two countries and the opening of direct flight routes between Hanoi or Ho Chi Minh city with New Delhi, the Mutual Legal Assistance Agreement between the two Ministries, and also other cooperation in terms of national defence and security, culture, education and people-to-people exchange.

We are determined to realize the goal of US$ 7 billion trade turnover by 2015. We have agreed to actively promote the visit of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to Vietnam at the invitation of the Vietnamese Prime Minister. India has also agreed to provide more flexible credit lines to Vietnam in terms of infrastructure and national security.

We are committed to continue to cooperate closely at international and regional forums. Especially we are committed to maintaining peace, stability, security, safety, freedom of navigation over the seas, and also access to resources in the East Sea of Vietnam. We are committed to avoiding violence or threatening to use violence in resolution of disputes in the sea. We would want to have peaceful negotiations based on international law especially the 1982 UNCLOS, the six-point principle of ASEAN, the ...(Inaudible)... construction at the sea ...(Inaudible)... in the South China Sea.

We would like to thank you the Government and the people of India and also the Minister personally for the warm hospitality accorded to me and my Delegation. We would hope to have very productive and positive results of our discussions today in the future. And also allow me to wish India sustainable development in the future for prosperous people.

Allow me to also finally conclude with an invitation to Indian companies to continue to invest and enter into Vietnam. We would hope and are committed to providing and assuring the legitimate rights and interests of foreign companies operating in Vietnam. Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: The two Ministers have agreed to take a few questions.

Q (Vietnamese Media)Vietnam and India have a very long and close relationship. What do you think is the most important...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister: Frankly, I think that is a very difficult question because we have discussed so many vast fields - economic, strategic and cultural; and I think each one has a very very important and significant role to play. But basically I think it is important that we continue with our people-to-people contact in a major way. We have a shared culture, we have a shared history, and we need to get new generations to discover that. It is very important that the new generations in Vietnam and in India discover what our great leaders like Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and President Ho Chi Minh had seen as a very special relationship both for the present and the future.

Q (Indian Media): Sir, my question is on a different issue. Today the High Commissioner of Pakistan Salman Bashir was summoned to Ministry of External Affairs over the gruesome killing of two Indian soldiers by the Pakistani soldiers. This was not a routine ceasefire violation. They had stepped inside our territory; they beheaded one soldier and took away the head. What kind of protest has been launched? Have you also demanded at least the immediate handing over of the head for the honourable funeral of the soldier that he deserves? Could we also take up this particular issue at the International Court or the United Nations?

External Affairs Minister: As far as my information goes, he was spoken to this morning. He was called to the Ministry this morning and he was spoken to in very strong terms. We have conveyed our deepest concern and protest at what has happened. You know, we had the discussions on 27th of December on the conventional CBMs; and the non-violation of the Line of Control ceasefire is the most important part of those CBMs. Therefore, violation of that in itself is something which is a matter of great concern. That obviously, if not immediately contained, would have an adverse impact on what we have been trying to do for such a long time.

But the specific context that has come to our notice about the manner in which the soldiers' bodies have been treated is of course a matter of very very deep concern, and indeed the sense of hurt that has been felt is taken on board. This has been conveyed as being unacceptable. We are doing the best that is possible. I expect that there will be some response from the other side. Our intent has been conveyed very clearly. Our anxiety has been conveyed very clearly. Now we would expect an appropriate response from that side. I can once again repeat that this is completely unacceptable.

At the same time, I think it is very important that we make sure that whatever has happened should not be escalated. We cannot and must not allow for an escalation of a very unwholesome event that has taken place. I hope that message has gone home.

Q (Indian Media): Mr. Deputy Prime Minister, Vietnam has some of the prettiest sights on the planet. But when I went there I had to change planes in Bangkok. It has got the kind of views which Indian tourists would like very much. As you know, every year 12 million Indian tourists go to all corners of the globe and spend something like US$ 25 billion. Fifteen months ago, Vietnam Airlines and Jet had signed an agreement for direct flights between Hanoi and New Delhi or Mumbai or wherever, but nothing has happened so far. When do you think these flights will start so that greater people-to-people action will take place?

Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister: I would like to answer the question as follows. As the Minister has mentioned, there is huge potential for tourism development between the two countries. I do recognize that Vietnamese coming to India and Indians coming to Vietnam right now are very limited and that is why we need to promote it. We have talked about measures this morning with the Minister, and this morning in my meeting with the Vietnam-India Friendship Association also I mentioned this fact. We would want to have promotion of people-to-people exchange between the two countries especially ...(Inaudible)... opening of direct flight routes between Hanoi and New Delhi or Ho Chi Minh city and New Delhi. We are committed to promoting people-to-people exchange. As Vietnam Airlines is a hundred per cent state-owned enterprise, we can and are committed to promotion of people-to-people exchange very soon in the near future.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

353. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (South) on the visit of Vice President to Vietnam.

New Delhi, January 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. I have an announcement to make and then we will follow from that.

The announcement I have to make is about the forthcoming visit of the Vice-President of India Shri Mohammed Hamid Ansari to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam at the invitation of the Vice-President of Vietnam. This visit will take place from the 14th to the 17th of January.

The visit of the Vice-President is part of our ongoing high-level interactions between India and Vietnam and will highlight the India-Vietnam Friendship Year which was launched in 2012 to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of full diplomatic relations, and the fifth anniversary of our strategic partnership.

During the visit the Vice-President will hold discussions with the Vietnamese leadership. Besides visiting Hanoi, he will also visit Ho Chi Minh City. We expect that the visit of the Vice-President will be an important landmark in our strategic partnership.

I have here with me today on my left Joint Secretary (South) Mr. Sanjay Bhattacharyya, and on my right Mr. Nagesh Singh from the Vice-President's Office. The intention is that Mr. Bhattacharyya will speak a little bit on issues relating to the Vice-President's visit and if necessary Mr. Nagesh Singh will help him out. Subsequent to that, if any of you have any questions, Mr. Bhattacharyya and Mr. Singh will respond to them. After that, if there are any other issues that you would like to ask me, I would be willing to respond.

I will now ask Mr. Sanjay Bhattacharyya, Joint Secretary (South) in the Ministry of External Affairs to make his opening remarks on the forthcoming visit of the Vice-President to Vietnam.

Joint Secretary (South) (Shri Sanjay Bhattacharyya): Thank you.

India-Vietnam relations have been very warm, friendly and stable. We have experienced positive momentum of cooperation in various sectors. The foundation of this relationship in contemporary times was laid in the interactions between Prime Minister Nehru and President Ho Chi Minh more than fifty years ago. These have been further developed by successive generations. The relations between the two countries are elevated to the level of strategic partnership during the visit of Vietnamese Prime Minister Nguyen Tan Dung to India in July 2007.

Vice President's visit to Vietnam is a part of the high-level exchanges between the two sides. In recent years, from the Vietnamese side the Vietnamese Prime Minister Nguyen Tan Dung had visited India in July 2007, and then again in December 2012 for the India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit. Their Vice-President had visited in 2009. The Chairman of their National Assembly, equivalent to our Speaker, and who is currently the General Secretary of the party, had visited in 2010. The President of Vietnam had paid a visit in 2011. So, you see from their side their top leadership have all visited India in the recent past. On our side as well, our President had visited Vietnam in 2008. Our Prime Minister had visited Vietnam for the India-ASEAN Summit in 2010. Speaker had visited Vietnam in 2011. So, the visit of the Vice-President would complete the circle of the top levels of our leadership.

The Friendship Year was launched in 2012. The Friendship Year has been a great occasion to further deepen our bonds of friendship. We have hosted several cultural and academic events in each other's countries, both in the capital cities as well as in the hinterland. These have included international conferences on Buddhism, Tagore and the Champ civilizational links which were held in Vietnam. These have further enriched our understanding of each other. We also had exhibitions of artistes, seminars of scholars, and interaction amongst business communities.

In terms of our bilateral relations, we view Vietnam as a pillar in our Look East Policy. We have a strong engagement with Vietnam both in the bilateral context as well as in the framework of ASEAN. Our close ties and cooperation with Vietnam are important in the context of the new trends that are emerging in the region and also in the context of the emerging regional architecture.

As we mentioned, our relations have both a positive momentum and vitality. Some of the areas in which there has been remarkable progress are in the areas of political understanding, defence and security, trade and investment, S&T and education, capacity building and bilateral assistance, and of course cultural, and people-to-people contacts.

Our trade volume was US$ 4 billion last year and we have a target to reach of US$ 7 billion. We recognize that there is great potential in this particular area and that the India-ASEAN FTA in goods which came in to force recently, two years ago actually, and the new agreement that we have on India ASEAN FTA in services and investment will unleash a new phase in our bilateral economic cooperation with Vietnam as well.

Our companies have made significant investments in various sectors. There are over 70 projects, if you look at Indian companies including those that are based outside of India. These are in various areas such as agriculture, carbon black, fertilizers, healthcare, IT. These have an outlay of almost US$ 800 million.

There are several new large investments which are on the anvil, and these include possible investments. Discussions are under way for steel, energy, and engineering products. We of course have a very longstanding cooperation with Vietnam in the oil and gas sector.

We worked very closely with Vietnam in capacity building through training programmes, ITEC is a big part of our relationship, and also in the establishment of several institutions in Vietnam. These are particularly in the areas of ICT. There is an Institute of Entrepreneurship Development, vocational training, English language, and we have an agricultural institute there as well. In total, there are about 150 scholarships that are offered under ITEC, and there are about 60 that are offered under the ICCR.

Our cultural bonds are very strong. Actually they go back to history. We plan to open an Indian Culture Centre in Hanoi very soon. There is a major project that the Archaeological Survey of India will be taking up – a three million dollar project – for the restoration of the UNESCO World Heritage Site at Mù Sôn, which is part of the Champa civilization which has a Hindu link. In conclusion, Vietnam is a very close friend with whom we have had peaceful cultural contacts over centuries. The visit of the Vice-President will expand our understanding and cooperation in our contemporary context and also deepen our civilizations bonds.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Let us begin with questions relating to what Sanjay has said on the visit of the Vice-President to Vietnam.

Question: What is the Delegation accompanying the Vice-President?

OSD to VP (Mr. Nagesh Singh): The official delegation is there. He is accompanied by Mr. Sachin Pilot, the Minister of State for Corporate Affairs (Independent Charge). Then he has four Members of Parliament who are accompanying him, one from Lok Sabha and three from Rajya Sabha. Besides that the MEA delegation is there led by Secretary (East). JS (South) and other officials will be there. That is the main delegation.

Q: There was an investment that Tata was considering in Vietnam and we have not heard about it for a while. It has been stalled for various reasons I believe. What is the status of that investment? When you said US$ 800 million, is it the total investment made by Indian companies in Vietnam? Over what period?

Joint Secretary (South): You are right. Tata plans to have a greenfield steel project in Vietnam. It is in the southern part of the country. They have been in discussions with the provincial authorities. It is going to be a huge project, about a US$ 5 billion project, and discussions are under way. I believe the site has been located. They are now in the process of completing all the formalities and agreements that are necessary before the actual project can begin. The investment figure that you mentioned, yes it is about the stock of investments made by Indian companies to date. There are actually 78 Indian projects exactly of which I think 16 are probably located from outside of India. And the total is US$ 790 million something. That is the stock till now.

Q: What is the status of military supplies from India to Vietnam? Is there any progress on turnaround facilities or logistics for Indian Navy in Vietnam?

Joint Secretary (South): Defence cooperation is a very strong part of our relationship. This has been there for a fairly long period of time. We are engaged in several training programmes for the Vietnamese armed forces. Our naval ships visit Vietnam on a regular basis and have port calls. We also have had visits of senior military officials to Vietnam, as have military officials from Vietnam come to India. We have what we call the Defence, Security, Strategic Dialogue which is at the level of Defence Secretary and Vice Minister on the Vietnamese side. And they decide the policy aspect. It is a very broad encompassing relationship that we share with Vietnam and it is a growing part of our relationship.

Q: What is our position on Vietnam's demand for a code of conduct on South China Sea?

Joint Secretary (South): Our position on the South China Sea is quite clear. We believe that we should have freedom of the right of navigation in these areas. And we believe that disputes, whatever they may be, should be resolved between the concerned parties. We, as you know, do have a certain interest, economic interest in that area. We have oil explorations. OVL has been engaged in that since the 1980s and these are continuing.

Q: The Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister had come and there was a reference to lines of credit, new lines of credit I presume. How much would that be? Would that announcement be made during the Vice-President's visit?

Joint Secretary (South): We have existing lines of credit with Vietnam. The total amount is some 461 crores, it may be 561 crores, of rupees. I can let you know that in a while. A large of it is for a hydro project. There is an offer of another US$ 100 million which has been there. These are all existing lines. So, the discussion that has been on is about the utilization of what exactly fills in that amount.

Q: Does India have a view on the crackdown on pro-democracy activists in Vietnam? We have been seeing it of late.

Joint Secretary (South): I have not factored that in.

Official Spokesperson: I think with that we come to the end of this element. If you have any questions on anything else, I will be willing to answer them.

Q: Sir, what is our response to the demarche by Pakistan Foreign Office to Indian High Commissioner in Islamabad over the reported killing of one Pakistani soldier by Indian army?

Official Spokesperson: You are right that the Indian High Commissioner in Islamabad was called to the Pakistani Foreign Office today afternoon. He met the Pakistani Foreign Secretary Mr. Jilani. At the meeting he was handed a note verbale regarding an incident that is said to have occurred at the Hotspring Sector on the LoC on 10th January, 2013. This is said to have led to the death of a Pakistani soldier. Those are the contents of that note verbale.

The High Commissioner in his response stated that as we understand it there has been unprovoked firing from the Pakistani side in the afternoon yesterday, 10th January, 2013, in the Mendhar sector and there was a controlled response from our side. The High Commissioner also emphasized the sanctity of the LoC in Jammu and Kashmir established after the Simla Agreement of 1972. And he said this was the most important confidence-building measure between India and Pakistan.

Q: Pakistan has held up 25 of our trucks laden with our goods for trading. The news is also coming that they have stopped our bus service also. What is your position?

Official Spokesperson: It is true that there is since yesterday for some local reasons, no bus or truck has been able to come. Our officers are in contact with them, when some news comes, you will be informed.

Q: Has Pakistan also stopped the cross LoC bus service?

Official Spokesperson: I think he was referring to the same issue. There is only one issue there. My understanding is that because of local circumstances, yesterday the gates could not be opened on the Pakistani side on one route which has led to both the trucks and the bus not being able to go. At this stage, there will be a discussion with the concerned authorities and we will let you know the outcome of this.

Q: Sir, we heard the National Security Advisor yesterday pretty much dismissing any mandate the UN Military Observers Group might have in terms of investigating ceasefire violations. But again we have heard from Pakistan's Foreign Minister following the NSA's clarification. What do you make of this public sparring on this particular issue? What is India's position? Do they have a mandate? What is their presence in India all about?

Official Spokesperson: You know it is well-known that following the signing of the Simla Agreement in January 1972 and the establishment of the Line of Control, the UNMOGIP has no relevance or role to play whatsoever. The Simla Agreement commits both countries to resolve all issues through bilateral negotiations.

Many of you have raised this question time and again. I would just like to mention to all of you that we are in 2013. Let us not look at instrumentalities which were last used more than forty years ago to try and solve problems of today and to avoid any future problems. India and Pakistan have a mechanism for trying to resolve these issues bilaterally. The DGMOs have been in touch. We have regular interactions at the diplomatic level. And we are fully capable of handling all these matters without any reference whatsoever to either what you mentioned to or to any other third party. I hope I have made that very very clear.

Q: Sir, the Pakistan Foreign Office summoned the Indian Deputy High Commissioner and then the High Commissioner today in a space of less than five days basically to protest ceasefire violation according to them. There were 117 ceasefire violations reported by India last year. For any of the ceasefire violations which happened from either side, did the Pakistanis summon India's High Commissioner or Deputy High Commissioner in Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: You would have known that before if they had, like you knew of the last instance.

Q: Mr. Menon has met today his counterpart from China. Could you please tell us about the outcome of the meeting?

Official Spokesperson: I am afraid I do not have a full readout of that. But based on our understanding the idea was Mr. Dai Bingo, the Special Representative from the Chinese side, is here for a multilateral event, the meeting of BRICS National Security Advisors or the High Representatives for National Security. This was sort of a meeting on the sidelines of that. I do not have a full readout of that meeting but my understanding is that it was to cover all issues of bilateral interest. Also, this is likely to be Mr. Dai Bingo's last visit to India, and so, a sort of summary of what has been the interaction so far. But I do not have a specific readout of all issues that were covered.

Q: Sir, despite leaders meeting on both the sides for de-escalation of violence ... (Inaudible)... Where do you think does the solution lie?

Official Spokesperson: I think we have mentioned that the DGMOs are in contact and the solutions, as required, are being sorted out bilaterally.

Q: Pakistan denies every thing. When you furnish proof, they don't accept them. They repeat their innocence. Despite this you just say we have to sit down and talk. This is not the first time they are violating the Simla Agreement; It was done earlier also so. We Musharraf had visited, he too did not agree with us. Despite this we show our large heartedness. We always extend our hand of friendship, how many time we are to be betrayed?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much for that enlightened discourse on India-Pakistan relations. But this has been an established policy of all our leadership that ultimately we have to work out our problems with our neighbours. Neighbours are not going to go away. Therefore, it is in the interest of India and Pakistan both to work out a relationship which will ensure peace and security for both our people. I understand your concern. It is those concerns which are reflected in Government meetings. So, please do not think that concerns that you have espoused just now are not reflected. These are reflected and are reflected very strongly including in the last meeting that the Foreign Secretary had with the Pakistani High Commissioner here.

Thank you very much

354. Speech by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the banquet hosted by Madam Nguyen Thi Doan, Vice President of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam .

Hanoi, January 15, 2013.

Your Excellency, Madam NGUYEN THI DOAN, Vice President of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be in a country that holds a special place in the hearts of the Indian people. The occasion itself, the conclusion of an India-Vietnam Friendship Year, adds to the significance of the visit. I congratulate all those who contributed to making the Friendship Year a great success.

Vietnam and India share a long tradition of close relations. Its foundations were laid by our great leaders, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and President Ho Chi Minh. Successive generations of our leaders - and here I would specially like to recall Prime Ministers Indira Gandhi and Pham Van Dong - nurtured this friendship.

We in India have admiration for the indomitable spirit of the Vietnamese people, for their determination to succeed against all odds, for their tenacity and courage against adversity.

Vietnam's rapid economic and social development resulting in increased prosperity for your people is commendable. The success of your efforts in achieving the Millennium Development Goals are worthy of emulation. I congratulate the leadership and people of Vietnam for their success in reducing poverty from 58 percent to less than 10 percent in two decades.

Excellency

Today Vietnam and India have a Strategic Partnership founded on a common vision, shared interests and mutual trust and friendship. We are convinced that it will promote peace, stability and security in this region and the world.

We stand ready to impart greater content to our partnership for mutual benefit. The agreements and MoUs that we have signed today will open new avenues for bilateral cooperation.

We value our strategic understanding and cooperation at regional and multilateral forums like ASEAN, Mekong-Ganga Cooperation, East Asia Summit, ASEM and international organisations like the United Nations and WTO. We deeply appreciate Vietnam's support to India's candidature as a permanent member of an expanded UN Security Council.

As two developing countries with a stake in the future, we must take advantage of our synergies to jointly face emerging challenges and also to exploit new opportunities.

We wish to bring together the exchange of ideas and culture, with a contemporary face, to our ancient bonds of friendship. To facilitate these ties and promote people-to-people contacts, we plan to open the Indian Cultural Centre in Hanoi this year.

Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to invite you all to join me in a toast:

- To the good health and happiness of Her Excellency, Madam NGUYEN THI DOAN, Vice President of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam and all of you present here tonight;
- To the well-being and prosperity of the friendly people of Vietnam; and
- To the everlasting friendship between India and Vietnam.

Thank you

355. Speech of M. Hamid Ansari, Vice President of India at the Closing Ceremony of the India-Vietnam Friendship Year in Hanoi.

Hanoi, January 15, 2013.

Your Excellency,

Madam NGUYEN THI DOAN, Vice President of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam,

Your Excellency, Mr. Vu Xuan Hong, President of the Vietnam Union of Friendship Organizations,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be in Vietnam for the closing ceremony of the India-Vietnam Friendship Year. We are at a historic juncture in our bilateral relations. The year 2012 marked the 40th anniversary of establishment of our full diplomatic relations and the 5th anniversary of our strategic partnership. In fact, we are celebrating the millennia of contacts between our peoples and our civilizations.

I would like to thank the Vietnam Union of Friendship Organizations for having taken this initiative in organizing this event.

While we are celebrating forty years of official diplomatic relations, the ties between our peoples are much older; indeed, they go back into antiquity when traders and sea-farers, sages and savants crossed the oceans and the seas exchanging goods and services, ideas and knowledge, culture and spiritual traditions. The splendid monuments of the Champa civilization at My Son and the universal philosophy of love and compassion of Lord Buddha are living symbols of the cultural interface between our civilizations.

In more recent times, our great leaders Jawaharlal Nehru and Ho Chi Minh forged a warm friendship as our nations were struggling to be free from the colonial yoke. "Shared ideas link you and me," wrote Ho Chi Minh from his prison cell to Pt. Nehru. Prime Minister Nehru was the first foreign leader to personally visit Vietnam and congratulate its leaders one week after the great victory at Dien Bien Phu in October 1954.

I am particularly happy to be here today with successive generations of Vietnamese students, scholars, officials and others who have studied in India. Each one of you personally symbolizes the warm feelings and fraternal friendship between India and Vietnam. All of you, in diverse ways, have further strengthened our close relations. I would specially like to thank the Vietnam Union of Friendship Organizations and to thank Vietnam-India Friendship Association and its many chapters in Hanoi, Ho Chi Minh City and other provinces and cities of Vietnam for being true Ambassadors of India and Indian culture.

India values its relations with Vietnam. Our shared interests and aspirations form the basis of our relations. It was said by Late Prime Minister Pham Van Dong that our relations are as clear as the blue sky without any clouds. Today, we can look forward towards the future with confidence.

Over the years, the commitment shown by the leadership in the two countries resulted in the signing of the Joint Declaration Cooperation Framework in 2003, which culminated in the establishment of a "Strategic Partnership" in 2007.

Our partnership is based on a common vision, shared interests and mutual trust and friendship. It is for mutual benefit and for regional peace, stability and prosperity. We share a strategic understanding and cooperation at regional and multilateral forums.

Vietnam has emerged as a regional power in South-East Asia with political stability and a dynamic economy. Our bilateral economic and trade ties have grown significantly in recent years, though much more remains to be done.

We have set a target of 7 billion US$ for bilateral trade by 2015. We are confident of achieving it. We need to generate greater awareness about mutually beneficial business opportunities, thereby facilitating trade and investment. Indian companies have ventured into Vietnam in increasing numbers with investments in diverse sectors and in several provinces. Indian companies in the field of oil and gas exploration are already actively engaged in several projects in Vietnam. India is also prepared to continue extending lines of credit on concessional terms, especially for infrastructure development.

India has been a long-standing partner in Vietnam's development process. Our cooperation in diverse areas such as agriculture, science and technology, education, capacity building and human resource development is growing. We enjoy robust cooperation in the areas of defence and security. We are strengthening our cooperation in the field of Human Resource Development and Capacity Building.

Our cultural ties rooted in antiquity are growing stronger. The opening of the Indian Cultural Centre in Hanoi this year will bring to the people of Vietnam a flavour of India. It would greatly facilitate our cultural ties and promote people-to-people contacts.

During our 'Year of Friendship' we have both organized several commemorative events, cultural performances, seminars and business promotion events. The decision to set up the Institute of Indian and South West Asian Studies, under the aegis of Vietnam Academy of Social Sciences is a testimony to the desire on both sides to engage more closely. We will continue our support for the activities of the Institute.

The year 2012 also marked the 20th anniversary of India's relationship with ASEAN. To commemorate this occasion, a special India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit was held in India in December. Several events including the India-ASEAN car rally, a Goodwill visit by a sail training ship, business conclaves and cultural activities were organized to commemorate this event.

In closing, I would like to express my appreciation for all those here and in India whose cooperation and hard work were essential to making the Year of Friendship a grand success.

Long live our friendship and cooperation. I wish you all a very happy new year.

Thank you

356. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry on the visit of Minister of State Dr. D. Purandeswari to Vietnam.

New Delhi, April 29, 2013.

357. External Affairs Minister's statement to the Media during 15th Meeting of India-Vietnam Joint Commission.

New Delhi, July 11, 2013.

Your Excellency, Mr. Pham Binh Minh, Minister for Foreign Affairs; Distinguished Members of the Vietnamese side,
Colleagues from the Indian delegation,
Friends from the media

I am delighted to welcome my friend H.E. Mr. Pham Binh Minh, Foreign Minister of Vietnam who is visiting India for the 15th meeting of the Joint Commission between our countries. He has a deep connection with India and has many friends here. It is like home coming.

This morning, we had a meeting to discuss the strengthening of our strategic partnership which included exchange of a cooperative agenda on bilateral relations and regional and global issues. I am satisfied that the India-Vietnam Strategic Partnership is developing well. We have agreed to consolidate our activities and add greater content to the partnership and bilateral relations in the fields of defence and security, trade & investment, science & technology, information technology, capacity building and human resource development, agriculture, education & culture and other areas of common interest.

Thereafter, we co-chaired the 15th India-Vietnam Joint Commission Meeting on Trade, Economic, Scientific and Technological Cooperation. The Meeting took stock of our entire range of bilateral relations and identified areas for future cooperation to strengthen and expand our strategic partnership. We reviewed the implementation of activities agreed for 2011-13 under bilateral cooperation and exchanges and agreed to a plan of activities for 2013-15. Our cooperation in regional and multilateral fora was also discussed.

At the end of the meeting, we signed the Agreed Minutes of the JCM. You have witnessed the signing of an Agreement on the 19.5 million US Dollars LOC for setting up Nam Trai-IV hydropower project and Binh Bo Pumping station by CMD, Exim Bank and Vietnamese Vice Minister of Finance.

The Vietnamese Foreign Minister will call on Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India during his visit. He will also deliver a speech on “India-Vietnam Relations and Regional Issues” at ICWA.

India-Vietnam strategic partnership is characterised by warm and close bilateral relations and high degree of trust and understanding at political levels. High level visits have played a very important role in consolidating and strengthening our relations. Regular meetings between our PM and Vietnamese leaders have taken place on the sidelines of multilateral summit meetings. The institutional architecture of the India-Vietnam strategic partnership is based on the joint declaration on Strategic Partnership of 2007 and dialogue mechanisms and agreements.

Vietnam has regularly reiterated its support for India's candidature for permanent membership of an expanded UNSC. It has also signed the G-4 Draft Resolution on reforms of the UNSC.

India-Vietnam security and defence cooperation is robust and growing, based on shared interests and a convergence in our security perceptions.

Economic ties have expanded with Vietnam receiving substantial Indian private sector investments and growing trade. Bilateral trade has grown to 6.1 billion US Dollars in 2012-13. We are well on track to cross the target of 7 billion US Dollars by 2015. Investments by Indian companies totals about 936 million US Dollars in 86 projects in sectors such as oil and gas exploration, mineral exploration and processing, sugar manufacturing, agro-chemicals, IT, and agricultural processing.

Recently, Vietnam has chosen Tata Power as developer for a 1.8 billion US Dollars 2X660 MW Long Phu 2 Thermal Power Project in Soc Trang Province in southern Vietnam, despite strong competition from Korean and Russian companies. It will be the single largest Indian investment in Vietnam when it comes through and will give a strong boost to our economic cooperation and the strategic partnership. The MoU between the two Central Banks, viz. Reserve Bank of India and the State Bank of Vietnam, signed in 2012, will enable Bank of India and Indian Overseas Bank to upgrade their representative offices that they opened in Ho Chi Minh City in February 2003 and March 2008 respectively into full-fledged branches in near future.

India has extended 17 LoCs totalling 164.5 mn US Dollars, including 19.5 million US Dollars LoC for setting up Nam Trai-IV hydropower project and Binh Bo Pumping station, signed today. India has also agreed to consider earmarking USD 100 million under the Buyer's Credit under the National Export Insurance Account (BC-NEIA) for use by Vietnam.

The two countries have strong cooperation in capacity building and human resources development. Vietnam has been participating actively in training programmes under Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme. Presently, 150 ITEC slots are being offered to Vietnam every year along with 16 scholarships under the General Cultural Scholarship Scheme (GCSS), 14 scholarships under the Educational Exchange Programme (EEP) and 10 scholarships under the MGC Scholarship Scheme.

India has set up a 2 million US Dollars Vietnam-India Advanced Resource Centre in ICT (ARC-ICT) in Hanoi and is providing a PARAM Supercomputer, costing Rs 4.7cr, as a grant, for use in multiple applications. The Vietnam-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre (VIEDC) and a Vietnam-India English Language Training Center (VICELT) have been established with Indian assistance under the IAI (Initiative for ASEAN Integration) as well. An IBSA funded Rice Seed Improvement Project in Danang is ongoing.

We plan to establish an Indian Cultural Centre in Hanoi this year and hope that it will further promote cultural cooperation between the two countries. Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) is about to finalise an agreement on conservation of the ancient remains of the Cham Civilization at My Son. This will help revive our ancient heritage and cultural links.

We attach great importance to the development of our relations with Vietnam and move forward on India-Vietnam strategic partnership by adding more content in all areas. You will recall, the year 2012 marked the 40th anniversary of the establishment of full diplomatic relations between India and Vietnam, the 5th anniversary of the India-Vietnam Strategic Partnership, the 20th anniversary of partnership between India and ASEAN. The two sides celebrated it as the 'Year of Friendship between India and Vietnam'.

Thank You

358. Joint Media Interaction by External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister of Vietnam.

New Delhi, July 11, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends, I welcome you to this media interaction. As is usual, we will begin with opening remarks. I now request the External Affairs Minister of India, Shri Salman Khurshid, to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister of India (Shri Salman Khurshid):Your Excellency Mr. Pham Binh Minh, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Vietnam; distinguished members of the Vietnamese Delegation, colleagues from the Indian Delegation, and friends from the media:

It is a great honour and indeed a great pleasure to be welcoming a very good friend of India and a friend of mine who is visiting India for the fifteenth meeting of the Joint Commission between our two countries. This is the platform for strengthening our Strategic Partnership. We took advantage of this occasion to spend some time together and agreed in frank and friendly discussions to consolidate our activities with greater content the partnership and bilateral relations that we have in the field of defence, security, trade, investment, science and technology, information technology, capacity building and human resource development, agriculture, education and culture, as indeed all other areas of common interest.

We took stock of entire range of the bilateral relations and identified areas in future cooperation that will not only strengthen our relationship but give benefit to people on both sides through the implementation of the activities that we have agreed for years 2011 to 2013 under the bilateral cooperation and exchanges that we have agreed and the planned activities for the 2013-2015 period.

At the end of the meeting we have also signed the agreed minutes of the JCM. You have witnessed also just now the signing of agreement on the US$ 19.5 million LoC. This is for the setting up of the Nam Trai-IV hydropower project and the Binh Bo Pumping station by CMD, Exim Bank on our side and the Vietnamese Vice-Minister of Finance.

The Hon. Minister will call on our Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during this visit. He will also deliver a speech on “India-Vietnam Relations and Regional Issues” at the ICWA.

We believe and we have agreed that it is important that this warm and fruitful relationship that we have between our two countries needs to be continuously fed by important high-level visits that have in the past played a very important role in consolidating our relationship. And these regular meetings that we have, we expect and hope, will continue at the highest level. The institutional architecture of the India-Vietnam strategic partnership is based on the Joint Declaration on Strategic Partnership that was made in 2007 and the dialogue mechanisms that we have in place.

We want to acknowledge and thank Vietnam for regularly reiterating its support for India’s candidature for permanent membership of an expanded UN Security Council. In this context Vietnam has signed the G4 Draft Resolution on the reforms of the UNSC, and we express our gratitude. Our security and defence cooperation is robust and growing because we have shared common interest and convergence in security perceptions. And this has played a very major role in India’s engagement with ASEAN as well.

On the economic ties, we can express with satisfaction that they continue to expand with Vietnam receiving substantial Indian private sector investments and growing trade. Bilateral trade has grown to US$ 6.1 billion in 2012-13. We are well on track to cross the target of US$ 7 billion that we have put for the 2015 deadline.

Investments by Indian companies now total about US$ 936 million 86 separate projects in sectors such as oil and gas exploration, mineral exploration, processing, sugar manufacturing, agro-chemicals, IT, and the agricultural processing sector.

Very recently, Vietnam has chosen Tata Power as developer for a US$ 1.8 billion 2x660 MW Long Phu-2 thermal power project in Soc Trang Province in southern Vietnam. And this came despite strong competition from friendly countries like Korea and Russia. It will be the single largest Indian investment in Vietnam when it comes through and will give a strong boost to our economic cooperation and strategic partnership.

The MoU between two Central Banks - that is the Reserve Bank of India and the State Bank of Vietnam - signed in 2012 will enable Bank of India and Indian Overseas Bank to upgrade their representative offices, that they have opened in Ho Chi Minh City in February 2003 and March 2008 respectively, into full-fledged branches in the very near future.

India has extended 17 LoCs totalling US$ 164.5 million, including the US$ 19.5 million that I just mentioned. India has also agreed to consider earmarking another US$ 100 million under the Buyer's Credit under the National Export Insurance Account, for use by Vietnam.

In capacity building and in human resource development we have a very strong relationship. Vietnam has been participating actively in training programmes under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC). A 150 ITEC slots are being offered to Vietnam at present every year along with 16 scholarships under the General Cultural Scholarship Scheme (GCSS), 14 scholarships under the Educational Exchange Programme (EEP), and 10 scholarships under the MGC Scholarship Scheme.

We have set up a US$ 2 million Vietnam-India Advanced Resource Centre in ICT in Hanoi; and we are providing very soon a PARAM Supercomputer costing Rs 4.7 crore as a grant for use in multiple applications.

The Vietnam-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre and the Vietnam-India English Language Training Center have been established with Indian assistance under the Initiative for ASEAN Integration (IAI) as well. An IBSA-funded Rice Seed Improvement Project in Danang is ongoing and is very successful.

We plan to establish the Indian Cultural Centre in Hanoi this year and hope that it will further promote cultural cooperation between our two countries. Archaeological Survey of India is about to finalise an agreement on conservation of ancient remains of the Cham Civilization in My Son. This will help revive the ancient heritage and cultural links that we have between our two countries and that we all cherish greatly. We attach great importance to the development of our relations with Vietnam and move forward on India-Vietnam strategic partnership by adding more content in all areas all the time.

You will recall, ladies and gentlemen, the year 2012 marked the 40th anniversary of the establishment of full diplomatic relations between India and Vietnam, the fifth anniversary of the India-Vietnam Strategic Partnership, the twentieth anniversary of partnership between India and ASEAN. So, there is convergence on all sides. The two sides, therefore, celebrated it as the Year of Friendship between India and Vietnam, and we expect that friendship to grow from strength to strength.

Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: I now request the Foreign Minister of Vietnam to make his opening remarks.

Foreign Minister of Vietnam (Mr. Pham Binh Minh): Thank you Your Excellency Minister Salman Khurshid.

Ladies and gentlemen, Minister Khurshid and I have just successfully co-chaired the 15th Joint Commission Meeting. The meeting was held in a friendly and cooperative atmosphere and in the spirit of the Vietnam-India traditional friendship and mutual trust.

Mr. Minister and I have discussed at length the bilateral cooperation and regional and international issues of mutual interest. We noted with satisfaction the positive developments in the Vietnam-India Strategic Partnership in the past years, especially in all pillars such as politics, economy, security and defence, science and technology, and culture and education.

We also noted that there remains vast potential for mutually beneficial bilateral cooperation particularly in high technologies, oil and gas, tourism, and agricultural production.

In further promoting bilateral cooperation in all areas, Minister Khurshid and I agreed upon major directions and concrete actions such as sustaining the exchange of visits at high level and low level, and soon opening direct flights to facilitate tourism and people-to-people exchanges. We also agreed to establish a joint trade sub-commission under the Joint Commission towards obtaining the US$ 7 billion in trade turnover by 2015.

Vietnam is committed to creating favourable conditions for Indian business investing in Vietnam. I am joined in this mission by representatives of various agencies from Vietnam – Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Agriculture, Public Security, Industry and Trade, Investment and Planning Education. And they have had detailed discussions with their Indian counterparts on how our bilateral cooperation could be more effective and practical.

I agree totally with all the Minister has briefed you on the positive developments of relations between Vietnam and India.

I also would like to take this opportunity to affirm our support to India's Look East Policy which manifests India's more active role in the Asia-Pacific region and the world at large thus contributing to shared developments of the region for peace, stability and prosperity. Concerning regional and international issues we agreed to continue our close coordination and cooperation at regional and international fora such as the United Nations, the Nonaligned Movement, and other ASEAN mechanisms.

Also we would like to take this opportunity to thank India for supporting Vietnam's candidature to the Human Rights Council for the term 2014-2016, and the International Hydrographic Organisation.

I also would like to thank the Minister and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for organizing and chairing this meeting.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: The two Ministers have agreed to take a couple of questions:

Q(Vietnam News Agency): As I know, the relationship between Vietnam and India is very good. But Excellency, could you give some details on what India can do put ahead the key aspect of Vietnam-India strategic partnership including defence, security ties, trade and investment, information technology, science and technology cooperation?

External Affairs Minister of India: You will see when the agreed minutes are made available, we have had very extensive convergence both of strategies and of the objectives that we need to meet in all these fields. Of course it would involve some more meetings of high officials, and I have invited Minister for Defence later this year before the visit of the General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam. We hope that there will be other visits perhaps on both sides so that we can complete some more formalities and get closer to the delivery that we aspire on all these fields.

In many areas it involves institution building or consolidation; in many areas it will involve some more work for the MoUs to be signed. And in defence we want including defence and security issues to be able to consult much further. And of course the supply of patrol vehicles to the Border Guards Organisation on the Vietnamese side will be a major and unique step of expression of our solidarity and friendship. So, in the entire range of issues that have been mentioned by His Excellency and have been mentioned by me, we are looking at how we take the relationship forward in a substantive and specific way within the timelines that are drawn up.

Q(Press Trust of India): Was the issue of South China Sea discussed?
...(Inaudible)...

External Affairs Minister of India: There are no issues but I will let the Minister answer this.

Foreign Minister of Vietnam: Minister Khurshid and I have discussions on a wide range of issues, on all the issues of bilateral relations as well as the relations of mutual interest. So, South China Sea or Eastern Sea is one of the issues we have also had discussions on. Our position is that we need to respect the international law, UNCLOS to solve the issue in South China Sea namely that the peaceful resolution of the issue.

We also reaffirmed all the rights of the countries to have the rights in the exclusive economic zone. So, all the blocks that India has exploitation and exploration basins are well within the exclusive economic zone of Vietnam.

External Affairs Minister of India: We have expressed our commitment for continuing our collaboration with Vietnam in the field of exploration. We have reiterated that these are commercial ventures by the Indian companies. This is other than the fact that we have, not just here but also at the ASEAN meeting, reiterated India's commitment to free passage in the international waters, and have indicated that if there is an issue of a bilateral nature it should be settled bilaterally through dialogue in a peaceful manner. But this was also an issue that was discussed widely at the ARF. And I think a convergence of points of view within the ASEAN countries has become apparent to move towards negotiating the COC for South China Sea.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

359. Seventh India-Lao Joint Commission Meeting on Bilateral Cooperation.

Vientiane, September 9, 2013.

Shri Salman Khurshid, Minister of External Affairs visited the Lao PDR from 8-10 September, 2013. He held the 7th Lao-India Joint Commission Meeting on bilateral cooperation with his counterpart Dr. Thongloun Sisoulith, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Lao PDR in Vientiane on 9 September 2013. He will call on Mr. Choummaly Sayasone, President and Mr. Thongsing Thammavong, Prime Minister and will also inaugurate the 2nd Roundtable of the ASEAN-India Network of Think Tanks, on 10 September 2013.

An Agreement under Line of Credit for four Irrigation Projects in three provinces in the Lao PDR for US$ 30.94 million was signed and conversion of another Line of Credit to substitute the Nam Boun-2 hydro power plant by the extension of transmission lines to Thasala-Laksao amounting to US$ 35.25 million was approved. The projects will contribute to socio-economic development in Lao PDR.

During the JCM, both Ministers expressed satisfaction with the development in bilateral relations and noted that close cooperation and partnership between the two countries have expanded rapidly for mutual benefit, in recent years. India reiterated its preparedness to continue to provide assistance to the areas of water management and irrigation, energy generation and transmission and capacity building. It was recognized that our soft credit and grant projects have improved the visibility of India and Indian products in Lao.

The Ministers identified agriculture, defence, ICT, culture, education, health, trade and investment promotion, mining as priority areas of cooperation between the two countries that would give further impetus to bilateral relations. A number of new initiatives were taken to promote people-to-people contacts, training and scholarship opportunities and expansion of private sector participation in trade and investment, as well as in health and education.

Both Ministers also exchanged views on a wide range of bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest. They agreed to strengthen coordination on ASEAN and multilateral issues. Lao has extended financial support to the Nalanda University, which is being developed as a centre of international excellence. Lao reiterated its support to India on UN and other multilateral issues.

EAM invited Foreign Minister of Lao PDR to visit India for the next meeting of the Joint Commission.

360. Homage paid by Defence Minister A.K. Antony to Gen. Giap.

New Delhi October 15, 2013.

In his first public engagement in a month, the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony drove down to the Vietnamese Embassy in the capital and paid homage on behalf of the nation to Gen Vo Nguyen Giap, the brilliant commander who brought victory for Vietnam in many wars. Gen Giap passed away in Hanoi on 04 October at the age of 102. 1. The Indian defence delegation members led by Shri Antony were the last foreign visitors who were received by Gen Giap and his wife at their modest residence in Hanoi on 17 December 2007. Offering the deepest condolences on behalf of Government of India, Shri Antony said India shares the grief of the people of Vietnam on the passing of one of their most respected national heroes. He said Gen Giap's leadership of Vietnam's national liberation had evoked the admiration of the Indian people. 'He shall remain an inspiration to people all over the world', Shri Antony said.

361. Press Release of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the signing of the Treaty between India and Vietnam on Transfer of sentenced prisoners.

New Delhi, November 12, 2013.

The Union Home Minister Shri Sushilkumar Shinde and Minister of Public Security of Vietnam Mr. Tran Dai Quang signed a treaty on transfer of sentenced prisoners. The Treaty will help the Indian prisoners imprisoned in Vietnam or vice-versa to be near their families for serving remaining part of their sentence. This would facilitate the process of their social rehabilitation.

The Government of India has so far signed such Agreements with the Governments of U.K., Mauritius, Bulgaria, Cambodia, Egypt, France, Bangladesh, Korea, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Sri Lanka, UAE, Maldives, Thailand, Turkey, Italy, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Israel and Russia. Negotiations have also been concluded with the Government of Canada, Hong Kong, Brazil, and Spain. These treaties have helped in repatriation of 43 Indian prisoners from Sri Lanka, Mauritius and UK. Similarly 7 prisoners of UK and France were repatriated to their respective countries.

The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders adopted the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners in 1985 and since then many countries have arrived at bilateral and multilateral treaties. The Repatriation of Prisoners Act, 2003 was enacted for achieving the above purpose. For achieving the objectives of the Act, a treaty is required to be signed with countries having mutual interest on this matter.

In addition to the above, the two Ministers also held bilateral talks on security matters, issues of training, capacity building, cyber security, cyber crime, trans-national crime, terrorism and disaster management. They reiterated the resolve of both the countries of working together on different issues of mutual interest.

362. Media Statements of Prime Minister and the General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam.

New Delhi, November 20, 2013.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh: Your Excellency Mr. Nguyen Phu Trong, General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the media,

I am delighted to welcome His Excellency General Secretary Nguyen Phu Trong on his first State Visit to India.

Both India and Vietnam belong to a region that holds enormous potential, but also many challenges. We have a strong convergence of interests in working together, and with others in the region, for a stable, peaceful and prosperous Asia. We have therefore sought to build a comprehensive relationship with a broad-based agenda of bilateral and regional cooperation. Vietnam's emergence as one of the most vibrant economies in the Asia Pacific region is greatly welcomed by India, especially because we regard Vietnam as a trusted and privileged strategic partner and an important pillar of our Look East Policy.

General Secretary Trong and I held very cordial and productive discussions today. We have agreed on a number of initiatives that will define the contours of our Strategic Partnership in the years ahead.

We reaffirmed the importance of defence and security cooperation in our overall Strategic Partnership and agreed to strengthen it further. India will continue to assist Vietnam in modernization and training of its defence and security forces, including through a 100 million U.S. dollar line of credit for defence purchases. We will also help in setting up the Indira Gandhi High-tech Cyber Forensic Laboratory in Hanoi and a Vietnam-

India English and IT Training Centre at the National Defence Academy of Vietnam.

Our bilateral trade has grown steadily and we are on course to achieve the trade target of 7 billion US dollars by 2015. A new Joint Sub-Commission on Trade has been tasked to work towards realizing the enormous potential of our economic relations. Indian investments in Vietnam are growing and I requested General Secretary Trong to facilitate them further in Vietnam. I expressed appreciation for Vietnam's decision to award Tata Power a 1.8 billion US dollar thermal power project in Vietnam and the offer of another offshore block to ONGC Videsh Limited for continued oil and gas exploration. We also look forward to boosting our bilateral economic ties through the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement and connectivity projects. The Air Services Agreement signed today advances our goal of strengthening connectivity between our countries.

General Secretary Trong and I reviewed our development partnership and capacity-building efforts. The PARAM High Performance Computing Facility has just been inaugurated at the Hanoi University of Science and Technology, which is India's first gift of a supercomputer to another country. Vietnam has been an important partner in the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme, which we have agreed to continue. We have identified Education and Information Technology as important areas for further collaboration.

We are satisfied with the progress in Science and Technology cooperation, especially in bio-technology and agriculture. India also appreciates Vietnam's assistance in setting up its first overseas farm for catfish breeding, where Vietnam has proven expertise.

I conveyed the Archeological Survey of India's readiness to take up the project for conservation and restoration of the Cham Monuments, which are a symbol of our historical, civilizational and cultural contacts. We have also decided to open an Indian Culture Centre in Hanoi.

We have agreed to further strengthen contacts at all levels - national and provincial - and between leaders in all walks of life. We also look forward to initiating a Distinguished Visitors Programme soon.

We exchanged views on regional and international issues of common interest. We appreciate Vietnam's steadfast support to India's integration and engagement with the ASEAN and our aspiration for permanent membership of a reformed UN Security Council.

I believe that this visit by General Secretary Trong has put our Strategic Partnership on a firm growth path.

I thank you.

General Secretary, Communist Party of Vietnam (Mr. Nguyen Phu Trong): Your Excellency Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, ladies and gentlemen and dear friends:

I am very happy to visit the beautiful and hospitable land of India. On behalf of the Vietnamese Delegation I would like to express my sincere thanks to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, the Government and the people of India for the hospitality and warm friendship extended to us.

Vietnam-India friendly relationship has been longstanding and it is growing fast. On the basis of the interests and vast potentials for bilateral cooperation, the two countries established Strategic Partnership in 2007. My current visit to India aims to further expand and deepen our Strategic Partnership.

The Prime Minister and I have had open, trusted and meaningful talks. We discussed the situation in each country and reached agreement on the direction and major measures to promote bilateral relations in the years ahead. We also shared views on regional and international issues of mutual interest.

We agreed to strengthen bilateral relations based on the five pillars underlined under the framework of the Strategic Partnership including the enhancement of close and trusted political ties and expansion of security and defence cooperation. We promote exchange of delegations at all levels including the highest level through such channels as state polity and people-to-people exchange.

We have identified economic, trade and investment cooperation as a priority of our future cooperation and set the goal of US$ 15 billion for bilateral trade by 2020. At the same time, both sides should expand cooperation on culture, tourism, education and science and technology.

During this visit we signed cooperation agreements on such areas as trade, finance, energy, customs, transport, education, training, and people-to-people exchanges.

On the multilateral basis, the Prime Minister and I exchanged views on regional and international issues and agreed that we should strengthen collaboration at international forums, especially under the ASEAN-India cooperation framework, the EAS, the UN, and the Non-Aligned Movement.

Vietnam highly appreciates India's support of its candidacy for a non-permanent membership of the UN Security Council for 2020-2021 terms. Vietnam reiterates its support for India to become a permanent member of the enlarged UN Security Council and a non-permanent of the UN Security Council for subsequent terms.

We highly appreciate India's persistent support of a peaceful resolution for the disputes in the East Sea of Vietnam on the basis of international laws, and in particular the 1982 enclaves ensuring maritime security and safety and freedom of navigation in the Asia-Pacific region.

I am confident that the outcome of today's talks along with the agreements signed during this visit will help deepen the Vietnam-India relationship taking it to the next level with added substances in line with the potentials and desire of our peoples for peace, stability, cooperation and development in the region and the world at large.

Thank you very much

363. Joint Statement on the occasion of the State Visit of the General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam to India.

New Delhi, November 20, 2013.

1. At the invitation of H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Mr. Nguyen Phu Trong, General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam paid a State visit to India from 19-22 November, 2013.
2. The General Secretary called on the President of India H.E. Shri Pranab Mukherjee and met Vice President H.E. Shri Hamid Ansari and Speaker of the Lok Sabha H.E. Smt Meera Kumar. Prime Minister held talks with the General Secretary and hosted a banquet in his honour. External Affairs Minister H.E. Shri Salman Khurshid and leaders of Indian political parties met the General Secretary separately. The General Secretary was accorded a ceremonial reception at the Rashtrapati Bhawan and he laid a wreath at the memorial of Mahatma Gandhi at Rajghat.
3. The General Secretary also visited Mumbai where he met the Governor of the state of Maharashtra and interacted with the Indian business community.
4. The leaders noted that India and Viet Nam had common objectives of inclusive growth and socio-economic development and affirmed that they shared a common vision to meet the aspirations of the peoples of both countries. They also noted that both countries faced similar challenges posed by global economic recession, the menace of terrorism and other issues confronting the international system. The Prime Minister reaffirmed that Vietnam was a pillar of India's Look East Policy, which was supported by the General Secretary. They envisaged a more active role for India in the regional and international arena.
5. The leaders recalled the great contributions of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and President Ho Chi Minh to the development of India - Viet Nam friendship, which was further nurtured by subsequent generations of leaders and peoples of both countries. They expressed satisfaction that regular consultations at all levels had helped consolidate and expand bilateral ties.

6. The leaders expressed satisfaction at the success of the “India - Viet Nam Friendship Year” held in 2012 that celebrated the 40th anniversary of establishment of full diplomatic relations and the 5th anniversary of the Strategic Partnership between the two countries. The numerous events organized by both countries raised awareness among the people of both countries about the civilisational linkages between India and Viet Nam and the scope for future collaboration in the contemporary world.
7. The leaders emphasized that India - Viet Nam relationship was a time tested friendship, characterised by shared interests, mutual trust and multi-dimensional cooperation. In view of the convergence on strategic interests, they agreed to further strengthen and deepen the Strategic Partnership between the two countries. This would contribute to peace, stability and prosperity in the Asia Pacific region and beyond.

Strategic engagement

8. High level visits in recent years by the Indian President in 2008, Vice President in 2013, Prime Minister in 2010 and Speaker of Lok Sabha in 2011, and the Vietnamese President in 2011, Vice President in 2009, Chairman of National Assembly in 2010 and Prime Minister in 2012 reflected the importance attached to the strengthening of bilateral ties by both sides. The leaders decided to reinforce high level political interactions by enhancing the frequency of bilateral visits and meetings in the margins of regional and multilateral events.
9. The leaders welcomed the agreements and the substantive Action Plan adopted at the 15th Joint Commission Meeting in New Delhi on 11 July, 2013 and commended the important contributions made by other existing bilateral mechanisms for consolidating and expanding the relationship.

10. The leaders welcomed the decision to establish exchange of visits under the Distinguished Visitors Programme between the Ministry of External Affairs of India and the Commission for External Relations of the Communist Party of Vietnam to strengthen mutual understanding in the fields of governance, public policy, challenges of development and inclusive growth.
11. The leaders agreed that defence cooperation was a significant pillar of the strategic partnership between the two countries. The leaders welcomed the regular defence dialogue, training, exercises, Navy and Coast Guard ship visits, capacity building, exchange of think tanks and other exchanges between relevant agencies of the two countries in recent years. The utilization of the Line of Credit in the field of defence would further strengthen defence cooperation. The leaders recommended that both sides continue to work closely on suitable terms and conditions for the Line of Credit of US$100 million in the field of defense to augment the momentum already created. Both sides welcomed the signing and implementation of the Arrangement on Protection of Classified Information between the two countries and the understanding on training of naval and air force personnel of Viet Nam, currently under implementation.
12. The leaders reiterated their desire and determination to work together to maintain peace, stability, growth and prosperity in Asia. They agreed that freedom of navigation in the East Sea/South China Sea should not be impeded and called the parties concerned to exercise restraint, avoid threat or use of force and resolve disputes through peaceful means in accordance with universally recognized principles of international law, including the UNCLOS. They also welcomed the collective commitment of the concerned parties to abide by and implement the 2002 Declaration on the Conduct of Parties in the South China Sea and to work towards the adoption of a Code of Conduct in the South China Sea on the basis of consensus. They called for cooperation in ensuring security of sea-lanes, maritime security, combating piracy and conducting search and rescue operations.

13. The leaders noted that cooperation had strengthened on security and law enforcement issues. They welcomed the signing of the Treaty on Transfer of Sentenced Prisoners. They also welcomed the entry into force of the Extradition Treaty signed between the two countries. They instructed relevant departments on both sides to focus on sharing of information and experience in combating organized crime, illicit arms and drug trafficking. They welcomed the signing of the MoU on establishment of the India-Gandhi High-tech Crime Laboratory in Ha Noi, Viet Nam and called for early realisation of the project. The Indian side agreed to continue assisting Vietnam in its efforts at training and capacity building and modernization efforts of the Vietnamese Police.
14. The leaders strongly condemned terrorism in all its forms and agreed to increase cooperation in the fight against this global scourge. Both sides also agreed to further strengthen cooperation for an early conclusion of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, for which India had presented a draft at the United Nations.
15. The leaders agreed to strengthen cooperation and coordination to effectively address the challenges posed by non-traditional security threats such as climate change, environmental degradation, energy security, food and water security, HIV/AIDS and avian influenza.
16. The leaders decided to broaden bilateral cooperation in areas such as space technology, natural resource management and use, disaster management and mitigation, weather forecasting, oceanography, hydrology, meteorology, nanotechnology and civil nuclear cooperation. They instructed relevant authorities on both sides to work towards early completion of the project to establish a satellite tracking, data reception and processing centre in Ho Chi Minh city under India-ASEAN Cooperation and agreed that both sides will explore new areas such as launching of Vietnamese satellites using Indian launch vehicles and assistance in setting up of earth observation centre in Vietnam.

Economic partnership

17. The leaders agreed that enhancing the economic partnership was one of the main components of the strategic partnership between the two countries. They welcomed the outcome of the first meeting of the India - Viet Nam Sub-Commission on Trade held in New Delhi on 18 November, 2013. They noted with satisfaction the steady growth in bilateral trade, which on way to meet the target of US$ 7 billion by 2015. They noted that favourable conditions should be created for further boosting bilateral trade to US$ 15 billion by 2020 and for promoting mutual investments especially in the areas of education, infrastructure, hydrocarbons, power generation, new and renewable energy, agriculture, textiles, information technology, and pharmaceuticals. The leaders also agreed to work for the early signing and implementation of the India-ASEAN FTA in Services and Investments to build on the momentum created by India-ASEAN FTA in Goods. They also agreed work together for early realisation of RCEP so as to facilitate India's integration into the ASEAN Economic Community.
18. The Vietnamese side welcomed new investments by Indian companies in oil and gas upstream and downstream projects in Vietnam. The leaders noted with satisfaction that Viet Nam's Oil and Gas Group (PetroVietnam) has offered new areas to India for oil and gas exploration.
19. Both sides welcomed and committed to facilitate the opening of branch offices by their commercial banks in each others' countries, in accordance with the laws of the host country, universally recognized principles of international trade as well as bilateral commitments. They expressed satisfaction with the cooperation between the Ministries of Finance and Customs Departments of the two countries.
20. The leaders encouraged cooperation between the private sectors of both countries and reaffirmed their support to the Viet Nam-India Business Forum and the activities of the chambers of commerce and industry of both countries. The Vietnamese side also agreed to actively support the "ASEAN - India Business Council".

21. The leaders welcomed and supported Tata Power to participate as the developer of the 1320 MW Long Phu 2 power project. This would be the largest Indian investment in Viet Nam and would act as a forerunner towards greater investment flows from India.
22. The leaders decided to strengthen physical connectivity through land, sea & air transport between India and Viet Nam. They welcomed the signing of the Air Services Agreement that would promote cooperation in the civil aviation sector. They welcomed the signing of the bilateral Maritime Shipping Agreement and proposed to initiate discussions, at the official level, on a sub-regional shipping agreement between India and CLMV countries. They highlighted the importance of extension of the road connectivity between India and Vietnam and welcomed India's suggestion to discuss soft infrastructure requirements to facilitate seamless movement of goods and services across economic corridors and initiation of discussions on an ASEAN-India Transit Transport Agreement (AITTA), to be concluded by end 2015.
23. The leaders highlighted the important contribution of capacity building and development partnership projects such as the establishment of a Viet Nam-India English Language, IT training Centre at the National Defence Academy in Hanoi, the Vocational Training Centre in Ho Chi Minh City and the operationalization of the High Performance Computing Facility at Hanoi University of Science and Technology. They also agreed to expedite new projects involving Lines of Credit from India. The Vietnamese side welcomed the establishment of the India-CLMV Quick Impact Projects (QIPs) Fund under which short gestation projects would be undertaken with grant assistance from India, to directly benefit local communities in a visible and immediate manner in areas such as education, health, sanitation and community development.
24. The leaders noted the strong cooperation in agriculture and related fields and agreed to further deepening of cooperation in research and development in agriculture, fisheries, aquaculture, animal husbandry and dairy. They called for an early convening of the India-Vietnam conference on Agriculture between the Indian Council for Agricultural Research (ICAR) and the Vietnam Academy of Agriculture Sciences (VAAS) and highlighted the immense scope for further collaborations. They welcomed the establishment of a Pangasius breeding farm in India in cooperation with Vietnam. They agreed to promote information exchange and research in Early Mortality Syndrome in shrimp industry.

25. The leaders noted with satisfaction the signing of the Programme of Cooperation in Science and Technology for 2013-14. Both sides also welcomed the Program of Cooperation between the Ministry of Science and Technology of Viet Nam and the Department of Biotechnology of India.

Cultural and people-to-people contacts

26. The leaders agreed to deepen friendly exchanges, people to people contacts and cooperation in the fields of culture, archaeology, conservation, museology, tourism, public health, sports, education and media. They welcomed early establishment of sister-city relations between Mumbai and Ho Chi Minh City. The Viet Nam side welcomed the decision to open an Indian Culture Centre in Hanoi to promote exchange of artists and troupes, holding of film festivals, exchanges between the youth and other cultural activities.
27. The leaders called for early signing of the MoU on Conservation and Restoration of Cham monuments by the Archaeological Survey of India at My Son heritage site in Viet Nam.
28. The leaders noted with satisfaction outcome of the 2nd meeting of the Joint Working Group on Educational Exchange for cooperation between universities and academia, in particular the proposal for introduction of the Indian Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) curriculum in Vietnamese schools.

Cooperation in regional and international fora

29. The leaders noted the growing role of both countries in regional affairs and agreed to further strengthen cooperation at regional and international fora, especially in the ASEAN, the East Asia Summit (EAS), the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), the ASEAN Defence Ministers' Meeting Plus (ADMM+), the Expanded ASEAN Maritime Forum (EAMF), the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM), the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation (MGC), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the United Nations and the Non-aligned Movement. The leaders highlighted that their cooperation was in keeping with the common desire and determination of both sides to work together for peace, prosperity and stability in the region and the world.
30. India expressed its appreciation for Vietnam's continued support for India's permanent membership in an expanded UN Security Council. The Indian side reaffirmed its support for Viet Nam's candidature for the United Nations Security Council non-permanent membership for the term 2020-21 and the Vietnamese side expressed reciprocal support for India's candidature for the United Nations Security Council non-permanent membership for a subsequent term. Viet Nam also expressed support for India's membership of the Human Rights Council for the term 2015-17. The Vietnamese side expressed its appreciation for India's support to its application for membership of the International Hydrographic Organization. The Indian side expressed appreciation for Viet Nam's support for its re-election to category-II seat in the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) Council.
31. The leaders welcomed the signing of a number of bilateral agreements and MoUs during the visit and called on relevant departments to initiate steps for early implementation of these agreements fully. The documents signed during the visit included: Air Service Agreement, MOU for setting up of the Indira Gandhi Hightech Crime Lab in Hanoi, Agreement on Protection of Classified Information, MOU between two Ministries of Finance, Cooperation Agreement between Hanoi National University and Indian Council for Scientific and Industrial Research, MoU on Cooperation between India Institute of Management (IIM) Bangalore and HCM National Academy of Public Administration, MoU between Vietnam Oil and Gas Group and ONGC Videsh Limited(OVL), and MOU between Vietnam Ministry of Industry and Trade and Tata Power Ltd. on development of Long Phu 2 Thermal Power Project in Soc Trang, Vietnam.

32. The interaction between the two leaders was warm, cordial and friendly. General Secretary Nguyen Phu Trong expressed his gratitude to the Government and the friendly people of India for the warm reception and hospitality accorded to him and the accompanying delegation during his State visit to the Republic of India. General Secretary Nguyen Phu Trong extended an invitation to Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to visit Viet Nam at a mutually convenient date. The Prime Minister accepted the invitation with pleasure. The dates of the visit will be finalized through diplomatic channels.

364. Prime Minister's speech at the banquet hosted in the honour of the General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam.

Hanoi, November 20, 2013.

Your Excellency General Secretary Mr. Nguyen Phu Trong,
Distinguished Guests,

It is a great pleasure tonight for me to welcome amongst us His Excellency the General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam on his first State visit to India. Excellency, your visit to India in 2010 as the Chairman of Vietnam's National Assembly added great momentum to our relationship. Tonight, we welcome you back as a friend and a leader of a great country - a nation that has stood as a symbol of resilience, resolve and heroism for generations of Indians and which is now a vibrant economy at the heart of a dynamic region. Your leadership, Excellency, is vital not only for Vietnam's progress, but also for our region's stability and prosperity.

Excellency, if Bodh Gaya is the symbol of our shared spiritual heritage, the historic Cham monuments in My Son in Vietnam equally bear witness to the vigorous civilizational links between our two countries. Our great leaders, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and President Ho Chi Minh, forged a partnership in the wake of the retreat of colonialism from Asia. There was a relationship based on mutual trust and respect, sentiments which have also been our guiding principles as we have slowly built our relationship in the modern era.

Today, in this new century, at a time of new dynamism in our two economies and in a resurgent Asia of great promise and many challenges, our relationship holds ever greater promise.

It was to fulfil this promise that, six years ago, our two countries embarked on a new journey of Strategic Partnership. It is a partnership of great character, diversity and depth. Our political engagement and our growing defence and security relationship are of immense value to our two countries. Our convergent interests, including in maritime security, have translated into productive partnerships in regional and multilateral fora.

Our economic and energy relations are growing. We are working together on oil exploration and production in the East Sea and your offer of new blocks for exploration and award of a 1.8 billion U.S. dollar power project to Indian companies demonstrate the promise of our economic relations.

India's support in the 1970s for the transformation of Vietnam's rice cultivation and, now, in your special gesture of establishing Vietnam's first overseas catfish breeding farm in India, are very special symbols of friendship and mutual support in capacity building, which now also covers areas such as information technology, education and science and technology.

Excellency, Vietnam is an important pillar of our Look East Policy and crucial for our vision of India's integration with ASEAN. As India-Vietnam relations prosper, India-ASEAN relations will also deepen. As heirs to the ancient wisdom of Asia and blessed with the energy of its youth, India and Vietnam have common interests, profound responsibility and enormous opportunities to promote peace, stability and prosperity in Asia Pacific.

Long ago, a Vietnamese monk said, "We have more possibilities in a moment than we realise". Your visit, Excellency, shows that we are seizing every possibility and every moment to make our relationship richer and bring our people closer.

With those words, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in a toast to:

1. the good health and happiness of His Excellency Mr. Nguyen Phu Trong, General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam;
2. the prosperity and happiness of the people of Vietnam and;
3. the everlasting friendship between India and Vietnam.

365. Foreign Secretary's inaugural address at the Conference 'The Arab World: March Towards Democracy and its Implications' at Mahatma Gandhi University, Kottayam.

Kottayam, February 4, 2013.

Respected Mr. K.P.S. Menon, Foreign Secretaries, Ambassador A.P. Fabian, Ambassador T.P. Srinivasan, Mr. Seethi, ladies and gentlemen,

It is an honour and a privilege for me to deliver the inaugural address of the Conference 'Arab World: March Towards Democracy and its Implications'.

The MEA greatly values the views and opinion of people all over the country and we regard it as a privilege to partner MG University in this activity. I believe that MEA is a pioneer in public outreach – we have an active press relations division, and our Public Diplomacy Division is a manifestation of our widening horizons. We organized the first ever national seminar of International Relations Departments of Universities from all over the country in 2011. With this little self-congratulation let me turn to the subject at hand.

The developments we have witnessed over the last two years in the Arab World are unprecedented, have brought in phenomenal changes and have altered the character of regional politics. Whether these constitute a March towards Democracy is for history to judge. Let me just preface my remarks by saying that the significance of the developments is not only for individual countries in the region, but equally important for India too, and the subject of the seminar is indeed one of global significance. Hence this conference here in Kottayam is particularly valuable. When we talk of the Arab world it is necessary to recall that a significant part of this world is in Asia, and has therefore the so called Arab Spring has some meaning for the future of Asia and of India. Even before independence Pandit Nehru spoke of India's place as the natural centre and focal point of many forces at work in Asia. "The history of India is a long history of her relations with other countries of Asia. If you should know India you have to go to Afghanistan and West Asia, to China, Japan and then countries of South East Asia".

I started by saying it is for history to come to judgement on the so called Arab Spring. Two years is clearly too short a time to deterministically and accurately judge the implication of these events, especially when they continue to unfold even as we speak. (Recall the answer which Premier Chou en Lai never actually gave about it being “too early to tell” how he assessed the French Revolution!) At the same time, while a rush to judgement should be avoided, policy makers need assessments of what has happened so far to help them in the task of policy formulation. And policy is about people not about abstract concepts. I am glad therefore that we are holding this conference in Kottayam which is the heartland of the area from which millions of our citizens have gone to the Gulf; and for whom, the issue unfolding in West Asia are of critical importance in their daily lives.

It is obvious that for India, the Gulf which we consider our extended neighbourhood and the West Asia-North Africa (WANA) region is of vital strategic importance. We have said this to all our partners – who seek our views on matters ranging from Iran to Syria. The region is home to more than 5 million Indians (a significant percentage of them from Kerala) who contribute over US$ 35 billion in remittances every year. Some estimates are that more than 20 % of Kerala’s GDP is dependent on the Gulf. India’s overall economic and commercial engagement with these countries is around US$ 160 billion per annum. The region is a source of around 60% of our oil and gas requirement and hence critical for our energy security. It is also a major source of phosphatic and other fertilizers and hence a factor in our food security. Stability in the region is, therefore, vital to India’s national interest. This has become a mantra in Delhi today – but decades ago – in Kerala this was instinctively understood. That is why so many have sought to build ties with the region and influence foreign policy decisions, and do want calculations based on the importance of stability.

I must assure you that the interests of our working people have been uppermost in our minds when we analyze West Asia. Yet India’s policy towards the region and developments there, and our posture in the Security Council have also been guided by our principled desire not to interfere in the internal affairs of States and being non-prescriptive. We are aware of the ramifications of the movements for democracy. We are aware that in many countries rulers have not accepted the new tide of democracy. We have called for restraint in the use of coercive measures against people who we believe should be permitted to articulate their aspirations. But we are absolutely clear – (to put it in PM's words) that societies cannot be re-ordered from outside through military force and that people in all countries have the right to choose their own destiny and decide their own future. In some cases that may take time particularly in countries with traditional power structures – but in the end the democracy that emerges is sustainable.

Developments which we are witnessing in the Arab World affect, first and foremost, the countries and peoples of that part of the world. While transition in some countries has been relatively smooth, such as in Tunisia, in others like Libya it was affected by a drawn out campaign and blatant external intervention – however explained. That said we do respect the new leadership that has emerged in Libya and its commitment to representative government. Our Ambassador to Libya has developed contacts with the new leadership. Many of them have experience of India and respect for our governance model. We hope circumstances will enable the thousands of Indians who left to revive their professional and business ties with Libya. The conflict in Syria is still being waged and there has been considerable loss of life and blood-shed. The outcome is still in the balance and it is too early to say what will emerge. Egypt, which saw a change in leadership soon after the popular uprising is today witnessing violence and clashes as it moves to put in place a new system and structure of governance. Clearly, the road to transition and change has not been easy. We helped a little with election management. Elections are a critical condition but not the only one for democratic government. I am reminded of the description of Kerala as the Yenan of India and my response to the praise of Kerala as the first place where Communists took power through the ballot; viz. that they have won many elections, but Kerala is also the first place where they exited from power through the ballot. And there is a profound message in this – because it is only through repeated elections that the democratic roots are laid down; when people look to interests and broader aspirations beyond slogans and religious appeals – which may be dominant in the first elections. And it is this long term view which provides a degree of optimism. Any government in the region which has to provide welfare to its people – will ultimately need safety and stability of its administration, of its workers and investors, steady production of natural resources and trade partners. What we need is a way of navigating the short term.

The popular movements which emerged in countries across the region were not ideology led or driven by a cohesive group. In fact, there is some debate about how it all started – in Tunisia. But at the same time recall the history of popular movements in Egypt, the rise of the Wafd and other parties from the 1920s and you realize there is a historical basis for democratic upsurge. Just as in India in Egypt it was tied to national resurgence. There was of course a long period of political stagnation when democratic expression was suppressed, so there is a learning curve to be climbed. Now the movements, in some countries where they were successful in affecting regime change are said to have ceded political space to “Islamists” as outcomes of democratic process. What are the implications of this? I have an issue with the simplistic term “Islamist”. But even if one accepts it, the issue is:- would “Islamists” dominate the political space or would it be shared in democratic manner with other more secular political actors? With this question comes the issue of the place for religious minorities and women in new power structures – these groups were in the fore-front of many of the popular movements. And, most importantly, we should ask ourselves the question as to what we can do to contribute to the process of capacity and institution building in these countries. It is in our interest that democracy stabilizes and brings the religious and secular forces into an evolutionary framework. As I said earlier – above all democracy means submitting government to popular will at the end of the term; and meanwhile governance in accord with the freedoms that make participatory democracy meaningful. Thus our analysis would require looking beyond the economic calculations of long and short term that I earlier made.

Equally significant are the implications of the unfolding developments for regional and global geopolitics. Some of the regimes which had provided the bulwark of a particular vision of security in the region for superpowers are no more. What kind of role would the successor regimes play? The turmoil in Syria has far reaching reverberations which go well beyond the country's or the region's borders. The Shia-Sunni fault-line which runs through the region adds its own volatility to the potent mix. The impact of the developments on the Arab-Israeli conflict, major power rivalry and the regional power equations requires close monitoring and in-depth analysis. For us in India – and China – and perhaps Europe – the impact on oil production trends also has to be factored in. It is we in Asia (not US) who are now critically dependent on oil from West Asia. If the democratic upsurge affects oil production it is Indian and Chinese consumers who will feel the effects first. It is heartening that there are so many professionals and technocrats in the democratic movements.

At another level, the developments in the region have a direct bearing on global terrorism and hence on our national security. The situation in Mali today is inter-alia a consequence of the turmoil in Libya whether acknowledged or not. Al-Qaeda and its affiliates such as Ansar-dine in Mali, Al-Shabaab in Somalia and others have sought to exploit the political instability in the region to their advantage. Arms pumped into the region are finding their way to terror groups. The unending conflict in Syria is facilitating similar trends in that country, providing terror groups arms and sanctuary. It would be worthwhile for this Conference to look closely at this phenomenon and its very serious implications for the world at large. Are these forces exogenous to the region? Are they separate from the democratic surge? And do we need international cooperation to deal with the menace of terrorism.

While a number of countries in the region witnessed popular movements, only six – Tunisia, Egypt, Libya, Syria, Yemen and Bahrain have witnessed large scale upsurges which challenged the regimes. Would such movements spread to other countries of the region? While swift change in leadership and/or regime could encourage popular unrest in other countries, drawn out, violent and bloody conflicts could well act as a deterrent. While technology facilitated the spread of information and mobilisation of people, there are other traditional networks including social and religion-based which act as countervailing forces. (This is by the way something which even fully functional democracies are familiar with!) Except Bahrain which sits on the Shia-Sunni fault line and where the demonstrations were contained through regional effort, all other countries which have witnessed large scale popular movements, are non-monarchies. Will this continue to be so? Do monarchies enjoy greater credibility amongst the populace? There are questions which your seminar needs to address: Let me say we have been conscious of the need to avoid a 'one size fits all' approach. We have been guided by a sense of solidarity with democratic movements, opposition to external interventions, and being very clear about the preservation of our relations in the national interest.

The issue of whether the Spring is actually a regional phenomenon could be put differently by posing the question, whether the desire for change is a Pan-Arab phenomenon. Rami G. Khoury, Editor-at-large of the Daily Star in a piece written at the end of last year said that there is no such thing as a cohesive, single "Arab World" as every Arab country follows a different path in pursuing its own political re-configuration. Khoury, however, added that the 350 million ordinary Arab men and women across the region are nevertheless expressing some common grievances, attitudes and aspirations. Among them there is a desire to acquire freedom that people in other parts of the world take for granted. To restore their place in the global movement of ideas and achievements. This is not just about social media led middle classes – though these media facilitate a leadership role; they are conscious they once had a great place in the world of ideas. Recall Nehru's words about the extraordinary achievements of Arab civilization in historical times: "The intellectual curiosity, the adventures in rationalist speculation, the spirit of scientific enquiry, among the Arabs of the 8th and 9th centuries are very striking". The heirs to such a great tradition cannot long accept being unable to participate in the globalization of cultural, scientific and spiritual movements. We in India certainly cannot stand aloof from this mobilization.

To conclude, 'the march towards democracy', as the Conference title refers to Arab aspirations, is a path of promise but fraught with challenges and pit falls. It is a path of far reaching consequences and would need to be traversed with caution. There will be no dearth of self serving detractors working for their own narrow interests; but in the end democratic movements are larger than the specific interests which might motivate some among them. And as beneficiaries of democracy ourselves, we believe the implications of the democratic upsurge would be positive in the long run.

I wish the Conference all success.

Thank you

366. Inaugural Address by Defence Minister A.K. Antony at the 15th Asian Security Conference on “Emerging Trends in West Asia: Regional and Global Implications”.

New Delhi, February 13, 2013.

Members of the strategic communality

Distinguished participants,

Excellencies,

Members of the media,

Ladies and gentlemen,

It is a pleasure to address this distinguished gathering that has come together for the 15th Asian Security Conference being organised by IDSA. Over the years, the Conference has attracted eminent strategic experts and scholars from across the world. This is the 15th year in a row that the IDSA is organising a conference on themes pertaining to Asian security.

The response of the international strategic community to this year’s theme, “Emerging Trends in West Asia: Regional and Global Implications”, has been encouraging. In the context of West Asia, the theme is highly relevant, as developments in West Asia have a major impact on regional and international security. Many distinguished speakers from West Asia, North Africa, United States, United Kingdom, Europe, Australia, Pakistan, Japan and China will be sharing their views during the Conference. ‘

Since December 2010, the Middle East has been experiencing tumultuous changes. These changes have ushered in fundamental political and socio-economic transformation in the Arab world. New political dispensations have taken over in Tunisia, Libya, Egypt and Yemen. Such transition, unfortunately, has been accompanied by large-scale violence. The ongoing violence in Syria is a matter of concern for the region, as well as the world. Moreover, recently, extremists believed to be linked with the Al Qaeda elements took over the government in Mali. Meanwhile, France has sent its military forces for intervention.

The recent developments in all these countries afford a few lessons: Firstly, no government, or regime, can afford to ignore the popular aspirations anymore. The common strand running through all these protests and demonstrations has been the youth. The voice of the youth is a universal message that is strongly echoing across to governments in all regions of the world. The strong urge for change is clearly visible across the region. Secondly, the process of transformation is far from complete and on the contrary, has just begun. The journey ahead will be long, tortuous and full of unexpected twists and turns. Thirdly, the developments in West Asia have the potential of changing the regional and geopolitical landscape. The West Asia region is critical for energy security. Instability in the region will have an impact on global oil prices, availability of oil and gas and shipping of these resources. Fourthly, though traditional political and socio-economic structures have been transformed, new structures that will replace them have not yet got consolidated. While fundamentalist forces have got a fillip, democracy is yet to be consolidated. New political equations are emerging in Iraq and Afghanistan, which has heightened regional and global uncertainties. Lastly, social media has emerged as a potent and vibrant force. The social media has served as a 'force multiplier' in the hands of the protesters.

For India, in particular, West Asia is a critical region. People-to-people contacts have existed between India and West Asia for centuries. These links have got deepened and further strengthened in the era of globalisation. Our stability and prosperity are affected by the developments in the region. First, the Gulf region is vital for India's energy security. The region has about 48% of the world's total proven oil reserves and almost 16% of the world's natural gas reserves. Nearly two-thirds of our hydrocarbon imports are from this region. This will continue to be so in the near future. In addition, nearly 6.5 million Indians live and work in different countries of this region. A World Bank report says that India received US $ 70 billion in remittances during 2012 and a majority of the remittances came from the Gulf region. These remittances support nearly 40-50 million families in India and at the same time, contribute to local prosperity. During 2011, India evacuated nearly 19, 000 Indians working in Libya. The safety and security of Indians working in the region is a sensitive concern for the Indian government.

India's trade with the region is expanding. During 2011-12, India's trade with Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) was more than $145 billion (with exports and imports from the region standing at 20% and 14%) respectively). India also offers a destination for surplus funds in GCC countries. India has a long tradition of democracy and it is home to a diverse, pluralistic society. The democratic processes have managed its vast regional, cultural, linguistic and regional diversity. At a time when several West Asian nations are in a state of transition, India can share its experiences with the governments and civil societies.

Recent developments have complicated the security situation in the region. Given India's vital stakes in peace and stability in the region, it is natural for India to have an interest in abiding peace and security in the region. At the same time, long-standing conflicts in the region cannot be ignored.

India can ill-afford to remain aloof from the transformative changes taking place in its immediate and extended neighbourhood. We have centuries old linkages with the Arab world. Our civilisations have closely interacted and influenced each other in the past. We have excellent bilateral relations and the relation can be placed on an even stronger footing in the new phase that has set in recently in West Asia.

Ladies and gentlemen,

This Conference is holding deliberations on several themes. The discussions will explore the causes behind the ongoing transformation; look into the future and make an attempt to assess the regional and global impacts of these changes. I have been told that several sessions will also explore India's relations with this region. I am sure that the delegates will come up with crucial inputs and practical recommendations during these discussions.

With these words, I hope that our foreign guests will have a pleasant and an enjoyable stay. I wish the deliberations at the Conference all success.

Thank you. Jai Hind.

367. IBSA Statement on the Middle East Peace ProcessAugust 23, 2013

Taking into consideration the previous declarations of the India, Brazil and South Africa Dialogue Forum (IBSA) on the Middle East Peace Process, the Foreign Ministers of India, Salman Khurshid; Brazil, Antonio Patriota; and South Africa, Maite Nkoana-Mashabane, after consultations, agreed on the following statement:

We reaffirm that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict remains an urgent and key issue for the international community, the resolution of which is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region.

We support the mediation efforts undertaken by the U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and welcome the announcement of the resumption of direct final status negotiations between Palestinians and Israelis. This is an encouraging development, one that has the potential for reverting the deadlock and paralysis that have plagued the peace process in recent years. We hope this renewed effort will lead to the full and overdue realization of a two-state solution based on 1967 borders.

We have noted with satisfaction the decision of Israel to release 104 Palestinian prisoners, which is a gesture that contributes to the spirit of cooperation surrounding the negotiations. We are also pleased with the announcement made on 30 July by Mr. Kerry indicating that the Palestinian and Israeli negotiators are committed to reaching a comprehensive peace agreement within nine months. Such an agreement should culminate in the full realization of an independent Palestinian State. We call on the parties to adhere strictly to this timetable.

As we reiterate our call for the Security Council to fully exercise its functions under the UN Charter, with regard to the Palestinian Question, we express our firm belief that the Council should provide sustained support to the peace process and work towards its full and satisfactory completion.

368. Address by Minister for External Affairs on 'International Interests in Middle East Security and Non-Proliferation' at IISS Manama Dialogue

Manama, December 8, 2013.

Dr. Chipman,

Distinguished participants in the Manama Dialogue,

Ladies and Gentlemen.

I would like to begin by thanking the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS) for inviting me to this prestigious event, the first time for an Indian Minister for External Affairs. I would also like to thank the Kingdom of Bahrain for the excellent sponsorship of this meeting.

The Gulf region is India's extended neighbourhood. It has historically been an important artery for the flow of goods and ideas and movement of peoples from and to India. Just one subject – seaborne trade – is enough to illustrate the learning that has happened in the two directions. In addition to these historical civilisational links, there are several factors of contemporary importance in our relationship with the countries of the Gulf.

Let me list the vital stakes that India has with the Gulf countries. As a region, the Gulf is our largest trading partner. Our bilateral trade with the Gulf has increased from US$ 167 billion in 2011-12 to over US$ 180 billion in 2012-13. The traditional dominance of oil imports persists but there are encouraging trends. For instance, our exports to Saudi Arabia increased by over 70% last year to reach nearly US$ 10 billion.

Two-third of India's oil and gas requirement comes from the Gulf and thus the region plays a vital role in our energy security. About 7 million Indians live and work in the Gulf and their remittances contribute 40% of our total inward remittances of US$ 70 billion a year and thus play a critical role in our external finances. The contribution of Indian expatriates to the socio-economic development of their host countries is well recognized and they are respected for their technical competence, sense of discipline, non-involvement in regional political issues and for their law-abiding nature.

The Gulf region is also a potential source of sizeable investments for us. The GCC members have significant surplus capital and India is one of the few countries, having the capacity to absorb large capital flows for infrastructure development. The Gulf is now a significant platform for the operations of Indian companies. It is also a hub for outbound Indian passengers and tourists, with 700 flights a week between UAE and India alone.

Relevant to the theme of this meeting, there are new areas of growing importance in our bilateral partnership with the Gulf such as counter-terrorism, money laundering and anti-piracy. Defence is another emerging area of cooperation. We are adding joint military exercises, friendly visits of naval ships and broad-based MoUs on defence cooperation to the traditional templates of bilateral cooperation. This is not surprising as the vital security interests of the two sides are interlinked. We also remain engaged on issues of WMD proliferation and disarmament in the Middle East given the global impact of WMD proliferation, including on India's own security interests, and given India's consistent commitment to the global and verifiable elimination of all weapons of mass destruction. I will return to this theme in a little while.

The attention of the international community has been riveted in the past couple of years on West Asia, in particular on the aftereffects of the so-called Arab Spring. In India too, we have been engaged with these developments, and their impact on the countries in the Arabian Peninsula as any instability in this region could affect our vital interests. India is a vibrant democracy and we find that such a political system best suits our national temperament and needs. We are in favour of democratic pluralism and religious moderation but it is up to the people of the region to decide the pace and the means to achieve those goals, keeping in mind their traditions and history. We are also against armed conflict or external intervention as a way of resolving political issues in the region or elsewhere in the world.

Two and half years after the Arab Spring, the earlier, exaggerated expectations of progress towards democracy have turned out to be misplaced. Initial optimism has given way to serious concerns about the aftermath of those much-hyped events. Let me list a couple of concerns as we see them from India. The first is that of the hijacking of genuine demands for democracy and pluralism by radical elements driven by narrow agendas. We see this for example in Syria. The second is the exacerbation of sectarian divides. The horrific sectarian killings in Iraq and Libya are a daily reminder of this danger. All those who live in plural societies, and we are all plural these days in some way or the other - can be affected by this growing divide. Jockeying to shift the strategic balance to the advantage of those unaffected by the Arab spring has further added to the climate of political uncertainty generated by the aftermath of the Arab spring. Such a climate of political upheaval makes developing stable bilateral cooperation difficult. Egypt, a vital partner in the Arab world, is a case in point.

The most serious situation today, however, is Syria. The Syrian uprising, which began in Daraa on 18 March 2011 and later spread to other cities in stages, has now developed into a full-fledged civil war with external dimensions. Nearly one-fourth of the country's population has been displaced. The humanitarian impact of the war has been heartrending. India condemns violence by all sides and supports dialogue and negotiations between the Government and the insurgents, leading to the formation of a Transitional Governing Body, followed by elections, as envisaged under the Geneva Communiqué of June 2012. Any external military intervention is unlikely to help. Apart from the question of legality, there are concerns about the spill over effects of any such action and the possibly undesirable consequence of fueling extremism. The only silver lining in recent weeks is the rapid progress achieved on destruction of Syria's chemical weapons and we do hope that the cooperation seen among the major powers and the Syrian government that led to the agreement of time-bound destruction of Syria's chemical weapons can now extend to the trickier area of a political resolution of the conflict. I am happy to share with this distinguished audience India's decision to provide US dollars 1 million as well as experts and training for the destruction of Syria's chemical weapons. This is in keeping with India's active participation in the Chemical Weapons Convention and our firm commitment to the global and verifiable elimination of all weapons of mass destruction. The peaceful resolution of the crisis over Syria's chemical weapons shows that global, non-discriminatory regimes on non-proliferation and disarmament matter and that they have a crucial role in resolving international security challenges.

The Iranian nuclear issue has been festering for several years, creating uncertainty across and beyond the region. Recent developments, however, are encouraging. We welcome the agreement in Geneva reached on 24 November between Iran and the E3+3. This agreement is consistent with India's position that the issue should be resolved diplomatically on the basis of recognition of Iran's right to peaceful uses of nuclear energy and in accordance with Iran's international obligations as a non-nuclear weapon state. We also welcome the agreement reached on 11 November between Iran and the IAEA, which is the competent technical agency to verify the exclusively peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear activities, on practical measures for enhanced IAEA verification activity at Iranian nuclear sites. That should help rebuild confidence in the peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear activities. It is our hope that the interim steps that have been agreed in Geneva would build trust and confidence between Iran and the international community and lead to a durable and long-term settlement of the Iranian nuclear issue.

I am pleased to share with this audience that we have not let the recent uncertainties come in the way of our growing engagement with all countries of the Arabian Peninsula and the broader Middle East. This mutually beneficial engagement is based on a clear-headed assessment of our national interest and our bilateral complementarities. Our successful efforts to upgrade our relations with both Saudi Arabia and Iraq are an illustration of this approach. The cooperation we are getting on counter-terrorism for example is a tribute to the mutual trust and understanding we have been able to build together. Further in the Middle East, another example is the bilateral engagement we have been able to construct with Egypt – my dear friend Nabil Fahmy was in India just a few days ago - despite the rapidly changing political landscape in the region.

Before concluding let me dwell for a while on some of the long-term strategic facets of India's relationship with the Gulf. Let us take energy security first. Four out of top five oil suppliers are from the region. This is a symbiotic relationship wherein, on one hand, India's energy security heavily depends on the Gulf region, and on the other, India is a dependable and long-term market for the Gulf countries. Serious efforts are being made to transform these relationships from a buyer-seller one to a more broad-based one, with equity partnership in oil production, joint ventures in oil exploration, petrochemical complexes, fertilizer plants and partnership in strategic reserves storage facility being built up in India.

Due to the discovery of shale gas in US and its cost-effective extraction, the US dependence on the Middle East for oil/energy may decline. As a result, the current big oil consumer markets of India, China, Japan and ROK will gain even more importance for the Gulf States. If technology evolves and geopolitics permits, as I am sure it soon will, a number of different pipelines either overland or undersea can begin carrying gas from the Gulf to India, the nearest large-sized market for gas exports for the Gulf. This could herald the next phase of energy security cooperation between our two sides and could pull together Central, West and Southern Asia into a hub of energy driven economic cooperation.

Let me turn next to investment and economic cooperation. Despite being each other's largest trading partners, the investments by India and the Gulf in each other's territory has remained well below potential. While FDI investment from the Gulf countries into India stands modestly at around US$ 3 billion from April 2000 to August 2013, the portfolio investment figure is higher. Sovereign Wealth Funds of the Gulf countries can be a game changer for infrastructure investment in India, which would add a stable and profitable element to the portfolio of assets held by them. In the other direction, the Oman India Fertilizer Company (OMIFCO) with an investment of US$ 969 million is India's largest joint venture abroad and a successful example of the possibilities of economic integration between India and the Gulf. Bilateral cooperation in the field of higher education, skill development, agriculture, tourism, health-care, power, and infrastructure projects can add heft to the existing trade ties, for too long centered on oil.

The third facet of our long-term cooperation has to be defence and security. Our security cooperation with the GCC countries is developing to mutual benefit. An example is the 2011 Agreement on Security Cooperation with UAE which provides for cooperation to combat terrorism, organized crime, drug trafficking, weapons smuggling, money laundering, economic crimes and cyber crimes. The region sits astride strategic Sea Lines of Communications (SLOCs) and any disruption to these SLOCs can have a serious impact on the Indian economy, including in terms of energy supplies. It is important to keep the region out of bounds for pirates and other nefarious non-state actors. India has the capabilities and the will to not only safeguard India's own coastline and island territories, but also contribute to keeping our region's SLOCs open and flowing. The Indian Navy has continuously deployed one ship since October 2008 in the Gulf of Aden for anti-piracy duties with Operational Turnarounds (OTRs) at Salalah in Oman.

Let me conclude my presentation by underlining the high priority we attach to our economic, political and security relations with the Middle East in particular the countries of the Gulf region. These relations are poised to grow, with increasing realization of the existing enormous potential on both sides, even though the broader context in which we seek to pursue this cooperation might seem fraught and unpredictable. The region will find in India a steady and stable long-term partner, sensitive to its needs and alive to opportunities to develop bilateral cooperation.

I thank you for your attention.

369. Extract relevant to the visit of Secretary General of the Arab League from the Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson.

New Delhi, December 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends. Today is a busy news day although it is the end of the week, and there are lots of issues that I suppose you may be interested in. So, apologise for coming a bit late.

I have one announcement to make and it will be followed by any questions that you may want to ask on that or on anything else. So, let me begin, as is the usual practice, by making that announcement which is about the visit of the Secretary-General of the Arab League Dr. Nabil El-Araby to New Delhi from the 16th to the 18th of December. December 17 is his main day of engagement where he will meet the External Affairs Minister and also call on the Vice-President.

The focus of the discussions between the Arab League Secretary-General and the External Affairs Minister is to update the Memorandum of Understanding that we have with the 22-nation Arab League to make it more effective and to elevate the level of interaction between the representatives of member states of the Arab League and India. The Secretary-General will also interact with the media after his meetings with the External Affairs Minister.

As you know, India has a historical and civilisational link with the Arab world. We have extremely good relations. Our total trade with the Arab world is in the vicinity of about US$ 200 billion. A significant amount of that comes from of course the Gulf but I include in this figure the entire Arab world.

We also have approximately more than 60 per cent of our oil being sourced from the Arab world or the Middle East. And we look forward to elevating our relationship with the League of Arab States in the context of our growing interest in the region and the Arab world in general.

That is the announcement I have to make. I am now open to questions on that or on anything else that is of interest to you. As is usual, let us finish the questions on the Arab world and then take up questions on anything else.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: The visit is from 16th to 18th of December. The main day of engagement, the day when all the major engagements are, is the 17th. As I said, there will also be a media interaction subsequent to the meeting between the External Affairs Minister and Dr. Nabil El-Araby. You are perhaps aware that Dr. Nabil El-Araby is an old friend of India. He was Egyptian Ambassador here many years ago.

Q: You mentioned that one of the main areas that we are looking at during his visit is the updating of the MoU with the Arab League. Could you just let us understand a little more about what the update is about?

Official Spokesperson: Charu, right now I can give you a tantalising glimpse and that I have done. As I said - elevating, enhancing the mechanism, making it more effective. Wait till the meeting is done and then you will have the outcome of that based on these three "e"s that I have outlined to you.

370. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Secretary General of the League of Arab States.

New Delhi, December 17, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Hon'ble dignitaries, members of the delegations, and friends from the media:

As is usual we will have a brief media event. I would now request the External Affairs Minister of India, Shri Salman Khurshid, to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Thank you very much Your Excellency, Dr. Nabil Elaraby, an old friend of India and has been Ambassador for Egypt in our country some years ago and it is good to have our old friend back amongst us.

Ladies and gentlemen of the media, my colleague Mr. E Ahamed, distinguished Ambassadors, excellencies, it is indeed really a great pleasure to be welcoming Dr. Nabil Elaraby on his first visit in the capacity of Secretary-General of the League of Arab States. He is no stranger, as I said, to our country having served as Ambassador; and I believe that this is really a homecoming in a sense even if it is his second home.

The Secretary-General and I have concluded extensive discussions. We have had very productive exchange of views. I need hardly say that it was marked by warmth and friendship that is characteristic of the very special nature of the relationship that we have between Arab countries and ourselves in India.

I expressed my respect and admiration for the work the Arab League has done over the years to strengthen Arab solidarity in which we have a stake, and to enhance the economic well-being and social developmental of the Arab peoples.

We have expressed our belief that India and the Arab world share deep historical and civilisational ties, and these have evolved collectively in our South-South cooperation. We have noted that both sides have a great deal to learn from each other, and build firm partnerships that would have a positive effect for our common and extended neighbourhood. As our extended neighbour ends, your extended neighbourhood begins. So, we really are in that sense in the extended neighbourhood.

In particular we noted the success of three Indo-Arab investment summits that have taken place so far. The training programmes that we believe are the most extensive that we have with anyone in the world, and that is giving young Arab diplomats at our Foreign Service Institute a special feel, and special ability to link our two regions.

At the same time, there was a realistic acknowledgement that while a significant amount of work has been done in the formal cooperation between the League and India since 2002, I need hardly say that enormous potential for deepening, widening and taking our relationship to a higher level remains. So, the new memorandum of cooperation between the League of Arab States and India and the new executive programme that we have just signed represent a beginning - if I may not be exaggerating - of a new era of our partnership.

The schedule for the coming two years includes Ministerial and senior officials meetings in addition of course to the business summits and cultural festivals. The Secretary-General and I have agreed that the new format for the high-level political interaction includes Ministers from 22 Arab nations, and this would energize this relationship in a very special way.

The Secretary-General and I have also exchanged views on a range of regional and international issues. The Arab countries that lie in our immediate extended neighbourhood and we are closely linked in many many ways both with history, commerce and of course community ties. We have shared interest in peace and stability in the Arab world and the rest of the world.

I have conveyed our steadfast support to the Palestinian cause and expressed our support for the role played by the League in partnering the Middle East Peace Process towards establishment of State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital. And I am grateful that His Excellency reiterated the recognition of India's constant and steady support on this issue.

We have also discussed the situation, the distressing and deteriorating situation, in Syria and condemned the violence and the loss of life on both sides. We have agreed on the urgent need for a comprehensive peaceful resolution of all issues through dialogue in keeping with the aspirations of the Syrian people.

The Secretary-General and I have agreed on the need for strengthening our cooperation at multilateral fora such as the United Nations. We have noted that our delegations had worked closely in the past for coordinating our positions, and would seek to enhance those links through planned high-level political consultations that I have mentioned earlier.

So there is no doubt, ladies and gentlemen, that the visit of the distinguished Secretary-General is an important step in a natural and historical partnership between India and the Arab peoples, which is poised, we say with confidence, to grow strategically and dramatically in the coming years. Thank you very much.

Secretary-General, Arab League (Mr. Nabil Elaraby): Your Excellency Foreign Minister Salman Khurshid, Your Excellency Mr. Ahamed, Their Excellencies the Arab Ambassadors:

It is a great pleasure for me to be in India. As the Minister rightly pointed out, I was the Egyptian Ambassador here. And I was very happy when I came in presenting my credentials to President Zail Singh to say that I have read in a book that when the Great Indian King Ashoka took over he decided to send three letters to leaders of the whole world at that time and one of them was to Egypt. So, the relations between my own country and India are very old.

But in our modern time the relations have been exemplary between the whole Arab world. I had the pleasure to tell His Excellency the Foreign Minister today that in all Arab problems, India is there to support. The number one problem in the Arab world is of Palestine and India has been a steadfast supporter of Palestine. I remember when I was here during 1983 NAM Summit, President Arafat himself was telling us that when I have a problem, I go to the Prime Minister of India. So, the relations are old and we feel the bonds between our part of the world, which you call West Asia. And I think it is very important to renew these efforts.

The Arab League signed in 2008 an agreement with India which has been renewed, and added new elements. Now every year we are going to have high-officials meeting; every two years, Foreign Ministers meeting. It is very important that they should come and discuss everything, thrash out all problems and try to find solutions. And I am sure they will find solutions because the background of the two areas - here in India and in the Arab world - are similar. We all came out of colonialism and maybe the same coloniser sometimes. And we are looking for the future to have our rights and to play a role in building the world.

Cooperation in the United Nations is very important. The United Nations as we know needs a lot of reform. The Security Council needs a lot of reform. And it is important that we all work together to attain a just and workable solution for the problems the United Nations is facing, the Security Council in particular.

The type of cooperation between India and the Arab world which has been agreed upon covers all fields really not only political but technical and which is very important educational. India has reached a level of education which is very high. And it is very important to exchange views and see how we can mutually benefit from the achievements of India and the achievements in the Arab world.

I think as His Excellency has just said rightly, this is a new era, we have to build on it, and we have to continue to pay great attention to relations between our two countries because we have a lot in common in this world.

Thank you very much Mr. Minister. I do appreciate and I am sure all my colleagues appreciate the very close relationship between India and the Arab world.

External Affairs Minister: Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: The two dignitaries have agreed to respond to a couple of questions.

Q (Dr. Akhilesh Suman, Rajya Sabha TV): Sir, the warmth was very visible on the faces of both of you. What was that special thing, Mr. External Affairs Minister, that you discussed and what is the outcome of this discussion?

This question is addressed to His Excellency the Secretary-General. There have been many discussions about India's role in Middle East and Arabian world. What do you think India role has been in the Middle East and Arab world? What prospects do you see in the coming days after the visit is over?

External Affairs Minister: I will give it to the Secretary-General to answer first.

Secretary-General, Arab League: What I expect after the visit here is that the Chancellors throughout the Arab world would be working on programmes that would be able to enhance the relationship between India and the Arab world. As for the Arab world itself, we are going through a transitional period. There is no doubt about it.

We have on the one hand our perennial problem of Palestine which has to find a solution and as soon as possible. The Arabs took a decision last year, 2012, at Ministerial level that this conflict has to end. It is enough that we have gone through over 65 years now. We have to end this conflict. The whole world has accepted that, and the Americans have proposed that they will work for that. They are still working on it, I do not want to give an opinion now because it is a very delicate part of negotiations.

But the Arab Foreign Ministers are meeting in Cairo on the 21st in the premises of the League of Arab States and they will be addressed by His Excellency President Mahmoud Abbas who will explain where we stand now on all matters relating to the Arab-Israeli talks. I had never used 'peace process' because this is part of what has been called 'managing the conflict'. I would not say attaining peace, not a peace process ... (Inaudible)... because peace process takes time and we have no time for that.

On the other hand there is no doubt the Syrian problem, and maybe I should say something on that before the next question. No doubt we see a very ugly situation. A civil war, people are dying every day from both sides, all Syrians, three million refugees, the countries neighbouring Syria cannot any more find the resources to provide for these refugees who are suffering. And we have very cold weather now, exceptionally cold weather, in the area. Then we have six million displaced persons who cannot find food and shelter. No medicine, no hospital, no school. So, it is a very ugly situation, as I said. It is a very dangerous situation: it has to end.

I am very happy that the Secretary-General of the United Nations Mr. Ban Ki-moon issued a statement yesterday calling for cessation of hostilities during the Geneva Conference. I hope the Geneva Conference will take place - I have every indication that it will take place on the 22nd – and that there will be an effort, a real effort, from the Security Council. I regret very much that India is not on the Security Council now like last year.

So, to work for a cessation of hostilities and to save lives, the most important thing now is to save lives, Syrian lives very dear to all of us in the Arab League, and to save Syria as a country from destruction. The country has seen a lot of destruction in the last two years and we hope this is going to end. The people in Syria like every people in the Arab world and everywhere are always looking for liberty and democracy. And I hope the regime that will come out of Geneva will provide them with liberty and democracy.

External Affairs Minister: To the question that you have asked me I can only say that the historical dimension of our relationship is in itself extremely important and just continuing with that heritage itself is very important. But now there are additionalities, the additionalities such as our concern about strategic stability of the region not only for the world but also because we are hugely dependent on that region for our fuel supply. We also have more than six million of our people who are working. We are grateful to Arab countries for the livelihood they provide to our people. The remittances that come into India every year are a huge help to balancing our foreign exchange requirements.

Therefore, it is very important for us that we should be able to contribute both in terms of ideological position that we have consistently held on issues such as Palestine and Arab unity, but also in terms of our combined common interest and our enlightened interest in the welfare of the Arab people. And this is why every instrument, every platform, and every architecture that serves this overall purpose for the Arab world and for us is of high significance.

And I do believe that there are few relationships that can have the same quality, tenor, the feel, the content and the value that the relationships that we have with the Arab world. So, what we are now doing is, in signing these agreements we are trying to ensure that we have the right sort of existing functional architecture in order to maximise on the desire on both sides to be able to help and to work together for the betterment of our own people but also of human kind in general.

Q (Mr. Ashish, ABP News): My question is for External Affairs Minister Salman sahib. Sir, beg to invite your attention to what has happened to the Indian diplomat by the US authorities. In the light of new details that are coming, what action are you taking? What is your reaction to it? So far there has been no lawyer also for the diplomat. Has anything been done in that regard?

External Affairs Minister: I think that we have expressed our deep distress and a sense of disquiet that has been very very strongly felt. In strongest words possible we have communicated the sense that we feel both in terms of diplomatic responsibilities, of relationships between friendly countries, but also we feel a very extreme level of distress in terms of the human element that is involved.

The person of the officer being subjected to that form of indignity is for us completely unacceptable. Therefore, I can only say this to you that whatever needs to be done is being done. It is already in process. We have put in motion what we believe would be effective way of addressing this issue but also in motion such steps that need to be taken to protect her dignity. I think there are some larger questions involved that we will deal with in good time. But the immediate concerns we are going to address first.

The External Publicity Division and the Spokesperson will keep you posted and informed. I do not want to say anything in haste. I think that everything that can be done will be done, I can assure you. We take this thing very seriously. I think that our sense has been adequately communicated to our friends in the United States of America. Let us just now see what happens. You will be kept posted.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

371. List of documents signed during the Visit of Dr. Nabil Elaraby, Secretary General of the League of Arab States to India.

December 17, 2013.

S. No	Title	Signatory from Indian side	Signatory from Arab League side	Details
1.	Memorandum of Cooperation between the League of Arab States and the Republic of India	Sh Salman Khurshid, External Affairs Minister	H.E. Dr. Nabil Elaraby, Secretary General of the League of Arab States	The new Memorandum of Cooperation (MOC) replaces the existing MOC signed in December 2008. The new MOC provides for replacing the High Level Joint Committee of the existing MOC with new formats for future meetings, namely Ministerial and Senior Officials meeting, involving all the member states and the Arab League Secretariat. It also provides for setting up of an Executive Programme which will be renewed every two years.

New Delhi, February 20, 2013.

1. The 8th meeting of India-Israel Joint Working Group (JWG) on Counter Terrorism was held on 20 February 2013. The Indian delegation was headed by Mr. Asoke Kumar Mukerji, Special Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs. The Israeli delegation was co-led by Ambassador Jeremy Issascharof, Deputy Director General, Head of Strategic Division, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Mr. Eitan Ben David, Head of Counter Terrorism Bureau at the Prime Minister's Office. The delegations comprised of representatives from relevant ministries and agencies of the two countries.
2. Both sides exchanged perceptions of threats emanating from terrorism and emphasized their determination to fight the menace. They discussed terrorist threats in regional and global arenas as well as national counter-terrorism measures, state sponsored terrorism, prevention of transfer of weapons to terrorists, cooperation in multilateral fora and lessons from 26/11 and 13/2. The two sides agreed to enhance dialogue and cooperation in the area of counter terrorism.
3. The 9th meeting of the JWG will be held in Israel in 2014.

KUWAIT

374. State Visit of HH Sheikh Jaber Al-Mubarak Al-Hamad Al-Sabah, Prime Minister of Kuwait to India.

New Delhi, October 31, 2013.

1. At the invitation of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, His Highness Sheikh Jaber Al-Mubarak Al-Hamad Al-Sabah, Prime Minister of Kuwait is paying a state visit to India from 7-10 November 2013. He will be accompanied by a high-level delegation, including ministers, senior officials and captains of industry.
2. This is the first Head of Government-level visit from Kuwait to India since the post of Crown Prince and Prime Minister was bifurcated in 2003. From our side, the last Head of Government level visit to Kuwait was in 1981 when the then Prime Minister Smt. Indira Gandhi visited there.
3. During the visit, Prime Minister Sheikh Jaber will call on President Shri Pranab Mukherjee and Vice-President Shri Hamid Ansari. He will hold bilateral talks with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. His other engagements would include meetings with Ministers of Finance, External Affairs and Commerce & Industry. Prime Minister Sheikh Jaber will also attend a business luncheon meeting jointly organised by the three business chambers, FICCI, CII and ASSOCHAM. Prime Minister Sheikh Jaber and his delegation would also be visiting Agra.
4. India and Kuwait historically share friendly relations based on close people-to-people contacts. Geographic proximity, historical trade links, cultural affinities and growing cooperation in key areas of mutual interest, including interalia energy security, trade and investment, infrastructure development projects, petrochemicals and education continue to strengthen and broaden this longstanding relationship.
5. The two countries are among each other's major trading partners. Kuwait has been India's fourth largest crude oil supplier globally with bilateral trade in excess of US$ 17 billion in 2012-13. Both countries are exploring enhanced cooperation in energy and other sectors through mutually beneficial investments in projects, including in oil exploration, refineries, petrochemical complexes and fertilizer plants.

6. Indians form the largest expatriate community in Kuwait and their positive contribution in the progress and development of their host country is well recognized. There are over 700,000 Indian nationals working in Kuwait.

OMAN

375. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence commemorating the 20 years of Indian Navy – Royal Omani Navy Partnership and Ninth ‘Naseem Al Bahr’ Biennial Naval Exercises.

New Delhi, September 22, 2013.

The ninth edition of the bilateral Indian Navy-Royal Omani Navy biennial exercise begins tomorrow off Oman, in the North Arabian Sea. In this, the ninth edition of the bilateral exercise, Indian Naval Ships Mysore (guided missile destroyer), Tarkash and Tabar (stealth frigates) and Aditya (fleet tanker) are participating under the Command of the Flag Officer Commanding Western Fleet, Rear Admiral Anil Kumar Chawla. The Royal Omani Navy is being represented by Royal Navy of Oman Vessels (RNOV) missile and gun vessels, Al Muazzar, Al Mussandam, Al Naja and a Landing ship RNOV Temsah, along with Royal Air Force of Oman aircraft F-16, Hawks and Jaguars amongst others.

With the first Indian Navy-Royal Navy of Oman exercise having been conducted in 1993, this year marks 20 years of IN-RNO bilateral exercises. “Naseem Al Bahr” 2013, will be the ninth edition of the biennial bilateral exercise between the two navies. The exercise is aimed at deriving mutual benefit from the experiences of both the navies. A good measure of interoperability has been achieved over the years as result of such exercises. The scope and content of exercise have also increased progressively. The focus of the exercise this year would be on Surface Warfare, Visit Board Search and Seizure (VBSS), Anti Air Warfare, Air Operation, Advanced Helo Operations and Maritime Interdiction Operations (MIO).

Bilateral relation between Indian and Oman were formally established with the 1953 Indo-Oman Treaty of friendship, Navigation and Commerce, a first between Indian and any Arab country. Naval exercises have contributed to strengthening of bilateral ties between India and Sultanate of Oman. The signing of a MoU on Defence Cooperation in Dec 05 and subsequent establishment of the Joint Military Cooperation in Mar 06 has set the foundation for increased defence cooperation. Since then, naval cooperation between the countries has progressed steadily with increased port visits by naval ships and training of RNO personnel by the Indian Navy in hydrography, diving, training management, logistics management and dockyard management.

The visit to Oman is the last leg of the Western Fleet's Overseas Development to the Persian Gulf as the IN Ships have visited UAE and Kuwait earlier during their month long deployment to enhance bilateral ties and engage in naval exercise with friendly regional navies.

PALESTINE

376. Statement by Minister of State E. Ahamed, at the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People held at Indian Council of World Affairs.

New Delhi, November 30, 2013.

Your Excellency, Mr. Adli Hassan Shaban Sadeq, Ambassador of Palestine to India;

Your Excellency, Dr. Mazin Al-Masoudi, Incharge of League of Arab States Mission;

Director General of the Indian Council of World Affairs Shri Rajiv Bhatia;

Dr. Peter E. Kenmore, FAO Representative, United Nations;

Excellencies, distinguished invitees;

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am honoured to be here today amidst this august gathering to commemorate the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People.

Indians have always placed Palestine close to their hearts. India was the first non-Arab State to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organisation as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people in 1975 and was one of the first countries to recognize the State of Palestine in 1988. India opened its Representative Office in Palestine in 1996 following the establishment of the Palestinian National Authority.

Since the opening of the Representative Office in Palestine, India has been extending technical and economic assistance to the Palestinian National Authority. The assistance has been for humanitarian relief, development projects, establishment of educational institutions, budgetary support, training of Palestinian officials etc. We pledged an amount of US$ 10 million as budgetary support to Palestine during the visit of President Mahmoud Abbas to India in September last year. We are also in the process of construction of schools, setting up of an IT Centre and Vocational Training Centre in Palestine. Additionally, India contributes US$ 1 million annually to United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). Jointly with Brazil and South Africa as partners in IBSA, India is implementing developmental projects in Palestine. India is committed to continue with its support for the development and nation-building efforts of Palestine.

At the multilateral fora, India has played a proactive role in garnering support for the Palestinian cause. We played an active role in securing full membership for Palestine in UNESCO. We co-sponsored the resolution on enhancing Palestine's status to "Non-Member Observer State" in the UNGA in November 2012. We also chaired and proactively participated in the discussions on the Palestinian issue in the UN Security Council under India's presidency last year. We will continue to support Palestine's bid for full and equal membership of the United Nations.

Excellencies,

There has been regular exchange of high-level visits between India and Palestine. I visited Ramallah in July this year and met with the whole gamut of Palestinian leadership. I also handed over a cheque for US$ 1 million, as first tranche of our budgetary support, to the Palestinian Prime Minister. My Minister met with his Palestinian counterpart in New York on the sidelines of UNGA in September this year. India's support to the Palestinian cause was reiterated during these meetings. Visit of Palestinian Foreign Minister to India is on the cards.

I am glad to announce on this occasion that the government of India has started visa issuance system directly from our Representative Office in Ramallah since September 2013. With this facility, Palestinian nationals will be issued visas within 2-3 working days. I am hopeful that this will further strengthen people to people contacts between our two countries.

Excellencies,

In line with our support for United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, India supports a negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders with East Jerusalem as its Capital, side by side and at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap and relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions.

India has supported the Arab Peace Plan, which calls for withdrawal of Israel to pre-1967 borders, along with recognition of Israel and the establishment of the State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital. India has called for an end to Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories and for an early and significant easing of restrictions on the free movement of persons and goods within Palestine.

Excellencies,

We welcome the recent efforts of Palestine and Israel, mediated by the US, for resumption of direct peace talks and remain hopeful that the negotiations would lead to a comprehensive peace process for final resolution of the conflict within the agreed timeline.

Let me take this opportunity to reaffirm India's consistent and unwavering support to the friendly people of Palestine and reiterate India's conviction that a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region can be achieved through negotiations and dialogue so that a sovereign, independent, viable State of Palestine living side by side within secured borders, with the State of Israel, becomes a reality.

I thank the Indian Council for World Affairs for organizing this event.

379. Opening Statement by External Affairs Minister at Joint Press Conference with Foreign Minister of Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, in Jeddah

May 25, 2013

Your Royal Highness Prince Saud Al Faisal, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I thank His Royal Highness Prince Saud Al Faisal for the invitation extended to me to visit Saudi Arabia. This is my first visit to Saudi Arabia as the External Affairs Minister of India. I had the privilege of visiting this country in the past both as a Minister and also a pilgrim to this Holy land.

2. India regards Saudi Arabia as one of our most valued strategic partners. We are bound by shared history and close and regular contacts that span several centuries. In modern times, each generation of our leaders have contributed to deepening this relationship. The High level visits between our countries in 1955, 1956 and 1982, have laid a very strong foundation to our relationship.
3. The visit of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques to India in January 2006 as Chief Guest at our Republic Day and the historic 'Delhi Declaration' we signed during that visit broadened our relationship and opened a new era of intense dialogue and cooperation. The 'Riyadh Declaration' signed during the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2010 confirmed the joint commitment of our two countries to pursue "a new era of strategic partnership". I am happy that we have been able to further strengthen and diversify this partnership through regular high level exchanges and interactions.

4. The Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques is a visionary leader who played a very important role in shaping this great country, pursuing peace and accommodation in the region and establishing an era of strategic partnership with India. I carry a personal letter from Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to His Majesty.
5. I thank His Royal Highness Prince Saud Al Faisal for his leadership in guiding our bilateral relationship. Today we exchanged views on a number of bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of common and mutual interest. We reviewed the progress in the implementation of the Delhi Declaration and Riyadh Declaration, expressed satisfaction at the state of our bilateral relationship and discussed ways and means to further strengthen our strategic partnership.
6. We expressed satisfaction at the progress in our defence and security relations. The visit of Defence Minister of India in February last year, the first by an Indian Defence Minister, and the exchange of other defence delegations have contributed in strengthening our defence and security engagement.
7. The security and stability in the Arabian Peninsula is closely linked to the security in South Asia. We discussed the menace of terrorism the world continues to face and agreed to further strengthen our counter-terrorism cooperation which is an essential element of the Riyadh Declaration we signed in 2010. Our cooperation would not only benefit our two countries but also contribute significantly to the stability and security of the entire region and beyond.
8. We held productive discussions on a wide range of regional and multilateral issues. Saudi Arabia is part of our extended neighbourhood. It is very important that we remain in constant touch on the developments in the region. We both have similar views on a large number of regional and global issues.
9. India and Saudi Arabia are two major countries in the region. Despite the global economic down turn our countries continue to grow. We expressed satisfaction at the steady increase in bilateral trade. I also pointed out the increasing Indian investment in Saudi Arabia and highlighted the opportunity for Saudi companies to invest in India and become partners in India's growth story. We agreed to further deepen our economic engagement by utilising the enormous synergies between our two economies in the hydrocarbon sector and beyond.

10. We welcomed the regular meeting of the India - Saudi Arabia Joint Commission Meeting and agreed on the need for speedy implementation of its recommendations to strengthen our engagement. Information Technology, life sciences, pharmaceuticals, education, new and renewable energy are among the several areas where we hope to cooperate. There is huge potential for the private sector in both countries for deepening their business engagement. In this century of Asia, further enhancing economic cooperation between India and Saudi Arabia would benefit not only the peoples of our two countries, but the entire region.
11. I thanked His Royal Highness for hosting a large Indian community in Saudi Arabia. I expressed by gratitude to the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques for the concessions that Saudi Arabia announced for expatriate workers to correct their status or return to their country without penal action. Indians are the most preferred community in Saudi Arabia due to their hard work and discipline. I pointed out the contributions of Indian Diaspora in the economic growth of India and emphasised the importance we attach to the welfare of the Indians abroad. We also emphasised the need to further deepen our people to people exchanges through youth exchanges and cooperation in the education sector.
12. I once again thank His Royal Highness for the invitation and his warm welcome to me and my delegation. We spent more than an hour speaking to each other and I greatly benefitted from the enormous experience that his Royal Highness has. We discussed the concerns of the region particularly Syria and also to remain in close touch to ensure that the cycle of violence is addressed with sense of urgency and we move to a peaceful future. I have also personally extended an invitation to His Royal Highness to visit India at an early convenient date. I look forward to working with him to further expand and diversify our strategic partnership.

Thank You

380. Interview by External Affairs Minister to Arab News Saudi Arabia.

May 27, 2013.

Indian Foreign Minister Salman Khurshid is known all too well for his eloquence. He is suave and never shies away from fielding the difficult questions. He is forthright. He does not consider Nitaqat and its impact on Indians a hot-button issue."You have completely misread the situation. Saudi Arabia is implementing its domestic laws. If they have not done it in the past, then those working here were lucky. Now that this is the case, everyone needs to comply with their domestic laws."In an exclusive interview with Siraj Wahab of Arab News at the Conference Palace in Jeddah yesterday, Khurshid said India considers Saudi Arabia a center of stability in the region, adding that the security and stability of the Gulf region and that of the Indian Subcontinent are interlinked and that bilateral security cooperation between India and Saudi Arabia can contribute to regional stability

Following are excerpts from the interview:

Can you tell us about the talks that you have had with senior Saudi officials, including Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al-Faisal?

Saudi Arabia is one of India's most valued strategic partners. My visit is part of high-level exchanges that we maintain regularly as partners in peace, stability and prosperity. This is my first bilateral visit to Saudi Arabia as foreign minister, though I have been to the Kingdom earlier in different capacities. I had fruitful meetings with Crown Prince Salman, Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al-Faisal, Prince Muqrin, Interior Minister Mohammed bin Naif and Labor Minister Adel Fakeih. I also delivered a personal letter from our prime minister to Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah.

Has the visit laid a solid foundation for the two countries to take the relationship to a new level?

The directions are very clear. We need to fine-tune the steps that we can meaningfully take. It is necessary, therefore, that we have more extensive two-way visits at the highest level. India considers Saudi Arabia a center of stability in the region. The security and stability of the Gulf region and that of the Indian Subcontinent are interlinked. Bilateral security cooperation between India and Saudi Arabia will contribute to regional stability and in addressing the common threat of terrorism in the region.

You did not seem very vocal on the Syrian issue at the joint press conference on Saturday with Prince Saud Al-Faisal. Are there any points of divergence between the two countries?

It would be the same kind of divergence if you ask me about the car that you drive and the car that I drive. It is simply a different model. The Arabs here live next door to Syria. They have to see to a lot of factors that confront them in this region. We are a little bit farther away and we therefore have a different perspective. Moreover, we must keep in mind the standard positions that India holds. We have said this at the UN, and I think everyone accepts that in principle there shouldn't be an external dictation of how a country should rearrange itself. There are different ways of recognizing the aspirations and the opinions of the people themselves and creating conditions conducive for their own good. We have remained consistent in this regard. We don't expect everybody to fall in line with us. The objective may be common, but strategies and methodologies may vary from place to place. We support the objective but we only come on board to the extent of our capacity and in terms of our philosophy. We were not part of the coalition of the willing in Afghanistan, were we? Afghanistan remains the highest priority for us. We are fully committed to Afghanistan and we will remain in Afghanistan to help them in any way they wish. Our objectives (in Syria) are in line with Saudi Arabia. There must be free expression of the aspirations of the people and there must be an immediate cessation of violence. On this, we are very categorical. Our position is very clear. We support the UN effort and we support the Geneva effort. It has not succeeded thus far. Now that there is a conference, there seems to be greater convergence between Russia and the US. We would like to see how that works out.

Stretching the car metaphor a little further, is it fair to say then that while the models remain different, the ultimate destination is the same?

The people of Syria must find their voice. That is the Saudi position and our position as well. That is what Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al-Faisal said on Saturday.

India is said to have an equidistant policy vis-à-vis Riyadh and Tehran...

I don't know where this equidistance has come from. We have a natural relationship with Saudi Arabia and we have a natural friendship with Iran. We also have a commonality of energy security with Saudi Arabia and Iran. Iran is closer to India and, in a sense, Iran impacts a larger neighbourhood of India, whereas Saudi Arabia is a friend in an area where there is a huge presence of Indians. In that sense, Saudi Arabia is a distant neighbour whereas Iran is closer neighbour. Then there are next-door neighbours such as China. The position that you have with each country will dictate priorities and the fine-tuning of policies. We have differences with Iran on the NPT (Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty). We voted against Iran (at the UN). At the same time, we believe that Iran has the right to the peaceful use of nuclear energy, and that is what the Saudi foreign minister also emphasized very categorically. We don't accept that Iran should violate the NPT and weaponise. Saudis say that they shouldn't weaponise, and the Iranians themselves say that they don't want to weaponise. So where is the difference?

With tensions rising between Saudi Arabia and Iran, what is India's wish?

I would prefer there to be no conflict. Differences of opinion can be resolved through dialogue. I think everybody supports that view. I don't think there is anyone who would want to encourage conflict and confrontation. There are many events unfolding in the region. This includes the outcome of the Arab Spring, the spillover of weapons from one state to another, such as what we saw in Mali, for instance. There are also attempts to support and sustain the change that has taken place in Yemen and also to ensure that Bahrain remains stable. I think all these are different dimensions that we need to understand. For us, the priority is, of course, our own region. Afghanistan is our priority. We believe that all stakeholders, including Saudi Arabia, must be able to contribute to a peaceful solution. Your immediate priority should be your immediate neighborhood. We understand that. It is important that we understand why each one of us is giving priority to the immediate neighborhood, not because we think the others are unimportant. The big picture is something on which there is tremendous convergence between Saudi Arabia and ourselves. And, that was reflected in my conversations with the Saudi leadership.

What is the status of the agreement that was signed to swap prisoners, which calls for all Indian prisoners languishing in Saudi jails to be repatriated to India to serve their prison terms?

In 2010, we had signed the agreement on transfer of sentenced persons with a view of rehabilitating them socially and psychologically. Both sides are now discussing the modalities for implementing this agreement which will go a long way in addressing the issue of Indian prisoners in Saudi Arabia.

India has close bilateral ties with Israel. Arab states, including the key Gulf allies of India, are not comfortable with that. How do you manage these contradictions?

Our relationship with Israel came into existence in 1992, much after some of the Arab countries had established ties with Israel. Our relationship with Israel is independent of our ties with Islamic countries. India has strong and historic ties with the Arab world the key Gulf allies understand that our relationship with Israel does not impact on their own relationship.

India firmly believes that all states in the region, including Israel, should have the right to exist in peace within secure boundaries.

There is a new government that is taking over in Pakistan and the prime minister in the waiting, Nawaz Sharif, has made all the right gestures, hasn't he?

It is a good beginning. He has sent all the right signals.

Including the release of Indian fishermen languishing in Pakistani jails?

Well, the release of the fishermen was already in the pipeline. It was a good signal. Obviously, he (Sharif) is the prime minister in waiting so he would have been consulted. I think the signals that he gave during his campaign and also subsequently his response to the Indian prime minister's call all these are important signals, but they must not remain mere cosmetic, must not remain window-dressing. We have to go to the heart of the matter. I think we can only expect that he will first settle down as prime minister, his government will settle down, and then they will take up issues which are of important concern to us which we believe if addressed in an appropriate manner could open up tremendous opportunities.

The hot-button issue here is Nitaqat ...

No, not at all. I think this issue is misunderstood. One should look at it proportionately. We must comply with the domestic laws of this country just like we would expect our laws to be respected. If there was a period in which there was no insistence on compliance, well, we were lucky that there wasn't. If there is an insistence on compliance now, there is a reason. It is not that they don't want Indians. They have repeatedly said that they are very happy with the services that Indians are providing, both in terms of quality and conduct. They have also given us a grace period. We are processing all the candidates. They have also given opportunities for the people to switch jobs and regularize their work and continue to work here. So it is only those who can't switch due to lack of employment opportunity without incurring any penalties. I don't think you can expect any greater generosity than this. And then it leaves the opportunities open for fresh people to come here, provided there is demand and they have the proper papers. I think rationalizing, regularizing and sorting out the ambiguities is something that we should welcome. Some responsibility also falls upon us as well to do some handholding, to ensure that those going back home are resettled in India, and then when the opportunity arises they can come back. Meanwhile, I am confident that once this is sorted out the demand for workers will continue and, therefore, more people from India can legitimately come. And add to the legitimate work force here.

Speaking of hand-holding, is your government doing anything to rehabilitate those forced to go back?

This must be done by state governments. I have spoken to chief ministers and I am sure they will take care of them.

Why can't the federal government do anything?

The Central Government can only give money to state governments through the Finance Commission and through different schemes.

You are an integral part of the ruling Congress party. Is there a possibility of early general elections because of your party's good performance in the recent elections in Karnataka?

The elections should take place as scheduled. Why should we give up the time that we have. It is like asking somebody who is playing a five-day test match to turn it into a three-day match. This is a test match, not T-20. Elections come periodically. And no elections are a last word for any political party. You will win a few, and you will lose a few. Every election is a learning experience. Somehow some people think that the election they win is the last election and the election they lose is not the last election. In democracy, every election is a learning process. You learn from every election, the one that you win and the one that you lose. And then you prepare for the next one.

SYRIA

382. Address by Minister of State for External Affairs Shri E. Ahamed at High-level International Humanitarian Pledging Conference for Syria.

Kuwait, January 30, 2013.

His Highness the Emir of the State of Kuwait;

His Excellency UN Secretary-General;

Distinguished Heads of State/Government;

Distinguished Foreign Ministers;

Distinguished invitees;

Excellencies;

Ladies and Gentlemen,

1. I feel honoured to be here today to represent India at the 'High-level International Humanitarian Pledging Conference for Syria'. Let me thank the Kuwaiti leadership for hosting this conference and the United Nations Secretary-General for this need of the hour initiative.
2. All of us present here, representing a wide cross-section of countries, in our own ways are here to express support to the humanitarian needs of the Syrian people arising out of continued escalation of violence and rapidly deteriorating humanitarian situation in Syria.

3. Syria has, historically and in contemporary times, been an important country in the Middle East. Its role in the Middle East peace process and in the stability of the wider region is pivotal. Thus, prolonged instability or unrest in Syria will have serious ramifications for the region and beyond.
4. India has been closely following the developments in Syria. Syria continues to face acute crisis as the impasse has become explosive and could engulf the region. India has strongly expressed its concern on the steep escalation of violence and has called upon all sides in Syria particularly the Syrian leadership to abjure violence and resolve all issues peacefully through discussions taking into account the aspirations of the people of Syria. We have also clearly articulated our position that there should be no outside military intervention and the peace process should be Syria-led. In this regard we supported the Geneva Communiqué which includes the 6-Point Plan of Kofi Annan, and have welcomed the appointment of Lakhdar Brahimi as the new Joint Special Envoy.
5. India is deeply concerned about the hardships and sufferings of the people of Syria as a result of unabated violence in Syria. Thousands of people are being displaced internally and have also fled to neighbouring countries like Turkey, Jordan, and Lebanon. India welcomes and fully supports the initiative of UN to address the need of humanitarian assistance to the Syrian people.
6. India has always responded positively to the call for rendering humanitarian assistance and shall certainly do so in case of Syria as well. We have already processed humanitarian assistance to Syria in the form of life saving drugs and fortified biscuits.
7. In keeping with India's commitment to extend sympathy and support to the Syrian people, I am glad to announce at the conference that my government pledges US$ 2.5 million towards humanitarian assistance to the people of Syria. This assistance will be in the form of life saving drugs, food and other essential items required by the people of Syria.

8. I take this opportunity to reiterate that India is extremely concerned about the security situation in Syria and the spiralling violence. India considers that the only acceptable way to resolve the internal crisis in Syria is through urgent peaceful negotiations with participation of all parties taking into account the legitimate aspirations of all Syrians.
9. I once again thank the State of Kuwait for hosting this conference and the UN for this timely initiative.

383. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the Alleged use of Chemical Weapons in Syria.

New Delhi, March 22, 2013.

In response to a media query on the alleged use of Chemical Weapons in Syria the Official Spokesperson said:

“We have noted with concern reports regarding alleged use of chemical weapons near Aleppo in northern Syria. The UN, in cooperation with the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) would be investigating these reports.

As an original signatory to the Chemical Weapons Convention, India attaches the utmost importance to the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons world-wide. We stress that the international legal norm against the use of chemical weapons anywhere must not be breached. It is important to ensure the safe and secure custody of chemical weapons stockpiles and to prevent access to terrorists and non-state actors.”

384. Media reports regarding alleged use of chemical weapons in areas near Damascus in Syria.

New Delhi, August 22, 2013.

In response to media reports regarding alleged use of chemical weapons in areas near Damascus in Syria the Official Spokesperson said:

“There have been media reports regarding alleged use of chemical weapons in areas near Damascus in Syria, resulting in a large number of casualties. If the use of chemical weapons is confirmed, it is a matter of grave concern.

India has consistently supported the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons world-wide. Pending their elimination, it is vitally important to ensure safe and secure custody of chemical stockpiles and prevent their access to terrorists and non-state actors. We stress that the international legal norm against the use of chemical weapons anywhere and by anyone must not be breached.”

385. Response to a query on Indians in Syria.

New Delhi, August 31, 2013.

In response to query on Indians in Syria, the Official Spokesperson said:

“We are in touch with our Mission in Damascus who are also in contact with the approximately 25-30 Indian citizens in Syria. All Indian citizens are safe. Previously, we had advised all Indian citizens in Syria to return to India. They have once again been advised to leave Syria. The earlier advisory for Indian nationals not to travel to Syria also remains in effect.”

* The advisory was issued due to highly unsettled conditions and civil war waging in that country.

386. Spokesperson's Response to a query on situation in Syria.New Delhi, September 3, 2013.

In response to a question from the media on the situation in Syria, the Official Spokesperson has responded as follows:

“India has consistently called upon all sides to abjure violence so that conditions can be created for an inclusive political dialogue leading to a comprehensive political solution, taking into account the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian people. There can be no military solution to this conflict. We continue to support the proposed ‘International Conference on Syria’ (Geneva-II), being the best prospect for a political solution, for bringing the Syrian Government and the opposition to the negotiating table.

On use of chemical weapons in Syria, India has consistently supported the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons worldwide. The international legal norm against the use of chemical weapons anywhere and by anyone should not be breached. However, we will prefer to await the full results of the UN inspection.”

* The response came with reference to mounting media reports that the United States was wanting to attack Syria to punish the Government of Assad al Basher for use of chemical weapons on his own people in the ongoing civil war in the country.

387. Official Spokesperson's response to a question on current developments related to Syria.

New Delhi, September 16, 2013.

In response to a question from the media on the agreement reached between the Foreign Minister of Russia Sergei Lavrov and US Secretary of State John Kerry and on Syria's chemical weapons stockpiles, the Official Spokesperson said:

"India welcomes the framework agreement reached between Russia and the US on the time-bound safeguarding and destruction of Syria's chemical weapons stockpiles. As an important step in the process, India also welcomes the recent steps taken by Syria to accede to the Chemical Weapons Convention. This is in alignment with India's consistent stance of supporting the complete destruction and elimination of chemical weapons worldwide.

We also see these developments as the reinvigoration of the peace efforts towards a political solution to the Syrian conflict. We are hopeful that this will lead to the early convening of the proposed 'International Conference on Syria' (Geneva-II), which will bring all parties to the conflict to the negotiating table.

India has consistently called upon all sides to the Syrian conflict to abjure violence so that conditions can be created for an inclusive political dialogue leading to a comprehensive political solution, taking into account the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian people. Any external military intervention in Syria's affairs should be excluded."

KAZAKHSTAN

388. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan.

New Delhi, March 5, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming over for this media interaction.

As usual, we will begin with opening statements by the two Ministers and then they have agreed to take one question each from both the sides. I therefore now request the External Affairs Minister of India to make his opening remarks to the media.

External Affairs Minister of India (Shri Salman Khurshid): Your Excellency Mr. Erlan Idrissov, Hon. Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan; Friends from the Media; and Ladies and Gentlemen:

It is a great pleasure indeed to host His Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Kazakhstan. Mr. Idrissov is on an official visit to India at my invitation. I am deeply grateful that he accepted our invitation. It is a particular honour for me to meet this very old friend of India, who in fact started his diplomatic career in this city as a member of the then Embassy of the Soviet Union.

As you know, India's relations with Kazakhstan have been extremely warm and friendly. In the last few years we have had several high-level exchanges between our leaders. In 2009 during the visit of the President of Kazakhstan to India as the Chief Guest for our Republic Day, we declared a Strategic Partnership that we have assiduously nurtured since then.

Our Prime Minister visited Kazakhstan in 2011 on a visit which further strengthened this strategic partnership. And that is when we signed the Joint Action Plan defining the roadmap till 2014 which involves various bilateral projects. We have had the opportunity today to review a lot of them and the very constructive progress that has already been made on the roadmap.

Our meeting today was, needless to say, very fruitful. We reviewed particularly our bilateral relationship which now encompasses a number of strategic sectors including defence, civil nuclear energy and hydrocarbons. We also discussed various regional and international issues of mutual interest and we will continue to do so over lunch after this media interaction. We have a remarkable similarity of views on most of the global problems of today. We agreed that the menace of international terrorism has to be fought by the international community collectively and that we must also make bilateral efforts in this direction.

We have expressed satisfaction over the progress in our trade and investment relations, but the Hon. Minister was quick to point out that the potential is much greater. Our trade is reported to have crossed the half billion dollar mark for the first time last year. But still we agree it is modest.

We also have a number of significant investment projects in the pipeline in both countries. We have agreed to explore possibilities of creating a direct trade and energy corridor between our countries and this is really the visionary project that we are thinking of. We hope to also have enhanced air connectivity with airlines from Kazakhstan, and India soon having 14 flights a week to destinations in each other's country.

We reviewed our growing cooperation in the energy sector. Our company ONGC Videsh Limited has already acquired a 25 per cent stake in the Satpayev oil block in the Caspian Sea based on agreements that were reached when our Prime Minister visited Kazakhstan. We also explored further possibilities of cooperation in the hydrocarbons sector. We have requested the support of the Government of Kazakhstan for an important bid that OVL is making for a stake in the Kashagan oilfield.

We have strong links in the educational and cultural spheres. Collaboration in the field of Information Technology is of very special interest to Kazakhstan and India is pleased to be setting the IT Centre of Excellence at the Eurasian University in Astana, which will be equipped with a supercomputer. The first batch of trainees from the Eurasian University has begun training in India last month. We have also informed the Hon. Minister that India will set up a Central Asia E-Network as part of our Connect Central Asia Policy which would bring tele-education and tele-medicine to the people of Kazakhstan.

We have agreed to stay in touch on important global and regional issues. I have informed the Hon. Minister that I will be visiting Kazakhstan for the Istanbul Process conference and indeed also accepted his gracious invitation to visit on a separate bilateral visit. We have decided to strengthen our strategic partnership with a range of new initiatives that will boost trade and economic ties. Thank you very much. I now request the Hon. Foreign Minister Idrissov to address you.

Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan (Mr. Erlan Idrissov): Sir, thank you very much for your very kind words. Dear ladies and gentlemen, it is my pleasure to see you here, and I am heartened by your interest on Kazakhstan-Indian relationship.

Foreign Minister Khurshid has given an outstandingly detailed overview of our agenda and what we have discussed today. It is indeed a very full plate of things we have to do together. It was our mutual recognition that our record is quite impressive and our relationship covers many important areas of our cooperation which is of significance to both countries.

I fully subscribe of course to what the Foreign Minister said and I thank him for a very high appraisal of what we have been able to achieve so far. I fully agree with you that we have to jointly raise the plank of our relationship even higher because both countries with their potential deserve this.

Let me add one thing to make it very clear to Indian media. I came here to confirm and reaffirm our full respect and recognition of India's global and regional standing. India is one of the key players in political and economic, global affairs and regional affairs. We respect India as the country who was one among the first to recognize and support our Independence 21 years ago. We see the growth of India and we have full appreciation for the opportunities the growth of India presents to the world and to our part of the world.

We are also appreciative of India's recognition of Kazakhstan as the regional powerhouse. In 21 years of our Independence, Kazakhstan has been able to achieve great strides of development in political, economic and other aspects of life in Kazakhstan. This mutual recognition of India as a major global player and a major country of South Asia, and India's recognition of Kazakhstan's major role in Central Asia, is a very good basis for us to look into further opportunities to enhance our partnership.

We recognize today that the 21st century presents enormous opportunities. But it is also full of different challenges. Only by joining hands we will be able to efficiently address those challenges and efficiently utilize multiple opportunities. That is a common desire which was affirmed and cemented during the visit of my President to New Delhi in 2009 and during the visit of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to Kazakhstan in 2011.

The prospects of cooperation between India and Kazakhstan are bright. We are in the region which carries a lot of opportunities, and without India no single issue can be resolved in this part of the world. Therefore, we are here to develop an enhanced agenda with India to address regional issues. Of course, at the centre of regional security issues is Afghanistan, and we know that India's role in bringing normalcy to this long-suffering country is enormous. Therefore, this will continue to be one of the important areas of our cooperation.

The key message which I bring to India and which I carry back to Kazakhstan from India is that we agree to work very closely and pragmatically to develop connectivity between South Asia and Central Asia. This is the key answer to many opportunities which lie before us. We hope that with the strength and potential of India we will be absolutely able to develop those connectivities in multiple forms. Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: The floor is now open for a couple of questions.

Q: Your Excellency, we know that ...(Inaudible)...between the two countries are oil, space and nanotechnology. Is there any general agreement achieved in these spheres?

External Affairs Minister: This was really an opportunity to review what we are actually doing on the basis of agreements and memoranda that we have signed in the past. We are actually not only reviewing what has been achieved but also fine-tuning what more can be done and how we can speed up and enhance the level of cooperation. This we have agreed requires regular meetings, and we will find as many opportunities to ensure that the regular meetings continue to monitor. Wherever there might be anything that holds back progress, we have been able to flag those items on both sides. We will address them with alacrity and with determination.

I think that both of us are very optimistic about our work together. I must say the Hon. Minister actually used the words, 'we like to dream'. We share the dream of Kazakhstan and we share his dream. We hope that together we will be able to give substance to these wonderful dreams.

Q: Sir, would you update us on the status of the bilateral civil nuclear cooperation including the supply of uranium? Is this being implemented?

External Affairs Minister: Yes, in fact, I will let the Minister answer that because he is supplying it. So, you will have it directly from the country that is supplying it.

Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan: Yes, peaceful nuclear energy cooperation is a new important area of our partnership. During the visit of my President and your Prime Minister to Kazakhstan, major agreements have been signed. These agreements are being implemented. The timeframe for the current arrangement is 2014. Therefore, we are looking beyond that period and we are looking into longer term context of our cooperation. We also look at diversifying the forms of our nuclear cooperation.

In my Delegation I have the Chairman of Kazakhstan's National Atomic Company Kazatomprom. He specifically joined this delegation to stress the importance of our partnership in this important area for both countries. We know that India has big appetite for nuclear energy, and we as neighbours definitely have to cooperate in this area. Mr. Shkolnik had separate meetings today with his counterparts in the Department of Atomic Energy of the Indian Government, and they have agreed that they will of course take care that the current engagements are completely fulfilled by both parties. And they agreed to enter into specific forms of further partnerships. They agreed that they will have a mid review expert meeting in the summer. And in the fall, they will come for a full-fledged view of the ideas how to take this partnership further.

Q: Mr. Khurshid, you spoke about a trade and energy corridor. Would you give us some more details about how we are planning to establish that? And, to the Kazakh Foreign Minister, Sir, how soon is the Kazakh Government likely to give approval for the stake that the ONGC is planning to buy from ConocoPhillips in Kashagan?

Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan: Let me take the floor first. Thank you for your question. I do not want to prejudge time-wise and contents-wise the answer to the question of the share which ConocoPhillips decided to hand over to others. I hope that a decision will be done soon. This is a very complex project. It involves a lot of partners in the consortium. Changing hands is not just a simple matter. It involves lots of technical, financial and similar type issues. Therefore, I think everyone is interested that a decision is taken on a well-informed, well-balanced way. Therefore, I hope that this is the manner in which this issue is being considered. We of course are aware of the proposal made by ONGC. We are aware of your internal agreements with ConocoPhillips. I hope that decision will be done sooner than later. But let me stress that Kashagan is not the end of life. We have a very successful example of our cooperation on the same Caspian Sea but on a bilateral basis with India on the Satpayev block which is a promising block. They are nearing the production phase. They are nearing the physical drilling for the product in that field. I met yesterday with the Oil Minister of India and we discussed it today. At our negotiations we had people from the Oil and Gas Ministry of India. We agreed that we will keep our vision on energy, oil and gas cooperation broader than narrower, and we will continue to seek for more opportunities for bilateral cooperation on the offshore or onshore fields in Kazakhstan. That was our agreement.

External Affairs Minister: As far as the corridor is concerned, this is the North-South corridor concept that we have revived. And we are very encouraged by the support that we have had from Kazakhstan on revival of this project. This is of course something that goes far beyond TAPI. Therefore, the first step is to move forward with TAPI, and this is then an enhancement of that. Its basic principle on which we are all agreed is going to be obviously a landmark and a big ticket thing between Central Asia and ourselves. Now there are more than just two of us involved. Eight countries in Central Asia are on board and involved in this effort.

But we have to work through all the issues that are necessary. There are geopolitical issues; there are security issues; there are feasibility issues; there would be issues of finance; sharing of costs; sharing of benefits; etc. So, all that will come in due course. But what we have done is that we have agreed in principle that this is something that has to be done, something for which we can say its time has come. Now we have to make sure that it is actually implemented.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

390. Address by Minister of State E. Ahamed at the Second India - Central Asia Dialogue.

Almaty (Kazakhstan), June 17, 2013.

Prof Derbisali, Director, Institute of Oriental Studies;

Madame Abuseitova, Head of Department of Oriental Source Studies;

Excellency Mr. Kuanyshiev, Ambassador of Kazakhstan to India;

Distinguished scholars and academics;

Excellencies, Ladies & Gentlemen,

1. I feel pleased and privileged to inaugurate the Second India-Central Asia Dialogue in this beautiful city of Almaty. I am no stranger to this city or to the region and therefore, I am happy to be on familiar territory again amongst all of you.
2. I recall with pleasure, the inauguration of the first India-Central Asia Dialogue last June in another picturesque capital Bishkek, Kyrgyz Republic. During that inaugural event, we took a decision to have this Dialogue annually on a rotational basis. So now here we are, a year later, inaugurating the Second Dialogue. I think this is a reiteration of India's deep and sustained commitment to enhance links with Central Asian countries and the warm response from all of you to this common objective.

3. For over two decades of the independence of our neighbors in Central Asia, India has been focusing on this region and evolving ways and means of reinforcing the centuries of bonds. As part of this exercise, during the inaugural of the first Dialogue, I had spelt out our "Connect Central Asia" policy. The policy marks a more pro-active approach to engaging with our friends in Central Asia. It is in fact an attempt to re-connect in newer ways with a region with which we have been closely connected in our hearts and minds for centuries. We now need to update the means to connect our physical spaces and connect our common economic goals.
4. The elements of India's Connect Central Asia Policy are in various stages of formulation and implementation. High level political exchanges are taking place. Recently, in April and May, India's Vice President paid very productive visits to Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. Our External Affairs Minister was in Almaty two months ago when he met the President of Kazakhstan. We have had other high level engagements with all Central Asian countries. We have also worked on our common quest to build strong connections between our peoples.
5. We are continuously engaged in efforts to further our level of trade and economic cooperation, currently well below potential. To improve commercial relations, a major goal is enhancement of surface connectivity and access-route options. We are seeking to re-energise the North-South Transport Corridor and bridge the gaps in rail-road connections. We are looking at alternate routes through the Chabahar Port in Iran, and other Trans-Afghan links. I see that this Dialogue is devoting a full session to discuss connectivity-related issues. I have no doubt this will throw up some fresh ideas which can create breakthroughs in this vital area.

6. Another priority area is energy cooperation. Central Asian countries possess energy resources in abundance and India has a big energy appetite. We have to find viable solutions whereby Central Asia could be a reliable and sustained source and India could be a reliable market for Central Asian hydrocarbons and other resources.
7. Partnership for development is an important aspect of India-Central Asia relations. India believes in sharing its developmental experience in nation building with our friends. We are happy to provide economic and technical assistance for viable projects in the region. We have completed some modest projects like fruit & potato processing plants; machine and tool rooms; upgradation of a mini hydel plant and computerization of post offices. We are looking at connecting the region through an e-network to deliver tele-medicine and tele-education projects. We are also pursuing proposals for setting up collaborative India-Central Asia Universities and are discussing business models to set up hospitals and clinics with Indian expertise.
8. India has the privilege of contributing to capacity building and human resource development in the region and here I am happy to note that annually about 485 slots under our Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme, are utilized in Central Asian Countries. Some students from the region are also pursuing studies in India under other scholarship schemes. We are delighted to share our experience in this important area.
9. We are also working with our partner Governments to resolve problems like non-tariff barriers and stiff visa regimes so that business flows improve and we stimulate bilateral trade relations. India sees great potential for tourism and towards this end since last July has announced 14 weekly flights for each Central Asian country from India. Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan and Turkmenistan are well connected by air with India. Now, we need similar sustained air connectivity with Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan.
10. Both India and Central Asia are multicultural and pluralistic. We share civilizational bonds and ancient commercial links through the Silk Route. Our friendship is a fact of history and we must tap more effectively this natural reservoir of goodwill. It is our firm belief that enhanced interaction and collaboration between India and Central Asia will contribute to stability and development in the entire Central and South Asian region. We also believe that Afghanistan is an important factor for peace and stability in the region. At the "Heart of Asia" Istanbul Process conference held at this very venue barely two months ago, all of us agreed that a cooperative approach towards Afghanistan would benefit the entire region's stability. India chairs the CBM on Trade, Commerce and Investments in the Istanbul Process and our cooperation in Afghanistan can become a possible driver of its economic development.

11. Beyond Afghanistan, I am glad to see that the Dialogue has devoted a session to Security and Strategic Cooperation. We in the region face common threats of terrorism and extremism and we need to counter these tendencies in a coordinated manner—through expanding political and security dialogue and evolving common positions on terrorism and security and cooperating in economic growth. India is ready to offer cooperation in military training and joint research in defence.
12. The ambitious TAPI pipeline project which envisages transit of gas via Afghanistan and Pakistan to India is a welcome development. It could be the realization of a vision to connect Central and South Asia through an economic corridor. The success of joint regional initiatives will open new vistas of economic cooperation between India and Central Asia.
13. Here, I would also like to underscore India's commitment to develop multilateral relationships with the region through close and consistent cooperation in various multilateral fora. We support the CICA process, contribute as Observer in the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO), and have proposed a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) with the Customs Union. We note with satisfaction the evolving economic inter-dependency and integration in the Eurasian space.

We recognise this strong and positive contribution of Kazakhstan to these trends and commend its constructive role in the region.

14. Today, in Almaty, I am happy to particularly note India's growing bilateral relations with Kazakhstan, the largest country in Central Asia with a truly impressive and vibrant economy. Between 2000 and 2007, Kazakhstan has doubled the size of its economy and is targeted to triple the size by 2015. Our bilateral relations also have received a boost in 2012 with bilateral trade at US$525 mn. By 2050 we expect Kazakhstan to be among 30 most developed countries of the world. We rejoice in the success of President Nazarbayev's vision of Kazakhstan and are willing to be close partners in its resolute march to greater prosperity.
15. I congratulate the Indian Council for World Affairs, New Delhi and Institute of Oriental Studies, Almaty and special sponsor CRRID, Chandigarh for putting together this Dialogue. A special thanks to Kazakhstan, our hosts for their graciousness and enthusiasm and to all participants, whose deliberations would provide valuable inputs to research scholars, academicians, experts and policy makers.
16. I am confident that the India-Central Asia Dialogue, which was initiated on the 20th Anniversary of India's diplomatic relations with Central Asian countries in 2012, will be sustained. It will no doubt impart further momentum to academic exchanges and people-to-people contacts. It will help connect us in the most important way, it will connect our hearts.

Thank you

TAJIKISTAN

392. Media Briefing by Joint Secretary (Eurasia) on the Vice President's Visit to Tajikistan

New Delhi, April 13, 2013

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning friends and thank you very much for being here this Saturday morning.

As you know, this briefing is about the forthcoming visit of Vice-President to Tajikistan. Vice-President will be visiting Tajikistan from 14th to 17th of this month. India and Tajikistan have been having very high-level visits on a regular basis. For those of you who perhaps may not be aware, President Rahmon has visited India five times. From our side, the last visit was by President Pratibha Patil, and prior to that it was Prime Minister Vajpayee.

I have here with me Joint Secretary (Eurasia), Mr. Ajay Bisaria, who will brief you on the visit of the Vice-President. What we will do is follow the usual procedure and that is I will ask Mr. Bisaria to make his opening remarks which will provide you a broad picture of the visit, following which we will be open to any questions that you would like to ask on the Vice-President's visit. Subsequent to that, if any of you may have one or two questions on anything else we will be willing to answer them. Without much ado I will ask Joint Secretary Bisaria to make his opening remarks.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): Good morning.

I think when we talk about this part of the world, Central Asia, it is always useful to have some maps. So, I am going to put on the screen a couple of maps for you to see what we are talking about.

As Akbar said, the Vice-President of India, Shri Hamid Ansari, will be on an official visit to Tajikistan from 14th to 17th of April. This will be the first ever visit by any Vice-President of India to Tajikistan. During his visit the Vice-President is expected to meet with His Excellency Mr. Emamolii Rahmon who is the President of Tajikistan. He will also hold talks with the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and the Defence Minister of Tajikistan, apart from meeting the Chairman of the Majlis-e-Milli, which is the Upper House of the Parliament of Tajikistan.

The Vice-President is also expected to visit the Tajik Technical University where India set up an India-Tajikistan modern engineering workshop which was inaugurated in 2011. He is also expected to visit a city called Nurek in the Khatlon Province in Southern Tajikistan.

The Vice-President will be accompanied by Mrs. Ansari, and a high-level delegation comprising: Minister of State for Agriculture and Food Shri Tariq Anwar; Dr. M.S. Gill, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha; Shri G.N. Ratanpuri, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha; Shrimati Harsimrat Kaur Badal, Member of Parliament, Lok Sabha; and Shri Chandan Mitra, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha.

Let us just get to the next map. What I am going to do is just talk of some background of the bilateral relationship to give a context to the visit.

Relations between India and Tajikistan have been very close and cordial in the two decades of Tajikistan's Independence. Exchange of visits at higher levels has served to cement bilateral ties. As Akbar mentioned, Prime Minister Vajpayee had visited in 2003; President Pratibha Devi Singh Patil paid a state visit in September 2009; and of course President Rahmon has been a regular visitor to India. He has visited five times in 1995, 1999, 2001, 2006 and most recently in September 2012.

During his last visit, India and Tajikistan elevated their relationship to the level of a strategic partnership encompassing cooperation in a very wide spectrum of areas. We signed bilateral documents in many areas including textiles, culture, education, sport, health and labour, apart from agreements with private Indian companies.

During the visit India announced several new development projects in Tajikistan including an IT Centre of Excellence, a Pan-Central Asia E-Network which would include tele-education and tele-medicine delivery in the region, medical centres, language laboratories, an Entrepreneurship Development Institute and various small development projects.

Tajikistan, as you would see from the map, has immense geostrategic significance. It has borders with China of over 520 kilometres which were recently settled. It has a border with Afghanistan of 1425 kilometres. This is a very porous border and adds to the geostrategic significance of the region. The Afghan Wakhan Corridor, which you see a little sliver of in blue, is at its narrowest point 16 kilometres, which would mean that the distance between Tajikistan and Pakistan Occupied Kashmir is just that much, 16 kilometres.

India has strong civilisational ties with Tajikistan. We have linguistic similarities, similarities in customs, food, music, arts. These roots stretch into the depths of history from ancient times, even before the Kushana period in the first century AD. These ancient links have now a strong resonance, we are proud to say, in our modern ties with Tajikistan.

In terms of the bilateral relationship, we have several very strong consultative mechanisms which have been reinforced by high-level visits. We have foreign office consultations, a joint working group on counterterrorism, we have a joint commission meeting regularly on trade and economic, scientific cooperation. And we also have a working group on defence cooperation.

In keeping with the very close bilateral relations, we have responded several times to humanitarian crises in Tajikistan. India's project assistance in the form of grants has also been significant. In 1995 for the first time India extended a credit line of five million dollars to Tajikistan to establish a joint venture with a private Indian company in the pharma sector. This and the accrued interest were converted into a grant later.

Similarly in 2003, India helped set up a food-processing plant in Dushanbe which was commissioned in 2005. And we provided a grant in 2003 for setting up an IT Centre in Dushanbe which was inaugurated in 2006, started functioning in the name of the Bedil India Tajikistan Centre for IT. This has been a very successful model which is why it is being replicated now. During the state visit of President Rahmon in 2006 we committed to undertake the rehabilitation and modernisation of a 1936 vintage Varzob hydropower station. This has recently been completed in December 2012 and inaugurated. So, it is a very strong development partnership that India has with Tajikistan.

Apart from that, we have very strong and close defence relations. India has played a major role in development of infrastructure at the Gissar military aerodrome which was inaugurated by President Rahmon himself in October 2010. India is also training a large number of Tajik officers and cadets both within Tajikistan as well as by sending them to various military courses in India including the NDA and the IMA.

The level of trade between our countries is low for one very obvious reason which is the transportation difficulties and access to this landlocked country. The usual route or the most popular route right now for transportation of goods from India is by sea to Bandar Abbas in Iran and from Bandar Abbas by land. This is time-consuming and costly. And of late, for those who are following the region, we have taken several initiatives to reenergize the north-south transport corridor, and we are also talking of trans-Afghan corridors which give us special access to Tajikistan.

In terms of trade for 2012, trade figures from Tajikistan say it was 27 million dollars, extremely low, mainly Indian export of meats and meat products and pharmaceuticals, iron and steel, apparel and clothing accessories. We had the seventh session of the Joint Commission which has laid a blueprint for trying to improve this level of trade that met in February 2013 and identified a series of measures to accelerate our economic relations.

Apart from the development partnership, India has also contributed to capacity building in Tajikistan in a very strong way. The ITEC programme is extremely popular. During the visit of President Rahmon the number of seats was increased from 100 to 150, and there continues to be a strong demand particularly for courses in information technology, diplomacy, banking, etc.

One happy development for Tajikistan has been that it has joined the WTO in December 2012, and we hope that will give an impetus to bilateral trade as well as Tajikistan's integration into the global economy.

Of course, India and Tajikistan have coordinated closely in UN bodies and international organizations as well.

Let me stop right there. I will be happy to take any questions.

Q: Since MoS Agriculture and Food is accompanying the Vice-President, will there be any agreements relating to food and agriculture or any other agreements?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Let me just make an overall comment. Visits by the Vice-President are normally goodwill visits, and we see them as a high-level continuation of a political dialogue with a very close strategic partner in Central Asia. Normally during these visits we do not have deliverables like agreements. But we certainly expect a conversation to take place on this issue to take forward the discussions that took place in September last year. Incidentally, in the agriculture sector, you know that Tajikistan is very strong in cotton, there was a great deal of discussion during the visit of President Rahmon last year, and we expect some further discussion to take place.

Q: The Vice President has a background of foreign affairs. Has he been working in that area in his previous avatar? Or does he know the President of Tajikistan personally?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Yes, the Vice President has worked in the contiguous area. As you know, he was Ambassador in Iran and Tajikistan's roots are all Persian. So he is, I would say, an expert in the region apart from the fact that he has met President Rahmon personally and he has met in fact most of the leaders of Central Asia personally and has strong personal equations with them. He is, I believe, a scholar on the region and knows the history, background and culture very well. And we feel that this will certainly come into play in his conversations with the leadership.

Q:Is there any movement on the setting up of a military hospital facility in Tajikistan? And you mentioned the airbase at Ayni. Have the Indians disengaged and handed it over or are they still engaged in sort of jointly operating it?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): As I said, India has at the GMA Ayni airbase, India has contributed in terms of helping in renovation and reconstruction of that airport and making it state of the art. It is a military air field. India continues to be engaged there in training. We have a military training team present at the venue as well as for training cadets, young Tajik military officers, both in Tajikistan as well as in India.

On the hospital, yes, there is a talk going on of creating a hospital and you will come to know when it is done.

Q:Is there any contingency plan regarding the post-2014 after the withdrawal of the combat forces in Afghanistan because it is one of the areas of concern for both the countries?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Certainly we expect Afghanistan to be in focus in the conversation that Vice-President has with the leadership in Tajikistan. Even when President Rahmon was here in September 2012, that was a very important area for discussion, as I mentioned. Tajikistan is extremely concerned about the situation in Afghanistan. They have a 1425 kilometre, very porous border. There have been some troubling incidents in the south in the Badakshan region, and some Afghan mercenaries have been involved. We have, as I mentioned, a counterterrorism working group. We will certainly have conversation on the situation in Afghanistan and particularly, as you said, the situation as it will unfold post-2014 and the ISAF withdrawal.

Q: Do we have fighter plane stationed there in Tajik airbases?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): No, we do not. At GMA, as I said, we have reconstructed an airfield and that is the extent of our engagement.

Q: Do you have any long-term business plan with Tajikistan being one of the central countries in Central Asia?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): I think we just defined the elements of our long-term business plan. We have a very high level of engagement with Tajikistan; the President of Tajikistan was here; the Vice President of India is going there; we have declared a strategic partnership; and we have very strong areas of cooperation in multiple sectors including defence and on the trade side. So, I think there is a blueprint for very long-term coordination.

Q:...(Inaudible)... plan with Tajikistan, competing countries?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): I am not here to comment on behalf of China or Russia or other forces. But let us just say that there are a number of active countries with whom Tajikistan incidentally has good relations and that includes Russia, China as well as the US. So, that is a question you should put to our Tajik friends.

Q: Are there any Indian firms in Tajikistan?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): We have a very limited presence of Indian firms. There is one group from Bangalore called Khode which is trying to get active in Tajikistan. There is a wonderful five-star hotel coming up by the Crowne Plaza Group in Dushanbe. Those are two or three exceptional stories. BHEL of course is active as a public sector organization because of Tajikistan's huge hydroelectric potential and their need to develop hydroelectric energy where we want to coordinate with them. But there is a limited presence of Indian companies in Dushanbe.

Q: Khode, are they making rum there?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): No.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you.

393. Onboard Media Interaction by Hon. Vice-President En Route to Dushanbe

April 14, 2013

Good afternoon dear colleagues and welcome to you. Hon'ble Vice President has kindly agreed to interact with you. The media briefing will start with brief remarks by the Hon'ble Vice President, followed by few questions which the Hon. Vice-President has kindly agreed to answer.

Vice-President of India (Shri Mohammad Hamid Ansari): Thank you everyone, Hon. Tariq sahab and friends here.

This is a visit to a neighbouring country. As you might have noticed, the air distance between Delhi and Dushanbe is less than the air distance between Delhi and Bombay. Total flying time is three hours till the door opening and all the rest of it. So, this is really a neighbouring country. And it is a country with which we have had very good relations since it came into existence after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

There have been good many visits. Prime Minister Vajpayeeji went there; President Pratibha Patilji went there. From their side President Rahmon has been to India on five occasions. There have been a lot of Ministerial visits.

is a very small country. It was one of the smallest units of the old Soviet Union. It is also a country where levels of development are much lower. It used to depend a great deal on subsidies from Moscow. So, after the collapse of the Soviet Union it went through a bad patch, both economically and politically, because there was a civil war, which finally got settled.

Today it depends on remittances. There are almost a million citizens of Tajikistan out of a total population of seven million who are as guest workers in the Russian Federation, in Kazakhstan and maybe a few other places. And those remittances are a critical element for the income of the country and the welfare of the country.

Our own relations with them are good, extremely cordial, politically very good relations, commercially modest. I think the total trade turnover is about 34-35 million dollars. We have rendered a good deal of assistance to them in a variety of small projects, and that assistance is continuing. Recently we had a meeting in Delhi of the Joint Commission chaired on our side by the Commerce Secretary. Similarly there are various other small groups.

We cooperate on terrorism. One area of common interest between the two of us, and of high priority interest, is the problem of terrorism emanating from the territory between us and them, which means Pakistan and Afghanistan. And Tajikistan has an enormous interest in the stability of Afghanistan. We have the same kind of interest, same kind of concerns. So, this is an area where cooperation and exchange of views has taken place on a continuous basis and it is also an area of convergence.

I think I have said my piece.

Q: ...(Inaudible)what aboutthe poet Badil.....

Vice-President of India: Yes, the point, Bedil of course is buried close to Pragati Maidan. The cultural links are very old. If you go back and read their history, the archaeological finds that have been there have produced sufficient evidence of very lively exchanges, I mean shells from the seashores of India. So, that kind of thing has been there for a long time and of course we can always say that the founder of the Mughal dynasty Emperor Babur originated from somewhere in that area.

Q: Your Excellency, after 2014, after the likely withdrawal of American forces from Afghanistan, ...(Inaudible)... strategy for India. Is this visit a normal visit or does it have a specific agenda?

Vice-President of India: It is a normal visit because this is part of the exchange of visits which take place between the two countries. The visit of a Vice-President is the first one on our records, but exchanges at high-levels have been on a fairly continuous basis. As far as the withdrawal from Afghanistan of ISAF forces is concerned, that is something which everybody is watching. We are also watching. Let us see how things shape up.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Vice President of India: The level of below poverty line population is very high. I read somewhere it is almost 60 per cent or so. So, assistance in any form is welcome by them, and we have been offering assistance to them in three-four specific areas. Capacity building is a critical area. We have given a very large number of ITEC scholarships to them, a substantial number of ICCR cultural scholarships to them. Some of their military cadets train in our military academy. So, this capacity building, that includes IT parks and things like that, is a major area. It is a strong point with us and we are happy to share it with them.

Q: What does the Government of India expect from Tajikistan in terms of trade? We have a wonderful relationship with Tajikistan, but what are we going to do for our trade?

Vice President of India: Trade will develop. Our major problem not only with Tajikistan but with all the Central Asian states is of access. We do not have a line of entry into Central Asia. The road through Pakistan which is the most obvious one is for the moment blocked, may remain blocked for God knows how long. The only other access on which we have been working is through Iran, Afghanistan, Bandar Abbas, Chahbahar, Zaranj-Delaram road. So, Afghanistan route is possible. Of course there is a long route through the old Soviet Union but that is not an economically viable thing. There is technically another route through China but again it extends distances so much.

So, our real problem of trade with Central Asian countries, whether it is Tajikistan, Uzbekistan or any other, is the problem of access. This is a problem that we are also addressing as far as energy sources are concerned, gas from Central Asia for example.

Q: Is there a move to ...(Inaudible)... defence engagement?

Vice-President of India: We have an ongoing cooperation. That is going on. We are training some of their officers and cadets in our military academy. That is a pretty open up thing. But there is a no specific, I mean we are not military allies or anything like that.

Q: Can you leverage on the terrorism issue? ...(Inaudible)...

Vice-President of India: They have suffered on their own from terrorism very considerably and, therefore, they are very sensitive to the issue of terrorism. Just as we have suffered from terrorism from across our borders, they have suffered from terrorism from across their borders, in this case terrorism emanating from Afghanistan. So, they have concerns.

They have concerns about the various kinds of extremist movements which they have managed now to bring under control, but it remains a live issue. So, we do exchange information on the question of terrorism. There is a working group that meets at a certain frequency. Thank you. Have a pleasant flight!

394. Media Statement by Vice President Hamid Ansari at the Joint Press Event with the President of Tajikistan.

Dushanbe, April 15, 2013.

Distinguished Representatives of the Tajik and Indian Media,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

1. I am delighted to be in your beautiful country. India and Tajikistan share deep historical bonds which have been invigorated through exchanges at all levels. I take this opportunity to thank you Mr. President and to convey to the people of Tajikistan our best wishes of peace, stability and prosperity under your prudent leadership.
2. I had a very productive meeting on a one-to-one basis with His Excellency President Emomali Rahmon followed by very constructive delegation level talks. Our talks focused on further strengthening the already close relations between our two brotherly countries. Our relations are not of today; they go back, even before the first millennium A.D. These ties have been strengthened in recent years and I have no doubt that they will be further strengthened in times to come.

3. In our talks, I emphasized India's commitment to our strategic partnership. We have agreed to strengthen our relations further in the energy sector, IT, health, education and in the establishment of small and micro industries in Tajikistan. We discussed cooperation on security issues as well as in countering cross-border terrorism. I also apprised His Excellency the President, of India's drive to expand its relationship with the countries of Central Asia through a 'Connect Central Asia' Policy. I am happy to state that both, His Excellency President Rahmon and I agree that our cooperation has greater potential and we should work to realize it.
4. I also apprised HE President Rahmon, of the progress in various areas of cooperation that was agreed to, during His Excellency's extremely successful visit to India in September 2012. My visit carries that dialogue further. We discussed different ways to strengthen the strategic partnership, which was declared during the President's visit to our country. We have agreed to focus on our common approaches and work towards the welfare of both our peoples.
5. H.E. President Rahmon and I also discussed regional security issues. We exchanged views on how to cooperate in maintaining regional peace and security. In this, the situation in Afghanistan is of prime importance. Both the President and I agree that nations in the region, as well as the international community, should strengthen Afghanistan's capacity to maintain peace, stability and prosperity of the Afghan peoples. We also discussed the international political situation and agreed to strengthen our cooperation in multilateral organizations.
6. I congratulate the Republic of Tajikistan on its becoming the 159th Member of the World Trade Organization. We welcome Tajikistan's entry into this premier trade organization and will work with Tajikistan within the Organization to our mutual benefit. The deeper integration of Tajikistan with the global economy will not only benefit your country but would also enhance our bilateral trade and economic cooperation.

7. I look forward to visiting the Nurek Hydroelectric station as well as the Tajik Technical University. I will be meeting with the Chairman of the Majlisi Namoyandagon along with Members of Parliament from India who have accompanied me. India and Tajikistan share common secular and democratic credentials and we have much to discuss between our Parliaments.
8. Finally, on behalf of myself and my delegation, I would like thank H.E. President Rahmon and the Government and people of Tajikistan for the warmth and hospitality accorded to us during this visit. We are truly at home here.

Thank you all very much.

395. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) on Vice President's ongoing visit to Tajikistan.

Dushanbe, April 15, 2013.

Under Secretary (XP): Good evening friends and welcome to today's media briefing. To brief you on the various engagements that the Vice President had today, we have with us Secretary (East) Shri Sanjay Singh, Ambassador Asith Bhattacharjee and Joint Secretary (Eurasia) Shri Ajay Bisaria. The briefing would begin with brief opening remarks by Secretary (East), following which the floor will be open for a few questions.

Secretary (East) (Shri Sanjay Singh): Thank you very much. I will not give a 'brief' opening statement, I will give you a detailed opening statement; and I will bring your attention to the media statement which was made by the Hon. Vice President. I hope all of you have got a copy of it. I will just highlight some points from that.

He said he had a very productive meeting on a one-to-one basis with His Excellency President Rahmon followed by very constructive delegation-level talks. He also said, 'I emphasized India's commitment to our strategic partnership' and that 'We have agreed to strengthen our relations further in the energy sector, IT, health, and education and in the establishment of small and micro industries in Tajikistan'. He also talked about discussions on cooperation in countering cross-border terrorism. He talked about the Connect Central Asia Policy which has been launched by the Government.

Both of them took stock of the considerable progress in various areas of cooperation and expressed satisfaction. They also discussed regional security issues and the situation in Afghanistan. He congratulated Tajikistan for becoming the 159th member of the WTO. He told you that he would be visiting a hydroelectric power station tomorrow, and the Tajik Technical University the day after.

Let me also give you further details beyond this. The one-to-one restricted meeting lasted around forty minutes, and then we had the delegation level talks. It was reiterated that this high-level visit by the Hon Vice President was part of our efforts to renew contacts at regular intervals, high-level contacts, which is in keeping with our strategic partnership.

In the Tajik delegation today - the Indian delegation you know because you have met all of them - at the delegation level talks you had Foreign Minister, Energy and Industry Minister, Education Minister, Trade and Economy Minister, Health Minister, Agriculture Minister, Culture Minister. This reflects the various areas in which we have cooperation with Tajikistan which is multifaceted.

In the delegation-level talks, in addition to what President Rahmon has told you at his press conference he expressed satisfaction with the state of bilateral relations, which he said were marked by cooperation in a number of areas and has enormous opportunities for expansion. He said that he had visited India in the year marking 20th anniversary of our diplomatic relations, his visit was very good. And he remarked that the Vice President's visit would bring a higher level of cooperation because the Vice President had got along with him - something which is very welcome in our region which is rare. So, it was a good omen for the visit.

The President emphasized that our ties are brotherly. We have got good international cooperation. We have cooperation in counterterrorism, we have security cooperation. We have a number of joint projects. And he expressed satisfaction at the cooperation in capacity building. He invited

Indian investments in the areas of cotton, agriculture, mining. He pointed out that Tajikistan has enormous reserves of silver and precious stones, which is something that he felt Indian industry could source from Tajikistan. He talked about energy, hydrocarbons and other areas in which there could be cooperation. He also talked about regional cooperation focused on Afghanistan.

The Hon. Vice President in his discussion said that Tajikistan was a very close friend and neighbour. We have historical ties with Tajikistan which has seen various cultures and various religions over its long history, such as Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Islam. And this is reflected in the Museum of Antiquity, which some of you had seen yesterday, the various aspects of Tajik civilization. We have diverse areas of cooperation, and we have security cooperation as well as cooperation against terrorism.

Hon. Vice President emphasized that we should work in promoting cooperation which would be taken forward by the private sectors of the two countries because this would be very useful. He also talked about Tajikistan's WTO accession which would help create better conditions for more cooperation. He emphasized that we stand committed to developmental cooperation with Tajikistan, and are ready to create another IT centre in the Tajik Technical University, which he would be visiting on Wednesday morning. We are also to put up an Entrepreneurship Development Centre, certain small medical units, we are also going to be cooperating with Tajikistan in setting up micro, small and medium enterprises in Tajikistan.

We have considerable cooperation in capacity building. We also sought Tajik help for cotton in India because Tajikistan has considerable expertise in growing cotton, and this is something that we can use. We have very good cooperation in the multilateral fora and the United Nations, and for the expansion of United Nations Security Council.

Thereafter, Hon. Vice-President visited the Majlis-e-Namandyagon which is the Lower House of the Majlis or the Parliament of Tajikistan. He was welcomed by Chairman Zuhurov and his colleagues who are from the Parliamentary Friendship Groups and heads of various Committees. It is interesting that Chairman Zuhurov talked about civilisational links based on the Avesta, the Rig Veda, and ties go back to that era. They talked about Rumi, Rudaki, Dehlavi, and in modern time by the relationship between Tursunzade and Rabindranath Tagore, and obviously Bedil.

He said that Tajikistan and he himself are very happy with India's growing stature as an emerging economy, and that Indian Parliament was a great beacon of cooperation for the Tajik Parliament and it wished to increase cooperation, and (that) they were exchanging a lot of delegations to India.

Hon. Vice President did mention that it is true that we belong to a common cultural area and the visit to the Museum of Antiquity posited that. We have strong, stable relations. We have elevated them to a strategic partnership during President Rahmon's visit in September last year. We have regular exchanges between our Parliaments. He emphasized that India is wedded to democracy and that Indian Parliament is ready to strengthen the bonds of friendship between our two countries.

In the afternoon, Prime Minister Akil Akilov called on the Hon. Vice-President, and he praised India's emergence as a major economy. He emphasized that bilateral ties have been elevated to a new level. He talked about the renovation of Varzob-1, Pamir Energy. He thanked India for developmental assistance, and also talked about the IT centre in the Tajik Technical University from which nearly 600 trainees have already been trained, and when we renew the centre I think it will create a greater capacity in Tajikistan in the information technology field.

He talked about trade and economic links and invited Indian participation, like the President did, in mining and pharmaceuticals. But he also talked about cooperation in cotton, wool and leather sectors which Tajikistan has enormous raw material; and said that Indian industry could utilize the three new free trade zones that are going to be put up by Tajikistan.

The Hon. Vice President emphasized that the MoU signed by FICCI with its counterpart and that we must get our entrepreneurs together and work towards utilizing the opportunities and the potential that exists.

He also said that we must have regular meetings of the Joint Working Group on Terrorism, we should strengthen air connectivity, and facilitate visas for businessmen which would help our trade and industry. And the Tajiks said they were working hard on these two areas.

I would not go over everything that Foreign Minister said in his call on the Hon. Vice President, but it is interesting he said we have the same common vision and common fight against terrorism. He said that every Tajik of a certain age has been accustomed to Indian cinema, generation grew up on it, he mentioned. And he said Tajikistan is like Switzerland, only more pristine and has 13,000 glaciers and a thousand pure rivers running out of it. It is a fantastic locale for film shooting and he invited Indian Bollywood and other Indian centres to come and make films in Tajikistan. And he said he will try and make sure that business visas and visas for films will be facilitated.

The final meeting today was with Trade and Economy Minister Mr. Sharif Rahimzode who has just visited India in February for the meeting of the Intergovernmental Commission. This was the seventh meeting where a number of projects were discussed to take forward and implement the vision of Prime Minister and President Rahmon for the strategic partnership. He had had very a good meeting with Commerce, Industry and Textiles Minister, MoS Commerce, and others.

He said one of the things that Tajikistan is looking for is markets in India and they are working on an agreement on transit to India, and he sees the market as very promising and he will be working on seeing a passage of transit to India. And he welcomed exchange of business delegations, and thanked India for WTO support.

I will end there and I will request Ambassador, if he has some other points which he would like to just add, to give local colour to this briefing.

I thank you.

Ambassador to Tajikistan (Shri Asith Kumar Bhattacharjee): Thank you, Secretary, in fact you have been so exhaustive that it was locally colourful, if I may put it so, more colourful than I can say the thing. But what I could do perhaps is interject when there are questions.

Secretary (East): Okay. And Ajay is our expert who has already briefed you in Delhi. Would you like to add something?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): No.

Secretary (East): Alright. Okay, the floor is yours.

Q: What tangible progress was made since September 2012 visit of the President in strategic areas?

Secretary (East): Tangible progress now is that we have identified a locale for a second set of an IT centre, we have a partner; we also have a partner for the medical centre that we are setting up in southern Tajikistan which has made considerable progress. I think Joint Secretary (ERS) briefed you on that in Delhi. There is progress in other areas of capacity building that we have tried to put into place, the various areas that were discussed during President Rahmon's visit. I think we are quite satisfied with the developments that have been there since then.

Q: Over the last two days?

Secretary (East): The last two days has been a method of good opportunity, rather today has been a good opportunity to take stock of our relationship in the multifaceted areas of cooperation that we have. And after seeing the progress that has been made, we are quite satisfied.

Ambassador might like to say something on this. He is the one who has been working on it.

Ambassador to Tajikistan: I am going back to your first question. There is one very important tangible progress which has been made and that is we have assisted Tajikistan to join the WTO as the 159th member. We are members of the WTO, now they are members of the WTO. So, it assists in our bilateral trade and economic relations. That is one very tangible progress. And this request has been coming down from 2006 visit and it has taken Tajikistan a long time to negotiate with the countries to get the accession to WTO.

Q: My question is to Mr. Sanjay Singh. I am intrigued this morning when the Vice President was making the statement, he used the words strategic partnership and concern for counterterrorism and security; and also in your briefing you have also mentioned these words at least five times. Can you relieve me of my intrigue and tell me it has something to do with the coming year when NATO leaves? And do you think that our responsibility of problems is going to cease for both Tajikistan and us? Let us face it. We all know that there is going to be some trouble there. And if there is trouble in Afghanistan after NATO forces leave, we are going to be affected. Will you agree with that assessment?

Secretary (East): I am generally an optimistic person and I have a positive outlook towards the future. And we have and Afghanistan has built considerable capacity over the last decade or so. And we are very happy to cooperate with Afghanistan in being able to create a stable and prosperous polity. I think a stable and prosperous polity is required in the region not only in Afghanistan but everywhere because the main requirements for us in India and other countries of the region is development and prosperity because we are all developing countries, and we have to bring the gains from development to our people. So, while we are cautiously optimistic, we also work and create, in a way, partnerships for any eventuality that may or may not come up.

Q: The Vice President mentioned this Connect Central Asia Policy which has started ...(Inaudible)... Under this programme which he mentioned to President Rahmon today, are there any tangible outcomes of it yet? Have we decided on any areas because there were four points that the programme started with – the commerce, connectivity – because we agreed to improve connectivity but the flights to Dushanbe never really happened.

Secretary (East): Thank you very much for the question. There is a very good address given by our Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. E. Ahamed in Bishkek at the India-Central Asia Conference or seminar that was organised by Ajay last year in July, and since Ajay is the architect of the Connect Central Asia Policy, perhaps he will be able to do a better briefing. So, may I request him to come in here and talk about it?

Joint Secretary (ERS): Sure. Connect Central Asia, as we have been talking in the briefings, was a conceptual idea of proactively increasing our engagement with Central Asia. It had a number of points, about 12 of them, apart from a few flagship projects. Let me tell you the state of health of flagship projects which we announced at that stage. Apart from the IT centre of excellence which we will announce soon and which will be set up here, a flagship idea was a Central Asia E-Network. And we have just gone to the stage of issuing a tender for it, and we expect to roll this out very soon within the next year or so, which will be a programme based on a hub in New Delhi and spokes in all five Central Asian capitals, and able to deliver telemedicine and tele-education with backend support of state-of-the-art hospitals in India, with backend support of universities and to be able to deliver this. So, this is the stage we have reached of completely designing the project and now it is going to roll out.

We are talking of a Central Asia University, we are talking of one in Bishkek, and we are in an advance stage of discussions with Kyrgyzstan for developing this university. Medical centres are what we are also talking of. We are trying to find the right business models. For Tajikistan we had the idea of urgent care centres which we will roll out. So, the idea was that we announced a policy which was a conceptual framework of increasing engagement. Within it we have a number of flagship projects which you will see them rolling out in the next year or so.

Q: Do you see any Iran's role in this Central Asia programme?

Joint Secretary (ERS): The Connect Central Asia Policy is about India's role in Central Asia. So, that is what I am going to talk about. I am not going to talk on behalf of Iran. But since you have mentioned Iran, one of the ideas of Connect Central Asia is connectivity, physical surface connectivity, and one of the elements is the North-South Corridor, which uses the Bandar Abbas and the territory of Iran to develop a connection with Central Asia. We are promoting that, as also Chabahar Port in Iran which is also being used along with trans-Afghan routes. So, that is where Iran comes in.

Q: In the Azerbaijan, do you think you can use their ports as well? Azerbaijan ...(Inaudible)... Iran. Is it a part of the Central Asia Connect?

Joint Secretary (ERS): Certainly. The North-South Corridor which we have been talking about goes north from Bandar Abbas to Bandar Anzali, and then to Astara in Azerbaijan, and thence through the Caspian Sea to Astrakhan in Russia. So, Azerbaijan is very much part of the North-South Corridor Project. It is a signatory to this, and in fact the next meeting of the coordination council is expected in Baku in the month of May.

Secretary (East): If I may add to that, there is a railway line from Bandar Abbas to a place called Rasht, and the missing link is from Rasht to Astara which is about 180 kilometres. So, if you could build that railway line from Rasht to Astara, then you would have connectivity from Astara to St. Petersburg. So, the challenge is to build that missing link. And Ajay is trying very hard, along with our friends in the Ministry of Commerce, that at the meeting in Azerbaijan we would all agree on building that link so that we would have direct connectivity.

Q: What sort of terrain is that from Astara? Is it plains?

Secretary (East): No, it is not plains; it is part of the mountainous area of North Iran.

Joint Secretary (ERS): In fact this is the link within Iran. But after that, to the point in Azerbaijan, it is through the Caspian Sea and then from the city of Astrakhan in southern Russia is through the Russian railway network.

Q: As a corollary to an earlier question, the Vice President mentioned his extensive talks on Afghanistan post NATO withdrawal. ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East): He mentioned that he had talks with President Rahmon on regional security issues, and the situation in Afghanistan is of prime importance.

Q: Post the withdrawal, should we expect a departure of the strategy that we have been using over deploying in Afghanistan or should we continue on the same?

Secretary (East): I would not like to speculate on what will happen once one year ends.

Q: In view of the next year's pullout, was there a request from Tajikistan to train more military personnel, or did India offer to train more?

Secretary (East): I see no connection.

Q: As regards the military men whom we are training, was there a request to train more? There are officers being trained in the Indian Military Academy.

Secretary (East): We will continue with our programme.

Q: Does India plan to offer its assistance in identification of probable oil and gas reserves in this country?

Secretary (East): First you assure me that there are oil and gas reserves! Having said that, I will say that yes, we have been told that there are oil and gas reserves in Tajikistan. I think it is an early date. It would first need prospecting and thereafter exploiting it. Now, we are at a very early stage. We have been told that this is an area where we can have cooperation. And since India is looking for oil and gas assets around the world, I see no reason why we should not do so in Tajikistan also in due course.

Q: Is uranium is available in this country?

Secretary (East): I did not know that there was uranium in Tajikistan. Is there, Ambassador?

Ambassador to Tajikistan: Yes, there is.

Secretary (East): Okay, I am sorry, I have been educated and thereby I have answered your question.

Q: But Ambassador may like to add something on it.

Ambassador to Tajikistan: If I can be categorical, if you ask as of today, we have not pursued this.

Under Secretary (XP): Thank you very much, Sir, and thank you friends for your patience. With that we come to the close of this media briefing.

396. Vice President's remarks at the India-Tajikistan Modern Engineering Workshop during his visit to Tajik Technical University.

Dushanbe, April 17, 2013.

1. India is committed to cooperating with Tajikistan in all spheres, particularly, in human resource development.
2. I am happy to see that the commitment between the Hon'ble Prime Minister of India and His Excellency the President of the Republic of Tajikistan on human resource development has manifested itself in the establishment of this Modern Engineering Workshop.
3. The Workshop is providing students and the engineering faculty practical training and is contributing to enhancement of their skills. This capacity building is bound to play a big role in the path to development of Tajikistan.

4. I may add that India is fully committed to cooperating with brotherly Tajikistan in the welfare and development of both our peoples.
5. In February, the Tajik Technical University signed an agreement of cooperation with our premier technology institute, IIT Delhi. This will facilitate further academic exchange and promote joint research and project work between both the institutes of excellence.
6. I am happy to announce that the Government of India has decided to collaborate with the Tajik Technical University to create a center of IT excellence with a super computer. I have no doubt that this centre will become the seed for developing IT expertise among young people in Tajikistan. This centre will also become one of the focal points of a pan Central Asia e-network Project that India hopes to implement soon. The e-network will enable tele-education to be delivered from India, as also tele-medicine.
7. India also proposes to set up an Enterprise Development Centre in Tajikistan which will help create entrepreneurs and job providers, as against job-seekers.
8. I wish the faculty and the students well and hope that your endeavour at attaining greater technical skills and knowledge will indeed be successful.

TURKMENISTAN

397. Fourth Meeting of India-Turkmenistan Inter-Governmental Commission

New Delhi, January 22, 2013.

1. The Deputy Chairman of Cabinet of Ministers (DPM) & Foreign Minister of Turkmenistan H.E. Mr. Rashid Meredov led a high level delegation comprising Chairman of 'Turkmengaz', Deputy Minister of Trade and senior officials of the Government of Turkmenistan to New Delhi for the Fourth Meeting of India-Turkmenistan Inter-Governmental Commission (IGC) on Trade, Economic, Scientific & Technological Cooperation on 21-22 January 2013. DPM Meredov was hosted by the Indian Co-Chair Shri E. Ahamed, Minister of State for External Affairs.

2. The IGC discussions were held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere and marked by a spirit of mutual respect and understanding. Shri Ahamed and DPM Meredov comprehensively reviewed the progress and current status of bilateral relations in areas such as energy, trade & economic cooperation, transport & connectivity, civil aviation, information technology, science & technology, cultural, educational, consular and visa issues.
3. The issue of the strategic gas pipeline project Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) was in focus during the meeting. It was noted that TAPI project has made significant progress since the State visit of President of Turkmenistan H.E. Mr. Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedov to India in May 2010. Both sides agreed to take necessary steps for early realization of the project.
4. Both sides noted the significant increase in trade. The Indian side statistics revealed that the bilateral trade has recorded 67% growth and had risen to the level of US$ 60 million. The Turkmen side conveyed that as per their statistics, trade has increased three times in 2012 as compared to 2011.
5. The Turkmen side informed of its intention to start flight services from Ashgabat to Goa in order to increase tourism and people to people links. Shri Ahamed also raised the issue of difficulties being faced by Indian nationals in renewal of their work permits. Turkmen side agreed to look into the matter sympathetically.
6. The Commission agreed to form a Joint Working Group on Trade & Economic Cooperation which was tasked to meet early and discuss the measures to increase the bilateral trade and identify new areas of cooperation. A Protocol of the 4th meeting of the IGC was also signed by the two co-chairs.

7. The Turkmen dignitary also called on Hon'ble President Shri Pranab Mukherjee and held meetings with Minister of External Affairs Shri Salman Khurshid and Minister of Petroleum & Natural Gas Shri Veerappa Moily.
8. It was agreed that the next meeting of the IGC would be held in Ashgabat in 2014 on a mutually convenient date.

UZBEKISTAN

398. Media Briefing on the Vice President's visit to Uzbekistan.

New Delhi, May 19, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good morning friends and thank you very much for coming so early in the morning for many of you on a Saturday, and I apologise for that. The idea was to try and fill you in on several visits that are going to happen in the next few days both incoming and outgoing. What I will do is first make the formal announcements of some of those visits. I have here with me Joint Secretary (Eurasia) Mr. Ajay Bisaria who will brief you specifically on one of those visits. Following that we will also have my other colleagues come and talk to you on other visits that are taking place.

With that introduction let me make the announcements that I have. The first one is about the visit of the President of Afghanistan. President Karzai will be visiting India from 20th to 22nd of May. This is President Karzai's twelfth visit since he assumed office in 2002. He was last in New Delhi in November 2012 on a state visit.

President Karzai will arrive on 20th in the afternoon in Chandigarh. From there he will go to Jalandhar and visit the Lovely Professional University in Jalandhar where he is being conferred an honorary doctorate, honoris causa, by the President of India. The Chief Minister of Punjab will also be present on the occasion.

Subsequent to this ceremony in Jalandhar President Karzai will come to Delhi. On the 21st he has two meetings in Delhi. He will meet the President at Rashtrapati Bhavan. Subsequently in the evening he will meet the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister will also host a dinner for him. On 22nd morning, President Karzai will return to Kabul.

The visit is indicative of the strong and close relations that we have with Afghanistan and the frequent contacts between the senior leaders of the two countries. That is the first announcement that I have to make.

The second announcement is regarding the visit of the Vice-President Dr. Hamid Ansari to Uzbekistan. Vice-President and Shrimati Salma Ansari will be visiting Uzbekistan from 21st to 24th May.

During his visit Vice-President is expected to call on the President of Uzbekistan Mr. Islam Karimov, and he will also have meetings with the Chairman of the Senate. The latter is also expected to host a banquet in his honour. Apart from Tashkent, Vice-President will also visit Samarkand and Bukhara where he is expected and scheduled to also meet the regional heads of those Provinces.

Vice-President will be accompanied by the Minister of State for Environment and Forests (Independent Charge) Shrimati Jayanthi Natarajan, and four Members of Parliament. These Members are: Dr. E.M. Sudarsana Natchiappan, Shri Shivanand Tiwary, Shri K.N. Balagopal, and Shrimati Sumitra Mahajan.

We have had frequent high-level contacts between Uzbekistan and India since the independence of Uzbekistan in 1991. President Karimov has visited India in 1991, 1994, 2000, 2005 and 2011. Prime Minister Narasimha Rao had visited Uzbekistan in 1993, and Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2006.

Just to summarise some of the major contacts and economic links, our bilateral trade with Uzbekistan is in the vicinity of about 200 million dollars with the balance of trade in favour of India. Our major exports are drugs and pharmaceuticals. By various estimates, about 40 per cent of the pharmaceutical imports of Uzbekistan are from India. There are 15 pharmaceutical companies from India which have offices or representative offices in Uzbekistan.

Another area of contact is the ITEC scheme. Under the ITEC scheme we provide 150 scholarships for Uzbek nationals and these are utilized fully every year. In terms of air connectivity, as you know this is an area of priority for us, there are 15 direct flights between India and Uzbekistan, and there is discussion to perhaps increase this a little bit more. Ajay will provide you further details if you would like to know.

The Vice-President's visit is expected to give a further fillip to the strong bilateral relations that we have with Uzbekistan in particular and Central Asia in general.

What I will now do is request my colleague Mr. Bisaria to speak to you about the substance of our relations, following which we will open the floor for any questions that you would like to ask.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): Thanks you, Akbar. I would like to believe that this very healthy attendance is thanks to a surge of interest in Uzbekistan and Central Asia.

I am going to talk about a country which is north of Afghanistan and west of China. This is where the Vice-President is headed. Vice-President Shri Hamid Ansari, as Akbar just told you, will be visiting Uzbekistan from 21st to 24th May. He will be accompanied by a high-level delegation as is the norm, which is the Minister of State for Environment and Forests and four Members of Parliament the names of whom Akbar read out. The Vice-President will also visit the historical cities of Samarkand and Bukhara. This is of course the first ever visit by a Vice-President of India to Uzbekistan.

During the visit Vice-President will call on the President His Excellency Mr. Islam Karimov where we expect bilateral as well as regional and international issues particularly Afghanistan to come into a serious discussion. He will also have a meeting with the Chairman of the Uzbek Senate Mr. Sobirov who will be accompanying him throughout the visit, and the Speaker of the Lower House of Parliament, where we feel there will be opportunities to discuss Parliamentary cooperation in some detail. The Minister for Foreign Economic Relations Mr. Ganiyev is also going to call on the Vice-President and that will give us an opportunity to review bilateral economic and commercial relations.

Broadly speaking, I think we need to look at the Vice-President's visit as a continuation of high-level contacts with a strategic partner in our neighbourhood and particularly a strategic partner which will be a key player in the Afghanistan that we come to see developing post 2014. As you know, during the last visit of President Karimov to India we declared a strategic partnership between the two countries, and this is the intensity of the relationship that we hope to continue.

As Akbar mentioned, India and Uzbekistan are part of a common region. We share a similar approach to several important regional issues. Our ties have traditionally been cordial. We have deep-rooted historical and cultural linkages. Let me just recount some background of Indo-Uzbek relations which go back to many centuries. So, if you really need to start the story you have to start it in the 2nd century AD when we were part of the same political space in the Kushan empire with its capital in Bactria and present day Afghanistan. So, if we were going eighteen centuries ago, we would not have needed a visa for Vice-President to travel because we were part of the same country. The Kushan empire extended through Delhi right up to Varanasi.

We have had of course several exchanges since the 14th century. Timur or Timurlane came from Uzbekistan, he extended his empire through several parts of North India. Thereafter in the 16th century came the great Mughal Babar who set up the Mughal empire which brought us again together in multiple ways in terms of culture, cuisine, architecture and so on. Of course the silk route has connected us for ever since almost 100 BC, and there have been multiple exchanges of several influences from Central Asia to India, and of course Buddhism traveling up to Uzbekistan.

Even during Soviet times Indian leaders visited Tashkent. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru accompanied by Shrimati Indira Gandhi visited Uzbekistan in 1955 and 1961. Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri visited in January 1966 and he passed away in Tashkent. His name has in fact been commemorated in Tashkent. A street and a school are named after him. There is also a statue and a bust in his memory. So, even in modern times, in Soviet times there was a great deal of interaction with this country or this region.

India had a consulate in Uzbekistan since 1987 even before the breakup of the Soviet Union. Following Uzbekistan's independence in 1991, we converted that consulate into an Embassy. So, since its independence we have had a very close friendship with Uzbekistan. President Karimov has been the President of Uzbekistan since that time and visited India in that capacity four times. We have signed more than 87 documents which give us a framework and the legal basis for cooperation. So, we have had continuous engagement with Uzbekistan through high-level exchanges. Our Prime Minister last visited Uzbekistan in 2006 and of course President Karimov came on his fifth visit to India. The first was actually when he was Communist party President in 1991.

This is a country which is the heart of Central Asia. It shares borders with all the other Central Asian countries and about 200 kilometres of border also with Afghanistan. Naturally we have a very common and pressing concern on terrorism. Both India and Uzbekistan are deeply concerned about the terrorism which comes from the epicenter between us in our neighbourhood. Several radical elements of the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan, now called the Islamic Movement of Turkistan, and also the Hizb ut-Tahrir have found shelter in this region. And we have a very robust ongoing dialogue with Uzbekistan on counterterrorism issues which get even more pronounced in the run up to 2014 and the multiple scenarios we are discussing which could unfold then.

We have converging views on the stability in Afghanistan and would like to work together with Uzbekistan in discussing this issue. We already have a structured dialogue on Afghanistan. Uzbekistan just in terms of context has been a member of the Northern Distribution Network or it has provided its territory for this Northern Distribution Network which takes care of the reverse flow of the ISAF non-lethal cargo. I believe as much as 60 per cent of it is using this trans-Afghan route through the border town of Termiz up into Russia and the Russian ports.

We have in this context a very interesting dialogue going on with Uzbekistan on using trans-Afghan borders for promoting connectivity to Central Asia. This includes you would have seen recently reports about the Chabahar port where India is going to be investing. That provides a very very potentially promising corridor for trans-Afghan movement of goods into Uzbekistan.

We have a very strong cooperation in the information technology sector where Uzbekistan has a great deal of interest. We have the Jawaharlal Nehru Centre for IT Excellence which we are going to upgrade shortly. Then as part of our Connect Central Asia policy we are also going to implement a flagship project of an e-network connecting all of the Central Asia to India with hubs in each capital including Tashkent.

Let me stop right there. I will be happy to answer any questions.

Q: I just want to ask you whether this Islamic Movement of Turkistan which you are referring to does have some relation with the Xinjiang Province of China where the same kind of movement is on for a separate Turkistan?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): It is very hard to pinpoint these things but I do believe that several of the movements, separatist and fundamentalist, are connected. We saw as we spoke a common training infrastructure in the region and that comes up for discussion very frequently. But whether they have organic linkages and whether these keep shifting, changing, that is a matter of expert opinion. But I believe there are connections.

Q: You just mentioned multiple scenarios that you all are discussing on Afghanistan. Could you just give us a sense of what are these multiple scenarios?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): I think I have been reading in the media about them.

Q: You have been discussing them.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): I think the point is that when we have a conversation with another neighbour of Afghanistan on Afghanistan, the dialogue moves to possible scenarios that might unfold. I do not want to spell out the scenarios because you see them a lot of strategic literature. But they are from the very scary to the scary to the positive to the very positive.

Q: A kind of related question. You talked about your convergent views. What would India like to see as an ideal scenario? What would India like to see Uzbekistan doing in the post-2014 Afghan situation? What role would Uzbekistan play ideally?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): I think the point of convergence is that the interest in both Uzbekistan and India is in having a stable Afghanistan which does not have a spillover of terrorist influences or fundamentalist influences into the territory either of Uzbekistan or of India. So, I think the conversations that take place with Uzbekistan are on details of counterterrorism cooperation, on discussing also on collaboration in economic projects.

For instance I can remind you that one of the main projects that India has executed in Afghanistan is the transmission line which essentially brings Uzbek power into Kabul. This is a transmission line built by India from the border town of Termiz which is the opening of Afghanistan to the outside world, the bridge on the Amu Darya to Pul-e-Kumri town to Kabul. So, I think the conversation would revolve around economic reconstruction projects where this is an instance of India and Uzbekistan's cooperation, and also on counterterrorism cooperation with an emphasis as I said on multiple scenarios that could unfold post 2014.

Q: Since the Environment Minister is also going with the Vice-President, are there any specific environmental issues or agreements which are going to take place with Uzbekistan?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): A Vice-President's visit is essentially a goodwill visit. Of course a bilateral conversation does take place and we would not rule out discussions on environmental issues. But there is no operational discussion that is planned by them.

Q: Mr. Akbar I have a question for you. What is the purpose of Karzai's visit to India? There is a change of government in Pakistan. Pakistan does not want us to operate in Afghanistan. What is the agenda for the talks and how the question of terrorism is to be tackled? It would be better if you tell us in Hindustani.

Official Spokesperson: As you know my Hindustani is not fluent. I shall try to answer your question. Since I come from South India, I have a problem with Hindi speaking; but still I will try.

President Karzai has been to India often. In the last few years this is his twelfth visit to India. In the last two and a half year this is his fourth visit. As you in know we have deep relations with Afghanistan. We have strategic partnership. On this basis we talk to him. Perhaps I can say there are four main issues—one is security and political consultations; the second is economic and trade, and the projects we have there, as Ajay just now told you, the Zaranj-Delaram Road, Pul-e-Kumri transmission, Salma Dam on which the work is in progress, the Parliament building is being constructed by the Indian companies, and the last is the one we say in English, Human Resource Development and capacity building. About two thousand Afghan students get trained here.

Now the question is terrorism. Our main focus has been normally on economic cooperation, and the issue like this; we are also aware that without political and security situation improving it is not going to help much in Afghanistan, and therefore there shall be talks on these issues too and when it is complete we shall share with you.

I am grateful to you for having borne with this.

Q: Ajay, during his election campaign Nawaz Sharif had said that if he comes to power he would be open to opening up Wagha for trade to Afghanistan and Central Asia. If that happens, or whether it happens or not and once Chabahar in place, we can trade with the entire Central Asian block. Has any work been done about what kind of potential there is for India's trade with Central Asia post Chabahar? And when is Chabahar going to be ready for trade into the region?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): On Chabahar, you know that India has recently announced cooperation with Iran in working on the port and developing parts of it and some jetties and so on. This is a medium-term project. Connectivity with Central Asia is contingent on also a railway project which is being developed by Iran which is going to be a connection from Chabahar North to Zahedan and Mashhad in the North and from there the Uzbek Railways has already developed a connection of 75 kilometres from the town Termiz to Mazar-e-Sharif. And they have plans to go up to a little west to Heart, and eventually the Iranian Railway and the Uzbek connection would connect.

This I think would be an extraordinary development in the next five years, let us say definitely within the next five years, of connectivity, rail connectivity which would allow a container to be loaded from Mumbai, reach Chabahar and then be transported into Afghanistan or Central Asia. So, I think that is a strong connectivity option.

You mentioned Pakistan. Well this is a question you ought to put to Pakistan. But the point is that if a corridor presents itself through the territory of Pakistan and Afghanistan, we would be happy to support the idea. We already do in principle support an idea of an economic corridor which brings Turkmen gas from Turkmenistan to India. That TAPI is essentially an economic corridor which goes through Kandhar to Quetta and comes to Gujarat, and this hopefully will be on the ground in 2017. The point is that if once we have a gas pipeline, what stops us from having an oil pipeline or a railroad or a road using a corridor.

Q: Just two days ago Afghanistan Ambassador has briefed the media and spoke about deeper military ties with India. I want to know what is India's view on it? He specifically said that lethal weapons should be supplied to Afghanistan, that without arms a trained army means nothing.

Official Spokesperson: Let me try and address the issue that you have raised. Afghanistan is a traditional friend and partner of India. It is a strategically important neighbour with whom we have historical, cultural and economic ties that go back to the dawn of history. We have also a long-term vision of our bilateral relations and have taken a number of initiatives which stem from the strategic partnership agreement that we have with Afghanistan.

In recent times we have of course focused on economic empowerment of Afghanistan and tried to implement key developmental projects within the capacity that we have. I could list a number of these issues. For example, recently we eliminated all custom duties for Afghanistan so that Afghan goods can have access to our entire market of more than a billion plus Indians. We also have planned investment in the Hajigak iron ore mines with the intention not only to evacuate iron ore but also to construct Afghanistan's first steel plant.

I have previously mentioned some of our other main developmental projects in Afghanistan in Hindi but I could repeat them in English. These are: the road from Zaranj to Delaram, the 220 kW transmission line from Pul-e-Kumri to Kabul, we have a very expansive bilateral capacity-building programme where about 2000 Afghans are trained in various aspects of capacity building every year in India, we have humanitarian assistance in terms of our wheat exports in the biscuits which we provide, and we are also taking important infrastructure programmes such as the Salma Dam and the building of the Parliament.

Now while we are striving to realize this vision of an economically viable Afghanistan, we do realize and we have no illusions that we can ignore the political and security issues that stand in the way of realizing that vision. And to implement that, under the Strategic Partnership Agreement we have what is called a Strategic Partnership Council and that is headed on our side by the External Affairs Minister and on the Afghan side by their Foreign Minister.

They met for the first time last year in the summer in New Delhi, and of course during the course of this year there will be the second meeting of that. Under this, there are four rubrics, and one of those relates to political and security consultations. And perhaps that is the rubric under which all this will fit. If there are issues to be raised in terms of security consultations, that is where these will be raised. I do understand that all of you are very eager and have carried news reports of statements, but our view is that there is a mechanism that is available and all issues are discussed under this mechanism. And within our own modest means as a developing country I have just listed out to you the sort of activities that we have done, and we will continue to discuss and respond to specific requests of the Afghan Government. My suggestion to you is please wait when these discussions take place there is a format, there are diplomatic channels and we will consider these as and when these are raised in the channels which are available.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: I think you summarise my words. These are available on the record. Each one of you representing independent media organizations is free to summarise them the way he or she would like to. I would not like to comment on that.

Thank you very much.

399. Media Briefing by Vice President en-route to Tashkent on board his flight.

May 21, 2013.

Dear friends from the media, welcome onboard on what is the first ever official visit of Hon'ble Vice President to Uzbekistan. During the course of our visit we will be visiting three cities – Tashkent, Samarkand and Bukhara. Hon'ble Vice President has kindly agreed to brief you on the visit. We would begin with brief opening remarks following which the floor would be open for a couple of questions.

Vice President: Thank you. Well friends we must get the geography right. The flying time from Delhi to Tashkent is about the same as the flying time from Delhi to Chennai or to any of the State capitals in the North-East. So, we are visiting a country in the neighborhood and also a country which is critically important in its own region. If you have a look at the map you will see that Uzbekistan has borders with all its neighbors and one of them is off course Afghanistan which is not part of the old Soviet Union but all others were part of the Soviet Union. It is also the most populous country in its own region, it is about 30 million. It is a reasonable affluent country in terms of resources not necessarily in terms of per capita GDP but its importance lies in the approach it has to regional security problems on one side and to its foreign policy perceptions on the other side.

We have been engaging with them since they became independent after the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991. The President of Uzbekistan, who has been the President since that time in 1992, has visited India 5 times. From our side our President has visited, two prime Ministers have visited and innumerable visits by Ministers and officials. We have an excellent relationship but excellent relationships also mean that they need to be renewed frequently. We don't take relationships for granted.

The purpose of this visit is one to continue exchange of visits at high level. Last year their President was in India and he signed a number of agreements but the most important thing was that we have established a Strategic Partnership with them. We have common strategic interests. They relate principally to what is happening or might happen in Afghanistan. Uzbekistan has a border with Afghanistan. Therefore it will willingly (or) unwillingly end up playing a critical role in what may happen there tomorrow or day after. In terms of foreign policy Uzbekistan likes to keep away from pacts and alignments. It is something like a neutral policy - neutrality approach, it is not quite neutrality but it is something along those lines. So they don't want to get involved in any of the pacts except to the extent that there is economic cooperation.

This is the purpose of the visit. Most of the substantive part will be done tomorrow. After that we are visiting two famous historic cities - Samarkand and Bukhara. This is an area with which we had, for centuries, intense exchanges both cultural and trading exchanges. I hope everybody will enjoy the visit, both the second part of it and the first part.

Thank you. If I can answer any questions I will be happy to do so.

Question: Your Excellency is there any specific or special agenda for the visit; and any agreement /MoU being signed.

Vice President: The specific agenda is to exchange views with the leadership of Uzbekistan; benefit from their perceptions about what is happening in their own region and also to try to understand how the common struggle against terrorism in all its forms and manifestations is proceeding.

Question: Sir, when we talk about common counter terrorism strategy, what is the commonality between India and Uzbekistan?

Vice President: Well the commonality is the perception that terrorism in any form or manifestation is unacceptable. It is destructive of civilized life. Now each country has its own specific strategy because each country faces some aspect of that problem. But exchange of information and exchange of views is always useful. We have a joint working group on countering terrorism and that is a work which is in progress.

Question: Sir, you would be meeting your counterpart the Chairman of the senate. You would be discussing parliamentary procedure of both the countries? Sir, what about the frequent adjournments of the parliament in the last few sessions? Would you like to say anything on the frequent adjournments as Chairman of the Rajya Sabha?

Vice President: I thought I said what I had to say in the valedictory address. I don't think there is any need for adding anything to it.

Question: Sir, Uzbekistan is quite rich in Uzbekistan. Is there any aspect of energy security we are exploring in our relationship with Uzbekistan?

Vice President: Well, I believe, like we are doing elsewhere in the world wherever there are Uranium resources, we working to explore the possibilities of Uranium supplies coming from Uzbekistan also. This is a work in progress and I think the technical discussions and other things are taking place. And we don't see any impediments in this.

Question: Sir, would you like to share any details of the joint working group on terrorism.

Vice President: Well in the nature of things even I don't know the details of the joint working group on terrorism nor should it be made known to everybody. The objectives are clear but how do we proceed to achieve these objectives, this is something that should remain confined to specialists.

Question: Sir, we share a historical relationship with Uzbekistan. Any future event through your visit you would you like to establish and revive the silk route and silk route tradition with Uzbekistan.

Vice President: We have a trading relationship of great vintage which goes back to thousands of years. We have a cultural relationship which is again very deep rooted. And even today the interest that the people of Uzbekistan take in ties with us, in exchange of teachers and languages and all that, you will find great many people who know Urdu and Hindi and who are studying Urdu and Hindi in Tashkent. Indian films are very popular. So this is something which they respond very easily.

Q: Sir, you met with the Chinese Premier before he left. Anything you would like to share with us – anything that you discussed, the body language, the way the premier behaved with you, anything.

Vice President: Well, I though one of the papers revealed the grate secret of what we discussed. It was on a philosophical level. Basically the point which I took with him was that the world is changing very fast; in 21st century world India and China will be playing a very important role. And therefore while we are working on linkages in the areas of trade, technology and other things, we also need to devote more time to thinking about the future. In other words nobody can say what the shape of the world will be 50 years from now. We have to think about it, not only in terms of technology but also in wider terms, what would be the relationship between people in societies, between societies. That is something on which the Chinese, I am sure, are doing their own work and we are doing our won work. My suggestion that we need to interact and he reacted positively. He agreed that we need much more contact at the level of University and think tanks

Q: Possible role of India in Afghanistan in the backdrop of the possibility of US pullout from Afghanistan. In your visit to Uzbekistan.....what role do you foresee for India for the regions stability in Afghanistan?

Vice President: Well I can't anticipate what President Karzai is discussing in Delhi today. But India's role in Afghanistan and Indian interests in Afghanistan have remained unchanged for decades at least. We have people to people relationship. Governments have gone, come, governments have gone. Our efforts have been always to help Afghanistan in the best possible manner for the benefit of the people of Afghanistan. And if you look at the work that we have done in Afghanistan for the last 50-60 years, since we became independent, we have done projects there which they wanted and which are people centric. We have built hospitals; we have built roads, industrial estates, power transmission lines, all these things. And I think this role is well understood and well appreciated in Afghanistan whether they belong to this group or that group. So this work will continue. We don't have hegemonic interests in Afghanistan. We don't want to use it as some kind of front yard or backyard. That is our approach. But I will leave it to Governments, the governments are talking. We will see how it goes along.

Q: Sir, any political message that you are carrying to the Uzbek side.

Vice President: Intensify our relationship and friendship.

Friends with that we come to the conclusion of the on board briefing.
Thank You.

Vice President: Thank you and have a good lunch.

400. Media briefing by Secretary West of the Ministry of External Affairs on the Vice President's on-going visit to Uzbekistan.

Tashkent, May 22, 2013.

Good evening friends and welcome to the media briefing. To begin with, apologies for keeping you waiting but today we really had a very hectic day. The Hon. Vice-President has had a series of meetings since morning. As you are aware, in the forenoon he met with the Chairman of the Senate as well as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Oliy Majlis (Parliament) of Uzbekistan. In the afternoon, the Uzbek Minister for Foreign Economic Relations had called on the Hon. Vice-President. Later the Hon'ble Vice President met with the President of Uzbekistan. To brief you on the day-long engagements of the Vice President, we have with us Secretary (West) Shri Sudhir Vyas. He is joined by Joint Secretary (Eurasia) Shri Ajay Bisaria. As is the practice, we will begin the briefing with brief introductory remarks by Secretary (West) followed by which the floor would be open for questions.

Secretary (West) (Shri Sudhir Vyas): Good evening. Once again from my part too sorry for being late, reason being that the Hon. Vice-President has just returned a few minutes back from a one-hour-forty-five-minutes meeting with His Excellency President Islam Karimov at the Oqsaroy, the glittering palace which is his office, a wide-ranging meeting in which they covered a whole host of subjects but I would like to draw your attention to a couple of highlights.

There was considerable discussion on Afghanistan as a country which is very much in the immediate neighbourhood of both India and Uzbekistan, and where peace, stability and development are in the interest of both. What emerged was that there is a complete commonality of views on Afghanistan and perhaps how we should be dealing with Afghanistan in the post-2014 scenario, and in particular the fact that both countries are very clear that interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan will be counterproductive, and that we would be working with whichever government the people of Afghanistan elect in the elections that are to take place, that is to say support for an Afghan-led political process without interference from external actors.

Another area of engagement the Hon'ble Vice-President and H.E. President Karimov spoke at considerable length is on the prospects, ways and means of intensifying India-Uzbek bilateral engagement. I think President Karimov in fact invited with open arms Indian investment into Uzbekistan. They spoke of ways and means to intensify that aspect of the relationship.

Earlier, as was mentioned, the Hon. Vice-President had meetings with the Chairman of the Senate of the Oliy Majlis and the Speaker of the Legislative Chamber. In Hon'ble Vice-President's own words, he had come to renew friendship and in a fast-changing world also explore new ideas for friendship between India and Uzbekistan. As strategic partners, he pointed out, in an immediate neighbourhood India and Uzbekistan need to work together in the interests of stability, development and peace in their shared region.

There is a long history of relations between India and Uzbekistan, a fact that was highlighted by both the Chairman of the Senate and the Speaker and in fact, I should mention, by President Karimov himself. The sense of the discussion was that this background, this relationship going back several centuries, is a solid foundation to develop and enhance a friendship between two countries that can meet the challenges of tomorrow.

Some interesting highlights can be mentioned. The Speaker, for example, did say that, with 60 years of experience with democracy, the Uzbek Parliament would be interested in learning from Indian best practices, and enhanced engagement between the Parliaments of India and Uzbekistan is something that we would be looking for in the future. She also mentioned that when Uzbekistan was framing its own Constitution they studied the Indian Constitution at length and took on several board best practices from that exercise.

The Minister for Foreign Economic Relations called on the Hon'ble Vice-President this afternoon. There was a very detailed discussion on the prospects of enhancing economic cooperation between the two countries. Issues of connectivity that would provide a base for enhanced economic activity were discussed at length. We spoke of the steps that have been taken by President Karimov to expand infrastructure and connectivity into Afghanistan and the plans that he has in mind, and India too has taken some initiatives in this regard, and that in the foreseeable future this forms a very useful base to develop and enhance this connectivity which would, as was pointed out, shorten the overland link between the ports in the Persian Gulf and Uzbekistan by over a thousand kilometers.

A Memorandum of Understanding was signed on upgrading and enhancing the Jawaharlal Nehru India-Uzbek Centre for Information Technology in Tashkent. This was signed by the Minister for Foreign Economic Relations and on the Indian side by myself. The Minister also pointed out that the business environment that Uzbekistan has put in place to attract investment and in particular noted that a special economic zone at Navoi has already begun to attract Indian investment. Three Indian companies have invested there for manufacture of tablets, smart phones and auto parts. Sixty Indian companies are in Uzbekistan at this point of time. And a joint commission on trade, economics and culture, which last met in 2011 in Uzbekistan in Tashkent, is expected to meet this time in India perhaps in the autumn.

The academic interaction and cultural contacts between India and Uzbekistan form an important part of the architecture of the bilateral relationship. In this context I would like to recall the Hon. Vice-President's remark after his meeting with a number of Indian Indologists at the dinner event yesterday. He referred to them in his meeting with the Chairman of the Senate, as a living legacy of Al-Beruni. Perhaps I should stop here and then take any questions that come to your mind.

Q: Sir, anything on counterterrorism?

Secretary (West): Counterterrorism figured in the discussions both at the level of President Karimov as well as at the other meetings. As you know, there is a Joint Working Group on Counterterrorism between India and Uzbekistan which is taking the engagement in this particular area forward.

Q: Could you give us any specifics on this?

Secretary (West): the Joint Working Group is carrying on with its work. The level at which this discussion took place does not go into specifics. We are talking about larger issues of relationship and the perspectives for the future.

Q: Sir, any forward movement on acquisition of uranium from here?

Secretary (West): That is a work in progress and I think it is not again something that was being discussed in such concrete terms at this particular meeting. This is work in progress and is being dealt with on another plain altogether.

Q: Any specific strategy during the talks to check ISI influence in Afghanistan?

Secretary (West): Once again, I do not think we got into that kind of specifics. The broad consensus on Afghanistan that external interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan would be counterproductive to peace and stability in the middle and long term in Afghanistan came out very clearly. And there was a complete identity of views between both sides on this matter. Also, that the political processes in Afghanistan - and that there can be no military solution there - will have to be Afghan led, will have to be internally led rather than imposed from outside.

Q: Sir, when you refer to this external influence and external interference would be counterproductive, are we revisiting the past as what has been happening in Afghanistan(inaudible) for the larger in-depth strategy on Pakistan?

Secretary (West): Any strategy that you look for the future in Afghanistan has to draw upon the lessons from the past.

Q: And, when you say that this is unacceptable, what role India and Uzbekistan can play in stopping this external interference in the affairs of Afghanistan?

Secretary (West): One, in international fora in discussions, I think this point cannot be overemphasized. And it will require a coordinated will of all players in Afghanistan, countries which have Afghanistan's best interests at stake, to accept and to follow this basic maxim.

Q: Sir, Afghanistan you said there is unanimity of views to take up the post-2014 situation. What are the measures we are looking at to step up the communication and take forward this policy to carry forward this consensus on Afghanistan? Secondly, you mentioned about the connectivity links, India is looking at utilizing the connectivity links with Uzbekistan. Can you just throw some light on the connectivity projects which may be useful for Indian strategy?

Secretary (West): On Afghanistan, I think this is not the kind of forum where you get into actual elements of what you are going to do. But the broad principles which should govern strategy were certainly talked about and that is where I mentioned that there was a complete consensus between two sides.

On connectivity, as you know, Uzbekistan has been involved in the construction of a railway line from Termez at the border to Mazar, and there is discussion that they plan to take that forward towards Herat. From Herat we will be looking at connectivity towards the Iranian border, and in one direction or the other connectivity to the ports of the Persian Gulf is what is being talked about. But I should mention this is not something that is going to happen immediately. This will take a little time. It is not going to happen tomorrow. But this is the perspective that is in the interests of Uzbekistan, of India, and of the region.

Q: Sir, you said that there is similarity in the perception about terrorism between the two countries. Is there any difference of opinion on the issue, or differences, where Uzbekistan does not agree with the perception of terrorism of India? Any variation?

Secretary (West): No, I did not notice any such nuances of difference.

Q: So, on the issue of terrorism perceptions of both are absolutely identical.

Secretary (West): We were looking at the impact on both India and overflow of the internal situation perhaps in Afghanistan extending in some fashion across the border. It is in that context there was complete identity of views.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): If I may add one point here, there is also congruence of views on the issue of development and the importance of development in Afghanistan. As you know, there is a project already which is a sort of bilateral project, which is transmission line from Termez to Pul-e-Kumri to Kabul which brings in Uzbek power for lighting up Kabul using Indian transmission lines. So, there is a congruence of views that development is also an important part of the peace in Afghanistan going forward.

Secretary (West): Just to expand on that thought, in the words of the Hon'ble Vice-President, peace, stability and development have to go together, cannot handle any one of them in isolation from the other.

Q: Sir, I want to know on trade what are the major sectors we have been focusing on?

Secretary (West): On trade, I think Uzbekistan is looking at exporting some resources and it realizes that there is a need in a growing India, rapidly developing India for resources. They are also looking at investment, bringing Indian investment in a variety of sectors, in small business, in IT. Textiles was mentioned as a possible area that we should be looking at. Pharma was another area that was referred to specifically. Tourism is an area which can hold tremendous potential for growth between the two countries and has not been exploited fully.

Question: Sorry for interrupting, tourism from Uzbekistan to India or the other way?

Secretary (West): In both directions. In fact the general sense that was expressed very clearly was that in spite of the very strong foundations that are available for building up our business links, our economic engagement between India and Uzbekistan is clearly below potential. This was a focal point that was emphasized by His Excellency President Karimov himself as well as by the Chairman and the Speaker of the Oliy Majlis, and was explored in much greater detail during the meeting and the call by the Minister for Foreign Economic Relations and the Hon'ble Vice-President.

Q: Could you elaborate on exporting resources? What does Uzbekistan actually want to export to India?

Secretary (West): There is a tremendous wealth of natural resources in Uzbekistan and that includes oil and gas. They are already exporting some gas I believe, not so much oil, to China. And they would certainly be interested in Indian companies looking at Uzbekistan for exploration, production and so on.

Thank you. With that we come to the conclusion of this briefing.

401. Speech of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the Chairman of the Senate of the Republic of Uzbekistan.

Tashkent, May 22, 2013.

“Excellency, Mr. Iligzar Sobirov, Chairman of the Senate,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

My wife and I, and members of my delegation are delighted to be in Tashkent, amidst friends the warmth of whose welcome underlines and reaffirms the silken ties of history and culture that bind our two people.

The convergence of our destinies owes much to geographical proximity. Most people are surprised when told that the distance from Delhi to Tashkent is much less the distance to most parts of southern or north-eastern India. This facilitated the movement of people and sharing of beneficial skills. It is reflected to this day in linguistic affinities, social practices, customs culinary preferences and dress forms.

Trade and traders led the way; a parallel stream manifested itself in the flow of ideas, knowledge, savants and scholars. In one age Buddhism became the dominant instrument of discourse; in another Islamic learning and Sufism led the way and left an indelible imprint.

Today we came together to draw, on the basis of these solid foundations, the contours of a mutually beneficial relationship relevant to the imperatives of the 21st century. India’s Connect Central Asia Policy is in reality a re-connect endeavour premised on mutually identified areas of beneficial cooperation.

Earlier in the day I had a fruitful meeting with President Karimov and I am even more convinced that our relations are truly special and we have similar approaches to major issues. This understanding at the highest political level gives us reason to be optimistic about the future of our relations.

Uzbekistan is one of India's closest friends. We celebrate your many successes since your independence. It is important that we join hands to increase the intensity of our bilateral economic cooperation to match the already close level of political understanding and people-to-people affinity.

In recent times, our relations have been elevated to the level of a strategic partnership. It means that we can look forward to cooperation in all possible spheres of human endeavour.

Today, India and Uzbekistan face common challenges from terrorism and religious extremism. We therefore need to work closely towards promoting peace and stability not just in our common region, but in the entire world.

Our Parliaments have an important role to play in nation building and we need to learn from each other's experiences. We must encourage greater engagement between our two parliaments.

- May I request you to join me in a toast:
- For the health of His Excellency Mr. Igizar Sobirov
- For the prosperity and progress of the people of Uzbekistan; and
- For eternal friendship between our two peoples.

402. U.S.-India-Africa Triangular Partnership to Improve Agricultural Productivity and Innovation in African Countries.

January 16, 2013.

As part of the India-U.S. Strategic Partnership, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and U.S. President Barack Obama agreed during President Obama's visit to India in November 2010 to use the expertise of both countries in agricultural capacity-building to extend food security to interested third countries. Pursuant to this, India and the United States inaugurated the first triangular India-U.S.-Africa partnership in agricultural training at the National Institute of Agricultural Extension Management (MANAGE), Hyderabad, on 6 January 2013 for 30 trainees from three African countries – Kenya, Liberia and Malawi.

The three-year triangular partnership program aims to improve agricultural productivity, strengthen agricultural value chains, and support market institutions in Kenya, Liberia, and Malawi. Supported by the U.S. Government through the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), by the Ministry of External Affairs and the Ministry of Agriculture of India, and implemented by two of India's leading agricultural training institutes - National Institute of Agricultural Extension Management (MANAGE), Hyderabad, and the Chaudhary Charan Singh National Institute of Agricultural Marketing (NIAM), Jaipur, the program will train 180 mid-level African Government and private sector agriculture professionals from Kenya, Malawi, and Liberia in agricultural extension practices, agri-business, and agricultural marketing. The training will include classroom sessions, group work, field trips, and interaction with industry experts. After their training, these professionals will go home with new knowledge, skills, and potential innovations to address their domestic challenges in food and nutrition security.

On January 16, 2013, Joint Secretary (Information Technology and Extension) Indian Ministry of Agriculture Mr. Sanjeev Gupta, Head of the Ministry of External Affairs Branch Secretariat in Hyderabad Mr. Srikar Reddy and the U.S. Department of State Special Representative for Global Food Security Jonathan Shrier (Acting), attended the first agricultural training program currently underway in MANAGE for 30 professionals from the three African countries on agricultural extension management. The two-month training program covers 15 major themes of agricultural extension management and includes study tours to different parts of the country. The study material developed by the faculty in MANAGE, also covers basic skills in computers, internet, and other information and communication technology tools. MANAGE will also undertake impact evaluation six months after the completion of the program.

403. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Vice-President to Ethiopia to Attend Golden Jubilee Celebrations of Africa Union.

New Delhi, May 23, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon. As is our usual practice, I will first make the announcements and then we will have a formal briefing on an issue and then the floor will be opened for any questions that you may like to ask on anything else.

The announcement that I have to make relates to two of my colleagues who are here. Let me introduce them to you before I make that announcement. On my right is Joint Secretary Mr. Ravi Bangar. He handles East and Southern Africa. On my left is Joint Secretary (West Africa), Mr. Sanjiv Kohli, who handles the entire range of issues relating to West and Central Africa. Both Sanjiv and Ravi will be available to respond to questions that relate to the announcement that I have to make.

The Vice-President Shri Hamid Ansari will represent India at the 50th anniversary celebrations of the OAU, or the African Union now, in Addis Ababa on 25th May. As you are aware, our relations with Africa are rooted in history and our history of solidarity against colonialism and apartheid. Since then of course our engagement with Africa has come a long way, and today we have built a new template for partnership in the form of the India-Africa Forum Summit. Our partnership is guided by the vision and promise of our African partners and their priorities.

India assists Africa in charting its course through institution building, infrastructure development, technical and vocational skill development. By our estimates there are about 15,000 African students who are studying in India. India is undertaking approximately about a hundred national or regional or sub-regional projects of various kinds in Africa. All of you are aware of the Pan African E-Network for Telemedicine and Tele-education which covers a span of 47 countries. This is a major success story of our institution building partnership with Africa.

We also support actively peace and security on the continent. Currently there are about 6,500 Indian soldiers who are involved in peacekeeping on the African continent in different parts.

Our trade just about two decades ago was less than a billion dollars, in 1991 it was less than a billion dollars. In 2012, it is approximately 70 billion dollars. Our target is 90 billion dollars by the year 2015. Those of you who are following this are also aware that we have extended non-reciprocal duty-free tariff preference scheme for LDCs. Of the 47 countries which qualify for this, there are 33 from Africa. This has significantly enhanced their market access to the growing Indian market. Finally, just to round it up, Indian investment in Africa since 2005 is approximately 47 billion dollars.

In short, we are working in myriad ways to assist the historic transformation taking place in Africa. My two colleagues will speak to you about different aspects of that. Subsequent to that we will have the floor open for questions on this issue. Let me ask first Mr. Bangar to speak about the 50th anniversary celebrations.

Joint Secretary (East & Southern Africa) (Shri Ravi Bangar): Thanks Akbar. I think you have made my job very easy through the fact sheet that you have run on India-Africa relations and Africa's development.

I think the significance of the 50th anniversary celebrations of the African Union, and its earlier avatar of Organization of African Unity, lies in two milestone achievements it has to its credit. One is the end of colonialism in the continent. When it was founded in 1963, several countries of Africa were still under the colonial rule. But that has got all over in these fifty years. Another significant and spectacular achievement of the African Union was the end of apartheid regime in South Africa. These are two political developments with which, as Akbar had mentioned earlier, India has been very closely associated with, supported them.

And we take pride in the achievements of the African Union, and therefore, given this background and also India's close political relations with several leaders of Africa, with our own leaders like Pandit Nehru, Indira Gandhi, Rajiv Gandhi, we have had close relations with Kofi Annan of Ghana, Julius Nyerere of Tanzania, Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, Sam Nujoma of Namibia, then Samora Machel from Mozambique, Agostinho Neto of Angola, Oliver Tambo and Mandela of South Africa. These are a few of the names which immediately come to mind and which resonate even today on India's engagement and the leadership role they played in shaping the current continent and the politics and the developments that we see today on the African continent as well as Africa's engagement with its other developing partners.

The importance again of the African Union today one sees more in its actions which are taking place for socioeconomic development, at the regional level the regional economic communities which are eight of them, and then also in the peacekeeping operations on the continent. It is important because back in the 1970s and 1980s Africa was known more for war, disease, death, hunger, famine and what not.

But today when we look at the reports coming out from Africa and also by some of the leading economic and financial institutions including Ernst and Young, is very much called the possible next goal on the pole of global economic growth. And that is something very important for us to take note of because now this is the transformation of Africa into a new modern, forward-looking continent which provides hope to its youth and to the other sections of population, a diverse population, in wide-ranging areas in which Africa today wishes to engage with its partners again is I think a factor that we need to take note of.

In view of this we devised India-Africa Forum Summit mechanism. The first meeting took place in New Delhi in 2008 and the last one in Addis Ababa in 2011. Akbar has already mentioned about the lines of credit we have extended which are close to about eight billion dollars of the two summit decisions. The trade is close to over 70 billion and investment again is close to about 50 billion between India and Africa. Duty-free tariff preference scheme is another tool, important one, of providing market access to the exports of LDCs to India. And since bulk of the LDCs still happen to be in Africa, this is mainly benefiting the African countries.

In terms of scholarships, we have doubled the number. They are close to 22,000 now. And we hope that by the next India-Africa Forum Summit mechanism which will take place in Delhi, we will have much more substantive elements to add to it given the experience that we have now developed, the Africans' evolving needs which are again remain focused on human resource development. A major focus of India-Africa Partnership is in capacity building, in terms of establishing institutions, in human resource development, training programmes, and also sending out our experts to the various African countries responding to the needs of the African countries.

Now I will come to a little bit about the Hon. Vice-President's visit to Addis Ababa which is on the 25th and that is to participate in the Golden Jubilee celebrations of the African Union. Given India's close, strong, historic and present partnership with Africa, it is I think absolutely appropriate that India is represented at such a high level in the summit meetings. He will be addressing the gathering in the summit. We are one of the very few select partners who have been invited by the African Union. Apart from India they invited Brazil, France, EU, China, US, Russia, Jamaica, Palestine and the UAE. This is the select list of the invitees for the summit as the partners of Africa in Africa's development.

With these words I will stop.

Official Spokesperson: Joint Secretary (WA) Mr. Kohli is open to take questions. With that I think we will open the floor for questions rather than anybody else speaking on this.

Q: Sir, even China, US and Europe are deeply engaged with African countries. What is special and unique about India that we are being invited by the African Union?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): This is a decision taken by the African Union. I am sure that they do see some uniqueness in this partnership. And India's engagement with Africa is not predicated on Africa's relationship with any other country. So, we are talking about India-Africa relationship and their partnership.

Q: Ravi, the Chinese trade with Africa has just crossed 200 billion dollars and they are practically buying up all the mines, they overbid us and so on and so forth. But at the same time there is a lot of disenchantment with the way China is doing business in certain African countries. It has even become an election issue in certain parts of Africa. In their way of dealing with Africa and our way of dealing with Africa, what do you see are major differences and how is the overall African response or reaction to the way we are trying to help them?

Official Spokesperson: Before I ask Mr. Bangar to answer that question, I think we will confine it to what is our way of dealing with this thing and we do not want to get into a comparison with others. But I think what is unique about India and what are our strengths and core capacities, that he will answer.

Joint Secretary (E&SA): When the former President of India Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil went to South Africa, in the joint press meeting which was held in Pretoria President Zuma by name appreciated the ITEC programme of India. This is last year. This is something very unique that for the first time an African leader was naming India's ITEC programme. So, there are certain unique features of India's engagement with Africa. India's engagement, as I said earlier, is in responding to the African needs. India's engagement with Africa is in the paradigm of the south-south cooperation, which means they have the ownership of what they would like India-Africa partnership to develop together.

Another significant element is that our core focus has remained on capacity building and human resource development. If you visit Ethiopia today, you will very commonly find people saying that we owe whatever we are today to the Indian teachers. So, those have created I think the base, the niche areas of our modern-day engagement and cooperation with Africa.

Q: Mr. Venkat has just asked about the business dealing in comparison to India. A lot of Chinese goods and Taiwanese goods are there in West Africa at least in Ghana. I had been there also. So, what is the position today of the Indian goods? What is the business of commerce dealing with India and Africa, West Africa?

Joint Secretary (West Africa) (Shri Sanjiv Kohli): Trade basically in principle happens on principles of comparative advantages. If you look at Ghana, Ghana is a growing economy, it has been growing at probably double digit for the last ten years. We have our core strengths. The trade would respond to our core strengths and how they fit into their requirements. Chinese have their own share of the market. So, again actual comparisons probably will not hold. But as the trade figures have pointed out, we have also gone up to 70 billion in terms of bilateral trade.

The Chinese trade might be three times of what our trade is. But I will just again make a note because we spoke about we are not going into comparisons, but according to official statistics, Indian investments still exceed Chinese investments into Africa. That again talks of our model. Probably our cooperation and our investments have been long term. China probably has been spending more in terms of credit, but in terms of actually setting up industries, value addition, I think we have been doing better than the Chinese.

Q: As you have said, we have more than 5,000 peacekeepers in Africa but we seem to be ignoring or neglecting the defence sector while engaging with Africa. China is making deep inroads in defence equipment in Africa but we are not pushing our defence systems there.

Joint Secretary (E&SA): Again in terms of the defence cooperation that India has with several African countries, it is quite significant. South Africa, Mauritius, Seychelles, Kenya, Tanzania, Mozambique, Nigeria are a few of the countries I can straight away name. Again we are not getting into a comparison with what China is doing there. We will work on the basis of what our core strengths are. That is our advantage. This cooperation has also been appreciated in the United Nations, in the African Union, in the regional economic communities like ECOWAS or EAC of India's contribution in peacekeeping, in providing security in the countries which are in the conflict zone in Africa.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: We do not have those figures here with us.

Question: Sir, Vice-President of India is coming back on 23rd and is scheduled again to go to South Africa on 25th. Is it correct that Prime Minister of India is not in India and his schedule is to go to Japan and that is why Vice-President of India is going to South Africa on 25th, or President has refused to go out of India?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are mistaken and have got it wrong. The Prime Minister is only leaving on the 27th and this- the OAU/AU event - we are talking of is on the 25th. I do not know where you are getting that sort of information. It is a carefully considered decision to send a very high-level representation to the summit. And the summit has allotted a speaking slot giving importance to India on that. I think it is baseless to say what you are saying. I do not know where this information has come and we can totally deny it.

Q: There is a controversy over Indians buying land in Africa. One reads a lot about it. Could you just clarify that point?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): Africa again finds itself challenged because of lack of agricultural development. And one outcome of this is the food security element, equation, of several African countries. Several countries in Africa have identified that they need to enhance agricultural production. This is their policy. Under this policy they also identified the arable land on which crops can be grown.

I will give you one example. In case of Malawi for example, they have looked at India as a target export for pulses as well as for their own nutrition requirements. So, they grow what is called the Tuvar dal in Malawi, in Tanzania. They also meet their own requirements and the bulk they export to India. But that is also for increasing the revenue or export surpluses. The policy of some of the African governments is also to invite foreign direct investment in the agricultural sector. When they invite a foreign direct investment, it is not exclusively to any particular country but to all the global players. And the response of the companies from country x, y or z is based on their own analysis of their own requirements and what they look at from a purely business model of risks and the profits. And, therefore, they participate in the projects in all sectors of agriculture, be it irrigation, be it crops, or be it post harvest operations over there. So, this is not something that is a Government of India policy but it is a policy of the recipient or the host governments. That is what the businesses respond to irrespective of whichever country they come from.

Q: Sir, is the Vice-President scheduled to meet any important leaders on the sidelines?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): These are still being worked. As they get finalized, I am sure we will let you know.

Q: Sir, last month there was a controversy in South Africa where a group landed in an Air Force Base in South Africa. There were reports that the Indian High Commissioner's role was under the scanner. Has that been raised with the South African Government and any information sought?

Official Spokesperson: I think you are a bit dated in this information because since then our High Commission in Pretoria has put out twice I think press releases, and they list out the entire details of this issue. If you are interested, let me try and run through quickly the factual information.

The request was made by the High Commission of India on the 28th of February. This request was in accordance with normal protocol. It was made by the Defence Advisor of the High Commission of India on 28th February addressed to the Chief of the Defence, Foreign Relations in the South African National Defence Force, which is the standard and official channel of communication prescribed for communications by the Defence Advisors based in South Africa. Copies of these communications are also sent to others. The communication was followed up on 4th April by the Defence Advisor. And it was on 9th April that an authorization was provided by the South African authorities.

That is, the request was made on 28th February and a response with the clearance was provided on the 9th April. So, there was adequate time, for a proper consideration of that request. And even 9th of April is about three weeks prior to the scheduled landing date. So, the request was made in advance, it was in accordance with normal proper channels, and it was cleared well in advance of the visit.

Now, my understanding is that there were several senior dignitaries on that aircraft and that is why in accordance with normal processes that the High Commission asked for due courtesies for such dignitaries. The request was made and it was acceded to. I would suggest that if you are interested you have a look at the Press Release which we can provide to you and it has the names of those who were there on that flight so that you have information on this. Some of them were also part of a delegation which was officially meeting other dignitaries in South Africa.

Question: Sir, I was wondering about the status of the company Denel. Is it blacklisted, has it been removed off the blacklist? What is the status?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): I do not have any information on this.

Official Spokesperson: If there are no more questions, I will just give a break so that my colleagues can leave. Then if you would like to ask me any question on any other thing, I will come back in a couple of minutes.

Thank you

404. Address by Vice President at the 50th Anniversary Summit of OAU/AU in Addis Ababa.

Addis Ababa, May 25, 2013.

Your Excellency, Prime Minister of Ethiopia and Chairperson of the African Union

Your Excellency Chairperson of the African Union Commission

Your Excellencies Heads of State and Government

Distinguished Guests

It is a pleasure and an honour to join you at the Golden Jubilee of the African Union and the OAU. I bring to you good wishes from the people and Government of India on this very special occasion.

The establishment of the OAU this day 50 years ago was an event of global significance. The African Union must take a large part of the credit for the emancipation of the African people from colonialism and apartheid.

Over the past five decades, Africa has stood tall, its vision firmly focused on the future of its youth, inspired by the wide horizons and the beauty of its land and drawing from the wellsprings of wisdom of its ancients. Pan Africanism as an ideology inspired the founding fathers of Africa. The African Union today is the modulated, considered voice of Africa, committed to the vision of peace, progress and prosperity for its myriad peoples.

Our own founding fathers believed that India's freedom would remain incomplete as long as Africa remained in bondage. History records that India imposed a trade embargo on apartheid South Africa in 1946 and took the lead in placing apartheid on the agenda of the very first session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Our partnership with Africa is anchored in the fundamental principles of equality, mutual respect and mutual benefit that should, we hope, serve to redefine the contours of the international order on more egalitarian lines.

Our development partnership with Africa has been illuminated by this experience. Reinvigorated and multi-dimensional in scope, the India-Africa partnership is today being taken forward under the India-Africa Forum Summit process.

Anchored in the philosophy of South South cooperation, our approach is non intrusive and non prescriptive, consultative and, above all, responsive to Africa's own assessments of its needs.

The Golden Jubilee celebration is an occasion to pay tribute to the vision of the founding fathers of the OAU. I salute the leaders of Africa today, so many of whom are present here. They will continue to lead the African Renaissance in the future. In this endeavour, India will remain a trusted partner, working with Africa for the economic and social empowerment of its people.

405. Address by External Affairs Minister at the meeting with the African Heads of Mission in New Delhi.

New Delhi, June 18, 2013.

His Excellency Mr Francois Balumene, Ambassador of DR Congo & Dean of the African Group,

Mr Sudhir Vyas, Secretary (West),

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen

It is great pleasure to welcome you all today evening for this interaction. It always gives me great joy to meet and interact with our friends from Africa and I hope this initiative will grow stronger and stronger and we will have more such interactions in the future.

I visited Uganda exactly 2 months back. I had extremely useful exchanges with the Ugandan leadership on bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest to the two countries. We had organised a regional (African) Heds of Mission meeting in Kampala during my visit. I plan to visit more African countries in the coming months. Listening to our HOMs, I was struck by the very strong underpinnings and historic significance of India-Africa relations, its fundamental convergence of values and the enormous potential it holds. I am very excited about Africa.

Excellencies,

History records that India imposed a trade embargo on apartheid South Africa in 1946, even before we gained our own independence. The same year we raised our voice for Africa, placing apartheid on the agenda of the United Nations in the first ever session of its General Assembly.

India and Africa have been bound by ties of history, geography and cultural affinities. Our relations have been shaped by shared experiences during our respective freedom struggles as our leaders believed that India's own freedom would remain incomplete, insubstantial, as long as our partner states in Africa remained in bondage. There is enormous respect in India for the founding fathers of the African dream, who sacrificed their lives for the liberty and well-being of the people of the Continent. Nasser, Nkrumah, Lumumba, Mandela, Kaunda ... are names that come immediately to mind. As much as Africa took inspiration from Indian freedom struggle, the principles of Satyagraha and Non-Alignment had their genesis in struggles and events in Africa. Today, our relationship has acquired a robust and dynamic character to assume the dimension of a strategic partnership.

The last five decades in Africa have witnessed momentous changes; peace and stability, democracy, economic growth and improvement in social indicators are the prevalent norm. It is very encouraging to note that out of 38 countries which have met one of MDG on eradication of extreme poverty and hunger, include Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cameroon, Djibouti, Ghana, Malawi, Niger, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe and Togo from Africa.

And if there are a small number of countries which face political crises today, we believe these will also be resolved soon through mainly African efforts. At the UN, during our recent membership of the UN Security Council in 2011-12, we worked closely with Africa as the Council dealt with a number of African issues on its agenda. Libya, Mali, Somalia, Sudan, South Sudan, Democratic Republic of Congo are some that come to mind. Again, apart from the UN itself, India spoke up on issues of direct interest to Africa and India— issues of economic growth and sustainable development, food and energy security and climate change, public health, and so on – such cross-cutting issues were constantly in our vision in G-20, BRICS, IBSA and such forums.

As Africa seeks to increase its voice and influence on issues of global governance, specifically by requiring a more inclusive framework to address the world's problems, it will find full support of India. Our positions will be guided by our long standing ties with the region and our firmly held opposition to interference in the internal affairs of States. We believe that societies cannot be re-ordered from outside through military force and that people in all countries have the right to choose their own destiny and decide their own future.

The Indian-African partnership is clearly underpinned by a strong political understanding. India was honoured to be invited for the Golden Jubilee celebration of the African Union last month. Mr. Hamid Ansari, Hon'ble Vice President represented India at the celebrations in Addis Ababa. He reiterated India's commitment to work with Africa, to leverage our strengths and bring prosperity to our peoples.

Excellencies,

The world economy has been witnessing rapid changes and one of the most important of these changes is the growing share of the increasing role of developing economies in the global economy. India and Africa are today assuming the role of active and influential players in the global economy. It is significant that during the 2011-2015 period, seven of the 10 fastest-growing economies will be in Africa. Economically, thus the African continent is marching ahead with several of its countries posting a high growth rate and emerging as a pole in the world economy.

India is committed for a reinvigorated and multi-dimensional India-Africa relationship. Our cooperation is not new, it goes back over 50 years, and has witnessed many successes in many areas. India's partnership with African countries has been vibrant, extending beyond trade and investment to technology transfers, knowledge sharing and skills development.

Our substantive engagement with the African countries may be better appreciated if seen through the prism of our own experience. When we became independent, we still relied on external support for building our industrial base, for job creation, infrastructure and human resources. Our experience demonstrated vividly to us that much assistance came with conditionalities, both explicit and implicit, prescriptions that could abridge the sovereignty and independence that we so zealously guarded. Yet the support we received in terms of capacity building and education was invaluable for our economic development.

Excellencies,

Our development partnership with Africa has been illuminated by this experience. Reinvigorated and multi-dimensional in scope, the India-Africa partnership is today being taken forward under the India-Africa Forum Summit process. Thus the India-Africa partnership today pulls together these varied strands to weave a tapestry of cooperation that is non-intrusive and non-prescriptive, consultative and, above all, centred on responding to Africa's needs.

Let me briefly touch upon the different strands of India-Africa partnership:

- i. Capacity building, is a core aspect as both India and Africa are young societies demographically and economically are at a relatively nascent stage of growth. The successful utilization of the very flexible and adaptable ITEC programme offered by India has been a positive manifestation of the South-South Cooperation that has drawn admiration and is being replicated elsewhere. The enhancement of scholarships and training positions under the ITEC programme, as well as the creation of new courses for training of African nationals in specified, relevant areas, all emerge from the Action Plan of our agreed Framework of Cooperation; and altogether, we are looking at building over 100 capacity building institutions in Africa.

Over 22,000 new scholarships for African Students in various academic courses and training programmes including special agriculture scholarships and C.V. Raman fellowships are being utilised by African students and scholars. India has offered more than 700 CV Raman Scientific Fellowships till 2014. We have seen a very healthy utilisation. However, there is scope for improvement. We are also working towards establishment of Virtual University to cater to the educational needs of the African students.

The Pan African e-Network Project is unique project to use the Indian expertise in information technology to bring benefits of healthcare and higher education to all countries of Africa. The Network is connected by a satellite/fibre optical network to provide tele-medicine, tele-education and VVIP connectivity to these countries.

- ii. Trade and investment: India ranks as the third largest export destination for Africa. India has set a bilateral trade target of 100 bn US Dollars with Africa by 2015 from over 67 bn US Dollars at present. The growing Indian corporate presence in Africa is complemented by a definitive expansion of the India-Africa bilateral trade flow. This trend has been encouraged in part by India's duty-free tariff preferential scheme for 49 least developed countries (LDCs) which has benefited 33 African countries.

The footprints of Indian private and public sector enterprises can be seen in Africa. The recent wave of Indian investment into the continent has gained in size. Major Indian private sector enterprises such as Tata, Vedanta, Bharti Airtel, Jindals, Cipla, Ranbaxy, Videocon, Shapoorji Pallonji, Mahindra & Mahindra, Kirloskars, Coal India Limited etc. have invested in key sectors like automobiles, engineering, chemicals, IT, telecom and pharmaceuticals in many African countries. To give a further impetus to this engagement, I have decided to meet with the Indian corporates active in Africa to encourage them to invest more in Africa.

The CII-EXIM Bank India-Africa Project Partnership Conclaves have become an annual feature. The last one had over 500 projects with investment of 70 bn US Dollars being discussed. CII and FICCI have also partner institutional arrangements with their counterparts in Africa. An "India Show" has been scheduled in Dar es Salaam in September this year to showcase Indian products, technology and expertise.

- iii. Natural resources: Indian companies are directing their investments to Africa for generating wealth and to create win-win opportunities. The second area of cooperation can be in midstream and downstream sectors of African energy resources. With our proven expertise in refining, consultancy, training, infrastructural developments, we perceive potential for mutually beneficial business tie-ups in this sector. The third area is that of energy access. India has been an ardent advocate of renewable energy in the international arena, particularly emphasizing the "Energy Access for All". India has achieved some success in harnessing renewable energy, especially Wind and Solar. We already have ongoing cooperation between India and Africa in this sector in terms of training and capacity building and in establishing solar energy projects under IAFS and on bilateral basis. I believe that there is scope for deepening and broadening the cooperation in this area as well.

- iv. Lines of Credit: In recent times, one of the key elements of India's development partnership with Africa has been the extension of Lines of Credit (LoC) on concessional terms. The mechanism of Lines of Credit requires no introduction to you.

Since 2002-03, Government of India has approved 123 Lines of Credit for Africa, aggregating 5.9 billion US Dollars. India-Africa Forum Summit I in 2008 and IAFS II in 2011 have led to significant changes in the geographical dispersion, sectoral coverage and magnitudes of Lines of Credit. During IAFS-II in May 2011, our Prime Minister announced that Lines of Credits of 5 billion US Dollars would be made available over the next three years to Africa. During the six years preceding 2008, Lines of Credit valuing 1.9 billion US Dollars were approved for African countries whereas the subsequent six years, including the current year, witnessed approvals valuing 4 billion US Dollars. The feedback from Africa underscores the fact that these Lines of Credit have helped the African countries substantially in the creation of sustainable infrastructure in diverse fields. The success of Lines of Credit depends crucially on the planning of the project, in terms of its conceptualization, smooth implementation and sustainability. I am sure that you will give utmost attention to these issues and sensitise your Governments appropriately.

- v. People to People Contacts: There is no alternative to enhance understanding than through enhanced people to people contacts. With this in mind, we have been promoting contacts between African and Indian media, youth and parliamentarians who form the core of the opinion makers in the civil society. Nearly 100 journalists from Africa have visited India, in addition, another 45 young African journalists have undergone short duration training courses in India.

To enhance Africa's footprint in the Indian mainstream media, we are collaborating with various organizations to have agency reporters in select African cities. I have no doubt in my mind that we need to do much more and we are open to any suggestions you may have in this regard.

The 'INDIAFRICA: A Shared Future'. This unique youth outreach programme invites creative exchanges between young Africans and Indians through a multidisciplinary contest series and a Young Visionaries fellowship program. Under this concept, Campus outreach programmes have been organised in institutions across 17 African countries. Four collaborative business ventures are being set up by young entrepreneurs who had won the INDIAFRICA Young Visionary Fellowships. As we move into the third year of the programme, would be very happy to receive suggestions from you.

We have hosted till date around 85 young Parliamentarians in India representing 32 countries.

When I was in Kampala, we also discussed an additional area of cooperation that we felt may be of interest to African countries, that is e-governance and Open Governance Platforms, where we have developed some very useful models. I am in touch with Dr Sam Pitroda, PM's Advisor on Innovation and Public Information Infrastructure Development, and we are looking at approaches to share our expertise and experience in setting up an Open Governance Platform with interested African countries, which can also be further expanded to cover variety of applications in the field of e-governance.

Excellencies,

We would like to involve all of you in our efforts to forge even closer ties with Africa. We are looking at enhanced engagement with the African Union, African Regional Communities, African Development Bank and above all bilaterally. We hope to formally launch IAFS II through signing of Joint Action Plan with the African Union. We also look forward to an early visit of the Chairperson of the African Union to India. We will involve you in these discussions and interaction as we take the process forward. We will carry forward this process of regular interactions between us and I look forward to meeting you again in the coming months.

One issue on which some of you have raised concern is Delhi's second diplomatic enclave. On this front there has been positive movement and I am confident that soon we will be able to share some good news with you.

In conclusion, I wish to state that as Africa and India had mutually benefitted through our inspirational struggles in the 20th century, we shall work together for our common prosperity in this new century. There is a vibrancy and economic dynamism in Africa today for all to see. The partnership of our young nations has the potential to redefine this century. The years to come would present challenges and opportunities which we need to ready ourselves to face and address. In this journey, India will remain a trusted partner, working with Africa for our shared progress and for the economic and social empowerment of our peoples.

Thank You

406. Visit of African Union Commission's delegation to India
New Delhi, September 06, 2013

A four-member delegation led by Ambassador Jean-Baptiste Natama, Chief of Staff of the Bureau of the AUC Chairperson from the African Union Commission (AUC) visited India during 4-7 September 2013.

The delegation called on the Hon'ble Minister of State for External Affairs, Smt. Preneet Kaur.

During the visit the Plan of Action of the Enhanced Framework of Cooperation of the second India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS-II) was launched in New Delhi today. The Joint Plan of Action takes stock of present state of progress of the implementation of IAFS-II decisions and charts out the contours of future India Africa cooperation. An interactive session was co-chaired by Shri Sudhir Vyas, Secretary (West), MEA and Ambassador Natama. The Heads of African Missions in New Delhi and the representatives of various Indian implementing agencies participated in the interactive session for a detailed review of the progress in implementation of IAFS decisions.

During their stay in New Delhi the visiting delegation held deliberations with senior officials in the Ministries of Agriculture and Commerce & Industry. The delegation also visited National Small Industries Corporation (NSIC); Indian Institute of Foreign Trade (IIFT); Telecommunications Consultants India Ltd. (TCIL); and Water and Power Consultancy Services (WAPCOS). The delegation met with the representatives of various implementing agencies including Entrepreneurship Development Institute (EDI), NABARD Consultancy Services (NABCONS), Solar Energy Centre (SEC), National Institute of Design (NID) et.al.

407. Inaugural Address by Minister of State E. Ahamed at the 52nd Annual Session of Asian-African Legal Consultative Organization.

New Delhi, September 9, 2013.

Prof. Dr. Rahmat Mohamad, Secretary-General, AALCO;

H.E. Mohammed Bello Adoke, Attorney General of the Federation and Minister of Justice of the Federal Republic of Nigeria and President of the Fifty-First Annual Session;

Hon. Mr. Rauff Hakeem, Minister of Justice of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka and President of the Fiftieth Annual Session of AALCO;

Heads of Delegations;

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen;

It is indeed my honour this morning to be amongst Ministers, Attorney Generals and high-ranking officials of the Member States of Asian-African Legal consultative Organization attending the Fifty-Second Annual Session. I warmly welcome you all on behalf of the Government of India and on my own behalf to India, the world's largest democracy.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

International Law is no longer a branch of law which governs only inter-State relations. With the rapid pace of globalization, the scope of international law has also expanded to include newer areas, which were once considered to be in the exclusive domain of domestic law. There is virtually no area of international interest, which is not, in one way or another, governed by international law.

International law has witnessed a tremendous evolution in both substantive and institutional terms. It has now developed into an intense web of rules and institutions that address and govern non-State actors, such as international organizations and even the individual. Institutions have been established that provide for important mechanisms to facilitate international cooperation and compliance with international law. Today it touches the lives of millions by addressing trade and business, transnational crime and human trafficking, terrorism, intellectual property rights, child custody, piracy and a host of other issues.

International law is still in development and remains, as of today, the only viable means to ensure a common denominator to regulate the conduct of States and other actors. International law and the institutions it has created, continue to be the best tool to maintain international peace and security.

These developments, I believe, afford AALCO an excellent opportunity to enhance the scope of its activities and lead to an expansion of their work and thereby contribute to a more focused study of international law, with emphasis on problems of the Asian-African region.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

AALCO has its foundation firmly built on Asian-African solidarity. As we all are aware, AALCO is the only inter-governmental organization which brings together two continents of Asia and Africa in the progressive development of international law. Since its inception in 1956, AALCO has served countries of the Asian-African region as a consultative inter-governmental Organization fostering deliberations of common concerns and playing an active role in developing Asian-African perspectives of international law.

India has been always in the forefront in facilitating the fulfilment of noble objectives of AALCO. As a Founding Member of AALCO and has a member State which hosts its Headquarters, India is committed in contributing to the work of AALCO. Government of India attaches the highest importance to the Organization and its work and has always played a very significant role in the activities of AALCO.

I take this opportunity to commend AALCO's role in establishing regional arbitration centres under its auspices to settle commercial disputes. Centre for Research and Training of AALCO also deserves appreciation for undertaking training activities and bringing out publications on international law issues.

Please accept my best wishes for the Fifty-Second Annual Session of AALCO, which I'm sure, will deliberate upon a number of international law issues of contemporary importance to our region. I am impressed by the range of topics on the agenda set for deliberations for the next four days. Important topics such as Environment and Sustainable Development; Law of the Sea; Challenges in Combating Corruption; Statehood of Palestine under International Law; Extra-territorial Application of National Legislation: Sanctions Imposed against Third Parties; and Selected Items on the Agenda of the International Law Commission are on the agenda. These topics are of great significance for the international community, in general, and Asian-African Countries, in particular. I hope the in-depth exchange of views on these issues will contribute to the development of law in these areas and promotion of the interests of Asian-African States.

I wish the Conference all success.

Thank you

408. Joint Statement issued by the Ministry of Commerce at the end of the India-Africa Business Council Meeting in Johannesburg.

New Delhi, October 1, 2013.

1. The members of the Africa-India Business Council, representing the voice of industry in Africa and India met today in Johannesburg, South Africa, for the 2nd meeting of Africa-India Business Council to deliberate, consolidate and explore mutually beneficial economic engagement between the two sides.
2. The business council was led by Dr Bright Chunga, Acting Co-Chair, AIBC from Africa and Mr Sunil Bharti Mittal, Co-Chair AIBC from India. The meeting was attended by leading industry and institutions from Africa and India.
3. The business leaders from both sides expressed satisfaction on the deepening and comprehensive politico-socio-economic relations between Africa and India. As long-standing strategic partners in progress of each other, both sides reaffirmed their commitment to work together with a balanced and rewarding approach, bearing in mind each other's development priorities, based on common shared values.
4. The business council, with members representing industry of both sides, discussed the possible partnerships at bilateral, regional and continental level. The council deliberated on the issues that are bottlenecks in achieving the true potential of Africa-India partnership and suggested the possible mechanisms to address the same. The members felt that such mechanisms will inter alia, strengthen economic cooperation and facilitate a coordinated approach to undertake initiatives to steer economic growth in the current challenging times.
5. While the trade and investment relations between Africa and India have helped the two sides in their socio-economic capacity building, the members realize that with the economic developments around the globe, it is time to build upon the positive achievements and support each other in becoming more self-reliant and economically vibrant.

6. The members recognized that India and Africa have undergone significant economic transformation, in particular over the last decades. Linked by history and civilizations, India and Africa have been close allies and this should continue.
7. The Council took note of the progress made since its first meeting held in March 2012 at New Delhi, India and appreciated that the Africa-India engagements have intensified with substantial progress achieved across the board on different areas.
8. The members noted that 5 working groups have been constituted to explore and promote the agenda of the business council. It was felt that increased cooperation in the focus sectors of 5 working groups has the potential to provide a new thrust to bilateral trade, investment and economic cooperation.
9. The members of the 5 working groups discussed their agenda for the coming year and recommended concrete action plan to promote engagements at bilateral, sub-regional and pan-Africa level to further trade, investment, technology transfer, skills development, capacity building, SME development etc.
10. The members also took note of the various activities like setting up of country desks, developing business guides, developing business directories, regularly organizing roundtables with the relevant stakeholders in India and Africa.
11. The members of the council strongly felt that visa and connectivity are two important aspects that have to be worked upon on priority to deepen the engagement between both sides.
12. The members emphasized that considering the importance that both sides hold for each other the governments should consider providing long term (1-2 year) multiple entry visa to bonafide businessmen on the recommendation of the apex chambers of commerce and industry of India and recognized private sector bodies in Africa.
13. The members would recommend government/s of both sides to make renewed efforts to bring about greater connectivity between India and Africa especially by air and sea.

14. The Council decided to share the data on investments between India and Africa on a half yearly basis. This shall be done by DIPP from Indian side and AUC from Africa.
15. Recognising the need for promoting African industrialization, the members agreed to explore opportunities for value addition at source in their agenda for investment cooperation.
16. The Council members agreed to interact regularly for a focused and result oriented plan of action under the umbrella of the working groups.
17. The Africa-India Business Council members also interacted with the Trade Ministers from Africa and India and discussed with them the shared vision of industry on both sides. They assured the policy makers their full support in achieving the vision that the leaders have set for mutual growth and also sought the support of the governments to achieve the true potential for economic growth.
18. Supplementing on-going and future programmes of India and Africa at the bilateral, regional and other levels, the Africa-India Business Council members agreed to meet alongside the next Africa-India Trade Ministers meeting in India.
19. AIBC members also agreed Africa related issues and initiatives should be flagged to the AUC which in turn will refer them to RECs and Member States respectively.

ALGERIA

409. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Visit of Minister of State E. Ahamed to Algeria.

New Delhi, April 18, 2013.

Shri E. Ahamed, Hon'ble Minister of State for External Affairs paid an official visit to Algeria from 17-18 April, 2013 at the invitation of Foreign Minister of Algeria: The prime objective of the visit was to revive and renew our already strong bilateral relations on the occasion of the 50th Anniversary of Algeria's Independence and 50 Years of Establishment of Diplomatic Relations between India and Algeria. Algeria is the largest country in Africa and second largest economy with considerable trade existing between India and Algeria to the extent of US$ 2.2 billion. Our exports to Algeria have increased manifold to reach US$ 1.1 billion in 2012.

The Hon'ble Minister called on H.E. Mr. Abdelmalek Sellal, Prime Minister of Algeria and H.E. Mr. Mourad Medelci, Foreign Minister. During his interaction with both the leaders, the Minister of State discussed the possibility of signing term contracts for supply of oil and natural gas to India, Algeria being the 4th largest producer of oil in Africa. Possibility of joint venture in manufacture of gas-based nitrogenous fertilizers for captive export to India was also discussed. A Road Map for further strengthening of areas of bilateral cooperation including political, commercial & economic, human resource development, science & technology etc. were discussed while presenting to the Algerian side.

The Algerian side requested India for furthering cooperation in the field of ICT and pharmaceuticals whereas Shri E. Ahamed expressed interest in participating in the Presidential programme for development of infrastructure including social housing, roads & highways, railways and airports. Possibility of more cultural cooperation and people to people contact including hosting Indian Food Festival and Films Festival in Algeria were also discussed.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the excellent level of bilateral relations in various sectors. However, both agreed that a large potential exists for further development of these relations for which the two sides would work together under the Road Map drawn for it.

CHAD

410. Announcement by the Official Spokesperson on the visit of the Chadian Foreign Minister.

New Delhi, August 13, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin):

The first one is about the visit today of the Minister of Foreign Affairs and African Integration of Chad. The Minister of Foreign Affairs and African Integration of Chad Mr. Moussa Faki Mahamat is in Delhi today and he met the External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid. This is the first bilateral interaction at this level between India and Chad and, therefore, it has its own importance. It was an opportunity for us to exchange views on the current situation in the region there.

As you are aware, the situation of Chad is very important in the current ongoing issues that are plaguing that region. Chad was involved in Mali a little earlier during the year, and has emerged as an important economic and political player in that region. It heads the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), and is likely to be the next Chair of the important regional organization Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

India has started buying limited quantities of crude from Chad. Chad has also one of the best equipped forces in that region, and its forces were on the frontline in Mali. We have a growing development partnership cooperation with them. We have offered something in the vicinity of more than 100 million lines of credit for various projects. We provide 25 ITEC slots to students from Chad. And we have offered to set up a civil aviation academy. Chad also, as you are aware, is part of the Pan African E-Network that we have set up. That is about the visit of the Foreign Minister of Chad.

EGYPT

411. Media Briefing on Egyptian President's Visit to India. New Delhi, March 14, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for coming for this briefing today.

Before I begin, I would like to introduce my colleagues who are here with me. On my right is Mr. Navdeep Suri who is our Ambassador in Egypt; and on my left is Mr. Rajeev Shahare who is Joint Secretary (West Asia & North Africa).

What we have today primarily is a briefing regarding the forthcoming state visit of President of Egypt Dr. Mohamed Morsi to India from 18th to the 21st of March. The programme is still evolving and we will provide to you a detailed advisory of all his engagements, but I can just try and share with you a little bit of information before I ask my colleague Joint Secretary (WANA) to brief you in a little bit more detail.

President Morsi is expected to be accompanied by senior Ministers and a Business Delegation. As is the practice, he will be received ceremonially at the Rashtrapati Bhavan. He will have delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. There will be a meeting with the President followed by a banquet. And there will be calls on him by the External Affairs Minister, the Vice-President, and the Chairperson of the UPA. In addition, there is a business segment to his visit, i.e., he will be interacting with businessmen here in Delhi before he departs.

Those are my brief remarks. With that I will request Mr. Shahare to brief you in a little bit more detail about the visit. Then the floor will be open for any questions that you would like to ask either to Mr. Shahare or to Ambassador Suri. As is the norm, we will first exhaust this topic before I am willing to take any other questions that you may have on any other topic. With that I will ask the Joint Secretary (WANA) to make his opening remarks. Rajeev.

Joint Secretary (WANA) (Shri Rajeev Shahare): Thank you. Like Akbar has said, the visit of Dr. Mohamed Morsi is from 18th to 20th. We are looking at the date of departure, it is still being evolved.

The visit, if I may say so, is happening at a very important juncture of our bilateral ties and also regional developments. What we have witnessed in the North Africa, West Asia region over the past two years with the Arab Spring, the political tumult that the countries have gone through, and some of the countries have come out of it and are presently undergoing the phase of democracy, of bringing in institutions which can usher in reforms. So this is a very crucial juncture for Egypt to undertake this visit. We in India look forward to receiving President Morsi and partner Egypt in these areas that they want to strengthen their ties with India.

As you are all aware, our ties are historic, dating back to many centuries, millennia for that matter. But in the recent times we have shared a colonial past, and together have launched the Non-Aligned Movement which is still very fondly remembered in Egypt.

Coming to the more recent times, even after the political tumult and after the January 25 Revolution that took place in Egypt in 2011, we were very quick to link up with the new dispensation in Egypt. Our Minister of State visited very early on to Egypt. Last year we had the visit of External Affairs Minister in March, 2012, where we also met up with the leadership and held the Joint Commission meeting. In fact, that Joint Commission meeting set the tone and pace of how we will be engaging with the new Egypt and that was very well appreciated by Egypt as well.

In this visit we will be looking at interaction at various levels. It has all components of a very strong relationship: on the political level, on the economic level, on the level of engagement in the science and technology areas, cutting edge technology areas, frontier areas of science, in information technology. So these will be certainly on the table for discussion.

Importantly and very significantly at that has been our economic engagement. Despite the political tumult, we saw a record increase in our economic engagement. We saw an increase of almost 30 per cent. From US$ 3.2 billion, our trade went up to US$ 4.5 billion. But I have just been told by our Ambassador that the figures correspond to the Egyptian financial year, according to our financial year it has reached US$ 5.5 billion. So, this is a significant increase and it shows that despite the political situation, despite the political scenario, what has really come up is that the will form both sides to engage with each other in the economic sphere. We certainly hope to carry this forward during the visit of President Morsi.

He will be accompanied by a very high-level Business Delegation. So far they have told us maybe 15 to 20, but very high-level business people are to accompany him. We have a separate business segment which of course is being organized more with the Egyptian Mission and our three apex business houses – FICCI, CII and ASSOCHAM – in which FICCI is taking the lead role. There will be various elements to that. I think they are still being developed. So we will not be in a position to give you the details of the economic segment. But I think to some extent the Commerce Ministers from both sides would be chairing some sessions; there is a likelihood of the President also addressing the session. But I think I would leave to the Egyptian side to give more details on that. They are the ones who are doing this segment.

As happens in the Presidential visits, they are also accompanied by a high-level delegation. We are expecting at least four to five Ministers accompanying Dr. Morsi. We will get to know the details, but as of now we have been given to understand that their Foreign Minister, Minister for Information and Technology, Trade and Commerce Minister, and Investment Minister would also be coming. So, we have four Minister so far who would be there with us.

Might I also add here that last year we had a visit by the counterpart Chief Election Commissioner. His name is Bugato. Commissioner Bugato had visited and signed an MoU for cooperation in the field of electoral issues. This shows the Egyptian will to partner India in this very important segment. Before that, our Chief Election Commissioner had also visited. We were also Observers in the first round of the Presidential elections. I think this is an important area. I think that also would be looked at during the visit.

There are many other things we are looking at. Biotechnology, information technology, cyber security areas, all those things will be discussed. There will be delegation-level talks headed by the Prime Minister from our side. There will be the usual trappings of the state visit with the forecourt ceremony and the banquet by the President, etc.

We also have presence of a large number of Indian companies, almost 50 companies are there, big names are there. Aditya Birla is there, Kirloskar has been there for at least 60 years or so, Daburs are there. There is a new company that has come up called Sanmar who are manufacturing PVC and caustic soda. It is a huge company with a billion dollar plus investment. Our total investments are more than US$ 2.5 billion in Egypt. Likewise Egypt is also investing here. There are a few companies here. So this is one area we would be looking at how to partner on the investments side.

I will stop at that and we can take questions thereafter. I think the Ambassador might like to add to that.

Official Spokesperson: I think I will ask Ambassador Suri to perhaps add a little bit before we take some questions.

Ambassador to Egypt (Shri Navdeep Suri): Thanks Akbar. Good to see many old friends again.

On the trade side, one thing that I would add is that overall our trade with Egypt has increased so rapidly in the last three years that India is now Egypt's seventh largest trading partner. Last year it was the second largest source of its exports. Our own exports have comfortably crossed about US$ 2.3 billion last year.

We have a very diversified export basket. In fact it is interesting to see how Indian products such as two-wheelers and three-wheelers are rapidly gaining ground over other competitors who had a head start and were dominating the market.

As Rajeev said, on investment as well, it is a fact that we have 50 Indian companies in a very diverse range of sectors – in petrochemicals, in chemicals, in paints, in consumer products, in healthcare products, in adhesives. Particularly when you talk to Indian companies that what is the driver for you, the first thing everybody says is - location. The geo-strategic location that Egypt enjoys enables them to look at markets not only the fact that Egypt itself is a US$ 260 billion economy with 85 million consumers, the second largest in Africa, but also that by having a manufacturing base in Egypt they are able to access markets in Europe, in Africa, and in the Middle East. That is a major attraction for them.

We always discuss in general terms, yes we will have a collaboration in IT, but how you concretize this? I think what you will see emerging out of this visit is a number of very interesting concrete ideas of taking relationships forward in a way that they stand out as visible symbols of cooperation. One for example will be in very advanced stages of discussing - a centre for excellence in IT in Al-Azhar University. As you know, Al-Azhar Sharif is the world's single most influential, respected, oldest organization in the field of Sunni Islam. And the request has come from them as recognition of the value that India can add to their curriculum.

We talk often in general terms about space technology and cooperation but here we are talking in specific terms about launching an Egyptian satellite. So, you will see some interesting things come out of the visit in the next few days.

I will leave it at that and if there are any questions, then Rajeev and I will be happy to answer them.

Question: What is the President looking for in India? What is it they want? Politically it is not that we have been very close. Maybe long ago, but in the recent past ...(Inaudible)...So, what is it that they want?

Ambassador to Egypt: The new Government is very clearly looking at a much deeper engagement with India. They are looking at diversifying their relationships, and you will see that emerge. They genuinely look at India as a country from which they can access our knowledge, experience and expertise in areas like information technology, in small and medium enterprises, in microfinance. They have done their homework; they are very focused on what they need from India.

Joint Secretary (WANA): I think Navdeep has very much said this. I sat on a meeting with Dr. Morsi when EAM had visited. At that time he very clearly articulated that he would like to learn from India and also gain from India's expertise. What he was saying about was about (a) capacity building, so that he can address the problem of unemployment there, how to increase on that; and (b) to learn from India's pluralism, a pluralistic society, how we are going about that, I think this is another very important element which even Egypt is looking at. Of course certainly all these high-tech areas they want to partner India. I think that is what is driving them to look towards India.

Q: What are the new areas you are going to discuss as compared to the summit meeting with Mubarak? I think I remember during Mubarak's time there was space exploration. What is the new ground that you are going to cover?

Joint Secretary (WANA): As I indicated, what we are doing is moving from general agreements to specifics of collaboration. When we say that we are moving to the specific of a Centre for Information Technology, where we are establishing, in the hallowed premises of Al-Azhar University, we are moving on. So, there is progress that you can see in concretizing some of those ideas. I gave you the example of space as well. So, there is an MoU that creates an enabling framework, and then there is action on the ground to actually make something tangible happen. That is the stage we are at now. Also with regard to say small and medium enterprises, again capacity building, more opportunities for employment. So, from a generic Memorandum of Understanding, going on to specific implementation of the MoUs, we are going to have vocational training centre specifically that we are going to set up in Cairo. These are the specificities, just to add to what Ambassador has said.

Q: Navdeep, considering your office-cum-residence is not too far from the Tahrir Square, the ongoings in Cairo, do they bother you at all? How does that affect the Indian companies there? The last time I went to Cairo I had to change planes in Dubai. Considering that they are a big trading partner now, do we have direct flights connecting India with Egypt?

Ambassador to Egypt: I think that is two separate questions. On the flights, there are flights between Mumbai and Cairo of Egypt Airlines four days a week, but there are none between Delhi and Cairo. But there are many connections through Dubai, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Muscat, Riyadh, etc.

On Tahrir Square, I keep telling my friends when they call up and express concern that Cairo is a city of 20 million. It is huge, sprawling. Tahrir is half a square kilometer or less, and detours are easily available if there are disturbances happening. Yes, the power of the visual medium to convey a certain image is very strong. But by and large, life goes on in the city which is the unreported fact of the situation there. There are a couple of Embassies which are right next to Tahrir Square and if there are clashes taking place in that area, they are impacted directly. But schools and colleges work, Embassies work, the malls are open till 1 o'clock at night. Life goes on.

Q: Navdeep, just now Mr. Shahare said that they are looking for pluralism from India. I just want to know what kind of political cooperation you are looking with Egypt so far as international fora is concerned.

Ambassador to Egypt: First of all on the issue of pluralism, just to expand it, that is one element that comes out almost unerringly in every major conversation that we have. The affection that they have for India is derived from Indian democracy and multiculturalism, the economic story, and the IT story, and then possibly Bollywood as well which has a very wide-ranging appeal.

Internationally, this is a visit at the highest level to give us an opportunity to compare notes on the situation both in our own part of the world and in their part of the world. I think maybe JS (WANA) wants to expand a little bit on that.

Joint Secretary (WANA): As far as India's democratic credentials and the pluralism aspect is concerned, I think we have a proven track record on that. Not only Egypt but many other countries are moving towards how our entire secular approach, the coexistence between various religions, and the whole concept of pluralism. How successful it had been in India has become in a way a role model for many of these countries. These emerging countries that are in transition are facing this, and definitely in the transition phase we are seeing what is happening in other countries as well. There are these problems which are cropping up. So, I think they feel that what is already there in India, the peaceful coexistence or the coexistence of various segments in our society whether it is linguistic diversification or ethnic diversification or religious, how we come together and exist peacefully, I think this is what these countries are looking at India for.

Official Spokesperson: Rajeev has to leave but Ambassador Suri is still here with us and I have still a fairly long list of questions.

Question: I would like to know if there are any proposals from Egypt for any kind of defence cooperation, defence capacity building, etc.

Ambassador to Egypt: We are awaiting next month for the Joint Defence Committee. It will take place in Delhi. It is an institutional framework. This is going to be the fourth meeting of the Joint Defence Committee. I am sure they are going to explore new areas of cooperation, particularly since that Committee will be meeting in the wake of Dr. Morsi's visit. Beyond that we do have regular training exchanges. Our officers go to Egyptian establishments for training; theirs come to NDC, etc. That is part of an ongoing process. We make regular ship visits to Egypt. We have had a number of these in the recent past. But I think this Joint Defence Committee will really provide us an opportunity to take that agenda forward.

Q: You spoke about pluralism. How does India see a Government which is led by the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt?

Ambassador to Egypt: It is not a good idea for me to be commenting on the internal politics in a country. At some point maybe we will have a conversation about it.

Q: If I can just draw you back to the Muslim Brotherhood question, we have got Shahbagh happening in our neighbourhood, you have got Muslim Brotherhood and its emergence where you are. How do you intellectually make sense of these two contrasts? What explains the striking difference?

Ambassador to Egypt: Let me just give a general answer. What you are seeing is a region in transition from Governments that were somewhat authoritarian, less or more, to the yearning for democracy manifesting itself in different countries. In Egypt as a case in point and Tunisia and Gaza, as three areas where it has been tested, the elections that were widely regarded as free and fair have been won by parties that are broadly regarded as being of an Islamist leaning. So what you are seeing at play is serious, pragmatic people, modern-thinking people trying to come out with how to reconcile the emerging idea of political Islam with the established idea of a modern democracy.

Q: Egypt is on the other side of the fence on the UNSC issue. Are we still in the business of persuading them to support us or have we given up? Will this issue come up at all during the PM's talks with the President?

Ambassador to Egypt: It will come up for discussion. We are grownups. We understand that each one has his own position. We are very confident about our position, they have a certain rationale for their position, and we are discussing this issue. It is not something that we have swept off the table.

Q: Ambassador, you said that India would be launching an Egyptian satellite. What kind of satellite would it be? Will any defence cooperation plus space cooperation agreement be signed for this satellite?

Ambassador to Egypt: This is a nanosatellite called EgyCubeSat. It is a small satellite. It is essentially for scientific purposes. I think there is great pride in Egypt that it is entirely built in Egypt itself. And certainly they recognize the track record of our very successful satellite launch programme and look at us as preferred partners for this purpose.

Q: What is the size of this nanosatellite?

Ambassador to Egypt: The weight is about one kilogram, that is how much it is usually. But with the trappings and everything, fixtures and all, it would probably come to about six to six and half kilos.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much friends.

412. Statement by Prime Minister to the Media during the State Visit of President of Egypt to India.

New Delhi, March 19, 2013.

Your Excellency President Dr. Mohamed Morsy,
Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome President Mohamed Morsy, the first democratically elected President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, on his State Visit to India. We deeply appreciate the fact that he has undertaken a State Visit to India despite his pressing domestic commitments. This is a reflection of his personal commitment to our relationship.

President Morsy and I have just concluded extensive and very productive discussions, marked by the warmth and friendship that characterizes the truly special nature of the relationship between our two countries. We agreed that his visit, at an important juncture for Egypt, offers us a great opportunity to renew our relationship and take it to a different level of engagement and cooperation.

We discussed the historic political transition underway in Egypt following the events of January 2011. I expressed our admiration for the courage and sacrifices of the people of Egypt in ushering in a new era of democracy in Egypt. I conveyed our full support to President Morsy and offered to share our experience, as he ably leads his nation in building strong institutions and frameworks for democracy, social justice and inclusive economic development. I am convinced that Egypt's successful transition would be an important model for the region and the world.

President Morsy and I agreed that India and Egypt have enormous potential for deepening our cooperation across the full spectrum of our relationship. Our economic partnership has rich possibilities. We agreed that information technology, services, electronics, small and medium enterprises, manufacturing, fertilizers, and renewable energy constitute important areas of cooperation. Egypt's location, as a bridge between Asia and Africa, astride a major global trade route, together with its skilled human resources, makes it an attractive business destination for India.

We also agreed to foster productive partnerships in socio-economic development programmes, skill development, higher education, agriculture and health care. We also agreed to enhance our defence exchanges and cooperation.

The agreements that we have signed today are a clear manifestation of our desire to impart a new dynamism to our relationship.

President Morsy and I also exchanged views on a range of regional and international issues. We have a shared interest in peace and stability in the Gulf, West Asia and the North African region. I conveyed our steadfast support to the Palestinian cause and expressed our deep appreciation for the role played by Egypt in trying to forge unity between the Palestinian groups and work towards a peaceful resolution of this long standing issue.

We also discussed the deteriorating situation in Syria and condemned the violence and loss of innocent lives there. We agreed on the urgent need for a peaceful resolution of all issues through dialogue.

President Morsy and I also underscored the importance of forging stronger regional and international cooperation between our two countries to address common challenges like climate change, food and energy security and terrorism. We agreed to intensify our efforts on issues that affect developing countries, and increase our coordination in various international forums, including the United Nations, G-77 and the Non Aligned Movement.

Before I conclude, I must mention the enormous reservoir of goodwill and trust, and the ties of history, culture and religion, which bind the people of India and Egypt. President Morsy and I agreed that this provides a solid bedrock on which to build a strong and durable bilateral relationship and international partnership between our two countries.

Thank you

413. India-Egypt Joint Declaration on the State Visit of Dr. Mohamed Morsy, President of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

New Delhi, March 20, 2013.

1. The President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, His Excellency Dr. Mohamed Morsy, paid a State visit to India from 18 to 20 March 2013 at the invitation of the President of India, Shri Pranab Mukherjee. President Morsy was accompanied by a high-level delegation of Ministers, senior officials and business persons.
2. President Morsy called on the President of India, Shri Pranab Mukherjee. The Vice-President of India, Shri Mohammed Hamid Ansari, the External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, Chairperson of the United Progressive Alliance, Smt. Sonia Gandhi and Leader of Opposition in Lok Sabha Smt. Sushma Swaraj called on President Morsy. The President, Shri Pranab Mukherjee, hosted a banquet in honour of President Morsy.
3. The Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh held delegation-level discussions with H.E. President Mohamed Morsy on 19 March 2013. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh congratulated President Morsy for being a democratically elected President of the Arab Republic of Egypt and expressed India's happiness in seeing democratic traditions taking root in Egypt. He offered all support in the democratic transition process in Egypt and expressed satisfaction with regard to the growing interaction between the Election Commission of India and its counterpart in Egypt.

4. The two leaders expressed satisfaction over the evolution of bilateral relations in recent years and directed that exchanges and consultations should be further intensified in order to realise the full potential of the relationship. They took note of the successful meeting of the India-Egypt Joint Commission in March 2012 at the level of Foreign Ministers and the India-Egypt Foreign Office Consultations at the level of Secretary/Assistant Foreign Minister in January 2013.
5. The two sides discussed bilateral defence ties and measures to enhance cooperation, including through the forthcoming Joint Defence Committee meeting scheduled to take place in Delhi in April, 2013.
6. The two leaders noted the growing bilateral economic interaction in recent years and particularly welcomed the growth in Indian investment in Egypt which today stands at US $ 2.5 billion. They underlined the importance of taking all measures in order to provide better climate and opportunities for promotion of investments. They agreed that all investment related issues would be accorded utmost priority.
7. The two leaders also exchanged views on a wide range of issues of bilateral, regional and international interest including those relating to the situation in the Middle East and North Africa region; the Non-Aligned Movement; and the reform of the United Nations.
8. The two sides expressed deep concern over the deteriorating security situation and continued violence and bloodshed in Syria. The two sides, while expressing their support to the mission of Lakhdar Brahimi, asserted their position regarding the safeguards of the unity and territorial integrity of Syria, and called for the implementation of the Joint Communiqué of Geneva Action Group with a view to bring about a political solution to the conflict in order to achieve the just aspirations of the Syrian people for freedom, dignity and democracy.

9. The two leaders reiterated their well-known support for the Palestinian cause in line with their backing of the United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973) calling for a negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable, contiguous and united state of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders, side by side at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap and United Nations Security Council Resolution 1397 and 1515. The two leaders welcomed the overwhelming vote at the United Nations General Assembly to upgrade Palestine to non-member observer state in the United Nations. The two leaders called for an end to the expansion of Israeli settlements in occupied Palestine and for an early and significant easing of restrictions on the free movement of persons and goods within Palestine. Both sides agreed that peace in the region required sustained and substantive negotiations among the parties. They advocated active support of the international community and regional players for efforts in normalizing the situation in West Asia, and resuming the Middle East Peace Process.
10. India and Egypt strongly condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. Both sides considered terrorism, including cross border terrorism, to be one of the gravest threats to international peace and security, and affirmed that there can be no justification for any act of terrorism, irrespective of motivations, wherever and by whosoever committed. They are convinced that terrorism cannot, and should not, be associated with any nationality, religious, cultural or ethnic group. They reaffirmed their resolve to strengthen their cooperation in combating terrorism at all levels.
11. His Excellency, President Dr. Mohamed Morsy addressed a meeting of the India-Egypt Business Forum where the potential of economic cooperation between the two countries was highlighted under the theme “Complementarities for Growth”. Memoranda of Understanding on skill development and training, micro-finance and setting-up of an industrial park on plastics were signed by the Indian and Egyptian companies, during the India-Egypt Economic Forum.

12. The two countries agreed to collaborate in the field of technology, in particular in information and communications technologies; agriculture; biotechnology; and non-conventional energy technologies. They will work towards enhancing cooperation in the field of science and technology and in this regard agreed to set up a Joint Working Group. The two sides also set up a Joint Working Group to explore new initiatives for cooperation in the field of space science. They also agreed to work in the areas of tourism, youth affairs and sports, agriculture research and education, technical education and vocational training and other fields of mutual benefit.
13. The Egyptian side expressed its appreciation for the Pan African E-network Project for tele-medicine and tele-education at Alexandria University, solar electrification of a village in Siwa and establishment of a textile vocational training centre in Egypt. Both sides agreed to continue to cooperate closely in these areas.
14. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the significant growth in the bilateral trade in the recent past to cross US$ 5 billion and agreed to achieve a target of US$ 8 billion by March 2016. They welcomed the first meeting of the Joint Trade Committee held recently in Cairo on March 10, 2013 where the introduction of new commodities, including trade of wheat, cotton and fertilizers, was discussed. They also agreed to enhance the cooperation through appropriate trade arrangements.
15. India and Egypt discussed intensification of cooperation in the ICT sector by facilitating and providing assistance to help promote trade and technology sector. They welcomed the conclusion of MoUs on ICT cooperation and cyber security between the two countries to strengthen collaboration in the field of cyber security.

16. India and Egypt will work towards expanding cooperation between their respective oil companies, both in the public and private sectors, for establishing long-term relationships in supply of crude oil and petroleum products, upstream and downstream joint ventures, refineries, petrochemical industries and marketing, both in Egypt and India as permitted by their respective laws and regulations. They also agreed to explore the possible collaboration in the field of fertilizers.
17. India and Egypt welcomed ongoing efforts towards developing partnerships between institutions of the two countries in the areas of culture, Indian and Egyptian studies and languages. They also encouraged more interaction between civil societies and stressed on the importance of enhancing people to people contacts between the two countries.
18. The following Memoranda of Understanding/Agreement were signed at the conclusion of the talks between the Prime Minister of India and the President of Egypt:
 - i. Memorandum of Understanding between Ministry of Communications & Information Technology of Government of India and Ministry of Communications and Information Technology of Arab Republic of Egypt for Cooperation in Information and Communication Technology
 - ii. Memorandum of Understanding between Ministry of Communications & Information Technology of Government of India and Ministry of Communications and Information Technology of Arab Republic of Egypt on Cooperation in the area of Cyber Security.
 - iii. Memorandum of Understanding between Government of the Republic of India and Arab Republic of Egypt for the establishment of a Centre of Excellence in Information Technology (CEIT) in Egypt.

Maseru, (Lesotho), September 13, 2013.

1. The second meeting of the India-Lesotho Joint Bilateral Commission of Cooperation (JBCC) was held during 12-13 September 2013 in Maseru, Lesotho to discuss the current state of bilateral relations and the follow up of decisions taken at India Africa Forum Summit. This was the first meeting of the JBCC to be held in Lesotho. The Indian delegation was led by Shri Ravi Bangar, Additional Secretary (East & Southern Africa), Ministry of External Affairs and Lesotho delegation was led by H.E. Mr. J.T. Metsing, Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Relations of Lesotho.
2. India and Lesotho enjoy close and friendly bilateral relations which are multifaceted. There is a strong cooperation in bilateral matters and excellent coordination of views in regional and international fora. India-Lesotho cooperation has developed through capacity building programmes, training and sharing of experience in diverse fields including defence and security.
3. The heads of the delegation commended the existing warm and cordial relations between the two countries. They emphasized the significance of the second meeting of the Joint Bilateral Commission on Cooperation as another milestone of meaningful and growing cooperation between the two countries.

4. During the discussions, both sides also reviewed implementation of decisions taken at the first meeting of the JBCC in March 2009 as well as those under the two India Africa Forum Summits.
5. Both sides held extensive discussions on bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of common interest. Cooperation under the India Africa Forum Summit, defence and security cooperation and Lines of Credit offered by the Government of India were also discussed at length.
6. It was also agreed to propose that the next JBCC meeting will be held in New Delhi on mutually convenient dates.

LIBERIA

415. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Liberian President.

New Delhi, September 10, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon, friends and thank you very much for being here this afternoon.

The first announcement is regarding the visit of the President of Liberia, Mrs. Ellen Johnson Sirlief, who is currently on a state visit to India. Tomorrow is her main day of engagements. Tomorrow, as usual, there will be a ceremonial reception at the Rashtrapati Bhavan in the morning. Subsequently she will have delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. There will be a series of dignitaries calling upon her - that is the External Affairs Minister, the Speaker of Lok Sabha and the Chairperson of the UPA. In addition, President will host a banquet for her tomorrow evening. Day after tomorrow she will be bestowed with the Indira Gandhi Prize.

Those of you who are aware of her background, she is the first African woman Head of State. This is also the first visit by a Liberian Head of Government or Head of State to India.

We have had a few high-level meetings during the last few years. The first of these was in 2009 when the Minister of State for External Affairs Mr. Shashi Tharoor visited Liberia. Subsequently, in 2010 we had the Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs Mr. Vayalar Ravi visiting Liberia.

From the Liberian side we have had two important visits. Their Foreign Minister had visited India in February 2011. And earlier this year for the CII-Africa Conclave we had the Vice-President of Liberia visiting. So, there has been in recent times a regular exchange of visits between Liberia and India.

Those of you who are following peacekeeping affairs are perhaps aware that in a sort of a seminal effort in 2007 we had sent a fully formed all-women peacekeeping police unit to Liberia. This was a trailblazer in terms of UN peacekeeping and has been welcomed by all concerned. Currently we have two fully formed police units – one is the all-women police unit which is of 104 women police officials, along with 21 male supporting staff.

In addition, we also have another fully formed all-male police peacekeeping unit in Liberia. Both these are part of what is called the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL). The second Indian unit is outside Monrovia. The first one is located in Monrovia.

As regards bilateral trade between Liberia and India, I understand that it has touched last year approximately 150 million dollars with the balance of trade being in favour of India. Our main exports are pharmaceutical products and engineering products.

As part of our development assistance to Liberia we provide approximately 40 ITEC slots and nine ICCR research scholarships. Under the India-Africa Summit process we are working with Liberia to set up an IT training centre and also a vocational training centre for women solar engineers.

Finally, Indian companies are eyeing investment opportunities in Liberia's mining sector. During the visit of the President we hope to have several agreements signed also including on oil and natural gas apart from institutional agreements between various organizations on the Liberian and the Indian side. That is about what I have Liberia.

416. Prime Minister's media statement during the State Visit of President of Liberia to India.

New Delhi, September 11, 2013.

Your Excellency, President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf,
Ladies and Gentlemen of the media.

It is a great honour to welcome President Sirleaf on her first state visit to India. Her voice is heard with great respect in Africa and throughout the world. Her vision and leadership has contributed to Liberia's political transformation, economic resurgence and progress towards peace and stability in the region. We are honoured that she has accepted the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development for 2012, which will be conferred on her tomorrow by the President.

India and Liberia enjoy warm and friendly relations. Our official exchanges, trade and investment linkages and people-to-people interactions are growing steadily. President Sirleaf and I reviewed our relations and pledged to work together to realize the full potential of our partnership.

We have decided to enhance our cooperation in a number of areas, including agricultural research, health, small and medium enterprises, science & technology, education and skill development. A new Joint Commission will guide and review progress in our bilateral cooperation. The Memorandum of Understanding signed today for cooperation in the oil and gas sector will enable our countries to undertake structured cooperation in this area, where India's experience can be of some relevance to Liberia.

There is great potential to further strengthen bilateral trade and investment relations. Indian investments in Liberia, especially in the mining sector, are growing. I requested President Sirleaf to facilitate Indian investment in agriculture, infrastructure, hydrocarbon, mining and manufacturing in line with Liberia's national development goals and policies.

In recent years, India has participated in Liberia's development effort through human resource and capacity building support. I conveyed to President Sirleaf our decision to extend a line of credit of 144 million US dollars to fund a power transmission and distribution project in Liberia. We will also enhance scholarships and training slots under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme for Liberia. India will be setting up an IT Centre, a Vocational Training Centre, a Farm Science Centre and a Training Centre for Women in the field of solar energy in Liberia.

We also exchanged views on the India-Africa Forum Summit in pursuit of our shared objective to build a robust and contemporary India-Africa partnership.

Our two countries have agreed to work together for the promotion of international peace and stability, particularly on the African continent, and to make common cause to ensure that global governance is just and meets the aspirations of the developing world. We also exchanged views on regional and global issues, including the urgent need for reform of the United Nations Security Council. India deeply appreciates Liberia's support for its candidature as a permanent member of a reformed and expanded Security Council.

President Sirleaf's visit has imparted fresh impetus to our joint efforts to strengthen our bilateral relations. Our talks today have laid a strong foundation for closer political understanding and deepening of our economic exchanges in the coming years.

Thank you

417. Joint Statement issued on the Visit of President of Liberia to India.

New Delhi, September 11, 2013.

1. Her Excellency Mrs. Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, President of the Republic of Liberia, paid a State Visit to India from 11-13 August 2013. The President was accompanied by a high level Ministerial and official delegation. The Ministerial delegation included Honorable Augustine Kpehe Ngafuan, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Honorable Dr. Florence Chenoweth, Minister of Agriculture; Honourable Axel Addy, Minister of Commerce & Industry; Honorable Patrick Sendolo, Minister of Lands, Mines & Energy; Honorable Julia Duncan Cassell, Minister of Gender & Development.

2. The President of Liberia was accorded a ceremonial welcome at Rashtrapati Bhawan in the capital New Delhi on 11 August 2013. The President laid a wreath at the memorial of Mahatma Gandhi at Rajghat and paid homage to the Father of the Nation. During the visit, President Sirleaf met with the President of India, Shri Pranab Mukherjee, who hosted a banquet in her honor. She held talks with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. The President of Liberia also received Speaker, Lok Sabha and the External Affairs Minister.
3. President Sirleaf met leaders of Indian business and industry in New Delhi and extended invitation to them to participate and invest in Liberia's private sector development. She noted that the Indian Community in Liberia was the second largest expatriate community in the country and that a number of Indian businesses have found a springboard in Liberia from which they have spread throughout the West Africa Sub-region and elsewhere.
4. The President of Liberia and the Prime Minister of India held delegation level discussions on bilateral, regional and international issues. These discussions were held in a warm, cordial and friendly atmosphere. They welcomed the development of friendship and cooperation between India and Liberia.
5. Both sides noted that there still remained considerable potential for cooperation and agreed to enhance the partnership between the two countries in all areas of mutual interest.
6. The two leaders agreed to further deepen the partnership by adding more concrete programmes and projects and broadening it to new areas of cooperation. Both sides agreed to continue strengthening cooperation in the areas of economy, trade and investment, finance, human development, agriculture, etc., while striving to expand cooperation in other potential areas such as mining, hydrocarbons, food processing, ICT, science and technology, medium and small scale industries and public health. Both sides agreed to find ways and means of further expanding bilateral trade. President Sirleaf affirmed that Liberia would create favourable conditions for Indian enterprises to invest in the country.

7. President Sirleaf highly appreciated the support and assistance of the Government and people of India rendered to Liberia's development process over the past years and warmly welcomed the announcement by the Prime Minister of India to continue to assist in its socio-economic development.
8. The Liberian side welcomed Government of India's consideration of its requests for enhanced slots for education, training and capacity building of the Liberian people as well as for the Government of India's Line of Credit for a power transmission project. Both sides agreed on the need to expedite implementation of projects which have been offered to Liberia as part of the decisions of the India-Africa Forum Summits of 2008 and 2011.
9. President Sirleaf took special note of India's active participation in the United Nations sponsored peace mission in Liberia and appreciated the role India continues to play in promoting peace and security in the continent.
10. The leaders affirmed their desire and determination to work together for peace and stability in the region and the world and agreed to further strengthen cooperation at regional and international fora.
11. Both sides stressed the need to speed up the reform of the United Nations and the expansion of the Security Council in both its permanent and non-permanent categories of membership. Liberia reaffirmed its support for India for a permanent seat on an expanded Security Council. The Indian side thanked Liberia for this support and conveyed that it respects Liberia's commitment to the Common African Position regarding the reform of the Security Council.

12. The two sides strongly condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and resolved to increase cooperation in the common efforts of the international community in combating this scourge in a comprehensive manner.
13. The following agreements were signed during the visit:
 - a) Agreement on Establishment of Joint Commission between India and Liberia
 - b) MoU between Foreign Service Institutes of India and Liberia
 - c) MoU on cooperation in the field of Oil and Gas between India and Liberia
 - d) Agreement between Exim Bank and Government of Liberia for a Line of Credit of US$ 144 million for funding a power transmission and distribution project in Liberia
14. Both sides agreed that the State visit of the President of Liberia will provide fresh impetus for the future development of a comprehensive partnership.15. The President of Liberia expressed her gratitude to the Government of India for the warm reception and hospitality extended to her and the members of her delegation during the visit. She invited the President and the Prime Minister of India to pay State visits to Liberia. The invitations were accepted and it was agreed that the dates of the visits would be finalized through diplomatic channels.

KENYA420. Letter of Prime Minister to President Uhuru Kenyatta of Kenya, conveying condolences on the death of some people in a terror attack on a Mall in Nairobi.*New Delhi, September 22, 2013.

Excellency,

I was deeply shocked and saddened by the brutal terror attack yesterday on the Westgate Mall in Nairobi. This incident is a stark reminder that the persisting menace of terrorism remains a formidable challenge that calls for a concerted and sustained response from the global community. India condemns in the strongest terms this heinous and senseless assault, which has snuffed out so many innocent lives, including nationals of both our countries .

We stand in solidarity with you and the Government and the people of Kenya in this hour of grief. Please convey our heartfelt condolences to the bereaved families and our good wishes to the injured for a full and speedy recovery. I am confident that Your Excellency and the people of Kenya will have the strength and resilience to deal with this tragedy and respond firmly to the forces of terror. We stand ready to assist you in your efforts.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.”

* A day earlier the official spokesperson of the MEA in an immediate reaction said: “Reports are coming in of a terror attack and taking of hostages at a shopping mall in Nairobi. The official figures of injuries and deaths are not yet available. Our High Commission is closely monitoring the evolving situation, have been visiting hospitals and is in close touch with the Kenyan Government and leaders of the Indian community. All members of the High Commission are reported to be safe.

According to media reports 68 persons two of whom were Indians, were killed in the unfortunate incident. The dead Indians have been identified as 40-year-old Sridhar Natarajan, employee of a local pharmaceutical firm and Master Paramshu Jain, son of a Branch Manager of Bank of Baroda (Kenya Limited).

MAURITIUS

421. Speech by President Pranab Mukherjee at the ceremony conferring Honorary Degree of Doctor of Civil Law by the University of Mauritius.

Port Louis, March 10, 2013.

Hon. Rajkeswur Purryag, President of the Republic of Mauritius,

Hon. Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius,

Sir Ramesh Jeewoolall, Chancellor of the University of Mauritius,

Distinguished guests and dear students,

1. I am delighted to be here among you. I have been in your country for nearly two days now. I have been mesmerised by the natural beauty of this island which is rivalled only by the warmth and friendliness of its people. I have been touched by the gracious hospitality accorded to me. I am, above all, struck by the profound awareness that this island's success is vested, in large part, in the education of its citizens. Mahatma Gandhi's brief stopover in 1901 had set the stage for a peaceful revolution in the area of education in Mauritius. Nurtured by the efforts of Barrister Manilall Doctor and other stalwarts, the seeds of social transformation continued to grow after Independence, thanks to the visionary leadership of Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, who was deeply aware of the power of education. He had said and I quote "In the modern world, education has a vital role to play in the life of a nation, particularly in developing countries, where people are becoming more and more conscious of their duties and responsibilities in shaping the future of their countries" - words which ring true even today. Investment in education continues to reap rich dividends for Mauritius and has been one of the reasons for the praiseworthy level of development that we see in Mauritius today.
2. Excellency, Sir Ramesh Jeewoolall, Chancellor of the University of Mauritius, it is indeed a privilege to receive the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Civil Law from your esteemed University. I thank you for this high honour. This University has a rich tradition of providing quality education that responds responding to the contemporary needs of Mauritian society. I wish all its distinguished faculty members, scholars and students every success in their academic pursuits. May you achieve, with distinction, your motto of “bridging knowledge across continents through excellence and intellectual creativity”.

3. Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen , I am especially happy to be here as Chief Guest for the 45th Anniversary of the Independence Day of Mauritius. On this occasion, I extend to all Mauritians the good wishes of the Government and the people of India. While enjoying last evening’s colourful and dignified ceremony at the Anjalay stadium, I could not help marvelling at the long way that Mauritius has come - since its independence in 1968. Every Mauritian, regardless of his ethnic or religious background should be proud of the remarkable achievements of this country. Not only has Mauritius triumphed in the realisation of its democratic and secular ideals, but it has also registered a commendable rate of economic growth, and established for its citizens the strong institutions that make Mauritius a well integrated and progressive people. Today Mauritius figures high in economic and social development indicators in Africa and has become a role model to many countries because of its economic success story.
4. During my visit to your country, I have had the opportunity to review the entire canvas of our bilateral co-operation with President Purryag, Prime Minister Ramgoolam and other distinguished leaders . All of us place great value on the unique bilateral relationship between India and Mauritius and agree that the friendship and trust between our governments and our people is based on enduring ties of kinship and brotherhood , our common history and culture and our shared vision for the future . In recent years, we have been able to leverage these linkages to evolve a modern, dynamic and mutually beneficial partnership, guided by close and frequent high-level political interaction - and strengthened by robust people-to-people contacts. The abiding strength of our bilateral partnership is amply reflected in close and strong engagement at various levels.

5. I am happy to note that several agreements have been signed during my visit in key sectors of our respective economies including tourism, health and medicine, co-operation in the addressing the issues related to senior citizens and disabilities. These agreements reflect the diversity of our engagement and will definitely benefit the people of both countries.

6. Ladies and Gentlemen, India has the third largest higher education system in the world with hundreds of universities, thousands of tertiary education institutions and millions of students studying in colleges and universities. We have a highly developed curriculum, globally reputed for its high quality - particularly in engineering, medicine, management, material science and technology, nano-science, remote sensing, environmental studies, renewable energy and space science to name a few. With over 600 million Indians below the age of 25, we have prioritised the education and training of our youth over the next two decades to carry forward our development agenda. Needless to say, India is committing huge resources to towards this end.

7. Distinguished Ladies and gentlemen, cooperation in the field of education has always been an important dimension of our bilateral relations. Nearly 100 scholarships are offered annually to Mauritian students to pursue under-graduate, post-graduate and research studies in various streams in India. This is in addition to 290 slots for short term courses under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme. In recent years, we have seen an upswing in the number of Mauritian students availing of these scholarships. Many Mauritian students also enrol themselves in Indian universities on a self-financing basis. We welcome them in India. As the next generation, young people should have a say in determining our responses to the variety of challenges that our developing nations face today. I recall the words of Gandhiji who said, about living and learning, "Live as if you were to die tomorrow. Learn as if you were to live forever." I hope these words inspire you too.

I once again thank the University of Mauritius once for receiving me and I wish you all great success in the future.

422. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) in Mauritius on President's Ongoing Visit.

March 12, 2013.

Secretary (West) (Shri Sudhir Vyas): Good evening. Sorry for this delay. We were there at the function celebrating the 45th anniversary of the Independence of Mauritius and that went on a little beyond schedule. Let me just very briefly run you through the President's programme and his activities here. Most of this you know already.

The President is here at the invitation of Prime Minister His Excellency Mr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam as Chief Guest at the Independence Day Celebrations of Mauritius this year. This is a relationship that stands on extremely firm foundations; very firm foundations based on historical close ties; based on shared values of democracy, of rule of law, of secularism; values which in fact predate the Independence of Mauritius. They have looked to the Indian model in designing their own Constitution. They have looked to India in establishing the manner in which they handled these kinds of issues. In fact it was mentioned during the discussions that Indian democracy has been an inspiring force for Mauritius. So the foundation for this relationship is very very strong, and it can only move forward.

The President yesterday - after his arrival, after the ceremonial reception which you all witnessed at the airport - had a meeting with the President of the Republic of Mauritius, His Excellency Mr. Rajkeswur Purryag, followed by a banquet hosted by the Prime Minister of Mauritius at the Swami Vivekananda International Convention Centre. This morning there were two ceremonial functions of great significance - a wreath-laying ceremony at the Samadhi of Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam at Pamplemousses, located within the precincts of the Botanical Garden; and the visit to Apravasi Ghat, which was the landing place for much of the indentured labour 200 years ago.

Thereafter, there was a call by Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius, at Clarisse House; calls, discussions followed by delegation-level talks between the two sides; and the signing of three Memoranda of Understanding on tourism, on the health and medicine, and on senior citizens and disabilities. This in fact indicates also the broad canvas, the scope of the kind of interaction that we had. This afternoon, there were calls on the President by the Chief Justice of the Republic of Mauritius, Hon. Yeung Kam John Yeung Sik Yuen, followed by the Speaker of the National Assembly of Mauritius, His Excellency Mr. Abdool Razack Peeroo, and a call by the Leader of Opposition in the Mauritius Parliament, His Excellency Mr. Alan Ganu. Celebrations followed thereafter.

Hon. President starts off his tomorrow's programme with the conferment of the degree of the Doctor of Civil Law honoris causa on the President at the University of Mauritius. The President will be making an address following the conferment of the degree. That would be followed by a visit to the Mahatma Gandhi Institute, floral offerings at the statue of Mahatma Gandhi, and presentation of books.

Then he is briefly at Ganga Talao, a highly sacred spot in the southwestern islands of Mauritius, which assumes particular significance since Shivaratri was celebrated just two days ago; followed by a civic reception which will be held at Grand Boa, which lies between this particular location and the airport. He would be received there by the Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam and Mrs. Ramgoolam. He will be speaking and addressing the gathering at the civic reception. Perhaps about 2500 people or so are expected to be present at that event.

As you of course know, the President is accompanied by the Minister of State for Home Affairs Shri R.P.N. Singh, and three Members of Parliament – Shri Satyavrata Chaturvedi of the Congress, Shrimati Kusum Rai of the BJP, and Shri Raghuvansh Prasad Singh of the RJD.

Hon. President had the opportunity during his visit to meet practically every member of the Mauritius Cabinet of some capacity or the other. This is in addition to the calls that I have mentioned. The meetings with the President of the Mauritius and the Prime Minister of Mauritius were marked by a complete understanding of views. The warmth, the understanding was evident to any participant in the talks. They were also very very noticeable, came through very brilliantly during the speeches by both leaders at the event at Vivekananda Hall yesterday evening. If you have heard them, you would have really seen the depth, the richness and the understanding that characterizes this particular relationship.

The talks of course covered the entire gamut of issues, broad terms between India and Mauritius which are of course marked by political understanding on many multilateral issues, on support for each others' positions, candidatures, Mauritius at the highest levels has reiterated its strong support for India's candidature for a permanent seat on an expanded UN Security Council. President also reiterated India's support for Mauritius' position on the Chagos Islands and so on and so forth. They also touched on economic issues, economic cooperation. As you know, during the Prime Minister's visit to New Delhi in February 2012, our Prime Minister made an offer of an economic package comprising US$ 250 million line of credit and a US$ 20 million grant. Possibilities of utilizing this line of credit for the development and welfare of the Mauritius people were discussed. In general, if I were to put it very briefly, there was complete understanding on both sides on each of the two countries' aspirations and positions.

Of course I have mentioned that the chemistry between the leaders was excellent. President has assured Mauritius of whatever support it requires in taking its plans forward for the development and welfare and wellbeing of its people. Both the President and the Prime Minister of Mauritius have thanked President for all the assistance that India has offered. The assistance and support also in capacity building, also in education, which forms a particularly large component of our cooperation. The President has extended an invitation to Prime Minister Mr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam to visit India which has been kindly accepted.

Is there anything which you would you like to add?

High Commissioner to Mauritius (Shri T.P. Seetharam): I would just point out a few things so that you appreciate this very special relationship. At the airport yesterday when the President arrived, the entire Cabinet of Mauritius was present. The Cabinet has 25 members including the Prime Minister; every one of them was present along with of course the Speaker, the Chief Justice, and the who's who of Mauritius. I doubt if this happens in many countries where our dignitaries visit.

They also have this arrangement of Minister-in-Waiting - which normally happens everywhere, a Minister is attached to the VVIP - where for each segment of the travel of the President you have a different Minister traveling with him in the car. So, every time he travels, he has a different Minister from Mauritius sitting with him providing an opportunity to interact. In addition, at each venue he reached there were several Ministers connected with that venue in some way or the other being present. For instance, at the Botanical Garden you had the Minister for Agriculture who is in charge of the Botanical Garden, in addition to several other Ministers who were probably in Constituencies, the Garden is located in his Constituency or some other manner. The same way when he went to Apravasi Ghat, the Minister for Arts and Culture was there who looks after Apravasi Ghat. So this is the way they provided opportunities for the entire Cabinet to interact with the President in a meaningful manner. The reason is that our relationship covers almost all political, economic, social aspects of the two countries, which is reflected also to an extent in the programme that we have.

For instance, the Mahatma Gandhi Institute, where we will go tomorrow, started in 1970s at the time of Indira Gandhi and Seewoosagar Ramgoolam. It is now a university like institution that teaches various Indian languages, Indian performing arts. We have an ICCR Professor for Sanskrit there at the MGI. In the education field that was a beginning, but today there is an Indian engineering college here - the JSS Academy; there are three medical institutions - the SSR Medical College, the D.Y. Patil Post Graduate Medical College, Anna medical college; there is a dental college. There are MBA courses. Amity has a presence here, a small campus.

In the field of health, you have Apollo Hospital here, you have the Fortis Hospital here, you have Agarwal Eye Hospital here. This will give you an idea that in every sphere of activity we have an engagement here.

They do not have an army or air force or navy, but they have a police force with a coast guard element. There again we are actively present. Indian naval officers are here assisting them in training their police, running the coast guard. And we offer scholarships, a hundred scholarships under ICCR for graduation and postgraduate studies; nearly three hundred scholarships under the ITEC scheme for short-term attachment, about two hundred of them in civil side and a hundred of them for their police force. That is just to give you an idea of the complexity of the relationship, the intimate nature of the relationship, and as you have noticed in your interactions here the genuine warmth that there is for India.

Mauritians would have already told you that they are Little India, that you are Mother India. They talk about umbilical cord that links them to India. And all this is very genuinely felt, seen and expressed in our interactions. And all that warmth I think is reflected on this occasion of the visit of the President of India on their 45th Anniversary.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): I think the Secretary and the High Commissioner have virtually covered all the ground that needed to be covered. I will just summarise it in a few points which occurred to me.

First, the President was received with the highest degree of respect. Almost all the interlocutors, all the people who met him had interacted with him in the past in various capacities. They were aware of his experience in handling different portfolios as Cabinet Minister, his public life of over five decades in the Parliament. All of this knowledge resulted in him being received with the highest degree of respect. The Prime Minister himself described him as a heavy weight who knows virtually every subject which concerns India-Mauritius relations, and that was the attitude with which the Mauritian leadership received him.

The President in turn to the Mauritian leadership repeatedly expressed the view that he was overwhelmed by the hospitality he has received, by the warmth he has received, by the friendship he has received. So, what the High Commissioner just now mentioned is a strong message that our President is going to take back to India with him, and that will help invigorate the relationship even further.

The third point is that in all the interactions what came out is, while we have a truly unique relationship, there is great potential still to be discovered; and both sides need to work together to take this relationship to even greater heights.

The fourth point is that the acting Leader of Opposition called on the President and he emphasized the fact that the Opposition fully stands by India-Mauritius relations; they would like to see a strong relationship. He described India as Mother India and he said, "On behalf of my party I salute India and you have done a great honour by coming here." The President in turn also pointed out that as far as India-Mauritius relations is concerned there is no difference between any political party in India, and he has come with a Parliamentary Delegation which comprises a representative from the BJP, a representative from the Rashtriya Janata Dal, and a representative from the Congress, not to mention the Minister who was accompanying him. Lastly, I will just reiterate a point which the High Commissioner had made yesterday in an informal interaction with some of you, which is that this is the second visit of the President abroad. This is his first visit to Africa and it comes close on the heels of Bangladesh. When we talk about neighbourhood we tend to think only in terms of it being a geographical expression, but it is not a geographical expression it is an intellectual construct, it is an emotional construct, it is a cultural construct. And there would probably be no nation closer to us than Mauritius irrespective of the fact that it takes us seven hours to fly and come here. The distance really disappears in the front of the emotional, cultural and people-to-people ties that bind our nations together, not to mention the economic relations, the political relations and the security of nations.

Q: Do the MoUs signed in the morning really reflect the relationship that we foresee in the coming years? They are mostly on the social sector, like handicapped persons' rights and stuff like that. The issues which we talked about, even the Prime Minister talked about, like the scientific, naval, and hydrographic things, when will we work on them?

Secretary (West): This is a very small segment of the very very diverse area of cooperation between India and Mauritius. You mentioned for example the hydrographic surveys. Indian experts have just completed a hydrographic survey of the larger Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) around Mauritius and the Seychelles. The High Commissioner referred to the training programmes for the coastguards. So, these three MoUs represent only a very very small segment. Something that was ready has been signed in the presence of the President and His Excellency the Prime Minister of Mauritius. They certainly do not represent the totality of the relationship which goes far far beyond. There are many other understandings also now under discussion. High Commissioner to Mauritius: We already have about 58 agreements with Mauritius. When the Prime Minister of Mauritius was in India last year, we signed five. The problem is to find new areas for signing agreements. We have so many. In fact we will be very happy to give you a whole list of agreements that we already have. For instance, the hydrographic agreement is working wonderfully and they are very happy with the kind of work being done. So that is the point. We already have so many agreements and we will be having some more. The relationship really covers almost every sector.

Secretary (West): In fact almost any area of interaction that you can think of, you will find something that is going on. An MoU on law and justice issues is under consideration. And you have a Law Institute here, for which they have hired an Indian to set it up, to put it in place, develop its structure and take it forward. So you will find in almost any area that you can put your finger on, some activity or the other would be in progress.

Press Secretary to President: I was just trying to repeat what Secretary said in Delhi that a comprehensive architecture already exists and these are just a few new elements which are being added to that architecture.

Q: After the morning talks, one-to-one meeting and the delegation, the Prime Minister of Mauritius said that on the Double Taxation Avoidance Convention we have already found common ground and it will be soon behind us. That is what he said. Has there been a detailed discussion on this convention at this meeting?

Secretary (West): If you are talking about a detailed discussion, this is not a subject on which the President would be speaking with the Mauritius leadership. They reviewed what has been done. There have been two meetings of the JWG that have taken place in December 2011 and August 2012. There has been progress in certain areas. There are issues pertaining essentially, as we all know, to the misuse of the treaty by certain elements; and both sides have clearly expressed their commitment to put an end to such misuse, and in a manner that is mutually beneficial to both sides, that is a win-win situation for both sides. These discussions are continuing. The next meeting of the JWG is going to be held shortly in the first week of April.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I think let us not try to look at the stars and foretell what will happen. But the intent is clearly in that direction, to try and resolve as much as possible. Sometimes it will have to be a step-by-step procedure. Everything cannot be achieved at one time as you very well know.

Q: You mentioned about tourism. MoUs have been signed today. Last time in the informal conversations, you said we have air charter agreements. But we do not seem to be getting ...(Inaudible)... of all. Considering that China has activated its ...(Inaudible)... How do you see that on the one hand we are talking of promotion of tourism but the implementation in ...(Inaudible)...

High Commissioner to Mauritius: About fifty thousand tourists come to Mauritius from India - mostly honeymoon couples, this is one of the favourite hotels for honeymoon couples from India - and this is growing. This is also a venue for destination weddings. The hall that you are sitting in has witnessed numerous Bollywood style Indian weddings with people coming in chartered aircraft, guests being brought from India in several aircraft. So these are two segments which are growing, bringing in more and more people from India. Right now there is only Air Mauritius flying to India. They have the right to fly 16 flights a week to India. Right now they are operating only six; they are expanding it to seven. They fly to Delhi, Mumbai and Bangalore. Chennai is a hopping flight. But they can increase the number of flights. Of course Air India or any other airline from India can fly here. They have rights. They have not exercised their ...(Inaudible)... you know the reasons, you know their situation now. But they will be very happy to have more flights and connections. They wish to become a hub which is very well connected to Asia, Africa and Europe. The connectivity is very important and if our airlines can start trying, I am sure there would be sufficient business and more happening. In terms of travel to India, it is about twenty thousand odd people going from Mauritius. But I think this number can dramatically increase, not only with business travelers or just tourism, but also people wish to explore their roots in India. And if we provide a little support and some facilities at the other end, this business of diaspora going back to visit places where their ancestors come from can be a great business opportunity for the travel and tourism. Similarly pilgrimage tourism, a lot of people travel to different parts of India for pilgrimage purposes. They go to Haridwar, Rishikesh and South Indian temples and so on. These are things which we have not really developed at the other end and provide facilities. If our State Governments could also get into the act - most of these people of Indian origin in Mauritius come from Bihar, UP, Andhra Pradesh, Tamil Nadu and Maharashtra - if the Tourism Departments of those States could be a little more proactive, they could attract a large number of people.

Mauritians are doing very well. Their per capita income is about four to five times that of Indians. They are traveling a lot. They would love to go to India. We need to reassure them that it is a safe place to go to and you do not fall sick by drinking water and so on. This is also a usual concern. Do not take Mauritius as an under-developed African country whose people can stay anywhere. There is a perception problem which we have to resolve also in terms of being a safe and comfortable destination for them to travel. So we need to do much more.

I have been trying to encourage our Tourism people to come and do road shows and so on. The problem with many of the things that we try to do with Mauritius is people of India look at the size of the population and hold themselves back, thinking is it worth our time and effort to woo this place which has only a population of 1.2 million, which is smaller than some housing colonies in Gurgaon. So this is a mental block that we have to get our tourism people and others to overcome. I think a lot can be done in the tourism sector.

Secretary (West): To that I would just add that the tourism MoU that has been signed also provides for cooperation in bringing tour operators together in regional tourism, in the hospitality industry, capacity building in the hospitality industry, and so on. But I am tempted to taking the floor to comment on one additional point that you made when you mentioned 'an African country'. Mauritius is very much part of the African Union. As you know, India has an extensive, and that is the only word that one can use, and diversified programme of cooperation with Africa under the India-Africa Forum Summit process. Two Summits have been held, last in 2011 in Addis Ababa and the next one will be due next year in India. Mauritius is very much part of this. If you want examples of the manner in which it is part of this, you do not have to look very far. I do not know whether you accompanied the Presidential carcade to the Pamplemousses where the Samadhi of Seewoosagur Ramgoolam. On the way you would have passed the Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam National Hospital. This hospital has been linked with several top Indian specialty hospitals for consultation, for tele-medicine under the India-Africa E-Network programme which goes across the African continent. It is just one example of the kind of engagement that we have.

The other aspect which was also repeatedly highlighted during the discussions by the President's Mauritius interlocutors was that Mauritius has a network of agreements, free trade agreements, with African countries, African Regional Economic Communities - it is a member of OMESA, it is a member of SADC, a member of the Indian Ocean Commission - and that the India's interaction with Africa can take advantage of this web of relationships that exists. So, in creative ways to use Mauritius as a bridge between South Asia and Africa, it is perfectly ready and willing to try and develop a paradigm and position itself to this objective. As you know, we have got enormous programmes and interests in Africa, in capacity building and almost in areas I do not think I need to get into that. I will leave it at that.

Secretary (West): Both India and Mauritius are also cooperating very closely under the auspices of the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation. The present Secretary General of IOR-ARC is an Indian. It has been our attempt during our Chairmanship - we owned the chairmanship since the last year, November Bengaluru summit and November 2011 we would be handing over to Australia. - we have put in our best efforts to try and take this Association forward as an apex body for the Indian Ocean, and we are moving that direction. I think in the month of July, a major business meet of the Indian Ocean Rim countries will be hosted in Mauritius which promises to be this expanding network that I talked about across the Indian Ocean. It is the future and this is a step in that direction.

Press Secretary to President: At this late stage of the evening, we will not tax our media friends too much and I think there is a party waiting to be held.

Thank you very much.

424. Press Statement by President Pranab Mukherjee after the meeting with the Prime Minister of Mauritius.

Port Louis, March 12, 2013.

Excellency Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, the Prime Minister of Mauritius

Friends from the Indian and Mauritian media

Ladies and Gentlemen

It is a unique honour and privilege for me to pay a State Visit to Mauritius and be the Chief Guest at the 45th anniversary of the Independence of Mauritius.

On this momentous and happy occasion, I bring with me the warmest wishes and greetings from the Government and the people of India, to the Government and the people of Mauritius.

I thank Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam and the Government and the people of Mauritius for the exceptionally warm and gracious welcome accorded to me and my delegation.

India and Mauritius share deep-rooted ties of history, culture, kinship, traditions and common values. We are united by the democratic foundations and the secular traditions of our societies. There is also a wide convergence of interests on many regional and global issues of mutual interest. These aspects lend our bilateral relations a special and extraordinary character.

We have, in recent years, forged a dynamic, modern and mutually beneficial partnership. Mauritius is the second country I am visiting after assuming the post of President of India. This reflects the importance that India attaches to its relationship with Mauritius.

Close, high-level and regular political interaction has been a hallmark of our bilateral relations. Our present-day partnership has also benefitted from growing framework of more than 30 inter-governmental agreements in wide-ranging areas of mutual benefit, as well as from the vitality of our people-to-people contacts.

My visit to Mauritius reaffirms our shared commitment to take our relations to even greater heights.

I met President Rajkeswur Purryag yesterday. My discussions with His Excellency Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam were cordial and covered the entire length and breadth of our multi-dimensional engagement. We discussed bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest. I am confident that the meetings and discussions during my visit here will further strengthen our partnership.

While expressing satisfaction over the current state of our relations, Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam and I agreed that there was untapped potential, particularly in the areas of trade and economic cooperation. The bilateral Line of Credit between the two sides must be used as a vehicle to upgrade our economic and commercial exchanges, including the possible financing of projects that will improve the quality of life of Mauritian citizens. We also discussed potential areas for cooperation such as exploration of marine resources, renewable energy and environment friendly technologies.

The Prime Minister and I have agreed to further enhance exchanges in the fields of Health, Higher Education, Information Technology, Science & Technology, Tourism, Textiles, Agro-Processing, Culture and Legal Cooperation. I am very happy to note that MoUs in Health and Medicine, Tourism and Cooperation as well as in the field of Senior Citizens and Persons with Disabilities have been signed today. I am positive that these agreements will further enhance the quality of our partnership and be of benefit to the people of India and Mauritius.

I am pleased to note that the Joint Working Group (JWG) on the Double Taxation Avoidance Convention (DTAC) has met twice in the last one year. They have provided an opportunity for both sides to discuss all issues with the aim of finding a mutually acceptable and beneficial outcome. India looks forward to holding the next meeting of the JWG soon in New Delhi. We also look forward to the holding of the 11th India-Mauritius Joint Commission Meeting.

India will continue to extend assistance to Mauritius in the field of human resource development and capacity building. We have already increased the training slots for Mauritius under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation programme to 170 for civilian programmes and 100 for defence-related programmes. These slots can be increased to meet further demands. It is heartening to note the rise in the number of Mauritian students availing of the 100 educational scholarships offered by the Government of India annually.

I thank the Government of the Republic of Mauritius for its valuable support on global issues of vital importance to India. Mauritius has been steadfast in its condemnation of international terrorism. India is also grateful to Mauritius for consistently supporting our rightful claim for permanent membership in an expanded United Nations Security Council. I am also grateful to Mauritius for extending whole-hearted support to the process of revitalising the Indian Ocean Rim-Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC).

Piracy in the Indian Ocean region adversely impacts us all. We are committed to the safety and security of Mauritius and will continue to work towards enhancing our cooperation in the security arena. Indian Naval ships will continue to undertake joint anti-piracy and EEZ surveillance exercises with their Mauritian counterparts to ensure maritime security in these waters. We are ready to assist the Government and the people of Mauritius, on security-related issues, in accordance with the requirements and priorities of the Government of Mauritius.

My discussions today with Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, have established a firm roadmap for the consolidation and enhancement of our mutually beneficial bilateral relations. Ours is a strategic partnership which has the well-being of our peoples at its core. I have invited Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam to visit India on mutually convenient dates, which could be decided through diplomatic channels.

Thank You

425. President's interview to Le Matinal.

March 12, 2013.

(English translation of Hon'ble President's interview to Le Matinal on India-Mauritius Relations published on March 11, 2013)

1. Excellency, how would you assess Indo-Mauritian relations as they stand today?

At the outset, let me convey my warmest greetings and good wishes to the Government and the people of Mauritius on the historic occasion of the 45th Anniversary of Independence. I consider it a great honour and privilege to be invited as the Chief Guest for the celebrations. This gesture of the Government of Mauritius reflects the depth of our partnership. This is my second overseas visit since assuming the post of President in July 2012 and first to an African country.

India and Mauritius share deep-rooted bonds of friendship, culture and history. Both countries and people also cherish the ideals of democracy, social harmony and pluralism. In recent years, India and Mauritius have evolved a dynamic, mutually beneficial and multi-dimensional partnership building upon inherent strengths and commonalities in our bilateral relations.

This has been made possible through close, high-level political interaction including the State Visit of Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam in February 2012, the State Visit of President Rajkeswur Purryag in January 2013 and numerous Ministerial visits in both directions in recent years. I am confident that my State Visit will add further substance to this partnership and enrich the already existing rich architecture of our bilateral relations. I hope to engage in wide ranging interaction and exchange of views with your leadership. Bilateral MoUs in diverse areas including in Health and Medicine, Tourism and Cooperation as well as in the field of Senior Citizens and Persons with Disabilities are also proposed to be signed during the visit.

A wide array of inter-Governmental agreements in various sectors including trade, investment, education, culture, renewable energy, ICT, science and technology, technical cooperation, etc. have already been signed. This platform has enabled our relations to flower but it is now for us to take them to higher levels. Vibrant people-to-people contacts have also been influential in elevating our bilateral relations to the level of a modern and comprehensive partnership based on mutual respect and mutual trust.

Both our countries, Governments and people must continue to seek more and more avenues for active cooperation. I believe this bilateral partnership holds great promise for the future.

2. Do you think that the younger generation of Indian politicians share the same traditional ties with, and feelings for Mauritius as their predecessors did?

Close interaction at the political level has been a hallmark of India-Mauritius bilateral relations. Mutual understanding and mutual respect fostered at the highest level have guided our partnership. Ministerial visits from both sides, including young leaders from India and Mauritius, have already led to strengthening of cooperation in new and emerging sectors.

Youth are the future of both our countries. Their aspirations and ambitions will shape the destiny of our nations.

It is incumbent on us to inculcate the right values and guide the youth in building an even stronger India-Mauritius partnership for the 21st century and beyond.

We need to further encourage greater exchanges between young leaders at the Ministerial, Parliamentary, business, cultural, media, science and technology and people-to-people level to ensure that our bilateral relations scale greater heights.

3. What according to you can be done to further strengthen the economic relations between India and Mauritius?

Our bilateral cooperation in the economic and commercial areas has grown but needs to be further reinvigorated. India has been the largest exporter of goods and services to Mauritius since 2007. As far as FY 2011-2012 is concerned our official figures indicate that India exported goods worth US$ 1.4 billion to Mauritius and imported goods worth US$ 39.13 million from Mauritius. These figures mean that India has now become Mauritius' largest trading partner. Our trade figures also suggest the need for our two countries to expand and diversify our trade basket.

In our assessment there are vast opportunities and complementarities in sectors like agro-processing, manufacturing, infrastructure, drugs and pharmaceuticals, light engineering, textiles, medical equipment, renewable energy technologies, marine food, automobile parts, tourism and hospitality, IT and ITES, Indian traditional medicine etc. The bilateral economic package of USD 270 million (USD 250 million Line of Credit and USD 20 million grant), announced during the State Visit of Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam in February 2012 could serve as a platform to diversify and energise our trade and investment linkages.

India has participated in various developmental activities and projects in Mauritius in the past. These are visible all over the island be it the Cyber Tower in Ebene, the Swami Vivekananda International Convention

Centre, the Rajiv Gandhi Science Centre, the Jawaharlal Nehru Hospital or the Mahatma Gandhi Institute besides others. Both countries, at the same time, need to work together to create an environment conducive to the creation of more joint venture projects of developmental import. As in the past, India is keen to partner with Mauritius in the realisation of several large infrastructure and development projects which are on the anvil.

4. To what extent can Mauritius serve as a springboard into Africa for India?

Indian overseas investments to Africa are beginning to be channelled through Mauritius. Mauritius, with its preferential and trading arrangements as well as export zones could attract Indian SMEs engaged in the field of pharmaceuticals, light engineering, consumer goods, textiles, seafood processing, etc. The members of SADC and COMESA in mainland Africa could be the main target market. The Indian and Mauritian private sector should explore how the FTAs Mauritius has with the SADC and COMESA countries can be used to our mutual advantage. Opportunities and fiscal incentives offered by the export zones of Mauritius would also be helpful in this regard.

5. How favourable is the investment climate for the willing Mauritians in India? How does India perceive Mauritius as an investment destination?

Since the 1990s, India has been incrementally liberalising the investment climate. Recently, in September 2012, the Government of India ushered in a slew of reforms.

The Budget 2013-14, which has been tabled in Parliament, acknowledges that FDI is imperative for India. Over the last two decades, several measures to attract FDI from all over the world have been undertaken making India one of the most attractive destinations for FDI in the world.

6. The comprehensive Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) signed between India and Mauritius has been subject to severe criticism in recent years from members of the Lok Sabha and some Indian media. To what extent are these criticisms justified? Are there any changes that you think need to be brought to the DTAA?

The Joint Working Group (JWG) on the Double Taxation Avoidance Convention (DTAC) has met twice in the last one year which has provided an opportunity for both sides to discuss the means forward to a mutually acceptable and beneficial outcome - a win-win situation for both. India looks forward to holding the next meeting of the JWG in New Delhi. The DTAC cannot be seen in isolation, separate from the many strands that weave the tapestry of our relationship. Our continued efforts should remain focused on realisation of the full potential of our relationship.

7. What is the progress on the proposed Comprehensive Economic Cooperation and Partnership Agreement?

The two countries are engaged in negotiations for a successful Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Partnership Agreement (CECPA) to evolve ways and means to further stimulate trade and investment between the two countries.

426. Onboard Media Interaction of the President en route from Mauritius.

March 13, 2013.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): Friends, it is a privilege to have the Hon. President here for this interaction, along with the Minister of State for Home Affairs. As is normal practice, the President will read out a statement briefly first and then take your questions.

Hon. President of India (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): Friends; Mr. R.P.N. Singh, Minister of State for Home Affairs:

I have just concluded my three-day visit to Mauritius as Chief Guest at the 45th anniversary of Independence Day celebrations. This was my second overseas and the first visit to Africa since I assumed the office of the President of India.

I was deeply touched by the warm welcome and generous hospitality accorded to me and my delegation. Once again I wish to thank the Government and people of Mauritius for the excellent arrangements made for my visit.

As you are aware, relations between India and Mauritius are unique and special given the historical relationship based on close ancestral ties. I had a rich, wide-ranging and useful exchange of views with the leadership of Mauritius on issues of bilateral, regional and global interest, in a very friendly atmosphere.

Over the last two days I had the opportunity to meet all members of the Cabinet of Mauritius and also had useful exchanges with the Speaker of National Assembly, Leader of Opposition, Chief Justice of Supreme Court of Mauritius. It pleases me greatly to see first hand that the desire for expanding positive relationship with India is shared by all Mauritian stakeholders. India and Mauritius share values of democracy, rule of law and secularism. There is convergence of views between India and Mauritius on all major issues. The warm and good feelings towards India were evident in all matters.

During the visit, three Memorandums of Understanding were signed, which I believe will further expand our cooperation in new areas of tourism, health and medicine, senior citizens and persons with disability, to the mutual benefit of both our countries. On behalf of India, all the agreements were signed by Shri R.P.N. Singh, Minister of State for Home Affairs, and I think from their side it was their Foreign Minister. These represent a small vignette of the range of areas the two countries are working together.

My visit to 'Apravasi Ghat' was a moving experience as this place resonates with indomitable spirit of Indians who landed there, struggled against all odds and triumphed. Twenty-five years after Independence, Mauritius has made tremendous strides in socioeconomic development, and I wish them an even more prosperous future. I am honoured to receive Doctor of Civil Law honoris causa by the University of Mauritius.

I concluded my visit to Mauritius with a civic reception hosted by people of Grand Bois. It was an opportunity to meet with the rural people which Prime Minister Ramgoolam described as Soul of Mauritius. I was overwhelmed by the warmth and goodwill showed by the people of Mauritius and their respect for values and ideas that India represents.

I am happy that Shri R.P.N. Singh, Minister of State for Home Affairs, three hon'ble Members of Parliament – Shri Satyavrata Chaturvedi, Shri Raghuvansh Prasad Singh and Shrimati Kusum Rai – from leading political parties in India could accompany me to meetings with the leaders of Mauritius.

I return to India convinced that India and Mauritius can further build on the existing multifaceted, mutually beneficial relationship. I am convinced that India should do its utmost to support Mauritius in every way possible and that together we should strive to take this relationship to greater and greater heights.

Thank you.

Q: His Excellency, how would you react to such an unprecedented reception and response at Mauritius airport where the entire Cabinet had come to receive you for the first time? Secondly, would you like to take up the issue of poor air connectivity between India and Mauritius when you go back to Delhi?

Hon. President: Firstly, this is emotion. Of course, before me number of Presidents had visited Mauritius and so a Presidential visit as such is not new. But people of Mauritius have good feelings for India. And they have cultivated, which you have seen, their old connection in the new context, in the new environment. They have not forgotten them. That is the beauty of the people of Mauritius. I deeply appreciate the warm reception. As you have mentioned, the entire Cabinet was present. I have noticed a new method they have had that in my every journey one Cabinet Minister accompanied me. So, apart from meeting them ceremonially I had the opportunity of talking to almost all Cabinet Ministers for seven or eight minutes because the journey from the hotel to the place was a minimum of ten to twelve minutes. That time we could utilize for discussion with them. This is a new way of having interaction.

Q: Sir, we got a feeling that Mauritians were really upset about the Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) issue.

Hon. President: DTAA is an old issue. It is nothing new and the discussions are going on. As I mentioned in my discussion with the Mauritian leaders, two rounds of discussions have already taken place last year of the Joint Working Group. The mechanism which is dealing with this is a Joint Working Group. So, there have been two rounds of discussion in the Joint Working Group. We have narrowed the areas of divergence. Next meeting has been decided sometime in the first week of April. I do hope it would be possible to resolve the issue which will be beneficial and acceptable to both sides through dialogue.

Q: Sir, while looking at or listening to the speeches of the Mauritians here, it seems they think that they expect more ...(Inaudible)...initiatives from India and I think they are a bit ...(Inaudible)...

Hon. President: We have provided some lines of credit. Earlier we provided about US$ 100 million; that has been exhausted. Now we have provided US$ 250 million line of credit and US$ 20 million as grant. I have suggested that they utilize this grant; as and when the grants are utilized, fresh lines of credit are being given.

Q: Sir, after your visit is there any common ground or understanding that emerged on the DTAA?

Hon. President: Unless the issues are resolved, it will have to wait. What I feel is that there has been some progress in the first two rounds, and it may be possible to resolve the issues which will be mutually acceptable and beneficial to both sides, in the third round or the fourth round.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... As far as investment in Mauritius is concerned, I think China ...(Inaudible)... China seems to be investing heavily. So, what is your view on that?

Hon. President: I would not like to make any comment about the relations between two countries. Each country is sovereign; each country decides its relations with other country keeping its own national interest, geopolitical situation in view. China is showing lot of interest in Africa and they are providing assistance. Naturally they may show interest in Mauritius. But during my talk with leaders of Mauritius I have assured them that whatever possible, India will try to help them in areas of investment, expanding trade, and also especially in the areas of education, health, telecommunications - I have identified about nine subjects – where we can have good equation and good relations with Mauritius. In fact, a large number of Memorandums of Understanding and agreements have been signed which provide the institutional framework in which we can work in close cooperation with each other.

Q: Your Excellency, did China figure in the discussions between you and Mauritian leadership either tangentially or directly?

Hon. President: When we have a bilateral discussion, unless there is any urgent, relevant, contemporary issue, there is no question of discussing in relation with other countries.

Thank you

427. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce regarding exports to Mauritius.

New Delhi, July 5, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma met Mr. Sayyad Abd-Al-Cader Sayed Hossen, Minister of Industry, Commerce and Consumer Protection, Mauritius, in Port Louis last evening. During the meeting, the Mauritian minister conveyed that most of the issues regarding renewal of contract with Mangalore Refinery and Petrochemicals Limited (MRPL) have been sorted out and only the final touches are being put in place. Shri Sharma welcomed the development and said that “in such negotiations, issues are bound to arise but mature democracies sort them out through discussions and deliberations.” Shri Sharma reiterated India’s commitment to ensure uninterrupted supply to Mauritius. “We would like to continue this trusted partnership agreement with Mauritius”, said Shri Sharma. India’s exports to Mauritius comprises largely of petroleum products as a result of the three year Agreement signed between MRPL and the State Trading Corporation of Mauritius in July 2007 for the supply of all petroleum requirement of Mauritius. The Agreement is expected to be renewed later this month.

The Indian Minister raised the issue of export of basmati rice to Mauritius. In May 2013, a draft agreement for recognition of export inspection and certification system of Export Inspection Council of India for export of basmati rice to Mauritius was forwarded to the Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Consumer Protection of Mauritius. The Mauritian Minister assured that there is a broad agreement on the proposal and that they will soon revert on it. Shri Sharma said that India will be happy to extend any assistance with regard to the issue. Basmati rice is a unique Geographical Indication (GI) product under the World Trade Organization (WTO). Standards in India are dynamic in nature and are currently being harmonised amongst all relevant institutions for ensuring uniformity which will be notified when ready. India has already nominated the Export Inspection Council as the nodal agency which will issue a Certificate of Authenticity (COA) for all Basmati rice exports from India to Mauritius.

The Mauritian side expressed happiness on the advancements in the field of textiles and conveyed determination to take forward the intended outcomes of the Memorandum of Understandings (MoUs) signed recently. Five institutional level MoUs were signed to take the partnership forward. These are:

- i. MoU between Apparel Export Promotion Council (AEPC) and Enterprise Mauritius (EM)
- ii. MoU between Northern India Textile Research Association (NITRA) and Mauritius Standards Bureau
- iii. MoU between NITRA and National Productivity and Competitive Council (NPCC) of Mauritius
- iv. MoU between Clothing Manufacturers Association of India (CMAI) and Mauritius Export Association (MEXA); and
- v. MoU between Institute of Apparel Management (IAM) and Fashion and Design Institute of Mauritius (FDI)

Shri Sharma expressed "India's willingness to implement these MoUs and project proposals in a fruitful and time bound manner." The Mauritian side informed the Indian Minister that under DISHA Mauritius, a draft compliance code is under preparation.

Apart from these MoUs, a Letter of Intent outlining the implementation plan for training for 1000 textile factory workers, 35 scholarships in the textile sector as well as the development of a compliance code (on the lines of DISHA) for 10 Mauritian textile factories was also signed between the two governments.

On the issue of export of Indian mangoes to Mauritius, the Mauritian side informed Shri Sharma that they will cooperate with the Indian side with regard to harmonisation of standards.

Later in the evening, in his meeting with the Mauritian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration & International Trade, Dr. Arvin Boolell, Shri Sharma discussed the issue of liberalisation of visa and conveyed that including Mauritius in the list of the countries that get visa on arrival is under consideration. Both the leaders discussed the upcoming WTO Bali Ministerial. Shri Sharma conveyed that the development dimension of the round should not be lost sight of and Trade Facilitation cannot be the only outcome. "Trade Facilitation has to be balanced with internal balances. G-33 proposal on food security is also important expected outcome of the Ministerial", Shri Sharma added.

Mr. Richard Marles, Australian Trade Minister, in a meeting with Shri Sharma appreciated India's efforts in the area of fighting piracy in the Indian Ocean Rim region. Mr. Marles said that small countries of the region rely on countries like Australia and India for the scourge of piracy in the region and India is playing its part. He also informed Shri Sharma that Australia is working out an India Strategy Paper to deepen economic ties.

Mr. Taira Masaaki, Parliamentary Vice Minister for Economy, Trade & Industry, Japan, conveyed Shri Sharma that this meeting of Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) has sensitised Japan on the importance of IOR as opposed to their pre-occupation with the Pacific Region. Shri Sharma thanked Japan for their contribution in the development process of the emerging Indian Ocean Rim region.

MOROCCO

428. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Finance regarding signing of India-Morocco Double Taxation Avoidance Convention.

New Delhi, August 8, 2013.

India signed a Protocol amending the India - Morocco Double Taxation Avoidance Convention (DTAC) in New Delhi today. The Protocol was signed by Dr Sudha Sharma, Chairperson, Central Board of Direct Taxes on behalf of Government of India and H.E. Mr. Larbi Reffouh, Ambassador of the Kingdom of Morocco to India on behalf of Government of the Kingdom of Morocco.

The Protocol is based on international standards of transparency and exchange of information. It provides for effective exchange of information including banking information between tax authorities of the two countries. It also provides that each treaty partner shall use its information gathering measures to obtain the requested information even though it may not need such information for its own domestic tax purposes.

The Agreement will enhance mutual co-operation between the two countries by having effective exchange of information in tax matters.

MOZAMBIQUE

429. Opening Statement by Minister of State for External Affairs at the 3rd Session of India-Mozambique Joint Commission Meeting in Maputo.

Maputo, July 4, 2013.

Your Excellency, Mr Eduardo Koloma, Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs & Cooperation of Mozambique, ladies & gentlemen:

1. Excellency, I have great honour and pleasure to be co-chairing the Third Session of the Joint Commission Meeting (JCM) between India and Mozambique. On behalf of the Government and people of India, the members of my delegation and on my personal behalf, I would like to convey warm greetings to the Government and people of Mozambique.

MOS introduces the delegation

2. On this occasion, I wish to recall the historical, close and friendly relations between our two countries even prior to colonial times. Since liberation of Mozambique in 1975, our ties have been growing steadily and have been transformed into a multifaceted, strong and robust strategic partnership about which we are very proud today. At the same time, there is immense potential for further growth. We must tap this potential for the benefit of our two countries and our peoples.
3. Since the last JCM held in 2009 in New Delhi, there have been many important developments not only between our two countries, but also regionally and internationally. President Armando Geubuza paid a State Visit to India in 2010. This was a landmark visit. India feels proud that every Mozambican President has visited India. Indeed, the political exchanges between India and Mozambique have been taking place regularly. After President Guebuza's visit, there have been many high-level ministerial, official, business and other visits between our two friendly countries. We feel very satisfied about these political exchanges and we want that these exchanges and positive engagements must not only continue but intensify in the interest of both our countries.
4. I would like to felicitate Mozambique for assuming the chairmanship of important groupings of CPLP and SADC in 2012. At the same time, India also wishes to congratulate Mozambique for playing an important and active role in various regional and international fora, including as an active member of the African Union and SADC.
5. Excellency, during President Guebuza's visit to India in 2010, both the countries had set a target of achieving the bilateral trade of US$ one billion by 2013. I am happy to share the good news with you that this important bilateral milestone has already been achieved, but this should encourage both sides to further expand our trade and investment relations. I have brought an Indian business delegation so that our trade relations would further deepen and diversify.

6. As regards capacity building, India has been providing training slots and university scholarships every year to Mozambique. We hope that these offers by India are contributing towards strengthening of human resource development in Mozambique. I must underline that these initiatives are excellent examples of India's contribution towards South-South Cooperation and have been deeply appreciated by our partners. Apart from the training and university scholarships, the Indian companies in Mozambique e.g. Jindal Steel & Power and Coal India Limited have also been providing training to Mozambican nominees in important areas which Mozambique has identified such as mining and mineral resources. Excellency, we feel that all these efforts by India would contribute towards the development of friendly Mozambique. We feel happy that our bilateral cooperation is becoming more diverse and expanding into new areas.
7. Further, India remains committed to support Mozambique in various areas, particularly infrastructure development and capacity building. The Government of India had offered a Line of Credit of US$500 million to Mozambique during the state visit of President Guebuza to India in 2010. I am happy to say that all the project proposals submitted by Mozambique under this LOC have been approved by the Government of India. We will be signing 3 LOC agreements later this afternoon amounting to US $ 216.44 million in areas of drinking water supply, roads and housing.
8. In the field of defence, we had previously, at the request of the Government of Mozambique, sent our naval ships to provide coastal security on important events in Mozambique such as African Union Summit in 2003 and World Economic Forum's Africa Economic Summit and 4th EU-ACP Summit meetings in June 2004. I am also happy to note that Indian Naval Ships are regularly paying goodwill visits to Mozambique. At the request of Mozambique, an Indian Naval Ship 'Darshak' has carried out the hydrographic survey of Beira Port in March-April 2012. The signing of Security Cooperation Agreement by the two countries in July 2012 is an important development and adds another dimension to our expanding cooperation.

9. We are confident that this session of JCM will help further strengthen our bilateral relations in various fields.
10. Excellency, I am thankful for the warm welcome and kind hospitality extended to me and my delegation.

430. Remarks by Minister of State for External Affairs at the Interactive Business Session during the 3rd session of the India-Mozambique Joint Commission Meeting (JCM) in Maputo.

Maputo, July4, 2013.

Your Excellency, Mr. Abdul Razak Noormahomed,
Vice Minister of Mineral Resources

Mr. Rogério Manuel, President, Confederation of Business Associations of Mozambique

Ms. Belamina Capatine, Head of Business Development,
Investment Promotion Centre of Mozambique

Distinguished Guests, ladies & gentlemen:

I have great pleasure to address this interactive business session of Mozambican and Indian business personalities.

As you are aware, I am visiting Mozambique for the third session of India Mozambique Joint Commission which is currently underway.

India and Mozambique enjoy historical, close and friendly relations which have been steadily growing over the past several decades. Our close relations have transformed into a multifaceted, strong and robust partnership. At the same time, there is immense potential for further growth which must be tapped for the benefit of our two countries and ultimately for the benefit of our peoples.

After President Armando Guebuza's landmark State visit to India in 2010, relations between our two countries are growing on a fast-track. The trade between the two countries has doubled from US$631.76 million in 2011-12 to US$ 1.28 billion in 2012-13 and thus, have crossed US$ one billion target set by the two countries during President Guebuza's visit. I would also like to inform that the trade between India and Africa is likely to touch US$ 100 billion by 2015. Therefore, Mozambique also has an opportunity to increase exports to India, which has the potential to touch greater heights in the coming years.

India is the 8th largest foreign investor in Mozambique with an investment of US$104.75 million. However, this does not include investments in extractive mining industry and all these investments are included, the total Indian investments are estimated to be more than US$500 million while there are plans to make more investments by the Indian companies. The Indian investments in Africa have already touched US$33 billion and I want to assure that Mozambique is a priority country for us.

In recent years, there have been huge discoveries of coal and natural gas in Mozambique. It is estimated that there are 23 billion tons of coal reserves and 150 TCF of natural gas in Mozambique and to exploit these resources, big investments are required. This presents a great opportunity for the Indian companies to take part in the development of related infrastructure like railways, roads, ports, gas pipelines, fertiliser plant, power plants, etc. I would urge the Indian companies to consider investments in these areas which would be a win-win situation for both the countries.

I am happy to note that recently, Oil & Natural Gas Corporation of India and Oil India Limited have acquired 10% stake in the Rovuma Basin at a cost of approximately US$2.5 billion and Indian public sector oil companies now hold a 20% participating interest in the Anadarko-led consortium.

Some Indian companies are also interested and have submitted proposals for infrastructure development in Mozambique. Another important area which is growing fast in Mozambique is the agriculture sector and some Indian companies have already made or are considering investments in this field.

India is committed to Mozambique in its efforts towards capacity-building by providing training in various fields and university scholarships. India also is committed to continue to assist Mozambique in its socio-economic developmental efforts in various ways, including through Line of Credits (LOCs). India has so far extended Lines of Credit worth US$ 640 million to Mozambique for various projects identified by Mozambique as its priorities. Yesterday, we signed three LOC agreements worth US$ 216.4 million in areas such as drinking water supply, roads and housing development.

We have created an enabling environment by entering into several agreements for the benefit of the business communities of the two countries including Avoidance of Double Taxation, Promotion & Protection of Investments and Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for Least Development Countries. I am happy to share that the two countries are also considering a new Trade Agreement which would further enhance our cooperation.

I would encourage the business-persons from Mozambique and India to promote business activities for the benefit of the two countries. With these few words, I would like to conclude my remarks and would like to felicitate all of you for fruitful discussions. I would also be very happy to answer some to your questions.

Thank you

431. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs on the Bilateral Security Review between India and Mozambique.

New Delhi, September 12, 2013.

Bilateral security matters between India and Mozambique were reviewed at the Minister's level meeting held here today. The Indian side was led by Shri Mullappally Ramachandran, Union Minister of State for Home Affairs and the Mozambique side by Mr. Jose Mandra, Deputy Minister of Interior.

Both the Ministers reviewed matters related to training of police personnel, supply of security related equipment, visa for their citizens, immigration issues and disaster management. The meeting was held in a warm and cordial atmosphere. Both the countries resolved to strengthen their bilateral security cooperation.

432. Meeting of Minister of Commerce & Industry Anand Sharma with the Prime Minister of Mozambique.

Maputo, September 27, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma will meet Prime Minister of Mozambique Mr. Alberto Clementino Vaquina, and the country's Trade Minister Mr. Armando Inroga during his two-day visit to Mozambique from today. In his meeting with Prime Minister Mr. Vaquina, Shri Sharma is likely to discuss the positive developments in the bilateral relations between the two countries in recent years. Shri Sharma is likely to convey Mr. Vaquina that the two sides must exert all efforts to further strengthen political and economic engagement between the two countries as there is huge potential to further increase in cooperation. Issues related to export of coal and commencement of mining are also likely to come up for discussion between the two Ministers.

Later, Shri Sharma will meet Mr. Armando Inroga, Minister of Industry and Trade, Mozambique, where the two Ministers will discuss trade and investment related issues. The two Ministers are likely to take up the issue related to the Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for Least Developed Countries, which was announced by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during India Africa Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008. The Scheme envisages enhanced market access for Mozambican exports to India. Shri Sharma may also mention to Mr. Inroga that the two governments must encourage trade promotion activities by economic operators on both sides including visits of businessmen and holding of fairs and exhibitions. Issues pertaining to coal mining and exploration of huge reserves of natural gas are also likely to be discussed by the two Ministers. Later, Shri Sharma will deliver a keynote address at a Session on 'Enhancing Economic Partnership between India and Mozambique', where members from Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) and Mozambique's Confederação das Associações Económicas de Moçambique (CTA) will participate.

Mozambique's exports to India during 2012-13 had an increase of 184.94% amounting to USD 291 million compared to USD 101 million of 2011-12. Of this, export of coal constituted USD 179.63 million during 2012-13 and is the top export item to India. The main items of Indian exports to Mozambique are – petroleum products, drugs/ pharmaceuticals, transport equipments, bicycles, metals, cotton yarn/ fabrics, machinery and instruments, iron and steel, paper/wood products, rubber made products, chemicals/fertilizers, glassware, electronic goods, paints/enamels, cosmetics and machine tools. The main exports from Mozambique include coal, pulses, raw cashew, coconut, metal ores and scrap metal etc.

India's investments in Mozambique are estimated around USD 600 million making India the eight largest investor in Mozambique, with Brazil, Portugal and South Africa occupying the first three places.

433. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce & Industry regarding trade with Mozambique.

New Delhi, September 30, 2013.

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma visited Mozambique on a two-day visit from September 27-28, 2013. On September 27, Shri Sharma met the Prime Minister of Mozambique, Mr. Alberto Vaquina and discussed the bilateral historical relations between the two countries.

Later, Shri Sharma met Mr. Armando Inroga, Minister of Industry and Trade of Mozambique, where they discussed bilateral cooperation and agreed on the need for further diversifying trade and investments. Shri Sharma said that owing to the the impressive growth in trade between the two countries, the bilateral trade could reach USD 3 billion by 2016 from the current level of USD 1.28 billion.

India has been assisting Mozambique in its developmental efforts and has provided Lines of Credit of USD640 million for various projects, apart from providing other assistance, grants and technical training, university scholarships, etc. Large quantities of coal and natural gas have recently been discovered in Mozambique. There are various Indian companies which have acquired stakes in these coal and gas fields, particularly the recent acquisition by ONGC Videsh and Oil India Limited in the Rovuma Basin in the North of Mozambique at cost of approximately USD5 billion for the natural gas consortium led by Anadarko of the United States and planned investment of USD4 billion for setting up of integrated fertiliser plans in Mozambique.

Shri Sharma also invited Mr. Inroga to visit India for participating in the Partnership Summit scheduled to be held in Bengaluru in January, 2014. Shri Sharma also addressed a “Session on Enhancing Economic Partnership between India and Mozambique” along with Mr. Inroga which was attended by industry leaders from India and Mozambique.

SEYCHELLES

The Indian delegation was led by Shri Sudhir Vyas, Secretary (West), Ministry of External Affairs and the Seychelles delegation by H.E. Ambassador Maurice Jean Leonard Loustau-Lalane, Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Seychelles.
2. The Joint Commission Meeting exchanged views on bilateral, regional and international matters of mutual interest. The Meeting also reviewed ongoing cooperation between India and Seychelles in diverse fields and exchanged views on further expanding and strengthening it.
3. Ambassador Loustau-Lalane called on Shri Salman Khurshid, External Affairs Minister, Shri AK Antony, Defence Minister and Smt. Preneet Kaur, MOS, External Affairs.
4. The next meeting of the Joint Commission will be held in Seychelles at mutually convenient date.

SUDAN/SOUTH SUDAN

435. Visit of Minister of Finance and National Economy, Government of Sudan, Mr. Ali Mahmoud Mohamed to New Delhi (July 24-26, 2013).

New Delhi, July 25, 2013.

1. Honourable Minister of Finance and National Economy, Government of Sudan, H.E. Ali Mahmoud Mohamed is on a visit to New Delhi during July 24-26, 2013 regarding rescheduling of the existing Government of India Lines of Credit to Sudan.

Honourable Minister of State for External Affairs, Smt. Preeti Kaur met the Minister on the 24th of July, 2013 and hosted a dinner in his honour. The Honourable Minister of Finance and National Economy of Sudan is expected to call on the Honourable Minister of Finance, Shri P. Chidambaram during his visit.

2. Technical discussions between India and Sudan were held regarding rescheduling of the existing Lines of Credit to Sudan in New Delhi on the 22nd and 23rd of July, 2013. Delegation level talks were held between Indian delegation led by Additional Secretary, Development Partnership Administration in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, Smt. Radhika Lokesh and Sudanese delegation led by the Director General, International Cooperation, Ministry of Finance and National Economy, Government of Sudan, Mr. Omer Mohamed Ahmed Alhaj. There are six existing Government of India Lines of Credit totaling US$ 566.9 million to Sudan and the EXIM Bank is the implementation arm for the Line of Credit.
3. The mutually agreed terms for the Lines of Credit were arrived at by taking into account the sensitivities of both the countries. The rescheduling has been made by way of relaxation of the interest rate, repayment period and moratorium of the Lines of Credit. The agreed minutes and the rescheduling agreement were signed in the presence of the Honourable Minister of State for External Affairs and Honourable Minister of Finance and National Economy of Sudan. This is a first request for re-scheduling the Lines of Credit of such magnitude being considered by Government of India and it was favourably considered given the difficult economic situation of Sudan post the secession of South Sudan.
4. The issue of payment dues by Government of Sudan to ONGC Videsh Limited and other commercial interests was raised by the Indian side and Sudanese delegation assured that this issue will be resolved at the earliest. Sudanese side agreed to make every effort to ensure that Indian commercial interests are not adversely affected.

5. India and Sudan share robust and historic ties and the two countries have enjoyed strong and friendly political relations since the latter gained independence in 1956. India remains committed to further strengthen the cordial, diverse and mutually beneficial relations that exist between the two countries and people.

436. Announcement by the Official Spokesperson on the visit of Special Envoy of the President of South Sudan.

New Delhi, August 13, 2013.

I have another announcement from the African continent and that is about the visit of the Special Envoy to South Sudan. As you perhaps are aware, Mr. P.S. Raghavan, the Special Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs is also the Special Envoy to Sudan and South Sudan. In this capacity he visited Juba recently and was among the first to call on the President Mr. Salva Kiir subsequent to his swearing in the new 18-member Cabinet in South Sudan. This is reflective of our commitment in partnering South Sudan which gained independence in 2011.

As you are also perhaps aware, we are working towards the visit of the President of South Sudan to New Delhi later during the month, and the visit of the Special Envoy was preparatory to that visit.

For your information, India has also two battalions of 2,200 personnel in UNMISS which is deployed in two of the largest States of South Sudan currently. The visit was also helpful in identifying various development projects for South Sudan. Mr. Raghavan, incidentally, is also the Head of our Development Partnership Administration.

The areas that we are trying to focus have two main components, that is, capacity building and infrastructure development in key areas of health, education, solar electrification, mining, agriculture, electoral management, and of course hydrocarbons.

We look forward to the early visit of the President of South Sudan. The visit of Mr. Raghavan was successful in laying the path to that.

437. Visit of Special Envoy of India for Sudan and South Sudan, P.S. Raghavan to South Sudan (8-9 August, 2013).

New Delhi, August 14, 2013.

Special Envoy of India for Sudan and South Sudan and Special Secretary (Development Partnership Administration), Ministry of External Affairs, Shri P.S. Raghavan, paid an official visit to Juba, South Sudan from 08-09 August 2013. The visit came only a day after the swearing in of the new 18-member South Sudanese Cabinet, reflective of India's strong commitment in partnering South Sudan, which gained independence only in July 2011, in its political transition process. The fact that Shri Raghavan was the first foreign dignitary to interact with the new South Sudanese leadership across the board was sincerely appreciated by the South Sudanese side.

Shri Raghavan had detailed discussions with the President of South Sudan H.E. Gen Salva Kiir, as well as with the key Ministers of Foreign Affairs; Electricity; Health; Agriculture and Rural Development; Petroleum, Mining and Industry as well as high level officials of the Ministry of Finance. He also interacted with key members of the Indian community based in Juba as well as representatives of the Indian contingent of the peacekeepers attached to the United Nations Mission for South Sudan (UNMISS). India has two battalions of 2,200 personnel in UNMISS, deployed in two of the largest states in South Sudan, Jonglei and Upper Nile, since 2011.

The visit was useful for identifying India's development projects for South Sudan. The programme has two main components of capacity building and infrastructure development in key areas of health, education, solar electrification, mining, agriculture, fisheries, food processing, electoral management and hydrocarbons. Additionally, an offer was made to the South Sudanese side for granting concessional lines of credit (LOC) for undertaking other sustainable development projects, in alignment with its socio-economic priorities.

Shri Raghavan stressed the importance of India's energy security in bilateral cooperation. ONGC Videsh Ltd. (OVL) has made substantial investments in the hydrocarbon sector in South Sudan over the last ten years, and has expressed interest in further expanding its operations, when conditions permit.

The visit was also undertaken in preparation for the forthcoming visit of the South Sudanese President to India, scheduled from 26-28 August, 2013. President Kiir will be accompanied by a high level delegation of Ministers, senior officials and business leaders.

438. Official Spokesperson's response to a question on the evolving security situation in South Sudan.

NEW Delhi, December 24, 2013

In response to a question on the evolving security situation in South Sudan, the Official Spokesperson said:

“We are closely monitoring the political developments and the evolving security situation in South Sudan. The Indian Embassy in Juba is in close contact with the Indian community members in South Sudan for ensuring their safety and security. In view of the deteriorating security situation, the Mission has also issued an Advisory to the Indian nationals to leave South Sudan at the earliest. A significant number of Indian nationals have left South Sudan by availing the facility of commercial flights which are operating from Juba and also through the road links, including the link to the Ugandan border, which are open for public transport. Our Mission in Juba is providing all assistance in facilitating relocation of Indian nationals.

The Mission is closely liaising with the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS), particularly the Indian Battalion of UNMISS, in monitoring the evolving security situation and has availed their assistance in evacuating Indian nationals stranded in remote areas such as Bor (Jonglei State). It may be noted that two members of the Indian contingent in UNMISS tragically lost their lives and one member injured during an attack on UNMISS compound at Akobo in Jonglei State of South Sudan on 19 December, 2013. The role played by the Indian Battalion of UNMISS under difficult circumstances in South Sudan has been widely appreciated.

Ministry of External Affairs is also in touch with the South Sudan Embassy in New Delhi which has assured all assistance of its government in ensuring safety and security of Indian nationals and Indian Embassy in South Sudan.

* Media reports said on December 26:

The fate of Indians employed in various establishments in strife-torn South Sudan, continues to remain uncertain even as the Union government has issued an advisory to Indian nationals to leave the troubled African nation. With the struggle between two leading ethnic groups that erupted few days ago threatening to turn into a civil war, a few hundred Indians employed there are facing a risk to their lives. A good chunk of them hail from Andhra Pradesh.

On January 2, 2014, another report said:

India will conduct an on-ground assessment of its interests in South Sudan, especially the wellbeing of its 2,000 soldiers who are part of a United Nations stabilisation team. The Indian Army contingent had lost three men after its camp was overrun in the ongoing ethnic strife. In an earlier ambush in April 2013, four Indian soldiers and an officer were shot dead in an ambush.

The Indian Army contingent had to be evacuated by air and the situation is considered so delicate that New Delhi has sent back a senior army officer to serve an unusual second term as the deputy chief of the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) because of his knowledge of the land.

India as one of the three biggest contributors of soldiers to U.N. peacekeeping missions has been unhappy about not being consulted on some of the ways in which operations are now being carried out. India, along with some other nations, has also urged the U.N. Security Council to take steps for going after people responsible for the killing of their troops. India's interests are also political and economic and their furtherance depends on peaceful ties not only within South Sudan but stable ties with Sudan from which it was carved out in 2011. Indian companies have 25 per cent stake in a South Sudan oil company whose crude is sent across Sudan by an India-built pipeline.

The two Sudans have the third largest crude reserves and India appointed a Special Envoy for South Sudan even as its independence was being negotiated. It was among the earliest to open a consulate in Juba, four years before it formally became the national capital. Both Sudans are keen on Indian assistance and expertise in infrastructure development and capacity building and a wider footprint by its corporates.

SOUTH AFRICA

439. Press Release of the Minister of Commerce regarding review by Commerce Minister Anand Sharma and South African Commerce and Industry Minister Rob Davies India – Africa Trade in Johannesburg.

New Delhi, October 1, 2013

The Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma and Mr. Rob Davies, Minister of Trade and Industry, South Africa today co-chaired the third meeting of India-Africa Trade Ministers in Johannesburg. The meeting was attended by Chairperson of African Union Commission Dr. Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma and 11 trade ministers from Africa, representatives of New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), and regional economic communities like Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), Economic Community Of West African States (ECOWAS) and Southern African Development Community (SADC).

In his opening remarks Shri Sharma mentioned that the trade ministers meeting was a significant event in the annual calendar of exchanges between India and Africa. He said that the partnership between India and Africa was distinct and different and a strategic relationship. The robust economic growth of both India and Africa provided new opportunities of forging a development partnership which would not just be focussed on transactional trade but subsume capacity building, institution building, human resource development and productive investments. Shri Sharma mentioned that the governments of India and Africa were confronted by challenges of currency volatility, high inflation, commodity volatility, and similar issues of underdevelopment and poverty. He further added that the India Africa Forum Summit declarations have given a blueprint of the partnership between these two regions covering a wide range of sectors. A large number of regional and pan-African institutions have been established in Africa for capacity building and skill development, which enable development of rich human resource. He mentioned that 22,000 scholarships were being administered for African students. He said that the economic engagement has been a buoyant one as investments from India to Africa has crossed USD 50 billion in the last decade and trade has crossed USD 70 billion. He mentioned that the bilateral trade target of USD 90 billion by 2015 is a modest one and is certainly achievable.

Chairperson of African Union Commission Dr. Zuma in her remarks mentioned that GDP of BRICS economies is set to overtake that of G-7 countries soon. She mentioned that the rich resource base of Africa have driven the economic growth of the world. The plan of industrialization aims to increase value addition, enhance regional economic integration with an aim to achieve a pan-African free trade area. Dr. Zuma appreciated “Indian investments in infrastructure, mining, energy sector which enabled significant value addition in Africa and skill upgradation which would lead to sustainable development and help in poverty eradication.” She sought greater diversification of Indian investments with greater thrust on joint ventures and participation of women. She said that interest of developing countries and LDCs are safeguarded especially in the area of food security in the forthcoming Bali Ministerial Meeting on WTO. She further said that the current trade facilitation package had certain implementation challenges for African countries as it entailed huge resource commitments and therefore urged for a balanced outcome at Bali.

In his remarks Mr Davies spoke about the need of ushering in an age of industrialization in Africa with a greater thrust on value addition, moving away from commodity led export models. In this context, he appreciated the engagement with India which was in the nature of a true developmental partnership. He mentioned that “Indian investments into Africa had seen a phenomenal growth” and appreciated that “these had led to considerable value addition and employment generation in Africa.” He also stressed upon the need of greater regional economic integration in Africa through the architecture of regional free trade agreements, which would be building blocks for a continental free trade agreement in Africa. Intra -African trade is barely 12% contrasted with other dynamic regions of the world. He mentioned about the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa (PIDA) which aims to strengthen infrastructure development in Africa. Indian imports from Africa have risen by 14% but there was need to shift to value added exports. He recalled the BRICS Summit and said that the BRICS development bank idea should become a reality to ensure investments not only in each others’ economies but also in Africa.

Intervening in the ministerial meeting, Shri Sharma said that “the forthcoming Bali ministerial meeting was an opportunity to give momentum to the Doha development round, which has its heart a strong development agenda.” He mentioned that there is a need to address the genuine concerns of food security of the developing countries. The interests of subsistence farmers must be protected and a multi lateral trade regime must address livelihood concerns of small and marginal farmers of the developing countries. He was of the opinion that public stock holding for food security must be accepted as this is essential for assuring food security of millions of poor in the developing countries. He also said that the LDCs would also need resources to meet the commitments on trade facilitation including for infrastructure up-gradation at ports. He said that India has supported the need for a package of LDCs in Bali. He informed the Trade Ministers about the Duty Free Quota Free Market Access Scheme for LDCs introduced by India which provides a huge opportunity for market access for African LDCs to the Indian market.

The second meeting of the India-Africa Business Council co-chaired by Shri Sunil Bharti Mittal from the Indian side and Dr. Bright Chunga was also convened and the industry leaders collectively identified priority sectors of private investment and presented a report to the Trade Ministers.

Yesterday, Shri Sharma had a bilateral meeting with his counterpart Minister Mr. Rob Davies where he urged for an early conclusion of the India- Southern African Customs Union (SACU) Preferential Trade Agreement negotiations. They also discussed the whole range of bilateral issues, expressing satisfaction on the healthy growth of trade which had touched USD 14 billion and investment flows from India had crossed USD 7 billion. They also reviewed the progress of negotiations in the Doha round and preparations for the Bali ministerial meeting.

440. Speech by President Pranab Mukherjee on the occasion of the memorial service in honour of Dr. Nelson Mandela, former President of South Africa.

Johannesburg, December 10, 2013.

President Jacob Zuma,

Distinguished Leaders of the African National Congress,

Eminent Heads of State and Governments and Representatives of the world community gathered here today,

2. It is with the deepest reverence that I, on behalf of the Government and the people of India, join the South African nation in paying homage to their beloved Madiba, former President, Dr. Nelson Mandela.
3. For India, the passing of Nelson Mandela represents the departure of a venerated elder, a great soul. We pray for his eternal peace. Madiba lived a life of sacrifice and privation as he pursued a seemingly impossible goal for his people – and the world is richer for his legacy. We, in India, have long admired him - and all that he stood for - and we will always cherish his friendship and love for our people.
4. To us, Nelson Mandela was a visionary. He epitomised an uncommon humaneness that inspired all of mankind. He was an icon of irreversible social and economic change – the kind of transformation and emancipation that his people had only dreamt of. A towering personality of great compassion and wisdom, he guided his nation, bruised by decades of apartheid and violence, to embrace his simple message of tolerance and harmonious co-existence. Indeed, his life and struggles - which represented ‘hope’ for the downtrodden in South Africa and all over the world, remind us of the principles that the father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi, stood for. In the face of the severest persecution, punishment and relentless oppression, Nelson Mandela continued his non-violent struggle with dignity and pride, refusing to be intimidated. He never diminished his commitment to his kind of 'satyagraha' against injustice and inequality. His stoic determination, patience and magnanimity reminded us, in India, of the revolutionary methods of Mahatma Gandhi.

5. It was, therefore, an honour for Indians to confer upon Madiba our highest civilian award, the Bharat Ratna when he visited India in 1990. Madiba received an unprecedented public welcome and was felicitated in Delhi and Calcutta.
6. In 1995, when he visited India as the first President of post apartheid Africa, Mandela visited Gandhiji's Sabarmati Ashram and said that it was for him a homecoming, a pilgrimage.
7. We, on our part, associate South Africa with the first chapter of Mahatma Gandhi's freedom movement. Gandhiji had staked his career as a budding lawyer in South Africa to resist segregation and inequality - before he embarked for India and took up, in India, the same cause.
8. The six principles that Madiba identified as the fundamentals of the foreign policy of the new South Africa – equal human rights, democracy, respect for international law, world peace achieved through non-violent means, effective arms control regimes and economic co-operation in an interdependent world, are the same principles that the Founding Fathers of free India had enshrined in our own policy of Panchsheel.
9. Madiba often acknowledged the influence of Mahatma Gandhi and the first Prime Minister of India, Jawarharlal Nehru on his own thought process. It is no wonder then that we, in India, attach great sentiment to our unique friendship with the people of this great country South Africa.
10. We stand by you in your hour of bereavement and we share your sense of loss today.
11. We have no doubt that the world will honour the historic legacy of Madiba, one of the most influential personalities of our century, who taught the world the true meaning of forgiveness and reconciliation - and steered South Africans onto the path of building a truly Rainbow Nation.

Jai Hind!

441. Press Release on the Visit of Mrs. Preet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs to Tanzania.

New Delhi, July 10, 2013.

Smt. Preet Kaur, Hon'ble Minister of State for External Affairs of India visited Tanzania at the invitation of Hon'ble Bernard K. Membe (MP), Minister of Foreign Affairs & International Cooperation of the United Republic of Tanzania on 8-10 July, 2013.

During her visit she called on Hon'ble President, H.E. Dr. Jakaya M. Kikwete and held discussions with the Hon'ble Foreign Minister Membe. The two Ministers Co-Chaired the 8th session of the India-Tanzania Joint Commission Meeting and presided over its Opening Session on 8th July and Closing Session on 9th July 2013.

In talks with the President Dr. Jakaya Kikwete, Minister Preet Kaur emphasized continued commitment to forge stronger and closer ties with Tanzania building upon the excellent traditional ties with Tanzania which have origin in the pre-independence period. President Kikwete reviewed the current level of development partnership between the two countries including use of Indian lines of credit, grants and capacity building training programmes in specific areas of Tanzania's growth story, and exchanged views on regional and international issues of mutual interest. He mentioned certain new areas where he hoped Tanzania would be able to use the expertise available in India for its benefit. The Tanzanian President assured the visiting Indian Minister of his country's support for India's aspiration for a permanent seat in a reformed United Nations Security Council.

In discussions with the Tanzanian Foreign Minister, the Indian Minister reviewed the growing commercial, economic and people to people ties and discussed issues of interest in the regional and global context. The two sides agreed to strengthen bilateral ties in all fields, including security and defence, and to resolve remaining outstanding financial matters.

Smt. Preneet Kaur also joined Hon'ble Dr. Abdulla Kigoda, Tanzanian Minister for Industry and Trade at a business event organized by the Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) in cooperation with the Confederation of Tanzanian Industry (CTI). The CII had organized the visit of a multi-sectoral Indian business delegation to Tanzania during the visit of the Indian Minister.

The India-Tanzania Joint Commission deliberated on areas of bilateral cooperation, including agriculture and rural development, health, education, small and medium industries, mining and minerals, industrialization, energy, telecommunications and ICT, tourism and connectivity, water resource development, cooperation in the areas of women and child development, sports and youth affairs and development partnership between India and Tanzania. Both sides worked towards concrete measures to consolidate and strengthen the ties in these areas, which have been reflected in the Agreed Minutes signed by MOS(PK) and the Tanzanian Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation in Dar es Salaam on 9th July 2013.

442. Remarks by the Foreign Secretary at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Washington, D.C., February 21, 2013.

A 21st Century India-United States partnership for peace, prosperity and progress

Thank you very much President Jessica Matthews,
Friends of India and the United States,
Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen:

Since the President of the US has already decided to call the India-US relationship a defining one, I have decided to call my presentation more modestly, "A 21st Century India-US partnership for peace, prosperity and progress".

Thank you therefore for this opportunity to share some thoughts with you on a theme that broadly takes up the conversation from where I left it last year. And as I did last year, let me say that it is remarkable how much has changed in our relationship since I was here a quarter of a century ago.

The theme is therefore timely: Are we on track so that one of the young diplomats in your Embassy in Delhi or ours in Washington could find, a quarter century from now, that another positive paradigm shift has taken place? I wouldn't assume any one can see upto 2038, but I hope to suggest some ideas to take stock of where the relationship is, and to consider the way forward as a new Administration establishes itself in the United States so that we do keep on track.

In doing so I trust I will not be accused of plagiarism as your esteemed institution recently released a paper by my friend Ashley Tellis with the subheading that encapsulated the task at hand. The subtitle was "Sustaining the transformation in U.S.-India relations". The headline was of course eye catching: "Opportunities unbound". But headlines often leave one wondering. Like the one in the news paper which said "Squad helps dog bite victim". Not all readers clearly saw dog bites as an adjective and not a suggestion of the squad's assistance to the dog!

Anyway for me the subject is clear – I am part of the squad called upon to sustain the remarkable transformation that has brought the U.S. and India closer together than we have ever been in the past. And I deem this an extraordinary privilege.

To an audience such as this, I do not need to dwell on history—or the historical nature—of this transformation. But it is worth emphasizing that the nature of this change has been unprecedented. The centrepiece was the India-U.S. civil nuclear arrangement and all that went into it and has since emerged from it.

The problem, of course, is that everything since that definitive moment tends to be compared with the audacity of what we dared to do together in putting this arrangement in place. This places a somewhat-unfair strain of expectation. But I think it is also misplaced. Because the truth of it is that much that has happened since is equally significant in the game of nations in which we have evolved a “new normal” in the relationship.

Let me cite a few instances of what I mean by the new normal, going beyond the regular exchanges between our Heads of State and Government, both bilaterally and at multilateral events, and the Strategic Dialogue which has unprecedented levels of Ministerial participation on both sides.

It is now normal that we have over one hundred visits at the senior official and higher level exchanges per year.

It is normal that our dialogue architecture covers the gamut of governmental activity—from social sector measures to trade and global financial policy coordination; from energy to defence, counter-terrorism and homeland security. At our inter-departmental review meeting, which we held in the MEA in New Delhi in the beginning of January, we identified over 30 dialogue mechanisms, connecting almost all major departments of our Government.

And it is now entirely normal that our foreign offices consult each other on a wide range of global and regional challenges. Already we have held three rounds of a trilateral between the US, Japan and India, and several rounds of bilateral consultations on East Asia. Just two days ago, we hosted the second round of our trilateral dialogue with Afghanistan. We hold regular consultations on strategic security issues, covering non-proliferation, disarmament and export controls; we are working together closely on India's membership of the four multilateral export control regimes.

We hope to expand these dialogues to cover many more areas of interest. And that is also now normal.

In short, in a few years, consultation has become a habit. We have created a comfortable space to exchange opinions as trusted partners, with both candour and often convergence. This is not just because we enjoy talking; that we do—or being connected! As India's horizons expand with the growth of our strategic and economic interests, we will need to talk regularly about real-world concerns to the US, which continues to have both critical interests and a vital presence across the entire globe. This is as it should be in a partnership that is genuinely strategic. There is no hint here, however, of taking lessons from each other.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

I do not suggest that the partnership is already at a stage of maturity or that we are in complete accord on all issues. If that were so, I and some of you would be looking for other avenues of gainful employment! I am aware that converting the civil nuclear agreement into the expected commercial arrangements is still a work in progress. In a more general sense, it needs recognition that it is probably not in the nature of either of our nations to be in complete agreement with any other on many issues.

Someone said we are perhaps not on the same page. To mix metaphors, even if we cannot be on the same line of the script on all occasions, both of us are increasingly willing to read from the same score even if we do not always play the notes the same way. I want to reiterate this point, because the mutuality of benefit in our partnership is measured in more than merely dollars and cents, important as those are.

It is also measured in a growing realization that the rise of a democratic, pluralistic and liberal India is in the fundamental interests of the United States. (It is not called the peaceful rise of India – because it is self-evidently peaceful). And that a strong, prosperous, innovative, globally engaged, United States is fundamentally in India's interest. We in India have no evangelical tradition, but we share the conception that the spread of democracy, open societies, and rule-based multilateral frameworks, will shape a better world order. At the more mundane level of how we see India's growing interests converging with US Strategic outlook, let me outline a few broad areas.

I will start with our own continent, Asia. I think I should address a misconception that has secured the force of conviction through multiple reiteration. India does not harbour misgivings over your re-engaging—or rebalancing, or indeed, pivoting—towards Asia.

While I recognize that the policy is still evolving, enhanced American economic, diplomatic and maritime engagement in the development of the Indo-Pacific region takes forward what is a recognized part of independent Asia's experience. Moreover, it synchronizes with India's own enhanced engagement with our extended neighbourhood. The most recent example of this extended neighbourhood was the commemorative summit of ASEAN and India, marking 10 years of partnership, at which almost all ten ASEAN Heads of State were present in New Delhi. This is premised on our conviction that regional connectivity, economic integration, development and cooperative security are the surest guarantors of peace and stability across our region.

This is the spirit in which we have engaged in the East Asia Summit and the past discussions on Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership. It was and with this in mind that we worked to bring the U.S. into the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) as an Observer.

Our engagement with partners in South-east Asia and beyond must contribute to the creation of a mutually-acceptable regional security and economic architecture. Such architecture must be based on commonly-accepted international rules. It should facilitate respect for international law, freedom of navigation, maritime commerce and communications. We are happy to work with all our partners towards evolving a larger regional architecture for the whole of Asia.

By virtue of our geography and historical connections, we have vital interests both in the heartland and in the rimlands of Asia. It is useful therefore that on our neighbourhood and beyond, we have an increasingly-improved dialogue with the U.S. We welcome the increased frequency of our consultation on most regional issues of mutual interest and the improved texture of these conversations.

Afghanistan is one of the key areas in which we need to continue to hold close and candid consultations. It is also an area in which there is greater need for us to be absolutely frank with each other.

To start with, we sincerely respect and honour the significant sacrifices made by our American and Afghan partners in securing and reconstructing Afghanistan. India too has given lives and has spent almost two billion dollars in reconstruction assistance. And we intend to remain engaged with Afghanistan and its other international partners. We continue to support efforts to bring Afghanistan into regional connectivity frameworks. We are also helping lead the effort to transform the economy of Afghanistan, including in its evolution to a trade and investment-based economy.

Why is India involved? Very simply, history has taught us that whatever happens in Afghanistan has and will continue to affect our security directly and materially. We have not forgotten the terrorist havens that targeted us, springing up as Afghanistan descended into chaos in the 1990s. And obviously, we do not want that to happen again.

It is for this reason that internationally-accepted red lines must be respected in whatever reconciliation models are being considered. So also, actions in support of the political transition should not undermine Afghan institutions of governance. We all need a credible government after 2014 as well. But most of all, we are yet to see any evidence that supports the notion of a dividing line separating Al Qaeda from other terrorist and extremist groups, or indeed, that these groups and those who support them have either had an epiphany or made a strategic reassessment of their objectives.

To us, it makes little sense to draw lines of distinction that most of these groups or their sponsors are themselves not prepared to do, either in word or deed.

In this context, I cannot overemphasize the point that terrorism is and will remain a pre-eminent security challenge for both our countries. Our convergence on the source and the nature of the threat in our region has never been greater. It is therefore a challenge that provides us an opportunity for enhanced cooperation in combating terror and protecting our people from it. This is even more of an imperative today, as we move into a period of significant uncertainty in the next few years. Behind this regional concern lies a general conviction which we have about combating terror, that led us to pledge support of about U.S.$ 1 million at the donor conferences even on the situation in Mali, which is quite distant from us.

Not surprisingly, counter-terrorism is a key dimension of our partnership. Quite obviously, it also has a strong public resonance. It is an area of our work which we must continue to strengthen, including in exchanging information and working to bring terrorists to justice. We are aware of the specificities of legal procedure and their requirements but we need to commit to the goal of assisting our authorities in the pursuit of justice.

Cyber-security, to which the President of the United States made a reference, and counter-piracy are also areas in which our two countries can work together, particularly since the terrorist threat folds into these areas of challenges. We already have working groups dealing with cyber security issues, and feel that there is much more we can achieve together, including in operational aspects of managing and mitigating these challenges.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Further afield on our west, we are faced with a complex situation in the Gulf region and Iran. Our relations with the GCC region are vital, self evidently so, with around 5 million of our people working there and a significant source of energy supply. We have very old ties with Iran, which emerged as a critical and reliable source of oil over many decades. We have a beneficial economic relationship covering trade in food, medicine and other everyday commodities. Yet we also recognize and emphasize the need for Iran to fulfil its international obligations and to address questions raised in the IAEA about its nuclear programme to restore confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear programme. We sincerely hope that the talks to be held in Kazakhstan—I believe on the 26th of this month—will make some progress in resolving this issue.

From where we are situated, Iran is an essential element in our access to Afghanistan and in the medium term to Central Asia; it affords us the access that we are prevented from having directly. Iran also, as I said, situated in that region where we have vital economic interests and where millions of our citizens work. For these reasons, it matters greatly that we can continue to have quiet bilateral conversations on this matter.

We also have shared interested in the democratic development and economic growth in the rest of South Asia—that's a long theme and I will leave this to questions after this. We have opportunities ahead for building on these shared interests.

In the Middle East, we share concerns over the crisis in Syria and the instability in northern Africa. India has supported the democratic aspirations of the people of the region, but have been cautious about externally-enforced change. In general, we believe that external involvement only fuels instability. In effect, the search for military solutions to political challenges has created many humanitarian crises, and has pushed the region on a slippery slope towards civil strife and, as we now see, the spread of weaponry into dangerous hands.

Looking eastward of India, we are working to enhance the full range of our relationship with Myanmar, enhance our historic links with that neighbour and take forward our shared interests in the contemporary setting. We are encouraged by the changes in internal and external policies of that country. We continue our dialogue with the Government—we have had a number of interactions with the President and the Speaker—and also our engagement with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, who paid us a visit in November. The historic visit of President Obama a few months ago, and the easing of sanctions should help Myanmar process of re-engagement with the world and restore its historic role in the region.

Even on global and extra-regional issues, ladies and gentlemen, we are developing the habit of broader cooperation. Our Prime Minister and President Obama agreed in 2010 that we would begin to work together in trilateral mode, in capacity-enhancement projects in Africa and also in Afghanistan.

We have now put in place the software for an IT-enabled Open Government Platform—using IT to bring open governance to the people—in joint partnership with the Government of Rwanda, and we intend to expand this soon in partnership with Ghana.

Similarly, we are working with USAID to offer agriculture training programmes at Indian institutes, for specialists from Kenya, Malawi and Liberia

One of India's leading women's self-help agencies, SEWA, is working with USAID and the Government of Afghanistan to offer "train-the-trainers" courses to Afghan women so that women can be empowered to earn livelihoods in their country.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

What does all of this mean to our bilateral relationship? Well, quite a lot, actually. It feeds in to and binds on growing convergences around.

Defence is a key pillar of our bilateral cooperation. It bears mentioning that from a state where this trade was, to borrow Ambassador Blackwill's inimitable phrase, flat as a chapati, there is today nearly $9 billion in bilateral defence trade. I dined out on this figure when I spoke in Washington last year also. But it will grow over time; it will assuredly not be stuck like the chapati jokes.

Our armed forces are developing the habit of closer cooperation through training together and through bilateral military exercises. Today, our armed forces conduct the maximum number of military exercises with U.S armed forces.

We are currently in the midst of an effort to find ways in which we resolve process-related rigidities in our respective systems. We do need to find ways of making procedures more compatible if the partnership is to develop to mutual benefit.

We also hope to find ways in which we can genuinely transform our defence partnership by significantly strengthening the technological dimension of the partnership, so that it has a mutually-beneficial impact on the development of India's defence industry.

Trade and economic cooperation continue to increase. Both services and goods trade are up, and we are hopeful that in the near future, our bilateral Trade Policy Forum can be held; a meeting is overdue.

Just before I walked in here, I was reminded that there is a reference in Ashley's book to cooperation in space, and I entirely commend this suggestion as there is significant compatibility between the capacities of our two countries in space.

It is essential that we re-engage in a more focused manner especially because of the changed policy environment in India. As you know, the Government has announced a range of reform measures to make India a more attractive investment destination. The effort has been to address a long-standing demand from our own businesses most of all, for second and third generation reforms, which have been pushed through with significant political will and which we hope will evoke a suitable response, not only from our own industry but also from our foreign partners.

These new measures offer significant openings in single and multi-brand retail, aviation and the financial sector. Some measures have already been rolled out—and companies have started opening stores. [Brooks Brothers, Fossil, Gant.] Ikea of Sweden has also obtained clearance to set up its own units in India. Government has also pushed forward on raising the ceiling on FDI in financial services as well, although this last item requires Parliamentary approval. The effort is in place, and we hope for a positive outcome.

Meanwhile, however, we hear from our U.S. partners that there are still elements on which clarity is awaited, at least in terms of new policies in force. Ultimately, these are business decisions. However, these waters can only be tested by taking the plunge in what has consistently been proved to be a large and profitable market. I do recall a study in which the academic was hard-put to find a multi national company that had lost money in India.

I should also underline that the process of reform and policy change is most sustainable when it is recognized that the policy measures India is taking lie in its own interests. We will do what we need to do for our own sake; however, it should be recognized that what we do will naturally create benefit for our partners.

We also hear complaints on both sides on a number of matters. Procurement policies that are intended to promote industrial growth in India are raised with us. Just as the U.S. has also identified industry as the key driver of employment, we too need to do so. The simple fact is: we cannot harness the demographic dividend promised by our young population without developing industry. The Services sector alone cannot help us absorb millions of young people.

On our side too, we have concerns regarding non-immigrant visas and our inability to initiate even a conversation about a totalization agreement. This is necessary, we feel, as it would begin to address the concerns of the law-abiding, tax-paying expatriate Indians working in the U.S. It is this group of people who serve, at the same time, as the strongest and most committed advocates for our relationship in both countries. This is particularly difficult to explain when we have concluded such Agreements with other major G-8 economies including, recently, with Canada.

We note your deadline to conclude negotiations for a Trans-Pacific Partnership, and your plans to start discussing a comprehensive Transatlantic Partnership, and at the same time, we are moving forward with Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreements with ASEAN, Singapore, Japan and Korea. And we are also in dialogue with the EU.

We have been talking about a Bilateral Investment Treaty as well, but not necessarily with the due sense of urgency. Four meetings since negotiations started in 2007 does not suggest a great deal of haste. Much as it might surprise, we want this as much as you do because it is also of interest to us.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Important as they are, market access issues—in goods and services—can either be seen in perspective, or they can be made the defining narrative.

While we must work to sort out these challenges, it is not in our interest to let such issues define the relationship. This is why we have proposed to create an ad hoc clearing-house mechanism to discuss market access issues in the Trade Policy Forum.

I believe that we also need to find a new positive narrative that can bind our countries closer together. One such opportunity, I feel, is in the energy sector. Without assured access to energy inputs in sufficient quantities, we will not be able to sustain our economic development.

Therefore, an enduring India-U.S. partnership in energy should not only cover technological and regulatory aspects, but also establish commercial partnerships in energy. As the U.S. evolves from being an importer of energy to a net exporter of energy, we hope that we can develop mutually-beneficial partnerships in the hydrocarbons sector, in renewable energy, biofuels and in new energy-efficient technologies.

In each of these cases, there can be immediate benefits for both sides. Let me cite a few examples:

Your interest in exporting natural gas and intention to export to non-FTA countries, even if just agreed upon, would help stabilize internationally-traded LNG prices which are at historic highs.

Indian investment in the oil and gas sectors will not only help add to energy transportation linkages, but also to refining and shipment facilities here. Long-term partnerships between us in energy will also help us in India diversify our sources of supply much more globally.

Bio-fuels from non-food crops and energy efficiency are two areas identified in our energy dialogue. Grid management, self-healing and smart grid technologies, and the capacity to bring renewable energy on to grids could be mutually beneficial areas of exchange.

Our regulations and processes involving large projects are being re-examined by a Cabinet Committee on Investment. Among the first which the Cabinet Committee has taken up are those related to energy. Progress is being made on simplifying the approval process for oil and gas exploration blocks. US companies have world-recognized strengths in this industry, and we hope that as we move ahead, we will be able to draw in new players to India. I believe that the exciting new finds off the coast of East Africa, and north-west Australia, will lead to greater interest in other areas of the Indian Ocean basin.

The extraordinary transformation caused by the shale gas boom could also bring larger quantities of US coal into a global market facing supply constraints.

So as I see it, there is much that we can talk about.

Education is also, similarly, a strategic area for our partnership. In being part of the reform and upgradation of our higher learning infrastructure, you will help support modernization of the supply line of trained workers on the other. Think about it: millions of young Indians will be coming onto the job market in the next few decades. The U.S. can, through partnerships with new educational institutions in India, enable them to be productively and gainfully-employed.

The education partnership can span the entire range of options: at one level, we would like to create mutually-beneficial partnerships in state-of-the-art institutions of learning. These could include engineering institutes, management institutes, pure science research facilities and social science colleges. This would also provide a base upon which we develop our growing partnership in science, technology and innovation, and in fulfilment of the vision of our Prime Minister and President Obama, in what is called the "Singh-Obama Knowledge Initiative".

We also need to develop specific immediately-employable skills. We need better community colleges in India. Earlier this month, we made a good beginning with a special event focusing on creating community colleges and how they would work in India. As many as 12 American community colleges were represented, for which Under Secretary Sonnenshine visited India.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Let me endeavour to draw my presentation to a few clear conclusions and recommendations on the way forward.

First, from our perspective, closer and more effective cooperation between us on terrorism is critical. There is strong public support in India for this aspect of our partnership. Obviously, this has an impact on our bilateral and trilateral consultations on Afghanistan and the region. We recognize and welcome your enduring commitment to the security and stability of Afghanistan. We hope that our concerns will also factor into your calculations.

Second, the relationship between us must now stand squarely on its own merits. It has taken decades for us to stop viewing each other from the prism of each others' relationships with third countries. As you recalibrate your presence in Afghanistan, we hope that the transformation of our relationship can accelerate, based on the unique merits of what each side brings to the table.

Third, we need to do more to make defence cooperation part of the new normal. We can do so by finding simple process solutions to enable your defence companies to make value-for-money bids to meet our defence requirements. It would also help for us to evolve our relationship towards co-design and joint production of defence material. In short, let's actually move to make this happen, rather than inviting each other to move first.

Fourth, let us recognize that trade and economic cooperation must be about more than finding fault with each others' policies. Both of us need significant investment in industry and manufacture and the jobs that they create. We must find ways to work more closely together in this context. There will be value for U.S. companies to engage in our efforts to build several industrial ecosystems in India in a manner that is compatible with each other's market or employment interests. We believe the US industrial and manufacturing sector could witness a significant revival led by your energy and chemical industries. We ourselves expect to return to a high GDP growth trajectory—and by high, we mean over 7.5%—in over a year's time. And we expect that the policy emphasis on manufacturing will start showing tangible results. As India industrialises, the scope for beneficial cooperation will only increase, whether in terms of R&D, technology agreements, integration of manufacturing processes, or trade.

Fifth, we cannot allow the differences we have in trade in goods or movement of services to dominate the discourse. At the same time, we have to create forums to discuss these issues openly and with a forward-looking approach.

Sixth, energy and education are strategic openings for the US to invest in the future of India. As many of our American friends remind us, enabling the rise of India is, or should be, a strategic end in itself for the US. These are sectors in which the US would be part of such a strategy.

Seventh, we have begun to work together well in a number of multilateral fora—the G-20 is a case in point. We appreciate the support of the U.S. for our membership in various multilateral export control regimes. There is also room for us to do more together as our interests coincide with yours in the maintenance of a strong and stable global and regional architecture. However, to keep this process on the rails, it is important that the signalling remains positive. We have been told that the U.S. has placed a strategic bet on India's rise; therefore it makes little sense to accept strategic arguments from those working to make you lose that bet.

And finally, we need to display towards each other more of that rare commodity: patience. You have demonstrated that in abundant measure – listening to me for half an hour of talk without a single slogan or catchy phrase to explain how much progress we feel we have made. But the evolution of our relationship cannot be conducted in fitful leaps, from one transformative moment to another. Instead, we must recognize that the process of drawing us closer together will need consistent attention, regular consultation, regular cooperation, and continued high level engagement.

It is essential that we continue to invest in our engagement at the highest levels, ladies and gentlemen—and this is my final point here—because this partnership is really in our respective national interests. Just this morning, I read with great interest the outstanding case made yesterday by Secretary Kerry at the University of Virginia, on why the resources spent on foreign policy are in the fundamental interests of your great country. And he then referred specifically to the middle class Indians creating jobs here. And it not only struck me that the case he made could quite easily have been made by my own Minister, but equally, that our mutual investment in the India-US partnership is actually all about making our people safer and more prosperous. It is also about jointly addressing the growing complexities of a world in which the people of India and their American partners face many of the same global challenges. And it is in working towards addressing this strategic reality that our partnership will be defined in the decades ahead.

We look forward to keeping our leadership engaged in this vital relationship, both at the level of the two governments, but also with the support of friends of this remarkable partnership, which is all of you here today.

Thank you

443. Foreign Secretary's visit to United States, February 20-22, 2013.

New Delhi, February 22, 2013.

- Foreign Secretary Shri Ranjan Mathai completed a series of very useful and important interactions at the State Department, including a brief call upon the new U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. John Kerry on February 21, 2013.
- In his meeting with Secretary Kerry, Foreign Secretary extended to him the good wishes of our leadership, and their congratulations upon his appointment as Secretary of State. The Foreign Secretary discussed the proposed visit to India by Secretary Kerry for the Third Round of the Bilateral Strategic Dialogue. While dates for this being finalized, Secretary Kerry reaffirmed his invitation to the External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid to visit the United States soon.
- Secretary Kerry offered his sincere condolences at the loss of life as a result of the terror attacks in Hyderabad, and the condemnation of the government and the people of the United States. This was reiterated at all of Foreign Secretary's meetings with United States officials.
- Foreign Secretary also called upon Deputy Secretary of State William Burns and Deputy Secretary of Energy Daniel Poneman. He had a conversation over lunch with Under Secretary of State for Economic Growth, Energy and Environment Robert Hormats as well as extensive and wide-ranging consultations with Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Wendy Sherman during which the two sides covered bilateral, regional and global issues.
- In these discussions, the importance of the bilateral partnership in key areas, including energy, trade and economic development, as well as our existing regional and international consultations were reaffirmed.

- In the year ahead, it is intended that the two sides would increase the frequency and pace of bilateral consultations, including at official and political levels.
- Foreign Secretary set out a detailed blueprint of the bilateral relationship in an address on India and the United States in the 21st century, covering all areas of the bilateral partnership at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace on February 21, 2013. The text of the speech is available at Remarks by the Foreign Secretary at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace

444. Official Spokesperson's Press Statement on the Boston Bombings.

New Delhi, April 16, 2013.

The President and Prime Minister of India have already strongly condemned the multiple bombings in Central Boston on April 15. The solidarity and sympathy of the people of India have been expressed by India's leadership, including in a letter of condolence sent by the Prime Minister to the President of the United States of America earlier this morning.

As has been underlined by India's leaders, India remains committed to the effort to defeat terrorism and to uphold the values that define democratic nations such as ours.

Although no reports have as yet been received of injuries caused to Indian nationals as a result of this despicable act, our Embassy in Washington DC and our Consulate General in New York have been placed on alert. Indian nationals with concerns to report may do so at the Embassy's emergency number, (001) 202 939 7000.

445. Union Home Minister Reviews Cooperation With United States of America in High Level Meetings.

New Delhi, May 23, 2013.

Union Home Minister Shri Sushilkumar Shinde, currently visiting United States of America met senior Government functionaries including Secretary for Homeland Security Janet Napolitano, Attorney General Eric Holder and FBI Director Robert Muller.

Shri Shinde also led the Indian delegation for second round of the Homeland Security Dialogue with Secretary for Homeland Security Janet Napolitano leading US delegation. The two leaders emphasized that cooperation between India and the United States in internal security was a key pillar of the India-US Global Strategic Partnership. They also recognized that such cooperation was imperative, in view of commonality of the threats that confront the two countries. They welcomed progress made over the recent past in developing practical steps to enhance the security of the citizens and to prevent the misuse of increasingly-interconnected global financial, transportation and communication systems. Both the countries agreed to enhance cooperation in capacity building programmes and to identify technologies and equipment useful for Indian law enforcement agencies to source in the United States.

During the dialogue two leaders received reports from the six sub-groups that constitute the Homeland Security Dialogue and welcomed progress being achieved in substantive terms. They applauded the fact that specific cooperation programmes were identified and emphasized the need for results from this Dialogue. Shri Shinde invited Secretary Napolitano to visit India in 2014 to co-Chair the next round of the Dialogue. Both the countries agreed to carry out a review of the process a few months before that, under the stewardship of Union Home Secretary and the US Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

The outcomes of these meetings and the overall strategic perspective within which this Dialogue took place are outlined in the Joint Communique released by the Home Minister Shri Shinde and Secretary Napolitano after their meeting.

Home Minister Shri Shinde met US Attorney General Eric Holder on May 21. The two leaders recognized the compelling reasons for closer cooperation between India and the United States based on the larger strategic objective underlined by President Barack Obama and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during the US President's State Visit to India in November 2010. They also agreed that the Ministry of Home Affairs and the Department of Justice should work together institutionally, so as to ensure the best possible outcomes within the laws of the two countries, to address pending issues relating to extradition, execution of Letters Rogatory and Red Corner Notices, as well as other areas of cooperation in law enforcement, counter terrorism and judicial processes.

Shri Shinde also met Director of Federal Bureau of Investigation of USA, Robert Muller and reviewed areas of cooperation and issues of interest. The FBI and Indian agencies have remained in close contact, and it was agreed that the process of inter-agency cooperation would be developed further, in this context.

After the completion of his official meetings, Home Minister Shri Shinde and senior members of his delegation left for a day-visit to Boston, during which Shri Shinde is expected to have a detailed briefing of the successful investigation of the April 15 Boston Marathon bombing.

446. Media Briefing by Joint Secretary (Americas) on US Secretary of State's Visit to India.

New Delhi, June 22, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here today. Let me begin with an apology for having kept you waiting. Sometimes there are situations which are beyond our control and this was one of those days. So, I beg your indulgence on that delay.

Let me introduce to you Mr. Vikram Doraiswami, Joint Secretary (Americas), who will talk to you about what you, I suppose, have come here for. Before that, let me just give you a brief outline of the announcement I have to make and then Vikram will fill you in with other details. This announcement relates to the visit of US Secretary of State John Kerry.

The External Affairs Minister, Shri Salman Khurshid, will host the US Secretary of State, John Kerry, on his visit to New Delhi from June 23rd to 25th. This is Secretary Kerry's first visit to India as Secretary of State, and his first meeting with the External Affairs Minister, since both of them assumed their respective offices.

Secretary Kerry is scheduled to arrive here on the 23rd in the afternoon. We will be providing you a detailed advisory regarding media opportunities on 23rd, 24th and 25th. The programme is still being finalized, and as soon as this is finalized this will be put on the website.

Secretary Kerry is visiting India primarily for the fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue which will be held on the 24th. During the Strategic Dialogue the External Affairs Minister and Secretary Kerry will review progress in bilateral relations and ties over the past year and exchange views on regional and international issues.

On the bilateral side the focus will be on the expansion of cooperation in the areas of defence and security, trade and investment, science and technology, clean energy and environment. It is expected that following the discussions several new initiatives to strengthen bilateral cooperation in these areas in particular will be identified. In addition to the Strategic Dialogue, Secretary Kerry is also expected to co-chair, with the Minister for Human Resource Development, the India-US Higher Education Dialogue. This will be on 25th June prior to his departure.

These are the broad outlines of Secretary Kerry's engagements. In addition he will also have some other media events which will be put out after consultation with the US Embassy.

I will now request Vikram Doraiswami, Joint Secretary (Americas), to make brief opening remarks on issues that are to be considered, following which you are free to ask questions on those. Vikram, over to you now.

Joint Secretary (Americas) (Shri Vikram Kumar Doraiswami):

Thank you very much and please can I add my own apology for keeping you all waiting. I was called away for a frenetic last minute briefing for my bosses - we all report to different people - and so I did get delayed much beyond what was conscionable. So, my apologies for that.

This is Secretary of State's first visit to India in his current capacity. As friends in the media know, he has visited India before as a Senator and as Chair of the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He is of course no stranger to India, but this is his first visit in his current capacity. It comes some five months after his appointment to his current post. So, we are very happy to have him come so soon in his tenure.

It is also External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid's first interaction with the Secretary of State of the United States. Indeed it is the first high political interaction in the second term of the Obama Presidency. So, it is part of the process of taking forward the India-US relationship which currently is one of our more intense and more in-depth partnerships as it covers interaction across most of the spheres of government work.

We have had a very busy agenda with the United States for the first six months of this year. It has included high-level visits on both sides plus dialogues covering most of the areas of our cooperation. Taking that into account the Strategic Dialogue is our premier mechanism in the dialogue architecture which is both an opportunity to carry out some stocktaking of the relationship, what has happened over the past one year since the last round of the dialogue, but also to try and set a new vision ahead for what we expect to do in the remaining six months of this year and the first half of next year before the next round of Strategic Dialogue.

So, we will look at having a detailed conversation more or less around four broad thematic pillars. One would be the bilateral relationship which would cover our bilateral economic and security aspects of our relationship. It would cover energy and it would cover, well that covers under more or less one strategic pillar. The other would be the detailed political consultations that we have with the United States on regional and other issues. The third major pillar would really be global issues in which we consult each other on developments relating to multilateral and other fora including in the evolution of a regional architecture in Asia. That is the broad format in which we would have these discussions.

The Secretary of State will also be meeting Prime Minister on Monday the 24th. So, those are the two sort of book-ended arrangements. The Secretary of State is expected to be traveling with a high-level delegation which will also include the new Secretary for Energy Dr. Ernest Moniz. Also, the rest of the delegation would include the Science and Technology Administrator, the NASA Director, the USAID Director - these are all heads of Departments and in a sense the terminology is a bit misleading otherwise - the Pacific Commander Admiral Locklear, and senior officials from the Department of State, the Department of Homeland Security, and so on.

I think that about covers opening remarks. I would be happy to take any questions.

Official Spokesperson: The floor is open for any questions that you may have on this issue.

Q: Mr. Doraiswami, I just wanted to know if you also have cyber security on the agenda and also specifically the snooping that came to light in recent times?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Cyber security is part of our dialogue architecture. It is part of the Homeland Security Dialogue plus we also have a detailed interaction between the National Security Council on our side with the American side. So, this is certainly an opportunity for us to take up all issues on our agenda with them.

Q: Sir, what are you going to talk in the meeting on higher studies?

Joint Secretary (AMS): I am sorry my Hindi is not upto the mark, if you permit I would like to answer in Hindi?

Higher education dialogue will happen on Tuesday the 25th. Our Minister for Human Resource Development also went to the United States in early May, as you all know. The way we look at it is, for us to realize our demographic dividend the most important opportunity for us is to be able to invest in training our people. So, there are two parts to that. One part is what the US calls community colleges and what we call technical education. We need to ensure that our technical education or community colleges actually produce people who are trained enough to get jobs in industry and, therefore, make the training of community college trainees directly linked to the end user which is industry.

As I understand, the Ministry of Human Resource Development is rolling out a large number of community colleges in India, 200 new community colleges are to come up in the next few months using existing facilities. So, the US will be a partner to a very large number of this. We hope to have specific cooperation items put down for technical education.

At the same time we are also looking at higher education as in premier colleges of India and cooperation with the United States' colleges. On that part there were a number of regulatory issues that the US was looking at in terms of policy. We understand the UGC has taken those on board and there is an effort now to try and find ways in which not just the US but a variety of other advanced countries' higher education premier institutes can cooperate with our universities.

The third part is online learning. Many countries have excellent capacity for what is called massive online open courses (MOOCs). We are very keen on the capacity to use the internet greatly to reach out to a number of young people who are otherwise left out of capacity to reach higher education. So, all this will be taken up. The Secretary of State will jointly launch the Higher Education Dialogue with our HRM on Tuesday morning. This will be carried on thereafter at the Secretary to Government level through the day which will include Vice-Chancellors from Indian universities, education specialists. So, it is a full day's programme. It is not just a small event.

Q: Under this rubric of regional issues, is India going to raise the concerns about proposed talks of the United States with Taliban which are being talked about? They deal with Afghanistan also. Are we going to raise those issues? Secondly, what are the important issues so far as homeland security is concerned?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Afghanistan is of course part of our region. So, definitely it is on our agenda. And we would be interested to listen to the US since they are one of the lead players in this process as to what is happening over the last few days and their current engagements there to compare notes with them on what we understand of what is happening. Definitely it is on our agenda.

On homeland security, we have just had the second round of the Homeland Security Dialogue in the United States. It is a process that was set up after President Obama's visit in 2010. We have had only two rounds of it so far at the Ministerial level. But this last round we had identified under it we have six Working Groups. One deals with what is called the global supply chain, which essentially, to make it simple, is all issues relating to trade and commerce, movement of goods and people through ports, seaports and airports, and ensuring the security and integrity of the movement of goods and people from both sides. So, there is airport security, port security, the best ways of doing things in a manner that is least invasive to people and to the movement of goods, but yet at the same time provides high-end security

The second Working Group deals with illicit finance and counterfeit currency which is very important for us given the significant challenge we face with counterfeit currency. The third Working Group deals with technology, which essentially is our interest in securing technologies for homeland security which are used by US law enforcement authorities.

The fourth Group deals with cyber security which deals with the operational aspects of conversation on securing critical infrastructure and preventing hacking. We are very interested in this part for obvious reasons, but our interest in this predates many of these disclosures. So, before any of you think that this is something new, this has been one of the original Working Groups from the start. So, the conversation that we wish to have with the United States on cyber security covers operational parts of law enforcement in cyber security.

The fifth Working Group deals with capacity building in which we look at the opportunities for our police forces and our law enforcement authorities to obtain training opportunities with premier law enforcement authorities in the US. And the sixth and last Working Group is the Working Group that deals with what is called Megacity Policing. As our population becomes more and more urban, the needs of high-end policing and better quality of policing services has been felt, and we look at many of the larger American cities which have used technology and policing skills in very high end bringing together of technology including fusion centres that transmit data both ways between local community and State level law enforcement authorities to federal law enforcement authorities. So, there is a lot that we can share in terms of homeland security with the US.

Q: Are shale gas exports and DTI on the agenda? And the status of DTI please?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Shale gas is a very important part of what we want to talk to the United States about. We are very interested in the opportunity for expanding our energy cooperation. We already have an India-US Energy Dialogue which is co-chaired by Deputy-Chairman Ahluwalia sahab, and by the now the new Energy Secretary. That next round is to take place in India. So, we will be offering dates for that. But over and above the discourse, this has verticals relating to new and renewable energy, hydrocarbons, coal, power, etc.

Our interest in the hydrocarbons piece is particularly strong now as the US is on its way to becoming a net exporter of energy, both in the acquisition of energy resources, in terms of getting permission to import gas from the United States based on the US law that currently requires prior clearance of all exports to non-FTA signatory countries with the US. So, a number of our companies have already lined up purchase agreements with US companies which require to be cleared by the US Department of Energy. That process is on. We have continued to flag our interest in this over the last several months. We have been assured that the processes will be taken forward and indeed we already have one which has already come through directly for India which will export gas to GAIL.

But we are also interested in the US capacity in terms of technology, capital and regulatory experience in managing shale gas. We need to look at whether we have the resources and if we do have the resources, how best can we utilize them in a manner that secures the interest of the citizens and also deploys the highest possible technology to it. So, this is definitely on the agenda for the Secretary of State's visit.

As regards DTI, not just the DTI but the India-US defence relationship is very much on the agenda and that will include conversations on the DTI.

Q: Is there any specific proposal for space collaboration also because the NASA Administrator is coming?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Yes, there are. We are hoping to finalise a few more things on the space side. Secretary (Space) will also be there on our side. So, we are really looking forward to further develop our partnership in space.

Q: On the trade and economics side, can you amplify on some of the key issues which will figure prominently in the discussion? Most of the trade-related irritants are on the American side and they seem to be very unhappy with some of the issues relating to patents and copyrights and all that. Could you just give us an insight?

Joint Secretary (AMS): We are quite happy to discuss any issues that they want to table on the trade and economics side but we want to begin with the fact that they now have a new US Trade Representative who has recently been confirmed two days ago in his new post. USTR Mike Froman takes charge shortly. We would like to resume the trade policy forum which is co-led by the USTR and our Commerce Minister. We hope to have a meeting very soon of the India-US CEOs Forum. There are ample fora to discuss whatever issues that might have arisen in the bilateral trade and economic relationship, which I must emphasise are on both sides. There are market access issues that we have, and those that they have. We can clearly discuss what we think are areas of divergence and areas of convergence and find solutions to these.

Part of the problem has been that because many of these mechanisms have not met in a long time, in over two years, there has really been no forum to bring these issues up. So, these then tend to spill out into the public domain rather than find resolution. But issues on the American side as well as issues on our side will also be raised.

Q: Vikram, you spoke about a new architecture in Asia. What is this about?

Joint Secretary (AMS): There is an evolving architecture in Asia. We are not creating it ourselves but it is an ASEAN-driven process which includes the new mechanisms with which ASEAN deals with the countries of East Asia, with India, with the extra-regional great powers like the United States and Russia, that includes the East Asia Summit process, the Asian Defence Ministers Meeting (ADMM) Plus Process, and the ASEAN Regional Forum. So, all these areas are now areas in which India and the United States are actually sort of associated partners in a sense. So, our conversation with them will also include conversations about how this architecture is beginning to evolve.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Joint Secretary (AMS):Of course, China is also a part of these processes.

Q: What about the visa issue? And the American nuclear suppliers seem to have a problem with our liability law and they had expressed some reservations. Our stand is that this is the law and we have to. How does that affect our proposal to import certain nuclear materials and equipment from the United States?

Joint Secretary (AMS):On visas first. Per se we are not raising this as a visa issue. We recognize the point that it is every country's sovereign right to decide whom they allow and how many people they allow and in what format they allow. The question that we are concerned about is the specificity of the US laws that apply to the temporary movement of highly-skilled personnel under what are called H1B visa, which is highly-skilled non-immigrant visas, and the movement of people on business intercompany transfers, which are L category visas in the US system. Our concern is that these are actually trade and economic relations matters rather than visa matters. It is not a consular matter in that sense.

The conversation is ongoing with the US. We need to see how the segment dealing with highly-skilled non-immigrant visas is dealt with in the comprehensive immigration reform that the United States is taking up. We want to be very clear that we are taking up issues that have relevance for our business relationship and the provision of services by our companies to the United States. These are matters of concern for us. Insofar as the US has policies that it is looking at in the overall immigration package, whether it is Green Cards, whether it is legalization of illegal immigrants, those are matters of domestic importance to the United States. We wish them well on that process. But we have no comment to make on their internal policies on that.

It is only in terms of the H1B and the L visas that we are engaging with them and we are putting our concerns forward on behalf of Indian industry. And we are also trying to ensure that Indian industry and government can work together more closely to ensure that our concerns are duly understood by those involved in the immigration reform in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

In terms of liability, you are correct, we have said that this is our law. But we have also said we are more than willing to engage in explaining our law to anybody who has specific queries, and we will do our best to address these queries within the four corners of the Indian law. We have nothing to hide about our law.

Q: My question is connected with the visa. Many American universities are now coming to India and a lot of students are also going to US for studies. They are facing a lot of problem for even student visa. Many visas were rejected. Will this be discussed? When we are allowing them to come to India, they should reciprocate it and allow Indian students to go there.

Joint Secretary (AMS): On visas, as I said, the issue is we have to be very careful about what we ask them to do in terms of what facilitates business and the legitimate rights of enhancing the bilateral economic relationship and the facilitation of the movement of people.

Insofar as student visa cases are concerned, the US keeps assuring us that they are doing the best they can to ensure that students with valid admission papers and the correct I-20s are able to go to the United States to study. We have no reason to disbelieve them because insofar as the economic opportunity is concerned, it is obviously a good economic opportunity for the receiving universities. I do not see why they would not want Indian students to come because increasingly a large number of Indian students are going. We are not where we were twenty years ago. Not everybody is going on only 100 per cent scholarships. A fair number of Indians are going including on paid terms. So, obviously there is interest. And the fact that they are wanting to come and drum up studying opportunities in India suggests that this is the issue.

The issue is that the processes are complicated at times. So, maybe people are not able to fill these things up properly. We will certainly encourage the American Embassy here and the Consulates here to find the greatest possible ways of addressing these challenges. But I must also say in their defence that they have been extremely forthcoming in trying to respond to these problems including by citing pretty staggering figures of the number of visas that they are issuing every year, certainly much more than we are issuing right now.

Q: On liability law again, so you do not expect any breakthrough on finally getting the US side to be on terms with the Indian side. Is that so?

Joint Secretary (AMS): I do not know about breakthrough. We have a law and we are happy to discuss the law. If they have issues about the law, we are more than happy to clarify them. We are not expecting either them to expect us to change the law or to change their position. But if we can find clarity and a common ground on the implementation of the law in terms of nuclear business, by all means.

Q: What is India's position on the Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) between Maldives and the United States?

Joint Secretary (AMS): You will need to ask the Maldives that or the US that, not me.

Q: Will there be a discussion on India-US Knowledge Initiative on Agriculture, and cooperation in GM crops and biotechnology?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Agriculture is one of the themes on our agenda but largely in the sense of science and technology cooperation. We have a pretty robust programme of cooperation in science and technology as applicable to agriculture. That includes the application of science and technology to crop details, to our Indian Council for Agricultural Research and to more scientific prediction of cropping. We are also looking at cooperation in terms of meteorology as applied to agriculture. This is dealt with on the agriculture and S&T side.

GM, I do not recall that this is part of our discourse currently. I do not think it is. Not in this dialogue at least.

Q: There have been reports that India sought temporary custody of David Headley. Has India indeed sought his temporary custody and what has been the US response to it?

Joint Secretary (AMS): Let us be clear about this. We have sought the extradition of both these individuals to start with. We will wait for the American response before we look at other options.

Q:...(Inaudible)...

Joint Secretary (AMS): This was done some months ago. Quite some time ago now.

Official Spokesperson: With that I think Vikram has answered all your questions and there do not seem to be any more questions on the US. Thank you very much.

447. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on International Security.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

Defense cooperation is an important aspect of U.S.-India bilateral collaboration. The defense relationship encompasses military-to-military dialogues, exercises, defense sales, professional military education exchanges, and practical cooperation. Both sides plan to continue pursuit of defense cooperation to mutual benefit. Both sides reiterated that the defense establishments of both countries should remain engaged through the process of dialogues, regular staff talks, reciprocal high level visits and other exchanges.

The bilateral defense trade has also been expanding. In this regard, the induction of the C-130J and C-17 aircraft into the Indian Air Force and of the P-8I maritime patrol aircraft into the Indian Navy is an important milestone. Both sides concur on the need to go beyond buyer-seller relations and on the opportunities for wider defense trade and industry collaboration in areas of mutual interest. Both sides are engaging in a number of ways and through diverse forms of dialogue and exchanges to progress defense cooperation.

India and the United States continue to strengthen bilateral cooperation to counterterrorist groups – including through annual Counterterrorism Joint Working Group meetings and the Homeland Security Dialogue, which last met in May 2013. Such discussions have facilitated close coordination in areas such as cyber security including, critical infrastructure protection, global supply chain security, countering counterfeit currency and illicit financial flows; mega city policing as well as cooperation in capacity building. The two countries have also cooperated on the investigation and prosecution of the perpetrators of the 2008 Mumbai attacks, and continue to work together to fight terrorism, organized crime and threats to the internal security of both countries.

India and the United States plan to soon hold another round of whole-of-government Cyber security Consultations chaired by their respective national security councils to coordinate positions on cross-cutting cyber-security issues that impact international and economic security. The Consultations consider overall bilateral cooperation on cyber-security, cyber-security best practices, supply-chain security, and norms of responsible state behavior in cyberspace. In addition, the Ministry of External Affairs and the State Department chaired the first successful meeting of a cyber experts' Strategic Cyber Policy Dialogue focused on cyber policy issues such as norms of responsible state behaviour in cyberspace, internet freedom, internet governance, and cybercrime cooperation. Robust operational cooperation continues between India's Computer Emergency Response Team and the U.S. Computer Emergency Readiness Team.

India and the United States are cooperating to facilitate missions to recover the remains of U.S. service members from World War II.

448. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Economic Collaboration.

June 24, 2013.

At the fourth India-U.S. Strategic Dialogue, India and the United States reaffirmed that economic collaboration between both governments and private sectors is a keystone of our deepening partnership. Business ties have led the way in achieving a nearly fivefold increase in bilateral trade since 2000. Annual two-way trade is more than $100 billion, while the total two way foreign direct investment is nearing $30 billion. These developments are drivers of innovation, economic growth, and job creation for both of our nations.

Working Together on Shared Economic Priorities

India and the United States have resolved to facilitate even greater economic benefits by engaging in robust bilateral economic discussions, working to facilitate greater trade and investment in each others' economies, and discussing opportunities and challenges our industries face. Our numerous bilateral interactions complement our engagement in multilateral fora such as the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). Our bilateral economic cooperation includes:

Economic and Financial Partnership

Since 2010, India and the United States have engaged in an Economic and Financial Partnership (EFP) to deepen India – U.S. engagement in core economic policy areas. Annual ministerial meetings led by the Indian Minister of Finance and the U.S. Treasury Secretary , and additional discussions at the subcabinet level, have focused on macroeconomic policy, G-20 topics of mutual interest, financial sector development, infrastructure finance, anti-money laundering, and combating the financing of terrorism. The EFP meetings have featured participation of our central banks and financial sector regulators. Under the dialogue, Indian economic officials have engaged with U.S. officials and market participants in areas of relevance to India, such as attracting private investment into infrastructure financing, and government debt issuance.

Bilateral Investment Treaty Negotiations

India and the United States have engaged in bilateral investment treaty (BIT) negotiations since 2008, with the last round held in June 2012. A high-standard BIT would deepen the bilateral economic relationship and support economic growth and job creation in both countries. Both sides look to working together to move forward on negotiations.

Commercial Dialogue

Since 2000, the Commercial Dialogue facilitates discussions on key economic topics such as standards for smart grids and intelligent transportation systems, public awareness programs on Intellectual Property Rights , sustainable manufacturing practices, and support for small and medium enterprises.

Trade Policy Forum

The Trade Policy Forum (TPF) enables India and the United States to engage on a wide range of policy issues impacting bilateral trade and investment. As part of an ongoing commitment to strengthen this dialogue, both governments plan to renew expert-level discussions on trade and investment policy issues of interest to the two countries. These discussions are intended to lay the necessary groundwork for the next ministerial-level TPF meeting later this year. The TPF's Private Sector

Advisory Group (PSAG), composed of Indian and U.S. private sector leaders, plans to provide input to both governments.

Aviation Cooperation Program

Under the India – U.S Aviation Cooperation Program (ACP), the U.S. Trade and Development Agency will sponsor the fourth India – U.S. Aviation Summit in October 2013. This Summit and the many technical cooperation projects under the ACP enable engagement between India and the United States in important aspects of aviation safety, technology, and management, facilitating ties between Indian and the U.S. aviation sectors.

Information and Communication Technology Working Group

Through the Information and Communication Technology Working Group (ICTWG), Indian and U.S. officials work to promote collaboration and partnerships in a sector that is at the forefront of innovation. The ICTWG will meet in Washington later this year to discuss cooperation on equipment security, manufacturing incentives, cloud computing, and enhanced cooperation in ICT related innovations. The meetings will be held in conjunction with the private sector to present issues in the context of public-private partnership.

Antitrust Partnership

Increased cooperation between Indian Competition Agencies and the U.S. Antitrust Agencies helps ensure that markets are open and competitive. In September 2012, the Indian Competition Agencies (Ministry of Corporate Affairs and Competition Commission of India (CCI)) and the U.S. Antitrust Agencies (Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC)) signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on Antitrust Cooperation. Under the MOU, all agencies plan to keep each other informed of significant competition policy and enforcement developments in their jurisdictions. The MOU sets out a framework for technical cooperation and consultation on competition policy and enforcement. Since July 2010, the U.S. Agencies have conducted a dozen week-long training programs for the CCI on antitrust topics including mergers, abuse of dominance/monopolization and economic analysis; and they have provided comments and guidance on Indian competition policy. Both sides look forward to additional training programs and staff exchanges – including placement of an FTC economist at the CCI in August 2013, a possible International Fellowship at the FTC for a CCI staff member under the U.S. SAFE WEB Act, and participation by senior officials in the third BRICS International Competition Conference hosted by the CCI in New Delhi, November 20-22, 2013.

India-U.S. CEO Forum

The India-U.S. CEO Forum is a unique gathering of CEOs and senior government officials from both countries that enables a forthright conversation about immediate policy issues that are impeding greater trade and investment between our two countries. The Forum also provides an avenue for both sides to identify ways that public-private collaboration could fill gaps in the market that neither would, nor could pursue alone. The CEO Forum has facilitated new collaborative initiatives in key areas such as infrastructure financing, aviation, clean drinking water, and renewable energy. At its next meeting on July 12, 2013 in Washington, it intends to further develop joint initiatives and priorities, and discuss ways to overcome business challenges.

State-to-State & City Engagement

Over the past year, economic ties at the state and city levels have grown. Several highlights include:

- Maryland Governor Martin O'Malley's trade mission resulted in several new commercial deals in education, technology, life sciences, and energy with a combined value of more than $60 million.
- Washington state's Governor Christine Gregoire led a trade mission of nearly 50 business, education and government leaders and established partnerships in energy, life sciences, and film.
- City mayors like San Antonio's Julian Castro are laying solid groundwork for enhanced city-to-city engagement with new and existing India partners.
- The Confederation of Indian Industries brought a delegation of business leaders from the state of Jammu & Kashmir to visit several U.S. cities.

- The U.S.-India Business Council (USIBC) led a delegation to attend Vibrant Gujarat, and USIBC also sent a Chairman's Executive Mission to participate in the first U.S.-India Business Summit in Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh.

American Business Corners

export.gov

The new American Business Corners initiative is facilitating economic engagement with India's booming urban centers and strengthening India – U.S. business connections by providing Indian entrepreneurs information about trade and investment opportunities with the United States. To date, the U.S. Commercial Service has opened 12 American Business Corners in India from Chandigarh to Thiruvananthapuram and from Surat to Guwahati.

449. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Sustainable Growth, Energy and Climate Change.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

At the June 24, 2013, U.S.-India Strategic Dialogue in New Delhi, Secretary of State John Kerry and Minister of External Affairs Salman Khurshid reaffirmed their countries' strong commitment to work collaboratively to help ensure energy security, combat global climate change, and support the development of low-carbon economies that will create opportunities and fuel job growth in both countries, recalling the 2009 U.S.-India Memorandum of Understanding on clean energy, energy efficiency, energy security, and climate change. Both sides reaffirmed that technological and business innovation, scientific cooperation, research, development and deployment of environmentally-friendly technologies and products, open trade, and sound regulatory frameworks are needed to deliver solutions for sustainable growth.

U.S.-India Energy Dialogue

The two sides noted the robust and full range of cooperation under the U.S.-India Energy Dialogue, highlighting ongoing engagement in the areas of electrical grid cooperation, energy efficiency, expanding markets for renewable energy technologies and addressing barriers to clean energy deployment, shale gas resource assessments and sharing lessons on exploitation, clean coal technology development, and civil nuclear energy.

U.S.-India Climate Change Dialogue

The two sides plan to enhance the existing U.S.-India Global Climate Change Dialogue to engage in constructive discussions on the Durban Platform negotiations under the United National Framework Convention on Climate Change, to facilitate climate policy dialogues and exchanges, and to identify opportunities for further and significant bilateral cooperation.

India-U.S. Civil Nuclear Energy

Over the past year, negotiations leading to the construction of U.S. nuclear power plants in Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh have continued with notable progress made towards land acquisition. Additionally, our nuclear regulatory agencies have increased their scope of cooperation on key safety issues. Both the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) and the Indian Atomic Energy Regulatory Board (AERB) have been working to finalize an arrangement for the exchange of technical information and cooperation in nuclear safety matters, which is needed to expand upon their current level of cooperation. A key example of cooperation under this arrangement would be the NRC working with the AERB to assist with AERB's work to prepare to certify and license the operation in India of U.S.-origin nuclear power plants.

Oil and Gas Working Group

The U.S. Department of Energy and Indian Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas are working to renew an MOU for Cooperation in Gas Hydrates aimed at increasing the understanding of the geologic occurrence and the potential of methane production from natural gas hydrates in India and the United States.

New Joint Working Group on Sustainable Growth

On May 7, 2012 USAID and the Planning Commission of India signed a Statement of Principles forming a new Joint Working Group on Sustainable Growth that will support efforts to “enhance Indian and U.S. capacity to develop long-term plans and strategies to achieve low carbon inclusive growth.” It should also help us in development and adoption of clean technologies.

Shale Gas Feasibility Studies

On May 3, 2013, the U.S. Trade and Development Agency (USTDA) signed an agreement to conduct a study to support Essar Oil Limited in further assessing its coal bed methane license areas for the presence of commercial grade shale deposits, moving India closer to a potential new domestic energy resource offering cleaner alternatives to coal. USTDA signed a new grant agreement during the Strategic Dialogue for a second study to support Deep Industries Limited in assessing its conventional oil and gas license areas for the presence of commercial grade shale deposits.

Regional Gas Markets

The Department of State held an energy security roundtable with Indian counterparts in May 2013 and discussed the development of an Asian natural gas market to provide more secure and diversified supplies of natural gas throughout the region. The U.S. will continue to engage with India including through the U.S.-India Energy Dialogue to address challenges such as financing gas infrastructure, share data on regional and global natural gas trends, and partner on market development capacity building activities.

Unconventional Gas

The Department of State’s Unconventional Gas Technical Engagement Program (UGTEP) has promoted unconventional gas development in India by hosting a delegation from the Ministry of Petroleum and natural gas in the U.S. and holding a workshop in New Delhi in 2013. UGTEP is increasing its engagement with India by funding a tight gas and shale oil resource assessment to be concluded this year.

Refineries

At the request of the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas, USTDA brought representatives of India's Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas and directors of state-owned refineries to the United States to meet with U.S. companies specializing in a range of refinery efficiency and residue up-gradation technologies. The Indian refiners are looking for ways to improve refinery efficiency and productivity by integrating slurry hydro-cracking and advanced conversion process technologies, presenting opportunities for U.S. firms in this sector. The delegation visited Chicago, Houston, and New Orleans in May 2013.

Energy Efficiency and Sustainable Cities

The U.S. Department of Energy is working in two Indian states – Rajasthan and Tamil Nadu – that are in the process of implementing the Energy Conservation Building Codes (ECBC). One city in each State (Jaipur in Rajasthan and Chennai in Tamil Nadu) has been selected to showcase implementation at the local level; the work should have benefits beyond those cities. DOE through Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (LBNL) is working with India to adopt Building to Grid (B2G) best practices to improve the energy efficiency of data centers and measures to improve energy efficiency performance of exemplary IT office buildings.

Renewable Energy

DOE's National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL) is collaborating with India's Solar Energy Centre (SEC) to increase understanding of how solar photovoltaic modules perform in different climatic environments over long periods of time and to develop testing procedures to help improve product reliability. NREL is updating solar maps for India with new data obtained on aerosol optical depth from the Indian Space Research Organization. DOE/NREL and India's Centre for Wind Energy Technology (C-WET) are collaborating to enhance existing wind resource characterizations for priority areas in India.

U.S.-India Partnership to Advance Clean Energy (PACE)

Prime Minister Singh and President Obama announced PACE in November 2009 to improve energy access and promote low-carbon growth. Under PACE-Research, in 2012, the Government of India and the Department of Energy are supporting three innovative public-private U.S.-India consortia work in solar energy, building efficiency, and advanced biofuels under the $125 million Joint Clean Energy Research and Development Center. The Clean Energy Finance Center, a partnership between OPIC, the Ex-Im Bank, USAID, the Department of Commerce, and USTDA has provided roughly $2.0 billion in renewable energy financing to India, including financing nearly 40 percent of India's first 1,000 MW of installed solar energy capacity. USTDA also supports the U.S.-India Energy Cooperation Program, a partnership of U.S. companies and the two governments which provides project development support to the Indian energy sector in such areas as energy efficient buildings, smart electrical grid development, and solar power generation, including as part of a rural micro-grid initiative. Under PACE-Deployment, USTDA has also supported a package of smart grid feasibility studies, pilot projects and technical assistance aimed at improving the reliability and efficiency of India's electricity supply, and was able to announce a new commitment to develop a Smart Grid Test Bed with India's Central Power Research Institute (CPRI), USAID's $20 million PACE-Deployment technical assistance program is improving end-use energy efficiency and increasing the supply of renewable energy with a focus on strengthening policy and regulatory institutions, increasing access to finance, and enhancing institutional capacity.

In May 2013, USTDA signed a grant agreement with Reliance Infrastructure Limited. The grant agreement supports funding for a feasibility study and pilot project for the installation of a demand side management (DSM) power system on Reliance Infrastructure's Mumbai distribution system. Reliance Infrastructure has selected Innovari, Inc. (Austin, Texas) as the contractor for the project. Innovari will assist Reliance Infrastructure in deploying and utilizing the new smart grid DSM system to manage peak demand and more efficiently utilize its electric power infrastructure. Reliance and Innovari were able to sign their contract for the execution of the pilot during the Strategic Dialogue.

Clean Energy Finance

USAID announced a new loan guarantee under the Development Credit Authority that will mobilize at least $100 million for clean energy investments.

Clean Energy Ministerial

The United States and India acknowledged the important role of their joint efforts in the Clean Energy Ministerial (CEM), a global forum to share best practices and promote policies and programs that encourage and facilitate the transition to a global clean energy economy. The Government of India hosted the fourth Clean Energy Ministerial on April 17-18, 2013, in Delhi, with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh providing opening remarks. At the Clean Energy Ministerial, India's Ministry of New and Renewable Energy and the U.S. Department of Energy launched the beta version of the Indian Renewable Energy and Energy Efficiency Policy Database (IREEED), an online repository of India's central and state government renewable energy and energy efficiency policies, regulations, and incentive programs for the benefit of policy makers, project developers, businesses, and consumers. The United States and India co-lead the CEM's 21st Century Power Partnership and the Super Efficient Appliances and Equipment Deployment (SEAD) initiative. India's participation in the Clean Energy Ministerial has led to significant domestic achievements, such as becoming the first country in the world to comprehensively regulate the performance, safety, and quality of light-emitting diodes (LEDs). Through the CEM, India is also paving the way forward for a new model of power sector work, focusing on peer-to-peer engagement with international experts on grid integration of renewable energy sources and energy efficiency.

U.S.-India Collaboration on Smart and Efficient Air Conditioning and Space Cooling

The United States and India announced collaboration on smart and efficient space cooling that will aim to facilitate the AC market transformation to super-efficient space cooling technologies. Under the collaboration, the United States intends to support sharing of technical expertise and experience, building on and contributing to several existing collaborations like SEAD, the 21st Century Power Partnership, and PACE-D/PACE-R.

Arctic Council

On May 15, India was welcomed as a new Observer State to the Arctic Council. The Arctic environment is changing rapidly, primarily as a result of global climate change. The emergence of new challenges and opportunities in the Arctic is drawing greater global attention. India is a major player in global scientific climate studies and has a research station in the Arctic. India's observer status in the Arctic Council should bring reciprocal benefits to the global community by enhancing global science collaborations and data exchanges on climate modeling and research.

Forest-Related Initiative

A Partnership agreement was signed between the U.S. and India for the Sustainable Forests and Climate Adaptation programme on September 30, 2010. Under President Obama's Global Climate Change Initiative, in July 2012, the Indian Ministry of Environment and Forests and USAID initiated a five-year, $14 million contract to take Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation (REDD+) actions to scale in India. The program is to: (1) develop and deploy scientific tools and methods for improved ecosystem management, forest carbon inventory, and monitoring; (2) design modalities to provide better incentives to forest-dependent communities for forest management and conservation; and (3) enhance human and institutional capacity. USAID works in collaboration with the U.S. Forest Service on this initiative.

Disaster Preparedness and Climate Change Adaptation

USAID/India's Disaster Management Support project, in collaboration with the Indian Ministry of Home Affairs aims to reduce the vulnerability of eight Indian cities to climate change-related disasters. The project, which started in October 2012, should enhance institutional capacities to integrate climate risk reduction measures in development programs, undertake disaster risk mitigation activities based on scientific analyses, and enhance community preparedness and measures. The U.S. Geological Survey collaborates with India on ground water and aquifer studies.

Short-Lived Climate Pollutants

Through the Global Methane Initiative, the United States and India collaborate on a range of joint projects and programs to capture methane and use it as a clean energy source. Additionally, the U.S. EPA has collaborated with Indian oil and gas companies to capture and reuse fugitive methane from gas facilities, and has established a research clearinghouse with Coal India on coal mine and coal bed methane. Coal India is using this facility to explore prospects for commercially viable methane capture systems to both reduce emissions and recycle methane as an energy source. India and the U.S. will work together to exchange information on short-lived climate pollutants, including black carbon.

Environment

India has long standing collaborations on environment and forestry with various U.S. agencies including the U.S. Environment Protection Agency (EPA), the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS). EPA has been an active partner with India in several areas, including environmental governance and air quality. The USFS and the USFWS have collaborated over the past few decades with India in the areas of watershed management, wildlife conservation, improving forest health and productivity, and integrated forest planning and management for conservation of biological diversity in India. The USFS has also conducted workshops in India on carbon monitoring and assessment, and climate adaptation and mitigation issues in the Eastern Himalayas.

450. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Joint Fact Sheet on Science & Technology Cooperation.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

India and the United States enjoy robust bilateral science and technology cooperation. This collaboration has been vital in achieving a broad range of shared goals, including sustaining economic growth and job creation; allowing our citizens to live longer, healthier lives; developing clean sources of energy; and protecting our environment for future generations. The India-U.S. Science and Technology Cooperation Agreement, signed in 2005, established the Joint Committee meeting (JCM) to plan, coordinate, monitor, and facilitate bilateral cooperation in science and technology. The JCM biennially convenes leaders from both countries to provide strategic guidance for our S&T initiatives. The Commission, co-chaired by the Indian Minister of Science and Technology and the Science Advisor to the U.S President, has met twice, in June 2010 and in June 2012. The joint Commission developed an action plan for 2012-2014 that includes joint projects, joint workshops, exchange visits of scientists, and establishment of virtual networking in various disciplines such as Basic and Applied Sciences; Atmospheric, Environmental and Earth Sciences; Health and Medical Sciences; Data Sharing; Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics Education; Innovation; and Women in Science.

To realize the potential of science and technology, India and the United States maintain active engagement aimed at fostering cooperative cutting edge research and building public-private partnerships that support technology-based innovation and entrepreneurship.

Working Together on Cutting Edge Science Research and Development

Under the auspices of an agreement signed in July 2011 between Indian Department of Atomic Energy (DAE) and the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE), the DAE and the DOE are exploring collaborative mechanisms to develop next-generation, high-intensity superconducting radio frequency proton accelerators and enhance cooperation in related physics research.

Tackling the Scourge of Diabetes

Approximately 62 million Indians and 26 million Americans suffer from diabetes. Under a 2012 agreement between Indian Ministry of Health and Family Welfare and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services , the Indian Council of Medical research and the National Institutes of Health's National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases (NIDDK) are conducting cooperative research aimed at developing a better understanding of the mechanisms underlying diabetes and identifying innovative solutions to prevent and treat the disease. A joint workshop on this subject was organized by ICMR and NIDDK in partnership with the India- U.S. Science and Technology Forum (IUSSTF).

Rotavirus Vaccine

Through a unique India-U.S. social innovation partnership involving India's Department of Biotechnology, U.S. National Institutes of Health, U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, PATH, Bharat Biotech, Stanford University, All India Institute of Medical Sciences, and a range of other public and private partners, collaborators recently released the results of a Phase 3 clinical trial involving a new rotavirus vaccine: ROTAVAC®. Positive results from the Phase III clinical trial, involving more than 6,000 participants in India, showed that ROTAVAC® has an excellent safety and efficacy profile, and could be recognized as the first entirely new vaccine developed within India in over 100 years.

Low-Cost Medical Technologies

The U.S. National Institutes of Health signed two Joint Statements in 2013 with India's Department of Science and Technology and Department of Biotechnology. The Joint Statements are intended to initiate new areas of bilateral scientific collaboration focused on the development of low-cost, diagnostic, and therapeutic medical devices, and to continue such existing collaboration.

Joint Astronomy to Better Understand Our Solar System

Through a partnership between the Indian Initiative in Gravitational Observations (IndIGO) and the U.S. Laser Interferometer Gravitational-wave Observatory Laboratory and other institutes in India, both sides are working to build a world-class gravitational wave detector in India that will greatly enhance a network of detectors under construction in the United States, Europe, and Japan to study gravitational waves emanating from some of the most cataclysmic events in our universe – black holes, neutron stars, and supernovas. This research may improve our understanding of the Big Bang. India has proposed realizing this goal in its Twelfth and future Five-year Frameworks.

Collaborating on Innovative Science and Technology Research

Indian Department of Science & Technology and the United States endowed the India-U.S. Science & Technology Forum (IUSSTF) in 2000 with matching funds to facilitate mutually beneficial bilateral cooperation in science, engineering, and health. Over the past ten years, the IUSSTF has facilitated more than 12,000 interactions between Indian and U.S. scientists. In 2012-2013, IUSSTF supported over 30 bilateral workshops, four advanced schools, 10 virtual joint research centers, three innovation/technology transfer programs, and dozens of student and faculty fellowships. The IUSSTF, in partnership with the Indian Department of Biotechnology and the Science and Engineering Research Board, has supported 100 Indian and 35 U.S. students for summer internships in Indian and U.S. academic/ research institutions respectively. Khorana Technology Transfer course was launched during July 2012 in partnership with DBT for training of Indian scientists on US best practices on technology management. In April 2013, IUSSTF held its fifth India-U.S. Frontiers of Science symposium involving 60 young Indian and US scientists, and plans are underway for the 2014 India-U.S. Frontiers of Engineering. Both events are done in partnership with the U.S. National Academies to nurture linkages among the young leading scientists and engineers.

Linking Research and Education

India established its Science and Engineering Research Board (SERB) in 2008. The U.S. National Science Foundation (NSF) continues to receive visitors from SERB and India's Department of Science & Technology (DST) interested in learning more about NSF's merit review processes. In January 2013, the U.S. National Institute of Biomedical Imaging and Bioengineering signed an agreement with SERB at the IUSSTF board meeting to launch a new jointly funded collaborative research program on hypertension. DST and NSF are discussing plans to partner through NSF's Graduate Research Opportunities Worldwide, which focuses on providing U.S. Graduate Research Fellows opportunities for enhanced professional development through research collaborations in top caliber research environments in India. SERB has initiated the S.N. Bose Scholar program, implemented by IUSSTF, providing fellowships to 50 Indian and 30 U.S. students for internships at S&T institutions in each other's country. The Indian Department of Science and Technology, in partnership with NSF has also launched a Virtual R&D Network Joint Center in the area of mathematics and statistics covering exchange of faculty, students, postdocs, and joint workshops involving Indian and U.S. universities. DST and NSF are also working on summer internship program for U.S. students in Indian universities to be launched in 2013 under EAPSI program.

Cooperation in Clean Energy

Recognizing the need to address climate change, ensure mutual energy security, and build a clean energy economy that drives investment, job creation, and economic growth, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Barack Obama launched the India – U.S. Partnership to Advance Clean Energy (PACE) under the India – U.S. Memorandum of Understanding to enhance cooperation on energy security, energy efficiency, clean energy and climate change. The MoU was signed on November 24, 2009 during Prime Minister Singh's visit to the United States. As a priority initiative under the PACE umbrella, the Government of India and the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) signed an agreement to establish the Joint Clean Energy Research and Development Center (JCERDC) on November 4, 2010 during President Obama's visit to India. The overall aim of the JCERDC is to facilitate joint innovative research and development through public-private consortia in the three priority areas: Solar Energy, Building Energy Efficiency, and Second-Generation Biofuels in multi-institutional public-private partnership. The JCERDC is funded by the Indian Ministry of Science and Technology and the U.S. Department of Energy. The program is being administered in India by the Indo-U.S. Science and Technology Forum (IUSSTF). Three consortia namely (1) Solar Energy Research Institute for India and the United States (SERIUS); (2) India- U.S. Joint Centre for Building Energy Research and Development (CBERD); and (3) India-U.S. Consortium for development of Sustainable Advanced Lignocellulosic Biofuel Systems (SALBS), with more than 80 academic and industrial partners, were launched during 2013.

Promoting Women in Science and Technology

In 2010, the United States and India identified "Women in Science" as a priority area for bilateral engagement. The U.S. Embassy in New Delhi, in partnership with IUSSTF and DST, has jointly convened annual workshops to advance this initiative since 2009. These workshops have identified mentoring and networking of women science professionals in both countries as areas for bilateral engagement. The IUSSTF has elevated this issue to a flagship program. In December 2012, both sides established a standing steering committee to develop women in science initiatives and convened a workshop to share best practices for promoting women in science professions under the auspices of the India-U.S. Joint Committee meeting on science and technology cooperation. In May 2013, the U.S. State Department led a delegation of U.S. technology executives to India to learn about challenges and opportunities for women in the Indian Information and Communication Technologies sector. An Indian delegation will visit the United States for discussions with concerned agencies to develop a long term sustainable program in this area.

Developing the World's Most Powerful Telescope

Since 2010, India has committed to contribute as a member in the Thirty Meter Telescope to a California Institute of Technology-led consortium that is developing one of the world's most powerful telescopes on Mauna Kea in Hawaii. The Indian consortium partners include the Indian Institute for Astrophysics, the Inter-University Center for Astronomy & Astrophysics and the Aryabhata Research Institute of Observational Sciences. The State of Hawaii granted a building permit for the project in April 2013.

Funding Joint Projects to Leverage S&T Capacity for Innovation & Entrepreneurship

Established in 2009 with an annual budget of $2 to $3 million per year, the Science and Technology Endowment Board (STEB) promote commercialization of jointly-developed innovative technologies with the potential for positive societal impact. Projects focus on improving health and empowering citizens. To date, STEB has awarded four grants, two in the health area (a mobile phone-based diabetes diagnostic and a device to manage fecal incontinence) and two in empowering citizens (improved refrigeration for transporting agricultural products from field to market and providing financial services for the unbanked). This year, seven proposals made it to the final stage of review. Five new awards are being announced on the margins of the 4th U.S.-India Strategic Dialogue in New Delhi on June 24, 2013.

Public-Private Partnership to Harness Data Networks

On June 9, 2012, the first direct India-U.S. advanced science and education network began supporting enormous data flows between the United States and the science center of India in Bangalore. The project, part of the Global Ring Network for Advanced Applications Development (GLORIAD), is a jointly funded public-private partnership between the NSF and Tata Communications, and is housed at the International Centre for Theoretical Sciences of the Tata Institute for Fundamental Research in Bangalore. Since connecting India to GLORIAD, Bangalore scientists have become engaged in an international challenge to improve patient care using genomics data and moving an unprecedented three terabytes of data in a single download with partners at the Harvard Medical School.

Scaling up Innovation to Solve Global Development Challenges

In May 2012, the Indian Government, through the Department of Science and Technology, pledged $5 million toward the Millennium Alliance (MA), a joint initiative between USAID and the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) that is working to identify, support, and scale innovative, game-changing, and cost-effective solutions to developmental challenges in India and around the world. To date, USAID has contributed $7.7 million to the Alliance, which is being matched by FICCI. In September 2012, the MA issued a call for concept notes that led to 1,400 submissions. The MA partners announced the first nine awardees on the margins of the Strategic Dialogue on June 24, 2013.

Arsenic Removal from Drinking Water The U.S. Embassy in New Delhi is leading a multi-stakeholder engagement to develop models for providing safe drinking water in rural areas, one of the national water strategy priorities. Technology providers, Government of India Ministries, non-government organizations, and financing parties will engage to deploy the latest arsenic mitigation technologies in a 25-village cluster affecting approximately 125,000 people as a pilot program in early 2014, with U.S. companies providing the technology and knowhow.

Making Governments More Transparent and Accessible

India and the United States announced in July 2011 the launch of an open-source software platform with the goal of combining elements of both countries' respective open-government sites that house government data. The Open Government Platform (OGPL) enhances data transparency and citizen engagement by making more government data, documents, tools, and processes publicly available through a freely available, open source platform. Through the availability of these data in useful machine-readable formats, innovators, developers, media specialists, and academics can develop new applications and insights that will give citizens more information to make better decisions, and most importantly, spur innovation and create economic opportunity. India and the U.S. have worked with Ghana and Rwanda on pilot projects.

Advancing Plant Health Systems in India and South Asia Project

As part of the efforts under the India–U.S. Agricultural Dialogue, USAID/India’s Agriculture and Food Security Program launched a Participating Agency Service Agreement with the FAS/Office of Capacity Building and Development to provide technical assistance and training to strengthen the institutional capacity of India’s National Institute of Plant Health Management (NIPHM). This training should enable NIPHM to become an International Plant Protection Convention recognized leader for training the international plant health community in South Asia and improve the capacity of India’s Ministry of Agriculture to strengthen quarantine facilities. The outcome encourages collaboration on research projects and strengthens the plant health management and bio-security network in South Asian countries.

Expanding Civil Space Cooperation

The India-U.S. Civil Space Joint Working Group held its fourth meeting in Washington, D.C., on March 21, 2013. The Joint Working Group engaged in a broad range of discussions and endorsed expanded work in a number of areas including measures to improve the use of earth observation data to promote sustainable development and promote the compatibility and the interoperability between the U.S. Global Positioning System and the Indian Regional Navigation Satellite System. Under agreements signed in March 2012, NASA, the U.S. National Oceanic & Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), and the Indian Space Research Organization (ISRO) are cooperating on ISRO’s Oceansat-2 mission and the Global Precipitation Measurement and ISRO-French Space Agency Megha Tropiques missions. NASA and ISRO signed an agreement for activities related to India’s Mars Orbiter Mission. Further, NASA and ISRO are pursuing discussions on the potential development of a joint dual frequency (L & S band) Synthetic Aperture Radar Imaging Satellite Mission. The two agencies will also explore further cooperative space exploration work, including future missions to the moon and other destinations.

Earth, Ocean, and Atmospheric Sciences

Under the 2008 MoU on Earth Observations and Earth Sciences between India's Ministry of Earth Sciences (MOES) and the U.S. National Oceanic & Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), collaboration includes development of Research Moored Array for African Asian Australian monsoon studies through RAMA moorings and generating useful data to understand the Indian Ocean and changing climate, research on climate variability, tropical cyclones, monsoon as well as research on key pelagic fish stocks and harmful algal blooms. A Statement of Intent is currently being produced to facilitate current and future research partnerships in living marine resource research. MoES and U.S. Geological Survey are in the process of finalizing a MOU on earth sciences research that will include collaboration on cropland monitoring and water studies.

Under the 2010 India-U.S. Agricultural Dialogue, a "monsoon desk" at the U.S. National Centers for Environmental Prediction (NCEP) has been established for working together towards improved monsoon prediction. Under the International Ocean Drilling Program (IODP) which is steered by NSF, MoES will conduct deep ocean seabed core sample drilling in the Arabian Sea/Indian Ocean utilizing the "JOIDES Resolution" facility. This research is expected to shed light on global climate change and variations in the Indian monsoons. Discussions continue on the signing of an MoU between the University Corporation for Atmospheric Research (UCAR) and MoES for weather and climate studies that include development of airborne research aircraft.

451. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Space Cooperation.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

India and the United States pursue civil space cooperation under the framework of the Joint Working Group on Civil Space, which was constituted as the follow-up to the India-U.S. Conference on Space Science, Application, and Commerce held in Bangalore in June 2004. Since then, space cooperation has expanded to the areas of space science, earth observation, satellite navigation, natural hazards research, disaster management support, and education.

India-U.S. Civil Space Joint Working Group

The fourth meeting of the India-United States Joint Working Group on Civil Space Cooperation was held in Washington, D.C. on March 21, 2013. The Joint Working Group engaged in a broad range of discussions and endorsed expanded cooperation in a number of areas.

Space Science

Building on the highly successful Chandrayaan-1 lunar mission, the Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) agreed to explore further cooperation in such fields as planetary science and heliophysics, as well as potential future missions to the moon and Mars.

Earth Observation

ISRO, NASA, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration have active cooperation in the area of oceanography through the sharing and analysis of data from ISRO's OCEANSAT-2 satellite. ISRO and NASA are also working to derive the best possible global precipitation data for research and applications using the joint ISRO-French Space Agency Megha-Tropiques satellite and the Global Precipitation Measurement (GPM) constellation of satellites. NASA, in cooperation with the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency, intends to launch the GPM Core Observatory Satellite in 2014 and plans to make data from this satellite available to ISRO for studying tropical atmosphere. ISRO and NASA are also cooperating under the multilateral framework of the Committee on Earth Observation Satellites and the intergovernmental Group on Earth Observations.

Satellite Navigation

India is implementing a 'Global Positioning System Aided Geo Augmented Navigation System (GAGAN)' for civil aviation purposes through a commercial agreement with the U.S. firm Raytheon. India is also working on its indigenous satellite navigation system, a seven-satellite constellation known as the Indian Regional Navigation Satellite System (IRNSS). Coordination to ensure compatibility between IRNSS and the U.S. Global Positioning System is currently under way.

Cooperation in Microwave Remote Sensing

RO and NASA are exploring the possibility of collaborating on the joint development and launch of a radar satellite mission comprising a dual frequency (L and S band) Synthetic Aperture Radar System.

Deep Space Navigation and Tracking Services Support for Mars Orbiter Mission

ISRO is planning the launch of the 'Mars Orbiter Mission' during October-November 2013. NASA is providing deep space navigation and tracking support services to this mission during the non-visible period of the Indian Deep Space Network.

Scientific Personnel Exchange Programme and Fellowship Programmes

ISRO and NASA have worked out Terms of Reference for 'Professional Engineer and Scientist Exchange Programme.' Two NASA scientists specialised in earth observation are expected to visit ISRO centers in 2013. India has also funded the establishment of the "Prof. Satish Dhawan Graduate Endowment Fellowship Programme" at the California Institute of Technology under which, one meritorious graduate student from the Indian Institute of Space Science and Technology will pursue a masters program in Aerospace Engineering at Caltech. The first student is expected to register in September 2013.

452. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Health Cooperation.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

India and the United States share a strong collaboration in the area of public health covering a wide range of issues, including disease prevention (HIV, TB, malaria, polio), maternal and child health, environmental and occupational health, vaccine development, and emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases. The Indian Ministry of Health and Family Welfare and the U.S. Department of Human and Health Services collaborate under the framework of several agreements and arrangements covering different areas of public health, as well as biomedical and behavioural health research.

India-U.S. Health Initiative

The Health Initiative, co-chaired by the Union Minister of Health and Family Welfare and the U.S. Secretary of Human and Health Services, is an inter-agency umbrella organizational mechanism for bilateral discussions between India and the United States on health collaboration and programme implementation. It was launched in Geneva, Switzerland, during the World Health Assembly in May 2010. Under the India-U.S. Health Initiative, four working groups have been organized in the areas of Non-Communicable Diseases, Infectious Diseases, Strengthening Health Systems and Services, and Maternal and Child Health.

The Working Groups' priority efforts include: India National Cancer Institute and other cancer collaborations, tobacco prevention and control, mental health, human resources (emphasis on nursing and allied health professionals), registries of vital records, health system financing and public-private partnerships, food and drug regulation, and international health regulations and disease detection.

Global Disease Detection- India Centre

The Indian National Centre of Disease Control (NCDC) and Ministry of Health and Family Welfare, and U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (U.S. CDC) and Department of Health and Human Services signed a MOU in November 2010 to collaborate in the establishment and operation of the Global Disease Detection-India Centre. The Global Disease Detection-India Centre is now fully operational and experts have collaborated in the areas of food borne diseases, emergency operations, zoonotic diseases, public health laboratory systems, disease surveillance, epidemiology and acute encephalitis. The India National Epidemic Intelligence Service (EIS) (India IES) was launched in October 2012 and the first cohort of EIS officers are being trained in field epidemiology and participating in outbreak investigations. Indian scientists from NCDC and the National Institute of Virology, Pune, are being trained at the U.S. CDC facilities for identification of unknown pathogens. The U.S. CDC is also extending technical support for the operationalization of the Strategic Health Operations Centre within the NCDC for disease surveillance activities under the Integrated Disease Surveillance Project. The NCDC and Global Disease Detection- India Centre intend to organize an Epidemic Intelligence Service conference in October-November 2013.

Prevention and Control of Road Traffic Injury, Trauma System Development, and Emergency Medical Services

The Indian Ministry of Health and Family Welfare and U.S. CDC within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services collaborate in the areas of prevention and control of road traffic injury, trauma system development and emergency medical services under the framework of a Joint Statement signed in June 2009. In collaboration with the U.S. CDC, World Health Organization, and Indian Council of Medical Research, the Indian Ministry of Road Transport and Highways has embarked on an effort to address the burden of injury via a national program on injury control.

India's National Call to Action for Child Survival and Development

On June 14-15, 2012, the Governments of the United States, India, and Ethiopia, in collaboration with UNICEF, hosted the Child Survival Call to Action event in Washington, D.C. to mobilize the world to achieve the ambitious yet achievable goal of reducing all preventable child deaths by 2035. At this summit, India's Minister of Health and Family Welfare announced India's commitment to take a leadership role in reducing preventable child mortality. As a follow-up, India's Call to Action for Child Survival and Development Summit was held in February 2013 and called for an accelerated response to promote child survival. USAID and UNICEF supported the process, with Indian ministries in the lead, to plan and organize this landmark summit. Summit outcomes included the launch of the Reproductive, Maternal, Neonatal, Child, and Adolescent Health (RMNCH+A) Roadmap and a national and state scorecard and dashboard to track progress.

Cooperation on Human and Avian Influenza and other Emerging Infectious Diseases

The Indian Ministry of Health and Family Welfare and U.S. CDC, within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, cooperate on human and avian influenza and other emerging infectious diseases. We are collaborating in capacity building, including sharing of expertise in the operation of high containment laboratories and safe handling of high hazard viruses, parasites and bacteria, development of protocols and standard operating procedures, sharing expertise in the area of pathogen detection, diagnosis, epidemiology, disease surveillance, virology and vaccinology.

Collaboration between Regulatory Authorities

The Drug Controller General of India and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) have been collaborating in the area of training, regulation of medical devices, clinical research, pharmaco vigilance, and e-governance. A Statement of Intent between the U.S. FDA and Indian Central Drugs Standard Control Organization is under discussion to create a framework for expanding cooperation in these areas.

Collaboration between Biomedical and Behavioural Health Researchers

Over the past few decades, the U.S. National Institutes of Health (NIH), the Indian Council of Medical Research, and India's Department of Biotechnology have developed a robust relationship in the biomedical and behavioral health sciences. These bilateral research collaborations are focused in several high-priority areas for both sides, including research related to HIV/AIDS, maternal and child health, infectious diseases, diabetes, cardiovascular diseases, eye disease, hearing disorders, mental health, and low-cost medical technologies. The NIH currently has bilateral agreements with the Indian Council of Medical Research and the Department of Biotechnology in the areas of HIV/AIDS, vaccine research, vision, maternal and child health research, mental health, neurology and addictive disorders, diabetes research, and the development of low cost diagnostics. In addition, the NIH supports an International Center for Excellence in Research for Tuberculosis as well as two International Centers for Excellence in Malaria Research.

Collaboration in the Area of HIV/AIDS

Since 2004, the United States, through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), has supported India's implementation of its large-scale, multi-faceted HIV/AIDS program through the National AIDS Control Organization (NACO). Working in close partnership with NACO, PEPFAR has contributed $261.6 million to India between 2004-2012 for HIV prevention, care and treatment. The U.S. CDC, USAID, and NIH all have bilateral agreements and arrangements with Indian institutions to address HIV/AIDS. CDC's agreement (signed May 2010) is to expand and deepen engagement with Indian institutions in laboratory systems, strategic information, and capacity development. USAID's agreement (signed September 2010) is to collaborate on improving quality and coverage of services to key populations and vulnerable populations, enhance private sector engagement to complement the Indian government's prevention to care continuum efforts, strengthen supply chain management systems, strengthen national capacity on behaviour change communication programming, and support the global transfer of best practices. NIH's arrangement, signed October 2011, is to advance epidemiological, prevention, and operational research on HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

453. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Cooperation in Higher Education.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

India and the United States share strong linkages and a history of collaboration in the field of higher education. The United States is the most favoured destination for Indian students, with more than 100,000 Indian students pursuing higher studies in the United States. In response to strong interest among academic communities in both countries we convened a highly successful India-U.S. Higher Education Summit in Washington D.C. in October 2011 that ultimately led to the establishment of an annual bilateral Higher Education Dialogue.

India-U.S. Higher Education Dialogue

The annual Higher Education Dialogue was originally held in June 2012 in Washington, D.C. and is being held in New Delhi on June 25, 2013. Key areas of collaboration include student and faculty exchange, research cooperation, implementing technology-enabled education strategies such as e-learning and online courseware, cooperation between community colleges, and facilitating partnerships between Indian and American universities.

Singh-Obama 21st Century Knowledge Initiative Awards

Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Barack Obama announced the Obama-Singh 21st Century Knowledge Initiative in November 2009 to fund institutional partnerships between Indian and U.S. institutions of higher education, through faculty exchanges and research and innovation collaboration in the priority areas of food security, climate change, sustainable health and public health. Each side has committed $5 million for the initiative, which will grant awards of up to $250,000 to selected projects. Eight projects were selected in the first round of awards in 2012 and eight awards are being announced during the second Higher Education Dialogue in New Delhi on June 25, 2013.

Fulbright-Nehru Partnership

The Fulbright-Nehru program, supported by both governments, has nearly tripled in size over the last four years, with approximately 300 students and scholars from the United States and India participating annually. The United States now exchanges more faculty under this program with India than with any other country in the world. The Fulbright Program and related exchanges with India have benefited more than 18,000 American and Indian students and scholars since 1950.

Raman Fellowships

The C. V. Raman Fellowship program, announced during the Higher Education Summit in 2011, aims to place junior faculty members from India for post-doctoral research in U.S. higher education institutions. The first cohort of 126 Raman Fellows will conduct post-doctoral research in different U.S. institutions beginning in August 2013.

Development of Community Colleges

The Ministry of Human Resource Development has finalized a framework for establishing community colleges in India. A high-level Indian delegation visited the United States in May 2012 to study the community college system. The Ministry of Human Resource Development organized an International Seminar on Community Colleges in New Delhi on February 6-7, 2013. Under Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs Tara Sonenshine led a delegation that included representatives from U.S. community colleges to attend the seminar. The American Association of Community Colleges continues to facilitate cooperation and overall capacity-building efforts between Indian and American partner institutions. Beginning later this year, the United States intends to host a series of delegations of community college leaders from India to the United States for professional development and capacity building.

New UGC Regulations Relating to Foreign Education Providers and Twinning Arrangements

The University Grants Commission (UGC) of India has finalized guidelines for twinning arrangements between Indian and foreign educational institutions. The guidelines will facilitate greater collaboration between Indian and U.S. universities.

Connect India Program

The 'Connect India Program' was announced during the India-U.S. Higher Education Dialogue held in June 2012. It envisages placement of 200

U.S. students at Indian education institutions for a semester of study. Their course of study will be integrated with other activities, including exposure to Indian culture and economy, service-learning with corporate entities and interaction with political representatives. The details are being finalized by the University Grants Commission of India in consultation with Indian universities.

Centre of Excellence on Cyber Systems

India is collaborating with U.S. institutions to establish a Centre of Excellence on Cyber Systems at the Indian Institute of Technology, Delhi. An Indian delegation plans to travel to the United States to identify potential areas of cyber systems collaboration.

India-Support for Teacher Education Program

The India-Support for Teacher Education Program (In-STEP) is a joint project between the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Ministry of Human Resource Development to build the capacity of teacher educators in India. This thirty-month, $4.3 million activity plans to send two groups of approximately fifty teachers each from eastern and northeastern states in India to attend a three-month customized training program at a U.S. university. The training should include teaching pedagogy, observation of in-service and pre-service teacher education, and assessment techniques. Every teacher educator would be asked to prepare a long essay which sets forth a clear proposal for reform of a specific area of teacher education in his/her state or institution. Upon return from the United States, the teacher educators are expected to implement their new skills and knowledge in their classrooms, resulting in better-trained, higher quality teachers. Additionally, the U.S. Department of State provides opportunities through its exchanges for more than 50 U.S. and Indian teachers each year to further develop their subject area expertise and enhance their teaching skills, pursue individual projects, conduct research, follow courses for professional development, lead master classes and seminars, exchange teaching assignments and professional duties, or participate in internships at local schools.

Passport to India

The Passport to India Initiative seeks to increase significantly the number of U.S. students in India. Through partnerships with the private sector and non-governmental organizations, the Initiative promotes internships, service-learning and study abroad so more American students have the cultural understanding and language skills that underpin economic, academic, and social ties, as well as effective diplomacy. The Initiative complements the U.S. Department of State's support for more than 170 U.S. university and high school students to study in India and learn Indic languages each year through its Gilman Scholarship Program, Critical Language Scholarship Program, the National Security Language Initiative for Youth and the Kennedy-Lugar Youth Exchange and Study Program.

Education-USA

Education-USA provides students in India with accurate, comprehensive, and current information about opportunities for study at accredited institutions in the United States. The U.S. Department of State has significantly expanded its Education-USA advising services in India to include more virtual advising, a new mobile app, social media outreach, and a nationwide advising hotline.

454. Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue: India-US Fact Sheet on Cultural Cooperation.

New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

India-U.S. cooperation in the area of culture includes cultural exchanges, art exhibitions, collaboration in areas of conservation and museum management, and the establishment of Indian chairs at U.S. universities.

MoA between Ministry of Culture and Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

The Indian Ministry of Culture and the Metropolitan Museum Art, New York, signed a Memorandum of Agreement in February 2013 to enhance cultural exchanges, training and visits undertaken by museum professionals from both sides and enhance cooperation in areas of conservation, exhibition, academic research, information sharing, public education, promotion and publicity, publication, museum management and short and long term loans.

The Indian Ministry of Culture Vivekananda Chair

As part of the celebrations of the 150th birth anniversary of Swami Vivekananda, a $1.5 million “The Indian Ministry of Culture Vivekananda Chair” was established in the University of Chicago and a plaque of Swami Vivekananda was installed at the Art Institute of Chicago.

Vivekananda Memorial Program for Museum Excellence

The Ministry of Culture is cooperating with the Art Institute of Chicago under the $500,000 “Vivekananda Memorial Programme for Museum Excellence” for upgrading the skills of museum professionals of India. The training of the first batch of Indian museum professionals took place in the Art Institute of Chicago during September-October 2012. The second program will commence in the later part of 2013.

The Last Harvest

The Tagore exhibition “The Last Harvest” was organized at the Asia Society, New York (September 2011 to January 2012) and at the Art Institute of Chicago (January to April 2012).

New DelhiJune 24, 2013*455. Vice President’s Speech at Banquet Hosted in Honour of Vice President of USA.*New Delhi, July 23, 2013.

”Vice President Biden

Excellencies

Ladies and gentlemen

A visit to India by the Vice President of the United States of America is a rarity and, therefore, all the more meaningful. Its significance is enhanced many fold when the visitor happens to be Joseph Biden, a legendary figure in the Senate of United States, known to the world long before he came to occupy, and re-occupy for a second term, this august office.

Your reputation, Vice President, travelled ahead of your arrival last evening. You have been described as a moderate pragmatist and a fundamentally happy person. These are invaluable traits in our troubled times when the effort is to contain the levels of unhappiness that surround us.

Relations between nations, Excellencies, are mostly reflective of a complex set of considerations pertaining to values and interests. The two do not always converge; they may at times even diverge. The challenge to the statesmen, as someone once put it, is to steer on the stream of time with "more or less skill and experience." The endeavour should be to seek points of convergence and build upon them.

Wishing to be friends, it is said, is quick work but friendship is a slow ripening fruit that requires diligent tending.

Happily for our two countries the areas of agreement are considerable and expanding. They are premised on shared values of liberty, constitutionalism, Rule of Law, democracy, tolerance and promotion of diversity. We both believe that discussion is an indispensable preliminary to wise action.

Remarkable progress, Vice President, has been registered in our bilateral cooperation. We now have a tradition of political engagement at the highest level. Your visit today adds to the edifice.

From an Indian perspective we have with the United States more defence cooperation, more strategic dialogues, more economic exchanges and more science and technology partnerships than with any other country. Our cooperation in education and health is particularly note worthy, as is the prospect of even stronger ties in trade, investment, and energy. Each of these furthers our own national effort for inclusive development.

Peace in the world and in our own region is a pre-requisite for sustained and sustainable development. Threats to peace, many in India's immediate region, are the greatest impediments to progress. They emanate from terrorism, extremism, intolerance, injustice and misuse of the benefits of science and technology. It is incumbent on our two nations to counter these threats, jointly and individually, with a realistic perspective of the dangers they pose.

Countering threat to peace is one aspect of our cooperation; equally important and inseparable from it is promotion of stability and widening the global arc of prosperity.

- Both necessitate a deeper understanding of each other's essential interests and legitimate aspirations.
- Both make incumbent an on-going, no-holds barred dialogue.
- Both call for focused cooperation and even more intensive people to people contacts in which, I presume, language is not an impediment.

As vibrant democracies we cherish, as you do, the right to disagree without losing sight of our endeavour for the common good. Your visit and your own long standing personal commitment, Vice President, has contributed to this endeavour.

It has been a pleasure meeting you. I wish you a pleasant and fruitful stay in Mumbai.”

456. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and US Secretary of State Mr. John Kerry.

Washington (D.C), June 24, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends. I welcome you to this media interaction. As is usual, we will first have opening remarks followed by a few questions that the two leaders have agreed to respond to.

May I now request the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid to make his opening remarks?

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Mr. John Kerry the Secretary of State, Secretary Moniz, distinguished delegates from the US, colleagues, friends from the media:

I am indeed delighted to host Secretary Kerry and Secretary Moniz and a very distinguished American Delegation that is here. It is a pleasure to welcome the two Secretaries on their first visit to India after taking over their current responsibilities.

We have just completed detailed discussions covering key strategic pillars of our relationship - security, economics and technology, regional strategic and political issues, and global issues. Our discussions were truly characterized by their convergence and the candour.

Secretary Kerry was positive in his assessment of our strategic partnership, and generous in his appraisal of the potential for the future of our relationship. It is a perspective my colleagues and I fully share. This shared perspective is also reflected in our Joint Statement and in the Fact Sheets drafted by officials on both sides which will be made available to you very shortly.

Today we are expanding our bilateral cooperation to new horizons such as energy while intensifying existing avenues of cooperation in health, science and technology, education, space, defence and peaceful uses of nuclear energy. At the same time, we are very satisfied with the ongoing pace of our political dialogues which have enabled us to intensify bilateral consultations on key issues in our region and beyond including in the larger Asian context. We are delighted to be developing an increasingly global dimension to the India-US Strategic Partnership.

Today at the conclusion of this fourth round of our Strategic Dialogue, we can take satisfaction in the fact that within the few years since we raised our relationship to the strategic footing our bilateral dialogue is wide-ranging to the extent of taking on an all-of-government character. To put that in perspective, we have exchanged as many as 112 senior official and high-level visits in the year 2012. Exchanges in the current year continue to be equally intense and wide-ranging, with over 47 official visits already exchanged covering conversations ranging from Homeland Security to Education, from Space to Energy, and from our trilateral dialogue with Japan to a trilateral conversation with Afghanistan.

A number of important visits and dialogue processes are scheduled over the next several months including the Ministerial Energy Dialogue and the CEOs Forum, both of which are coordinated on our side by Deputy-Chairperson of the Planning Commission.

In participating in special events celebrating our partnership in Green and Affordable Innovation and in co-chairing the Higher Education Dialogue with our Human Resource Development Minister, the Secretary has highlighted the significance of innovation and education as pillars of this strategic partnership. I want to particularly thank him for this as there has otherwise been too little said about these very vital aspects of our partnership which exercise an important impact on the lives of our people.

I want to thank our distinguished visitors for their presence here in India. We deeply appreciate their commitment in this partnership and their substantive contribution during our dialogue. We hope to continue to build on the good work done so far in expanding the horizons of the India-US relationship.

May I say on a personal note that Secretary Kerry and I seem to have struck the right chemistry and we will work on it. It is now my pleasure to request Secretary Kerry to address you, after which we will take a few questions each.

Thank you.

US Secretary of State (Mr. John Forbes Kerry): Thank you very much, thank you, Minister Khurshid.

I do not think we seem to have an ... (Inaudible) ... so, I am happy to be here with you.

I am really delighted to be here at the fourth US-India Strategic Dialogue. This is my first visit to Delhi as Secretary of State, but I have had the privilege of coming here to India many times as a United States Senator. And I am always grateful for the wonderful reception, the warmth of the reception, the good friendships that I have here as the Minister said this morning too where he said 'welcome home'. So, in a sense it is a second home, and I appreciate the chance to be here.

I want to thank the External Affairs Minister and the Government of India for a wonderful welcome to our entire delegation. I commented this morning that there were more people from more agencies at a higher level than I get to see on any given day in Washington. It is a significant representation, and there is a reason for that significant representation. It is because this is a very important relationship, it is a very important dialogue, and today I think the breadth of the issues that we discussed really underscores that reality.

I am very pleased to announce that in furtherance of this dialogue and in an effort to keep the high level that we think this relationship deserves that Vice-President Biden will be visiting India in late July in order to continue this dialogue, and I look forward to welcoming the External Affairs Minister to Washington as soon as we work out a date.

This is the first time that Minister Khurshid and I have together led this dialogue. Both of us are particularly and committed to taking this relationship to new heights. India and the United States - two of the most powerful economies in the world, two democracies, two countries that share so much in terms of our values and our aspirations - we believe have an opportunity to be able to set a new standard for cooperation on the number of challenges that we all face.

Twenty years ago, as a United States Senator I led one of the first, if not the first, US Senate Trade Delegation visits to India. It was at a time when there was a fellow who was the Finance Minister by the name of Singh the current Prime Minister. He had just embarked on a series of major economic reforms and nobody quite knew where those were going to go, where they would take either India or the rest of the world. Now, that is a matter of history. It has taken India to new economic heights and potential.

But relationships do not transform by chance, they transform through a lot of hard work and through a shared vision, and that is exactly what the Strategic Dialogue that we have engaged in today is all about. It is an effort to galvanise both sides to think ambitiously and creatively about the next steps in the partnership so that twenty years from now our successors will stand here before you and they will be able to look and say how far the relationship has come.

In witness of that today we talked about space, space cooperation, about technology and technology possibilities of joint venture. We talked about procurement issues between our countries. We talked about defence co-development, co-manufacture, co-purchase. We talked about education, about agriculture, about health, and ways in which we cooperate in terms of health capacity building. We talked about commercial enterprises. We talked about some of the impediments to joint investment and to foreign investments. And we were reassured certainly from our part that India is taking important steps to try to address each of those concerns, and that we are committed to taking steps to address the concerns of our friends in India. There are always mutual concerns.

Yesterday at the Habitat Centre I had the privilege of speaking and I talked about how India and the United States are really uniquely positioned and equipped to take on some of the toughest challenges of our time, particularly security challenges, the challenge of global climate change, and the challenge of bringing full economic possibilities to not just our populations but to the region and to other countries.

So, in today's Strategic Dialogue we dove into these, as I mentioned, into all of those topics. We talked about how to increase our energy cooperation, our efforts with respect to climate change and other issues. Let me highlight a couple of the outcomes from our discussion today.

First, we reaffirmed that the United States and India share a very specific and similar vision for peace, democracy and stability in Asia and in the Indian and Pacific Oceans. We welcome the strong leadership that India plays today both in the region and on the global stage. And there is more that we can do together.

Both of our countries support a stable, democratic, united, sovereign and prosperous Afghanistan. We are grateful for India's investment in Afghanistan and support and help. We support India's bilateral economic assistance programmes with Afghanistan with its private sector investment and its leadership in promoting regional economic integration.

I think it is safe to say that our economic engagement has seen tremendous progress in the last decade. Since that time, trade between the United States and India has grown five-fold just in the years of the Obama Administration. Investment between our countries has grown by a factor of ten. In last year we almost topped 100 billion dollars in two-way trade in goods and services, and we are on track to do even better this year in 2013. It is a good start. But both of us agreed today that we can do better, we can do even more, we can break down trade and investment barriers. And I was particularly appreciative of the productive discussion that we had on those issues.

India is currently reviewing the text of its bilateral investment treaty model, and we agreed today to try to look forward and move forward on that model as soon as possible.

We had a productive dinner last night with business leaders from the United States and India. I look forward to welcoming India's Ministers of Commerce and Finance to the United States for the CEO Forum that I will host in the State Department on July 12.

I was also pleased that the United States and India reaffirmed our commitment to full and timely implementation of the civil nuclear deal. We welcome particularly the intention of Westinghouse and the Nuclear Power Cooperation of India to arrive at a commercial agreement. And we agreed that that commercial agreement should be arrived at by September of this year.

I have been a strong personal advocate of this civil agreement. Since I came here a number of years ago and engaged with Prime Minister Singh and then with our Congress and we shepherded it through our Committee ultimately, and was pleased that it was accepted, I will continue to be a strong advocate.

We also talked today about the common threat of terrorism. Democratic societies such as ours have obviously suffered at the hands of terrorist groups. We are open, we are more open than others. We welcome people to our countries. And at our Homeland Security Dialogue in Washington last month and here in the Strategic Dialogue today, we discussed ways that we can further cooperate on keeping our countries safe.

I spoke extensively last night about the imperative for both the United States and India to act forcefully and cooperatively on the subject of climate change. Climate change grows more urgent. The science grows more compelling. And it screams at us, all of us, to take action. There is no country in the world that has not experienced some of the impact of climate change already. Together, India and the United States are undertaking clean energy research. We are collaborating on development efforts. And together we believe we can do more to work on climate change. To that end we agreed today that we will create a Working Group, which Minister Khurshid and I will coordinate within our respective governments, in order to intensify our efforts to find out ways that we can bilaterally join together in order to address the urgency of climate change.

I might add that led by the very very vibrant diaspora, the Indian American diaspora, we have seen our exchanges, our travel, our higher education cooperation greatly expand. And we want to take that too to another level. As large and as prosperous as our democracies are, both the United States and India know that transformative change takes a certain amount of time. But we are both countries of innovators and big thinkers. You see that in the remarkable accomplishments of technology and of other efforts in India in the last years.

We also have vibrant civil societies. We welcome that. And we have a vibrant free press. We share common values and goals, and we both share the will and the determination to keep pressing forward towards positive change. So I am convinced that the US-India friendship, as President Obama said, is one of the defining partnerships of the 21st century. And today I believe we laid a path for helping to make certain that everybody understands that.

We have made a long list of items that we need to follow up on, and we are undertaking to create an action plan so that these won't just be words but they will be policies and programmes that will be implemented, that can improve the lives of both of our people and hopefully in keeping with our values and our spirit, they improve the lives of our neighbors around the world.

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Official Spokesperson: We will now have questions.

Q(Indian Media): Minister Khurshid, the same companies that actually refused to engage with India on citing privacy issues basically give that kind of information to the US. They give the US access to private emails and two other confidential communication records. Is that cause for concern? Did you raise it with Secretary Kerry? What was his response?

And Secretary Kerry, do you think this is a case of double standards - one set of standards for American citizens and their right of privacy and another set of standards for the rest of us?

External Affairs Minister: I think saying have you raised it with Secretary Kerry might not be the correct way of looking at it. This is an area that we are both interested in and we discussed it. We discussed it and I think it is important to keep a distinction in mind, and I am sure that Secretary Kerry will tell you from the American point of view, but to keep a distinction in mind as to get access to content of communications is one thing and being able to study by way of computer software patterns of communications whether that is emails or telephone calls is two different things. I think the President of the United States has already spoken of this and has indicated their information that in several countries terrorist strikes were prevented because of some of this work that they have been able to do.

Now, the issues of privacy and issues of reciprocity etc., are issues that we will all keep in mind, and these are matters that engage our attention on both sides, and we are constantly in touch, and if there is need for anything to be brought to the notice of either side, it will be done so. But to that extent I think a meaningful discussion, amongst many other things that we have discussed, briefly took place on this as well.

US Secretary of State: I am really glad you asked that question and I am very very happy to answer it. And I want to answer it very very carefully because there is an enormous amount of misinformation, there is an enormous amount of misunderstanding about what the programme is in the United States. And I will proudly, proudly and forcefully defend the civil liberties and the protections of those civil liberties of the United States and of India and of other democracies over every other country in the world.

We take painstaking efforts, sometimes at the expense of endangering ourselves, to protect the rights of the people. The fact is that this law that is utilized in the United States does not look at content. It does not look at individual emails. It does not listen to people's telephone conversations. It is a random survey by computer of anybody's telephone, of just a number, not even a name. No name associated with it.

And it takes those random numbers and looks at whether those random numbers are connected to other numbers that they know by virtue of other intelligence or other things that have happened are linked to terrorists in places where those terrorists operate. And only then, only then, can they take that information if it shows an adequate linkage, they will meet a high standard of law, they then go to a judge in a special court and ask that court for permission, meeting the standard of the law to be able to go further in the investigation.

Now, all three branches of the American Government, the executive branch, the judiciary and the legislative branches were aware of this program, were part of this program by virtue of either a vote or implementing it or passing on it as the judiciary. And in so doing, the evidence has shown from our FBI, from our intelligence community, that we have avoided terrorist acts and we have saved lives.

Now, regrettably we live in a world that is more dangerous because there are some people who prefer to kill people randomly rather than to enter a political system and offer a program and try to make a change. Just today I was driving along on the streets here in Delhi and I was remarking how different it is today to see guards and barbed wire and people having to guard buildings and so forth – the things that we did not live with years ago. And this is true in country after country after country. I see security in front of the Capitol of the United States of America. Where once I used to be able to walk in at will, now there are barricades and police officers holding machineguns because some people do not choose to participate in democracy.

Now, I believe that what we have done is to put in place a program that meets the highest standards of scrutiny, and the highest tests of civil liberties. And there is a balance in this world we live in. When the marathon bombers bombed in Boston, Massachusetts, in April, one of the first questions that was being asked was why did not you guys notice that they were in touch with radical websites; how come you did not track them and know that they were being radicalized when they went to Russia or wherever they went? And the answer is, because we do not look at their emails without the sufficient legal justification to do it.

So, this is a dangerous and complicated world we all live in, and I believe that the program the United States has pursued is a very judicious balance of civil rights, civil liberties, but also of the right of people to live free from being killed by terrorists, and the right we have to be able to protect people in the effort to do that.

Q (US Media): Mr. Secretary, the Obama Administration and you personally have invested a great deal in the US relationship with Russia and China, and have indicated previously that things are on a good track forward. What does the Snowden incident tell you about the strength of those relationships and the possibility of future cooperation? Have you asked Russian authorities specifically to prevent Mr. Snowden's departure from Moscow? And if so, what has been the response? Have you spoken to Mr. Lavrov in the past two days?

In the case of China, why did the State Department wait for nearly a week after the arrest warrant was issued to revoke his passport, and when was the Hong Kong Government informed? And finally, what response have you gotten from Latin American countries you have appealed to to deny Mr. Snowden entry?

And I have one question for the Minister. Neither of you spoke really about immigration reform in the United States. Could you outline India's concerns on that issue and indicate what reassurances you received from Secretary Kerry?

US Secretary of State: With respect to the response of the Latin American countries, all appropriate countries have been notified with respect to his status legally and that is the appropriate step to take, to put them on notice that he is an indicted individual, indicted with three felony counts, and that he is wanted by the legal process in the United States, and those countries are now on notice about that. Historically we have always known there are some countries that play outside of that process. And we do not know specifically where he may head or what his intended destination may be.

With respect to his passport, you have to first of all have the notification of the indictment and then obviously after the indictment the process cuts in. I do not know precisely when the order was received, but I do know that apparently at the time, we are waiting actually for confirmation of that, we do not know whether he traveled under that passport or another passport. We just do not know all the details yet. So, I am waiting to get those details, and obviously I am a long way from there. I was in touch with the White House last night and with the State Department. We do have officials of the State Department, Will Burns has been in touch with the Russians directly and they are on notice with respect to our desires.

With respect to the China and Russia relationship and where this puts us, you know it would be deeply troubling obviously if they have adequate notice and notwithstanding that they make a decision willfully to ignore that and not live by the standards of the law. There is a surrender treaty with Hong Kong. And if there was adequate notice - I do not know yet what the communication status was, but if there was - it would be very disappointing if he was willfully allowed to board an aeroplane as a result. And there would be without any question some effect and impact on the relationship and consequences.

With respect to Russia, likewise I again do not know fully yet the determinations or where they are heading. But I would urge them to live by the standards of the law because that is in the interest of everybody. In the last two years we have transferred seven prisoners to Russia that they wanted. So, I think reciprocity in the enforcement of the law is pretty important. And I suppose there is no small irony here! I mean I wonder if Mr. Snowden chose China and Russia as assistants in his flight from justice because they are such powerful bastions of internet freedom. And I wonder if while he was in either of those countries he raised the questions of internet freedom, since that seems to be what he champions.

But evidently, he places himself above the law having betrayed his country with respect to the violation of his oath. And I think there are very serious implications in that. So, we obviously hope countries will live by the standards of the law. When they do not, they invite other countries to break those standards. And I think it is a very serious question for all of us in our relationships.

External Affairs Minister: On immigration, of course as far as our industry is concerned, particularly the IT sector, they have expressed a deep concern but they are also in touch with their counterparts and public representatives in the US. We have got this to the Secretary's notice, and I must acknowledge that he has promised to do whatever is possible for him at his end. This is a matter of legislation, of immigration being rationalized. This is not clearly an immigration issue because a lot of this has to do with work permits to go temporarily and work in a field that has been of tremendous significance and the growth of economic relationship between the US and ourselves in India.

We have a CEOs Forum meeting which will be hosted at the State Department on the 12th of July, and I am sure that when CEOs on both sides meet this is something that they will certainly want to discuss. As partners, we need to factor in concerns of both sides, the potential that the IT sector had unlocked and continues to provide to both sides in the growth of our relationship and find something that is win-win for both sides.

Question (Indian Media): I have a set of interlinked questions for both Foreign Ministers on Afghanistan.

Foreign Minister Mr. Khurshid, did you convey India's concerns over the play of Taliban reconciliation process in Afghanistan? What were those concerns?

And Secretary Kerry, do you think the way the reconciliation is going on amounts to dilution of the red lines? And is the US planning to initiate talks with Haqqani Network?

External Affairs Minister: This is another issue that we discussed. I think to say did you express your concern may again not be the correct way of describing it because I think this is a matter which both sides take with urgency and as a matter of great significance. We need to be on the same page, we need to consult, and we need to share with each other, which is the attitude that we have because we have a dialogue with the United States of America besides as part of our strategic relationship. And we have a trilateral between Afghanistan, United States and ourselves.

Now this is a process and I think it is an experiment that is being done in order to find an alternative for sustainable peace in Afghanistan. One cannot disagree with that. The issues or dimensions or aspects which are of concern to us, I must say with gratitude that the Secretary himself earmarked and said that as we proceed, hopefully the matter will be able to proceed, but as they proceed, it will ensure that none of the concerns of India are overlooked or undermined. And I think that is a good way of our working closely together. I think it is very clear what the objective is. How far that objective is possible, only time will tell. But with caution and care being approached as an objective I think is something that nobody can have a problem with.

US Secretary of State: I agree completely with Minister Khurshid. I think he has articulated very clearly the principles that are guiding us here. We will consult very closely with India and with others in the region. Ambassador Dobbins, who is an experienced diplomat, who is the head of our Afghanistan-Pakistan efforts and who is leading this initiative, will be here in India on Wednesday in order to brief officials directly.

We are working very closely with President Karzai as is entirely appropriate and really required because we are talking about Afghanistan and he is the President of Afghanistan. So, this is an Afghan-led process and it is an Afghan-led process that will only negotiate under certain conditions. Thus far those conditions have not yet been met. So, there is no negotiation at this point. If the conditions are met, then there is a negotiation that will take place not with the United States but with the High Peace Council of Afghanistan.

And one of the requirements or many of the requirements are that the Constitution of Afghanistan be respected, that they not affiliate or associate themselves, in fact disassociate themselves from Al Qaeda and from violence, and that the rights of women and the minority rights will be respected going forward. Now, that is not going to change. And if it is required to change, there obviously won't be an agreement. But it is better to explore the possibilities of having a peaceful resolution and inclusion in a political process if it is possible.

Ultimately, that will be decided by the Afghan people through this negotiation or it will be decided at the ballot box in 2014 without the Taliban. And we will continue under any circumstances, the United States will continue, as President Obama has made clear, to support the Afghan Government, to support the Afghan military, to continue to equip and train it well beyond 2014, and to continue to have a level of a force on the ground that will continue to conduct antiterrorism and counterterrorism activity. So, the hope is that this could provide an avenue for the reduction in violence. But there is certainly a course that we are committed to, if it does not.

Q (US Media): I wanted to follow up a little bit on Afghanistan. Secretary Kerry, you mentioned yesterday during your speech a role for India in the election process in 2014. To both of you, I wanted to see what more if anything you think India could do. Could you perceive or foresee a security role for India post 2014?

And I also wanted to follow-up, particularly to the Foreign Minister on the issue of Iran. India has kept open dialogue with Iran and a much better relationship with Iran than the United States does. What was the nature of your discussion, if any, on Iran and your hopes or your considerations about President-elect Rohani?

US Secretary of State: With respect to the future of Afghanistan, India has invested two billion dollars in development and projects in Afghanistan. And India obviously has its own diplomatic relationships with Afghanistan, its own relationship with President Karzai. And so we certainly hope that India will, and I am confident will from the conversations we have, encourage President Karzai and Afghanistan to be as prepared for the elections as possible, to do anything if the Afghans ask for it and wanted, to be able to be helpful.

Obviously India is not going to interfere - no one should interfere in an election of another country - but if that country needs help in getting either polling or equipment or technical assistance or whatever it might be, any number of countries should be prepared to be helpful because this election must be accessible, accountable, transparent, free and fair. And the people in the country need to know and see that. And so whatever India can do in its relationship with President Karzai to encourage him to help to make sure all the preparations are in place, that the independent Election Commission has the tools and the rules that it needs so that the people of Afghanistan have no question whatsoever about those five qualities I mentioned - the transparency, the freedom, the fairness, the accessibility and accountability.

On Iran, we did discuss Iran of course and we completely understand the relationship that India has. We are appreciative that India has worked hard to reduce its dependency on Iranian oil. That has been an important step and India has been very cooperative in communicating to Iran and standing up publically and holding them accountable for nonproliferation requirements. India has stood up and enforced the IAEA and UN resolutions and requirements, and we appreciate that.

We also believe that hopefully India with its relationship could help urge the new Iranian leadership as well as the old leadership and the Supreme Leader to take advantage of this moment that they would recognize that, we would call on them to urge the Iranians not to miscalculate, not to miscalculate about American and international commitment, I might add all international commitment. China, Russia, the UN Security Council, the UN itself have all set certain requirements that need to be adhered to. And we would urge Iran to prove to the world that its peaceful nuclear programme as they say it is, is in fact peaceful.

They have been told by President Obama and other leaders that there is no problem with having a peaceful nuclear programme, but there is a problem if everybody sees that you are doing it in a way that they have legitimate reason to believe that it is not in fact peaceful. So, we would hope India would help us so that Iranians do not put the world in a position where they are forced to take additional steps with respect to Iran.

External Affairs Minister: I think you have got a pretty good picture there. I can only add that we have a valuable relationship with Iran, but we have not allowed our friendship with Iran to come in the way of our objective commitment to nonproliferation and our commitment to the IAEA provisions because of Iran being a signatory to the NPT. And we do speak about these things frankly on both sides with our friends in the US Administration as well as with people we interact with in the Iranian Government. They do have a new President now and we would want to judge and test as to what the new President's intentions and inclinations are.

My reading from my visit to Iran I conveyed to Secretary Kerry. My assessment, which is only a provisional one, I conveyed to Secretary Kerry. But obviously it is something that is only in the process. We still obviously would want to see a peaceful settlement to the issue that has become a very burning issue. Such comfort is that we can give and ensure for movement forward, we would always willingly do. We can today only express our hope that the process that began, but with a process with which some people might well be getting impatient, is a process that is best taken forward quickly. And we sincerely hope that that is what will happen.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction.

Thank you

457. Joint Statement on the Fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue.
New Delhi, June 24, 2013.

External Affairs Minister of India Shri Salman Khurshid and Secretary of State John F Kerry met in New Delhi and co-chaired the fourth India-US Strategic Dialogue on June 24, 2013. During their first meeting, they reviewed the extensive transformation of the bilateral relationship and identified key sectors of cooperation that will continue to add strategic depth to the partnership.

Secretary Kerry was accompanied at the Strategic Dialogue by Ambassador Nancy Powell, Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz, Admiral Samuel Locklear of the U.S. Pacific Command, Director John Holdren of the White House Office of Science & Technology Policy, National Aeronautics and Space Administrator Charles Bolden, U.S. Agency for International Development Administrator Rajiv Shah, Export-Import Bank Chairman Fred Hochberg, U.S. Trade & Development Agency Director Leocadia Zak, and senior officials from the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security, and Overseas Private Investment Corporation. External Affairs Minister Khurshid was joined by Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission Montek Singh Ahluwalia; Adviser to the Prime Minister on Public Information, Infrastructure and Innovation Sam Pitroda; Foreign Secretary Ranjan Mathai; Home Secretary R.K. Singh; Secretary, Department of Science & Technology T. Ramasami; Secretary, Department of Space, Dr. K. Radhakrishnan; Secretary, Department of Higher Education Ashok Thakur and Ambassador Nirupama Rao.

Regional Strategic Consultations:

Reaffirming their shared vision for peace and stability in Asia and in the Indian and Pacific Oceans, the United States and India underscored their continued support for enhancing regional connectivity, as well as for the continued intensification of India-US engagement through existing regional dialogue mechanisms, including the East Asia Summit process, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Regional Forum and the ASEAN Defense Ministers Meeting Plus. The two sides expressed their commitment to continue to consult closely on issues relating to the region both bilaterally and trilaterally, including in the India-US-Japan format, which has had four successful meetings.

The United States and India reaffirmed the importance of maritime security, unimpeded commerce and freedom of navigation, and the peaceful resolution of maritime disputes in accordance with international law. India welcomed the entry of the United States to the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) as a Dialogue Partner in November 2012, and the United States welcomed India's Observer status to the Arctic Council in May 2013.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry called for sustained commitment and support of the international community for a stable, democratic, united, sovereign and prosperous Afghanistan. The United States and India each reiterated their enduring commitments to support the Afghan Government and all people of Afghanistan through the transition process and beyond, in accordance with their respective Strategic Partnership Agreements. The two leaders emphasized the importance of ensuring that the international community continues to support free, fair, transparent and inclusive Presidential and Provincial Council elections in Afghanistan in 2014. They emphasized the need for continued efforts to enhance the capacity of the Afghan National Security Forces and sustain the socio-economic development of Afghanistan.

The leaders acknowledged that success in Afghanistan requires, in addition to building up Afghanistan's capacity to defend itself, an Afghan-led and Afghan-owned reconciliation process. They agreed that the process should preserve the historic political, economic and social progress made over the past decade.

The two leaders also reiterated the importance of taking concrete steps to promote expanded private investment and trade in Afghanistan.

Security and Strategic Partnership:

The two co-chairs recognized that defense, counterterrorism, and science and technology have become important aspects of the relationship. They welcomed the fact that defense trade had reached nearly $9 billion, and that U.S. and Indian military forces were continuing their professional exchanges, including through regular military training exercises, like the Army series YUDH ABHYAS, which took place in May, and the naval series MALABAR, planned for later this year. They welcomed the delivery of the first P-8I Poseidon for the Indian Navy in May and the first C-17 Globe master III for the Indian Air Force in June. Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry also acknowledged the efforts that the United States and India are making to transform defence ties beyond buyer-seller relationships and to pursue opportunities for technological cooperation for co-development and co-production of defence equipment.

Recognizing the shared challenges that democratic societies such as the United States and India face from terrorist groups, as well as the grave dangers posed by violent extremism, Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry welcomed the convening of the second Homeland Security Dialogue in Washington, May 2013. They reiterated the importance of closer cooperation and development of more intensive partnerships between the two countries in megacity policing, cyber security, global supply chain and transportation security, combating counterfeit currency and illicit financial flows, training of law enforcement agencies, and identifying products and technologies that support law enforcement. They also stressed the need for concerted efforts to address the challenge of terrorism in the region, including the dismantling of terrorist safe havens and disrupting all financial and tactical support for terrorism, and through strengthened cooperation in the Global Counterterrorism Forum. The two leaders reiterated their commitment to continue their cooperation on the Mumbai terror attack in November 2008, including through continued exchanges of information between designated agencies to aid investigations and trials relating to that attack.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry emphasized the need for the United States and India to develop stronger partnerships on cyber-security, including through the next iterations of the Cyber Security

Consultations, the Strategic Cyber Policy Dialogue, and the Information and Communications Technology Working Group. Secretary Kerry and Minister Khurshid reaffirmed the intent of U.S. and Indian law enforcement agencies to develop closer partnerships critical to the shared objectives of countering transnational crime and terrorist threats that impact both countries. To that end, both leaders welcomed the enhancement of existing dialogues to a formal India-US Working Group on mutual legal assistance and extradition, acknowledging the importance of continuing to find effective and efficient mechanisms to cooperate on our shared commitment in law enforcement.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry recognized the very successful partnership being built, through the Strategic Security Dialogue, on issues related to non-proliferation and international security. They reviewed the close cooperation of the United States and India to realize India's intention of joining the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG), the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR), the Wassenaar Arrangement and the Australia Group. Secretary Kerry reaffirmed the United States' support for India's full membership in these groups. The United States also welcomed India's March 2013 update to the Special Chemicals, Organisms, Materials, Equipment, and Technology (SCOMET) list.

Strategic Partnership in Commerce, S&T, Education, and Energy:

Growing trade and investment continue to drive the India-US partnership forward, and bilateral trade in goods and services has reached close to $100 billion. The two sides welcomed the adoption of new regulations regarding foreign investment ceilings in several sectors of the Indian economy, and the creation of new Cabinet-level mechanisms to expedite investment in India's infrastructure. The co-chairs supported increased investment in mutually-rewarding opportunities in their vast and growing markets. The two sides will resume negotiations to conclude a Bilateral Investment Treaty/Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement as soon as India's revised model BIPPA text is ready.

Both governments reiterated their commitment to facilitating greater two-way trade and investment, including with respect to goods, services, and skilled professionals. Both governments also re-affirmed their commitment to strengthening the innovation climate in each country as a means of promoting economic growth and other legitimate domestic and trade policy objectives. Noting the importance of technology to both economies, India and the United States discussed their cooperation under the Information and Communications Technology (ICT) Working Group and reaffirmed plans for a follow on ICT Working Group Meeting in Washington this year. Both sides plan to discuss best practices and cooperation in ICT manufacturing and testing, cloud computing, R&D in ICT and other related areas. To take advantage of the benefits of cyberspace and to manage the increasing threats, both also agreed on the importance of deepening high-level discussions and cooperation on cyber security and internet governance through various mechanisms including the Cyber security Consultations and the Strategic Cyber Policy Dialogue.

The two sides welcomed the increased cooperation and communication between U.S. antitrust agencies and Indian competition agencies that help ensure markets are open and competitive. In September 2012, the U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission and the Indian Ministry of Corporate Affairs and Competition Commission of India signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Antitrust Cooperation to promote technical cooperation and consultations on matters of competition policy and enforcement.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry welcomed the continuation of discussions under the Commercial Dialogue on standards cooperation and the expected launch of discussions on sustainable manufacturing. Minister Khurshid reiterated India's willingness to host the next meeting of the Trade Policy Forum (TPF) in India on mutually convenient dates and have a comprehensive engagement on the full range of issues under the TPF.

The two leaders recognized that India and the United States enjoy ever expanding bilateral cooperation in our science and technology relationship. Together, India and the United States are using science and technology to tackle global cross-cutting issues such as climate change, disease mitigation, water resources, and clean energy. Both countries facilitate leading edge research and are building public-private partnerships that support technology-based innovation and entrepreneurship. India and the United States look forward to the next Joint Commission Meeting in 2014 to plan, coordinate, and provide strategic guidance to help advance our mutual science and technology endeavours.

The two delegations discussed the critical importance of energy to sustaining economic growth and securing prosperity, and acknowledged the robust and full range of cooperation under the India-US Energy Dialogue, co-chaired by the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Energy and the Deputy Chairman of India's Planning Commission. India and the United States plan to continue their ongoing efforts to expand partnerships in clean energy and energy efficiency through the India-US Partnership to Advance Clean Energy (PACE) and under the multilateral Clean Energy Ministerial. Since 2009, PACE - Deployment has mobilized approximately $2 billion in clean energy financing to India and PACE – Research has created innovative public-private consortia through the $125 million Joint Clean Energy Research & Development Centre. They noted the decision taken to create a new Sustainable Growth Working Group under the India-US Energy Dialogue, and the growth of U.S. investment in India's energy sector. India and the United States welcomed additional efforts aimed at financing clean energy investments, promoting the development of smart grid technologies, energy efficient buildings, solar power, smart and efficient air conditioning and space cooling, and expanding off-grid access to clean energy.

The two sides noted the ongoing commercial discussions between NPCIL and Westinghouse towards setting up a nuclear power plant at Mithivirdi in Gujarat. They encouraged the two companies to expedite these consultations. They also took note of the ongoing consultations between General Electric-Hitachi and NPCIL on setting up a nuclear power plant in Andhra Pradesh. Both sides reaffirmed their commitment to the full and timely implementation of the India-US civil nuclear cooperation agreement.

The Minister and Secretary reviewed the good progress on cooperation between the United States and India on particle physics and expressed the desire to finalize an agreement by the end of this summer. They also committed to encouraging the conclusion of talks between the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) and the Indian Atomic Energy Regulatory Board (AERB) on a bilateral information exchange arrangement, by fall 2013. The two sides also praised collaborative research and development under the India-US Civil Nuclear Energy Working Group, which will meet in Mumbai in July 2013 to discuss advancing cooperation in accelerator technology and other nuclear physics research projects.

The Minister and the Secretary welcomed the expanded work plan endorsed by the India-US Civil Space Joint Working Group in a number of areas, including measures that will improve the use of earth observation data to promote sustainable development and the compatibility-interoperability between the U.S. Global Positioning System and the Indian Regional Navigation Satellite System. They applauded agreement by the Indian Space Research Organization and the U.S. National Aeronautic and Space Agency to explore further cooperative space exploration work, including future missions to the moon and Mars. They welcomed the announcement of NASA support through its Deep Space Network facilities to ISRO's Mars Orbiter Mission, and the ISRO-NASA technical discussions to integrate a U.S. L-band and Indian S-band synthetic aperture radar on an Indian spacecraft for earth observation studies. Both sides intend to cooperate bilaterally and in multilateral forums to promote efforts to ensure the long term sustainability of outer space. To this end, both sides plan to undertake discussions on areas of mutual interest such as space situational awareness, and collision avoidance as part of a Space Security Dialogue.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry welcomed the Higher Education Dialogue to be held on June 25, 2013. They reiterated their commitment to the Fulbright-Nehru Program for students and scholar exchange, and lauded the colleges and universities selected to receive funding under the second round of awards of the Obama-Singh Knowledge Initiative, for which the two Governments committed in 2009 to provide $5 million each, over five years. The leaders also lauded initiatives such as the Raman Fellowships for placements of young faculty and researchers in U.S. universities under which a first batch of 126 fellows are scheduled to join U.S. institutions in the current academic session; the 'In Step' initiative for training of in-service teachers; and collaborations in technology-enabled learning, including Massive Open Online Courses.

They underlined the importance of developing further partnerships between U.S. and Indian educational institutions, and developing India's vocational training sector through collaboration with U.S. educational institutions. The two leaders welcomed the initiative to establish community colleges in India. In this context, the Minister and the Secretary welcomed the decision to conclude a Memorandum of Understanding between the All India Council for Technical Education and the American Association of Community Colleges, as well as additional institution-to-institution agreements to be signed on the margins of the Higher Education Dialogue,

To enhance people-to-people connectivity, the two leaders also welcomed the creation of new student programs, such as India's "Connect India" program and the U.S. "Passport to India" initiative. They noted the importance of education as a pillar of the strategic relationship, which not only enhances people-to-people connectivity, but also bolsters Indian institutional capacity to realize the demographic dividend promised by the significant increase of young people in India's population. Cooperation in education supports economic growth in both countries and fosters the innovation and entrepreneurship both nations need to advance together in the 21st century.

The two leaders welcomed the rich mix of public and private science and technology cooperation between U.S. and Indian institutions and partners and underscored the importance of science, technology, and innovation to the well-being and economic growth of our countries. They applauded the announcement of awards from the Millennium Alliance and the Science and Technology Endowment Board celebrating the joint collaborative and innovative spirit between our scientists and technologists. The two countries reaffirmed their commitment to future collaborations in a wide range of disciplines from physics and state-of-the-art telescopes, to increasing the role of women in science and technology, advancing health research by continuing their successes in understanding diabetes, and working towards development of a new rotavirus vaccine. The Indian side underlined its interest to deepen cooperation with the United States in monsoon studies and in developing an Integrated Ocean Drilling Program.

Global Issues:

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry lauded the expansion of the successive rounds of the Strategic Dialogue to encompass a truly global strategic partnership. The co-chairs expressed appreciation for the success of the two countries in leveraging their respective areas of comparative advantage to jointly assist other partner countries across the globe.

Minister Khurshid and Secretary Kerry welcomed the ongoing trilateral cooperation in establishing Open Government Platforms in Ghana and Rwanda, eliminating preventable child deaths, and strengthening agriculture management and extension to expand food security among important African partners such as Kenya, Liberia, and Malawi, while also cooperating to empower women economically in Afghanistan. The two sides also welcomed the continuing bilateral consultations on peacekeeping and recognized the need to expand this senior official dialogue to cover the range of issues in the United Nations.

The two sides welcomed the decisions taken at the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) Conference of Parties held in Doha. They resolved to carry out the Durban Platform, including by developing a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all Parties. They stressed the need for meaningful implementation of the mechanisms set up under the UNFCCC process. Additionally, the two sides agreed to enhance the existing India-US Global Climate Change Dialogue, and identify opportunities for further and significant bilateral cooperation.

Welcoming the outcome of the Rio+20 Conference in June 2012, the two sides reaffirmed that eradication of poverty is at the heart of the global sustainable development agenda.

The two sides welcomed continuing engagement on women's empowerment and the four meetings that have been held since the establishment of the India-US Women's Empowerment Dialogue in 2009. The Minister and the Secretary welcomed the opportunity to further cement India-US cooperation in these existing areas and explore additional areas of mutual interest, including in the fields of clean energy and women in science, technology, and engineering.

The two leaders endorsed the detailed sectoral fact sheets outlining progress achieved in a range of areas since the previous Dialogue in Washington in June 2012, and encouraged Departments and Ministries on both sides to continue to design and implement ambitious plans to further the partnership.

The two co-chairs expressed satisfaction at the consistent progress being made in the annual Strategic Dialogues towards deepening the India-US partnership. Secretary Kerry thanked Minister Khurshid for hosting the fourth round in New Delhi.

The next round of the Strategic Dialogue will be convened in the United States in 2014, on mutually convenient dates.

458. Official Spokesperson's response to a media query on the asylum request from Mr. Snowden.

New Delhi, July 02, 2013.

In response to a media query on the asylum request from Mr. Snowden, the Official Spokesperson said:

"I can confirm that earlier today our Embassy in Moscow did receive a communication dated 30 June from Mr Edward Snowden. That communication did contain a request for asylum. We have carefully examined the request.

Following that examination we have concluded that we see no reason to accede to the request."

Edward snowden, former National Security Agency contractor was responsible for revealing a massive U.S. global surveillance programme.

459. Press Release of the Ministry of Finance on the visit of Finance Minister to the USA.

New Delhi, July 11, 2013.

The Union Finance Minister Shri P. Chidambaram who is visiting the United States, met with top American executives and U.S. Senator Max Baucus, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee .

The Finance Minister Shri Chidambaram met Chief Executive Officers (CEOs) and top management officials of a number of American companies with substantial investments in India. Discussions focused on the current business and investment environment in India. The companies included Microsoft, Lockheed Martin, Boeing and International Lease Finance Corporation (ILFC). The issues highlighted by the companies inter alia related to transfer pricing; impact of the Comprehensive Immigration Bill recently passed by the U.S Senate on future business prospects of Indian Information Technology (IT) companies operating in the U.S; and taxation among others.

The companies were appreciative of the measures taken to address concerns relating to Transfer Pricing. Finance Minister apprised the companies of the recommendations of the Arvind Mayaram Committee on enhancing FDI caps in many sectors, and the steps being taken to implement the recommendations. He emphasized the need for U.S companies to set-up local manufacturing bases in India, saying "it is in the mutual interest of both countries for India to become a large manufacturing economy".

The Finance Minister Shri Chidambaram also underscored Indian concerns about the provisions in the Comprehensive Immigration Reform Bill relating to skilled non-immigrant visas.

Finance Minister met with the Chairman of the US Ex-Im Bank, Mr. Fred Hochberg and other senior officials of the Ex-Im Bank.

The Finance Minister Shri Chidambaram met with Senator Max Baucus (D-MT), Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. They exchanged views on the global economic situation. The Finance Minister mentioned that while some concerns have been expressed about the current business environment in India, the policies adopted by the Government of India are pro-growth and WTO compliant. He stressed that the Government of India is committed to ensuring a transparent, fair and non-discriminatory investment environment for foreign investors seeking to do business in India. During the discussion, Senator Baucus fondly recalled his first visit to India as a young student in the 1960s and his meeting with then Prime Minister Shri Jawaharlal Nehru.

460. Press Release of the Ministry of Commerce on U.S-India CEO forum Meeting.

New Delhi, July 13, 2013.

Top CEOs representing diverse sectors of India and US and senior Government officials from both sides deliberated at length issues of common interest and concern, and recommended a number of steps to further strengthen and deepen the bilateral business relationship between the two countries, at the US-India CEO Forum meeting held yesterday at the US Department of State in Washington DC.

The meeting opened with remarks from Union Finance Minister Shri P Chidambaram, and US Treasury Secretary, Mr. Jacob Lew; Union Minister of Commerce & Industry Shri Anand Sharma and US Commerce Secretary, Ms. Penny Pritzker, and US Deputy Secretary of State Mr. William Burns. The CEO Forum Meeting was co-chaired on the Government side by Shri Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission of India and US Trade Representative Mr. Michael Froman; and by Mr. Ratan Tata and Mr. David Cote, CEO, Honeywell, from the CEOs side. The Indian Ambassador to the US, Ms. Nirupama Rao was present in the meeting. US Deputy National Security Advisor Ms. Caroline Atkinson delivered the closing remarks and outlined the future agenda for the Forum.

The sectors discussed in the meeting included agriculture, agriculture value chains, water management, health and life sciences, energy, defense and homeland security.

Recognising the vital role that bilateral trade and investment plays in this global strategic partnership, the US-India CEO Forum was created in 2005 to provide a platform for the Indian and US CEOs to discuss issues of mutual interest and suggest action-oriented recommendations to both governments for consideration.

461. Press Release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the information provided to the Lok Sabha on the passage of the “The Border Security, Economic Opportunity and Immigration Modernisation Act, 2013” in the US Senate.

New Delhi, August 7, 2013.

On 27 June 2013, the United States Senate passed Bill No. S.744, “The Border Security, Economic Opportunity, and Immigration Modernization Act 2013.” While the current Bill is not expected to impact adversely against foreign students, including from India, Indian IT industry has raised concerns over some measures in the Bill that relate to skilled non-immigrant visas, which, if brought into force, after the completion of US Congressional processes in both Houses, is likely to place more onerous requirements on H1-B/L-1 visa dependent firms including higher wages; enhanced audit by U.S. agencies; non-displacement guarantee/ additional recruitment notice requirements; and higher visa fees.

The concerns of Indian IT companies have been conveyed to the U.S. side at Ministerial levels during the recent meetings of Homeland Security Dialogue in May 2013, Strategic Dialogue in June 2013, and at the CEOs Forum in July 2013 by Home Minister, Finance Minister, Commerce & Industry Minister and External Affairs Minister. The Indian Embassy in Washington is working with IT industry to create more awareness in the US Congress on concerns of Indian IT companies regarding the Senate Bill.

Government is examining the Senate Bill with regard to its WTO compatibility. However, the matter can only be taken up before the WTO Disputes Settlement body at an appropriate time once the Senate Bill becomes law.

462. Speech by National Security Advisor Shri Shiv Shankar Menon on “India and the USA” at Aspen Institute India.

New Delhi, September 20, 2013.

Mr. Gautam Thapar, Chairman, Aspen Institute India,

Mr. Tarun Das,

Ladies, Gentlemen and Friends.

I am delighted to be with you again. Aspen India has made major contributions to the transformation of India-US relations in many ways. The high quality Aspen India-U.S. Strategic Dialogue has helped to build the strategic partnership between the two countries. Many of you present today have been deeply involved in this relationship at crucial moments.

One week from today, PM Manmohan Singh and President Barack Obama will meet in Washington DC. I therefore thought that we might take stock of the India-US partnership, its present trajectory, and its prospects.

This will be Prime Minister Manmohan Singh’s sixth bilateral summit with a U.S. President. His first summit in 2005 with President Bush built on the momentum of the previous years to establish a new, bold and transformative agenda for the relationship. Prime Minister’s visit in November 2009 as President Obama’s first state visitor, and President Obama’s own historic visit to India a year later, highlighted the bipartisan character of the relationship; its enduring merit based on shared values and interests; and, the commitment of the leaders to a sustained process of broadening and deepening the strategic partnership. Both leaders have spoken about the India-U.S. relationship as a defining relationship and as one of the most important relationships of the 21st century.

The Transformation

India-US relations have come a long way in the last decade. From a time when we dealt with each other formally, sometimes warily, we today have a full spectrum relationship, between our governments, our peoples and our institutions. I do not need to count the ways for this audience.

For India, the relationship with the US has been the most transformed relationship in the past ten years. What were once considered breakthroughs in the relationship, are now regarded as routine and normal. This is a sign of maturity in the relationship, even if it robs it of some of the excitement of some years ago. We also face the reality that we must now deal with new challenges in the years ahead.

The relationship has all the attributes of a strong and comprehensive strategic partnership. We have regular high level political dialogue. In recent months, we have had one high level visit every month. India and the US have strategic consultations on every major issue and region. We have a growing dialogue and partnership on non-proliferation, export controls and nuclear issues.

Our security cooperation includes multiple forms of engagement. Our defence relations are strong. We conduct defence exercises regularly. We are steadily moving to joint research, co-development and co-production of defence products through partnerships between our defence industries, as part of our strategy to develop India's defence industrial base and to increase the domestic share in our defence acquisitions.

Cooperation between India and the US beyond the public gaze in the fight against crime and terrorism has also been effective. The Homeland Security Dialogue since 2011 has been of mutual benefit in protecting our two countries. We have also begun exploring the potential of cooperative engagement in cyber and space security.

Our total trade in goods and services exceeds 100 billion dollars. It has grown every year through the past five years of a global economic crisis. We might each have reasons not to be fully satisfied with our economic relations but no one denies its potential and significance. The US is our single largest trading partner and is a source of critical technology, investment, and collaborations, with over $ 11 billion worth of Indian investments in the US, and $ 50 billion of US investment in India.

Some of our most innovative and rewarding partnerships are in the inter-linked domains of energy, health, higher education and science and technology. They often do not get the attention that they deserve, but are critical in their impact on the lives of our people.

As for our peoples, there are about 600 major and 1500 small and medium US companies in India, and over 100,000 Indian students in the US. When you see suburban developments around Delhi called 'Palm Springs' or 'Nassau County' you realise the extent of links at the popular level.

Drift?

Despite this range of relationships some today speak of drift in the relationship. I find this a rather strange way to describe a relationship where the two governments have thirty-two dialogue mechanisms meeting each year.

One reason for this perception may be the fact that it is now a full spectrum relationship, no longer focused on one big transformational idea like the civil nuclear cooperation initiative in 2005-8. To me that breadth is the strength of the relationship.

The impression of drift is also partly due to economic factors. It arises from the macro-economic situation. US friends mention concerns about economic reforms and specific policy issues in India. These concerns are not unique to the U.S. They are, first and foremost, of concern to Indians. Government is addressing all three sets of issues. Our IT industry, the locomotive of our economic partnership, which provides employment to 280,000 people in the US, also has genuine difficulties with certain discriminatory provisions of the Immigration Reform Bill.

Going Forward

Looking ahead, the potential for growth in the relationship is strong. This is particularly so in energy, defence, education, and in the quality and range of the strategic dialogues that we undertake.

Economically, as we go forward we will focus on opportunities, especially in the infrastructure sector; improve market access; negotiate a Bilateral Investment Treaty; pursue constructive solutions in the WTO that addresses our key concerns; and, work to strengthen the global multilateral trade regime, avoiding its fragmentation or the growth of protectionism. There is much useful bilateral work being done in clean energy and this will certainly grow.

The civil nuclear agreement of 2008 is a symbol of our transformed relationship. It is a significant part of our strategy to meet long term power demand in India, which is expected to grow four times over in the next two decades. The two governments have resolved government to government permissions and understandings necessary to enable commercial negotiations between NPCIL and Westinghouse, and for the AERB to begin its independent evaluation of the safety of the power plant. It has been our consistent stand that the power plant should meet the highest standards of safety delivering power at a price that is competitive vis-a-vis other sources of energy.

I was surprised in the last few days to see several stories claiming that somehow Indian law would not apply to projects in India. Civil nuclear projects in India will naturally be subject to Indian law, including civil liability. Domestic and foreign vendors have sought clarifications on some points of that law, which are being examined.

The India-US bilateral relationship is embedded in a larger vision of a global strategic partnership. This decade has been a period of transitions, turbulence and challenges in an interdependent world, on a scale that has few parallels in history. We have experienced a long drawn out global economic crisis and volatile financial markets. Across the arc from the Pacific to the Indian Ocean, through South Asia, Afghanistan, West Asia and to Africa, there are a range of immediate challenges and long term structural changes. Our bilateral relations have stayed on a strong and steady course despite these rough seas, because of convergence on a broad range of issues that matter.

We have shared interests in a stable, secure, peaceful and prosperous Asia-Pacific. The United States is an Asia-Pacific power and can play a constructive role in advancing regional stability, integration and cooperation. We are working together and with other countries in the region to establish an open, balanced, inclusive and rule-based regional economic and security architecture. As we build our respective regional partnerships, we deepen our own relationships with ASEAN. We have also launched a fruitful trilateral dialogue with Japan.

Neither India nor the United States see their relationship as directed against any other country. Nor does a strong India-U.S. partnership run against the course of India's relations with other countries.

India and the U.S. have promoted their shared interest in maritime security through strategic dialogue, diplomatic efforts in regional forums and our regional partnerships. We each affirm the principles of freedom of navigation and unimpeded commerce, in accordance with international law, and peaceful settlement of maritime disputes.

We consult closely on Afghanistan, and, though approaches may diverge sometimes, we have a shared vision for a stable, united, democratic and prosperous Afghanistan that is never again a source of terrorism, and that emerges as a hub of regional cooperation.

Both have important interests in the stability and peace of West Asia. For India, proximity, religious and cultural links, economic interests, energy security and the livelihood of six million Indians in the Gulf area make this a vital interest.

Our deepening strategic partnership does not mean that we won't have our differences. This is inevitable between countries in different circumstances, at different levels of development, and in dissimilar geopolitical situations. We are both democratic countries with a strong and vocal sense of independence, sometimes shading into exceptionalism. As democrats we know that autonomy of decision making and differences are not inconsistent with a strategic partnership. Where we have differences we also have the confidence and maturity to be able to speak to each other candidly and to deal with the issues.

In sum, the strategic foundations of this relationship are enduring. In my view they will become more relevant in coming years.

From our perspective, the US will continue to be a key partner for capital, technology, knowledge and skills in our development effort; a potentially important source of clean energy technology and hydrocarbons; an important partner in areas like defence technology, intelligence and counter-terrorism; an important factor in our space security and cyber security; a key interlocutor in adjustments to the global security and economic architecture; a partner in the quest for a rule based, open international trading and economic order; and in our efforts to seek peace and stability in our extended neighborhood and globally.

And that is why I am a confident optimist about the India-US relationship.

465. Prime Minister's response to media query on his bilateral visit to USA.

New Delhi, September 26, 2013.

The United States is one of our most important strategic partner and during President Obama's regime, we have taken several steps to widen and deepen this partnership in diverse fields. And during the present visit, we will review the progress that has been made and also what further can be done to give added meaning and content to this partnership.

The United States is one of India's most important trading partners, important provider of investment and technology support for India's development and we need the United States on our side as we move to give new added trust to our development programmes. We will also review the international situation particularly with reference to international economic situation and other important areas like South East Asia, Middle East and West Asia.

466. Statement of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh after his Bilateral Meeting with President Obama.

Washington (D. C), September 27, 2013.

Prime Minister of India (Dr. Manmohan Singh):... .. I have always believed that India and America are indispensable partners.

During the time that I have been Prime Minister and particularly during the time that President Obama and I have worked together, I think President Obama has made an outstanding contribution to strengthening, widening and deepening of our cooperation in diverse fields.

When I came to America in 2005, in addressing the United States' Congress I said there are partnerships based on principles and partnerships based on pragmatism. I then said that in the case of Indo-American cooperation, both principles of our commitment to democratic values, rule of law and pragmatism, both combined to make us strong and durable partners. And I am very happy to say that during the last five years that I have worked together with President Obama, that process has got strengthened in every possible way.

India and America are working together to bring give our cooperation a new sense of commitment, widening and deepening it in diverse directions. We are cooperating in expanding the frontiers of trade, investment in technology. Our bilateral trade today is US$ 100 billion.

American investments in India are US$ 80 billion and they are growing despite the slowdown in the global economy.

Outside the area of trade, technology and investment, we are exploring avenues of cooperation in new areas like energy cooperation, clean coal technologies, energy-efficient technologies, cooperation in the field of environment, cooperation in the field of defence and security-related, cooperation with regard to intelligence gathering and counterterrorism. In all these areas India needs the United States to be standing by our side. And I am very pleased to know that President Obama has imparted a powerful impetus to that process of our two countries being on the same page.

The President briefed me about his initiatives both with regard to Syria and with regard to Iran; and I complimented him for his vision, for his courage in giving diplomacy yet another chance. India fully supports these initiatives because six million Indians live in the West Asia and the Middle East. They earn their livelihood. Their... (Inaudible)... an important role of sustaining our balance of payments. Therefore, anything that contributes to peace and stability in the Middle East, in Iran, in Syria, is something which is in the interest of the global economy. It is certainly in the interest of people in the region in which India is placed.

We have also discussed our relations and our approach to dealing with Afghanistan and Pakistan. I explained to President Obama the difficulties that we face given the fact that the epicentre of terror still remains focused in Pakistan. And I look forward to meeting with Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif even though the expectations have to be toned down given the terror arm which is still active in our subcontinent.

Overall, I have come here to thank President Obama for all that he has done to strengthen, widen and deepen the cooperation between our two countries.

I explained to the President that India is a poor country. Our basic task is to improve the standard of living of our people, to get rid of mass poverty, ignorance and disease which still afflict millions and millions of our people, and in that struggle we want America to stand by our side. And in the President the United States has a leader who realises and recognises the contribution that resurgent India can make not only to fighting poverty but also to global peace and prosperity.

Thank you

467. Media Briefing by Indian Ambassador in Washington DC on Prime Minister's Ongoing Visit (September 26, 2013).

September 27, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here. We have with us Ambassador Nirupama Rao. We had requested her to speak to you and give you a contextual background to tomorrow's meeting between Prime Minister and President Obama and she has agreed to that. We have requested her to speak for a few minutes and then she will be available to answer a few questions. She has another appointment at around 5 and so she has to leave. So of necessity we will have to be brief with this.

With those introductory remarks I would request Ambassador Rao to make her opening remarks.

Indian Ambassador to USA (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you Akbar. Good afternoon friends and sorry to have kept you waiting entirely due to the traffic in Washington.

As you know, this will be the third summit meeting between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Barak Obama. You have seen the arrival statement by Prime Minister that was issued a few hours ago. That gives you the context and essentially tells you a little about the setting for the visit.

As you know also from your previous briefings, a great deal has been achieved in the relationship, in the strategic partnership between India and the United States in recent years. In the true sense of the word it is what has been termed a full-spectrum relationship. It is a relationship that obviously has bilateral relevance and substance, but it also has a relevance that extends to the regional situation as also the larger global environment.

Prime Minister Singh and President Obama will meet, as you know, tomorrow morning at the White House, and their meeting will be followed by lunch. Thereafter, Prime Minister departs for New York for the meeting of the UN General Assembly.

When you look at the bilateral relations between India and the United States, I think it is worthy to note that this relationship has obviously a political aspect to it; this is a relationship between two of the world's largest and most important democracies. I am not saying it just for the sake of it, I think there is a true concordance of many interests here, shared interests and shared concerns definitely, apart from the fact that we share values also as democracies.

In terms of what we have achieved in the last few years, the strategic dialogue which, as you know, was instituted in 2010 has come to encompass not only trade and business areas but also our cooperation on homeland security, on defence cooperation, energy security, and higher education.

In fact in all the discussion and comments on the visit that I have seen from our learned friends in the media, I do not believe much attention has been devoted to the fact that education and our cooperation in education has become one of the pillars of our partnership today. I think this has enormous relevance and that is where I think the development dimension to this relationship becomes so important. That is because as a large developing country with the challenges that we face, our cooperation for instance in energy, our cooperation in education is, I believe, of the utmost relevance because it touches the lives of people in our country.

The Indian American community here, which numbers more than three million today, has also played a very crucial and very constructive role in cementing the ties and the good relations between the two countries. The community has really been mainstreamed into American life today. You can see what I mean by the fact that we have leading Indian Americans in politics, in the Administration, in the legal profession. You are aware of Congressman Ami Bera who is the third Indian American to have been elected to the House of Representatives after Congressman

Dalip Singh Saund in the 50s; and Mr. Bobby Jindal who is now Governor of Louisiana. Dr. Ami Bera is the third such Indian American elected Congress. We also have two Governors - I mentioned Governor Jindal in Louisiana and Governor Nikki Haley in South Carolina.

Just today, Judge Sri Srinivasan is being sworn in to the DC Court of Appeals. It is a very prestigious position and again goes to show how far the Indian American community has come in this country. They have been truly bridge builders between our two nations.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh shared a deep understanding, a deep friendship; and they hold each other in high esteem. I think that certainly goes a long way to the promoting of understanding and also focus on our partnership, what we have achieved, to review what we have done so far in the last few years, but also to set the pace, the direction and to help accelerate the momentum of our cooperation.

Our trade and business ties have grown significantly in the last few years. Trade in goods and services amounted to, as you know, US$ 100 billion in this last year. The services industry in India, particularly the IT industry, has been an engine of growth in this relationship, which is why the ongoing discussion about the comprehensive immigration reform in this country. That aspect of the reform that touches skilled non-immigrant visas has been receiving our close attention in the last few months. I am sure you will have questions to raise on that but I just thought I will flag that issue.

From the US side of course there are issues that have been raised from time to time about the investment and economic reform process in India, which we have sought to address in a candid and open and transparent manner. And I think this does go a long way to bridging of differences and enabling a better meeting of minds on some of these issues.

From our side obviously we would like the United States to understand the development challenges that we face, the situation in which we live in terms of the environment around us. And I believe the fact that the dialogue mechanisms between India and the United States have multiplied to such an extent is proof of the fact that we are discussing a whole gamut, a whole spectrum of issues of mutual concern - be they bilateral, be they regional, be they global. And that is where of course our dialogue for instance on terrorism and counterterrorism occupies such relevance, our dialogue on maritime security, our dialogue on East Asia, Central Asia, West Asia and our cooperation in the whole theatre, in the whole, shall I say, space of the Indian Ocean and the Asia Pacific becomes very relevant. We have had of course high-level engagements this year which I think you will have taken note of. We had the Strategic Dialogue in New Delhi in June this year where US Secretary of State John Kerry visited India for discussions with our External Affairs Minister Mr. Salman Khurshid. And subsequently in July this year we had the visit of Vice-President Joseph Biden to India also which you would have covered.

I believe I should stop here and take your questions because time is short and I wanted to keep more time for questions rather than give you just a statement.

Official Spokesperson: The floor is open for questions.

Q: You have not really talked too much about cooperation on the issue of terror. Now in the wake of the Jammu attacks particularly I wanted to know whether Prime Minister Manmohan Singh is going to raise India's concerns with terror particularly cross-border terror with President Obama? I ask that because there is a longstanding award announced by the US on the Lashkar-e-Tayyiba founder Hafiz Saeed which does not seem to have gone anywhere. Is India really looking to put more pressure on Pakistan Government perhaps through its relations with the US?

Indian Ambassador to USA: Obviously we have not let this matter go off the radar. My statement was brief so I did not dwell too much on what we have been doing on homeland security cooperation and counterterrorism issues. But this issue concerning the Lashkar-e-Tayyiba, the activities of Hafiz Saeed are very much on the agenda of discussions that we have with the United States at every given opportunity. So, I do not see any diminution of our concerns on this issue or any staying away from raising these issues when the opportunity arises, and especially because the issue cross-border terrorism and the threat that we continue to face, our homeland in India continues to face, on this issue is a matter of very great concerns nationally for us as a country. And I believe the United States is aware of the depth and the profundity of our concerns on this issue. The fact is that Lashkar-e-Tayyiba is not just a group confined in its activities to the subcontinent or to cross-border terrorism. They have become virtually a global terrorist combine and their activities affect lives and endanger security in more than one country. I think the United States is aware of that and is concerned about it.

Q: It is not only the Indian-American community but also you have played a great role. You are a household name on the Capital Hill as also among the Indian American community, and thank you for what you are doing for our great country India. My question is, when Prime Minister landed, we just saw a White House statement that Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif will be welcomed in the White House. What message you think is Washington sending to India when our Prime Minister has just landed and not even met with President Obama?

And what do you think about this upcoming meeting between Prime Minister and President, and the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan in New York? Do you think their meeting will also be discussed tomorrow in the White House?

Indian Ambassador to USA: First of all, I would advise you not to let your imagination run riot.

The fact is that the White House did issue a statement about the impending visit of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif I believe on October 23. The US and Pakistan have a bilateral relationship. It is a longstanding relationship. Visits are exchanged from time to time. And I do not believe you need to let this get under your skin. Our relationship with the United States stands on its own merits. The depth, as I said, and the range and the extent of our dialogue and our relationship with the United States stands on its own, stands on its own merits. I do not believe that there is any reason for us to feel any lack of confidence or for us to be expressing undue concern about the fact that there is a visit impending by a democratically-elected Prime Minister of Pakistan to the United States. And there is something else about ...

Q: About the meeting between the two Prime Ministers.

Indian Ambassador to USA: I am not here to talk about that. I am here as the Ambassador to the United States. I will confine myself to India-US relations.

Official Spokesperson: Can I request each one of you just to ask one question please?

Question: Ambassador Rao, India for the first time has used pretty strong language on US surveillance in the IBSA statement that has said that it is a serious violation of national sovereignty and incompatible with democratic coexistence between friendly countries. Is this an issue that Dr. Manmohan Singh is going to raise with Mr. Obama that it is not right for strategic partners to be spying and snooping to this extent of planting devices on your Embassy? Is this going to come up tomorrow?

Indian Ambassador to USA: I cannot say specifically whether it will come up tomorrow, but I can inform you very unequivocally that we have raised this issue with the American side and they know of our concerns on this issue. I would not want to deny the fact that we have expressed our position, our concerns to the United States on this matter. In fact that given the level of friendship and mutual confidence between our two countries we need to understand why these things happen.

At the same time, let me also tell you that we cannot just go by what the media is saying on these issues. The two Governments need to sit down and discuss this in a dispassionate, in an objective way. Let me also tell you that on cyber related matters there is already an ongoing and a fairly, I would say, productive dialogue between our two countries.

Question: Madam Rao, how does India propose to take up its concerns regarding the changes in US visa norms which America plans to bring in which would affect India's highly-skilled IT professionals?

Indian Ambassador to USA: We certainly intend to take it up, as we had on the last few occasions when we have had the opportunity to have these high-level meetings with the United States. This comprehensive Immigration Reform Bill is still a work in progress. It is still before the House of Representatives and it has been dissected into several parts while being discussed. We really do not know what the final outcome, what the final shape, what the final content of this Bill would be.

But the portion that relates to non-immigrant skilled visas, which is where the matter that you raised comes in, is certainly something that we are keeping very closely under watch. That is because if these restrictions were to become a reality, then the business model that many of our India-based IT companies follow in this country stands to be adversely affected. We certainly do not want to see that happen, neither do we want to see restrictions placed on the numbers of H1B visas that these companies can legitimately I believe seek when they do business in this country.

So, we have been very candid and very forthright in expressing our views. I myself had been a frequent visitor to Capital Hill to discuss these issues. I have spoken in the US media on this matter. And I believe that our concerns are understood by a lot of the interlocutors with whom we have had the occasion to discuss this. But what the outcome of the Bill will be at this moment is very difficult to say. And even if you were to ask your US interlocutors, they would not be able to give you an answer just now.

Q: Ambassador Rao, is there a sense that what was meant to be the showpiece of the Indo-US equation, which is the nuclear deal, is somehow lying in cold storage in the sense that it has not been operationalised, that nuclear commerce has not taken off, that liability laws of India have been a major issue? And are we going to see some sort of ...(Inaudible)...? We were expecting that it would be announced yesterday or today, that has not happened. Where exactly do we stand on this?

Indian Ambassador to USA: That does not mean it is not going to happen, first of all I want to say that. As far as civil nuclear cooperation is concerned, it is certainly not in cold storage because the two sides – the NPCIL and the Westinghouse Electric Corporation - just to give you an example are in active discussion about, as you said the Pre-Early Works Agreement and the small contract as it is called. And I think it is very near fruition, those efforts are very near closure. So, I would encourage you to believe and to hope that there will be good outcomes.

And please also understand, when it comes to a nuclear power plant and when it comes to all the technical and commercial aspects that need to be discussed and agreed to vis-à-vis any country - leave the United States aside for the moment - these things are bound to take time. It is a painstaking discussion process that has to be gone through. But I can tell you one thing that progress, even if it has been slow, has been steady and has been sure.

Q: Madam, you spoke about ... (Inaudible)... India and the United States over a whole range of regional and global issues. But yet we differ on some very fundamental situations like for example Afghanistan, Syria and Iran. Do you see a bridging of differences or dissension on these three specific issues at tomorrow's talks?

Indian Ambassador to USA: That is what friends are for. We do not have to agree all the time on everything that we discuss. The point is that today when we sit down with the United States we have the ability to very transparently and candidly set forth what our concerns are on a given issue. I would not say that our minds do not meet on many of these issues.

Let us take Syria and the whole chemical weapons issue in Syria. We were very clear from the outcome that we are completely and unequivocally against the use of weapons of mass destruction, in this case chemical weapons, in Syria. And we have expressed our satisfaction with the fact that there is now an agreement to eradicate the chemical weapons in Syria, and that a process is already under way to make that effective and make that a reality.

Similarly when it comes to Afghanistan, take the dialogue between India and the United States on Afghanistan. We also had a trilateral dialogue, as you know among India, Afghanistan and the United States. And why do we have that dialogue? That is because the essential goal for all of us, all right-thinking countries - and I would obviously include India and also the United States in that category - like Afghanistan to be secure, to be stable, to be peaceful, to be freed of the threat of terror and the incidents of violence that have plagued it for so long in its recent history. So, as far as the aim is concerned, I do not think there is any difference, any contradiction here between India and the United States.

Next year you have a very crucial year in Afghanistan. You have the Presidential elections and you also have the drawdown and withdrawal of foreign troops. India and the United States have been in discussion about the 2014 situation. But the calendar does not end with 2014. There is 2015, there is 2016 and all the years after that. Obviously we have a long-term perspective. We are in discussion with the United States about seeing how we can ensure that the fruits of development in Afghanistan that we have seen over the last twelve years are not in any way vitiated by the scenarios that confront Afghanistan today. How do we secure all the good and the progress that has happened in Afghanistan over the last few years? On that I think both India and the United States have a common concern about seeing that that good is not vitiated.

On Iran, I think on the nuclear issue concerning Iran India has been very clear in its position that Iran has the right to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. But there are questions about its nuclear programme that the IAEA and the international community has addressed to that country which obviously need to be fully explained and clarified. But ultimately what India has always sought to say to our foreign friends and interlocutors is that these problems that confront that region, that confront Iran, must be solved through dialogue, and through discussion; and that military conflict and violence cannot be the way out of this situation.

Question: Madam Ambassador, you have mentioned that a major area of cooperation between India and the USA is education. Is Prime Minister going to take up that issue here? And what is going to be your major concern in the area of education?

Indian Ambassador to USA: It is not about concerns so much as priorities, let me say that. The occasion for that is provided to our Prime Minister and President of the United States is not only to discuss the way forward in the relationship but also to review the progress that we have made so far. In that context, the Higher Education Dialogue between the two countries, to my mind and I think to the mind of all observers, would be that we have been able to concretise areas of cooperation in the field of higher education particularly.

As you know, the median age in India today is about 28 and there are millions, I think over 200 million children, in school today in India after the Right to Education became a reality. Now every year the numbers of children moving, let us say, from Grade 8 to Grade 9 onwards would suggest that this challenge that we are going to face as far as providing higher education as also skill development and capacity building for these young Indians is going to be a major priority for the country, it is already a major priority.

And where the United States and India are discussing these issues is in the area of skill development and capacity building. Now, I remember when Vice-President Biden came to India he said the community college system here in the United States is one of the best kept secrets in this country, and everywhere in this country, wherever there are industrial conglomerations or factories or urban development, there is a network of community colleges that feeds the industry, that allows people to be trained.

Go anywhere. Even if it is an aircraft building industry, I went to Boeing the other day, I went to Seattle and I saw, there are many community colleges around the Boeing establishment there which train people in fairly high technology skills to take up jobs in these industrial establishments and that is really why we are very seriously looking at the community college example and experience in this country so that we can dovetail it. Of course we will have to adapt it to meet our requirements because we have our ITIs, we have our vocational training institutes and all already in our country. But we have already signed an MoU between the All India Council of Technical Education and the American Association of Community Colleges to set up about 200 community colleges in India, and work is already under way.

The second area is faculty development, particularly junior faculty development. We have the C.V. Raman Fellowships and others that look at faculty development and train young faculty from India for attachment and small capsules of training in the universities here.

The third area of course would be looking at how we can use the experience of online education. We already have online education in our country. We have the open university system and we have used space technology for online education. But today with the optic fibre connectivity that is coming up all over India, the concept of the massive open online courses, what they call the MOOCs in this country, has also been the subject of discussion between India and the United States. IIT Bombay has already signed an MoU with Edex, which is a MOOCs provider in Boston, to start work in this area.

So, there is the whole concept of empowerment involved here with education. That is why I think when we look at the strategic partnership between India and the United States I think we need to also focus on these areas which really help change the lives of people.

Q: ...(Inaudible)... with the India Caucus both the House and Senate ...(Inaudible)... slowing down in the ...(Inaudible)...

Indian Ambassador to USA: First of all, I do not think there has been a slowing down in the activities of the India Caucus because I can tell you from personal experience that the members of the India Caucus are so focused on India. There has been a resolution, if you have seen, welcoming the visit of our Prime Minister, which has really been taken forward, let us say, by Senators like Senator Mark Warner who co-chairs the India Caucus in the Senate. I myself in my personal meetings with Congressmen and Senators from the Caucus have always found them extremely positive about the relationship. They work very closely with the Indian American community also in their constituencies. So, it has been a very good experience for me personally to understand how the Caucus has been able to really grow and also to stand up for so many issues that helped the partnership and the relationship go forward.

Coming to Prime Minister's meetings, tomorrow he is a meeting President Obama and, as I said, he has lunch with President Obama at the White House. Then he goes on to New York. Tomorrow evening he will meet with a group of American CEOs. As of now we do not have any meetings with the Congressional Caucus.

And please remember, it is a working visit, Prime Minister is making a working visit. So, time is of essence here. We have a limited time space in which to do a lot of things.

Q: Just a follow-up on the nuclear issue. Will the Pre-Early Works Agreement take care of India's nuclear liability law? Indian Ambassador to USA: I think we have torn this thing to threads already. But anyway, at this stage, the Early Works and the Small Contract is really going to look at the technical, commercial aspects on the basis of which you build future discussion. I am not going into this issue further. Please understand, and I tried to say this again and again I am sure I said in Delhi also, that on issues like liability, there is a law that Parliament has passed and there is no question of contravening, going beyond the four corners of that law. Please understand that.

Q: Madam, you mentioned in your remarks when answering one of the questions that things may look that they are moving slow but they are steady. Just to take that ... (Inaudible)... we have a strategic partnership. But is there a sense that somewhere ... (Inaudible)... in bureaucratic procedures, systemic problems and are these things actually coming in the way of or have affected the pace of progress of this partnership?

Indian Ambassador to USA: I think what is remarkable about this partnership is that you see it in living colour. I do not think there is anything that is hidden. I am not going to be getting into an argument with you about – is there a bureaucratic slowness or stagnation on either side. Bureaucracies will be bureaucracies. I do not believe that you can wave a wand and make everything perfect. What I want to emphasise is that there is political will and a sense of direction about where this relationship is headed, and it is headed in the right direction. It has achieved a great deal in the last few years, and it will continue I think to achieve the potential that it is meant to achieve in the years to come as far as trade, as far as economic engagement is concerned, as far as our defence and strategic cooperation, the dialogues that we have on various regional and multilateral issues. I think ultimately common ground is found even if there are differences that we have to reserve from time to time.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this event.

Indian Ambassador to USA: Thank you very much.

468. Joint Statement on Prime Minister's Summit Meeting with President Barack Obama.

Washington (D.C), September 27, 2013.

The Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh and the President of the United States of America Barack Obama met this morning followed by a working luncheon at the White House. Marking their third bilateral summit, the two leaders reflected proudly on the transformation of United States-India relations during the last decade, affirming that the partnership between the two democratic nations is stronger today than at any point in their 67-year history.

Rooted in common democratic values and strong people to people ties, the United States and India have developed a comprehensive global strategic partnership, both in name and in substance that has made their citizens safer and more prosperous.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh pledged to make the next decade equally as transformative, challenging their governments to reach the full potential of this partnership, particularly in the areas of security cooperation, bilateral trade and investment, energy and environment, higher education, and global architecture.

The Leaders called for expanding security cooperation between the United States and India to address 21st century challenges in the areas of counter-terrorism, cyber, space, and global health security.

Applauding bilateral defense cooperation, including trade and military exercises, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh expressed satisfaction with the progress achieved to date in defence relations. They emphasized the need for more intensive defense cooperation on both sides. The Leaders reaffirmed their desire to further strengthen defence trade cooperation endorsing a Joint Declaration on Defence Cooperation as a means of enhancing their partnership in defence technology transfer, joint research, co-development and co-production. President Obama encouraged the further participation of US firms in partnering India's efforts to enhance its defence capacities. President Obama also welcomed India's decision to participate in the Rim of the Pacific (RIMPAC) naval exercise hosted by U.S. Pacific Command in 2014.

Affirming their deep concern over the continuing threat posed by terrorism, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh stressed the need for joint and concerted effort, including dismantling of terrorist safe havens, and disrupting all financial and tactical support for terrorism. The Leaders decided to significantly expand information sharing and intelligence cooperation to address threats to their respective nations including strengthening the bilateral relationship to exchange information on known and suspected terrorists. The Leaders emphasized the importance of expanding homeland security cooperation to enhance exchanges on megacity policing strategies, securing the global supply chain and anti-counterfeiting efforts. India welcomed the U.S. offer of membership in the US 'Global Entry' Trusted Traveler Network Program, to facilitate expedited entry of Indian travelers to the United States.

Noting that two-way trade has increased fivefold since 2001 to nearly $100 billion, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh agreed that there are no insurmountable impediments to bilateral trade increasing an additional fivefold. President Obama expressed confidence that the ongoing Indian economic reforms and policy measures to liberalize India's economy would accelerate economic growth, opening greater avenues for trade and creating jobs in both countries. In this respect, the Leaders recognized in particular the role and contribution of the Indian and U.S. Information Technology industry and the IT enabled service industry in strengthening India-US trade and investment relations.

The Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to concluding a high-standard Bilateral Investment Treaty that will foster openness to investment, transparency, and predictability, and thereby support economic growth and job creation in both countries. The Leaders welcomed progress towards increased engagement by experts from both governments, underlining the need for expeditious progress to address all trade and investment policy issues of bilateral concern so as to remove obstacles and improve the business environment in both countries. In this respect, both sides agreed to consider establishing a Joint Committee on Investment in Manufacturing.

The Leaders also committed their officials to work toward a successful outcome at the World Trade Organization Ministerial Conference in Bali.

The Leaders welcomed the robust cooperation in cutting-edge scientific research and joint collaboration in science, innovation, and entrepreneurship, for the benefit of citizens in both countries. The United States welcomed the invitation by India for the United States to be Partner Country in India's Science and Technology Summit in 2014.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh discussed ways to strengthen bilateral efforts to promote energy efficiency, clean energy, and address climate change.

In the civil nuclear power sector, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh noted that, with government-to-government procedures agreed, commercial negotiations between U.S. companies and the Nuclear Power Corporation of India (NPCIL) are proceeding. They welcomed the announcement that NPCIL and U.S. nuclear company Westinghouse have concluded a Preliminary Contract to develop a nuclear power plant in Gujarat in India. Building on this, the Leaders urged NPCIL and U.S. companies Westinghouse and General Electric-Hitachi to expedite the necessary work to establish nuclear power plants in Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh. Both sides reaffirm their commitment to the full and timely implementation of the India-US Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement.

The U.S.-India Partnership to Advance Clean Energy (PACE), launched by the two Leaders in 2009, is expected to pave the way for energy to millions of Indian households. To expand the availability of clean energy resources to more people, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh endorsed the proposal to launch Promoting Energy Access through Clean Energy (PEACE), a PACE initiative, to rapidly deploy innovative renewable energy solutions to those who currently lack access to energy.

Recognizing that climate change is a defining challenge of our time and that there are mutual benefits to intensifying cooperation, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh announced the establishment of an India-U.S. Climate Change Working Group to develop and advance action-oriented cooperation, as well as to begin an enhanced dialogue focusing on working closely in developing an ambitious climate change agreement for the post-2020 period, and on strengthening bilateral efforts in this regard.

The two leaders agreed to immediately convene the India-U.S. Task Force on hydrofluorocarbons (HFCs) to discuss, inter alia, multilateral approaches that include using the expertise and the institutions of the Montreal Protocol to phase down the consumption and production of HFCs, based on economically-viable and technically feasible alternatives, and include HFCs within the scope of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and its Kyoto Protocol for accounting and reporting of emissions.

The Leaders are committed to support the full implementation of the agreed outcomes under the UNFCCC with its ongoing negotiations. They strongly welcomed the efforts of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to mobilize political will through 2014 towards the successful adoption of a protocol, another legal instrument, or an agreed outcome with legal force under the convention applicable to all parties by 2015, during COP-21 that France stands ready to host. They also supported complimentary initiatives, through multilateral approaches that include using the expertise and the institutions of the Montreal Protocol to phase down the production and the consumption of HFCs, based on the examination of economically viable and technically feasible alternatives. They will continue to include HFCs within the scope of UNFCCC and its Kyoto protocol for accounting and reporting of emissions.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh emphasized the dangers that high oil prices can pose to the global economy and the need to increase oil market transparency and emergency response collaboration, through closer coordination and bilateral dialogue.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh believe that the United States and India should look to each other as partners of first resort in addressing global challenges.

The Leaders reflected on the important strategic partnerships the United States and India have formed with Afghanistan, reaffirming their commitment to supporting a smooth security and political transition. The Leaders recognized that violent extremists continue to pose challenges to Afghanistan's security and stability and, in this context, emphasized the need for coordinated international support to help build the capacity of Afghan National Defense and Security Forces. They noted that both

India and the United States will remain committed to contribute to peace, stability and development in Afghanistan during the critical transformation decade (2015-2024).

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh strongly condemned the September 26 terrorist attack in Samba in Jammu and Kashmir. They reiterated their condemnation of terrorism in all its forms, and reaffirmed their commitment to eliminating terrorist safe havens and infrastructure, and disrupting terrorist networks including Al-Qa'ida and the Lashkar-e-Taiba. The Leaders called for Pakistan to work toward bringing the perpetrators of the November 2008 Mumbai attacks to justice.

In the spirit of their continuing non-proliferation cooperation, the Leaders reviewed the close cooperation of the United States and India to realize India's intention of joining the multilateral export control regimes. The President reaffirmed the United States support for India's early membership in these groups. Looking ahead to the 2014 Nuclear Security Summit in The Hague, India and the United States also will deepen their cooperation, including through the 2010 Memorandum of Understanding with India's Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership, to strengthen global nuclear security.

The Leaders stressed the need for diplomacy to resolve outstanding issues relating to Iran's nuclear program, and called on Iran to comply with its IAEA and UN Security Council obligations.

The two Leaders also deplored the use of chemical weapons in Syria, stressing that the global norm against the use of chemical weapons by anyone and anywhere must be maintained.

Consistent with the U.S. rebalance to Asia and India's Look East policy, the Leaders expressed a desire to partner more closely with other Asia-Pacific countries, including greater coordination with Japan, China and ASEAN, among others, including through the evolving institutional architecture of the region. The Leaders share a commitment to support regional multilateral institutions as they continue to develop into effective bodies built on international rules and norms that can address shared challenges.

Noting the contributions of Indian peacekeepers to global peace and stability for sixty years, the Leaders decided to expand their United Nations peacekeeping cooperation, including capacity-building efforts with third countries. Reaffirming that in the years ahead, the United States looks forward to a reformed UN Security Council with India as a permanent member, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh agreed that both their nations bear a responsibility to ensure that the Security Council continues to effectively play the role in maintaining international peace and security envisioned in the United Nations Charter.

Building on ongoing consultations between India and the United States on East Asia, Central Asia and West Asia, and the trilateral dialogue mechanisms with Afghanistan and Japan respectively, the Leaders agreed to expand their consultations to include a dialogue on the Indian Ocean Region, to deepen coordination on cross-cutting issues including maritime security and conservation of natural resources.

The Leaders resolved to work together to end extreme poverty, including through expanding efforts to end preventable child deaths through the Child Survival Call to Action. Fifty years after the launch of India's own agricultural "Green Revolution," the Leaders applauded their countries' work together with African partners Kenya, Malawi, and Liberia, to provide capacity building and exchange best practices for food security.

Looking forward, President Obama and Prime Minister Singh recognized that increased cooperation in these areas will strengthen the United States-India strategic partnership, highlighting shared democratic values and the capabilities the United States and India have to work together across Asia and around the globe. The two countries have crossed a threshold in their relations where both recognize that successes at home and abroad are further advanced by their cooperation.

Today's meeting demonstrates that the interests of the United States and India continue to converge, and this partnership will indeed be a defining one for the 21st Century.

469. Statement by Prime Minister to the U. S. Business Leaders.
New York, September 27, 2013.

I welcome you all to this meeting, which you have come to attend at such short notice on a Friday evening.

In today's world, a strong two way economic and business partnership is the bedrock of a strong bilateral relationship. The business communities in both our countries have played a very important role in the development of the India-U.S. strategic partnership. Our cooperation is now truly broad-based.

Apart from trade and investment, we are constructively engaged in energy security, education and research, defence, homeland security and cyber security.

President Obama and I had a very productive meeting earlier today and I conveyed to him that, despite economic turbulence all around, our trade and investment relationship remained a high point of Indo-US engagement.

I am aware that the business community in the United States has some concerns about India's growth prospects, macroeconomic stability and the economic policy environment. Doubts have been expressed about our sincerity in this regard. This is a mistaken perception. I would like to use this meeting to correct it if I can, and also to understand your points of view.

We have an abiding commitment to fostering an economic environment that is open, predictable and transparent, and which is business and investment friendly. We are determined to restore the high momentum of growth of the past decade and maintain macroeconomic stability. We also know that achieving this means more and not less reforms.

The process of reforms that began in 1991 has benefited India both in terms of accelerated economic growth as well as rapid reduction in poverty. Virtually all political parties in India, national and regional, have been part of successive governments in India after 1991 and have supported the process of reforms. This gives us confidence about the future direction of our economic policies.

It is a fact that our growth rate has slowed down. We grew at an average of about 8% for a decade. Last year, our growth rate dipped to 5%. To some extent, this reflects the slowdown in the global economy and in all emerging markets.

We are committed to getting India back to a sustainable growth path of 8-9%. Indeed, the Indian people will not tolerate anything less. They have tasted the benefits of rapid inclusive economic growth and they want more, not less.

The fundamentals of the Indian economy remain strong. India's overall public-debt to GDP ratio has been on a declining trend from 73.2% of GDP in 2006-07 to 66% in 2012-13. Similarly, India's external debt is only 21.2% of GDP and short-term debt stands at 5.2% of GDP.

Our forex reserves stand at over US$270 billion, and are more than sufficient to meet India's external financing requirements.

In order to restore growth, our Government has implemented a series of reform measures over the last year. We have established a special mechanism to speed up implementation of large projects, especially in the infrastructure sectors. Several decisions have been taken to remove impediments in the way of important projects.

We have taken steps to make India more attractive for Foreign Direct Investment. FDI limits have been increased in several sectors, including retail and telecom, and restrictions in the banking sector have been eased. The policy regarding FDI in defence has been clarified to indicate that FDI beyond 26% can also be considered on merits.

The results of our efforts will be visible in the second half of the year. We expect stronger growth in 2013-14 than in 2012-13. The second half of the year should see a distinct turnaround, partly because of the good monsoon and partly because of the steps we have taken.

We will contain the fiscal deficit to 4.8% this year. We are also confident of achieving our medium term objective of reducing the Current Account Deficit to 2.5% of our GDP. At the same time, we will make every effort to maintain a macro-economic framework friendly to foreign capital inflows to enable orderly financing of the Current Account Deficit.

A number of tax related concerns of US companies, with wholly owned subsidiaries in India, have been addressed. Some security related restrictions on electronic imports were perceived as disguised protectionism.

We have put these restrictions in abeyance and will work to find more acceptable solutions that address our legitimate security needs.

I also wish to assure you that India is committed to the protection of intellectual property. We recognize that investment and innovation in a country requires such protection. We have strong IPR legislation in India, consistent with our WTO obligations. We are continually trying to strengthen the enforcement mechanisms. There has been one solitary instance so far of compulsory licensing for an anti-cancer drug and there has been one instance when the Supreme Court of India rejected a patent extension claim on a legitimate ground.

I would like to use this opportunity also to urge you to oppose efforts to create barriers for Indian IT companies through legislative or administrative measures. These companies are the most ardent champions of India-U.S. relations. The IT and related services sector contributes 8% of our GDP and 25% of our exports. It employs three million people directly.

The inability of IT companies to operate in the U.S. market would not only affect our economy, but also the climate of opinion in India about the economic partnership with the U.S.

Many U.S. companies that have adapted to India, offering products and services that are competitive and innovative, have done very well. I hope you recognize the longer term opportunities that lie ahead. For example, we intend to invest more than a trillion dollars in the next five years in the infrastructure sector. The defence sector is another attractive area, because we will place priority on domestic procurement and encourage our private sector in this area.

I look forward to hearing from you on how we can further expand our economic relations.

470. India-US Joint Declaration on Defence Cooperation.
Washington (D.C.), September 28, 2013.

India-United States defence cooperation and engagement has increased significantly over the past decade, in step with the overall deepening of India-US relations. We continue to work towards achieving the full vision of expanded defence cooperation set forth in the 2005 New Framework Agreement.

In this context, India and the United States endorse the following general principles for fulfilling this vision:

- The United States and India share common security interests and place each other at the same level as their closest partners. This principle will apply with respect to defence technology transfer, trade, research, co-development and co-production for defence articles and services, including the most advanced and sophisticated technology. They will work to improve licensing processes, and, where applicable, follow expedited license approval processes to facilitate this cooperation. The U.S and India are also committed to protecting each other's sensitive technology and information.
- The U.S. continues to fully support India's full membership in the four international export control regimes, which would further facilitate technology sharing.
- The two sides will continue their efforts to strengthen mutual understanding of their respective procurement systems and approval processes, and to address process-related difficulties in defence trade, technology transfer and collaboration.
- The two sides look forward to the identification of specific opportunities for cooperative and collaborative projects in advanced defence technologies and systems, within the next year. Such opportunities will be pursued by both sides in accordance with their national policies and procedures, in a manner that would reflect the full potential of the relationship.

471. Prime Minister's onboard media interaction during his return from USA.

October 1, 2013.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I came to the United States at the invitation of President Barack Obama. I had a very good meeting with the President. The end results have been put out in a Joint Statement and our officials have also briefed you about the outcome of that meeting. In New York, I addressed the General Assembly of the United Nations and I also had a useful talk with Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, Sheikh Hasina and the Prime Minister of Nepal. I believe the outcomes of all these meetings you have been briefed about by our officials and therefore I will not spend my time on going over the same territory over and over again. I will be very happy to answer any questions that you may have.

Q: Sir, you had a very successful meeting with President Obama and everyone in America believes that you share an exceptional personal rapport with the American President. My question is what is the specific outcome of your discussions with the President especially in the area of defence cooperation?

Answer: Well in the area of defence cooperation we are trying to move away from the buyer-seller relationship to a relationship based on co-production, based on co-research and the outcome of the deliberations on defence cooperation is in line with our own thinking. We would like our own domestic industry to get involved in domestic production. We would also like foreign direct investment to the extent of 26 percent to come into defence production. So, I think this is a step forward. And for the rest, we reviewed our cooperation in the area of civil nuclear cooperation. There is now an early works agreement between Westinghouse and also our NPCIL. At the inter-governmental level, there are no irritants in the implementation. There have been important steps forward in cooperation in the field of knowledge initiative, in the field of education, in the field of energy, in the field of environment related issues. In all these areas, it is an ongoing relationship and we reviewed and we re-committed our two countries to work together to enhance understanding and cooperation.

Q: Sir, Indo-US economic relationship has deteriorated somewhat with US business lobbying with the US government to investigate Indian trade practices. Did you get any sense of the scale or reasons for this disappointment in the US? Will the Indian Government be taking steps to re-assure US investors in business on your return?

Answer: There have been US business concerns but very largely these are concerns which arise out of the slowdown of the Indian economy. When Indian economy was growing at the rate of 8 to 9 percent, I think everybody was quite happy even when there were defects in our policies, they were overlooked, and when the economy slows down people try to find fault and excuses. The President did not go in detail with me. He did understand our concerns but he also said that it is time that the CEOs Forum on both sides sat together to discuss these issues and to find out the meeting ground.

Q: Sir, you met Mr. Nawaz Sharif and you said you had useful discussion with him. I recall that after the beheading incident on LOC you had said that it can't be business as usual. Has that status changed?

Answer: It is at a stage in a sense that we are moving forward towards normalization of our relations and the first step has to be peace and tranquility on the line of control. And for that we have agreed that the DGMOs of the two sides will meet and work out arrangements. It will take time to find out what can be done and what is agreed upon is implemented upon. But these are all steps towards normalization of the relationship.

Q: Arunachal Pradesh is being given permission to build as many as 350 dams. The people downstream are worried about the eventuality of these high number of dams. Can this number be reviewed or reduced?

Answer: If you are referring to dams in Tibet, then we raised that matter with the Chinese Government every time I have been to China in the last three or four occasions. We have raised this matter with the Chinese Government. And as of now our understanding is that these are run-of-the-river systems, they do not involve storage and they do not interfere with the flow of water. We will, as we have in the past, keep on drawing the attention of the Chinese Government to have better cooperative arrangements to manage the rivers which are of inter-state concern.

Q: Sri Lankan sources in the UN told me that President Rajapakse was keen to meet you on the sidelines of the UN and with the Tamil coalition having a stupendous victory in the north of Sri Lanka. Should we not use that opportunity to ensure that there is more devolution of power in the Northern Province.

Answer: As far as the devolution of more powers for the Northern Province is concerned, our views are well known. On umpteen number of occasions, we have discussed with the Sri Lankan President the need to implement 13th Amendment. Therefore, our position is fully well known to the Government of Sri Lanka. As regards the meeting with President Rajapakshe, I would have no hesitation in meeting with him. He asked for a meeting on dates which were not convenient to me, because I came to New York only on the 27th and he asked for a meeting between 24th and 27th. So the meeting could not be arranged. There is no other reason.

Q: This is a question on your meeting with Sheikh Hasina. There is discontent in Bangladesh that we have not achieved to implement Teesta and Land Border Agreement. If you could enlighten us on your discussions?

Answer: Our relations with the Prime Minister of Bangladesh are very good. I am myself disappointed that it has taken us much too long to ratify the agreement and I have assured her that we still have time in the next session of Parliament we will make every effort to convince our opposition parties who have been a problem upto now to fall in line.

Q: This was your first interaction with Mr. Nawaz Sharif. Did you get the impression that he is the master of his own destiny or like your External Affairs Minister who said that he is being held back by the ISI and the Pakistan Army.

Answer: I very much hope that Nawaz Sharif succeeds. He is the democratically elected Prime Minister of a neighbouring country and he has said all the right things about Indo-Pakistan relations. So I sincerely hope and pray that he does succeed in carrying out his mission.

472. Address by the External Affairs Minister at the Kennedy School: 'India and the United States': A new partnership for progress.

Boston, October 4, 2013.

I am very grateful to Ambassador Burns, for his kind words and his introduction. I am delighted to be here with such a distinguished audience.

You are all very fortunate to be here at Harvard University. Many of my colleagues who studied here still nurture fond memories of their years here. The University has also contributed to many intellectual pursuits in support of the India-US partnership, which is sustained on our side by a broad consensus. This consensus exists despite the very fractious politics that exist currently in India.

While I don't want to elaborate upon the details of the transformation of our partnership with the US today, at least, not before an audience that is so well-informed, I want to mention a few important milestones of our partnership with the US.

Two points bear particular mention: the first of these is that the transformation has been truly extraordinary.

Let me give you two examples to illustrate this transformation: first, Indian and American firms are working to build nuclear power plants in India using US nuclear technology. And second, our militaries have rapidly developed the practice of regular bilateral exercises to the extent that India's military forces exercise more with US military forces than with any other partner.

The second point is that the transformation has been so rapid, and so overdue, that it appears entirely normal for us to be working together across some 35 official dialogue mechanisms that are resulting in what we all an “all-of-government” partnership. So much is happening and so quickly that it seems almost inevitable that there is now a strong sense of expectation within Government and outside it that more ambitious and extensive areas of cooperation will commence between our two countries.

When ambitious and growing expectations do not match up with the pace of transformation on the ground, there is sometimes disappointment amongst people. But these are largely transitory matters, which change over time.

To bring a little perspective, it is worth recognizing that today, we in India have more goods and services trade with American firms than with most other partners. We import more American cultural products than from anywhere else, and our bilateral technological engagement is more intensive with the US than with any other country.

Blue chip US firms keep their competitive edge as a result of their partnership with India’s leading IT companies. They in turn earn their global recognition—and not to mention a significant proportion of the profits on their balance sheets—from their US clients. A senior representative of a leading US aerospace firm told us the other day that Indian IT firms have written over 3 million lines of code for one of their signature products, which, in a neat piece of synergy, are being purchased by Indian firms.

Today, bilateral investment flows move in both directions, with US Government estimates suggesting that between the year 2002 and 2012, Indian firms have brought in as much as 5 billion dollars, and US FDI stock amounted to around 28 billion dollars in India, as of 2012.

Another barometer of the relationship is a statistic our US colleagues cite to us. That is the fact that US strategic trade exports, or the export of products requiring specific licensing, to India amounted to 5.8 bn dollars in 2012.

Even in the instantly-symbolic sphere of security cooperation, our Air Force fleet today includes US-built heavy lift aircraft like the C 17 Globemaster and the C 130J Super Hercules. Our Navy has taken possession of state of the art P8I maritime reconnaissance aircraft—becoming the first Navy in the world to do so—and our militaries train together regularly, helping us evolve new military capabilities and tactics.

Our strategic and foreign policy establishments consult each other on issues as wide-ranging as global energy markets to the regional situation in East Asia, West Asia and Central Asia. We have dialogues ongoing on cyber security, counter terrorism, health, science and technology, defence, and even in space and the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. During Prime Minister's summit with President Obama last week, we have just agreed to begin consultations on the Indian Ocean, and a Joint Working Group on Climate Change.

All this, fifteen years ago, would not even have been possible to imagine, quite apart from being considered to be a new 'normal' in our partnership. There are of course issues in the partnership today that we are happy to try and address. Let's look at some trendlines on what the future might look like:

1. A more prosperous future: Vice President Biden said that bilateral trade had grown five times in the last decade. We agreed that there was no reason why we cannot replicate such growth in the decade ahead. Business, investment and trade are not merely pillars of our partnership, they also key drivers of a modern bilateral relationship. It is in our collective interest to recognize in this process the leading role of our private sector industry in creating the wealth that generates growth. We will also need to ensure that the regulatory and standard-setting role of the Government is best used to frame the rules of the road and ensure the flow of ideas between the State and business on both sides.
2. A strategic partnership in energy. This is an extremely important area of progress. India's energy relationships, including with Iran, are important issues, although our US partners are sometimes not happy with this aspect of our ties with Iran. If India's strategic dependence on limited sources of energy are diversified more broadly, this will be in the interests of both our sides.
3. Investing in people: India's demographic dividend can be meaningfully realised by harnessing the potential of its increasingly youthful population. For this, we need to provide much more in terms of quantity and quality of health care, nutrition and through a quantum leap in educational opportunities. Partnerships in these areas is, again, not only strategically vital for India's future, which is of interest to us, but will also offer US partners beneficial partnership opportunities in education, healthcare, and even in creating India's second green revolution in agriculture.

4. Securing the future: As open, pluralistic societies, India and the US recognise the value of vigilance in the defence of our freedom. Recognizing the continuing threat posed to our open and pluralistic societies by terrorism and radicalisation must have our paramount attention. We recall the painful incident in April this year in Boston. This underlines the strategic imperative of enhanced cooperation between our countries. It is now important for us to focus on the sources of such terrorist groups and their ideology. Similarly, there is value in our defence partnership, which we want to upgrade beyond purchase to identifying areas in which co-development and co-production partnerships can be implemented.
5. So how does it grow further? The habit of consulting is very important; it is the phrase we use for the expansion of the partnership. The more we consult each other about issues, the better we will understand each other. As India's strategic interests enlarge and as the impact on us from the external world increases exponentially, we will need to expand our bilateral and multilateral conversations with the US

Ladies and Gentlemen,

As I said, there are a few issues that separate us still, but we are working very hard to address these matters. On one side, there is a sense of something missing or incomplete, now that the India-US Civil Nuclear Agreement has been set in pace.

Businesses on both sides seem to have some concerns and there is a degree of negativity amongst some sectors of business. While there are always specific reasons for irritation amongst particular companies, perhaps some of the negativity also emerges from the pessimism in India and the US about growth and economic prospects. Policy choices and legislative measures sometimes also add to a sense of alarm. But policy measures can be fixed, and sentiment does change. These issues were brought to the table during the meeting between President Obama and our Prime Minister also. As long as there is an overall sense of confidence in the intentions of the other side, long-term interests and opportunities should inspire us to look beyond short-term difficulties.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Having outlined the road ahead and suggested how to drive around a few potential pitfalls, let me also offer you a few ideas for making the journey a better and more rewarding one for both of us.

First, closer and more effective cooperation between us on terrorism is critical, especially as we continue to face regular outrages from beyond our borders. There is strong public support in India for this aspect of our partnership. This is, of course, one area in which we can separately talk seriously with Pakistan and ensure that it comes on board very seriously on issues on which the world has concerns.

Second, the relationship between us must continue to be seen to stand entirely upon its own merits. We have only recently stopped viewing each other from the prism of each others' relationships with third countries. In fact US policy makers have only recently stopped consideration of India in the context of India and Pakistan or India and China. The future transformation of our strategic partnership needs to be based on the strategic value that this partnership provides to both of us in the fulfilment of the strategic aspirations on both sides.

Third, there is an exciting opportunity to make defence cooperation a much stronger pillar of the relationship. We need to ensure that we can move defence ties toward co-design and joint production of defence material. The Joint Declaration on Defence Principles, announced during the Summit meeting between our Prime Minister and President Obama last week, should provide a much higher level of strategic focus to our defence ties.

Fourth, let us recognize that trade and economic cooperation must be about more than finding fault with each others' policies. Both of us need significant investment in industry and manufacture and the jobs that they create. We must find ways to work more closely together in this context. As India industrialises, the scope for beneficial cooperation will only increase; our markets will become more attractive in terms of R&D, technology agreements, integration of manufacturing processes, and trade. All of this will keep us busy for a long time to come.

Fifth, as we realize the latent potential for much more investment in each other's economies, we must not allow differences in trade in goods or in the movement of services to dominate the discourse. At the same time, we have to create forums to discuss these issues openly and with a forward-looking approach.

Sixth, energy and education are strategic openings for the US to invest in the future of India. As many of our American friends remind us, enabling the rise of India is, or should be, a strategic end in itself for the US. Like defence, these are sectors in which more cooperation with the US actually helps expedite progress that is beneficial for both sides.

Seventh, we have begun to work together well in a number of multilateral fora. We appreciate the support of the U.S. for our membership in various multilateral export control regimes: this is a logical conclusion of the cooperation we have had following our India-US civil nuclear initiative. We also appreciate your support for a permanent seat for India in a reformed UN Security Council. Recent developments in Syria and elsewhere in the world are a clarion call for a reformed UN Security Council.

For our partnership to expand, it is important on both sides for the signalling to remain positive. If the U.S. has indeed placed a strategic bet on India's rise, it makes little sense not to push back counter-narratives from those working to make you lose that bet. Instead, we should get you to win that bet.

It is essential that we continue to invest in our engagement at the highest levels, ladies and gentlemen, because this partnership is really in our respective national interests. The India-US partnership is actually all about making our people safer and more prosperous and to jointly work together to address the challenges of an increasingly complex and troubled world. What could be more fundamental to the service of national interest than meeting these objectives?

Therefore it is in working towards addressing this strategic reality that our partnership will be defined in the decades ahead: as two democracies working together for development.

Thank you for your attention.

473. Press Release of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the Home Minister's inaugural address at the India-US Policing Chiefs' Conference.

New Delhi, December 4, 2013.

My distinguished colleague in the Ministry, Shri Mullapally Ramachandran, Your Excellency, Ambassador of the United States of America Ms. Nancy Powell, Mr. David Heyman, Assistant Secretary for Policy, US Department of Homeland Security, Shri Anil Goswami, Home Secretary, Ms. Sneha Lata Kumar, Secretary (Border Management), Shri Kurshid Ahmed Ganai, Additional Secretary, DGPs of the States, Chiefs of Central Police Organisations, other distinguished delegates, members of the media, Ladies and Gentlemen.

2. This conference is a key element in the expansion of our bilateral cooperation with the United States, aimed at securing our nations. As strategic partners, the more we can work with each other to enhance internal security, the more meaningful our partnership becomes to the ordinary citizen. I am therefore delighted to welcome you to this Conference on Security, Megacity Policing and related issues being organized by the Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India at New Delhi.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

3. I am happy to note that this Conference brings together Police Chiefs of many important Indian cities as well as some of their American counterparts to discuss and deliberate on important aspects of our common endeavour to secure our cities and our people.

4. Today countries like India and the United States are at the forefront of the effort to counter the relentless threat of terrorism and international crime. We are also unfortunately the leading targets of such trans-national terror groups and crime syndicates. All too often, attacks are launched from across sovereign borders, in a manner calculated to cause the greatest disruption of peace. It will, therefore, have to be the endeavor of all countries to fight this menace in all its forms and manifestations through partnerships based on genuine and result-oriented cooperation.
5. This was one of the central objectives that inspired our countries to establish the India USA Homeland Security Dialogue. It is as an important element of our growing bilateral security architecture. Indeed, the Homeland Security Dialogue was an outcome of the State Visit of President Obama in November 2010.
6. Securing our cities is a focus area of our Homeland Security Dialogue, for a simple and obvious reason. As we all know, major terrorist attacks typically target large and densely populated urban areas, intentionally trying to inflict maximum damage. Both our countries have lived through such terrorist carnage, during 9/11 in New York, and during 26/11 in Mumbai. Cooperation in Megacity Policing is intended to help each other enhance capacity, and to learn from each other, to provide an integrated security umbrella to megacities and large urban centres.
7. An efficient Megacity Policing system must serve as an effective deterrent against terrorists and their masters, who launch targeted attacks on the nerve centers of a country. Our objective must be to make our cities safe, and therefore our countries safe by reducing our vulnerability to such challenges.
8. Apart from countering terror attacks, there are other kinds of mass casualty events, and security challenges that are specific to urban centres. All societies work to mitigate such challenges and enhance emergency response capacity. Even though India and the US are at different technological levels in terms of security infrastructure and average urban population size, there are certain commonalities to the challenges that all urban centres face. So also, there are solutions that some of police forces may have established that are innovative or unique, and may be replicable elsewhere. There is also a need for better integration of security inputs and information that different law enforcement agencies generate, as well as mechanisms by which regional and federal agencies work with each other. Some of our own challenges in this regard are not uncommon to our American partners, and perhaps the solutions that each of us are working towards can be relevant for each other. A conference such as this should enable us to enhance the flow of ideas to improve policing and law enforcement action in both our countries. Indeed, it was for these reasons that my counterpart, Secretary Napolitano, and I had agreed that one of the ways in which we could institutionalize cooperation in the field of Megacity Policing was to hold such a conference.

9. Ladies and Gentlemen, apart from improved policing techniques and operational mechanisms to share information, technology is a key input for policing. Increasingly, sophisticated technologies are being adapted, or even specifically developed, to assist Police Forces in early detection of crimes, identification of perpetrators, improved coordination among agencies, and expedited response time. The United States has consistently led the world in deploying technology in service of its people, and there is much that we can do together as partners to enhance the use of appropriate technologies for our police forces. But beyond the technological aspect of Megacity Policing, there is the human aspect, as well. Police Forces should also play a constructive role in providing necessary education and guidance to inculcate a sense of awareness and responsibility in the masses, so that the Police Force can defend us against terrorists and terrorist attacks, in a better manner.
10. I believe this Conference will exchange experiences and ideas in the areas of Megacity Policing including use of technology in providing effective policing and public safety. Synergy achieved would be a precursor to more vigorous cooperation and collaboration between the law enforcement agencies of the two countries, leading to better synchronization of effort and operations in averting terrorist attacks and tracing such attacks quickly. It will also help us in more regular policing tasks, including securing our public spaces for all our citizens in particular, women and children, and in enhancing the efficacy of law enforcement agencies to act in coordination against international crime. I expect that this Conference will create new channels of interaction between India and the US, as well as new methodologies for our police forces on both sides to adopt to secure our cities. We hope that this Conference is the precursor to many more efforts to jointly develop our partnership to strengthen the security apparatus of both our countries.

11. Let me, in conclusion, reaffirm India's commitment to work as partners with the U.S. in bringing and applying State of the Art technologies to crime prevention, crime detection, forensic analysis, better communications technologies and traffic management tools, with the overall objective of making our cities safer, better organized and more orderly. I urge technology partners from both countries to join hands with each other, and with law enforcement agencies in India and the US, to create an institutional framework to deploy innovative technologies and enhance research to upgrade expertise in various fields of Homeland Security in the larger public interest.

I wish the Conference all success.

Thank you

474. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs on the conclusion of the India-US Homeland Security Dialogue.

New Delhi, December 5, 2013.

The first two-day India-US Homeland Security dialogue- Police Chiefs Conference organized by the Ministry of Home Affairs concluded in New Delhi.

Delivering the valedictory address at the Conference, the Union Home Secretary Shri Anil Goswami said that the movement of people, goods and ideas has always driven with the development of nations and provided opportunities for economic growth and prosperity. He said that the security measures should be designed to facilitate the safe and efficient movement of people and goods while securing the critical infrastructure.

Shri Goswami further said that the increasing use of digital networks and information and communication technology provides opportunities but also poses a security threat to data and computer systems. He said that there is a need for security co-operation between India and USA, which faces this challenge due to a larger number of computer and internet users in the two countries. In the area of cyber security, he emphasized the need to strengthen the security environment to facilitate e-commerce, e-banking and day-to-day activities covering the financial services, power industry, telecommunications industry and public services. He expressed his satisfaction on the deliberations in the Conference which focused on the need for a healthy combination of technology, building security infrastructure and the need to synchronize the domestic laws with the global standards. He said that the service providers play a very important role in the investigations of cyber crimes and most of the service providers are based in USA. It would be important to strengthen the process of legal assistance so as to speed up the investigations and promote legal mechanisms that encourage co-operation in cyber crime matter, he added.

The Home Secretary said that the great potential exists for co-operation not only between the authorities of the two countries but also between the technology and business partners, who are expected to play a crucial role in finding technology enabled solutions to the unique challenges of modern policing.

Shri Goswami said that the partnership in the areas of use of sophisticated technology, training and capacity building, forensics, solutions for chemicals, radiological, biological and nuclear threats, technological support system for underground metro stations tunnels, track security, behaviour detection and IT solutions to manage security contingencies need to be further strengthened.

During the two day Conference, seven brainstorming sessions covering Response to Mass Casualty Event; Maritime security and Law enforcement (passengers and Cargo security); Surveillance and Command Control in urban policing; Security and Law enforcement in Mass transit system; Lawful interception and investigations; Crime investigations and Forensics and Community policing were organized.

There were presentations by Police Chiefs and Senior Officers of the Department of Homeland Security from the US side and by Senior Police and Government officers from Indian side.

The conference was attended by U.S. delegation consisting of Police Chiefs from major cities and their technology partners. Important speakers from the USA were Mr. Stu Frome, Deputy Chief of Staff FLETC, Mr. Dan Oates, Chief, Aurora Police Department, Colorado, Mr. Michael P. Downing, Deputy Chief, LA Police Department, Mr. Erik Aubin, DHS CBP Attaché, Mr. Harold Hurtt, Assistant Director, DHS Mr. Daniel C. Clegg, FBI Legal Attaché, Mr. Art Acevedo, Chief, Austin Police Dept., Texas. The representatives of Indian delegation included Shri Madhukar Gupta former Union Home Secretary, Sh. Nehchal Sandhu, Deputy NSA, Indian State Police Forces, Para-military Forces, Technology partners, representatives from other law enforcement agencies and senior officers from MHA.

475. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on External Affairs Minister's visit to Bahrain and Foreign Secretary to the United States.

New Delhi, December 6, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good afternoon friends and thank you very much for being here towards the end of the week with the weekend beckoning all of you. I would also like to welcome amidst us colleagues from other Services who are undergoing training and who have desired to be here to see how interaction takes place with you.

I have two announcements to make. While the weekend begins for you for the Foreign Ministry it remains a work in progress. Two of our senior officials are travelling over the weekend. First, the External Affairs Minister Shri Salman Khurshid will be travelling to Bahrain tomorrow. This is his first visit as External Affairs Minister to Bahrain. He will of course hold talks with the leadership of Bahrain. In addition he will participate in the Manama Dialogue. As those of you who are following it know, the Manama Dialogue is an annual event which is conducted by the International Institute of Strategic Studies and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Bahrain.

Bahrain is home to more than 350,000 Indian nationals who are resident there. That makes them the largest expatriate community in Bahrain. We have a robust economic relationship with Bahrain. Our trade with Bahrain is in the vicinity of more than 1.3 billion dollars, and this is all in non-oil sector.

Bahrain is part of the GCC where India has as many as seven million Indians resident. We source approximately 60 per cent of our oil from that region. Our trade cumulatively with the GCC is something in excess of 170 billion dollars. So, it is a region where we have very important interests and the External Affairs Minister's visit there is a reflection of that.

While he is there the External Affairs Minister has also convened a meeting of Regional Heads of Missions of India in that region. This is basically a brainstorming session where they will interact and see how the evolving situation in the region poses challenges and opportunities to India. Finally, the External Affairs Minister is also expected to lay the foundation stone for the new Chancery Building in Bahrain. That is what I have in terms of the External Affairs Minister's visit to Bahrain.

The other announcement that I have is that again over the weekend Foreign Secretary Mrs. Sujatha Singh will be travelling to the United States from 8th to 11th December. This is part of the Foreign Office Consultations which she will hold with her counterpart Ms Wendy Sherman who is the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs. This is to be held on the 10th of December.

This is her first visit as Foreign Secretary. So, it is also a familiarisation visit. She is expected to meet a wide array of officials from other government departments of the United States. For example, she will be meeting Ms Rose Gottemoeller, Acting Under Secretary for Arms Control and International Security. She will be meeting the Special Representative for Afghanistan and Pakistan Mr. James Dobbins. She will also be meeting with senior officials from the Department of Energy, Department of Defence, and Department of Commerce.

As is usual, when the Foreign Secretary travels she also interacts with think tanks which constitute an important element of our engagements in the United States. And she is expected to meet with members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the House of Representatives and some senior Senators.

I think I have exhausted my announcements and I am open for questions on anything that you would like to know.

Question: Are the dates for the visits of the new President of Maldives and Mr. Vigneswaran finalised yet?

Official Spokesperson: We are in consultation with the Government of Maldives on the exact dates. As you know, we announce dates only very shortly before. As I said, we had two announcements to make of two people who are leaving over the weekend. Going by that track record, do not expect us to answer your question in the affirmative so much in advance. And a corollary to that is that it is not likely in the next week, any of those that you have mentioned.

Q: What is our stand on the Air Defence Identification Zone dispute which is going on between Japan and China?

Official Spokesperson: Manish, I think this question has been asked before and I have answered in a way saying that when I have the answer to that if you would like the Ministry of External Affairs to pronounce on it. If there are matters of civil aviation, you would like to know what practices Indian Airlines are following, I would suggest that you address that question to those who handle Indian Airlines. As regards a generic answer, this has been provided by the External Affairs Minister yesterday and that is available in the public domain. I have nothing further to add to that.

Q: During the FS's visit to Dhaka, the Teesta and the LBA were discussed. What reassurance did she give?

Official Spokesperson: Foreign Secretary has had a fairly extensive discussion with the media after her visit. She has explained in great detail the parameters of her interactions with various leaders in Bangladesh. These are available on our website and I would urge you to have a look at that.

Q: During the Egyptian Foreign Minister's visit he had spoken of India and Egypt working together in terms of a new international order. But there is also a subtext of their working together in the immediate, evolving situation in West Asia. Are there any immediate engagements that you see where India would be more a participant than it has been, particularly in Syria and Egypt?

Official Spokesperson: The Egyptian Foreign Minister did make that point that he would like India and Egypt to engage more actively on a host of issues. One of the issues he listed out for example related to international disarmament issues. The other issue he mentioned was the Middle East Peace Process. We also feel that there is scope for us to coordinate and share views and opinions regarding the evolving situation in Syria.

Also, Egypt itself is in a transitory mode. There is a roadmap that has been outlined by the leadership there. And he did brief us about the situation there and how he sees it evolving. So, basically in the next few months there are issues in the Middle East which we intend to exchange views on. And Syria certainly is one issue where we are following very closely. We have already indicated our interest in participating in Geneva-2. We look forward to the United Nations Secretary-General consulting everybody and finally putting out a list of invitations. Once that happens, we will let you know about where we stand on that.

Q: Will anybody represent India at the funeral of Nelson Mandela tomorrow?

Official Spokesperson: Ranjit, I think there is still some time before the funeral is officially held and visiting dignitaries being informed about arrangements that are being made. My understanding from the situation as it stands today is that our High Commissioner is in touch with South African authorities who have indicated to him that it is possible that they will work out a schedule whereby they will inform us of when they expect foreign visitors, dignitaries to pay tribute. And that is not tomorrow as you said. There is still some time. I think they have to work that out.

Once that is worked out and we are informed of it, please rest assured that there will be a high-level delegation from India which will go there. As you are aware, both the Prime Minister and the President have indicated the reverence that we in India hold Nelson Mandela in. His death is, as was indicated this morning, not only a loss for South Africa but a loss for India too and for the world. So, with this deep, deep reverence that we have for Mr. Mandela, you can be certain that there will be a very high-level delegation going from India. We will inform you once the dates are fixed and the arrangements are made about that.

Q: Is there any update on the situation over the detention of the Indian Captain in Togo? And has India obtained consular access? Can the visit of his family there be facilitated?

Official Spokesperson: Vishal, let me try and place this in context. Our Mission in Accra is overseeing activities in Togo, and our High Commissioner in Accra is concurrently accredited to Togo. We also have an Honorary Consul located in Lome. And since we came to know of this detention - I think it was on August 2 that our Mission came to know about this – our Honorary Consul has met the three Indian sailors who have been detained. He has also met the Minister of Justice of Togo, the Attorney General of Togo, the Minister of Security of Togo, and the Commander of the National Gendarme of Togo.

He has had access previously to the three Indian sailors including Captain Sunil James, and has pursued with his lawyer – there is a lawyer appointed by the company which owns and manages this ship where the sailors were working – in unison with him they have met the three detained sailors and have had consular access. This is of course a matter of the past.

Now, after that unfortunate incident there has been a rather sad twist to this entire story that the child of Captain Sunil James passed away unfortunately. And this is a heart-rending story. Once this information was available to our High Commission, immediately they have once again taken the matter up and even as we speak, yesterday evening, a Consular officer from our Mission in Accra has travelled to Lome, he is there in Lome today. He hopes to meet the public prosecutor along with our Honourary Consul and also try and see if he could meet the judge, explain the current situation and request that on compassionate grounds if Captain Sunil James is allowed to be released.

We are pursuing this matter very vigorously with all seriousness. We understand the humanitarian dimensions of it. And please rest assured that we will try our utmost to see if we can unite this family in their difficult times.

Q: Akbar, in the last stage of WTO negotiation in Bali, the US State Department and the European Foreign Office are actively engaged in putting up their side of demand. How much interest the MEA is taking in this matter so that an amicable deal is struck not endangering India's food security and the livelihood of farmers?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much Ashok, you have been following this matter for quite some time. Let me assure you that the Government of India works in unison on such matters. We do not work departmentally on this, we do not work Ministerially on this. We work as one representative of Government of India. Obviously given the technical intricacies of this matter, our Minister of Commerce is in the lead. He is being assisted by several officers including by officers from the Ministry of External Affairs.

Our view is well known. He is putting it very forcefully and forthrightly. And we have the entire nation with us, including you who have been very supportive of this always. We are a country of a billion. Please rest assured that we will ensure that our rights are not undermined in any way.

Q: If it is not too early, could you please tell us something about the visit of Afghan President?

Official Spokesperson: I did indicate to you previously during my last briefing that he is likely to be here between the 13th and 15th of this month. He comes here at the invitation of an educational institution outside New Delhi. That educational institution will be making announcements about the activities related to that part. But President Karzai is an honoured guest in India, he is a great friend of India. Every time he comes to India he will meet our top leadership. Arrangements are being made for his interaction with our top leadership. I understand that in addition there are other arrangements also including lectures in Delhi which announcements have been made.

We are fleshing out his programme and hopefully you will have this detailed programme very much in advance of that visit. Perhaps by Monday you would have a detailed programme of all his activities in Delhi as well as outside Delhi, and the media opportunities that you will have for outside Delhi too.

Question: Akbar, it has been nearly four months since INS Sindhurakshak was lost. Within hours, Russia had made an offer of cooperation in investigation and in joint probe and whatever help Russia could extend to India. The Russian offer has been repeated several times since then. India has neither accepted nor rejected the offer. The question is, when the Prime Minister met President Putin at the 14th Annual Summit and when our External Affairs Minister and Defence Minister also paid visits to Moscow, did this issue come up and what is India's stand on Russian offer on INS Sindhurakshak?

Official Spokesperson: Rajiv, I think you have only laid out one side of the story. You did lay out that this offer was made. India and Russia have a very expansive relationship in terms of our defence cooperation and we understand each other very well. This offer was made and it has been raised previously and a response has been indicated that currently we are in the process of undertaking our own investigations, once these are finalised we will take a call on how best to go about it further and that is when, if there is a requirement, we will take this up with our friends outside. So, this is a situation that we have responded to previously.

Unless you know otherwise, I am not privy to knowing whether the outcome of that enquiry is complete.

Question: On the Pakistani statements on Kashmir and Siachen, how is the MEA viewing the change in tonality and focus and emphasis, and the warlike statement which has been made, and also the demand that Indian soldiers vacate Siachen because they are polluting the virgin waters which flow into Pakistan from the glacier? How is the MEA viewing it? Is this an attempt to internationalise the issue once again and project that India-Pakistan talks on Kashmir are headed nowhere?

Official Spokesperson: Vishal, as regards your first question, I just told Ashok that we do not deal with it in silos, we deal with it across boundaries of Divisions, Departments, etc. Therefore, the Prime Minister of India is on record of responding to the statement that you referred to.

That leaves of course the second part of your question and that is regarding Siachen. As you are aware, both India and Pakistan had a dialogue process. Siachen is part of that dialogue process. The dialogue was interrupted because there were certain incidents which were not conducive to continuing a dialogue that was under way. What was then decided by the two Prime Ministers was that as a first step to normalisation of relationship there needs to be a meeting of the DGMOs to work out among themselves that they are able to ensure peace and tranquillity on the border, following which others will step in.

At this stage, the question of others stepping in and pursuing issues has not come about because the first step in that has not been taken. Once the first step in that is taken - and that is again may I repeat what was agreed between the two Prime Ministers, i.e., a meeting of the DGMOs - based on the outcome of that other steps would be opened up. So, at this stage space for other issues is constrained by a lack of movement on what the Prime Ministers agreed. I hope I have clarified.

With that we come to the end of this event.

Thank you

476. Intervention by the External Affairs Minister in the Rajya Sabha on the discussion on the arrest of an Indian Diplomat in USA.

New Delhi, December 19, 2013.

MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (SHRI SALMAN KHURSHID): Sir, I rise with a very heavy heart. But, I also rise with a sense and confidence that this House has expressed the feelings that each one of us has in his heart. We cannot be divided on an issue of such importance to us as a nation, as people and as human beings. It is no longer about an individual. It is about our sense of ourselves as a nation and our presence in the world. I only urge the hon. Members to share with me my sense of responsibility in circumstances in which responding in a disproportionate matter is easy. Saying things that you might regret later is easy. But, to keep my vision directed entirely on the immediate concern — which is the dignity, safety and comfort of someone who, today, for us is not just a representative of India, but I think a part of her heart and a part of her family — is more important.

I have met the officer's father who himself was a distinguished officer of the Indian Administrative Service. I saw a great fortitude, determination and a sense of rationality in him. I thanked him for it in very difficult circumstances the manner in which he stood by his daughter. And, I believe, that we too, from here, will stand not just by his daughter but our sense as a nation, as people and as human beings that what has happened is totally and entirely unacceptable.

I know the hon. Members used different words and one could search dictionary for the strongest possible word that would express our feelings of distress, disquiet and outrage. But, I do believe, this is time to go beyond words and to show some deeds. We have, immediately, reacted and taken some very specific steps about which I dare say there are some people who have said that we are overreacting and overreaching. But, I do believe, the general sense in the country and in this House is what we have done is appropriate. And, on the other, hon. Members have said that we must sustain steadily and get ourselves to the destination that we want to reach. I think, the most important and immediate concern is to ensure that no further indignity is inflicted upon the young officer. And, we are taking immediate steps to ensure, legally, whatever is possible to implement.

In terms of giving a strong, unambiguous, direct message to the USA whatever I believe we were supposed to do, we did immediately. We can cavil and disagree about the extent of meetings that might have happened who should have met and who should not have met. But, I only want to urge one simple thing. Whatever we do, we are doing in a bona fide manner, with honesty, sincerity and with the overall interest of the nation and the person concerned.

If we appear, outside this House, on television channels, to be divided even on this — even if the division is a very minor one — we will look like a weak nation. Today we speak in one voice on this and I urge you, request you and I plead with you let that voice be one single voice. I will not let you down. This Government will not let you down, no matter how overarch your emotions may be. But, please reflect, for a moment, that we will do what is absolutely important and necessary and I have the confidence to say that we will overcome and we will succeed. But, I do want to share with the House and, I think, it is important to share with the House to understand that we are not overreacting simply because somebody has behaved in a manner that is adverse or hurtful to us. There is a history behind this.

And that history fortifies our position. It is not something that has happened out of the blue. It is not something in which the allegations may or may not be substantiated by the prosecution. It is not something in which the prosecution had the right to do something, and that is writ large in black and white. There is a history that this House must know. This is an issue which we would handle in due course in a larger manner. And I am glad that the Finance Minister is here; we have to consult the Finance Ministry on important changes that we want to make in the arrangements for people who go with our officials abroad and serve them as their employees. But that would come later.

There is also an issue of the Vienna Convention, the Convention that applies to our Diplomatic Missions. There is also a different Convention that applies to the Consulates. These are two separate Conventions. Be that as it may, whatever further negotiations are required, that would come only later.

Today, our paramount concern, interest and determination is to be able to intervene effectively and specifically to ensure that the dignity of our officer is absolutely preserved.

Sir, the tragedy is that this is not a story in which only two countries are involved; this is a story in which individuals from our country are involved. It is not something that is being done suo motu by the American agencies, bad as it might appear. There is participation of somebody who holds an Indian Passport, somebody who offered their services to work with our diplomatic officials and somebody who sought employment and went to the United States of America, and the conduct of those people is now writ large. And in whatever we say to the United States of America, we would have to keep in mind why this happened in this manner, irrespective of who instigated it, who accepted it, who was not careful about the motives and the reasons why it was being done.

Sir, it goes as way back as June and July of the year in which our Deputy Consul-General found that this person who was working with her had suddenly disappeared. We tried to register a complaint with the relevant agency which looks after the employment in the Mission. But we did not get the cooperation that we needed. We, then, reached out to that lady's husband who was in India and that lady's husband who was in India was unwilling to give us cooperation to help us find that lady and, then, be able to talk to her directly. Then, the Deputy Consul-General received a phone-call from a lawyer who refused to identify herself, who offered a settlement which included obviously some terms which would have arranged for a permanent residence for the employee in the United States of America and also for a huge compensation. It became clear at that point that this was a conspiracy by which some people had virtually trapped our official into a situation where she would have to do something illegal in order to help those people remain in the United States of America. It is not the illegality she is accused of; it is the illegality she refused to subject herself to that brought about this unfortunate situation upon her.

On the 1st of July, on the 5th of July, the Deputy Consul-General registered a complaint with the New York Police Department for a crime of aggravated harassment against her, and no action was taken by the New York Police Department on that complaint. Then, a complaint was filed in India. A complaint was filed in New Delhi against the lady who was working for her and her husband under Section 420. An FIR was registered in Delhi on the basis of the complaint that was made. That complaint, under Sections 420, 120, 403 and 408 of the IPC, essentially said that that lady and her husband – and I am not taking their names because they are not present here – had obtained an Official Passport and a US Visa with Government assistance with the intention of illegally immigrating to the United States of America. This is in the Fatehpur Beri Police Station and the FIR Number is 20130348.

Thereafter, we requested help from the U.S. Embassy in this matter. However, the U.S. Embassy could not or didn't provide any feedback. Thereafter, it was the husband of that lady who then filed a report with NYPD for theft of cash, Blackberry phone, two SIM cards, a metro card and documents such as contracts signed, receipt books-cum-working hour log, etc., etc., on the 22nd of June, 2013. We had already attempted to get access to that person. We were willing to cooperate with the agencies in the USA, but that was not done. The FIR had been registered here. Also, the High Court issued an injunction against the husband and wife from doing anything in this matter or proceeding in this matter against the Consul General.

So, we had done everything that was possible. On 15th of July, they had filed a writ petition against the Government. But, that writ petition was withdrawn. Therefore, all possible things that we could have done were done; we ensured that there was compliance with the law. The anti-suit injunction was granted by the Delhi High Court on 20th September, 2013. A non-bailable arrest warrant was issued by the metropolitan magistrate of south Delhi in New Delhi against that lady concerned on 6th December, 2013. This was forwarded to the U.S. State Department and the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi requesting them to instruct relevant authorities in the U.S. to arrest and repatriate that person to India through the Consulate in New York so that the due process of law, prosecution, could be done in India. No action was taken in this regard. Instead of actually paying heed to our legitimate arrest warrant issued from a court in India which was served on them through proper process, on the 12th December, 2013, the Deputy Consul General was arrested by the Diplomatic Security Service, who then, in turn, handed her over to the marshals of the New York Police. She is now on bail and, of course, trial and hearings have started. We summoned the U.S. Ambassador on the 13th December, 2013, to express shock at the manner in which the DCG had been humiliated by the U.S. authorities. The MEA spokesperson immediately made a statement. I took up this matter as the first item with the U.S. Congressional delegation. I do believe that the response that we received was positive, was indicative of some sensitivity and some sincerity in responding to what I had said although they were not directly involved.

We have written to all Departments of State Protocol, the U.S. Consulates located in Mumbai, Chennai, Hyderabad and Kolkata, that the Consular identity cards issued by the State Protocol may be withdrawn and reverted to the MEA Protocol for review and processing no later than 23rd December, 2013. All current airport passes made available to the U.S. Consulates may be turned in to the State Protocol latest by 19th December, 2013. The State Protocol has been requested to obtain details of Indian staff employed by the U.S. Consulates and its associated offices with this information being sent to the MEA by 23rd December, 2013. Likewise, details of Indian nationals employed by the U.S. officials serving in the U.S. Consulates or its associated offices in domestic service duties of any description, together with copies of contracts including of emoluments paid and bank accounts in which these emoluments are being transferred, as well as the PAN in each case. Going forward, we have also requested the State Protocol to take no further action on applications for various clearances, approvals relating to issue of identity cards, clearances of personal effects, sales, purchases of cars, exemption certificates for duty-free import of liquor, food, etc. I don't think this has ever been done in this country in the past.

477. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Maldivian President, relations with the US and visit of the Saudi Arabian Labour Minister.

New Delhi, December 31, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Thank you very much for being here on the last day of the year. We thought we will complete the year by interacting with you one last time so that you do not feel left out, and begin next year on a new note. I have two announcements to make following which I am available for questions on those or on anything else. The first announcement relates to the first high-level visit that we would be hosting in the New Year and that is of the President of Maldives who will be visiting India on his first trip abroad. He will be here from the 1st to the 4th. As you are aware, His Excellency Mr. Abdulla Yameen Abdul Gayoom was elected recently as the new President of Maldives. That he has chosen to visit India as his first destination abroad is a matter which we are gratified about because it indicates the robust relationship between our two countries. On the 2nd of January he will have delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. Subsequently in the evening the President will host a banquet dinner for the visiting dignitary and he will also visit Agra ... (Inaudible) ... who have not seen it before. You are all aware that we have close cooperation with Maldives in a variety of areas. These include economic cooperation, defence, health, security, maritime cooperation including on piracy, drug trafficking, etc., and we have a common commitment to development, democracy and peaceful coexistence. We do hope it is normal for our relationship to be strengthened by high-level visits and we look forward to this visit of the President of Maldives to further strengthen our bilateral relations. In addition to that visit, we also will be playing host to the Minister of Labour from Saudi Arabia. Mr. Abdel bin Mohammad Fakeih will be visiting India from the 1st to the 3rd. Those of you who are following the issue of Nitaqat in Saudi Arabia are also aware that he is the pointsperson on these matters in Saudi Arabia. His visit to India is largely to try and finalise, and hopefully sign an agreement regarding labour cooperation on domestic workers' recruitment. He is coming at the invitation of his counterpart here Mr. Vayalar Ravi who is the Minister for Overseas Indian Affairs. This is the first time that we are entering into an agreement with the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia on labour-related matters. This stems from changes in Saudi law where they have brought domestic workers into the ambit of their law. We hope that this will be the stepping stone for our cooperation on other labour matters. Once this agreement is signed and finalised, we hope to work with them towards finalising a more comprehensive agreement on all aspects of our labour cooperation. I think I have exhausted the announcements that I have to make. So, we can begin with questions on issues that I have just mentioned and then move on to other issues which may be keeping you occupied otherwise.

Q: Akbar, are any meetings lined up for the visiting Maldives President with the Executives of GMR and the Tatas who have had problems during Waheed's time?

Official Spokesperson: My understanding of the issue of GMR and the Government of Maldives is that it is in arbitration and that will take its due course, and both the Government of Maldives and GMR have said that they will proceed on that lines. I have no idea of any specific meetings on that issue.

Q: Will the labour issue the Indian workers are facing in Saudi Arabia be resolved during the Saudi Arabian Labour Minister's visit?

Official Spokesperson: I think what you are referring to is the Nitaqat programme, and that we have been briefing you on from time to time. Let me try and encapsulate it for your information. We have about 2.8 million Indians resident in Saudi Arabia. From the beginning of this year when the Nitaqat programme was implemented, approximately a 130,000 plus have returned to Indiathrough various mechanisms. But in the same time the number of Indians who have gone there is larger. So, in essencour view is that through dedicated efforts by the Indian community there, responses by them there, taking into account the advice that was provided by our government through our Missions there, we have been able to overcome the difficulties that were being encountered there in a transitory manner. This is a law which the Saudi Government had decreed for everybody, it was not a law for India alone. But I think we have been able to overcome those difficult times, and now we look to further enhance our bilateral cooperation with Saudi Arabia including in the field of labour cooperation.

Q: Akbar, are we looking to sign any new agreements during the visit? And is there a plan to pledge some developmental assistance?

Official Spokesperson: Manish, you know the answer to that is that announcements for these visits are made following the talks. We hope to have very intensive discussions between the President of Maldives and the Prime Minister of India following which if there are announcements - and there are always announcements of a nature which may be of interest to you because India and Maldives do have very very strong bonds and in any visit here there will be substantive outcomes - I request you to wait for those outcomes.

Q: Can we have some more details on this proposed agreement with Saudi Arabia about domestic maids?

Official Spokesperson: It is not only domestic maids, it is domestic workers. They include a variety of workers. For your understanding, the number of maids that go from India to Saudi Arabia is very restricted because we have fairly stringent requirements for that. I can explain to you in some detail about those requirements. But the point here is that approximately 25 to 30 per cent of Indian residents in Saudi Arabia would be covered by what they term as domestic workers. They include various types of domestic workers, I do not want to get into the details. So, this is significant in terms of the large number of people it will cover. What this agreement actually indicates is that following this we will try and work out a standard work contract which will stipulate requirements to be adhered to at the time of selection and emigration of those people outside India, their pay scales, their other requirements, etc. We are still in the process of that, but this is what will figure of that discussion.

Q: Given that the Saudis are now pushing their own locals into the market, is there any long-term assessment as to what the impact could be on us?

Official Spokesperson: In a generic sense?

Q: Yes.

Official Spokesperson: Let me just try to back off from today and tell you that in 20 years' time, over two decades, the number of Indian nationals resident in Saudi Arabia has grown from 450,000 to 2.8 million. So, this is a steady growth path. Also Indians have acquired a reputation of being a preferred community for the skills and discipline and dedication that they bring to their jobs in the entire Gulf, including Saudi Arabia which has the largest number of Indian nationals abroad in terms of Indian passport holders. As I said, 2.8 million, all of them virtually Indian passport holders, all of them I think. So, as we see this, given the way that Indians are perceived in the region we see that this steady growth process will continue.

Q: Is the President having a meeting with the industry? Is there any update on who he is meeting in industry? Also, is there anything on how much investment India has made in Maldivespost Waheed?

Official Spokesperson: I will answer both those questions following this meeting.

Q: This is about the Devyani Khobragade issue. On the first concurrent accreditation that she had from the UN as an Advisor, is there any update? Did the UN apprise the US State Department of that? If it had not, then why it had not done? And if it had, then why did the US State Department overlook it? And why did she not emphasise on that while she was being handcuffed?

Official Spokesperson: Dipanjan, you have asked an important question and let me try and answer all aspects of your question. While I think it is for the UN to make that formal announcement, having been an international civil servant myself I would find it extremely surprising if an international organisation does not periodically inform a host government about those who they have accredited. In this case the accreditation by the UN was done on 26th August. I would think that there are mechanisms in place, and my understanding is that there are mechanisms in the United Nations in place to periodically inform the host country about all those who have been accredited or have been granted access in various categories to the United Nations General Assembly. That is my understanding of where we stand on that. As regards your question of why x, y, z was not done, let me try and explain that also. As diplomats we are aware of our ranks. The legal implication of all these is a matter for the lawyers to indicate. As far as she was concerned, she did repeatedly say that she was the Deputy Consul General of India in New York, and at no stage was she asked whether there were any other additional entitlements of hers. That would have helped her. Therefore, when the lawyers started checking these the way that is required to make a case, they did find this out and they did find what the legal position was. And this was not something that was, as I said, unknown to the host government in terms of information flow. So, let us not blame the victim in this regard for lack of information on the part of those who should have followed this up and had been preparing for this case for a long time.

Q: Sir, the 23rd was the last date for the US Embassy informing you of lots of other things about pay and allowances and American schools. Now since all that has not come, is this something that you have taken up with the CBDT that is the Finance Ministry? We have heard that there was one American diplomat who helped the Richard family to leave India. Has the Government of India, its different arms, been apprised of this and is there any follow-up action being taken on this?

Official Spokesperson: Shrinjoy, let me tell you that yes we had indicated timeframes for various actions. The timeframes where we could act, we have taken action. There is another set of issues which required submission of detailed information from the US Embassy and their Consulates here. They did get back to us and indicated that currently given the holiday season they required more time for a response to be provided because the sort of details that were being asked required a lot of effort of collation and collection on their part. And they had requested for some more time. Subsequent to that, we have set in motion a process regarding how we will further proceed on this. And that entails a group of specialist officials who are experts in a variety of subjects to follow this on a regular basis, if necessary on a day-to-day basis, and indicate how we should proceed on that matter. That is where we are. I think all I can say is that we are processing a lot of information, variety of thoughts. And make no mistake, we are serious about processing and pursuing this matter. What the outcomes of those are we will share with you when that process is complete. But please do give us the time and the space to work on those issues. And let me tell you we have been working every day on these matters.

Q: Actually I want to go back to your answer to Dipanjan's question. You said it was much later that her lawyer found out the new information about her status as Advisor to India's Permanent Mission in New York. But why did MEA's Legal Department take so long to come out with this information?

Official Spokesperson: Valid question, but I did not say that her lawyer found it out. I said what the privileges and immunities of a rank and a title are, the nitty-gritty of these is what the lawyers try and determine. These immunities and privileges date back to 1946 when the United Nations General Assembly passed a resolution approved by every member present there about the privileges and immunities of various ranks including the rank to which Devyani Khobragade was accredited to the United Nations. So, tracing the immunity attached to a rank is a process that the lawyers do. I did not say to you that it was x, y, or z's lawyer that did it. I said it was the lawyers. And let me assure you we have the best of lawyers in our International Law Department including a lawyer who is present in the Permanent Mission of India in New York. So, please do not try and interpret my words in a way which is different from what I said.

Q: Has Devyani been granted diplomat status by the US State Department? And there are reports today saying that the US will not apologise unconditionally and that the case will continue. Do you have to say anything on this matter?

Official Spokesperson: I answer only one question, so do not ask two. Let me try and answer the question. With regards the first thing, let me tell you that Devyani is a diplomat and will be a diplomat. What you are perhaps asking is about her status as an accredited diplomat with the UN which has been recognised by the United States. That process I think I would refer to you to the briefing last evening by the State Department Spokesperson. They have indicated that that process is on, they are examining it. And the outcome, when they communicate to us, we will certainly communicate to you. But as far as we are concerned, she was, is and will remain an Indian diplomat.

Q: Sir, the US is trying to show that this was an incident on which the Indian reaction went overboard, and it was not such an instance earlier. I just want to know whether there is any initiative from the US at any level to resolve the issue and just remove the misunderstanding between the two countries. In between, some defence deals have also gone on. So, at diplomatic or political level is something is going on?

Official Spokesperson: Let me tell you the conversations we have do not reflect what you are saying. The conversations that we have reflect an understanding and a reflection of regret. And that reflection of regret has been communicated both by the US Secretary of State, various other interlocutors, including yesterday evening US time by their Spokesperson again, of what their position on this was. As regards whether we are in conversation with them...

Q: Has there been any initiative from their side? Is US taking any initiative?

Official Spokesperson: They said they are examining it. When they get back to us we will then respond to you.

Q: There are reports that US is not ready to apologise and that it will continue with the case. What is your response?

Official Spokesperson: I think in pluralist democracies there are different voices saying different things. As Foreign Office and as the Ministry of External Affairs we respond through the designated channels. In this case, I would again request you to look at what the designated channels have said yesterday, and those do not indicate what you are mentioning. They indicate that a process is on and we are awaiting the outcome of that process. We have been in conversation with them at a variety of levels, and they have not communicated to us that that process has completed and therefore they are not in a position to communicate the final outcome of that process. But in a pluralist democracy there are various channels which are operating simultaneously and there are some who may have different views on different matters and it is for them to express their view. We will go by what the State Department is communicating.

Q: The American Embassy employs a large number of Indian staff and the American diplomats also engage Indian staff as domestic helps. Are they obliged to pay them according to their own law or Indian law?

Official Spokesperson: I think you should ask this to them.

Q: ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: On the details that we have asked for we are expecting their responses. We will analyse them and give you the outcome of those. Right now we have asked for information. And it requires this information to be carefully crosschecked with a variety of sources. We will then take this up and inform you. So, right now as was told earlier, we had requested for detailed information, and that detailed information is still awaited.

Q: Just moving ahead with the same question that he asked, we have accessed a few payslips and a few details of the pay that a Visa Clerk gets in the US Embassy or for that matter visa staff gets in the US embassy, and that is abysmally low. Does the US Embassy now stand in violation of labour laws because US Embassy is US territory and that they should be paying equivalent to what they pay any US national?

Official Spokesperson: Geeta, what you have accessed is available to you. What we are awaiting is an authorised set of information from the US Government which indicates to us what the information that we have asked for is. We await that information. As I said, we have already set up this group which will carefully monitor all these aspects, and we will respond when the information comes to us. You have accessed information, and I have no doubt that that information that you have accessed is correct. But let us await the detailed information that we have asked them for and that they have said they are in the process of collecting but there is an issue of timing on that. We will get back to you on that.

Q: Sir, on the US$ 4,000 which was wrongly put in that column for salary of the domestic help, has the US reacted to that? Have we informed them? What have they said?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, every bit of information that we have has been provided to the US State Department. Also the lawyers are discussing these matters. And we have not yet got a final outcome of what their response based on the information that we have transmitted to them is. And they have repeated this. We have provided information as and when we have got this, and we have sought their responses. They have been in conversation with our colleagues in Washington, and this we will take it that rather than go by information that is coming from a diversity of sources.

Q: Sir, is somebody in the USembassy in violation of Indian laws when they used diplomatic card or whatever to fly out Richard's family from India? Have we told them of this and have they communicated to us on that?

Official Spokesperson: This is information that was provided to us in terms of after the investigation began. We are ascertaining information on this matter, whether it is correct that this has happened because ultimately these requirements also entail taxes. And whether there was any infringement of Indian tax laws relating to purchase of tickets for non-diplomatic activities is a matter that will be pursued. We are ascertaining the information. We have some leads on this. Once we come to a conclusion on this, we will let you know. As I told you, we have a group of very very diligent and dedicated people working on all aspects of this.

Q: Sir, Geneva-2 is scheduled on Syria. Is Indiaparticipating in that?

Official Spokesperson: Our interest in developments in Syria is well known. In the recent past we have had contacts at official levels both with the Government of Syria as well as the main opposition in Syria that is the National Coordination Committee for Democratic Change. And we have evinced an interest in our participation. My understanding is that formal invitations for the Geneva-2 conference which is going to start on the 22nd January have not yet been issued by the United Nations. However, we have been informed fairly authentically that Indiawould be among those countries who would be invited to this conference, and therefore we are now in the process of preparing for the participation in that conference, and this will be formalised when we get a formal invitation.

Q: Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe visited Yasukuni Shrine some days ago and there are some negative responses by some countries. How do you think of this visit and the response by other countries?

Official Spokesperson: This is for the other countries and Japan to discuss and take it forward. Ultimately under the Vienna Convention, which all of you are very closely following these days, issues of two countries is for those countries to work together and resolve.

Q: Who is going to be the Chief Guest for the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas and for the Republic Day? Pravasi Bharatiya Divas is very near. It is on the 7th of January. I think by this time a decision might have been taken as to who is going to be the Chief Guest for the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas.

Official Spokesperson: I must confess that since the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas is organised by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs I am not aware, but I can find that out for you. As regards the Republic Day, this has still some time to go. We have traversed that before. Once we are ready, we will announce the name.

Q: Sir, the General Election in Bangladesh is scheduled for the 5th of January. Now it is clear that the Opposition is not participating. Do we have any comment on the legitimacy of this election?

Official Spokesperson: India and Bangladesh, the destinies of our two countries are intertwined. Therefore, we have an interest in the well-being of Bangladesh as they have an interest in our well-being because we have such a long border, there is so much of movement, people-to-people, activity, and we have a common cultural heritage. So, we have an interest in what happens in Bangladesh. And it should not be a surprise because it is legitimate to have that interest and they have a legitimate interest in our well-being. Effectively what we desire for the people of Bangladesh is their well-being. We would wish them to overcome their differences, to be able to resolve their differences in a manner which is peaceful, which is done through dialogue and through discussion. And the outcome should be acceptable to all the people of Bangladesh. We do not have any intention to interfere in the internal affairs of Bangladesh. But as a friendly neighbour and a well-wisher we do hope that the people of Bangladesh and their leaders can arrive at a solution and at outcomes which enable the people there to realise their aspirations.

Question: Akbar, what is the status of the amphibious aircraft which Japan is going to sell us, and the status of the nuclear deal? And can we in the coming month during Shinzo Abe's visit expect a breakthrough on these two counts?

Official Spokesperson: On the first I must confess I need to find that out and once I find it out I will share. On the second one, when the Prime Ministers met last in Tokyo they had instructed their officials to work expeditiously for an early outcome. Since then there have been meetings between the officials. We are trying to reach as early a conclusion as possible. Whether that meets a timeframe that you may have in mind, I cannot answer that. But let me tell you, officials from both sides are working in accordance with the directions of their principals towards an early outcome.

Question: My question is pertinent to Indo-Pak relations. After the DGMOs' meeting, Pakistan has proposed a meeting between the Commerce Secretaries of the two countries. Has India taken any decision?

Official Spokesperson: What I would like to draw your attention to is that when the Commerce Secretaries met last as part of the resumed dialogue process - and this was in September 2012, since then they have not met - they agreed on what is called a sequential roadmap. That sequential roadmap remains in place. That sequential roadmap had provided for Pakistan taking the first step. And that first step was to notify the removal of all trade restrictions at the Wagah-Attari crossing. Subsequent to taking of this first step, there were other steps that India would take. So, there is a sequential roadmap available and we await Pakistan taking the first step as agreed between India and Pakistan at the Commerce Secretaries' level. Thank you very much and wish you a happy and eventful new year

478. Speech of External Affairs Minister on “India-Latin America & Caribbean: The Way Forward” at the CII India-LAC Conclave Valedictory Session.

New Delhi, December 10, 2013.

H.E. Mr Samuel Santos, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Nicaragua

Distinguished Ministers, Vice-Ministers from Latin America & the Caribbean Region

Mr Dhruv Sawhney, Former President, CII

Mr Suketu Shah, Chairman, CII LAC Committee & Joint Managing Director, Mukand Ltd

Mr Chandrajit Banerjee, Director-General, CII

Distinguished Delegates

I am truly delighted to be present at the concluding session of the CII India-LAC Conclave, which in my view is a very significant initiative by CII. I am very pleased to be in the midst of eminent leaders from India and the LAC countries who have demonstrated remarkable stakeholder interest in deepening India-LAC business ties through active participation in the deliberations and meetings held at this venue over the last two days.

In Spanish there is a famous saying “A buen entendedor, pocas palabras bastan “ meaning - To someone with good understanding, only a few words are necessary. So keeping with that let me try to give a snapshot of our relations with the Latin American countries and the Caribbean.

Very recently I had an opportunity to visit Brazil (October 2013). Before that I had covered some parts (Chile and Argentina – 4-10 February 2013) in the region of Latin America. I could clearly notice that the region is fast emerging as one of the major growth engines of the world. This dynamic region accounts for a combined GDP of US$ 6.9 trillion, a trade turnover of US$ 2.1 trillion and a population of 600 million people. Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) flows into Latin America touched a new record high of US$ 166 billion in 2012. The Global Financial Crisis that we all experienced in varying degrees has exposed the fault lines in the global economy. However, during this period, the emerging economies came to the rescue of the global economy. The annual GDP growth rates of the region have been very encouraging indeed.

The LAC region is also endowed with immense supplies of natural resources such as fresh water, arable land, minerals and hydrocarbons. This region includes five of the world's most bio-diverse countries - Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, and Peru. India wishes to build a long lasting, enduring relationship with LAC. In many ways, India and LAC countries are natural partners because of their shared understanding of the values of democracy, rule of law, justice and equality.

The India-LAC business partnership has grown steadily over the last decade and more. It is a matter of satisfaction that our trade and investment relations with LAC region are growing rapidly. From a mere US$ 2 billion in 2000 bilateral trade has crossed a record US$ 46 billion in 2012. This marks a remarkable 20 fold increase in trade. We have Preferential Trade Agreement (PTA) with Mercosur (Southern Market) trade bloc and with Chile. However, the trade figure is not reflective of the true potential of our economic engagement. We need to do more and expand and diversify our trade basket.

I am very encouraged to see the increasing presence of Latin America in New Delhi. This will help to extend better consular services and faster issuance of Visas, a per-requisite for any business engagement. By taking the initiative to organise this Conclave we are making a serious effort to reach out to LAC Countries especially to the business houses and other enterprises so that businesses from both sides can see for themselves the enormous opportunities that exist between India and the LAC region. I am extremely pleased to say that the India-LAC partnership is one of the high points of South-South Cooperation initiatives.

LAC region is undergoing rapid integration process which culminated in the formation of CELAC (Community of Latin America and Caribbean States). In recognition of the growing importance of our mutually beneficial relationships with LAC region, the first India-CELAC Foreign Ministerial Meeting in the Troika format was held on August 7, 2012. The two sides have agreed to set up several institutional mechanisms to further strengthen and deepen our relations viz. CEOs Forum, Joint Business Council, S&T Forum, Energy Forum, Agriculture Expert Group and Think Tank Forum. Further, India agreed to share its technology in e-governance, Tele-education and Tele-medicine and also offered to provide weather forecasting and mapping of mineral resources in LAC region.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

When we set out to explore the new possibilities in India-LAC business engagements, we need to be cognizant of the new paradigms that are shaping the global economy. I would like to add that new developments in India-LAC economic engagements will also have a big impact on global trade and investment flows. Therefore, the deliberations at this Conclave and the recommendations made thereof will no doubt have a key bearing on a gamut of international economic engagements..

I am happy to see that the partnerships that emerge from this event and other major India-LAC engagements are cross-cutting, involving both large and small and medium enterprises. New generation SMEs are in the forefront of industrial innovation and competitiveness, so we must direct ample attention to bringing SMEs from both regions on a common platform. We are also seeing a steady increase in Indian participation in projects in LAC countries, supported by co-financing schemes, Lines of Credit etc. Closer business engagements are also paving the way for seamless transfer of technology. I can see a growing appetite for Indian technologies that are highly 'Adaptive', 'Affordable' & 'Appropriate' to the needs of emerging and developing economies in the LAC region.

Government of India has played a major role in stepping up our engagement with the LAC region, through our 'Focus LAC' programme that got underway in 1997. This programme enabled Indian industry to target LAC markets for project exports, and export of industrial goods and services. I must add that the LAC Governments have also taken proactive steps to promote business linkages with India. Now the onus is on industry to take our bilateral partnership to a new high. Perhaps, businesses on both sides could consider creating business-enabling initiatives like an India-LAC CEOs Forum, Business Forums and the like. These forums will not only connect business leaders on a continuous basis, but also help companies identify the new business opportunities in India and LAC countries, and also gain a better understanding of prevailing business and investment regulations.

Ladies and Gentlemen

This Conclave is not about sharing ideas alone. Real business negotiations have taken place at this venue. Projects of large magnitude have been discussed and several proposals for M&As were evaluated. The deliberations and meetings centered on key and strategic areas like agriculture & food processing, pharmaceuticals & healthcare, power & energy, oil & gas, automobiles, auto components & transportation, infrastructure, mining and mining equipment, IT & BPO, machinery including material handling equipment, bio-fuels and chemicals, tourism, project exports, etc. (detailed programme and agenda attached given in folder)

While the decision makers participating in this Conclave are largely guided by the objective of enhancing India-LAC economic and business partnerships, there is a clear recognition on both sides that the India-LAC partnership itself has a high degree of global responsibility. Hence, this Conclave was also oriented to key global issues like the reform of international financial and monetary systems, democratization of international bodies like the UN, strengthening of global food and energy security, climate change mitigation, promotion of green growth, poverty alleviation and realization of MDGs, promotion of education and health across global societies, and so on. Taking cognizance of the pre-eminent role of this Conclave in meeting our national and international goals, we reaffirm our desire to organize this Conclave every year.

I once again thank our friends from the LAC countries for travelling great distances to participate in this Conclave, making this event such a big success. I thank every one of you for your great contributions to strengthen India-LAC partnerships.

Thank you!

Ladies & Gentlemen and Amigos

ARGENTINA479. Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister of India and Foreign Minister of Argentina.*New Delhi, June 17, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Good evening friends and thank you very much for coming for this media interaction. As is usual on these occasions I will request the Ministers to make brief opening remarks following which they have agreed to answer a few questions. I now request the External Affairs Minister of India Shri Salman Khurshid to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister of India (Shri Salman Khurshid): Thank you very much and welcome ladies and gentlemen. My apologies that we are doing it a little bit late in the evening but we have worked hard all day. I am very grateful to His Excellency Mr. Timerman, Foreign Minister of Argentina, and his colleagues here who have worked very hard and stretched the hours a bit. So, we have sought your attention at this late hour. Thank you very much for coming here.

I am really happy to welcome my colleague the Hon. Foreign Minister, His Excellency Mr. Hector Timerman on his first ever bilateral visit to our country. I think that we were greatly deprived of his attention by his not having come here, but we hope that this will be made up now with more than one visit in the future.

This is the fourth round of the India-Argentina Joint Commission meeting. I am very grateful to my colleague the Minister for having accepted our invitation and having come here with a very large delegation which speaks of the seriousness and the determination and the commitment that Argentina has, which we reciprocate equally enthusiastically, to take this relationship to much higher levels. Our leadership on both sides have given us mandate which is that we have to build this to a strategic partnership. The work that we have done today I think will substantially contribute to meeting that objective.

In the course of today in the Joint Commission, both the delegations worked hard, had comprehensive discussions on a vast range of bilateral issues focusing on areas such as trade and economy, science and technology, agriculture, pharmaceuticals, market access issues, defence, energy, and even space. We exchanged views on regional developments and multilateral issues in multilateral fora. I think I will be accurate in saying that we have convergence and we have congruence of issues and we can really be very very important partners in the affairs of the world.

Both sides reiterated our interest to expand the scope of trade and investment. We have some investments in Argentina and equally they have some investments here. But we do believe that US$ 1.83 billion in trade is far short not only of the target of US$ 3 billion that has been set up by us in October 2009 for the present year, but also we believe what we have achieved is far short of the true potential that lies between us.

The JC was agreed to tackle trade barriers such as regulatory frameworks, market access issues, some high tariffs, visas and work permits. Some of these issues may not necessarily be impediments, but what we have agreed is that we will examine them more closely to see whether it is only a perception or that there is any real difficulty, and if there is, as we move forward we can evolve into a better regime. The two sides have agreed to expeditiously implement the decisions that were taken here at this meeting. Both sides have decided to meet regularly on identified issues to find lasting solutions.

We reiterated our determination to strengthen the already ongoing cooperation in agriculture. We had a very strong presence of delegates in agriculture who met even before we gathered here today. And we see enormous potential of collaborating in agriculture, with Argentina becoming a major pillar of food security for India. Pharmaceuticals, both in terms of the trade in pharmaceuticals and also our offer to Argentina to give them the model of the Jan Aushadhi stores for generic medicines made available at low cost to ordinary citizens, and we will be very happy to have Argentina with that.

We are both culturally very vibrant societies and we have talked a lot about the possibility of collaborating in terms of culture, presentations, in terms of movies, film making, filming of Indian movies in Argentina where the landscapes are really spectacular, and indeed also looking at the possibility of joint production, not necessarily only on Bollywood films but also in many other areas. I have suggested that we could work together on Rabindranath Tagore and the relationship he had with Argentina including with his friend Victoria Ocampo.

We are committed to setting up an Indian Cultural Centre in Buenos Aires as soon as possible. We are working both here as well as on their side. Academic linkages hopefully will see great strengthening over the next few months. The think tank forum has been established. And in 2014 we will do the Festival of India in Argentina for which very generously the Argentine Government has extended its support.

Finally of course it would be unfair if I spoke of our close collaboration and aspiration for working together and did not mention the remarkable football players that Argentina has. Maradona and Messi who visited India were enormously successful. I think they have triggered additional interest in the field of football sports. I hope that we will be seeing more of Argentine football here in our country. Hockey is another sport which is of common interest to us. We hope that both in hockey and football we can collaborate on coaching, on training, and perhaps exchange of young players so that both sides can pick up something as an additionality and as value addition.

We have exchanged views on regional developments, on multilateral issues, on common approaches for international peace and security. Argentina is currently holding a non-permanent membership of the UN Security Council. And we would look forward to working very closely with Argentina on the reform of the UN and other multilateral financial institutions but also on the day-to-day working and functioning of issues that come before the Security Council. We will be in regular contact otherwise too but certainly also with a view to collaborating and cooperating in the context of G20, and we hope that we can as developing countries add major content to G20.

I look forward to working with the Foreign Minister who, in the very little time that we have known each other, has become a very very good and a valued friend. His hospitality extended to us when earlier in the year I went to Argentina I cannot reciprocate with what we are offering here today. But we want you to know that you are for us a very valuable, true friend, and I hope that during our time as Foreign Ministers we can leave an indelible mark on this valuable and important relationship between our two countries.

Thank you very much.

Official Spokesperson: I now request the Foreign Minister of Argentina to make his remarks.

Foreign Minister of Argentina (Mr. Hector Marcos Timerman): Thank you very much for your important definitions about the relation between our two countries. As actors, as protagonists on the world stage as concerns politics and economy, the meeting that was held today is an important step in having a strategic relation as was defined by the leaders of both countries during the visit of the President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner to the Republic of India.

We have had a long and important relation in agricultural business or in the agricultural industry. Argentina is very interested in diversifying its exports and appealing to the technical capacity that our country has. In this sense I would like to emphasise that recently Argentina was given the tender for constructing of radio isotopes. In an international competition our country was chosen for this and it is a great source of pride for us. It is a demonstration also that Argentina is a country with great technological advantage where agriculture is concerned.

We also believe that as has been explained to us today the importance that the development of pharmaceuticals that India has and we should see how we can use this development that the Indian Republic has for the benefit of our people so that our people also have access to health services, to good health services. And we are very interested in receiving all the information and the cooperation that you have offered to us today.

The interest of India to invest in Argentina also shows an increase in relations between the two countries. We have talked about investments in mining, in the access to innovative energies that up to now have not been developed in Argentina like shale gas. Argentina has one of the greatest reserves in the world as concerns shale gas. We are also interested in cooperating with India in space sector and in the nuclear sector. In these sectors both of us have made much progress.

In south-south cooperation, it is one of the bases in the way emergent economies can emerge and India is one of the leading countries in this group. South-south cooperation is important because it is the contribution that each one of the countries makes to the knowledge and development of other country. We have no other aspirations, only the contribution to a more stable and harmonious world where the economies and the societies of both countries will benefit. We do not have any geostrategic interest apart from this. It is simply the decision to create and to contribute a better world.

I am very happy that we have been able to bring here five projects for cooperation. If these will be analysed by India, I am sure that India will also cooperate with Argentina in aspects of this nature.

The Minister has also referred and I would like to reaffirm the importance of working together in international fora. This year we will have a G20 meeting and at the end of the year we are going to work for the conclusion for which we have been working since many years, but this year I hope we will reach a final conclusion of the Doha Round of the World Trade Organisation. But both countries and many others too share the feeling and the security that the Doha Round has to be a development round in order to achieve, in order to have trade but more just growth with norms that benefit all countries, the emergent countries and also the developed countries. For this reason the Doha Round is called the round for development. And it is not called the free trade development because many people want us to believe that when they talk about the conclusion of the Doha Round. In this sense I think that the position of India and Argentina will guarantee that the conclusion is a conclusion that has benefits for all countries, for developed countries as well as developing countries.

We see with a great deal of joy the leadership that India provides in multilateral forums like the IMF, the World Bank, the UN because we believe that India is a country which is committed to world peace and to harmonious development. In this sense Argentina celebrates the special relation with the Indian Republic. We are sure that in the next G20, as the in the past, we will work together in order to have concrete positions so the members of this summit can see for themselves that these decisions will be beneficial for our countries.

I think it is a new world now. The crisis in Europe, in the US, especially in Europe will last longer and will be solved much later. And this gives us an opportunity, to the emergent economies, to show that we can now be the guiding lights of economy, and we should continue with our efforts to maintain a growth rate of the world in keeping with the social necessities of our peoples.

I think this visit is just a show of my personal gratitude as Minister of the Argentine Republic for the interest that the Indian Republic has shown when you visited us in February. This will have an impact on the natural growth of the relations between our two countries not only in the economic sphere but also in the political sphere.

We are very far geographically but we are very close in the positions that we are taking in the international fora. Thus it has been an excellent day. We have done much work. We are satisfied. Yesterday it was raining a lot and I think the rain is a good sign for all of you. As an agricultural country we know what drought means and I know the importance of rain. I hope you will have a great year, much development, and that Indian agriculture should benefit for the quick arrival of the monsoon.

Thank you very much for your kindness, for having received us today. I hope we will see each other soon. I would like to end expressing my thanks in the name of the Argentine people and the Government for the constant and historic support that the Indian Republic has given to us in resolving peaceably, peaceful resolution of the Malvinas Islands. This is in the heart of all Argentines, and India has always been permanently a member of this alliance of nations that each day is growing bigger and which is annually petitioning in every forum that Argentina and Great Britain specifically resolve through negotiations this conflict which has been enduring for so long. For this reason alone it has been of great use to me to come here.

Thank you very much.

Q: Ministers, could you help us understand a little bit more about the kind of cooperation you talked about in sports, in football and hockey particularly? Has there been any concrete discussion on setting up a mechanism for exchanging coaches or training personnel?

External Affairs Minister of India: We have just begun the process. We have of course understandably focused on investment and trade which is really what we have started building upon. It is important that to have a sustainable relationship we must ensure that there is two-way trade of a much higher level, and that we have investments in both countries. As far as the field of sports is concerned, we are still relatively at the beginning, at the stage at which we are just beginning our engagement.

This is the process that we have done with other countries as well because India is still relatively modest in its successes in terms of world quality soccer and football. But what we are doing is that we will ramp this up gradually and I intend to speak to my colleague the Sports Minister. But to begin with we have the Boca Juniors club that is scheduled to come and play exhibition matches here in India at the end of the year.

Relationships need to be established. Discovery of each other has to be made. The Argentine polo team was here. If you are a polo fan and you go to the Jaipur Polo Club, you will see inevitably there are Argentine players, and what is more even Argentine horses. And that is a long way to come if you are a horse. It is a long way to come because not only of the arduous travel but then they have to be acclimatized to Indian conditions. But some of them have done remarkably well and I know that we could do a lot more in terms of collaborating on horses. But right now we have got enough on our plate. We will get to horses as well in due course.

Foreign Minister of Argentina: What can I tell you? It is true that the Argentine football is perhaps the best in the world. You know about it. They have Messi also. True! Messi plays in Spain. It is a game which is very popular all over the world. Argentina has been blessed with great football players. Part of my work makes it much easier for me that we have Maradona and Messi. And wherever we go we always discuss this issue - Maradona and Messi as well as polo. And they open doors for Republic of Argentina in the sense we are sure that the arrival of one important equipment, the equipment team from Argentina, Boca Juniors is going to set unprecedented steps for India. It is an honour and pride for Argentina that our sport is having a special mention in the relationship between our two countries. We are going to come here with the best of players to show the best quality of our teams and our sportspersons.

Question: I wanted to know whether the issue of Malvinas was discussed, which the Minister said it was and you were happy about it. Could you now elaborate on the pharmaceutical market access talks that you had, especially on the generic drugs that India has. Could you please elaborate on that?

External Affairs Minister of India: What I have offered to ... (Inaudible) ... sources and provide generic drugs at almost 1/3rd the cost of drugs which are in the market. We think that that is an experiment that could certainly be very viable and successful in Latin America. Therefore, we are offering that model to Argentina. But other than that we have an important trade link as far as the pharmaceuticals sector is concerned.

There are some local regulations in Argentina about export to Argentina of pharmaceuticals. We have been looking at that. Some of our pharmaceutical manufacturers have been talking about some difficulties. We have talked about those today in some detail and we have been reassured that there is not any discriminatory practice or any discriminatory laws that would add to our disadvantage. But it is important that we work with the industry to see and do some handholding to see that there is not any such problem. But as I said, if there is any problem at any stage, we will work together. We do not have to wait for the next Joint Commission. We will work together to ensure that that is taken care of.

There is also a desire that pharmaceuticals are manufactured in joint sector, pharmaceuticals should invest in Argentina, and of course the Argentine companies have invested in pharmaceuticals in India. So, obviously we can approach this from many angles. But the idea is that there must be availability and access as far as pharmaceuticals are concerned. We have recorded this in our minutes today. Whatever needs to be done further more for this, we will certainly do it. We see this as a major area of trade. We see imports from Argentina of soybean and of sunflower oil as a major import from Argentina. But there are many other things that we will explore. In the energy sector, as you said, we will explore. And I hope that over the next few years our trade profile is going to look much larger and greater and impressive than it does today.

Foreign Minister of Argentina: As I said earlier, I think that the development of pharma in India is very very important and it is very very encouraging that a country which is an emerging country should have such a high level of development in such an important industry such as the pharmaceutical industry. In Argentina the presence of Indian industries is very strong. Five plants have been established and seven are being established and they are being authorized. There is no restriction. They have the same sanitary restrictions which are also applicable to Argentine laboratories.

However, it is important to notice that if the process can be facilitated in some way to resolve certain doubts which the pharmaceuticals sector of India may have. In this sense we are going to work together with Indian authorities to resolve all these issues, one can make extra effort. We have decided to work together also in the pharmaceuticals sector.

As regards distribution of generic products, I think what the Minister has raised is very very important. He spoke about a model which is flexible and adaptable to the needs of emerging and developing economies. Access to medicine and access to pharmaceutical products is of vital importance for both the countries. Therefore, we hope that we will be able to see the project coming to its fruition. And we will see whether this whole process can be made flexible as per our economies, as per our administrative system of managing public health system. As you know, it is very well developed in our country but it also gives us more opportunity to see how the level of life can be improved. We are greatly satisfied to see this possibility of increasing the distribution of these medicines in those sectors which need this much more than any other.

Q: Sir, could you give us your comments on the Cabinet reshuffle today and how this should be seen, and whether this is the election cabinet ahead of the polls?

External Affairs Minister of India: One important item is that I am still here and that I did not get reshuffled.

We are now in the last year and obviously the emphasis now, all political parties have this but certainly we have it too now, is to look ahead one year at how we are going to build up our campaign. So, there are two elements. One is that we have to quickly wrap up the work that we still have to do as far as government legislation is concerned - food security being one, land acquisition being another. There are many other legislations that are pending which relate to good governance and transparency in governance. We would like to see that those go through quickly so that there is some time for people to be able to see how they have worked on the ground. We hope that the Opposition will at least accommodate what is a legitimate democratic duty as well as an entitlement.

Because there had been some vacancies and the political side meaning the party side had to be strengthened, our leadership decided that some of our leaders would be pulled out and put in to the party. Many of us had periodically suggested that we were available to work in the party. But obviously the leadership decides who would fit in the best given the team that they are creating. We all will contribute from wherever we are but there are people who have to work 24x7 only in the party. And I think that is what is being done. Some outstanding faces have come to the party and I think it encourages us enormously, gives us tremendous amount of confidence. Whatever the Government is doing will get tremendous support from the party rank and file led by the new faces and the experienced faces that are in the party.

As far as the government ranks are concerned, there are again some very experienced people, some people who have worked with us in the past and we are very pleased to see them back in the government. It is a short time that they are in government because we are now in the final year but hopefully given their vast experience, they will provide us altogether an effective impetus for a successful final year of our five-year tenure.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. With that we come to the end of this interaction. Thank you ladies and gentlemen.

BRAZIL480. Agreed Minutes of the Sixth Meeting of the Brazil-India Joint Commission on Political, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation.*Brasilia, October 15, 2013.

1. Co-chaired by H.E. Mr. Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado, Minister of External Relations of the Federative Republic of Brazil, and H.E. Mr. Salman Khurshid, External Affairs Minister of Republic of India, the Sixth Brazil-India Joint Commission Meeting was held in Brasilia on 14 and 15 October, 2013. The composition of both delegations can be found in Annex I.
2. Taking note of the tenth anniversary of the First Meeting of the Joint Commission, the Ministers reaffirmed the importance of the mechanism for strengthening political dialogue, reviewing bilateral cooperation and exchanging views on regional and multilateral issues. Both Ministers have positively assessed the progress made over the course of the last ten years and highlighted that the Joint Commission reflects the strategic nature and the vast potential of the bilateral relations, and agreed on the need to intensify efforts with a view to implementing initiatives to diversify the bilateral agenda.

STRATEGIC PARTNERSHIP

3. Minister Figueiredo expressed the satisfaction of the Brazilian Government with the outstanding results of President Dilma Rousseff's State Visit to India in March 2012, and reiterated the gratitude for the kind hospitality extended to the Brazilian delegation.
4. They reaffirmed the importance of the aforementioned State Visit to the further strengthening and deepening of the bilateral Strategic Partnership, based on the solid democratic values the two countries share and on their commitment to the promotion of economic growth with social inclusion to the benefit of their respective societies.

5. The two Ministers recognized the importance that both sides attribute to the Bilateral Strategic Dialogue as a mechanism for the exchange of views on their respective regional scenarios, as well as on their perspectives on issues of the international agenda.
6. They also highlighted the importance of exchange of high level visits for the implementation of the bilateral agenda and the identification of new areas of cooperation.
7. The two Ministers recalled that the coordination in multilateral fora and the ongoing cooperation in IBSA, BRICS, BASIC, G-4 and G-20 is an extremely important dimension of the Brazil-India Strategic Partnership. In this context, they expressed the willingness of the two countries to further contribute to the reform of the institutions of global governance with a view to making them more legitimate, representative and inclusive.
8. Recalling the ongoing cooperation within the G4, the Ministers reiterated that difficulties of the Security Council in dealing with international challenges, including current ones, have further highlighted the need for U.N. Security Council reform in order to better reflect geopolitical realities of the 21st century and make the Council more broadly representative, efficient and transparent. They recalled that almost 10 years ago, in the Outcome Document of the 2005 World Summit, international leaders committed themselves to an early reform of the Security Council. In this context, both Ministers underlined the need to intensify efforts to translate, at the latest by 2015, the existing agreement into concrete outcomes, as well as reaffirmed their full support for each other's candidature for a permanent seat in a reformed UN Security Council.
9. The two Ministers stressed the importance of joint efforts of the two countries in the G-20 and other international economic fora with a view to further inclusive growth and employment generation. They also emphasized the importance of the completion of the ongoing reforms of IMF governance as indispensable for enhancing the Fund's credibility, legitimacy and effectiveness.

10. The Indian side congratulated the Brazilian side on the election of Mr. Roberto Azevêdo as Diretor-General of the WTO. Minister Figueiredo expressed once again his recognition for the support of India to the election of the Brazilian candidate. The two Ministers reiterated their intention to continue their cooperation in WTO issues. In this sense, they look forward to the 9th World Trade Organisation's Ministerial conference to be held in December 2013, and expect that it will be a stepping stone to the successful and balanced conclusion of the Doha Development Round.
11. Recalling, with satisfaction, the tenth anniversary of the formal launching of the IBSA Dialogue Forum, both Ministers reaffirmed that IBSA has succeeded in laying a strong foundation for multi-dimensional and multi-sectorial cooperation in a wide range of areas. Recalling the Brasília Declaration of June 2013 that constituted the IBSA Forum, the two Ministers underscored the IBSA's uniqueness as the forum which brings together India, Brazil and South Africa, three large democracies and major economies from three different continents, facing similar challenges and all three countries being developing, pluralistic, multi-cultural, multi-ethnic, multi-lingual and multi-religious nations. The Ministers further stressed the renewed relevance of the IBSA Fund for Alleviation of Poverty and Hunger in successfully demonstrating the importance and viability of South-South cooperation through the implementation of a number of projects in several developing countries in Africa, Asia, Middle East and in the Caribbean, contributing to the accomplishment of the Millennium Development Goals. Both sides looked forward to having the 8th Trilateral Commission Meeting as well as 6th IBSA Summit at an early date.
12. The Brazilian side congratulated India for the successful organization of the IV BRICS Summit (New Delhi, March 2012). The Brazilian side also expressed its willingness to reciprocate the hospitality during the next BRICS Summit, to be held in 2014 in Brazil.

13. Minister Khurshid thanked Minister Figueiredo for hosting the meeting of BRICS Foreign Ministers in New York on 26 September. The two sides recognized salience of BRICS in coordinating, consulting and cooperating on global governance and contemporary issues of mutual interest. Minister Khurshid assured full support of India to Brazil's efforts in hosting the next Summit and furthering BRICS cooperation.
14. Brazil and India highlighted the importance of deepening mutual understanding and strengthening friendship ties between their respective government institutions and civil societies and business and academic communities. In this sense, the parties welcomed the joint initiative of the Brazilian "Fundação Alexandre de Gusmão – FUNAG" and the Public Diplomacy Division of Ministry of External Affairs of India in organizing the seminar "India and Brazil: A Partnership for the 21st century", held in Brasilia, in October 2013 with the participation of very knowledgeable speakers from both sides. The seminar provided the occasion for fruitful discussions on important issues in the bilateral agenda: Challenges and Opportunities of Global Governance; Challenges and Opportunities in the Strategic Partnership between India and Brazil; and the Historical bonds and transformative convergence in the relations between India and Brazil. It was also agreed that a reciprocal event would be organized in India next year.

AGREEMENTS

15. The Ministers welcomed the signature of a bilateral protocol to the "Brazil-India Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement" that amends its Article 26, regarding the exchange of information. The protocol is a further step in the global effort to establish an international financial system based on co-operation between countries, transparency and effective exchange of information in tax matters.
16. Both Ministers expect to exchange soon the notes on the ratification of the bilateral Agreement on Mutual Assistance on Customs Matters, which will strengthen cooperation between customs authorities, in order to enforce customs laws and regulations. Such cooperation will contribute to the expansion of trade flows and will ensure the security of logistic chains.

17. Furthermore, they welcome the signature of the Agreement on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons, which will enhance prospects of a closer cooperation between Brazil and India in legal assistance matters.
18. The two sides also expressed satisfaction with the renewal of the Agreement on Cooperation between their respective diplomatic academies, the Foreign Service Institute and “Instituto Rio Branco”, signed in 2007. The agreement has offered so far a most valuable opportunity for the new generations of Brazilian and Indian diplomats to deepen mutual understanding and better know each other’s values and traditions. Brazil expressed its interest in implementing the new program for the interchange of professors between the two diplomatic academies, still in 2013.

ECONOMIC AND TRADE RELATIONS

19. The two Ministers analyzed the vast potential for further growth of the bilateral trade as well as the need for its diversification. Recalling the goal to attain US$ 15 billion bilateral trade by 2015, which was established by H.E. President Dilma Rousseff and H. E. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh during the State Visit to India in 2012, the two Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to support new initiatives with a view to identify possible obstacles to trade and to agree upon appropriate solutions.
20. In this context, they highlighted the Government of India’s initiative to create, in 2011, a High Level Committee, within the Ministry of Commerce and Industry , with a view to proposing actions for improving economic and trade relations between India and Latin America. They also welcomed the decision taken by the Ministry of Development, Industry and Foreign Trade of Brazil to elaborate sectorial studies on potential new areas for trade and investments in India.
21. With a view to diversifying bilateral trade, the two Ministers called for joint initiatives such as the promoting the exchange of business missions between both countries. They expressed their commitment to encouraging their respective industrial sectors, in particular small and medium size enterprises to participate in each other's trade fairs, seminars and business conclaves in order to enhance trade flows. In this context, the Indian side reiterated its offer to the Brazilian side to become the Partner Country in India International Trade Fair (IITF 2014) to be held in Delhi on 14-27 November 2014. The Indian side informed the Brazilian side that in 2012-2013 more than ten business delegations have participated in trade fairs organized in Brazil in sectors such as Textiles and Apparels, Telecommunications and Electrical Engineering, Automotive Industry and Pharmaceuticals. The Indian side informed of the India-Latin America Conclave, in December 9-10, 2013 and invited the Brazilian side to participate. The Indian side also requested the support of the Brazilian Government in the organization of India Show, planned to be held in São Paulo in 2014, and coordinated by FICCI.

22. They also reported that there is a significant number of Indian companies investing in Brazil, with over fifty of them having a physical presence in Brazil, in areas such as oil, renewable sources of energy, mining, engineering and automotive services, information technology and pharmaceuticals, and welcomed the interest of Indian companies in establishing joint ventures in different sectors. The Brazilian side acknowledged the valuable contribution that the Indian Information Technology and Pharmaceutical companies are making in the development of Brazilian knowledge economy by generating skillful employment on one hand and bringing cost effective technology on the other.
23. The Indian side expressed its satisfaction with the Brazilian investments in India in areas such as urban transportation, IT services and equipment, footwear, infrastructure, energy and healthcare equipment. They highlighted the importance of having more Brazilian companies investing in India as well and shared the view that there is a need to improve the exchange of information of rules and regulations applied to foreign investments in both countries.

24. They further noted that the Trade Monitoring Mechanism has significantly contributed to the enhancement of bilateral trade and investments and expressed their confidence that the 4th Meeting of this mechanism, to be held in Brasilia, in November 2013, will play an important role to achieving the US$ 15 billion goal for bilateral trade by 2015.
25. The Ministers expressed their support to the negotiation of a MOU on cooperation on services issues. They recalled that the Trade Monitoring Mechanism meeting in November 2013 will be an opportunity for furthering the discussions on the draft first presented by Brazil in April 2012.
26. Both Ministers reiterated their support towards greater dialogue and the expansion of contacts between the business communities of the two countries. In this context, the two Ministers underscored the importance of the Brazil-India CEOs Forum as a mechanism to further stimulate trade and investment relations between companies of the two countries, especially Small and Medium-size Enterprises (SMEs). They also highlighted that the CEOs Forum should meet regularly and guide the process from the business point of view. The two Ministers expect that the two designated co-chairs of the CEOs Forum, Mr. Marco Stefanini from Brazil and Mr. K V Kamath from India, with the support of designated secretariats of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) and the Brazilian National Confederation of Industry (CNI), would soon be able to arrange the first meeting of the Brazil-India CEOs Forum.
27. The Parties welcomed the resumption of discussions for deepening and expanding the Preferential Trade Agreement India-Mercosur and reaffirmed their expectation that the agreement will contribute increasingly to the diversification and expansion of trade between the two countries. Indian side requested Brazil's support in expediting the process.
28. Both Ministers supported the strengthening of the dialogue between their Governments in the area of trade negotiations.

MINING AND ENERGY

29. The Ministers welcomed the perspective of increased investments in each other's energy sectors. The Indian side informed about investments made by other Indian companies. The Indian side invited the Brazilian oil & gas companies to participate in the upcoming NELP X bidding rounds for oil & gas blocks in India.
30. The Indian company ONGC Videsh Limited which already has investments in oil blocks in Brazil, as well as cooperation with Petrobras, is a Level A tenderer in the forthcoming Libra Field Pre-salt Tender, scheduled for October 21st. Both sides expect that the success of this would lead to development of newer dimension in our bilateral cooperation in oil & gas area. The Brazilian company Andrade Gutierrez is considering alternatives to invest in hydro-electricity projects in India.
31. The delegations reiterated the importance of increasing the share of renewable sources in the global energy mix, and expressed interest in strengthening cooperation in the areas of biomass, hydropower, solar and wind energy technologies in addition to the ongoing initiatives within the IBSA framework.
32. Both sides expressed their mutual intent to deepen bilateral cooperation in civil nuclear energy. In this regard, the Indian side suggested that a delegation of Brazilian nuclear energy experts to visit India to discuss further concrete proposals in this sector.
33. The Indian side requested Brazilian side to expedite response on the proposed draft Memorandum of Understanding between the two countries on Cooperation in the field of Geology and Mineral Resources, forwarded in November 2012. The Indian side welcomed Brazilian side's interest in deepening cooperation between the Geological Survey of Brazil - CPRM - and the Geological Survey of India - GSI and suggested that it be included in the proposed MoU. The two sides also welcomed the signing of the Letter of Intent between the Ministry of Steel of India and the Ministry of Mines and Energy of Brazil for enhancing cooperation in the mineral sector with special focus on steel in February 2013 in Brasilia.

34. The Brazilian side expressed satisfaction with the election of New Delhi to host the 36th International Geological Congress in 2020. The Indian side thanked the support extended by Brazil.

AGRICULTURE AND FOOD PROCESSING

35. Recognizing the high potential of bilateral trade in agribusiness and food processing, the Ministers committed themselves to discuss ways to overcome difficulties related to tariff and logistical barriers for perishable products. The Ministers expressed their expectation that the 4th Trade Monitoring Mechanism would undertake meaningful discussions to address such difficulties.
36. Similarly, both parts expressed willingness to enhance the cooperation in agriculture and animal husbandry, as well as in stockbreeding research and development, particularly between EMBRAPA and ICAR.
37. Both sides welcomed the decision to define the composition of the Joint Working Group, established in 2008 by the Memorandum of Understanding on Agriculture and Allied Sectors. It was noted that further action to implement initiatives under this MOU will be discussed during the forthcoming Trade Monitoring Mechanism meeting.
38. The Brazilian side requested the concerned authorities of India to expedite the issuance of sanitary certification of livestock products exported by Brazil, as well as the issuance of licenses for Brazilian importers of genetic bovine material from India.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

39. The two Ministers welcomed the positive results achieved at the first meeting of the Joint Commission for Scientific and Technological Cooperation, held in New Delhi in March 2012, and commended the adoption of the Program of Work on Scientific and Technological Development (2012-2014). They also commended the signature of the Memorandum of Understanding between Brazil and India on Cooperation in the field of Biotechnology. Through these instruments, the countries were able to launch two joint calls for projects, with a view to assuring financial support for scientific, technological and innovation research activities in areas such as Agriculture (including bioenergy), Biomedical and Health Sciences, Engineering (Nanotechnology and Materials), Geosciences (Oceanography and Climate change), Mathematics, Information and Communication Technologies, as well as and Renewable Energies. The projects will be jointly developed by Brazilian and Indian researchers. The Ministers noted with satisfaction that more than 90 proposals have been submitted so far.

40. The two Ministers took note of the outcome of the meeting of the Brazil-India Scientific Council, held on 27 September 2013, in Rio de Janeiro, as reported by the co-chairs Jacob Palis and C. N. R. Rao. The Council provides an important platform for the enhancement of the bilateral cooperation in Science, Technology and Innovation, within the framework of the Agreement on Scientific and Technological Cooperation, of September 2006.
41. Both sides stressed the importance of an early conclusion of negotiations to renew the Complementary Arrangement on Cooperation for the Expansion of the Brazilian Terrestrial Station for the Reception and Processing of data from the Remote Sensing Satellites of India. The renewal of the Arrangement will allow for the strengthening of the cooperation in space research in areas such as remote sensing, data reception from the Indian satellite ResourceSAT-2 and others that may come to be launched by India.
42. The Ministers welcomed the results of the Brazil-India Programme for Research in the Oceans, especially on topics such as observation of oceans and coastal areas, and welcomed the decision of the two countries to continue the collaboration on polar research within the IBSA Forum.
43. Still under the IBSA Forum, both sides marked the progress made in Scientific and Technological Cooperation in the topics of Health (HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis), Biotechnology, Traditional Knowledge Systems, Alternative and Renewable Energy and Information & Communication Technology.

44. Both Ministers urged scientists, researchers and students from both countries to consider taking profit of the opportunities, such as the ones mentioned above, to promote the scientific development of Brazil and India in an innovative approach of South-South cooperation.
45. DEFENCE
46. Both sides expressed satisfaction with the development of the bilateral cooperation in defence. They recalled the importance of the Defence Cooperation Agreement, signed in 2003 and in force since 2006, to boost the bilateral partnership in this area. They agreed, moreover, to take the necessary steps to expand and intensify cooperation initiatives in defence, in particular through the exchange of military personnel, the conduction of joint exercises and the interchange of information on research and development of defence products.
47. They welcomed the results of the Third Meeting of the Brazil - India Joint Defence Committee, held in New Delhi on May 21, 2013. They reiterated the important role of the Committee in maintaining direct and frequent contact between both countries' armed forces, as well as in the monitoring of ongoing cooperation projects and identification of new initiatives.
48. Both sides expressed satisfaction with the significant results of bilateral cooperation in research and development of aircrafts. They welcomed the success of the integration of the Indian early warning mission systems, such as radars developed by the "Centre for Airborne Systems" of the Defence Research & Development Organization, in the Brazilian aircrafts EMB 145 AEW & C (Aerial Early Warning & Control), developed by Embraer. They expressed, in this sense, their desire to further expand cooperation in this area.
49. The Indian side welcomed the invitation extended by the Defence Minister of Brazil to his Indian counterpart and expected that the visit could be organized in the near future at mutually convenient time through the diplomatic channel. They shared the view that the visit of the Minister of Defence of India would contribute to the enhancement of the dialogue in this field.

50. Both Ministers welcomed the participation of an Indian delegation at the latest edition of the “International Exhibition for Public and Corporate Security - LAAD Security” and the Indian willingness to participate in the next edition of the event, in April 2014, also in Rio de Janeiro. Brazil welcomed the invitation by India to participate at the “Fourth India Aviation” event, which will take place in March 2014 in Hyderabad. The Indian side also encouraged the Brazilian side to field their delegations to DEFEXPO and AEROINDIA as well.

ENVIRONMENT AND SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

51. Brazil and India stressed their full commitment with environmental and sustainable development matters. India congratulated Brazil on hosting the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) in June 2012, which was attended by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, as the head of the Indian Delegation. India welcomed the outcome of the Conference as reflected in the document “The Future we Want”, adopted by consensus, which expressed the international community commitment to promote an economically, socially and environmentally sustainable future for the present and future generations. Brazil acknowledged the constructive role of India in the negotiations, which led to a successful conclusion of the meeting. The Ministers renewed the willingness of Brazil and India to engage and cooperate in the development of the future Sustainable Development Goals.
52. Both sides highlighted the importance of the discussions on biodiversity at multilateral fora and agreed to continue their dialogue and cooperation on this topic, including through the coordination of positions at the Convention on Biological Diversity. Brazil congratulated India for the hosting and the outcomes of the 11th Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD COP-11) and the 6th Meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety.

53. Both sides welcomed the results of the 16th BASIC Ministerial Meeting that took place in Foz do Iguaçu in September 2013. The Brazilian side expressed its gratitude for the contribution of the Secretary for Environment and Forests of India, to the successful outcome of the BASIC Meeting. They reaffirmed the important role of BASIC, since its establishment in 2007, in building understanding on the climate change regime and the definition of a fair and effective world response to global warming, as well as its contribution to international financial, technological and technical management of actions on mitigation and adaptation in developing countries.
54. The Ministers noted the interest in concluding negotiations on a Memorandum of Understanding on Environmental Cooperation in the near future.

TECHNICAL COOPERATION

55. The Ministers took note of the signature of the Memorandum of Understanding on Technical Cooperation during President Dilma Rousseff's State Visit to India in March 2012. They also noted that the creation of the Development Partnership Administration, an agency linked to the Ministry of External Affairs of India, will enhance the opportunities for a broader dialogue and more intense collaboration between Brazil and India in issues related to technical cooperation.
56. The Brazilian side welcomed the participation of Brazilian nationals in cooperation activities organized by India. Recalling the excellent results of the Indian participation in different activities organized by Brazil in areas such as agriculture, sports and social development policies, among others, the Brazilian side reiterated its willingness to receive more Indian participants in its technical cooperation programmes.

57. The Brazilian side appreciated the Indian sponsorship of the training courses for more than 25 Brazilian officials to study in India in more than 20 different streams in last five years under its ITEC programme. These courses included areas such as diplomacy, renewable energy and energy efficiency, public administration, computer sciences, English proficiency, auditing etc.

SOCIAL AND HEALTH ISSUES

58. The Ministers stressed that economic growth with social inclusion is a common objective of Brazil's and India's societies. The Indian side expressed its gratitude, particularly for the contribution of the Ministry of Social Development and Fight against Hunger to the elaboration of its own anti-poverty programmes. The Brazilian side commended the Indian Government for the recent initiatives in this area, such as the National Food Security Bill, and proposed to continue exchanging experiences on the implementation of each other's programmes.
59. Brazil and India expressed their satisfaction with the results of the Third Global Conference on Child Labour that took place in Brasilia in October 2013, which has contributed to the efforts of achieving the goal of complete eradication of the worst forms of Child Labour by 2016.
60. The two sides underlined the interest in expanding dialogue on health issues, including by exploring possibilities of cooperation in areas such as laboratory quality control, organization of productive chains and medical research. The Brazilian Ministry of Health expressed specific interest in starting discussions with a view to exporting vaccines to India.
61. The Indian side requested the Brazilian side to look afresh into the proposed draft Memorandum of Understanding between India and Brazil on Cooperation in Traditional System of Medicine. This is especially relevant as there is considerable interest found among Brazilian people in Indian Traditional Medicine such as Ayurveda.

62. Both sides welcomed the expanding cooperation between the drugs regulatory authorities of the two countries, ANVISA on part of Brazil and CDSCO from India. This would be further strengthened by signing the proposed Memorandum of Understanding between the two institutions during the forthcoming Meeting of the Trade Monitoring Mechanism meeting in Brasilia in November 2013.
63. Brazil and India have exchanged experiences and views on issues related to intellectual property and public health. The Parties highlighted the importance of this debate for both countries and agreed to establish a bilateral dialogue on intellectual property with a view to exchanging experiences and facilitating coordination on multilateral debates related to IP. Both sides agreed that bilateral talks on this subject could take place in the framework of the Trade Monitoring Mechanism.
64. Noting the close interdependence between peace, security and sustainable development, as reflected in the UN Charter, both Ministers called upon the international community to duly take into account the crucial role of food security and poverty eradication, essential components of sustainable development, in strategies for the promotion of sustainable peace and security.
65. Both Ministers expressed their satisfaction with the visit to Brazil, in April 2013, of the Indian delegation from the Ministry for Women and Child Development of India as part of the implementation of the Statement of Intent to Promote Gender Issues and the Protection of Women's and Children Rights, signed in New Delhi in March 2012, during the State Visit of President Dilma Rousseff to India.

EDUCATION

66. Both sides stressed the importance of education as a means to promote social and economic development and expressed their mutual interest in strengthening academic mobility between both countries.

67. Both Ministers expressed satisfaction over the creation of a Brazilian lectureship at Jawaharlal Nehru University, which will be initiated in the second semester of 2014. The lectureship is part of the efforts undertaken by Brazil to promote the Portuguese language as well as Brazilian culture and literature in India. The Indian side welcomed this timely initiative as it would contribute to increasing mutual knowledge between the respective societies.
68. Brazilian side appreciated the successful completion of two editions, first in Political Science and second in Defence Economics, of the short term chair of Indian Council of Cultural Relations established at FGV in Rio de Janeiro since 2012. The Indian side informed the Brazilian side that the process is underway to ensure the third edition to start on schedule in March 2014. The Indian side welcomed the establishment of the Centre for Indian Studies at the State University of Rio de Janeiro and offered to develop an active cooperation programme with the Centre in coming months.
69. It was stated that some Brazilian students willing to apply to Indian universities have been facing difficulties regarding the recognition, in India, of basic education certificates. The Brazilian side requested the competent authorities of India, including the Association of Indian Universities - (AIU), to establish a dialogue channel to resolve the issue at the earliest opportunity.
70. The Ministers welcomed the commencement of the implementation with India of Science Without Borders Program. Both sides expect to increase the exchange of visiting professors and the mutual attraction of young talents in areas of their common interests.

CULTURE

71. Both sides recognized the potential for further cultural cooperation and agreed to intensify efforts to ensure the full implementation of the Cultural Exchange Program (2012-2014), as well as of the Agreement on Audiovisual Co-Production (2007). The Indian side requested the Brazilian side to indicate its focal point for the implementation of the bilateral Cultural Exchange Programme.

72. Both parties expressed their satisfaction with the successful implementation of the Residency Program in 2013, in whose framework two Brazilian painters worked for two months in New Delhi with a view to intensify the cultural dialogue and the interchange among Brazilian and Indian artists.
73. They also welcomed initiatives of cultural promotion that are being implemented in 2013 in the fields of national cuisine music, literature, visual arts and cinema, such as the organization of the Brazilian Cuisine Festival in New Delhi and Indian Food Festivals in Brasilia and Sao Paulo in 2013. The Brazilian side expressed its appreciation at the initiative of the Indian Embassy in Brasilia to celebrate 'Hundred Years of Indian Cinema' in seven Brazilian cities, namely, Curitiba, Brasilia, Manaus, Goiania, Pirenopolis, Belo Horizonte and Sao Paulo.
74. The two sides noted that the Indian Cultural Centre established in Sao Paulo in May 2011 has been contributing to deepen people to people links. The Centre has regular classes of classical Indian dances (Odissi, Bharat Natyam & Kathak), Yoga, Hindi and gastronomy. They commended the initiatives organized by the Centre, which is also being availed for celebration of Indian and Brazilian festivals, organization of lectures, shows, seminars, workshops, movie and documentary screenings on diverse subjects like tourism, anthropology, religion, culture, art, history and has hosted more than 250 events and participated in dozens of events organized by other institutions. Under ICCR Scholarship Scheme and Ayush Scholarship Scheme, during 2012-13, three Brazilian Nationals have gone to India to study Indian literature, Odissi and Yoga.
75. Brazilian side reiterated its commitment to establish a Brazilian Cultural Centre in India soon.

TOURISM

76. Both sides agreed to encourage and facilitate the visit of tourists between both countries and demonstrated interest in exploring the possibility of joint investments in the hotel sector and in touristic infrastructure.

77. The two Ministers expressed their satisfaction with the growing tourism flows between their countries. Noting, however, that these flows remain well below their vast potential, they reiterated the importance of deepening the cooperation in this area. Recent figures show that 20 thousand Indian nationals visited Brazil in 2012 and 17 thousand Brazilians visited Indian in that period.
78. The Ministers noted that the bilateral Agreement on Air Services, signed in 2011, provides the legal framework to the establishment of direct flights between Brazil and India. In this regard, they took note of the plans announced by Air India to inaugurate in 2014 the first air route between India and Latin America, connecting Mumbai to Panama City, and encouraged the extension of such services also to South American cities.
79. The Brazilian representative reported that the Ministry of Tourism of Brazil, along with EMBRATUR, plans to strengthen the flux of tourism within the BRICS countries. In this regard, Brazil announced that special promotion activities for the Indian market are being developed and will be implemented in 2015.

SPORTS

80. Both parties agreed that the mega sporting events are opportunities for development and social inclusion, as well as allies in the fight against racial, ethnic and gender discrimination. They are instruments for the promotion of peace, international cooperation and rapprochement between partner countries, such as Brazil and India.

CONSULAR ISSUES

81. Both Ministers welcomed the conclusion of the negotiations to establish a consultation mechanism with a view to promoting coordination on consular and migratory issues. Such a mechanism will offer a forum for discussing each other's policies pertaining to consular matters, diaspora protection and migration, as well as address issues related to visas and work permits. In view of the importance and urgency of the issues to be dealt with by the mechanism, both Ministers agreed to hold its first meeting early in 2014, in New Delhi.

82. The Indian side commended the efforts of the Brazilian Government related to the issuing of Business visas, as discussed during the 5th Joint Commission Meeting in 2011. The Brazilian side underlined that, since the adoption of Normative Resolution 100/2013 of the Brazilian National Council for Immigration, in 9 May 2013, more than 50% of the requests for visas presented at the Embassy of Brazil in New Delhi have been submitted to simplified visa issuance procedures. Both sides agreed to monitor the new initiative and address the problems to enhance flow of people between the two countries which is bound to increase substantially as the partnership grows in all fields in the near future.
83. The Brazilian side informed the Indian side on the discussions that are taking place in Brazil in order to reform the immigration law through a Bill of Law to be introduced shortly in Congress that will have much more flexible and open mechanisms to deal with immigration issues and especially with visas for qualified workers and their families.

COOPERATION IN LEGAL ISSUES

84. The delegations of Brazil and India held a technical meeting to advance negotiations on the Agreements on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters and on Mutual Legal Assistance in Civil Matters. The Ministers reiterated their interest in concluding negotiations on those agreements as soon as possible. They welcomed the Brazilian proposal to host a negotiating meeting in Brazil, or alternatively, by video conference.
85. Both sides welcomed the conclusion of their internal procedures and the entry into force of the Bilateral Extradition Agreement soon.

REGIONAL AND MULTILATERAL ISSUES

86. Both sides exchanged views on regional and multilateral issues. The Minister of External Relations of Brazil briefed the Indian side on the developments in Latin America and the Caribbean while the External Affairs Minister of India briefed the Brazilian side on the developments in South Asia.

87. The two Ministers expressed deep concern about the ongoing violence and the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Syria. They called upon all parties to commit immediately to a complete cease-fire, to halt violence and to end all violations of human rights and humanitarian law. The Ministers reiterated that there is no military solution to the conflict and that it is time for diplomacy.
88. The Ministers expressed satisfaction with recent important developments that bring renewed hope for a peaceful resolution to the Syrian conflict. They welcomed the framework agreement for the elimination of Syrian chemical weapons reached by Russia and the United States. They further welcomed the news of the adoption by the UN Security Council of the resolution that requires the elimination of all chemical weapons on Syrian territory and endorses a peace process led by the Syrians.
89. They stressed that the elimination of chemical weapons and the political process aimed at resolving the Syrian conflict should be pursued in parallel. They also reiterated their support for the convening of an international conference on the Syrian situation as early as possible. They stressed that only an inclusive political process, led by the Syrians, as recommended in the Action Group on Syria Communiqué issued in 2012 could lead to peace, to the effective protection of civilians and to the realization of the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian society for freedom and prosperity. They expressed their full support to the efforts of the UN-Arab League Representative Lakhdar Brahimi in helping finding a political solution to the crisis.
90. The two Ministers welcomed the announcement of the resumption of negotiations between Palestinians and Israelis as an encouraging development. They reaffirmed that the resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is a prerequisite for building a sustainable and lasting peace in the Middle East region. In recalling the primary responsibility of the UNSC in maintaining international peace and security, they noted the importance that the Quartet reports regularly to the Council about its efforts, which should contribute to concrete progress.

91. The Ministers expressed their concern about the reported practices of unauthorized interception of communications and data from citizens, businesses and members of governments, compromising national sovereignty and individual rights. They reiterated that it is important to contribute to and participate in a peaceful, secure, and open cyberspace and emphasized that security in the use of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs) through universally accepted norms, standards and practices is of paramount importance.
92. The Indian side expressed its gratitude for the warm and friendly hospitality received during their period of stay in Brazil.
93. Both sides agreed to hold the Seventh Meeting of the Brazil-India Joint Commission in 2014 in India, on a date to be mutually agreed through diplomatic channels.

481. External Affairs Minister's media statement at the Joint Press Interaction following the 6th India-Brazil Joint Commission Meeting in Brasilia.

Brasilia, October 15, 2013.

His Excellency, Mr. Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado, Foreign Minister of Brazil,

Distinguished representatives of the Media,

I am indeed happy to be in this beautiful country Brazil. This is my first visit to Brazil in my capacity as the Foreign Minister of India. I am leading the Indian delegation for the 6th round of Joint Commission Meeting. I thank Foreign Minister His Excellency Mr. Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado for his hospitality extended to me and my delegation.

India-Brazil cooperation is extensive and comprehensive, and covers every important segment of interaction. This relationship exists at three levels: bilateral and plurilateral in such fora as IBSA, BRICS, BASIC and G-20, and in the larger multilateral arena such as UN (with our G-4 initiative), WTO, WIPO, etc. Interactions at the highest level between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Brazilian Presidents Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva and Dilma Rousseff provided high levels of commitment and content to our bilateral relationship, and has led to the creation of an extremely diversified partnership, of which we saw evidence in the Joint Commission Meeting.

In the course of the day during the meeting, Foreign Minister Machado and I have concluded comprehensive discussions on the entire gamut of our bilateral relations. Foreign Minister Machado and I, were assisted by our respective delegations. In our discussions we agreed that our ongoing bilateral cooperation in all areas including trade and economic, education and culture, science and technology, environment, defence and space should be further strengthened to our mutual benefit reflecting the growing importance of our Strategic Partnership.

The coordination in multilateral fora and the ongoing cooperation in IBSA, BRICS, BASIC, G-4 and G-20 is an extremely important dimension of the Brazil-India Strategic Partnership. We reaffirmed to work together to further contribute to the reform of the institutions of global governance with a view to making them more legitimate, representative and inclusive.

Recalling the Brasilia Declaration of June 2003 that constituted the IBSA Forum, we underscored the IBSA's uniqueness as the forum which brings together India, Brazil and South Africa, three large democracies and major economies from three different continents, facing similar challenges and all three countries being developing, pluralistic, multi-cultural, multi-ethnic, multi-lingual and multi-religious nations. We both look forward to having the 8th IBSA Trilateral Commission Meeting as well as 6th IBSA Summit at an early date.

We also recognized the salience of BRICS in coordinating, consulting and cooperating on global governance and contemporary issues of mutual interest. I assured Minister Figueiredo of India's full support to Brazil's efforts in hosting the next Summit and furthering BRICS cooperation.

During the JCM, we both reiterated our intention to enhance the scope of our bilateral trade and investments which presently does not correspond to its full potential. Our bilateral trade in 2012 was US$ 10.6 bn and we need a lot of catching up to meet the trade target of US$15 billion by 2015 set during the State visit of President Dilma Rousseff to India last year. In this regard we agreed to strengthen our economic engagement between our business communities through exchange of business delegations and participation in each other's trade fairs. We urged the two designated co-chairs of the Brazil India CEO's Forum to arrange the meeting of the Forum soon to look into all these aspects.

We both agreed to further stimulate bilateral cooperation in energy, agriculture, mining, defence, space, IT, pharmaceuticals and science and technology with joint collaborations and research. We reiterated that the successful mounting of the Airborne Early Warning and Control (AEW&C) programme with Indian radar by DRDO on the Brazilian EMBRAER aircraft is an excellent example of our ongoing cooperation in this sector. In the area of Space, India would be happy to provide data to Brazil from its RESOURCESAT-2 satellite. The JCM also discussed the possibility of Indian oil company OVL to acquire greater stakes in oil blocks in the pre-salt area of Brazil.

We both noted that there are a significant number of Indian companies investing in Brazil, with over fifty of them having a physical presence in Brazil, in areas such as oil, renewable sources of energy, mining, engineering and automotive services, information technology and pharmaceuticals. The Indian Information Technology and Pharmaceutical companies are making valuable contribution in the development of Brazilian knowledge economy by generating skillful employment on one hand and bringing cost effective technology on the other. We highlighted the importance of having more Brazilian companies investing in India.

The JCM noted with satisfaction good progress on consular issues. We both discussed the need for regularly addressing problems related to business visas and work permits through dialogue. During the JCM, two sides confirmed the completion of ratification process on Extradition Treaty, signed the agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons, exchanged notes on the ratification of the bilateral Agreement on Mutual Assistance on Customs Matters and signed the Protocol Amending the Convention on the Avoidance of Double Taxation. The two sides also arrived at an agreed text on the MoU for setting up of a Joint Working Group on Consular, Migration and Diaspora matters. Such a mechanism will offer a forum for discussing each other's policies pertaining to consular matters, diaspora protection and migration, as well as address issues related to visas and work permits.

Our cultural links have received further impetus through the India Culture Centre in Sao Paulo. We congratulate the State University of Rio de Janeiro for taking the initiative to set up a Department of Indian Studies, and promise every possible assistance in making this project a success. Similarly, the proposal of setting up of a Chair of Brazil in the Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi in 2014 is also a very welcome initiative from Brazilian Government side. We also agreed that both sides are going to work together on innovative ways to increase the exchange of visiting professors and the mutual attraction of young talents in areas of their common interests.

We wish Brazil all the success in hosting the FIFA World Cup in 2014 and the Olympics in 2016.

Foreign Minister Machado and I also exchanged views on regional developments and multilateral issues. We have a shared understanding that threats to international peace and security should be dealt with in a consensual manner. We further agreed that the challenges to climate change and the global economic situation should be addressed in a coherent and concerted way with greater commitment from the developed world. Both India and Brazil have reiterated to work closely on the reform of the United Nations, in particular, towards the common objective of expansion of membership in the permanent and non-membership category of the United Nations Security Council.

I look forward to working closely with Foreign Minister Machado in further enhancing our Strategic Partnership for the benefit of our two peoples. I extended an invitation to Foreign Minister Machado to visit India in the near future.

COSTARICA482. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the visit of the Minister of Commerce and Industry of Costa Rica.*New Delhi, April 17, 2013.

The Minister of State in the Ministry of Commerce & Industry, Dr. D Purandeswari held three bilateral meetings and signed one important Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) in Costa Rica yesterday. She first met Ms. Daisy Maria Corrales Diaz, Costa Rica's Minister of Health. Followed by it, she met Mr. Alejandro Cruz, Minister of Science and Technology, Costa Rica. Then in afternoon, she met Mr. Luis Liberman, Vice President of Costa Rica. During the bilateral meetings, Dr. D Purandeswari discussed various issue of mutual interest to both the countries. The Indian Minister in particular raised issues concerning the problems faced by Indian community in Costa Rica in importing various food items from India. She also raised the visa problems faced by Indians, the problems in bidding by Indian pharmaceutical companies. Dr. D Purandeswari also raised the issue of inviting proposals under line of credit already issued by Government of India. A MoU was signed by India and Costa Rica in establishing an institutional mechanism for enhancing trade and commerce ties between both the countries to next level. A joint committee will be formed from Indian side. It will be headed by Commerce Secretary from the Indian side and the Minister for Trade from Costa Rica side. It was also proposed to hold at least one meeting in two years.

483. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President's Visit to Peru, Cuba and the UK.

New Delhi, October 23, 2013.

Deputy Secretary (XP) (Shri Biswadip Dey): Good afternoon friends. To my right is Secretary (West) Mr. Dinkar Khullar. To his right is Mr. Dammu Ravi, Joint Secretary (LAC). We are here today for the briefing on Vice-President's visit to Peru, Cuba and UK. Secretary (West) has agreed to take questions after his opening remarks. The questions will be limited only to the visit.

Secretary (West) (Shri Dinkar Khullar): Thank you Bishwadip.

As Bishwadip has pointed out, this is in connection with the visit of Vice-President to Peru and Cuba. Vice-President will be making a state visit to Peru and Cuba from October 26th to 30th, 2013. He will be accompanied by a Minister of State, four Members of Parliament, senior officials and a fair contingent amongst you.

I will begin with Peru. This is the first state visit to Peru after 15 years. The last state visit was when our former President K.R. Narayanan visited. The visit of Vice-President coincides with the 50th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries.

Vice-President will be received by his counterpart Ms. Marisol Espinoza, and will be meeting Foreign Trade and Tourism Minister and President of the Congress. Vice-President will be calling on President Humala.

The current President of Peru Ollanta Humala took office in July 2011 and has been keen to strengthen bilateral relations with India. Thus, Vice-President's visit to Peru should be seen as the beginning of a new process.

As part of the 50th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations, a Mini Festival of India will be held in Peru which will be inaugurated by the Vice-President on the day of his arrival.

Earlier this year Peru had issued a special commemorative stamp featuring Machu Pichhu and the Taj Mahal. Machu Pichhu is one of the World Heritage Sites in Peru.

The economic content of the discussions is likely to be significant given that Peru is the sixth largest economy in Latin America and its economic growth rate is said to be the fastest amongst the Latin American countries. Peru itself is endowed with rich and diverse mineral resources which could be of enormous interest to India. They also have reserves of hydrocarbons.

They are also members of a major economic alliance called the Pacific Alliance, which is an alliance on the western side of Latin America as opposed to Mercosur on the eastern side.

Our trade relations are flourishing. Our trade volume is around US$ 1.1 billion, marginally in our favour. It is expected that the discussions, as I said, will seek means to enhance both trade and investment.

We will also expect to cover areas such as technical cooperation. We already have an ITEC programme ongoing with Peru. We will see how we can enhance or improve that. The subjects of science and technology are also likely to come up in our discussions.

At the political level, as I said this is a very significant visit and we have the privilege of having close contact on multilateral issues with Peru which I expect will figure in Vice-President's discussions.

I turn to Cuba. Vice-President will be in Cuba on 29th and 30th of October. He will proceed from Lima to Havana. It seems odd but it is true that this is the first VVIP state visit from India in the history of our bilateral relationship. This is despite the fact that we have very old enduring relations with Cuba.

As you know, we have a special historical relationship being founding members of the Non-aligned Movement. The first meeting between Pandit Nehru and Fidel Castro in New York is very well known, as also the famous encounter between President Fidel Castro and Mrs. Indira Gandhi at the NAM Summit in 1983 in New Delhi. In fact some of you may say that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh did visit Cuba in 2006, but that was on a multilateral engagement. It was not a bilateral engagement. That is why I said this is the first VVIP bilateral visit.

The Vice-President's programme in Cuba will include his interaction with his counterpart the First Vice-President of Cuba Mr. Miguel Diaz-Canel Bermudez. As you know, former External Affairs Minister Shri Krishna visited Havana last year in June, and this year in May the Foreign Minister of Cuba Mr. Rodriguez Parrilla visited for bilateral talks. These two are in a sense preparatory to this VVIP visit, and work has been done to prepare adequately for Vice-President's visit and programme. He will be calling on President Raul Castro during his stay in Havana.

As with Peru, India and Cuba always maintained close contacts in multilateral fora. It is of some relevance and importance from the point of view of the visit at this time that Cuba is currently holding the Presidency of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (CELAC) a group of 33 countries in the region. So, it is significant that our visit is taking place at a time when they have the Presidency.

As far as our economic relations, which again are important for us, with Cuba are concerned, the bilateral trade is not very significant. It is only about US$ 40 million. There are a number of reasons why trade with Cuba has not been able to grow commensurate with our political relations, some of it of course relating to the fact that they come under this embargo of US which makes it problematic for shipments and things like that.

But we do have a significant economic engagement despite that. We have provided them credit. We have written off US$ 62 million debt in 2008. We have extended a further line of credit of US$ 120 million to Cuba, of which at present US$ 12.7 million has been utilised for three projects – one is a milk powder plant, one is a chemical bulk blending plant, and one is modernisation of an animal vaccine plant.

We have great interest in Cuba with some areas of their specialisation. They have great expertise in the area of biotechnology and pharmaceuticals. Their health schemes are very well-known. They provide doctors all over the world as a matter of fact as you may be knowing. So, this is an area we are looking to see how we can collaborate. It is likely that there will be a visit to a biotechnology centre as part of the programme. But we will brief you more on that as and when the visit takes place.

The other area in which we have benefited greatly from our engagement with Cuba is their excellence in sports. They provided us with coaches, notably in the field of boxing which has enabled us to win medals in the Commonwealth and Olympic Games. So, we will see how this too can progress.

Finally, like elsewhere in the Latin American region, there is interest in hydrocarbons. OVL is already involved in Cuba and in fact was granted eight offshore oil blocks and has already invested US$ 130 million in the project.

I will leave it at that. That gives you a brief background of what we are doing. As we go along in the visit, of course we will brief you on developments as they take place. Thank you.

Q: Could you give a sense of India's investment in the hydrocarbons sector in Peru? In your introductory remarks you spoke about cooperation on multilateral issues. What are those issues which are going to be discussed during the talks?

Secretary (West): The exact investment in Peru in terms of hydrocarbons perhaps JS (LAC) will know; I cannot give you the figure offhand. But I will get it to you at some suitable stage. As far as the multilateral issues that are expected to be discussed, we normally discuss issues such as what is happening in the United Nations and fairly obviously the reform of the United Nations is a subject which is likely to come up.

I would not wish to pre-empt what Vice-President might like to discuss but I expect that the UN Security Council will come up for discussion. There is a possibility of discussions of other international institutions. They may want to have our views on subjects such as G20 of which we are part. But I am only conjecturing at this stage. This will be left to the Principals to decide what they would like to discuss.

Q: I just wanted to get a sense that out of 33 LAC countries, how many of them have declared support for India's candidature for a permanent seat in the Security Council. Is there any rough estimate?

Secretary (West): Let me ask JS (LAC) to respond on that.

Joint Secretary (Latin America and Caribbean)(Shri Dammu Ravi): I do not think there is a very significant opposition to India's candidature. We have seen it from the last time. On the non-permanent membership almost all countries have supported India. But on the permanent membership there are three countries which are part of the Coffee Club – Argentina, Mexico and Columbia. Barring these, most countries have no problem with India's candidature.

Q: Is there any proposal from Cuba for visa on arrival?

Secretary (West): No, I do not think there is a proposal for visa on arrival. We are discussing, I think, the possibility of diplomatic visa exemption. Bilateral arrangement for exemption of visas on diplomatic and official passports is something we discuss, but visa on arrival I do not think there is any such proposal.

Q: Has the Archaeological Survey of India ever been invited to take a look at Machu Pichhu which was shut down for some reason some time ago? I am not very clear whether it is open to tourism. And also, Cuba is a beautiful country. Havana is a very pretty town. I do not know how many more tourists Cuba has been getting after Ek Tha Tiger was shot there and so on. But the last time I was there, I thought the place needed a whitewash. Since Batista went home, I think the Communists forgot to give it a whitewash!

Secretary (West): Machu Pichhu is not closed down actually. It is open to tourists at present. Whether Archaeological Survey of India has been or is likely to go there, I can only inform you that Secretary (Culture) is likely to be there on a visit around the same time as the Hon. Vice-President and he may explore possibilities of what we can do together with Machu Pichhu. So, I will leave it to Secretary (Culture) because he will be there.

As regards your second question, it is true that tourism from India to Cuba would not be very large. But I think that is a common problem because of distance also and accessibility.

On improvement in their facilities, Cuba has gone through difficult economic times - first with the Soviet Union collapse and the implications, and more recently with their problems arising out of the passing on of Mr. Chavez who was a great supporter of them. So, indeed they are going through difficult times but they are changing. If you are on the visit with us, I am sure you will discover and I am told by my colleagues that President Raul Castro is working to change the system also, not just improvements in the facades but also in the main system.

Q: What are you expecting from Peru, Sir?

Secretary (West): ... (Inaudible)... the discussions that we are having both at the political and the economic level. I think if we hold something back to see what happens in the discussions, then we can tell you. We have a number of things in the pipeline. I would prefer to report on them only at the conclusion portion of the visit in Peru. I do not want to preempt what will be discussed and what may be outcomes which I have not anticipated. But there will be some definite outcomes.

Q: What are the issues between Peru and India?

Secretary (West): Frankly there are no major issues that we have to discuss. Our bilateral relations are excellent. It is a problem-free relationship. What we do in this kind of relationships is, the purpose of the visit is to, as I said, enhance, expand the areas, whether it is political, of which some of the areas of discussion I mentioned to you. We will obviously, as I said, discuss multilateral issues including wider Latin American issues.

On the economic side we will discuss trade and investment. I specifically referred to India's interest in minerals and hydrocarbons. We will be discussing technical cooperation programmes, for instance what we can offer. ITEC is one area. The other area is IT. There are possibilities. The cultural festival is part of the visit. And I referred to science and technology. We already have an agreement on science and technology. We are likely to operationalise it in some form or the other. So, these are the broad gamut of issues that I expect to be discussed in Peru.

Q: This is about the UK. Would the issue of the UK Visa Bond which is being proposed for certain countries including India, be raised during the visit?

Secretary (West): Let me clarify this. Bishwadip had already alerted me that I was remiss in not including UK in my initial observations.

UK is not a bilateral visit by Hon. Vice-President. The Hon. Vice-President will be delivering a public lecture in UK. So, the engagement with the Government will be protocol related only. There will be no bilateral discussions. So, I do not expect that this subject will come up. That means, it is not going to come up at all because we are not going to have bilateral talks.

Q: What is this lecture going to be on?

Secretary (West): This is at Oxford Centre of Islamic Studies on 'Citizenship and Identity'.

Q: Mr. Secretary, I believe India is making an effort to win over the last frontier, the Latin America, an area that we have sort of neglected over the years. There is a view that this is a reaction to the fact that China is a major investor in the region especially in Peru. It has very close and military and economic ties with Peru. What are the other things that we have planned in this direction? Secondly, I believe Bollywood is a big part of the Peru and Cuban festivals. Is that correct?

Secretary (West): I can easily respond on the basis of what he tells me that Bollywood is indeed part of the Festival. But as you would know, that is not an exclusive preserve of Peru or anywhere. Every festival which we are doing abroad has a component nowadays of Bollywood. I have just come back from Brussels where we inaugurated Europalia which also had a Bollywood component. I think that is a common feature, it is not specific.

Your first question is a more substantive one. I would not like to call Latin America necessarily the last frontier. But you have got a point that perhaps in the earlier years when our diplomatic footprint was not so widespread, Latin America did not receive as much attention. But I think this is turned around quite some years ago. I do not think this particular visit on which I am briefing you can be treated in any way as a kind of a path-breaker. It is a very important visit from the point of view of Peru and Cuba.

But the fact of it is that we have extensive exchanges going on at all levels. I referred to the fact that EAM has been there last year. As you may know, EAM was in Brazil just a week ago. And I did make a reference to the fact that the President of India visited Peru fifteen years ago. So, it is not as if we are opening up, it is not as if we are waking up today to Latin America. It has been going on for some time.

Large amounts of investments have been taking place. Private investment has been flowing. I referred to hydrocarbons, I referred to minerals. So, I would not go so far as to say we are reacting to the Chinese. I think Chinese and us have similar interests in the area and so we find ourselves both going there. I do not think there is a kind of race for the gold medal going on between us.

And of course our interests differ just as they do in other parts of the world. Our interests do not necessarily relate only to natural resources. I mentioned mining because it is of some interest, but it is not our exclusive area of interest. India is active in a number of other fields. I mentioned IT for instance. All over Latin America we have been setting up these IT centres. So, that is absolutely different from the Chinese model, similar to what is going on in Africa.

Since I am referring only to this visit, I would only say this much. But there is a lot more going on in Latin America. There have been lot of visits. EAM for instance has travelled widely to a number of countries in Latin America. And it is a part and parcel of the foreign policy game.

Q: Could you give us the names of the four MPs accompanying the Vice-President?

Secretary (West): I can give you the names now that they have been given to me.

They are: Hon. Smt. Renuka Chaudhary, Hon. Smt. Supriya Sule, Hon. Shri T.K. Rangarajan, and Hon. Shri Shashi Bhushan Behra.

Q: Mr. Khullar, one of the reasons why the trade between South America and India, tourism between South America and India is comparatively low is because of the lack of adequate shipping facilities. To go to Havana one had to go from Delhi to Dubai, Dubai to Sao Paolo, Sao Paolo to Rio or somewhere else, and then stuff like that. Studies have shown that if we have a direct, shorter route by sea, the trade will multiply several fold.

We are paying special attention to Africa and we have India-Africa Summits. We hosted I think three or four of them. But we do not seem to have a similar thing with South America. Is not it time that we thought of doing something about it, Mr. Khullar?

Secretary (West): Yes, your first point about shipping and infrastructure basically to facilitate trade is well taken. However, times have considerably changed. In the old days we used to say that the easiest way to start trade between country A and country B was ask Shipping Corporation of India to start a shipping line. That is no longer relevant in today's world. We are not confined to choosing Shipping Corporation. It is a globalised transport industry. As long as you are able to get links, you are able to reach. Distance is indeed a problem. It adds to costs, very simple. But it adds to everybody's costs. Therefore, we should be trading more.

But our trade is not as dismal as it appears. Trade and the number of people who are going there now for investment has increased significantly. We have in fact on December 9th and 10th, I think we have a conclave. CII is organising a conclave with Latin America. So, it is a purely economic initiative with Latin America and expected to be attended by a large number of countries at a pretty high level, much like the conclaves which are done with Africa.

As regards Africa, you are right we have this India-Africa Forum Summit. We have had two actually, one here and one in 2011 in Ethiopia. That has given us a lot of resonance. We have benefited from it. I suppose at some stage we may take a look at it for Latin America.

But I think the conclave process for instance with Africa much precedes the summit process. The conclaves started the ball rolling in a sense and it moved towards it. I am sure my colleague who deals with Latin America will take your idea on board, and we will see where we take it. But at present we are working through these bilateral engagements.

Deputy Secretary (XP): With that we come to the end of this press briefing.

Thank you

484. On-board media briefing by Vice President enroute to Frankfurt on his visit to Peru, Cuba and United Kingdom.

October 25, 2013.

Under Secretary (XP): A very Good Morning to all of you and welcome onboard on what is the first ever Vice Presidential visit to Peru and Cuba. Hon'ble Vice President has kindly agreed to interact with you. As is the practice he will first make his opening remarks following which he will take a few questions.

Vice President: Thank you every one, I think you have the minutes already. Let me start with the good news we have 44 hours of flying ahead of us, in three to four segments. I am sure Air India would take good care of every one. At this stage I am not sure what I should be saying. These are two countries far away from India but nevertheless important countries. Peru on the west coast of South America, is increasingly a major factor in global economy, I think it is somewhere 5th or 6th in terms of its GDP growth rates and other things, and an important source of minerals, something that we are looking at very closely.

That is one, the other is Cuba, a very well know country in India, long years of association with us on the Non-Aligned front, on the third world agenda front and innumerable political matters. So I am myself surprised that we have had so few high lever visits, of course Prime Minister had been there recently though it was for an international conference - the Non Aligned conference. But Cuba is a particularly friendly country and we have had very warm and very cordial relations with Cuba. Its also in many ways unique, in the sense that it has sailed its craft in adverse weather for a very very long time but it speaks volume for their skills that they have not only survived , they have done well. They have certain niche areas of competence which are of relevance to us . They have done some excellent work in sports medicines, general areas of medicine, bio technology, in numerable things but I am also waiting to educate myself on these things. This is broadly the agenda.

We are making a stopover in Frankfurt which is obligatory in technical terms. The plane cannot fly the entire distance, the crew must take the obligatory rest time. On the way back we are stopping over in London. Again it's a stop over but I had a long pending invitation from a Centre in Oxford to give a lecture there. So I am using this occasion to fulfill that obligation. That is it, I don't think I have anything more to say at this stage.

Q: Your Excellency, is this a routine diplomatic visit or is there any specific agenda you are carrying so far.

Vice President: Dekhiye, all visits are specific visits. Diplomacy is only the instrument or the vehicle in which you do it. This is a normal thing but we have to realize one thing increasingly, we are living in a world which is contracting. There is no such thing as a far off country. Economically South America is as relevant to us as once upon a time Australia used to be relevant or irrelevant. I remember when I went to Australia as High Commissioner in the beginning of 1985, a very distinguished predecessor left a note for me. It said 'there is neither substance nor prospect in the relationship, enjoy your stay'! Well nobody will agree to it today, even I did not agree to it after a few months there. So every country has a potential of being a partner in cooperation and that is true of Caribbean countries, that is true of South American countries. And last but not the least, every sixth person on the globe is an Indian and no matter where you go you will find an Indian community and touching base with them, establishing contacts with them, I think, has become part of the national agenda. So in each one of these places we will come across Indian communities, some of them are even Indian business communities which shows that the potential for business is being explored very seriously.

Q: When most of government's focus is on 'Look East Policy'; what message a tour of Latin America sends out?

Vice President: 'Look East' does not mean, you don't look West; you don't look North, you don't look South. 'Look East' was a specific instrument grafted to take advantage of a situation which was emerging in South East Asia, where we had very old ancient relationships but the idea was to give it new content. And those of you who were with me on the visit to Vietnam, I mean, at one stage the relationship with Vietnam were purely political. Today Vietnam is a vibrant business centre where Indian business community is doing well. Same holds for Singapore, same holds for Thailand and same for Malaysia, Brunei, Indonesia, Philippines. So there is no such thing as a one track focus. As a major country and as a major economy we will look at all corners of the world and we are very clear why we are looking at all corners of the world, whether it is the west coast of Canada or the west coast of South America.

Q: Latin America and Caribbean region is emerging as important region is the world and also an arena of competition for emerging Asian powers. How do you see our engagements in the region and what is distinctive about our engagement in the region and what are the key decisions that you foresee will accelerate this engagement?

Vice President: You see the reasons of engagements are multiple, there is not one reason for engagement. These are big countries; some of them are huge economies. I mean we think South America is a small place but if you just look at the size and distances, one of the biggest countries in the world is Brazil - look at the map, just see the size of Brazil, the resources of Brazil; same holds for Argentina. On the west coast, Chile – a major source of minerals of various kinds; Peru again same; Venezuela - a major oil producing country. So in each one of these countries there is political engagement because they are important members of the international community, there is economic engagement. With many of them there is either BRICS or Non Aligned engagement. So it's all of a comprehensive basket of considerations

Q: During your visit would you raise the issue of restructuring of the UN and India's need for support for that? This high level visit to Peru and Cuba is taking place after fifteen years; after this would there be need for increased contacts with them and frequency of these contacts would indeed increase?

Vice President: Two things: first, UN restructuring has been consistently on the country's agenda for many years; Wherever we go, we talk about it, we are convinced that the UN which was structured in 1945, is inadequate to meet the needs of today: The political developments that are taking place in the world make this clear; Therefore UN is a on-going exercise. This is not going to happen today or tomorrow, because those who have power are not going to give up so easily.

The second question was why this visit is taking place after such a long time? The Government has too many issues at hand; It does not mean either the President or the Prime Minister, or I or the Foreign Minister visit; Depending on the occasions the visits take place; somewhere commerce minister goes, or Finance Minister or HRD Minister or Science and Technology Minister. Where there is the question of terrorism, Home Minister goes; This is a regular activity. For top level visits there is greater effort involved; you have to seek the convenience of others, One cannot dictate dates, Such things happen daily in the Foreign Office. Each country has its own priorities, Once has to keep a balance among the dignitaries you want to invite; all cannot be from one country, or one region, this causes gaps, this is unavoidable. This does not happen to us only, this happens to all the countries.

Q: Sir, in your times in Foreign Ministry, the emphasis of diplomacy was more ideological, political and now it's more economics & trade. China seems to have stolen the march. What your advice will be on how to counter balance this situation. Second question, we would like you to share your memories of your meeting with Fidel Castro when he came here for NAM in 1983.

Vice President Well I am not in agreement with your first question. Our thrust in diplomacy was always comprehensive. It was political, it was economic. The question was our requirements and our capabilities. In 1947 our requirements were different. If you pick up a newspaper from 1947, you will find that along with the major news, there would also be news of food ships arriving. That was the time when we did not grow enough food. That time the population was 370 million. Now see what is the population. The requirements keep changing. In requirements in sixties, seventies or eighties were different and policies change and adjust accordingly. Now requirements are totally different, our capabilities have increased, so our engagements too have gone up.

Your second question was about President Castro. President Castro was the star of the conference in 1983 because he was the outgoing Chairman of the NAM. And therefore all importance had to be given but Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, I was working in Ministry of External Affairs then, her instructions were very specific, whatever his requirements may be, they all have to be looked at very carefully and considerately. He was a personality in his own right, remains a personality in his now right.

Q: My question is that the countries you are visiting are culturally very rich and so is our country, India. So do you think ...(inaudible)..... to connect these countries culturally. What is the idea?

Vice President: No, the cultural agenda has always been the principal item in the external relations of India. Because we have much to share with the world and other countries are very happy to share our cultural repertoire with them. So that is one side of it, economic engagement is on the other side of it, political engagement is the third side of it. They don't overlap, they don't contradict. On the contrary they are mutually supportive. If we can back up our economic effort with cultural effort, which is in today's terminology called as soft power, so much the better. We had lot of it. Similarly with political, if there is convergence of views, it helps bring economic relations together. I mean each one of these streams are not contradictory, they are mutually supportive. What takes precedence at a point of time is a matter of situational adjustment.

Q: Sir, Specifically are we looking at trade in these Latin American countries?

Vice President: I will also explore the possibilities and get briefing from the ambassador. My general impression is that our economy needs resources. In South America OVL, which is our flagship carrier in the energy areas, is extensively involved. It is involved in Venezuela, it is involved in Cuba, it is involved in Mexico. Similarly our companies which are looking for mineral products are involved. I know in Chile, in Peru, may be some other countries. There are a whole range of other products which we are importing including some agricultural products from South American countries. I remember a long time back the President of Mexico was visiting India, there is a particular tree which is found in Mexico which grows very quickly and our agricultural scientists had concluded that if you can get that kind of sampling here it would be very beneficial in our afforestation programs. So Prime Minister Indira Gandhi made a specific request to the President to bring some saplings. And he did bring the samplings.

Under Secretary (XP): With that we come to the end of this interaction. Thank you all.

Vice President: Well ladies and gentleman, enjoy your flight, enjoy the stop over in Germany.

Thank you

PERU

485. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Culture on the Festival of India in Peru.

New Delhi, October 28, 2013.

Indian cultural festival in Peru was formally announced on Friday with the India-Peru Literature Festival. This Gala Indian Cultural Festival also coincides with the visit of the Vice President of India Shri Hamid Ansari, who would be undertaking the highest ranking bilateral visit since year 1998 from India to Peru. The Festival would manifest many elements of long, rich and diverse Indian cultural heritage and would be the largest Indian cultural festival ever held in Latin America and the Caribbean. This reflects the special place that Peru enjoys among Indians.

The Festival features:

The Indian Dance Festival in Peru is titled Nrityarupa, the mosaic of Indian dance which encapsulates the experience of Indian dance as it has evolved in various parts of the India. In so doing, it offers a glimpse of the great mosaic of cultures that constitutes the Indian Nation, and demonstrates in a creative, kinetic form their dynamics in relation to each other. Six dance forms representing the diversity of India's culture have been chosen for this presentation to audiences in Latin America: Bharatanatyam of Tamil Nadu, Kathak, pre-eminently the dance of northern India; Odissi, from Odisha in eastern India; Manipuri from north-eastern State of India; Kathakali of Kerala at Southern tip of the Indian peninsula; and Chau which covers a wide swathe of territory in eastern States of the Union. One seamless presentation of these dances has been visualized leading to a jubilant finish. The Indian Dance Festival is being coordinated by the Sangeet Natak Academy.

The Indian Film Festival would feature old and new Indian films and classics. The Indian Films being screened include Raja Harishchandra (mute), Taare Zameen Par (Hindi), Ghare Bhaire (Bengali), Ardh Satya (Hindi), Bobby (Hindi) , A Wednesday (Hindi) and Kahbi Haan Kabhi Naa (Hindi). The Indian Film Festival is being coordinated by the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting.

The Festival of India was formally inaugurated by the Vice President of India Shri Hamid Ansari. The inaugural function was attended by the Peruvian First Vice President Mrs. Marisol Espinoza and a number of senior dignitaries from the Indian and Peruvian side.

The Festival of India in Peru is being coordinated by the Ministry of Culture in association with the Sahitya Academy, the Sangeet Natak Academy and the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting. The Indian Culture Secretary Shri Ravindra Singh who is in Peru to mark the occasion said that the Festival is expected to bring the Indian and Peruvian people closer to each other and will enhance people to people contact.

488. India-Peru Joint Statement issued on the occasion of the visit of Vice President of India to Peru, October 26-28, 2013.

Lima, October 29, 2013.

1. In the framework of the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Peru and India, the Vice President of India, Shri Mohammad Hamid Ansari, accompanied by a high level delegation, paid an official visit to Peru from 26th to 28th October, 2013.
2. During his visit, the Vice President of India had a special meeting with the President of the Republic of Peru, H.E. Mr. Ollanta Humala Tasso. Shri Ansari conveyed the greetings of the President of the Republic of India, Shri Pranab Mukherjee and extended an invitation to President Humala to pay an official visit to India. The invitation was accepted with pleasure and it was agreed that mutually convenient dates would be finalized through diplomatic channels.
3. The Vice President of India held detailed discussions with the First Vice President of Peru, H.E. Ms. Marisol Espinoza and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru, H.E. Ms. Eda Rivas Franchini. He also had a meeting with the Minister of Foreign Trade and Tourism, H.E. Ms. Magali Silva. In addition, he visited the National Congress of Peru where he met the President of the Congress, Mr. Fredy Otarola and members of the Peru-India Parliamentary Friendship League.

4. The Vice President inaugurated the Festival of India in Peru. He also launched INCHAM, the new Indian Chamber of Commerce in Peru.
5. The talks covered a wide range of issues pertaining to bilateral, regional and global matters of mutual interest and were held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere. The Governments of Peru and India reaffirmed their commitment to deepen the high degree of mutual understanding and cooperation that exists between the two countries, and to further consolidate and strengthen the existing ties between them in various fields, especially trade, investment, defense, education, culture, science and technology.
6. The two sides stressed the importance of promoting bilateral political dialogue, including through the continuation of high-level contacts, in order to take their relationship to a higher level. Accordingly, they agreed to establish a Joint Commission, chaired jointly by their Ministers of Foreign Affairs, with the objective of strengthening political, security, judicial, human resource development, economic, technical, scientific, social and cultural cooperation, and signed a Memorandum of Understanding to this effect. It was further agreed that their senior officials will meet in Lima in the second half of 2014 to decide on detailed modalities for beginning the work of the Joint Commission and prepare for its first meeting.
7. The two sides noted with satisfaction the impressive increase in bilateral trade which was over US$ 1.1 billion in the year 2012. They agreed on the importance of promoting greater business meetings and trade missions between the two countries. They also expressed their desire to continue exploring new opportunities for augmenting bilateral trade, as well as the importance of increasing cooperation in the area of investments, to the benefit of their economic sectors specially the micro, small and medium-sized enterprises.
8. The two sides underlined that a Free Trade Agreement between Peru and India will have a positive impact on increasing prosperity and well-being of the people of both countries. The Peruvian side welcomed the Indian initiative of undertaking a comprehensive study on this important subject that will have far reaching implications for both countries. Keeping this in view, they both agreed to continue to work towards holding negotiations in near future.

9. On the other hand, they also agreed that early conclusion of their ongoing negotiations on instruments to promote and protect bilateral investments would greatly assist the businesses of both sides.
10. Both sides reiterated their willingness to identify concrete actions and projects that generate a structured exchange of experiences, at the level of South-South Cooperation.
11. It was also agreed to define a set of priority areas for the implementation of cooperation programmes, both in the application of information technologies and technological innovation to increase development opportunities, as in the use of science for equality and social and digital inclusion in Peru (e-education, e-health, IT software and solar energy, among others).
12. The Government of Peru welcomed the willingness and goodwill of the Department of Science and Technology of India to collaborate in the exchange of experience and good practices necessary to implement projects in Peru under its Science for Equity, Empowerment and Development (SEED) programme, focussed on development issues and social inclusion.
13. In reiterating its gratitude to Government of India for the establishment of the Centre of Excellence in Information Technology (CEIT) in Lima, the Government of Peru expressed its hope for an early implementation, which will contribute towards the training of key technical personnel in the country for the management and implementation of these technologies. The Government of India assured the Government of Peru that the process to establish the CEIT was in its final stages and it will become operational soon.
14. Peru expressed its appreciation to India for regularly providing technical training to Peruvian citizens under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme (ITEC).

15. The two sides signed an Exchange Programme on Cooperation in the Field of Education which will promote initiatives designed to create coordination mechanisms to facilitate the funding of scholarships, projects and/or joint agreements for the enhancement of human resources of both countries.
16. The two sides underlined that India and Peru are cradles of great civilisations. In this context they both underscored the importance of further deepening bilateral cultural relations through cultural exchanges and cooperation in diverse art forms such as painting, dance, theatre, literature, craft, etc. as well as holding of cultural festivals in each other's countries from time to time. With this objective, the Cultural Ministers of the two sides signed a Letter of Intent for enhancing cooperation in the fields of museology, conservation of movable cultural properties and dissemination and promotion of cultural heritage of each other's countries.
17. The two sides concluded their negotiations and signed a Defence Cooperation Agreement. This will enable the enhancement of cooperation between Peru and India in the fields of defence and defence technology through establishment of appropriate mechanisms.
18. At the multilateral level, both governments reiterated their commitment to democracy, peacekeeping and security, renunciation of the threat or use of force, peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for international law and principles of the United Nations. They affirmed that terrorism cannot be justified in any form for any cause or for any reason. Both countries agreed to maintain a high level of coordination and cooperation, particularly on issues of mutual interest, such as the reform of the United Nations Organization and mutual support of candidatures presented to international organizations. Peru reiterated its support for India's claim for permanent membership in an expanded UN Security Council.
19. The Vice President of India congratulated Peru for its impressive economic growth and the leading role it has played within the "Pacific Alliance" and other regional integration schemes.
20. The two Governments expressed their satisfaction with the celebration this year of the 50th anniversary of the establishment of Peru - India diplomatic relations, and the organization of various activities to commemorate this. This occasion, has provided a further opportunity for strengthening the ties of friendship and cooperation between them. They particularly appreciated the visit to India in April 2013 of a parliamentary delegation from Peru, the first ever between the two countries, and agreed to encourage more such exchanges.

21. Equally, both governments underscored the need to strengthen “people to people” relations between the two countries and agreed to explore the possibility of promoting sister-city relationships between the most representative cities in their respective countries.
22. The Government of Peru thanked the Government of India for organizing the Festival of India in Lima on the occasion of the official visit of Vice President Ansari.
23. At the end of the visit, the Vice President of India expressed his appreciation to the Government of Peru for the warm welcome and hospitality received during his official visit to Peru.

* Media reports said that besides boosting trade and strengthening economic ties, India and Peru decided to enhance cooperation in the defence sector and work towards South-South cooperation and reform of the United Nations Security Council. The reports said that the senior officials would meet in Lima in the latter half of next year to decide on the modalities for beginning the work of the commission and preparing for its first meeting. The commission, is part of efforts to promote bilateral dialogue in order to take the relationship to a "higher level."

According to Secretary (West) Dinkar Khullar, the Peruvians were keen on training for their defence personnel in India. Slots had been offered in the Defence Services Staff College, Wellington. Also, since the Peruvians had large Russian military equipment, they looked forward to India being able to supply spares. Peru reiterated its support for India's claim for permanent membership in an expanded United Nations Security Council. Both countries agreed to maintain coordination on matters of mutual interest such as reform of the UN and support for each other's candidatures presented to international organisations.

489. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President's ongoing Visit to Peru.

Lima, October 30, 2013.

Under Secretary (XPS): Good evening friends. Welcome ... media briefing. To brief you on Vice-President's ongoing official visit to Peru as well as his official engagements of the day we have with us Hon. Secretary (West), Shri Dinkar Khullar. To the left of him is Joint Secretary (Latin America & Caribbean Division) Shri Dammu Ravi. We will begin with opening remarks of the Hon. Secretary following which the floor will be open for questions.

Secretary (West) (Shri Dinkar Khullar): First let me apologise for keeping you up but I can only tell you that we have come straight from the President's Palace, and as a result of traffic and so on we have got a little late. Let me proceed with briefing you. We briefed you before we left; the Vice-President briefed on the flight, so you are fairly au fait with what we are going to do. But I will try and cover what we have done in the course of today.

There was of course the Festival of India inaugurated on Saturday. All of you are aware of that; I know that you have done coverage of that.

Today was the main day of engagement. The meetings began with the meeting with the President of the Congress. This is a unicameral legislature here and the President of the Congress along with the Vice-President of the country as well as other members of their Parliament or members of their Congress received the Vice-President in the morning, following which we had bilateral talks with the Vice-President and the Foreign Minister. Vice-President and Foreign Minister both participated in the bilateral talks. These talks proceeded for about an hour after which we signed agreements details of which have been conveyed to you, the four agreements that were signed thereafter.

In the afternoon there was a call by the Trade and Tourism Minister on Vice-President. I think I mentioned to you that trade and economic aspects of the engagement are important items on the agenda. Of course just recently and we are coming, as I told you, straight from a meeting with the President. So, in short the Vice-President has had an engagement at all levels in the Government as we would expect. The meetings were generally marked by warmth, appreciation of the value that they attach to relations with India. I think the words we used earlier were that this is a new beginning, I think this was reflected in the engagement across the board today.

I would now turn to giving you some idea of what is the substance of the discussions that have taken place. Trade and economic cooperation was an important aspect of the debate. In all the meetings this was covered in detail - investments by Indian companies here as also investment by some Peruvian companies. I think there are three who have some investments in India. But the expectation is that this will increase.

Just for background in case I forget later, before all this started there was the inauguration of the Indian Chamber of Commerce in the morning, before we left, that was done at the hotel.

One of the important aspects which has been projected by the Peruvian side and which is reflected in the Joint Statement which has been circulated is the keen interest that the Peruvian side have evinced in a Free Trade Agreement with us.

As you would see from the Joint Statement, this is something which is at the exploratory stages only at this point of time. A study has been commissioned by the Ministry of Commerce and we are awaiting the evaluation of the study before we are in a position to respond. I am mentioning it only because the Peruvian side attaches a great deal of importance to this and it was emphasised in all the meetings that we had.

We have also responded that we would like to respond after doing the exploratory phase. It is a possibility that can be considered, but right now we are not in a position to commit anything on this. I think this is important for you all to know lest the impression be conveyed that it is something which is already done. It is very much a work in progress and it will take some time. The Trade Ministry will have to talk directly with them.

Areas of cooperation that were identified on the bilateral front other than this were science and technology, information technology, education, and innovation. It is actually quite interesting that again across the board the entire leadership of the Peruvian side focused a lot on the aspects of education, technology.

In fact, the whole question of development and feeling that the Peruvian Government, as Vice-President has noted in one of his observations, in fact has pretty similar view of ours as an overall policy. What he called the social philosophy of the two Governments tend to converge because they too have been talking in terms of inclusive growth, the need to address issues of poverty and inequality and issues of development. As you all know, this is very much the agenda of our own Government back in India.

In fact, there was great resonance on this particular broad social philosophy. But how do we achieve it? I think the decision was taken to establish a Joint Commission. One of the MoUs that were signed was to establish a Joint Commission, and the Joint Commission has been earmarked the job of working on these various areas of bilateral cooperation, following on some of the agreements that were signed today, as also these broader subjects that I mentioned to you – innovation, education, IT.

In fact, some suggestions have been made that the senior officials should meet to implement these ideas as early as the first half of next year. But I think it has been left to diplomatic channels to decide when the senior officials would meet. But the Joint Commission established, as you know, at the level of EAM and Foreign Minister would be the vehicle for translating the discussions into actual programmes.

I think of all the agreements signed - I am not trying to diminish the value of any of the others - I think the Joint Commission agreement is a landmark kind of decision that we have signed an agreement to establish a Joint Commission which will then oversee the entire progress of bilateral relations between our two countries.

On the agreements, I will quickly go through them in case they have not been indicated to you. We signed a Letter of Intent for cooperation in the field of museology, conservation and promotion of cultural heritage of each other's country. We have signed a defence cooperation agreement to promote exchanges and training and collaboration in defence technology.

In fact specifically the President in his conversation with the Vice-President raised the issue of possibility of exchanges in the defence field for training. He mentioned it more than once. The Vice-President conveyed to him that we have offered some slots for training in our Defence College in Wellington.

Then we had this Joint Commission, I have already mentioned to you. Finally the Educational Exchange Programme was also signed. These are the four agreements that were signed.

While bilateral agenda was obviously very strong and a major aspect of the visit, we did also cover multilateral issues. I think Vice-President made it a point to mention that this is an area in which there is scope for effective cooperation. We have broad similarities on issues concerning global matters. On this I would just briefly touch upon the issues we talked about. One is I think referred to in the Joint Statement. The UN Security Council, they have reiterated their support for India's permanent membership.

Two issues in fact in particular in which we found that there were shared perceptions were the fight against terrorism and drug trafficking. As you know, Peru has been a victim of both of these. In fact in their case they think that these issues have been linked also. So, we found them extremely close to our own viewpoint on the issues of terrorism and drugs.

Vice-President raised it and he got a positive response that yes we share this and we should be seeing how we can take this up more effectively in the multilateral forums. You know the CCIT has been pending for years together. It was referred to. But I do not think we are specifically seeking support for any agreement. What we were saying was that this is an area in which we have clear common interests to address these issues. Again we found great resonance on this. So, terrorism and drugs were talked about. There also was talk of possible regional cooperation. They were talking about cooperation between regions.

Vice-President did make reference to our association with Latin America as a whole as an investment destination, as a trade partner, as CELAC. So, there are a lot of areas in which we ourselves see our engagement with the region as a whole. They would also like to see their own region relate to regions across the Pacific and things like that. These are of course things that will go on. But this was referred to, so I should make a mention of this.

Finally there was an invitation extended on behalf of our President to the President of Peru to visit India. He expressed his desire to visit India at his earliest. I think the details will be worked out through diplomatic channels. But I think he said more than once in response that he was greatly looking forward to a visit to India and would in fact consult his Foreign Minister on when he could do so.

The President, just to indicate the importance that he attached to the visit, had with him for the engagement both the Foreign Minister and the Trade Minister. The third is the Education Minister who spent five years in India as a student because her father was an Ambassador. So, he had basically had three Ministers with him for the engagement with VP. I think that is a signal of the importance that they attached to VP's visit on this occasion.

All in all, we get the impression that the visit has gone very well. It has been very well received. I think they are looking to India for a number of things. We have offered cooperation in all those areas. We see it as a mutually beneficial relationship which now should be taken forward after what has been a gap. In the first decade of the present century there has not been too much engagement. So, this will set the pace in a sense for what we will do in the future.

The agenda, as you can see, is fairly wide. We did of course convey the IT centre which I mentioned to you in my earlier engagement that would be from them and that the IT centre will be established in the course of this year.

I will leave it at that and ask Dammu if he has anything to add.

Joint Secretary (LAC)(Shri Dammu Ravi): I have nothing to add.

Secretary (West): Okay, then I will leave us open to any questions.

Q: When you had a talk on economic cooperation, while the Indian companies did show interest in investing in Peru, did the Peruvian companies show any interest in investing in India?

Secretary (West): Yes, of course, they spoke about it, there is already investment by three companies; I think our Ambassador has more details on it.

Joint Secretary (LAC): In Maharashtra there is AGE Peru which manufactures soft beverages. It has invested about US$ 50 million. There is another Peruvian company, a fast food chain, that is in Mumbai. And then there is a company Resemin, which specialises in manufacturing of mining machinery. These are already there.

Q: What is the value of total investment?

Joint Secretary (LAC): It is about US$ 30 million from their side.

Secretary (West): We also have told them after all that our companies are looking for resources. So, many of those companies have invested in mining and so on. So, it will be a process which will get under way. The very fact that three Peruvian companies are already established is quite an achievement. They are not looking for resources, they are looking for markets obviously. But let us see. They did mention the possibility of both trade and investment in both directions.

Q: Is there any chance for having any direct flights between the two countries to promote tourism and all?

Secretary (West): I think there was a reference made by both the Trade and Tourism Minister and the President to increased people-to-people contacts, growth of tourism, and that naturally if trade grows then tourism will grow. There was a mention also of the possibility of a flight, that we could have direct connections. But at this point of time I think this is just at a very incipient stage. I am not aware of any serious thought as yet of any direct flights. It will have to be still the indirect route.

Q: Has it been implemented in the education sector? Would the Universities start? How will this happen?

Secretary (West):

This is happening in broad terms. We have EPP. We signed it with a number of countries. It is an enabling agreement. There are various possibilities. Basically it would be exchange of students. We have offered scholarships also, they have asked for it and we have offered also.

Exchange of teachers is also possible; Exchange of visiting professors among the universities. People going, visiting professors from one university to the other, research collaboration, will happen. According to the agreement; this is a general agreement and enabling agreement;

Q: On defence cooperation, can you give any details? And is there any such agreement with any other Latin American country?

Secretary (West): The defence cooperation agreement, in concrete terms I mentioned to you what has been talked about. This is at present giving some slots in these colleges. I understand that already we have a Peruvian attending the National Defence College course. We have offered two slots in the Wellington Staff College. But this is not as if it is being offered after this. These offers we have made and this will be part of the engagement in this agreement. Other than that I do not think there are any specifics we have come down to. As I mentioned to you, what has been decided or what our Vice-President has proposed and was accepted by his counterpart was that now that these agreements have been signed, it was now left to the senior officials meeting of the Joint Commission to actually lay down what are the concrete, this is only a catalyst.

At Vice-President level you do not go about deciding ki yeh slot hoga aur yeh cooperation hoga. Obviously experts will have to meet. The Defence Ministry under the aegis of the External Affairs Minister there will be a senior officials meeting in which we will have representatives of all the Departments under MEA and we will then have people coming down with concrete ideas ki kya ho sakta hai. Defence cooperation agreement in Latin America perhaps Dammu will add.

Joint Secretary (LAC): We do not have it with many countries but significantly with Brazil that has been active for a long time. Of course, Brazil we moved ahead in terms of having joint collaborations, one of which is the mounting of Indian radar on a Brazilian aircraft MVR which is a very successful joint venture between the two.

With other countries in the region, we have with Ecuador where we were able to give Dhruv helicopters in a commercial deal with Ecuador and they have been successfully flying. With Colombia we have a defence cooperation agreement but again nothing much is happening beyond selling some equipment like surveillance and night vision equipment and all that. But again this Latin American region, in terms of defence cooperation it is not much as compared to other regions but it is slowly growing. We will have to see how far we can take it forward.

Secretary (West): But our Defence Ministry is interested that they sign this agreement. So, obviously experts will talk and will decide where it will go.

Q: Anything from agriculture was said there between the two countries? Anything on agricultural investment or industrial themes?

Secretary (West): Nothing in specific. Obviously no agreement has been signed on that. Agriculture was discussed in the context of trade. It came up in the context of trade because Peru itself is a major agricultural exporter of some specialised items which not all of us were aware of. For instance, one of the largest exporters we discovered of artichokes. They are exporting grapes actually already to India, specialised, large red grapes as was explained to me. So, in terms of trade in agricultural products, the possibility of them being able to export to India came up. But other than that, specific agricultural cooperation did not figure in as any item specifically for discussions.

Q: No allied industries?

Secretary (West): You mean food processing, etc.

Q: Yes.

Secretary (West): No, frankly it did not come up in today's discussion. But you see that there is some fast food chain and beverage chain which is already established there. I would only guess that obviously these products, for instance these vegetables of the upper end of the market, if they can be got there and then be converted into value-added products within India, there is possibilities of investment arising out of that because these are products which are not in India and as yet do not have such a major market and possibly this could be developed.

Q: What is the progress in FTA?

Secretary (West): I think I already responded on that. But let me once again clarify that progress on FTA would be there if there is a decision to do an FTA. As yet there has no decision been taken to proceed.

Q: But they have shown some positive interest.

Secretary (West): Yes indeed. Indeed they have shown positive interest. Having shown positive interest we have responded, as you would have seen, that there is a study which is commissioned by the Commerce Ministry to evaluate what are the possibilities. That study has been concluded and now it is being studied by the officials of the Commerce Ministry, and they will take a view.

We have agreed that based on this we will look forward to the possibility. We are after all doing FTA negotiations with other countries, other regions. So, we will see how it can be done. So, we are exploring possibilities of how this would progress. It has been suggested that the Commerce Ministers are likely to meet later this year - they meet often, as you know – in Bali in this particular case in a multilateral meeting. And perhaps the two Commerce Ministers, the Trade Ministers will be able to take this forward.

Q: Have they invited Indian President also?

Secretary (West): No, actually it is the other way round. We have invited their President because, as you know, the last visit was of our President. President Narayanan came in 1998. So, in terms of protocol it will be for the President of Peru now to go to India for which an invitation has been extended by our President, and has been conveyed to the President this evening and he has very warmly accepted it.

Q: Any discussion on gold trade in the meeting?

Secretary (West): No, we did not discuss gold.

Q: Mr. Secretary, you said that this is a landmark visit and will set the trend for the future with the region and the state that we have sort of ... (Inaudible)... We would like more details about that.

Also, I would like to know what was discussed on this thing called innovation. You mentioned that IT education, innovation, and science and technology were the four subjects. What precisely was discussed in innovation? Finally, this Letter of Intent on museology is what that would entail.

Secretary (West): Just to tell you on the specific question of innovation, education, S&T, and IT, once again I would draw your attention to what I said earlier. What has been discussed is no specifics and it is neither expected. As you would all know, at the Vice-President level they do not go into specific details of what they are going to do. They lay down broad parameters within which the officials are then expected to work. So, as I said, in this particular case we have already got a Joint Commission. A decision has not been finally taken but a proposal has been made by them for a meeting of the senior officials as soon as the early 2014.

Whether that works out, I cannot guarantee right now. But the intention is to convert it. And I think specifically this was a proposal of Vice-President in response to a number of ideas that were being thrown up that let the officials come down with concrete results. I cannot give you what areas for instance innovation is required in. That will be defined by what they need and what we are able to supply or the other way round, vice versa.

Letter of Intent on Museology is part of these exchanges. We normally sign these cultural exchange programmes with various countries. I think the Culture Ministry is presently interested in a more concrete kind of cooperation. You are aware that Vice-President visited a museum here. While he was there, they are very well-known, they have a very ancient civilisation like our own and there is scope of cooperation between the museums. I think this is a new area of interest of our Culture Ministry and which is reciprocated by them. Is there anything more on the Letter of Intent?

Joint Secretary (LAC): Specific issues are not there but I think broadly what they mean is the maintenance of museums, learning from each other's experience and also in terms of the conservation techniques of their artefacts that are there. In those areas they would like to have exchanges and they will be able to discuss.

Secretary (West): When we visited this museum yesterday, I think even our Secretary Culture was explaining that there are several things obviously that they thought that these are good ideas which could be transposed to us. Similarly if they come and see what we are doing, they may be able to do it. That is the idea to move it to specifics. Otherwise, what tends to happen in cultural exchange programmes is that they become so diffused, you do not know. But this one is very specific.

As I said, my first observation, by saying it is a landmark legislation I begun by the premise that we have had a period of relative quiet in the bilateral relationship. That has changed significantly and in that sense this is a landmark. And it is a fact that we have got a number of areas which have been discussed as potential areas of cooperation. You know, I think all of you know that in bilateral engagements when discussions take place there are many areas discussed, not all of them fructify into tangible outcomes. But here there were very specific areas and they have mentioned things. It will really be for the Joint Commission to now convert this into a reality. So, it is only the idea at this stage, and that I think in itself is a landmark.

Q: Talking about the specifics of defence cooperation, what we have before us talks about tackling non-conventional threats like drugs and piracy. Piracy is interesting, what we can do in that area. Also it talks about collaborate in the sphere of defence equipment exports. We would like you to fill in on the details.

Secondly, we were under the impression that something in the area of hydrocarbons would also potentially emerge. Is that an area we are still looking at?

Secretary (West): Let me clarify since I mentioned hydrocarbons. Hydrocarbons did not figure specifically in the discussions today. I can be quite clear on that. We did discuss minerals certainly, but hydrocarbons did not figure. Hydrocarbons will really depend on the interests of individual companies. I think I mentioned to you in the context of the Cuba visit that OVL will really take a call on where it wants to go. It is already spread very widely over Latin America. So, that will depend as a commercial decision on OVL. But it did not come up. Just to clarify that.

On the defence cooperation side, any defence cooperation agreement will obviously have a component on possibility of export of equipment. That will depend, there are possibilities. It could be just things like spares. He mentioned to you just now like in Ecuador a commercial deal was reached on helicopters. This would be highly speculative of me to try and venture into what kind of equipment will be done. This is also a sensitive subject as you know and the Defence Minister would be able to answer that question rather than me. But what was specifically discussed was the possibility of exchange and this I mentioned to you what has been said about the possibility – attending courses and so on, the soft side of defence cooperation can be discussed. The hard side of defence cooperation finally will be discussed between the Defence Ministries of the two sides.

On piracy, they do not have the same problem because the problems are on our part. Peru is very active, Latin Americans are very active in the United Nations and in multilateral forums. If they are and they have some experience in this, why should not we talk about them? It is a problem for us. It may not be a serious problem for them. But they may also think that maybe it will come to them. If the pirates get troubled there, they may head out elsewhere. So, it is just an area which has been discussed. I do not think as if it is some concrete item of piracy. Drugs was specific. It was a discussion which proceeded for some time.

Q: In the case of defence, I think their interest is significantly emerging from the fact that they also have very large Russian equipment.

Secretary (West): Yes. That is why I mentioned spares.

Q: So, they feel their spares and training could be an area of interest.

Secretary (West): On this again my recommendation is that you wait till Defence tells you what they are going to do.

Under Secretary (XPS): Thank you friends. With that we come to the end of this briefing.

TRINIDAD & TOBAGO490. Speech of Union Minister of Culture Smt. Chandresh Kumari Katoch at the Joint Press Meet with Lincoln Douglas Minister of Arts and Multiculturalism, Government of Trinidad and Tobago.*Port of Spain, November 4, 2013.

"I am indeed delighted to be in your beautiful country. I thank you for receiving me and the excellent arrangements made for my visit. Our two countries have a long history of diplomatic relations and my visit should enable enhancement of the cultural ties and people to people relationships between our two countries. I have had the opportunity to visit Tobago yesterday and the visit was culturally enriching and I had a feeling of deep satisfaction after meeting so many of your country men. I have had a long and intimate relationship with your country since the late 1970s when my brother Shri Gaj Singh Jodhpur was high commissioner of India to Trinidad and Tobago. During this visit I have had cordial and constructive discussions with the President of Trinidad and Tobago, the Foreign Minister, the Minister of Arts and Multiculturalism. In the evening I will be visiting Divali Nagar to participate in the Dipavali celebrations and will be meeting the Prime Minister on the sidelines.

\Diplomatic relations between India and Trinidad have been cordial and constructive. In the UPA government several high level visits have been exchanged between our two countries. The Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh ji visited Trinidad in 2009 for the CHOGM summit and the Prime Minister of Trinidad Smt. Kamla Prasad Bissesar visited India in 2012 for bilateral meeting leading a 160 member delegation. There have been several ministerial level exchanges in recent years.

India Trinidad cultural relations are symbolized in the cultural agreement signed between our two countries in 1987. In pursuance of the cultural agreement, a cultural exchange program for 2012-14 was signed in January 2012. The main features of the cultural exchange program are:

- a. exchange of exhibitions
- b. exchange of performing artists

- c. exchange of cultural anthropologists
- d. exchange of cultural delegations
- e. encourage signing of long term cultural agreements between institutions
- f. exchange of radio and TV programs and documentaries
- g. organize festivals of feature and documentary films

Under the cultural exchange program the Indian science exhibition was inaugurated in may 2012 by the secretary culture. The national council of science museum (NCSM) has signed an MoU with National Institute of Higher Education, Research, Science and Technology (NIHERST), T&T as part of the cultural exchange between India and Trinidad and Tobago. India had also proposed to convene a festival of India in October 2013 but the dates could not be firmed up.

Our two countries have celebrated 50 years of diplomatic relations between India and Trinidad and Tobago from August 24 to 31, 2012. various events like the visit of Trinidad and Tobago band 'Dil e Nadan' in Delhi and visit of Trinidad and Tobago carnival costumes designer to India for designing various costumes for events including the Surajkund Mela which was organized in February 2013 have taken place.

Following my discussions with the authorities of Trinidad and Tobago the roadmap for enhanced cooperation has been identified as follows:

- a) A new cultural agreement between the two countries will be formulated to replace the 1987 agreement so that the agreement can best capture the modern developments in the culture sector;
- b) The cultural exchange program for 2014-16 will be formulated based on the cultural agreement that will be developed in the coming days;
- c) An invitation has been extended to minister Mr. Lincoln Douglas to visit India along with a delegation of performing arts to discuss the contours of collaboration and sign the agreement at a mutually convenient date;

- d) The festival of India in Trinidad and Tobago which could not be held in October 2013 will now be held in October 2014 under the new cultural agreement;
- e) Collaboration will be extended to Trinidad and Tobago authorities for setting up a sugar museum in Port of Spain;
- f) Assistance will also be extended to the Trinidad and Tobago authorities for collaboration in archives maintenance;
- g) I will be taking up the request of the authorities of Trinidad and Tobago for collaboration in film development with the ministry of information and broadcasting and the construction of a cultural center in Divali Nagar with the ministry of external affairs.

I bring to you the good wishes of millions of Indians on the festive occasion of Dipavali.”

VENEZUELA

491. Joint Media Interaction of External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister of Venezuela.

New Delhi, December 20, 2013.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Syed Akbaruddin): Welcome to this joint media interaction.

As is usual, I will request the two Ministers to make their opening remarks following which they have agreed to answer a couple of questions. May I begin with requesting the External Affairs Minister of India Shri Salman Khurshid to make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Salman Khurshid): Distinguished colleagues, members of the media, His Excellency Mr. Elías José Jaua Milano, the Foreign Minister of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela:

This is indeed my pleasure to be welcoming His Excellency the Venezuelan Foreign Minister on his first ever trip to India and of course a very impressive delegation that includes ten Vice-Ministers. And this is for the second session of our bilateral Joint Commission Meeting.

I will make my comments short and sweet. At least the sweet part is what reflects the conversations that we have had. There were prolonged conversations, we were meeting with friends after a long time, and there was so much for us to share about our two countries and what we can do together.

In the course of the day in this round of Joint Commission Meeting the Foreign Minister and I, assisted by our respective delegations on either side, have concluded comprehensive discussions on the entire gamut of bilateral relations. The meeting itself was focused on several areas that included trade, economy, energy, science and technology, culture, health and agriculture.

The two sides also exchanged views on regional developments. We had insights provided on multilateral issues and regional development. And I am really glad that on a vast number of these issues there is a complete meeting of minds.

During the JCM the two sides reiterated our interest to intensify economic engagement. And this will be done by diversifying the bilateral trade. And that will be obviously to our mutual benefit. The trade bilaterally is now at US$ 14.5 billion. Venezuela has become our largest trading partner in Latin America and I congratulated the Foreign Minister for this.

Apart from the energy sector, where obviously there is a high point of our engagement, potential exists also for Indian exports and investments in project exports, health, pharmaceuticals, automobiles, auto parts, heavy industry, engineering, power, space technology, ICT, textiles, agriculture and allied activities, and of course culture and education. And I was very pleased to hear from the Minister with a cheerful smile about how wonderful Bollywood films are.

The two sides agreed also to expeditiously implement the decisions that have been taken at the Joint Commission Meeting today. We have also agreed further to build a forward-looking relationship by broadening and deepening the engagement that is already there to great satisfaction, and better leveraging existing complementarities between our two countries. And this is across the key areas of mutual interest.

India and Latin America are both known for the cultural vibrancy of our societies. Therefore, it is very satisfying to note that we are going ahead in the area of a greater cultural interface by signing a cultural exchange programme later this afternoon.

We have exchanged views on regional developments, obviously, and on multilateral issues. Our cooperation is progressing and evolving in the United Nations, at the G20 and other financial institutions globally.

I look forward to working closely with His Excellency the Foreign Minister on our common objective of enhanced engagement between India and Venezuela for mutual benefit of our peoples.

May I now invite His Excellency Mr. Elías Jaua to make his remarks.

Foreign Minister of Venezuela (Mr. Elías José Jaua Milano): (translated from Spanish to English) Thank you very much, Foreign Minister Salman Khurshid, for your warm welcome to the Venezuelan Delegation, and the excellent work that we have performed yesterday and this morning to move forward in the group of topics that you have already mentioned.

However, first of all I would like to thank the Indian media for the gestures of solidarity, the affection of the people and the Government of India vis-a-vis the Venezuelan people on the sad occasion of the passing of Commander Hugo Chavez. In the memory of our people it is very fresh, the statement made by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh at the moment of the passing of Commander Hugo Chavez.

At that time on behalf of the people of India he said, "I feel deeply sad by the early passing of His Excellency President Hugo Chavez. The people of India join me in conveying its deepest condolences to his family, to the Government and the people of Venezuela". Those sincere words of a sister nation will no doubt be an encouragement for our people to overcome the pain that meant the passing of our Commander Hugo Chavez. Thank you, Mr. Foreign Minister, thanks to the Indian people and the Government of India for your affection with our country on the occasion of such a sad moment.

It is in this period that President Maduro has sent us today. He has sent nine Vice Ministers, a number of Directors of public Venezuelan institutions headed by myself as Foreign Minister of Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. In the past we have thousand reasons to have a co-operational relation with India, today we have another one - to honour this statement of affection that President Chavez expressed between the two nations.

We have had a very thorough exchange of views regarding the international situation, especially on the coincidences that India and Venezuela have had in the last year in the framework of international fora, political, economic and trade fora. Those coincidences that we have had are the results of shared principles. India and Venezuela believe in a world of peace. India and Venezuela believe in a world where sovereignties and dignities of people are respected, their political and development models are respected. India and Venezuela believe in the principle of non-intervention in internal affairs of the countries. And we reject military intervention in countries as well.

In this regard, we value highly the positions that we have had within the WTO and the importance that India is part of the most important bloc of the emerging economies such as the BRICS, and today Venezuela present here is also attending as temporary President of Mercosur, as a driving force of a new economic space that we have just created in the ... (Inaudible) ... Summit. In some we are talking about 400 million people between the Mercosur and the ... (Inaudible) ... schemes which are no doubt a space for trade and production. And it is part of what we have come here to propose, a rapprochement beyond the bilateral relations.

In the field of bilateral cooperation, the Foreign Minister has already mentioned the issues. We can only add specifically the Venezuelan people that we have come here to increase agricultural production in Venezuela, to produce the food Venezuelan people have a right. But we need to produce the food in our own country. We have come here to know more about the White Revolution that has transformed India into one of the largest milk producers in the world. Its management model that we have come here to know more about through our Vice Minister of Food Production, also to look forward for transfer of technology for support, educational support, to give content to the distribution of computers. Thanks to the Bolivarian revolution, we are giving computers to children.

We have come here to look for investments, transfer in the field of small and medium size companies in the shoe area, in textiles to increase production in Venezuela. Also we have come here to look forward to cooperation with the Bollywood so that the new industry, movie industry in Venezuela there has been ... (Inaudible) ... over the last few years can find a place to train its scriptwriters, technical people, and so on and so forth.

Just to mention a few areas which are the more crucial, as well as the field of health, to increase the supply of drugs and generic drugs to our population, to fight speculation with essential goods such as pharmaceuticals for the health of our people. And we have come here also to reiterate to the people of India our assurance, our willingness to be a secure energy supplier for the industrial development of India, and to improve the quality of life of the people of India, to increase even further the supply of oil.

Almost 130 million barrels of oil we have sold to India, to its people, to foster its development. We are also working in the production of oil jointly between the Venezuelan and Indian companies in our blocks in ... (Inaudible) ... almost 40,000 barrels a day in the largest oil reserve on earth, which is the Orinoco belt. We are also working on the joint training of technical professionals in the field of energy production. We have come here to ratify this alliance at the highest possible level. And we have also come beyond energy to commit ourselves to work further in an alliance in a wider front as President Maduro has requested. In this regard we have worked with a number of documents. We have explored a number of possibilities that will see conclusion in the coming years.

Also, we want to thank you for your congratulations on the victory of December 8th. It was a heroic victory, a victory of peace, a victory against the economic warfare unleashed against our country, a victory of democracy, and a victory of the deep awareness planted by Commander Chavez in our people. We conveyed these congratulations to Venezuelan people that today is very joyful after these popular triumph during the municipal elections.

Thank you very much from Venezuela to the Indian people.

Official Spokesperson: We will now have a couple of questions.

Q (Mr. Sachin Badolia, UNI Varta): Sir, Venezuela is one of the largest exporters and producers of oil and India is one of the biggest consumers. In your meeting, what specific points have been discussed to enhance the oil trade between the two countries?

Venezuelan Foreign Minister: (translated from Spanish to English) I mentioned this already, India has become the third major customer of Venezuela in the field of purchasing of oil. After the US and China, the next is India. These are the major markets of Venezuelan oil. This year we attained the record number of 130 million barrels. We are selling 500,000 daily to India. And we are producing jointly close to 40,000 barrels a day. Today, we have moved forward in a new field for joint production, the Karimova field, within the ... (Inaudible)... Faja to increase production in this area.

And as oil production in the Orinoco Faja which is the largest oil reserve on earth, we increased this production. We also increased our supply of oil to the people of India. Likewise, we have reaffirmed, today we are going to sign a document for the construction of the naphtha production plant in Venezuela in the Faja itself. So, these are joint investments geared to producing the fuel and the raw material required for energy demanded by India and its impressive development, industrial, scientific and technological development.

Q (Mr. Kartikeya Sharma, Headlines today): My question is to you Mr. Khurshid. Our counterparts in America have stated that the legal charges will not be dropped, which means that the case will continue to have a legal life of its own. So, how do you respond to this diplomatic row in the context that our position was that charges must be dropped? Now the case will have a legal life. So, how do you respond to that?

External Affairs Minister: I am not sure that I can really respond to different voices that emerge, authoritatively or otherwise, from different levels within India or from the United States of America. I believe my duty and entitlement is to be in conversation with my counterpart Secretary Kerry. At the lower level, lower than that level, there has been contact between the State Department and the Foreign Secretary.

I do believe that so long as we are in conversation and that is a meaningful conversation, Secretary Kerry spoke to the NSA the day before late in the night, and we have a readout of that conversation as well. I think that what could be done from our side in immediate reaction and response to the situation, we have already kept you informed in the media. What we had to do in order to ensure that we take all the steps that call for in order to protect the dignity and the comfort of our diplomat posted in New York, I think also have been accomplished. Now for me to react to anything said by anybody about the status of the case would perhaps be unfair and uncalled for.

When we get our conversation to a logical conclusion and there is an outcome one way or the other, we will be very happy to share that outcome with you. One thing about diplomacy is that some parts of diplomacy have to be done in public view and some parts of diplomacy have to be done with certain degree of discreetness till such time as the diplomatic conversations are concluded. And that is how we see this situation.

I am conscious of the fact that this is a valuable relationship between two countries and a relationship in which enormous investments have been made not just by governments alone but by private sector, by groups of individuals, by organisations, by individuals. And when we deal with each other we have to keep in mind that entire gamut of different dimensions of our relationship. And I think that goes for both of us.

If we are conscious of this, I am sure that they are equally conscious of this. If we think it is important to preserve that relationship, I am sure that they think as well that it is important to preserve that relationship. The only question is, what you do when something happens that is irksome, that is hurtful, that is unacceptable. You have got to find a solution. And I hope that we will find a solution.

Let me get back to you when my conversation is completed.

Official Spokesperson: With that we come to the end of this event.
Thank you

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS-2013

SECTION-VII

EUROPE

493. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry on the conclusion of talks for an India-EU broad based Trade and Investment Agreement.

New Delhi, March 5, 2013.

India and Portugal today agreed for the need for an early conclusion of the India-EU Broad based Trade and Investment agreement (BTIA) Negotiations. The Union Minister for Commerce, Industry and Textiles Shri Anand Sharma in a meeting with Mr. Paulo Portas, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Portugal said that “intensive engagements on part of the two sides are a reflection of their desire to finalising a balanced trade agreement at the earliest. However, ambitions have to be balanced and tempered and a sequential approach has to be followed to ensure early closure of negotiations”. He further conveyed to the Portuguese Minister that the agreement will lead to an increase in the opportunities for market access in both goods and services for both sides. The India-EU BTIA negotiations are underway with fifteen rounds having been completed, with the last meeting at the Chief Negotiators level being held on 29-30th January this year here. The Ministerial level talks are likely to happen next month.

The Portuguese side wanted to understand the current status of Bilateral Investment Protection Agreement (BIPA). Shri Sharma informed that the Finance Ministry is presently engaged in reviewing the Model Text.

Shri Sharma also said that both India and Portugal are working towards the conclusion of the Agreement on Visa Free Travel for Diplomatic/ Official Passport Holders. “Such an agreement would be useful for both sides for facilitating official level exchanges between the two countries,” said Shri Sharma.

On the issue of business visa, Shri Sharma proposed that apex business chambers of both the countries should be empowered to endorse business visa application which should be honoured by the authorities for grant of long term business visas. He also expressed happiness over the fact that India and Portugal are ready to sign the Social Security Agreement.

ALBANIA

- 494. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Finance on the signing of an agreement between India and Albania for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to taxes on Income Tax etc.

New Delhi, July 8, 2013.

The Government of India signed here today an Agreement for Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income and on Capital (DTAA) with Government of Albania. The Agreement was signed by Dr. Sudha Sharma, Chairperson, Central Board of Direct Taxes (CBDT), on behalf of the Government of India and Mr. Fatos Kerciku, Ambassador, Republic of Albania on behalf of the Government of Albania.

The DTAA provides that business profits will be taxable in the source state if the activities of an enterprise constitute a Permanent Establishment (PE) in the source state. The Agreement provides for fixed place PE, building site, construction & installation PE, service PE and agency PE.

The Agreement incorporates para 2 in Article 9 concerning Associated Enterprises. This would enhance recourse to Mutual Agreement Procedure to relieve double taxation in cases involving transfer pricing adjustments.

Dividends, Interest and Royalties & Fees for Technical Services income will be taxed both in the country of residence and in the country of source. The low level of withholding rates of taxation for dividend (10%), interest (10%) and royalties & fees for technical services (10%) will promote greater investments, flow of technology and technical services between the two countries.

The Agreement further incorporates provisions for effective exchange of information between tax authorities of the two countries in line with latest international standard, including exchange of banking information and supplying of information without recourse to domestic interest.

The Agreement also contains an Article on Assistance in Collection of Taxes. This article also includes provision for taking measure of conservancy. The Agreement incorporates anti-abuse (limitation of benefits) provisions to ensure that the benefits of the Agreement are availed of by the genuine residents of the two countries.

The Agreement will provide tax stability to the residents of India and Albania and will facilitate mutual economic cooperation between the two countries. It will also stimulate the flow of investment, technology and services between India and Albania.

BELARUS

495. Foreign Office Consultations held between India and Belarus.

New Delhi, July 23, 2013.

The fourth round of Foreign Office Consultations between India and Belarus were held in New Delhi on 23 July. The Consultations are to be followed by the sixth meeting of the India-Belarus Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade and Economic Cooperation on 24 July in New Delhi. Delegation level talks were held between H.E. Mr. Valentin Rybakov, Deputy Foreign Minister of Belarus and Shri Ashok K. Kantha, Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs. Mr. Dmitry S. Katerinich, Minister of Industry of Belarus also joined the talks during lunch. Mr. Katerinich and Mr. Rybakov also met Hon'ble Minister of Coal Shri Sriprakash Jaiswal.

The entire gamut of bilateral relations was reviewed during the talks. Both sides agreed on measures to boost trade and economic relations to their full potential. Fertilizers formed an important part of the agenda, with India expressing interest in long term arrangements for the supply of potash fertilizers from Belarus, which is one of the major suppliers in the world. Opportunities for cooperation were also discussed in sectors like pharmaceuticals, science and technology and new areas of niche and innovative technologies.

In regional and international matters issues of common concern were covered and views were exchanged on the current international situation. Both sides agreed to continue close cooperation in international fora such as the UN and NAM.

496. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry on the signing of a Protocol to Boost Trade with Belarus.

New Delhi, July 24, 2013.

The 6th Session of the India-Belarus Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation was held today here. The session was co-chaired from the Indian Side by Dr. E.M. Sudarsana Natchiappan, Minister of State for Commerce and Industry and Mr. Dmitry S. Katerinich, Minister of Industry of the Republic of Belarus.

Highlighting that the meeting is yet another step in the direction of strengthening trade and economic relations between the two countries, Dr. Natchiappan said that “sectors like pharmaceutical, fertilizers, information technology and research & development offer tremendous potential for cooperation between India and Belarus.” Elaborating on the fertilizer sector, the Indian Minister conveyed that “India is looking for long-term contracts for supply of potash to meet its growing requirements.” He also added that Indian companies can also look for “opportunities for setting up joint ventures in Belarus for production of potash-based fertilizers.” The Belarusian side recommended India to determine an Indian counterpart deputed to negotiate on the long-term cooperation agreement, take decisions and signing of the agreement for the full volume of the deliveries. The JSC “Belaruain Potash Company” and an Indian counterpart to be nominated by the Government of India should finalise the volumes, terms and conditions of the long-term cooperation agreement for MOP deliveries to India within specified time period.

The two Ministers also signed a Protocol after the Meeting. It was decided by both the sides that necessary steps will be taken to sign the Memorandum of Understanding between the Ministry of Textiles, India and the Belarusian State Concern for Manufacturing and Marketing of Light Industry Goods on Cooperation in the Field of Textiles, Clothing and Fashion Industries.

The Republic of Belarus also asked India to recognise Belarus as a market economy country. The Indian side responded that the matter is under active correspondence between the sides. India is considering the issue of grant of market economy status to Belarus within the framework of India's Antidumping Rules. The Indian side stated that the matter is being examined positively and the official decision would be taken before the next session of the Commission.

The Belarusian side flagged the issue related to the introduction and long duration of action of antidumping duties on a number of products of the petrochemical complex: tire cord fabric manufactured by JSC "Grodno Azot" and acrylics fibers manufactured by the plant "Polymir" of the OJSC "Naftan". Belarus advocated for revocation of the antidumping duties on these goods and expressed the intension to maintain the export of the products to India, mostly of interest to Indian consumers.

Both the sides also agreed to create a Certification Centre of Belarusian companies and professionals in the field of software at the earliest possible time. The Belarusian Side will provide a draft concept of the Certification Centre of Belarusian companies and professionals in the field of software to initiate negotiations with the Indian Side.

The Belarusian delegation proposed to hold the 9th meeting of the Business Council "India-Belarus" in 2013 to promote the collaboration of business representatives, as well as agreed to define the dates of the National Exhibition (exposition) of the Republic of India during 2013-2014 in Minsk.

497. Press Statement of the Minister of Culture Smt. Chandresh Kumari Katoch at a joint press meet of India and Belarus Culture Ministers.

New Delhi, New Delhi, October 18, 2013.

Culture Minister Mr. Barys and I have just concluded a far reaching 3 year Cultural Exchange Program (CEP) between India and Belarus. The program envisages deeper and closer collaboration in various areas of cultural engagement between our 2 countries and shall be operational from 2014-16. Together, India and Belarus represent the world's largest and youngest democracies. Our relations have grown steadily since Belarussian independence in 1992 and there is great potential for forging closer cooperation in many areas.

Our leader late Shri Rajiv Gandhi Ji had visited Minsk in 1985 and his visit was a watershed for India's engagement with Belarussian people. There have been a number of senior level visits between our 2 countries including visits by the vice president of India and speaker of the Lok Sabha to Belarus and 2 presidential visits from Belarus to India.

Indian culture and tradition is liked and practiced by a number of people in Belarus. The embassy of India in Belarus has been encouraging teachings of yoga, Indian classical dances as well as Hindi. India provides 4 scholarships for learning various aspects of Indian culture to people of Belarus every year - one for learning Hindi in India is also given by government of India to Belarus every year.

India has developed a strong tradition of training Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) program which was started in 1993 by the ministry of external affairs under which currently 40 scholarships are provided to Belarussian professionals for training in many areas including proficiency in English language and information technology. Nearly 228 professionals from Belarus have availed of these scholarships. India-Belarus cultural links have remained strong. The signing of the new cultural exchange program for 2014-16 will expand the relationship into new areas of collaboration and cooperation.

The cultural exchange program will strengthen bilateral cultural relations between India and Belarus, this will enable mutual exchange of cultural troops, theater groups and exhibitions from art museums from both countries. Under the aegis of this agreement, institutional collaborations between the national library of Belarus and the national library of Kolkata can be developed.

It also provides for exchange of research, documentation and research publications through national archives, archeological survey of India and national libraries. This exchange of research documentation will enable knowledge transfer in both countries.

The CEP will enable collaboration in international music, dance and folk lore festivals and in exchanging audio and video materials, photographs, slides, publications in the field of performing arts. It seeks to establish direct links and exchanges between cultural establishment, artistic institutions, artistic unions and artists.

The CEP also provides participation in international film festivals and organization of cinema weeks in both countries. You would be aware that Indian films are very popular in many countries given their quality and artistic brilliance.

Excellency, you have had a long and illustrious career with cinema and video production. It is time to bring back Indian cinema to Belarus on commercial lines. Cooperation in the areas of films and tourism offer immense opportunities to both countries. It is also proposed to hold days of culture in each other's countries at regular intervals, i.e. Once in every 2 years.

I also envisage mutual exchange of visits of journalists and mass media experts in both countries.

As the first culture minister of India visiting Belarus, it shall be my constant endeavour to promote and develop the cultural engagement between our 2 countries.

I have extended an invitation for minister Barys to lead a senior delegation to New Delhi for promotion of Belarussian culture in India.

BELGIUM

498. Remarks by External Affairs Minister Salman Khurshid at the Inauguration of Mahatma Gandhi Bust in Antwerp (Belgium).

Antwerp, January 30, 2013.

Your Excellency, Governor of Antwerp, Mrs. Cathy Berx, Minister-President of Flanders region Mr Chris Peeters,
Ambassador of India Mr Dinkar Khullar,
Honorary Consul General of India Mr Marc Huybrechts,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am deeply honoured that on this day I have the privilege to dedicate to the people of Antwerp the Bust of Mahatma Gandhi. I would like to express my deep appreciation to the Hon'ble Governor who I am told has not only made available the premises of her office for this purpose but also taken personal interest in the installation of the Bust. Let me also express my deepest gratitude to all others who have worked and contributed to this effort.

Antwerp shares a special affinity with Gandhiji. It is home to a large Indian community, many of whom originally are from Gujarat, his birthplace. In fact, here at Antwerp, Gandhiji's concept of 'Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam' i.e. the whole world is one family is most pertinent. I understand that a bust of Mahatma was installed at the Albert Park in Antwerp in 2006 and was stolen in unfortunate circumstances in 2010. The fact that the city has very promptly replaced the old bust with a new one and decided to place it in the very heart of the city is a testimony to the deep love and respect among the denizens of this historic city for Mahatma Gandhi.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Although remembered for his struggle for India's independence and revered by we Indians as the "Father of the Nation", Mahatma Gandhi was a world citizen. His message of peace and of truth and non-violence are universal values that have inspired generations of leaders around the world. His ideas and principles remain relevant even today, particularly, as we continue to grapple with the threats of intolerance, violence, terrorism and wasteful consumption around the world.

The power of peaceful means to seek justice; the effectiveness of non-violence in countering force; respect for diversity within and between societies; fighting social prejudice and promoting social reforms; conservation of nature; probity in public life and simplicity in personal life are enduring ideas that can help address many ongoing problems in the contemporary world.

Today is the 65th death anniversary of Mahatma Gandhi. Let me conclude with one of my favourite quotes of the Mahatma. He once said, "You must be the change you wish to see in the world". He demonstrated the power of his message through his life and by his actions. I hope that the bust we have installed today will be a source of inspiration to all those who pass by to reflect on Gandhiji's message.

Thank You

499. Media Briefing by Special Secretary (AD) on President's visit to Belgium and Turkey.

New Delhi, October 1, 2013.

Deputy Secretary (XP) (Shri Bishwadip Dey): Good afternoon friends. Welcome to today's press interaction on President of India's state visit to the Kingdom of Belgium and the Republic of Turkey.

Let me first introduce my colleagues on the dais. On my right is Mr. P.S. Raghavan, Special Secretary (Administration). To his right is Mr. Venu Rajamony, Press Secretary to the President. To his right is Mr. Rahul Chhabra, Joint Secretary (Central Europe). To my left is Ms. Nutan Kapoor Mahawar, Director (Europe West).

Let me now request Special Secretary (Administration) to brief you on the visit.

Special Secretary (Administration) (Shri P.S. Raghavan): Thank you, Bishwadip.

Ladies and gentlemen of the media, as Bishwadip said, the President of India Shri Pranab Mukherjee will be paying a state visit to Belgium from 2nd to 5th October, and to Turkey from 5th to 8th.

As far as Belgium is concerned, this will be the first visit by an Indian President to Belgium. It will also be the first state visit hosted by His Majesty King Philippe of Belgium since his accession to the throne in July 2013.

The President will be accompanied by a high-level delegation which includes the Minister of Shipping, Members of Parliament, senior officials of course, and Vice-Chancellors of some major Indian universities.

To very briefly run through the programme in Belgium first, the President will arrive in Brussels on the evening of 2nd October. There will of-course be a ceremonial welcome at Egmont Palace - Egmont Palace is something like a Hyderabad House - on the morning of 3rd October. He will jointly chair delegation-level talks with the Belgian Prime Minister. He will be visiting the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies of Belgium. In the evening he will address the Indian community at a reception hosted by the Ambassador. He will of course meet with His Majesty King Philippe who will host a lunch for him at the Royal Palace.

The highlight of the President's visit to Belgium is the inauguration of Europalia India 2013-14. The President would be inaugurating it jointly with His Majesty King Philippe in the evening of 4th of October.

The Europalia festival is organised by Europalia International, of which the patron is the King of Belgium. It is partly funded by the EU and by the Belgian government. India is the partner country for 2013-14 for this prestigious biennial function. The dates are 4th of October to 26th of January, 2014.

The Europalia India festival will include over 300 events showcasing Indian art and antiquities, music and dance performances, cinema, theatre, literature, philosophy, as well as cuisine; and will be hosted at multiple venues in Belgium, France and the Netherlands.

The Eurotopia festival is held every two years and it comprises a grouping of artistic and cultural events through a multidisciplinary programme. It is a festival organised primarily in Belgium but also with some other neighbouring countries. Recent festivals showcased Russia, China and Brazil, and this year it will be India.

Coming to bilateral relations between India and Belgium, they have been cordial and very close. We have had a totally trouble-free relationship. The importance that both sides attach to our relationship can be seen from the series of high-level visits that have taken place in the past.

The then King of Belgium visited India in November 2008. The Belgian Prime Minister came here in 2006. Our Prime Minister was in Brussels in October 2010. Of course that was in the context of the India-EU Summit. His Majesty King Philippe in his capacity as the Crown Prince has been in India on four Economic Missions – in 1995, 1998, 2005 and 2010. In the last one of them in 2010, he was accompanied by an 82-member delegation of officials, captains of industry, and Belgian businessmen.

In fact the visit of the Crown Prince of Belgium to India leading an Economic Mission has become a traditional event. And this year, since the Crown Prince Philippe has now become King Philippe, his sister Her Royal Highness Princess Astrid would be leading the Economic Mission to India next month.

There has been all-round progress in bilateral cooperation between India and Belgium through economic and commercial ties and increased interaction in education, science and technology, culture and people-to-people relations. The two countries work closely together in the international arena as well. Belgium has been supportive of India on issues of particular importance to us, especially in the context of our claims for permanent membership of the UN Security Council. In fact Belgium was one of the co-sponsors of the G4 resolution in the UNGA. It has also been supportive of creating an exception for India in the NSG.

As we all know, Belgium plays a very important role within the EU, and Brussels actually also houses a number of EU and other multilateral institutions.

In our bilateral relations, as I already mentioned, the main focus has been trade and economic relations. Belgium is in fact the second largest trading partner of India in the European Union after Germany, with a bilateral trade turnover of over US$ 15.5 billion in 2012-13. The figure in fact had reached US$ 17.5 billion a year ago. Because of the general recessionary trends in Europe there has been a small drop in the bilateral trade this year. Much of the bilateral trade, about 75 per cent, is in the gems and jewellery sector, and we feel the need to diversify our trade to include other sectors where we do have comparative advantages. So, we are looking at areas like ICT, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology and automotive parts.

Belgian investments in India have also been on the rise in recent times. Over the last 12-year period it has touched about half a billion dollars. Of course, both India and Belgium agree that there is tremendous potential for further investments, particularly in infrastructure areas such as railway, energy, ports, construction, and also in ICT areas, electronics, software, and biotechnology. Particularly, bilateral cooperation in science and technology has been an important aspect of our relationship. Space technology, nuclear science and astronomy are particular areas of interest.

Belgium has advanced technologies for nuclear energy generation, nuclear waste disposal and management. There is an agreement that Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC) and its Belgian counterpart have signed in 2012 covering cooperation in the management of nuclear waste, advanced research reactor system, and collaboration in connection with IAEA projects.

Indian population in Belgium is about 18,000 persons of Indian origin of whom roughly half are Indian citizens. We have Indian students in Belgian universities pursuing courses of education in engineering, medicine, basic sciences and economics.

Academic exchanges are building between the two countries. I mentioned that the President's delegation includes Vice-Chancellors of major Indian universities. They are in touch with counterpart universities and we hope that they tie up useful arrangements in the course of this visit.

Coming to Turkey, after his State visit to Belgium the President would be visiting Turkey from October 5th to the evening of October 7th. This would be the third visit by an Indian President to Turkey. The previous two had been by Dr. Shankar Dayal Sharma in 1993 and Shri K.R. Narayanan in September 1998.

To give brief details of the programme, President will be arriving in Istanbul in the morning of October 5, will be conferred an Honorary Doctorate by Istanbul University. There will be a visit to Cappadocia the next day where he meets the Governor. After his arrival at Ankara on 6th afternoon, the President will address the Indian community. He will lay a wreath at the mausoleum of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk. He will be received by the President of Turkey. Foreign Minister will call on the President. And the President of Turkey will host a banquet in honour of the President.

Turkey and India, as I am sure you know, are linked by historical bonds of civilisation, philosophy, culture and language. The historical connections start with the exchange of diplomatic missions between the Ottoman Sultans and the Muslim rulers of the subcontinent in the year 1481-82. We have, as a result of these interactions, a great cultural overlap. I have a statistic here which says that there are about 9,500 words which are common in Hindustani and the Turkish language. The name of Urdu language can be traced back to the Turkish language.

Among the common elements in our cultural traditions is the Ottoman architect Mimar Yusuf who came to India and entered the service of Akbar, and he is reputed to have had a hand in the buildings of Agra and Delhi, especially the Taj Mahal. We know of course about the Sufi philosophy of Maulana Rumi, which had resonance with India's own traditions of Sufiism.

As in the case of Belgium, we have had a number of high-level visits exchanged between Turkey and India. The Prime Minister Erdogan of Turkey visited India in 2008. President Abdullah Gul visited us in February 2010. Our own Vice-President visited Turkey in October 2011. And our External Affairs Minister was there very recently in July 2013.

We of course recognise the geographical and geopolitical importance of Turkey as a strong democratic and economically growing nation at the crossroads of Asia and Europe. Turkish leaders have noted the democratic ideals of India, the secular nature of its polity, its emerging economy, and our position in regional and international politics.

In the economic and commercial area we see Turkey as among our important partners in the region. Two-way trade touched US$ 7.25 billion in 2011. There has been a slight dip in the next two years and that again is because of the recessionary trends in Europe. But we see the headline trend in trade as in the upward direction. In fact as far back as in 2008 when our trade was only US$ 3 billion we had set a target of US$ 5 billion by 2010, which as you see we have surpassed easily.

More than 100 Indian companies have registered businesses in Turkey with investments in areas ranging from infrastructure and automobiles to IT and consultancy services. Prominent Indian companies with a presence in Turkey include GMR which won a bid for construction of the Istanbul airport; Tata Motors, Mahindra and Mahindra, Reliance, Aditya Birla group, Ispat, Tafe, Wipro, Dabur India, etc. Turkish companies also have a presence in India in the infrastructure and oil and petrochemical sectors.

We have a joint commission on trade and economic cooperation which is co-chaired by the Commerce Ministers of the two countries. A meeting of this joint commission is due perhaps later this year or early next year. We have an agreement for avoidance of double taxation, an agreement for protection and promotion of investments. As in the case of Belgium, cooperation in the cultural and educational sectors has been particularly vibrant in recent years. Again, the high-level delegation of academicians who will be on the President's delegation hope to establish connections and arrangements with their counterpart universities in Turkey.

Indian culture, films, dance, yoga, Ayurveda and Indian cuisine have been very popular in Turkey. ISRO launched Turkey's first nanosatellite on a PSLV vehicle in September 2009.

Indian nationals, not a very large number. There are only 200 Indian nationals in Turkey, most of them are in Istanbul working in commercial organisations. India and Turkey are members of the G20. Turkey incidentally is the only Eurasian country which is a member of NATO. We are both countries which see ourselves as victims of international terrorism. A joint statement against terrorism was issued when President

Abdullah Gul visited India in February 2010. We believe that the President's visit will provide an added impetus and momentum towards consolidation and strengthening of the broad-based, multifaceted and comprehensive partnership both with Belgium and with Turkey.

This is what I would call an opening statement. We would of course be happy to field questions. I would like to request the Press Secretary to the President Mr. Venu Rajamony to add to what I said.

Press Secretary to President (Shri Venu Rajamony): Thank you. Good evening friends. Ladies and gentlemen, it is a pleasure to be back here in MEA and to be interacting with all of you.

The Secretary has given a very comprehensive description of the state of bilateral relations and set the context for the visit. I would just like to add a few points on behalf of the President.

The President of India is greatly looking forward to his forthcoming State visits to Belgium and Turkey. Both the countries are familiar to him and he has visited them many times in the past. The President's last visit to Belgium was in his capacity as External Affairs Minister when he went for a conference of the Indian Heads of Missions to the European Union member states on May 30, 2007.

His last visit to Turkey was in his capacity as Finance Minister when the annual meetings of the IMF and World Bank were held in Istanbul from October 3 to 5, 2009. The President has not visited Ankara before. So, this would be the first time he would be visiting the capital city of Turkey.

The leadership of both Belgium and Turkey are familiar to the President. He has interacted with them, the present King of Belgium as well as his father, the previous King, on the occasion of their previous visits to India. He has also interacted with the Turkish leadership, both the President and Prime Minister, during their visits to India. The President attaches the highest importance to India's relations with Belgium and Turkey. He has very carefully chosen a delegation comprising the Minister of Shipping Mr. G.K. Vasan, and five Members of Parliament to accompany him from different political parties. The Members of Parliament are: four from the Congress, one from the BJP, and one from the Biju Janata Dal. They span both the Lok Sabha as well as the Rajya Sabha. There is a mixture of men and women, and there is an emphasis on youth if you look at the whole delegation. Those of you who are travelling with the President will all have opportunities to meet them and interact with them during the course of the tour.

As has been already mentioned by the Secretary, the President is taking with him an education delegation, which includes the Chairman of the UGC as well as Vice-Chancellors of leading universities of India – the Delhi University, the Jawaharlal Nehru University, the University of Hyderabad, the Director of the Centre for Media and Governance, Jamia Millia Islamiya. The decision to take this delegation is in line with the emphasis the President has placed within the country on improving the quality of higher education and the need for Indian universities to establish global linkages for mutual benefit.

Many of you might recall that the President had convened a conference of Vice-Chancellors of Central Universities in the Rashtrapati Bhavan after a gap of almost ten years and announced that he would be doing it every year. A conference of Directors of National Institutes of Technologies (NITs), of which like Central Universities the President is the Visitor, is also scheduled to be held in the Rashtrapati Bhavan this November. So, the President hopes that cooperation in higher education can emerge as an important pillar of our partnership with both Belgium and Turkey.

The President is particularly happy that India's largest festival of culture abroad in recent years is going to be inaugurated jointly by the King of Belgium and himself as part of the Europalia festival. He hopes this festival will offer the Belgian people a glimpse into the uniqueness of Indian culture. It would be a journey into India's past through the prism of the present. He hopes the festival will greatly help expand understanding and cooperation between the two countries and be a catalyst for greater people-to-people contacts.

The President hopes to use the opportunity of this visit to hold wide-ranging discussions with the King of Belgium as well as the Belgian Prime Minister on all aspects of our bilateral relationship and to examine how the relationship can be provided significant new impetus especially in the economic and commercial fields.

The President views Turkey as a country, as mentioned by Secretary, with whom India has had historic and civilisational links. Turkey's War of Independence and the life and message of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk was an inspiration for India's national movement. The President sees his visit to Turkey as an opportunity to inject new dynamism into the relationship, to renew high-level political contacts, and to encourage Turkish participation and investment in Indian infrastructure. He would also in particular like to encourage joint collaboration between Indian and Turkish companies in areas like Afghanistan and Central Asia.

Thank you. I would be happy to take any additional questions you may have.

Q: Mr. Raghavan, in India the President is the Head of State whereas the Prime Minister is the Head of Government. When our President goes abroad, is there any difference between the kind of importance attached by the host governments to an Indian Head of State and an Indian Head of Government? And what are the diplomatic nuances involved in that?

Special Secretary (Administration): I think basically your question relates to the Constitution of India. It does not relate to relations with other countries. The Constitution of India gives the President of India a position, the Constitution of India gives the Prime Minister of India a position. It is well defined. Other countries, when they receive the Prime Minister of India or the President of India deal with it in terms of this. This is not unique either. Many many countries have a similar constitutional relation between their Head of State and Head of Government. For the rest, I do not see how I can answer your question.

Press Secretary to President: If you want I can just add one small point. If you look at the nature of the delegation, the President always travels abroad with a Minister of the Government along with him, accompanying him. And that is to reflect the fact that the Government is totally with him and he has a representative of the Government assisting him and aiding him in his discussions. And of course the fact that he takes a Parliament delegation with Members from different political parties indicates that he is there as a representative of the whole country, of the entire political spectrum. And in that sense he interacts with his counterparts wherever he goes as the Head of State, as the designation of his position itself is reflected.

The Ministry of External Affairs equally provides support to the President and Prime Minister on all visits abroad, as you can see. And the diplomatic agenda rarely differs. All the important issues which need to be discussed are discussed during the President's visit and all important issues which others have to raise with us are also raised during the President's visit. And at all times, like on all issues of national importance, on foreign policy too there is very close communication between the President and Prime Minister at all times.

Special Secretary (Administration): That is again as laid down in the Constitution of India. Press Secretary to President: Indeed.

Q: Could you give us the names of the Members of Parliament accompanying him? Is the Minister of Shipping accompanying the President as a Minister-in-Waiting or will anything related to shipping be discussed there or is any MoU or agreement likely to be signed?

Press Secretary to President: I have the names. The Minister is Mr. G.K. Vasan. There is Dr. Prabhakar Kore, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha from the BJP. There is Mr. Baishnab Parida, Member of Parliament, Rajya Sabha from the Biju Janata Dal. There is Ms. Priya Sunil Dutt, Member of Parliament, Lok Sabha, Congress. There is Mr. Deepender Singh Hooda, Member of Parliament, Lok Sabha, Congress. And Mr. Zafar Ali Naqvi, Member of Parliament, Lok Sabha, Congress.

Special Secretary (Administration): On your question on Shipping Minister, as Mr. Rajamony said it is traditional for the Government to be represented by a Minister. Of course, shipping is one of the areas where there will be interaction. I do not think there is going to be an agreement on shipping but it is an area which is of bilateral interest to both countries vis-à-vis India.

In other areas, as I mentioned, the Indian universities and the UGC are going to be interacting with a number of their counterpart universities and institutions there. And we hope that they will work out some arrangements which may result in some, but this is something that as we reach there we will be better aware of.

Q: Mr. Rajamony, you have talked about Afghanistan and Central Asia as important geographical locations for both Turkey and India. As far as Afghanistan is concerned, in 2014 the international forces are withdrawing from Afghanistan. So, the Turkish forces may remain there as a military power in Afghanistan. India has huge investments in Afghanistan. Both Presidents of Turkey and India are former Foreign Ministers. What kind of meetings are going to take place regarding Afghanistan? And as Central Asia is a source of energy for both the countries, I would like to learn the details of the meetings regarding that.

Another question I would like to ask is about the civil aviation. As we know, the Turkish Airlines has applied for the expansion of their flights to India almost one year ago. In this visit of President, will there be any kind of talks on this civil aviation agreement?

Press Secretary to President: As far as Afghanistan and Central Asia are concerned, Afghanistan in particular, clearly India and Turkey share a lot of common interest in ensuring that there is peace, there is stability, there is political continuity and the environment for economic progress and development. As you mentioned, India has very major investments in Afghanistan. We have very major interests in Afghanistan. Similarly Turkey. Turkish forces are going to stay back. Turkey has maintained an active interest in what is happening in Afghanistan.

So, it is an area where there is scope for India and Turkey to work together, particularly in the private sector where Turkish companies are all big in infrastructure globally. We are welcoming their participation in India. There are a large number of Indian companies in Turkey. The Secretary has mentioned that in his briefing. So, all this offer ideal grounds for much greater collaboration between the two countries. Certainly this would be a very important topic of discussions.

Similarly Central Asia is an area which in many ways binds both our countries together. It has always bound us together historically and culturally. Here again there would be great scope for both of us to work together. And these are issues which would come up in the discussions when the President is there and when he meets the leadership of Turkey. I think what emerges from the discussions is something which can be talked about only after the meetings are actually held.

Special Secretary (Administration): On civil aviation, these are actually commercial discussions that are going on between the airlines of both countries. All I can say at the moment is that these discussions are ongoing. I cannot tell you whether something will happen during the President's visit. But as I said, this is primarily a commercial discussion that is going on between the Turkish Airlines and its counterpart in India.

Press Secretary to President: To add to that, irrespective of the discussions between the two airlines, what is indisputable and what both countries agreed on is the need for much greater connectivity between the countries. We need much more flights between the countries. We would like to have greater number of tourists from Turkey visiting India, from India visiting Turkey. And considering the history that we share and the commonalities in culture that we share, we need to have much greater movement of people between the two countries. And better airline connections are an absolutely critical ingredient for making sure that that happens.

Q: The fulcrum of power in the Islamic world has now moved away from Saudi Arabia and Pakistan to Turkey and Iran now. And the West has been always wary of this kind of a combination historically. In what way actually it helps India and what it means for India?

Secondly, we have been quite wary about and have been very sensitive about the Chinese presence in the PoK. There is a heavy Turkish presence also in the PoK. They have actually opened their ... (Inaudible)... Muzaffarabad after the earthquake and they are very actively involved in the Kashmiri refugee camps also in the PoK. But it has never raised our hackles.

Special Secretary (Administration): I think even by a large stretch of the imagination you cannot say that deals with the President's visit to Turkey and Belgium. The role of Islam, the fulcrum of Islam, these are all very large questions which are the subject of debate in other fora and I do not want to get into it here. I do not see why we should dwell on these subjects at this press briefing.

Deputy Secretary (XP): Since there are no other questions, we come to the end of this event.

Thank you

500. Interview given by the President to Euronews prior to his state visit to Belgium and Turkey.

New Delhi, October 3, 2013.

Euronews (Ms. Chiara Reid): Mr. President, thank you very much for welcoming us into your house and for participating in this Global Conversation, a conversation in which we hope we shed some light on some of the most crucial issues at the heart of India today.

You have been at the forefront of Indian politics for six decades. You participated in the very creation of the modern Indian state. And now, since last year, as its President you have a unique insight into the challenges that lay ahead.

Let us take a look at the forthcoming engagement. You are about to embark on a trip to Brussels, the heart of Europe. What is your mission in this trip?

President of India (Shri Pranab Mukherjee): First of all I would like to express my deep gratitude to His Majesty the King for inviting me to visit beautiful Brussels.

Though I had been there, as it is an important centre of economic activity and many others, on earlier occasions, but as Head of the State, as the President of the Republic, perhaps mine is the first visit ever by an Indian President to Belgium. Of course recently we have started having high-level contacts. We had the privilege of welcoming His Majesty Albert II sometime in 2008. Even the present King His Majesty Philip visited when he was Crown Prince and led a very substantial delegation to have discussions with Indian leaders on many aspects of Indo-Belgium bilateral relationship. Therefore, I would like to reiterate India's commitment to build up a deeper relationship with Belgium.

Euronews: You are coming for a cultural event as well, Europalia, this magnificent show of all what is Indian culture and arts.

President of India: Of course. And this is one of the most significant aspects of our relationship. As you know, India is the oldest civilisation of the world. Though as a nation state our experiment is comparatively new, but India is the home of the oldest civilisation.

Euronews:...(Inaudible)... goes back many many years.

President of India: And the essential ingredient of Indian civilisation is it is pluralistic. Respect for pluralism, acceptance of diversity, trying to find out underlying unity and convergence amidst this diversity are the trends of the Indian culture. Therefore, in this festival in which we are participating - it is a huge participation I would put it in this way because - more than 200 artistes from different parts of India will participate. Seven very important exhibitions, 15 musical performances, seven dancing groups led by eminent performing artistes are participating in it. And we would like to convey the depth of our culture which conveys the message which I have just now spoken – unity amidst diversity, convergence in differences.

Euronews: That is a great message. But you are coming to Europe at a time when both India and the EU are grappling with great economic difficulties. We heard a lot about the Euro crisis. But India's problems have taken us by surprise. You are supposed to be the future, the smart industrial powerhouse, one of the so-called BRICS countries. So, what happened there?

President of India: First of all I would like to express my views on this issue. I am fully aware of it because I myself was involved.

When the crisis began, the first financial crisis in 2008, of course there was the delayed impact in India but just at that time I had to bear the additional responsibility of heading the Finance Ministry because my predecessor and also my successor Mr. Chidambaram was then shifted from Finance Ministry to Ministry of Home Affairs because of some urgency. And with my substantive responsibility as Foreign Minister, I had to bear the additional responsibility of Ministry of Finance as I had past experience. I served as Finance Minister of Mrs. Indira Gandhi when she was Prime Minister in the 70s and 80s for a number of years. Therefore, I had to face this problem.

And my immediate concern was, as you have said, the great problem of India, very substantial. Indian GDP was growing at a fast rate of around 9 per cent plus. But when I took over I found out that there was on a fortnightly basis sliding down of the GDP growth. Naturally before that the first summit when George Bush who was the President of USA took place of G20 countries. And this new output emerged to tackle the problems. In the G20 it was agreed upon by a broad consensus that there should be requirement of providing stimulus package to address the current problem.

From hindsight we can say that we did not understand the depth of the crisis at that point of time. So, immediately we had to rush, and like most other countries we provided stimulus package to ensure that fastest sliding down of the GDP growth leading to unemployment could be arrested.

Frankly speaking, we could not recover from that shock. I am not talking of India but also the whole world. In India we got some temporary relief because in the year from 9 per cent GDP growth we had registered a 6.7 per cent. But in the remaining two years, we registered high growth of 8.7 and 9.3. But again from the third year it started sliding down. That is because the problem is at the root. And in that root there is a commonality of the problems of Eurozone and ourselves, and most of the emerging countries, and some of the developed countries also that our borrowing is not matching our mobilisation of the resources.

Therefore, though the symptom was visible in four smaller countries in Europe – Portugal, Ireland and Spain... (Inaudible)... that is high sovereign debt. How to bridge the gap? It required radical reforms. Many of the European countries did it even taking the risk. I salute them. They were politically sagacious enough to take the risk of losing the elections but resorted to required reforms.

Q: And do you think India will do that too?

President of India: India has already started doing it.

Q: But there is more need for reforms, do you think?

President of India: I am coming to that point. We shall have to also keep in mind the size of Indian population, the level of uneven development. Most of the advanced countries, their manufacturing sector is highly developed. Service sector and manufacturing sector's contribution to the GDP is very substantial. But in India we cannot afford to adopt that model because I have to feed 1.2 billion plus people.

Therefore, I shall have to emphasise on agriculture, I shall have to emphasise on the development of rural India which is about more than 70 per cent of our total population, of the huge population of 1.2 billion plus people. Therefore, our developmental strategy to some extent will have to be country specific as we do believe each and every country has specific problems which ought to be addressed in the context of the socioeconomic conditions prevailing in that region.

The third point, to resolve the problem of Eurozone, you know even during the tenure of the previous IMF Director Dominique measures were taken. And Christine Lagarde subsequently through IMF the package came out. But in almost half a dozen meetings of G20 apart from the summits which took place at the level of the Finance Ministers. I participated and on behalf of India I extended my whole support, because my economic development and progress is closely linked with Euro. Europe is too serious not merely for Europe but the world economy.

First a simple example I am giving you. Europe is the second largest export destination of India, second largest source of foreign investment. Therefore, and what has happened, one of the major reasons, when the demand in these advanced economies weakened, whether it is North America, whether it is Japan, whether it is Europe which account substantially for our export and foreign investment, their economy became weak. Naturally it will have its own implications to us. But we have to address it and at the same time we will have to take care of our own domestic problems.

But I do agree that in today's context when the world is becoming economically integrated and global economy is no longer a dream but a reality, we shall have to work collectively but it will give you the country-specific requirements and the strategy which ought to be developed in the context to address the particular situation.

Euronews: Talking rightly about cooperation, the EU and India are strategic partners and there is a free trade and investment agreement on the table since 2007. If it was complete, it would affect positively the lives of over 1.8 billion people. How do you think we can kick start this now?

President of India: Of course now I cannot directly respond or directly act on it but my advice to my colleagues in the Ministry would be that fifteen rounds of negotiations have been complete. I was also closely monitoring it when I was in the Ministry of Finance. Large number of areas of agreement we have reached. There are only a very few areas of differences. We should narrow down those differences and this Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement should be concluded so that we can get benefit, as you have said, of 1.8 billion people.

Euronews: Are these areas you still have to tackle for example the amount of red tape that there is in India or the requirement of controls for imports of ...

President of India: What I feel is that there are certain areas where there is a conceptual difference. But at the same time, we have done it with ASEAN, we have done it at bilateral level with a large number of countries. But mere doing it with ASEAN or attempting to do it within the framework of SAARC, is not same, European Union is most important. And that is why, as I mentioned, from 2007 we have already completed fifteen rounds of talks. These are the areas of differences but I am not going into the nitty-gritty. What I want to emphasise is that we must resolve and reach the agreement sooner than later.

Euronews: Yes. We heard a lot in the last twelve months about another issue, violence against women in India. Is the media do you think giving us the real picture because there is quite a difficult picture of India portrayed abroad? Do you think they are giving us the real and faithful picture or there is another side to this story?

President of India: One point has to be kept in mind. Some of these events are really disturbing as the incident in December of the last year. Many times I have described that it shook the national conscience. It was an incident affecting an individual or a couple of individuals, but it shook the conscience of the nation. Thereafter there has been a series of debates and discussions. But this media exposure to a considerable extent is because of the fact that Indian women are normally shy, especially the rural, and this type of events had to swallow and... (Inaudible)... Earlier they did not report it. But nowadays these are being adequately reported. In one way it is good. Though for the time being it is projecting a distorted image of India, but at the same time we cannot ignore the ground reality. If it happens, it will have to be addressed and it will have to be recognised that it has happened.

But what I can assure you is that all the measures which we have taken already and which we are contemplating, one of the basic objective of our inclusive growth is empowerment, empowerment of weaker sections, empowerment of women. In our local bodies, more than three million elected local representatives participate in the decision making of local developments including primary education, primary health, economic development of the area concerned. One-third seats are reserved for only women. Right now when I am speaking before you, more than 1.2 million women chiefs of these local bodies are exercising their authority.

Euronews: Yes, because that is true, you have to give women more clout, more education and more clout. Also men, do not men need to be re-educated a bit?

President of India: That is absolutely needed - awareness-building, education, creating consensus. That is why I have...(Inaudible)... and I have asked my countrymen to reset our moral compass because India is always known for respect for women. We deify them. Our important deities are women.

Euronews: And you had one of the first women leader of a country Indira Gandhi to whom you were very close. And you predecessor in your position now was also a woman.

President of India: Even historically I can say very mighty empress was a woman. Delhi was ruled by Sultana Razia. During the regime of Jahangir, another very important Mughal ruler, the actual ruler was Nur Jahan his wife.

Euronews: But there is a gap between this educated urban women and the women in the rural areas and necessarily that gap needs to be bridged.

President of India: In the example that I gave you, that gap is being rapidly bridged in the rural areas because in the local self government of the rural areas, as I pointed out, where the 1.2 million women chiefs are running the local units. They are not English educated. Many of them are educated, but most of them are brought up in Indian tradition. And they know how to rule, how to implement their decisions, how to take the correct decisions, and they are doing so. But at the same time, as I pointed out, as a nation we must respond to this and correct it.

Euronews: After a decade of relative quiet we have seen an increase of violence at the Line of Control with Pakistan. We know it is in the news on the front pages these days. You are the Chief Commander, Supreme Commander of the army as the President. Do you have an idea of how can you stop this escalation of violence, and do you think you will see peace between Pakistan and India in your lifetime?

President of India: Our Prime Minister has made a very important statement in the UN General Assembly. He has also extended his hand of cooperation to Pakistan Prime Minister who used the same forum just a day before. Prime Minister has pointed out that India is ready to cooperate with Pakistan for restoration of peace, normalcy, and solve all outstanding issues including the problem of Jammu and Kashmir, through bilateral discussions.

In 1971 when Indira Gandhi was Prime Minister and Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was Prime Minister of Pakistan, India entered into an agreement which is known as Shimla Agreement. In that Shimla Agreement, India ceded all the occupied territories which Indian Army during the war captured. Ninety-one thousand imprisoned soldiers, prisoners of war, were returned. This was just to show the goodwill that in our basic foreign policy we do not have any territorial ambition, we do not have any ambition to export our ideology to any country or we do not have any commercial interests.

Euronews: It has been like that always for India. Even in the old Indian history it has always been like that.

President of India: Yes. Therefore, we want to have good relations with our neighbours. When I was Foreign Minister, more than often I used to say that I can change my friends if I like but I cannot change my neighbours if I like. I shall have to accept the neighbour the way he is. He is my neighbour. Whether I like it or not does not matter. Therefore, it is for me to decide whether I live with my neighbour in tension or in peace. We opted for peace.

Therefore, I myself visited Pakistan. When Benazir was assassinated, I offered to reach there but because of their other domestic at that time it was under General Musharraf. And we have good relations with Nawaz Sharif at the personal level also and Prime Minister is going to meet him. But one point is to be understood. No country can compromise its territorial integrity. That is not possible.

Second thing is terrorism. Terrorist activities must be curbed. And state-sponsored terrorism can never be accepted. Therefore, repeatedly we are saying, please dismantle the terrorist outfits which are located in your area.

Euronews: India says that this is state-sponsored terrorism and of course Pakistan says it is not state-sponsored terrorism.

President of India: It may not be. But non-state actors, that is the phrase they used, then I responded by saying that non-state actors are not coming from heaven. Non-state actors are coming from territory under your control. And not now, in 2004 Pakistan agreed that their territories will not be allowed to be used by forces inimical to India.

Euronews: India is going to vote next spring. Major General Elections are coming up. I know you cannot talk about party politics in your position today. But you are a senior politician. You have seen so much of Indian politics. So, can you tell me really briefly what you think are the key issues that are going to win or lose the elections?

President of India: Various issues are being projected by various parties. India is a multiparty democratic system, largest functional democracy of the world. Our total electorate is nearly 800 million and about 60 per cent of them exercise their voting right regularly. I have tremendous faith and confidence on the political wisdom of Indian electorate. They know which outfit is to be chosen by them to further their interests, economic development, inclusive growth, maintenance of law and order, protection of internal security and protection from external threat. So, Indian electorate are fully aware of their responsibility, and I am confident that they will exercise their right very wisely.

Euronews: But will they vote thinking about those issues you just said? Will they vote thinking about the economy, the inclusiveness, and the employment; or will they vote for example with their stomach? You did a very huge food plan to distribute food to everybody. Is this a way also to

President of India: No of course, there are certain important programmes which will be debated and that is a strategy of our economic development. When I was talking of the inclusive growth, it is just not an empty phrase. How could we achieve the inclusive growth? Inclusive growth we could achieve by empowering people, empowering people through entitlement and entitlement through legal enactment, legal guarantee. We have given this guarantee in respect of the job in the rural areas. We have given this guarantee to education up to the age of 14 years, universal education. We have given this empowerment to the Indian people. More than two-thirds of them will be provided backed by legal guarantee with certain quantum of food at subsidised price – 66 per cent of the population of 1.2 billion - which is called food security. Of course, these important flagship economic programmes are being debated, and people express their view during the General Election.

Euronews: I just asked you about this because I read in The Economist, they kind of criticised that plan because it would cost a lot, one per cent of the GDP. Actually the money could have been better spent according to this magazine, if it was devoted to sanitation, health, building roads, instead of distributing five kilos of cereals to 70 per cent of the people.

President of India: One does not cancel the other. Nothing prevents from improving sanitation, nothing prevents from improving health, education. Currently when we are talking of this, apart from this Food Security Bill which has been passed, in more than 1.2 million elementary schools we are providing food to 10.8 crore people. One crore is equal to 10 million. 10.8 crore children are being fed regularly.

Therefore, what I am talking of is that we want to achieve inclusive growth, and inclusive growth of course requires that there must be food, there must be education, there must be health and sanitation. We shall have to move for inclusive growth and inclusive growth could be achieved by providing food, education, health, sanitation because after all policy-makers of India are to take care of 1.2 billion plus people and it is a huge task. Therefore, our developmental model cannot be framed in the context of other countries' developmental model. It must be in the context of the socioeconomic conditions prevailing in India.

Euronews: And do you think it is important in this election to have a charismatic leader in order to win it?

President of India: Whether a leader is charismatic or not depends on whether he or she is able to catch the vote. Charisma is tested by them. Here I can tell you as a political activist that always we talk during the election of a wave or wind. But wave or wind can be found out only once it is over. When it is coming or when it is blowing, nobody can say where the wind is blowing or the wave is moving.

Euronews: Let us move to another question. I want to if I could now tap into your incredible historical perspective. If anyone has lived through all the pages of India after Gandhi, you have. We do not have time for a history lesson. But just tell me one thing. If the founding fathers of India - Gandhi, Nehru - were here today, would they be reasonably content with what they see?

President of India: Of course. When we became independent there was disunity. When we drafted our Constitution in the Constituent Assembly, there was a serious debate. A part of India which was separated as a result of this Partition Agreement adopted a Constitution where a religion was declared as state religion. In that context we adopted a secular Constitution. Preamble of the Indian Constitution says, 'a sovereign, socialist, secular, democratic republic'. That is the character of Indian state. And to form this state, to unite India into a federation, and to strengthen it ...

When India became independent, fifty years prior to that Indian economy grew at the rate of annual average GDP growth of one per cent. From 1900 to 1950, Indian economy grew at one per cent. In the next 29 years it grew at 3.5 per cent. But in the next 20 years, its average growth was more than six per cent. Last decade it is about eight per cent. Hardly we could manufacture anything. But the manufacturing base which we have developed over the years is substantial. Rate of literacy was less than one-third. And today it is more than three-fourths even including the UN literacy. Disease, average life expectancy was below 30. Today it is more than double.

Therefore, these are the areas where the founding fathers would surely feel satisfied. But at the same time they will feel not satisfied because we have to reach much a greater height and which we are striving to do.

Euronews: I come from a nation also that is quite young. I am Italian. When Garibaldi and Cavour made Italy, they said the difficult thing is now to make the Italians, not to make Italy the unity but to make the citizens, to make them feel Italians. And for India it is a bit the same. The States, as you said, were not united before Independence. Do you think you have made the Indian people feel part of one nation today?

President of India: Substantially, yes.

Euronews: Do you have any regrets?

President of India: No.

Euronews: And what keeps you awake at night today?

President of India: I would like to see that the higher scale which we have to achieve, we achieve that higher scale soon; India takes its rightful place in the comity of nations as one of the most prosperous, developed country which protects human rights, which includes the development of one and all, which is the old maxim of ours.

Euronews: One more thing... (Inaudible)... I think you do not have a Twitter account, this social media, this new thing. But we have launched... (Inaudible)... a request so that they could ask you a question. And some people wrote to us begging us to ask you a question. I would like to put to you just one question from a young Indian man Tanmay Kumar, a student in economics in Delhi. He would like to ask you, has the way politics was done in India changed over time, and what is the most conspicuous change do you think?

President of India: There has been substantial change in India. From a highly backward country, India has moved to the category of one of the leading, emerging, developing economies.

Euronews: But the question was about the way we make the politics, the way politics are made, the electoral campaign, the way politics function. You have seen so many General Elections. Do you think there is one change that is change enough?

President of India: Every election in India is a landmark election in the sense that it has thrown new leaders, it has thrown new issues, it has addressed new problems which the growing economy, growing country, growing society faces.

Euronews: Thank you very much, Mr. President.

President of India:

Thank you

501. Concluding remarks by the President of India at the lunch hosted by President of the Senate and the President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Belgium Parliament in Brussels during his State Visit to Belgium.

Brussels, October 3, 2013.

Excellencies, Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the outset, I would like to convey my sincere gratitude for the warm welcome and hospitality accorded to me and to my delegation. It is a singular honour and privilege to address this distinguished gathering in the Belgium Parliament. This Parliament, in more than 180 years of existence, has played a vital role in enriching the democratic fabric of Belgium.

India is no stranger to Belgium. Our relationship dates back to early eighteenth century when traders from Belgium, under the flag of the Ostend Company, established settlements in East and South India. It is said that Belgian chandeliers, mirrors and crystal ware can be found in places as diverse as palaces and ancient synagogues in India. For us in India, Belgian glass is synonymous with all that is perfect, beautiful and prestigious. The blood of our people is mixed with Belgian soil. During the First World War, more than one lakh thirty thousand Indian soldiers fought in the battlefields of Belgium and Northern France and more than eight thousand five hundred made the supreme sacrifice. Cemeteries in West Flanders pay tributes to these brave soldiers, many of whose names are carved in stone, at the imposing Menin Gate in Leper.

Today, India and Belgium are two vibrant democracies sharing common ideals and principles. Democracy, rule of law, freedom of speech, independent judiciary, free press and protection of human rights are fundamental values to which our two societies are wedded. In addition, India and Belgium are multi-cultural societies and our federal set-up provides for respect and promotion of rights and freedom of various communities and regions. Our historical ties and our shared values provide us with a strong foundation for our relations.

I am happy that our countries have been expanding and deepening their partnership. Belgium is now India's second largest trading partner within the EU. In spite of the global crisis, our bilateral trade increased by more than forty per cent between 2007 - 2012. Our investment flows have also steadily increased in the last few years with Indian investment in Belgium exceeding Belgian investment in India . I hope that Belgian companies will actively consider taking advantage of our growing economy. I am glad to note that the Indian community in Belgium is contributing to the Belgian economy.

Belgium's strengths in the financial and service sector, creative industry, digital economy, and research and development are well developed and widely recognised. Culture and education are two natural areas where closer cooperation between us can benefit our peoples. I am happy to note that several Memoranda of Understanding have been signed between our academic institutions during this visit . I deeply appreciate the keen interest of the people of Belgium, and the support extended by the Government of Belgium, in organizing Indian cultural festivals in this beautiful country.

Tomorrow, I will be inaugurating Europalia-India festival along with His Majesty, the King of Belgium. This festival will showcase rich and diverse Indian culture in its multiple facets. I am confident that the cultural events will be appreciated by the people of Belgium.

India today is passing through an important phase in its history. The boundless energy and creativity of its youth has provided India with unprecedented opportunities. India is an ancient civilization but a young nation. Out of the 1.2 billion people in India, approximately 400 million people are between the ages one to fourteen. By 2030, we will have a dynamic work force of seven hundred million with an average age of thirty five. This will constitute a substantial proportion of the world's work force. We look forward to leverage these opportunities through our friends, such as Belgium, for economic prosperity and progress of our people.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in a toast:

- To the health of His Majesty King Philippe and Her Majesty Queen Mathilde;
- To the health of His Excellencies Presidents of the Senate and the House of Representatives and honourable Parliamentarians;
- To the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Belgium; and,
- To friendship and cooperation between India and Belgium.

502. Opening remarks by the President at the delegation level talks with Prime Minister of Belgium.

Brussels, October 3, 2013.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Elio Di Rupo,

I thank you for your warm words of welcome. It is indeed a pleasure to visit Brussels and to have the opportunity to interact with you.

I thank you for the overview of India-Belgium relations. I deeply appreciate your gracious hospitality and the excellent arrangements made by your Government for the State visit. Allow me to introduce the members of my delegation.

Excellency,

We appreciate your personal commitment to the relations between India and Belgium. Our bilateral relations have acquired a degree of focus and purpose, in particular, in the recent years. We appreciate your role and contribution. I am confident that under your leadership and able guidance, India-Belgium relations will reach new heights.

There is a new dynamism in our relationship. I am confident that both countries will devote full attention to taking the partnership forward in all the areas in which we are engaged.

Excellency,

We fondly recall your visit to India in 1998 as Minister for Economy and Foreign Trade, accompanying the then Crown Prince on an economic mission.

Excellency,

We highly value our friendly and very cordial relationship with Belgium, which is one of our closest partners in the European Union. India-Belgium relations, based on our shared values and interests, such as the rule-of law, freedom of press, protection of human rights and independence of judiciary, have grown considerably in recent years. Our two countries are open, multi-lingual and pluralistic societies. These provide the basic foundation on which we can seek to build our relations.

High level visits between India and Belgium have provided the much needed impetus to strengthen our overall bilateral relations. We have had the opportunity to receive His Majesty King Albert II in November 2008 and the then Crown Prince in March 2010. Prime Minister of India, too, visited Brussels in December 2010 for a bilateral summit meeting. These visits have successfully advanced our common agenda in a number of areas. Within a short span of less than two years, after the formation of your Government, the Foreign Ministers of both our countries have exchanged visits. A high level business delegation led by Princess Astrid is scheduled to visit India in November this year.

Cultural exchanges between India and Belgium have increased in the recent times. We deeply appreciate the support extended by the Government of Belgium and by the Royal family for organization of Indian cultural festivals. I am happy to jointly inaugurate Europolia.India festival with the King of Belgians. This festival will be the largest Indian festival outside India. These festivals greatly help to expand understanding and cooperation between our two countries and would be a catalyst for enhanced people-to-people contacts.

Excellency,

The last few years have seen a difficult economic environment in Europe and elsewhere. While the momentum in bilateral trade could not be sustained in 2012, we hope that it will regain momentum in 2013 and that we will be able to achieve the target that we set for ourselves - to double our bilateral trade from • 8.8 billion in 2008 in the next five years.

Excellency, if I may elaborate,

In 2012, our trade was • 12.15 billion making Belgium our second largest trade partner in goods sector within the EU, behind Germany. However, this is much below the potential.

I am also happy to note that the Indian nationals engaged in diamond trade in Antwerp are contributing significantly to the Belgian economy. The diamond sector is the largest component of our bilateral trade. However, we need to continue our efforts to both increase and diversify our trade and investment relationship. There is potential for diversification into areas such as life sciences, green technology, pharmaceuticals, infrastructure development and information and communication technology. Belgium with its proven expertise in these fields can become an important partner. Cooperation in these areas must be intensified in the coming years.

I am happy to note that we have reinstated the regular meeting of the India - Belgium and Luxembourg Economic Union (BLEU) Joint Commission. It is an excellent forum for exchange of views on various areas of bilateral economic cooperation, and we should strive to hold its meetings in regular periodicity.

It is also our hope that an early finalisation of the India-EU Broad-Based Trade and Investment Agreement will, in turn, give further impetus to bilateral trade and investment, which is all the more pertinent in the context of current global economic challenges. We look forward to Belgium's support for bringing the negotiations to an early conclusion.

Excellency,

India and Belgium cooperate very closely in international institutions. I thank you for your support for India's candidature to a permanent seat of an expanded United Nations Security Council.

I would also like to acknowledge Belgium's upfront support for creating an exception for India in the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) to enable us to enter into international cooperation in the area of civilian nuclear energy.

I hope that Belgium will continue its constructive approach and will support us in our efforts to become a full member of the four arms control regimes - NSG, MTCR, Wassenaar Arrangement and Australia Group. A clear public stance by Belgium on this issue would be in line with our excellent cooperation.

Excellency,

Belgium has well-recognized expertise in certain areas of Science and Technology and we feel that there are immense possibilities for cooperation in these spheres.

Excellency,

Cooperation in education has to emerge as one of the important pillars of our partnership. We should explore the possibilities of increasing academic exchanges between Belgian universities and renowned universities of India. I am happy that some MoUs will be signed between India and Belgian Universities today.

We should encourage greater people-to-people contacts between our countries as it will facilitate business and cultural exchanges between our likeminded countries and deepen our relationship.

Excellency,

India views European Union as one of its principal partners with whom we have developed an intensive and multifaceted relationship. We are having annual summits since 2000 and the relationship was elevated to the level of strategic partnership in 2004.

Before I conclude, let me reiterate that we attach high priority to our relationship with Belgium. Our shared values make us natural partners. We need to progress by taking concrete actions which bring direct benefits to our citizens. This is the only way we can widen the base of our partnership and impart it greater sustainability. It is in this light that we need to define our future interactions.

Excellency, I very much look forward to continuing our exchanges.

Thank you

503. Speech by Dr. Karan Singh, President, Indian Council for Cultural Relations at the inauguration of Europalia-India Festival in Brussels.

Brussels, October 5, 2013.

Your Majesties the King & Queen of the Belgians, Hon'ble President of India Shri Pranab Mukherjee, President of the European Council Mr. Herman Van Rompuy, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Belgium Mr Didier Reynders, Ambassador Dinkar Khullar, President Europalia International Count Jacobs de Hagen, General commissioner Baron Philippe Vlerick, Baroness Kristine De Mulder, Excellencies, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, I greet you all on behalf of the Indian Council for Cultural Relations which is the Indian partner in Europalia-India and the main sponsor of all the rich & varied exhibitions and performances which will play out over the next few months in Brussels as well as in the other European cities.

India and Belgium, and indeed the European Union, are federal multi-cultural pluralist societies unified by a civilizational history. India's partnership with Europalia International to hold the europalia. india festival in Brussels, the capital of both Belgium and the EU, is therefore uniquely appropriate. I am delighted to be here today at the inauguration of europalia.india 2013-14, which is by any measure one of the most ambitious festivals of India to be held abroad in the recent past. For almost two years now, europalia. India has dominated our thoughts and it is gratifying to see our efforts bear fruit, bringing to Belgium and to Europe a taste of India's rich and colourful culture.

As a civilization, India goes back to at least five thousand years, and it is obviously not possible to create a comprehensive package that covers every aspect of India and its culture in a single festival. I do believe, however, that the festival programme we are presenting, will succeed in highlighting the diversity that is India. We have a major exhibition, cultural performances, visual art projections including films, literary events, a food festival and music ranging from the classical to the contemporary and from the urban to the rural. In the process we have tried to open windows to India which we hope will leave the viewer intrigued and wanting more. The distinguished presence of both our Heads of State has added a special dimension to this occasion.

Today's inauguration itself, after the traditional and auspicious beginning by the Gundecha Brothers, will go on to present a medley of classical and folk dances and end with a major exhibition tracing the depiction of the The Body in India Art and Thought through antiquities, contemporary pieces, audio-visual material & specially commissioned works, many of them never exhibited abroad before.

I take this opportunity to thank all those in my country and yours who have worked so hard to bring this project to life, and commend them for their efforts. I am sure that europalia. india will succeed in illuminating the fascinating enigma that is India, and in generating deeper and more widespread interest in this ancient civilization which has contributed so much to humanity over the millennia.

I will end with a verse from the upnishads which has come down to us through the vast and winding corridors of time. It exhorts us: "Let us work together, let us achieve together, let us enjoy together; let there never be any hatred between us".

Au revoir et merci beaucoup

504. Opening Statement by External Affairs Minister at the Joint Press Interaction after his meeting with French Foreign Minister.

Paris, January 10, 2013.

Your Excellency, Minister Laurent Fabius,

Distinguished Representatives of the media,
